There have been some objections raised but in my opinion they were not very serious and all of them could be studied by the committee that this resolution seeks to establish. I think of the objection raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). He could go to this committee personally and give the benefit of his advice as an electrician or in any other capacity he may wish so the committee would have in its possession all the information capable of enabling it to arrive at a decision on the important question that is now before us.

As other hon. members who have spoken today stated, I too have had the advantage and the privilege of sitting at the United Nations. In fact, I had the great honour of leading the Canadian delegation in 1948 when that delegation sat at the Palais de Chaillot in Paris. During those six or seven weeks while I was there I was astounded at the rapidity, the fluency and the accuracy with which the simultaneous translation went on. It seems to me that those who are anxious to learn and speak the French language would have a greater advantage in so doing if the simultaneous translation system were to be adopted in this chamber.

In my experience in coming back to the house after an absence of three years I was astounded when listening to some hon. members from the province of Quebec particularly at the manner in which they had improved their English. I hesitate to mention any names but I was more than surprised to observe that in this short period of time several hon. members were able to speak almost perfect English and I think I can pay the same compliment to some hon. members on the other side of the house whose ability to speak French has improved. I was astounded and pleased as well to see how some hon. members not from the province of Quebec on the other side of the house could rise and speak good French. I will not say it is excellent French but it is good French. Simultaneous translation will not only assist but will tremendously improve that facility because, as has been said here by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson), if a person is speaking in one language, let us say the English language, and one wants to listen to the speech in French he can turn on the translation and follow the speech from one language to the other.

As the Secretary of State said, it may be that it would be difficult to obtain translators but I doubt that very much because I know there are Canadians at the United Nations now who are serving as translators and they have had little or no difficulty in performing that service. I have no doubt that translators could be obtained from the Department of the Secretary of State or from other sources outside of the department altogether.

I say to my hon. friend the leader of the house that if most of those who have risen and spoken on this resolution favour it, what objection could there be to the government accepting it, considering it and studying it? I agree with him there is not much time left from now to the end of the session but I do not think anyone either on this side or on the other side of the house would think for one moment that all the information required on the part of the government to make a decision on this resolution could be obtained within the next four or five weeks.

It is the establishment of the committee which is important. The Speaker I presume would want to be represented on it. Indeed I do not think a committee of this nature could be established and report properly without some representation from the Speaker and from the office of the Secretary of State. That is why I submit with deference to my hon. friend that perhaps instead of moving the motion he did he might well give consideration to the establishment of the committee. I think he would please most hon. members in so doing and certainly he would please the majority who have taken part in this debate. For these reasons I invite him to give consideration to the establishment of the committee as set out in the motion.

(Translation):

Mr. Pierre Gauthier (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I want to say only a few words. I do not wish unduly to protract this discussion since the opportunity to support the request of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm in favour of the establishment of a committee must be given not only to the government but to all the members of this house.

Some members opposite who have taken part in this debate have held that Mr. Speaker should be asked to make a personal study of this matter. I believe that the motion of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is very clear. It requests the establishment of a special parliamentary committee to study the means of establishment of a system of simultaneous translation. It is obvious that such a parliamentary committee must be made up of members who sit in this house, Mr. Speaker included, if he so wishes.

I can see no possible objection to the establishment of that committee. On the contrary, this proposal is a further argument in favour of the establishment of a simultaneous interpretation system.

I believe that the point made by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) is the soundest yet. He pointed out that with simultaneous translation a speaker who wishes to take part in a debate can immediately take up a subject discussed by the previous speaker and continue the same discussion in his own mother tongue. I believe that is one of the soundest points made and one which we should stress when we ask the government to set up this committee so that the house may enjoy that improvement at as early a date as possible.

In my opinion it is a mistake to claim that simultaneous interpretation would prevent certain English-speaking or French-speaking members to practise speaking in a language other than their own. In fact conversation is the logical adjunct of French lessons, and this would be one way for those members who are studying French to find out immediately how they are coming along. To me, that seems a worthwhile argument.

When I was a boy and when I was learning to use a shotgun or rifle, I was told: "Watch out, the gun kicks". Well that gun has been kicking a great deal this afternoon, as I was listening to the speeches made by the members for Lotbiniere (Mr. O'Hurley) and St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard), who expressed the opinion that in previous sessions the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had not displayed the same zeal in this matter.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was put on the order paper during the last session. However, it never came up for debate because there were too many motions ahead of it, and those proposed resolutions must be studied one at a time and not all together. That is what is happening today. It so happens that his notice of motion is on top of the list. When there are 55 on the order paper, it would be unreasonable to require that they all be discussed at the same session. In fact, that is what happened to somebody who showed a great deal of zeal as regards family allowances during one particular election. I remember that a motion dreamed up by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) during an election in the constituency of Temiscouata, with regard to the increase in family allowances, never came up for discussion in the house simply because its turn never came.

I believe that my hon. friends from Lotbiniere and St. Hyacinthe should have remembered this kickback, before expressing doubts about the zeal of the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm with regard to the discussion of his resolution.

Now, I understand that the session will perhaps soon come to an end. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) has stated that there is not much time left, and that we must deal with the other measures on the order paper before the end of this session. Everyone hopes that we might finish our work soon enough to get home for Christmas and New Year's. I perfectly understand the situation of the hon. minister, but it should have been anticipated that there would be discussion on certain notices of motion. The house has been given the privilege to discuss private members' motions for at least a day or two. It was to be anticipated. If there was such a rush, the house should have been asked not to waste a day or two on motions. It is up to the government and not the opposition to anticipate such a situation. However, I am convinced that a one or two day debate on those notices of motion will not delay the end of the session until after Christmas and the New Year.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we should be given the opportunity to prove, as was done at the United Nations Organization and at the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Canada, that simultaneous translation is not only desirable but absolutely necessary.

If we are looking for a new bond to cement that national unity which we have so much at heart, there is no doubt that the speeches delivered today offer us such a bond in the form of a system of simultaneous translation, through which all members will be able to understand and follow the debates of this house.

(Text):

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the remarks of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) should receive at the hands of the leader of the house the consideration which they deserve. I think that in a very important matter of this sort there should be as wide as possible an expression of opinion, and our thanks should go to the initiative and the imagination of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton).

(Translation):

I think we should congratulate him on his initiative and his contribution.

(Text):

I was not here when others spoke, but I am sure reference was made to the simultaneous translations at the United Nations. In this instance we are not asking for more than the two official languages; but anyone who is familiar with those simultaneous translations, including the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent), will agree that they are indeed a very effective and business-like way of carrying on the debates of the house.

Moreover, this particular suggestion, which calls for a study as to the advisability of setting up simultaneous translations, would be in keeping with the fact that there are two official languages in this house. As the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) said, it would enable many hon. members to follow discussions which, because of the lack of understanding of one of the languages, is denied them.

On all counts, there can be no doubt that the resolution in its present form is one that commends itself to the great majority of the members of this house and on that account I would hope that the government would see fit to accept it.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf).]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Legare (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, several more arguments could be adduced in favour of the resolution moved this afternoon by the hon. member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton), a resolution requesting the establishment of a committee to study the possibilities of setting up simultaneous translation in this house and in the parliamentary committees.

I am pleased to give my full support to the resolution moved by my hon. friend.

This afternoon, speakers stressed the usefulness of the system for members themselves, but I should like for a few minutes to insist on the advantages that the system would also have for listeners in the galleries.

When I attended the meetings of the General Assembly of the United Nations last year in New York I knew that a system of simultaneous translation was provided for the delegates but I did not know then that visitors in the galleries and the numerous visitors in the United Nations building in New York, could also follow, in their own language, the debates that were going on either in the General Assembly or in the various committees.

I also know that the Canadian government contributed financially to the installation of the system used in the United Nations building and I wonder why the many visitors that we sometimes have in this house could not also follow the debates in their own language. I remember once taking about fifty students to the galleries where they spent part of the afternoon listening to the debates. When I saw them again later that afternoon, I found that they were a bit disappointed because, as they were all French-speaking, hardly any of them had understood a single word of the speeches made. I conclude that it would be advantageous for the members as well as for the voters of Canada who come to the House of Commons in fairly great numbers if they had the privilege of following the debates in their own language.

It can be said that some organizations in this country have already benefited from this simultaneous translation in their national conventions. We know that, at their national congress, the chambers of commerce had made the discussions easier for their delegates by means of such a system. I believe that one labour organization also insisted on providing its delegates at a national convention with a system of simultaneous translation. We might be surprised to know the number of national organizations which apply to the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal for the use of its hall, which is already equipped with such a system.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, we heard only one member who was opposed to the establishment of such a system, because, according to him, it would be too costly; I refer to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who is, I believe, the only member of his party who has expressed his opinion in the house today, and who declared himself against the resolution of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I hope that the other members of his party will not follow his example but will vote in favour of the motion.

The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) also expressed his opinion on the motion, and if I may infer that the members of his party are of the same opinion, well, Mr. Speaker, we shall probably get the support of the members of his party.

I do not wish to extend this debate. I am pleased to offer my hearty congratulations to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and tell him that it is with very great pleasure that I shall vote in favour of his motion.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of delaying, by long remarks, the adoption of the motion which is now before the house. The resolution proposed by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton) reads partly as follows:

> That in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of setting up a special committee of parliament for the purpose of considering the establishment of a system of simultaneous translation . . .

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that the establishment of a system of simultaneous translation such as suggested by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm involves technical difficulties which we cannot discuss thoroughly, let alone solve, during this debate.

The only possible solution, the only logical procedure is that suggested by the hon. member, namely the establishment of a committee which would hear experts in the matter and scan from every angle the possibilities and advantages of a simultaneous translation system.

I need not repeat the arguments voiced by the mover and by those who rose before me to speak in favour of the establishment of the committee in question.

I agree that the favourable stand taken by so many members is further practical evidence of the recognition of the two official languages in this country.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton) upon introducing a motion which, it seems to me, every member of the house should be able to support. It does seem that in asking to have a committee set up to study this question, he is asking something that is eminently reasonable. I would hope that the government would see fit to indicate that they would have no objection to having such a committee set up to carry out this study. I would hope that the committee would carry it out in a fashion to bring about some results. If the motion comes to a vote, I shall have great pleasure in voting for it.

(Translation):

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret that I was not in the house this afternoon, for I am very much interested in this matter. Unfortunately I was detained elsewhere, for I had the honour of being one of the delegates of the federal government to the dominion-provincial conference which takes places in the railway committee room.

This morning, at this federal-provincial conference, I had the pleasure of hearing the Prime Minister of Canada speak in the two official languages of the parliament of my country. I also had the pleasure of hearing the premier of my province address the delegates in both languages.

This was not the first time that the Prime Minister of Canada spoke in French and, as usual, he did it with much dignity and with an accent which was more than adequate. Therefore, I want to offer him my heartfelt congratulations not only for his effort and this determination of his always to express himself in the two languages of Canada as often as opportunity offers, but I want to congratulate him on the example he thus sets our young Canadians.

Mr. LaCroix: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are now discussing the motion submitted by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton). The hon. member is obviously telling us what took place this morning at the federal-provincial conference, which has no connection whatsoever with the motion under discussion.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) is protesting because I have now been speaking for about two minutes on a motion regarding which several of his colleagues have taken the time of the house to make known their views, but I sincerely believe that we have the right to speak...

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): On the motion.

Mr. Balcer: ...on the motion before the house. I think that his point of order is altogether uncalled for.

Mr. Villeneuve (Roberval): It is up to Mr. Speaker to decide it.

Mr. Balcer: I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that you will agree.

I was saying, that the Prime Minister made a point of speaking French at every opportunity and that he respects the French language, which is a fine example to be given to young Canadians; and his example has been followed by several English-speaking members of my party, and during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and ever since, they have addressed this house in French and have managed to do so most creditably. I hope this is only a beginning, and that more and more of our English-speaking colleagues will address the house in French.

Bilingualism is gaining ground every day in Canada, progressing quietly but surely, which constitutes the best way to achieve our national unity.

If we want to live in a prosperous country, a progressive country, it is essential that we should understand one another. There is no better way to be understood by one's own fellow-citizens than to learn the language of other races in our country. Many errors could be avoided if people were always able to understand one another.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that both languages, English and French, are official in the parliament of Canada. This was the wish of the fathers of confederation, a wish always fully respected by all political parties and all governments which have succeeded each other since confederation. Unfortunately, it is inevitable that most of our French-speaking members are somewhat reluctant to address this house in their mother tongue for they know full well that a great many of their colleagues cannot understand what is being said and have to wait until the next day to read the translation of the debates. That is also why English-speaking members who cannot speak French regret their inability to understand and follow with interest the statements and contributions of their French-speaking colleagues, and this is very often a source of confusion which can give rise to misunderstanding and very unpleasant consequences.

As a matter of fact, it is not the first time that the question of simultaneous translation has been brought up in this house. Every year, motions, resolutions or contributions are introduced either during the debate on the speech from the throne or the budget debate. But, unfortunately, for the past 20 years, the efforts of the members, under the former government, have always been unavailing. The matter was brought up very often, but the government never saw fit, useful or necessary to take measures to instal such a system.

I am glad tonight to see that the members of the former government, which had not seen fit to bring these improvements to the House of Commons, rise one after the other to stress the necessity of that measure and how glad they would be to see it adopted.

As far as I am concerned, I have already spoken on this matter several times.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You also spoke on family allowances.

Mr. Denisel: Would the hon. minister allow me a question?

Mr. Balcer: Certainly.

Mr. Denisel: Is the hon. minister himself also in favour of this motion, like the others? Yes or no?

Mr. Villeneuve (Roberval): He has not made up his mind yet.

Mr. Balcer: If my hon. friend would have a little patience, I will come to the question before the house.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): We have been waiting for a long time.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I was expressing my admiration just as was done by the ministers of the former government who have now come to the conclusion that such a measure could be useful and could promote national unity.

However, such a system has already been tried for some years by all the great international organizations of which Canada is a member. Thus, at the United Nations, there is a system of simultaneous translation in the five official languages of that organization. I really believe that if it was found possible to establish such a system at the United Nations, for simultaneous interpretation in five different official languages, it would be equally possible to establish the same system for the two official languages in this house. This system which was installed in the United Nations is, as a matter of fact, the same as will be found at NATO and at different international gatherings.

In Canada it is at present used for various meetings of chambers of commerce, industrial groups and others. It is generally agreed that it does away with a great many errors and allows Canadians to know each other better by making it easier for them to express their own ideas in their own native tongue.

As you know, there was a meeting last summer of the International Postal Union, here in Ottawa. A system of simultaneous translation had been installed in the House of Commons for that meeting. Once this conference was over, the government considered the possibility of keeping that system permanently. Unfortunately, that system had been made specially for that conference. Moreover, it had been installed hastily, it was much too cumbersome and it would really have altered the appearance of the House of Commons. It was then that the matter was referred to the internal economy committee of the house, where it is under consideration. We are following on this matter the very procedure that was followed when the microphone system which we now have was installed. I well remember that for years members in various parts of the house had been complaining about the acoustics. Unfortunately, several members were afraid that the installations of a microphone system would mar the appearance of the house and that is why the solution of the problem took so much time.

The house is provided with an amplifier system which, although detracting to some extent from the beauty of this chamber, allows us to hear clearly the speeches being delivered, and although this system is rather costly, generally speaking, the business of the house is being carried on much more efficiently. For this reason, the study of a simultaneous translation system for the house has been entrusted to the internal economy committee, which had already considered the establishment of our amplifier system.

It is purely and simply a technical question. We are all in agreement on that. All political parties in the house recognize the official use of both languages here. All members recognize that each and everyone of them has the right to address the house in either one of our two official languages.

The matter now before the internal economy committee is not one that concerns bilingualism but rather the technical aspect of the problem. It is a matter of determining what system of simultaneous translation would be the best for the house and what the cost would be of such a system. We must also find out whether it would be possible to use the present public address system. The thing is to know if we are going to have a system including devices as heavy as those that were installed at the United Nations five or six years ago or smaller sets which can be fitted over the ears and are nearly invisible. We must also determine what type of installation we are going to have for oral translation, how many interpreters would be required and what salary they should get. All these matters have now been referred to the internal economy committee. So far the committee has gathered a good deal of information and it shall continue to study the matter. I hope it will be in a position to submit a report to the house at the earliest opportunity.

The resolution now before the house asks that this matter be referred to a committee of the house. Well, Mr. Speaker, this session will be of short duration and there would be no point in setting up committees, since within three or four weeks the session will be over. All those who are anxious that such a new step be taken should have confidence in the internal economy committee. Besides, that was the body which gave us the amplifier system we now use and it will be the one, I am convinced, to give the house a system of simultaneous translation.

The motion now before the house calls precisely for what the internal economy committee is now achieving. I do not see how the setting up of a committee of the house of Commons would in any way hasten this project, for we know from past experience that a committee of the house, where all parties are represented, always takes some time before it gets going and that it follows a rather complicated procedure, during which each member wants to express his own views, which generally leads to a lengthy debate. This is a purely technical, and not a political matter.

Everybody is agreed on the constitutional question of bilingualism in this house. This is simply a matter for experts. The aim is to get technical information such as only engineers can give. I do not know that fifteen or twenty members of parliament seated around a table, who are all in favour of simultaneous translation and listening to information by experts in acoustics or in simultaneous translation, can possibly hasten the introduction of some system of simultaneous translation, which everybody in this country looks upon with such favour and which could render such excellent service. The setting up of such a committee would probably delay the study of this matter.

I sincerely believe that we are going in the right direction and that the internal economy committee will be in a position to submit a technical report to the house, and I am convinced that before long we shall have in the house a simultaneous translation system, so that the principle of integral bilingualism in the Canadian parliament may cease to be a mere theory in the constitution to become a practical reality.

I sincerely believe that this would help Canadian unity, as well as the debates, for it is highly advantageous that everyone should be understood at once without having to wait until Hansard is translated; it often happens as we know, that due to certain circumstances, the French copy of Hansard is published with a few hours' delay. I am convinced that it is possible to find technical means which will allow simultaneous interpretation to be given in this house without changing in the least its traditional appearance.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of such a system and I would like to ask all those who have spoken so far to have confidence in the house's internal economy committee. I am convinced that before long there will be simultaneous interpretation in this house when the board's report is brought down.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the Solicitor General allow a question? Does he not think that all the points he has just made with regard to the internal economy committee would be just as valid with regard to the setting up of a special committee of the house, such as the one suggested by the hon. member?

Mr. Balcer: I do not think so and I think I have explained that. I cannot see why a strictly technical question based on reports submitted by engineers and specialists in acoustics can be more readily decided upon by a committee of the house made up of laymen who have no knowledge at all of the matter.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Laymen? Are members laymen?

Mr. Balcer: Yes. Does the hon. member for Portneuf by any chance think he is an expert in acoustics and simultaneous translation?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): No, but I could question the experts though, and I could do that as well as the members of the internal economy committee.

Mr. Balcer: That is just the point, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Portneuf could very well do that if he were a member of that committee.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Where are the experts in the internal economy committee?

Mr. Balcer: The experts could discuss that matter with the members of the internal economy committee.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): And with us too.

Mr. Balcer: But, if you are 25 around the table, it will take three weeks to set up the committee in the first place and this session will not last more than three weeks now.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It takes five minutes to set up a committee.

Mr. Robichaud: Who are the members of the internal economy committee whom the hon. Solicitor General has mentioned here in the house?

Mr. Balcer: They are the Speaker of the house (Mr. Michener), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), the Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough)...

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): What experts!

Mr. Balcer: And your humble servant.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Some experts!

Mr. Breton: Mr. Speaker,...

Mr. Chevrier: Would the Solicitor General mind if I intervene?

Mr. Balcer: Is it a question or an intervention?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to prevent the Solicitor General from making the allegations he just made, but I should merely like to point out to him that, during his absence, three of his colleagues on the government side took part in the debate and that not one of them suggested that this matter be referred to the internal economy committee of the house. On the contrary, they did not say a word about it.

Mr. Balcer: Precisely. I wanted to give an explanation and say that this was as far as the study of this matter has gone. The best way of speeding up the consideration of this matter is precisely to leave it to the internal economy committee of the house. Referring the consideration of this resolution to a committee of the house where the debates are interminable would certainly not hasten the solution of the problem. A report could certainly not be submitted before the end of this session.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Congratulations for your appreciation of the members of this house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my knowledge of French is so limited. I hope one day to be in a position to use this language as fluently as our French-speaking colleagues use my own language.

For the time being, it is better for me to continue my speech in English.

(Text):

I am sure that if any of my French speaking colleagues understood what I have said, they will agree with that last sentence. Indeed that effort of mine may be proof that we need simultaneous translation in this House of Commons. On the other hand, it might also prove that it would sometimes be very difficult for an interpreter to figure out what had been said.

Mr. Speaker, as has already been indicated by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) some of us do have certain doubts about the wisdom or desirability of a simultaneous translation system for this House of Commons. The reason for these doubts has already been expressed—some of us fear the innovation might have the effect of making debates in this house too mechanical. We fear, also, that it might discourage some of us whose mother tongue is English from trying to learn the other official language of this country.

We are also somewhat amazed, as are hon. members opposite, at the great interest now being shown in this question by supporters of the Liberal party, in view of the silence they held on this issue in years gone by. However, Mr. Speaker, what is before us, while it is to a large extent a discussion of a simultaneous translation system, is only a motion that the government give consideration to the setting up of a committee to give further consideration to the matter, and it seems to me that whether one is for or against the installation of a simultaneous translation system it is only fair to have the matter looked into by a committee which could make a much better study and examination of the matter than can be achieved through the kind of discussion we are having today.

I was a little surprised at the stand taken by the government as expressed by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and also by the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) on this matter, namely that it should not be referred to a committee, but rather that we should trust the various departments of government which are looking into the question to go into it satisfactorily. I suppose we will have occasion many times to come back to a phrase which was used a good deal during the election campaign—"the supremacy of parliament".

As far as the arrangements of the House of Commons are concerned, surely that is something for the House of Commons as a whole, rather than for the government to decide. I realize that if the expenditure of money is involved then the government has to come into the picture, but at the initial stage, namely the studying of the question to decide whether or not hon. members as a whole will want to look further into this proposal, I suggest that parliament should be supreme, and that this investigation should be undertaken by a committee of the House of Commons rather than leave it to a department or departments of government.

You will notice that I do not speak in the same terms with respect to the fact that Your Honour is making a study of the question. You, sir, are the servant of the house and I put your study in a different category from the study being made by any department of the government. It seems to me that the very fact that Your Honour is making a study of the matter puts it down as a parliamentary question and infers that there should therefore be a committee of parliament, with Your Honour as a member, to examine into this issue.

I speak as one who is not yet convinced that a simultaneous translation system would be a good idea. I am concerned about the mechanical results that might be produced. I think, too, that some of us might lose the incentive to acquire greater facility in the other official language.

But in the meantime, because of the interest shown in the question on all sides of the house, I think that no matter what our views may be on the ultimate question we should be able to get together with regard to the desirability of having a committee look into the matter. As I indicated by the question I put to the Minister of Public Works when he was speaking, I do not feel that it is any serious objection to the motion to say that there is no time for a committee to be set up at the present session. The motion does not ask for that. The motion asks for consideration to be given to the setting up of a committee. If the motion were agreed to at this session, its intent could still be carried out at a future session, if the government were so disposed, after giving the matter consideration.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope we will not be carried away from the terms of the motion, but, rather, that we will remind ourselves that all it proposes is that a committee be directed to look further into this matter. Surely that is a reasonable request.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief word to say. I have had some experience with resolutions. In 1937 I had a resolution before the house and there was a full dress debate on health insurance. I had a resolution on last session dealing with increased pensions for retired civil servants. I have one on again this session, and I expect it will be successful.

The object of bringing in resolutions is to place before the government something which is a national wrong and which ought to be corrected. No matter what party is in power we like to think that the government consists of reasonable men and women, and that it wants to correct the country's wrongs. The hon. member who has proposed this resolution has called the attention of the government to this question, which he considers to be of great importance.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, with regard to resolutions the best one can expect is that the government will give consideration to the matter raised. The hon. Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough) has risen and had her say. The best we can expect from any government is that they will give consideration to the matter raised. Having considered it, they can say yes, or they can say no; it is their responsibilty. I congratulate the hon. member concerned for bringing in this resolution because I did not think it would keep going an hour, and it has kept going for three hours. Therefore, it must be of national importance.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

(Translation):

Mr. C. N. Barbes (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words, very briefly, on that question. We hear more and more about co-operation and understanding between those who speak English on the one hand and those of French origin on the other. I very warmly congratulate the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton) for having introduced a motion which will promote bilingualism, an essential factor of progress and unity in Canada.

It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that our requests be heard and understood, as soon as they are made in this house, by each and every member of the cabinet, whether these petitions be made in the French or in the English language.

The motion of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm seems to me to promote in that way that national unity which we have so much at heart. Moreover, it should not raise any controversy and, even if the question of cost should be held against it, let us not forget that it would be much better to spend money in that way to promote national unity than to spend it, for example, for lighting around the parliament buildings, which only pleases the eyes of everybody.

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I had no intention of taking part in the debate when the motion was introduced this afternoon. It is not that I am not interested in the question, quite the contrary—and I will try to prove it to you in a moment—but I just thought that the motion had been well introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton). I also thought that the discussion was getting on fine, that everything was apparently going very well, until I started to wonder whether some were not—and I am not thinking of anyone in particular—repeating here the same tactics used in the past, under which an important number of members of the house speak emphatically in favour of motions and end by talking them out, as we say.

Such being the case, I believe I should say a few words, not, of course, to come to the assistance of those who might have had the same idea, but simply to mention the fact that we did understand perfectly what has gone on before with regard to certain bills introduced in this house.

I mentioned at the beginning that I did not lack interest in this matter, on the contrary. Now if you look back in the Votes and Proceedings of this house for October the 15th, you will see that under the heading question No. 17 I asked the following:

1. What was the cost of setting up the present system for the transmission of debates in the House of Commons, by means of microphones and loudspeakers?

2. Since the system was set up, what has been the annual cost of its maintenance and operation?

On October 18 the house received the following answers given by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Hodgson). The first question was as follows:

What was the cost of setting up the present system for the transmission of debates in the House of Commons, by means of microphones and loudspeakers?

Here is the answer:

The second part of that question was the following:

Since the system was set up, what was the annual cost of its maintenance and operation?

Here is the answer:

Maintenance and operation, $20,000 per annum. Rental, $7,500 per annum.

That is $27,500 a year. To put it briefly the present amplification system cost $33,529 and its present maintenance cost is $27,500.

I also asked the following question which will be found in the Votes and Proceedings for October the 15th:

Did the government put into operation a system of simultaneous translation of the debates in the House of Commons, on the occasion of the international postal congress recently held in the parliament buildings? What was the maintenance and operation cost thereof? Were the results obtained satisfactory?

Now then, seven days later, on October 22, I received the following answer. Of course, I spare the house the reading of the whole answer, which is rather long, and I summarize it thus: the cost of installation was $50,000.

To the question:

During how many weeks was the system in operation?

the answer was:

Seven weeks and two days.

To the question:

What was the maintenance and operation cost thereof?

the answer was:

Approximately $11,500.

To the question:

Were the results obtained satisfactory?

the answer was very precise, concise and unequivocal, namely:

Yes.

This afternoon, the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) gave us a fairly good explanation—I would even say a very good explanation—and said that the installation made for the postal congress this fall was a temporary one. I notice here that, according to the report, the results were excellent. This means that if the results were excellent with a temporary installation, there can be no doubt that they could not be inferior with a permanent installation. To my mind, that seems clear enough and, though we are not experts and need a committee which could no doubt cast light on all these problems, I believe I can say that those are indisputable conclusions.

And now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) has, if I understood him rightly, given us some indication of rather astronomical figures with regard to the probable cost of setting up or maintaining such a system as the resolution before us calls for. Well, if we refer to both answers to my questions, we might conclude that the installation and maintenance cost for the proposed system would perhaps not differ very widely from the installation and maintenance cost of the present amplification system now operating in this house.

For instance, we find, in comparison, that the cost of our present amplification system amounted to $33,000, whereas the installation of the system for simultaneous translation used last fall during the Postal Congress, cost $50,000. I might be told that between $33,000 and $50,000 there is a considerable margin. I admit there is. For an individual, an amount representing the difference between $33,000 and $50,000 is something considerable, but I submit that for a government, it is a relatively small amount, especially when it is for setting up a system which should promote the mutual understanding which already prevails, but which no doubt we should be interested in furthering still more.

As for the maintenance cost, it was, as I pointed out, $11,500 for a period of about 7 weeks and 2 days, which comes to about $6,000 a month. If we agree that the operation and maintenance cost of the suggested system would represent a very small amount when the house is not sitting, if we agree also that our sessions last from 6 to 7 months a year, we must conclude that the maintenance of that system would cost $35,000, $40,000 or perhaps $50,000 a year, an amount which is not yet exceedingly far from the $27,700 spent on the present amplifier system.

I may quite possibly be wrong, Mr. Speaker, the more so since I have never been an expert nor a wizard at figures, but this may be another reason for us, the humble members who are but laymen in that field, as has been said a moment ago, to urge that this house be given a committee in which we, the laymen, of course, could appear and also question experts who would no doubt be very glad to enlighten us.

It is the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Villeneuve), I believe, who so aptly said this afternoon how important it is that the people who wish to attend our debates from time to time in the galleries should understand what is going on in the house. Everyone knows that people come occasionally from each of our constituencies either on business trips or simply on pleasure trips. They are very glad to take advantage of the opportunity to visit the house in order to see what is going on here, but many of them do not understand what is being said.

I know very well that the ideal for all Canadian citizens would be to understand both of Canada's official languages; the ideal would be that all English-speaking Canadians should speak and understand French and that all the French-speaking Canadians should speak and understand English. We must face the fact that there are exceptions on both sides. There are people of English origin who do not understand French and, on the other hand, French-speaking citizens who do not understand English, but they have the same right to come here as anybody else. It seems to me that it would be logical that those people who come here, many of whom, as I have said a moment ago, travel considerable distances to come and see what is going on, should understand the members and get somewhat into the atmosphere of the debates which they attend so that they may go back home with an excellent impression of what goes on in the parliament of our country.

It has been said—I am not the first one to say it—that a certain number of these good Canadian citizens whom we cannot blame for not knowing both official languages, return home with a bad impression of their visit of the capital of their country and particularly of parliament.

If the resolution before the house were adopted, it would no doubt be an excellent means of answering the legitimate expectations of those Canadian citizens; it would be, as has been said and as I repeat, a means to promote understanding.

Mr. Speaker, during the debate which followed the introduction of this notice of motion, I have been happy to find that all English-speaking members of the house have been very kind towards French Canadians; they have shown much goodwill and understanding. This is encouraging for the future of national unity. I am glad to emphasize that fact and I repeat that if we accept this motion for the establishment of a committee, we will have made another step towards understanding.

Now, I am not qualified to decide whether a committee of the house such as is proposed by the resolution would be in a better position to study that question than our own internal economy committee.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that since you are heading that committee yourself the discussions are proceeding rapidly and that highly qualified experts must have come before it. In fact I should think that committee already has a fairly good idea of the situation and would even be in a position to tell us exactly the point it has reached in its examination of the matter.

But would it not be a good thing if some members of this house, in a house committee, were provided with an opportunity to take part in this fine debate, to put forward their suggestions, express their own views as well as those of their constituents? Mind you, I have every confidence in the qualifications of the ministers who sit on that committee but still I think that I would not be exaggerating were I to say that these ministers might not be in a position to express in that committee the exact thoughts of the electors of the various constituencies of this country. I submit then that a much better way of arriving at the results proposed would be to set up a committee of the house to study the matter and to hear the opinions of the taxpayer in that regard.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I see that I have spoken longer than I wanted to. I might repeat at this point that having noted the strange turn taken by the debate, I felt I should take this opportunity of adding my humble voice—I should not say to bring to the house my humble lights since those hon. members who have already spoken in this debate have been displaying most incandescent lights indeed, but, still, I did want to state my humble opinion on this matter.

(Text):

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Section 29 of the Standing Orders reads as follows:

When two or more members rise to speak, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who first rose in his place; but a motion may be made that any member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be forthwith put without debate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do move, seconded by the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Brisson):

That the mover of this motion, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton), do now speak.

Mr. Green: Mr Speaker, on the point of order, there is already a motion before the house by arrangement this afternoon. In addition to this being a very strange motion, it is not in order.

My hon. friends across the way talk about closure and accuse us of trying to bring about closure. Here we have the position where the mover of this original resolution has already spoken. While there are other members who wish to speak one of his friends on his side of the house rises in his place and moves that he must now be heard for a second time. I submit that that is completely out of order. As a matter of fact, nobody is permitted to speak twice in a debate unless it may be that the mover can speak in closing his debate. Certainly, there is no rule which says a person can introduce a motion and then, after the debate has gone on for a certain length of time one of his friends can get up and move he is to speak again. If those were to be the rules under which this house were to conduct its business, then the whole process would become a farce. I suggest the hon. member's motion now is out of order.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, may I say this. I object to the use of the word "closure" by my hon. friend the house leader because I think I could return the compliment to him. His attempt this afternoon was more an attempt at closure than anything done by the hon. member here.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Green: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the remarks made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) were not strictly to the point of order, but that does not excuse the hon. member who is now departing from the point of order. There is a point of order before the house and I will hear the hon. member on that.

Mr. Chevrier: I will accept your ruling on that, but I rose to point out to the hon. member, in answer to his statement that the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Leduc) was moving a motion that was tantamount to closure, to say this. I understood this afternoon when we were discussing this matter, that the motion for adjournment would stand in suspense until several of our members on this side of the house had had an opportunity to speak.

Mrs. Fairclough: Everybody who wanted to speak.

Mr. Green: What do you mean "on this side of the house"?

Mr. Chevrier: My understanding was that because of the shortness of the session, the hon. member was hoping there would be an opportunity of disposing of this before ten o'clock. If that was the intention the leader had in his mind, it was certainly what I had in my mind, and what the hon. member for Verdun is doing is simply facilitating that.

Mr. Speaker: I do not understand that there is any other motion before the house except the motion which is being debated. I was not in the house when the Minister of Public Works spoke, but on the assumption that we are debating the motion on the order paper I feel that I should dispose of the point of order which has been raised.

Mr. Chevrier: May I point out to you, with deference, that there is something else before the house.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Chevrier: Does anyone want to speak? If he does, let him rise on a point of order. I am discussing the point of order now, and I ask to be heard.

Mr. Broome: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), when he asked whether this amendment could be deferred did not say simply members on that side of the house but members who had not so far taken part in the debate and who wished to speak. I took the reference to mean all members.

Mr. Chevrier: May I be heard? What I was pointing out when I was interrupted on the point of order was that there is something else before the house. I say this to you with deference. There was a motion moved by the leader of the house to adjourn the debate and at my request, because there were some members who had not been heard, he consented that they be allowed to speak in the debate. However, the motion is still there. It was moved by the Minister of Public Works and seconded by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr).

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member for Laurier is not now suggesting that no one in this house was supposed to carry on except Liberal members; that is a brand new idea. I am amazed at him bringing that up. I did agree to let my motion to adjourn stand so that the debate could continue, but there was certainly never any intention that no one except Liberals should speak. This is Liberal rule—

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a question?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): There are no Liberal rules, and you know it.

Mr. Chevrier: If there were any members on the other side of the house willing and anxious to speak at the time, why did the hon. member move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Green: As I explained this afternoon, I thought the mover of the motion was about to close the debate. He stood up then, and he had no right to stand up if he was not going to close the debate. If I had not spoken at that time, I could not have spoken at all. Then, when I found that was a mistake and the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) wished to speak, I made it possible for anyone who wished to speak to do so rather than go ahead with my motion to adjourn. Now, I am just a little surprised that that action of my own, which was taken to help hon. members and give an opportunity to those who wished to to speak, should now be thrown back at me and the suggestion made that only Liberals were to speak.

Mr. Chevrier: It is not thrown back at you.

Mr. Speaker: As I say, I was not in the house when the motion was made by the minister. This motion was not proceeded with, and was not put from the chair, so I take it that we are now debating the original motion which is on the order paper. The point of order which was raised by the hon. member for Verdun under Standing Order 29 seems to me to be out of order because he overlooks Standing Order No. 37 which provides that when the hon. member who moved a motion rises to speak, I must inform the house he is closing the debate. In effect, we have a motion before the house that infringes the rules. It is a motion that the hon. member be allowed to speak twice on his own motion, otherwise he would be closing the debate and depriving members of the opportunity to speak. I must rule, with due respect to the hon. member for Verdun, that the motion is out of order and that the debate continue until there is a motion properly before the house which supersedes it.

Mr. John Pratt (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) and myself were the only English speaking members elected to this side of the house from the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: What about O'Hurley? He is an Irishman.

Mr. Pratt: I am not saying that this is a good thing or a bad thing; I am not attempting to interpret it. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I am neither English nor French; I am an Irishman. Naturally, being Irish I want everybody in this house to know it. As a matter of fact, I had the privilege and pleasure of visiting Ireland this summer. I travelled from Dublin to the west coast, to Galway and from north to south. I made the very interesting discovery that Ireland also is a bilingual country and it also has its troubles. I found that there were many people who did not speak the Irish language, but they nevertheless endeavoured to make signs look Irish by writing the word "bus" with letters that appeared to be from the Russian alphabet.

Seriously speaking, as an English speaking member from the province of Quebec I think what I have to say may carry a little more weight than if I were a French speaking member. I just want to take this opportunity of saying that in Quebec I have always received the utmost courtesy in the use of my language. I have not been in politics very long. I became an alderman in a small town council in 1952, in which the majority of the members spoke French. They never failed to extend to me the courtesy of making sure I understood everything that took place. Since then, I have become mayor of the city of Dorval. Most of the business is conducted in the English language, although practically 100 per cent of the staff is French speaking. I want to take this opportunity to tell the house how much I appreciate this fact.

Therefore I would welcome the opportunity to reciprocate and I heartily support the idea of a simultaneous translation system for this house. I think it would be well suited, particularly for members on the floor addressing the house and also for French speaking visitors in the public galleries who may not have a command of the English language. Later we could perhaps instal such a system in committees if it were found necessary and practical so to do.

Of course such a system would require earphones as we would still want to hear the speaker in his original language and in person, as was pointed out by several speakers earlier today. The expense would be great and this is an economy-minded government. But we must be generous where language and understanding are concerned because without such understanding we have chaos, the democratic processes are slowed down and the business of the house is rendered much more difficult.

I am sure also, Mr. Speaker, that such an idea is actually only an extension of the original intentions of the men who drafted the British North America Act. However, there seems to be wide divergence of opinion as to the costs involved and the methods required for the greatest efficiency in the operation of such a system. I am given to understand that some investigation is already being made into the feasibility of installing such a system. Personally I shall be most interested in hearing more about the technical and financial aspects involved. As far as the principle of installing a simultaneous translation system in the house is concerned, may I take this opportunity to say that I am 100 per cent in favour of it.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have been told that this resolution is one of the hardy perennials which has appeared time after time.

Some hon. Members: Oh no.

An hon. Member: You are wrongly informed.

Mr. Broome: I said I had been told.

Mr. Hodgson: This is one the Liberals had on the shelf for a long time.

Mr. Broome: Regardless of that, it has much to commend it but there are certain doubts in my mind with respect to whether this is the proper answer to the problem. I do not see how people can be united by means of a mechanical device. Unity in this nation will come about through understanding between the two races, and I believe that understanding can best be advanced by the members of the house trying to learn the language of their colleagues of the other race.

I was very much taken when the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said that on his return to the house after three years absence he was amazed at the advancement which had been made by his French speaking colleagues in mastering the English language and conversely by English speaking colleagues in mastering the French language. I saw a newspaper report the other day which stated that the members of the present cabinet were more bilingual than those of any other cabinet in the history of Canada. I believe there are some eight members of the cabinet who range in their mastery of the French language from being absolutely bilingual to the valiant and precocious attempts of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness).

An hon. Member: You are in strong there now.

Mr. Broome: But the point, Mr. Speaker, is that he makes an attempt. That is the bridge that brings about a feeling of oneness. I think that a bond which tends to unite us will be broken by an earplug which will divide us. It is not only a question of our contacts and what we say in the house but what we do outside the house. In many constituencies hon. members have both French and English speaking constituents. This attempt, if not to become facile in both languages at least to be understood in the language which is not one's native tongue, is something that I think we should cherish and try to develop.

When the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney) spoke in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne I can well remember the applause he got from the other side of the house. He had worked hard on putting part of his speech into French and those members for whom French is their native tongue appreciated and admired what the hon. member had done. I should like to say that it is amazing and intriguing that after 22 years hon. members on the other side, who had tremendous influence in various governments and over long periods of time, have suddenly become so intent on this measure and so preoccupied with it. For instance, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), who is one of the veterans of the house, has been in the house since 1935, I believe, with the exception of a short period when he took over the leadership of the Saskatchewan Liberal party. After all that length of time he has suddenly realized now that simultaneous translation is the sort of thing we should have had a long time ago.

The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner) has indicated that perhaps technological developments in the last few years have made this possible. This device is as old as the telephone; it is nothing new. It has been here all the time. It is simply that the attitude has changed and it has changed with remarkable celerity and unanimity. It has been said that we would learn French by listening. I doubt very much whether anybody learns simply by listening. We learn by wanting to do it and by wanting to do a job in that regard. What is happening on this side of the house and the other side is that hon. members are working at trying to understand the language and thus understand the people of the other race. That is something that is much more important, much more to be cherished and built upon, than this mechanical gadget which will let me hear exactly what a member has to say at a particular moment. I think we are taking the pewter mug and throwing away the gold. I think this would tend to divide the two races rather than unite them. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is not a good motion, not good for the house and not good for the people of Canada. I sincerely believe that and I will vote against it.

(Translation):

Mr. Neree Arsenault (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to miss this opportunity of raising a matter which has not been mentioned during this debate. The matter of bilingualism is a very important one, and I may say, through my own experience, that although I know some English, I find it rather difficult to follow everything that is said in this house.

It should be kept in mind that about 35 p. 100 of the population of Canada is of French origin, and that in this house, at least 90 p. 100 of the debates are carried on in English. Furthermore, when exchanges take place at a rapid rate, or when a member speaks a little too quickly, several members —I, for instance—sometimes miss the essential point of a speech. That is why we should not compare the necessity of bilingualism to simultaneous translation and the cost of installing such a system. Even if the figures quoted this afternoon, namely $40,000, $50,000 or even over $100,000 appear fabulous to us, they should not constitute an obstacle to the setting up of a system of simultaneous interpretation in the House of Commons.

The rights of bilingualism have been defended ever since Canada was a colony, and the opportunity given us today of enjoying the discoveries that scientists have made should not be denied to us by mere considerations of cost and thus prevent us from having immediately a system of simultaneous interpretation in this house. I was heartened a few minutes ago by the words of the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) because they assured me that the government itself was considering the matter and that consequently it was not necessary to establish another committee to complete consideration of this question. The matter is under consideration and it is recognized that simultaneous interpretation is absolutely necessary in this house.

It is also important to point out another matter which could be of great service to our parliamentary correspondents. If we had simultaneous interpretation, all correspondents would hear the same translation and would report to the public the discussions as they were held in this house.

Mr. Robichaud: Nonsense.

Mr. Arsenault: The nonsense comes from the other side of the house. I was much grieved a few minutes ago, while the Solicitor General was speaking of the serious efforts of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) to learn French, to hear someone on the other side of the house burst out laughing. This touched me deeply and this is the reason why I say that the meaningless utterances are coming from across the house.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the request for the establishment of a simultaneous translation system. I hope we shall have it soon; it will allow not only the members, but the parliamentary correspondents, the people coming to visit us and our friends who do not speak English, to follow the debates with much more interest.

(Text):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Edmonton West): In rising to speak on the resolution before the house this evening I approach it from the point of view as a neutral since, having as I do have a command of both languages I do not suffer as undoubtedly a number of members of this house suffer when listening to speeches in a language which is not their own. I can fully understand that those who come from the province of Quebec and who hear speeches in the varying tones and accents of English—and in making this statement I do not cast any reflection on other hon. members for I admit I am to some extent in this category myself—such Quebec members may find a little difficulty in understanding some of the accents with which English is spoken in this house. As I say, I do not reproach hon. members in this respect, but there it is. I can fully appreciate that those members whose mother tongue is French but who have, shall we say, a working knowledge of the English language, might have considerable difficulty in following the full sense of some speeches.

Now if, on the other hand, we look at the other side of the question when hon. members are listening to speeches made by one of the hon. members from the province of Quebec, particularly when they get wound up—and here one must pay tribute to the heights of eloquence which some hon. members from that province can reach—English speaking members, in turn, do get completely lost. Therefore the tendency is for those members to slip behind the curtain into the lobbies because it must be admitted that it sometimes gets pretty boring listening to something you do not understand.

I feel we all agree with the principle that simultaneous translation offers many advantages, and I must concur in the statement made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) that perhaps we might have less disagreement with the press as to what actually was said in this house, if all hon. members could actually get the true sense of words spoken at the time they are actually spoken.

I was a little amused this afternoon at the statement made by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) when he said that when he was speaking in the language not his own he felt the translation was an improvement on his own words. I, too, feel I would be in the same position when speaking in French although I understand that language quite well.

I did point out the other day and I do emphasize again that only approximately 12 per cent of the people of this country are bilingual. Some 67 per cent are reputedly unilingual in that they speak only English and some 20 per cent speak only French.

I certainly deprecate that state of affairs. In this house we recognize in all sincerity, as is recognized in other parts of the country, that there are two official languages in Canada and the great foundation of this nation is laid in the existence of two peoples who have different cultures on which a common culture may be based. We also realize that we will have much greater understanding and will insure the achievement of national unity only if we understand one another.

I would submit that it is only on the basis of knowing of what the other man is speaking and reading what he is writing that we will be able to achieve this end. I sincerely feel that every effort should be made by us to inculcate in our children the love of each other's language. I am not saying we should all learn French only but I feel it would be well if those who are French would also try to learn English so that we may get along with one another. This will serve us not only within our country but beyond its confines. Those members of this house who travel extensively in Europe—whether for reasons of pleasure, private or government business —realize the immense value of the knowledge of at least one other language. We in Canada have the opportunity to speak English or French or both, and I would commend to the members of this house the understanding and speaking of both languages.

At the moment I would think perhaps that the provision of some mechanical or automatic translation into one's own language of the speeches of members in another language would discourage the learning of that other language. I think there are a number of members of this house who have made some effort to learn French because there is no translation system. We have there the carrot, or the incentive, to learn another language. It may be that hon. members from the province of Quebec would limit themselves to their own language; if we had simultaneous translation, what use would it be to them to learn English? However, I do not think that should bother us here. We have important business to attend to, and I think the initiative of the individual hon. member should be relied upon in these things.

As to the resolution itself, I should say from what we have heard today, that the principle is widely supported in this house, but we would be setting up under this resolution if it were adopted, machinery parallel to that which now exists, and I feel that such an effort would be contrary to the economic use of the services of this house and would respectfully submit that while we agree in principle with the motion, in view of what has been disclosed, either the hon. member who proposed the motion should withdraw it or we should not agree with the motion, and I do so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is pleasant indeed to enter into a debate in which there is so obvious general agreement on the question of principle. The odd remark I intend to make is really in support of the principle. I had hoped to get across the floor to obtain the notes of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but as I have some reason to believe that perhaps that hon. gentleman did not understand his own notes he might not be able to help me a great deal.

I think I may say, Mr. Speaker that the agreement which has been expressed here today will be most refreshing to those who read Hansard or other reports of these debates as revealing that an effort is being made in this fine chamber to provide, at some point, members of the House of Commons, not merely with a convenience but with the hope that some day this body will take upon itself a task which many individuals have done to date, namely to learn both languages.

I think that my experience in coming here and recognizing my limitations in speaking but one language, and making an attempt, as I have done, to speak the other, is one I will reflect upon and look back upon not only with some seriousness but also with some amusement, amusement caused by the fact that my tutor is practically giving me up and has even reached the point of suggesting that the only way I could accomplish my purpose would be by moving across the river, with the implication, of course, that that would not be possible in the circumstances.

I would say, though, that if we are to understand each other in this Canada of ours, and if the two cultures are to grow together, we must have an understanding of each other's language. I think, too, we will agree that once such an understanding has been perfected we can increase in harmony as we have never done before.

It was my experience some years ago when I landed in the Black Lake area of Quebec where there was at that time very little English spoken in the community to find myself in a position which undoubtedly has confronted many others, that of not being able to communicate intelligently with the people who were so kind to me. And, in my particular area of western Canada, I look back on that occasion with some fear and trembling at the prospect that I might not have been able to survive. The fact of the matter is that the people of the Black Lake area were kindness itself.

So, when we come to determine how best to implement this proposal which has been received tonight with general agreement, I do not think the question of what committee shall do the job is actually the most important element before us for consideration. We have received an assurance from a minister of this government that the matter will be given very serious consideration with a view to implementation and I, for one, believe that that is the word of a minister whose intention is honourable and right. I say that, not as a sheep but as a hon. member of this house and I am prepared to support him.

The limitation which some of us suffer, namely, inability to understand each other's language has been used as an example in support of the argument for a simultaneous translation system.

I must confess, however, that there were times when an hon. gentleman across the floor was speaking in French and looking at me, when I felt such a system might well be desirable. The only words I heard him say that I understood were "rock and roll," and then I got a suggestion that "Calgary South" had been used, and I must say I rushed down to mailbox the following morning to see if it was suggested that I, from Calgary South, had been rocking and rolling. But I found there was no reference to either point.

That is, perhaps, a somewhat facetious way of expressing the limitation. I know, of course, that the people of Canada expect all of us to give this matter consideration so that we can in the future not, as I say, as a convenience but as a matter of necessity, recognize the importance of this type of legislation. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, and as I repeat in conclusion, the important thing is not how we implement this. It is just a question of giving this idea consideration so that it will be put into effect for the benefit of all of us. Once that is done, I feel we can say we are in general agreement, and the motion will, of course, be expedited by all members of this house.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I come from an English speaking riding and if I am to believe what I have heard in this house today I am sure my people will be glad to have me endorse the idea that we have been talking about here.

I should like to register my support for the proposed system of simultaneous translation. It is my firm conviction that this would make an undeniable contribution toward national unity and that it would create a better understanding between hon. members of this house, especially between those of us who speak only one language.

I am not familiar with the equipment which would be necessary, but I do favour the idea of our daily visitors being able to share the convenience. I am hesitant about one feature, and that is the extra time that would be required to provide this service. The disregard of this house for the element of time is something I am finding very hard to understand. The opposition speaks very favourably with regard to this project, but they have been silent about it for the past 22 years.

(Translation):

Mr. Roland English (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, as I represent one of the most beautiful constituencies of the province of Quebec, with all due deference to my hon. friends across the way, the constituency of Gaspe, which comprises Canadians of French, English and Irish origin, forms a wonderful, united family, living in harmony and preaching unity, not by words alone but through example.

Mr. Speaker, I agreed to represent this constituency not only in order to criticize or raise objections, but actually to defend the interests of the people of my county.

I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that the constituency of Gaspe was preaching unity through example, and that is why I am proud to tell the house that I am in favour of simultaneous translation. I am of the opinion that, in so doing, we would be giving an example of such unity.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the speeches of the hon. members during this session.

I listened with much the same degree of attention to the members of my party and the members of the opposition, and also to the members of the C.C.F. and Social Credit groups. I have thus been able to learn about the needs of the various parts of Canada, and the issues they have to face. To my mind the western representatives and the eastern members are equally interested in hearing and considering the problems of our province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I am therefore in favour of simultaneous translation. I shall not recommend any particular system, because I am not an expert in these matters, but I sincerely believe that the matter should be studied only by experts, and that, in due time, a report should be tabled in this house, and then it will be up to us to take an appropriate decision.

Mr. Breton: Have you ever heard about the rights of parliament?

Mr. English: What did you say, my friend?

Mr. Breton: Have you ever heard about the rights of parliament?

Mr. English: Certainly.

Mr. Breton: Why not study them?

Mr. English: I heard about them, and I dare say my hon. friend has heard about them too. As he was kind enough to bring the point up, I shall tell him, for instance, that this unity in favour of which he is pleading just now might have been advocated long ago, particularly during the last election campaign, when disunity was preached instead.

Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to raise this matter and as a new member in this house I would never have believed that an hon. member on the left would have made such interjection.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that this government, my government, who so well understands the necessity of simultaneous translation, will in the near future provide the house with an efficient system.

(Text):

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief remarks in this debate and support the principle of simultaneous translation of the two mother tongues used in this house. In the constituency which I have the honour to represent, Prince, Prince Edward Island, there are many fine citizens who are descendants of our early French settlers. The relationships between the English and French races in my riding have always been cordial and I hope they will continue to be that way. I feel that the two main racial groups in Canada can take an example from our riding and work together in harmony.

Much of the debate this evening has been carried on in French and as one who has difficulty in following the speakers who use the French tongue I missed much of the debate. True, I will be able to read it in Hansard tomorrow but I will have missed a great deal of the spirit, emotion and expression used by the participating speakers. I have no doubt that many French speaking members also have difficulty in understanding those who speak in English. I was impressed with this fact recently when the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) was moving his amendment concerning the adoption of a national flag, one that is still fresh in the minds of hon. members opposite. One hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the house complained that he did not understand the amendment as it was proposed in English.

I feel some hesitation about referring a matter of this importance to a committee. Several years ago a resolution concerning the adoption of a national flag was referred to a committee. Due to the objections of one member of that committee we still do not have a national flag as the committee could not bring in a unanimous recommendation to this house. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that a matter of this importance should be left to the wisdom of this government, a government which has already shown an ability to act rapidly on various matters and one in which all races are represented.

I believe we have two excellent examples of simultaneous translation which can serve as a precedent in this matter. We have simultaneous translation in the United Nations and I believe also in the Swiss parliament. I do hope, however, that the introduction of a simultaneous translation system would not tend to reduce the number of hon. members who strive to become bilingual. I feel much can be accomplished in the matter of national unity by our attempts to speak and understand one another's language.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this motion because I am not favourably impressed with the entire wording of the motion. I am one of those people who are indeed envious of those in this house with the ability to speak both languages. I come from a locality where there is a tongue other than English spoken and I come from a home that knew another tongue not French. I am, nevertheless, envious. I would say, however, regarding the installation of such a unit in the house, that I am prepared to accept as being a progressive move the installation of such units here and also in the galleries. I think it would be very advisable. However, I cannot agree that simultaneous translation should be installed for the use of committee meetings.

I am also one of those who feel that the fellowship, the experiences, that I enjoy with the French speaking members of this house, in getting to know them better, have not proven that simultaneous translation is required at this time in committee meetings.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that in my experiences during world war II it was my privilege to be a member of the Royal Canadian Air Force and a member of a team—I repeat, "a team"—a bomber crew, of which two members were French speaking people. I might say now that I could not have been with a group or with a crew during that period in world war II that I appreciated more because of the fact that two of the members were French speaking. Then, later on in my wartime experiences—I do not mention this for any purpose other than to bring out my point—I had the misfortune of being in a prisoner of war camp for a time. There we were thrust together, French speaking Canadians and loyal members of the country of France who had come over to England and joined the R.A.F. There were quite a number of them; there were also Russians, Czechoslovakians, Poles, and a great number of nationalities, and I can say without hesitation that there was no difficulty in understanding. We appreciated the different cultures that were manifest and with which we had to live and, of course, we resolved the problem very readily. It is rather evident here; I certainly feel it very deeply. I am indeed very honoured to be able to meet outside of this house more particularly with the French speaking members and thereby increase my own understanding of them.

To get back to the point; as I have said, there is no personal objection on my part to the installation of a simultaneous translation system in this house. However, as a new member I can say that going through the periods of debate in this house is rather disconcerting at times and I think that possibly the time and effort wasted in this way could be more profitably spent in other ways.

I would also agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) that the cost of such a system needs a very thorough investigation. This, you might say, Mr. Speaker, would be considered by such a committee, but from a personal point of view I would have to vote against the motion because I am certainly objecting, and would object strenuously, to the installation of such a unit for committee purposes.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I wish we did not have this problem at all. What I mean by that is, I wish we were all bilingual. That is the proper way to solve it, of course. But we have not got that.

When I was a student I was at one stage almost bilingual. Then I had the misfortune of living for years in Toronto. I hope that does not get into the Toronto press or I will be in difficulty. What I mean is that I did not have the chance to keep it up and I had not enough will power to keep it up.

We have had a very interesting debate. I was interested particularly in what was said by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner), who gave us such an interesting account of the situation in the Saskatchewan legislature and a still more interesting account of the speech which he gave which was so miraculously translated. To me it is a miracle that a man can have such a memory. I was also interested in the speech made by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. Marler) because, as we all know, he had the experience before now of being in the opposition, and I was very interested this afternoon in what he said about the situation in which he found himself, being in a minority of English speaking members and where, in order to carry weight, he had to speak in French. That was very interesting to me.

I was very interested also in the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when I heard him launching into French. I could not hear him too well but I thought it was French and I had the feeling—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Merci.

Mr. Macdonnell: I had the feeling, as I listened to him, that miracles were going to happen and before we knew where we were all of us would be bilingual and the problem might disappear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Dix heures.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the leader gave a detailed statement to the house in so far as the business of the house is concerned for the greater part of the week and I take it that, according to that statement, tomorrow the government will move to go into supply and discuss the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The intention is to move to go into supply and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) will open the debate on external affairs. The arrangement is that it will last all day, and if an amendment should be moved that amendment would be voted on at ten o'clock and not at 8.15. Then we shall move to have the estimates of the Department of External Affairs referred to the standing committee on external affairs.

Mr. Chevrier: When you get into supply is it the intention to move several departments?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker; it has been agreed that we can move six departments.

Mr. Chevrier: Have you decided on which?

Mr. Green: I do not remember at the moment; I will let the hon. member know after the house rises.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

IMMIGRATION PERSONNEL, B.C.—ACTING PAY

Question No. 98—Mr. Hahn:

1. Were any civil servants of the immigration branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, at the ports of entry in British Columbia, occupying less senior positions required to perform the duties of senior positions during the past year and were thereby eligible for acting pay?

2. If so, how many, and how many cases of this type existed at each port of entry during that time?

3. Was this acting pay recommended by the district superintendent?

4. If so, how many claims were disallowed, and for what reason?

Answer by: Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. Yes.

2. 6. Douglas—2, Cascade—1, Patterson—1, Prince Rupert—1, district headquarters (Vancouver)—1.

3. Yes, except at Cascade where the officer had passed examination qualifying him for promotion to a higher grade and at Prince Rupert where the officer was relieving a fellow officer on sick leave.

4. None of the four cases recommended was disallowed.

P.F.A.A. SCHOOL, YORKTON

Question No. 145—Mr. Castleden:

1. How many persons attended the P.F.A.A. school for inspectors held in Yorkton, during September, 1957?

2. How many of those who attended that school received appointment as inspectors?

3. Were all those who were so appointed, bona fide farmers?

1. 50 persons.

2. 39 persons.

3. No.

UNEMPLOYMENT, NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.B.

Question No. 186—Mr. McWilliam:

How many unemployed (a) males; (b) females, were there in the county of Northumberland, New Brunswick, at the end of each month from November, 1956 to October, 1957, inclusive?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

The area served by the office of the unemployment insurance commission at Newcastle, N.B., comprises the county of Northumberland. Data are available on the numbers of persons registered for employment at the Newcastle, N.B., office as of the Thursday nearest to the end of each month. For the months in question these data are as follows:

Month	Data as of	Number of persons registered for employment
		Male	Female
November, 1956	November 29	979	128
December, 1956	January 3, 1957	2,038	168
January, 1957	January 31	2,850	212
February, 1957	February 28	3,297	223
March, 1957	March 28	3,464	221
April, 1957	May 2	3,408	217
May, 1957	May 30	1,504	180
June, 1957	June 27	1,081	168
July, 1957	August 1	712	176
August, 1957	August 29	789	159
September, 1957	October 3	763	165
October, 1957	October 31	1,103	174

DISEASE CONTROL OF OYSTER BEDS, KENT COUNTY, N.B.

Question No. 201—Mr. Michaud:

1. What steps have been taken towards eliminating the disease prevalent among Kent county, New Brunswick, oyster beds?

2. What steps have been taken to restock disease-free oysters on Kent county oyster beds?

3. When is it expected that disease-free oyster fishing in Kent county will be returned to normal?

Answer by: Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries):

1. Although heavy mortalities were claimed for Cocagne in 1950, Buctouche bay in 1952 and Richibucto in 1950, examinations and field trials did not confirm these until the autumn of 1953 in Buctouche bay. A prohibition was immediately placed on the transfer of oysters or fishing gear from the waters of Kent county to any other.

2. In 1954 native oysters as well as oysters from Malagash basin, Nova Scotia and Miramichi bay, New Brunswick, were placed in experimental floating trays. High mortalities appearing in all these oysters in the spring of 1955, was convincing proof of an infectious disease similar to that which decimated the Prince Edward Island stocks in the 1920's.

In 1956, similar tests were made with two to three hundred oysters from Bras d'Or lakes in Nova Scotia. In the spring of 1957 trial plantings were made with about 50 barrels of Prince Edward Island stock considered to be disease resistant. Plans are now almost completed for the transfer of a further one thousand barrels of Prince Edward Island stock to Kent county in 1958.

3. If the transfer of disease-resistant stock is successful, the oyster fishery in Kent county could return to normal in five to eight years. If the fishery must rebuild from local groups of resistant resident stocks the recovery period could occupy from a minimum of twice the above period to much longer.

Already in Kent county small oysters, apparently from native resistant stocks, are making their appearance. The survivals from trial plantings of Bras d'Or and Prince Edward Island stocks appear very promising especially in Buctouche and Richibucto. If these encouraging results continue and the small oysters are rigidly protected, the recovery period could be much shorter than normal.

WINNIPEG POST OFFICE—PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

Question No. 203—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Does the post office employ, at Winnipeg, women on a part-time basis?

Questions

2. If so, what rate per hour is paid to such women?

3. How many hours per day and how many days per week do they work?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. Day duty—$1.11 per hour. Night duty—$1.26 per hour.

3. 4 hours per day—6 days per week.

PROFESSIONAL SPORTS—FEDERAL JURISDICTION

Question No. 214—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the federal Department of Labour any jurisdiction in the contractual relations between players' organizations and professional sport entrepreneurs where players from more than one province and from another nation are concerned?

2. Has the Minister of Labour received any representations regarding the negotiations between the National hockey league and the players' association?

3. If so, has any consideration been given to appointing a conciliator?

4. Has the Department of Labour made any studies or reports on the legality of the so-called "reserve clause" in the contracts of professional hockey and football players?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. The operation of sports arenas and the engagement of players in connection with contests or exhibitions staged therein are matters of a local nature that do not fall within federal jurisdiction in so far as labour relations are concerned.

2. No.

3. Not applicable in view of answer to second question.

4. No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 26, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BANKING AND COMMERCE—FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. John Pallett (Peel) presented the first and second reports of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the first report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES—FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough) presented the first and second reports of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and moved that the first report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT OF AUTHORITY

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of recent press reports I would like to make a brief statement.

A few weeks ago Mr. Charles Gavsie, president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, advised me that for almost a year he had been considering accepting a position with a private law firm in Montreal and that the time was rapidly approaching when he must make a decision in this matter. He advised me he would like to resign his position as president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority on January 31 next and enter the law firm on that date.

In spite of my best efforts to persuade him to at least postpone this decision until after the opening of the seaway, he thought he could not do so without jeopardizing the opportunity now afforded him, and for this reason he is tendering his resignation effective January 31, 1958.

UNITED NATIONS

FAO—TABLING OF SPEECH BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some days ago the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) requested that I table a copy of a speech I made at the FAO conference in Rome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harkness: I have now received a copy of this speech from the delegation which has returned from Rome, and table it at this time. I hope the hon. member will find it interesting.

Mr. Pearson: Has it been censored?

Mr. Tucker: Have you found out what you said yourself yet?

Mr. Harkness: I always knew.

An hon. Member: You could not tell us.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY REGULATION TO COVER PACIFIC COAST FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour of which I have given him notice. My question is as follows. In view of the short salmon fishing season on the Pacific coast which resulted in poor earnings for salmon fishermen and subsequently resulted in many of the said fishermen not being able to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, will the minister undertake to recommend to the government that it enact a special emergency regulation under section 29 of the Unemployment Insurance Act so that west coast fishermen will be able to draw unemployment insurance benefits even though they may have less than the required 15 stamps?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The answer is, Mr. Speaker, that under the new fishermen's regulations which come into effect December 1, fishermen will come under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and as a result will be eligible for seasonal benefits which are being extended under the resolution presently on the order paper. Under these new regulations fishermen will now be entitled to receive unemployment insurance payments after only 15 weekly contributions.

The situation to which the hon. member refers will be kept under close scrutiny, and if it warrants action careful consideration will be given.

Provision is also being made in the amendment to seasonal benefit regulations for benefits to be awarded to certain classes of claimants who have exhausted their regular benefits. A number of fishermen could conceivably come under this provision.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise us whether he has received any representations by the united fishermen and allied workers' union recently with regard to this matter?

Mr. Starr: Yes, I received a telegram this morning.

INDUSTRY

STATEMENT ON REQUEST THAT CANADIAN FIRMS PLACE CONTRACTS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to answer the question asked of me last week by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond.

My answer is as follows. While the Canadian government, and particularly the Minister of Labour, would be greatly pleased to see such contracts being referred to firms in Canada, I should nevertheless inform the hon. member that this government has no jurisdiction over the placing of contracts by Canadian private firms.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUED LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of continued lay-offs of Canadian National Railways employees at Moncton? Second, will the minister inform the house what progress has been made in the C.N.R. works program, money for which was made available by the government in order to assist these men?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have given a number of answers to similar questions asked in the house this session. I answered at some length the question asked on the subject by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) two or three weeks ago. I do not think I could give a better answer with regard to the general situation of periodic lay-offs which, unfortunately, have to occur, than the answer I gave on that occasion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the minister aware that employees are still being laid off in Winnipeg despite the answer he gave to my question?

Mr. Hees: In the answer I gave to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I did not indicate that, unfortunate as it most certainly is, it might not from time to time be necessary to bring about these lay-offs. If the hon. member will read my answer to him—he was not present when I made it—he will see the general explanation of the reason for these lay-offs which was given to me by the management of the C.N.R.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, the first part of my question asked whether the minister was aware of the continued lay-offs at the C.N.R. shops in Moncton, and does he not still consider these unnecessary as he did two years ago when he visited Moncton?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that hon. members would not expect that the Minister of Transport should be aware from day to day of every lay-off or small group of lay-offs which occur, regrettable as those lay-offs are. I am not aware of these new lay-offs which the hon. member has mentioned, but I would like to remind him that I announced in this house a few days ago a $17 million program to enlarge the freight yards at Moncton, and I think that is a pretty good answer to the point he raised.

REQUEST FOR USE OF UTOPIA CAMP AS TRADE SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Since there is widespread unemployment in Charlotte county caused to some extent by the closing of the textile mill in Milltown, and since universities, colleges and other educational facilities in the maritime provinces are overcrowded, has the minister considered making use of Utopia army camp, recently closed, as a trade school?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, I have not considered that aspect. However, it certainly sounds reasonable, and I will look into it.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR SALES STATISTICS IN TORONTO-HAMILTON AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and inasmuch as he is not in the house may I direct it to his parliamentary assistant. Will the minister tell the house how much Mexican refined sugar has been sold in the Toronto-Hamilton area since mid-August, 1957? Second, will he inform us at how much less per hundredweight this Mexican sugar is being sold than is Ontario-produced sugar in the same area?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the hon. member would expect the minister to have an answer to that question on his cuff. I suggest that the question be put on the order paper, unless the hon. minister wishes to deal with it today.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, notice was given, but I understand that some research is necessary, so perhaps an answer could be given later.

TRADE

HAY—STATEMENT ON IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke asked the following question:

> Has the government become aware of heavy imports of hay from the United States of America into western and southern British Columbia, mainly delivered by trucks and trailers? If so, is any action contemplated to protect the hay growers of the Okanagan and Shuswap areas, who find it impossible to meet this competition?

The answer is as follows. The government is aware of the fact that hay is being imported into southern British Columbia. This is a normal situation because certain parts of that province, such as the Fraser valley and the Cariboo, usually are deficit areas for hay. The volume of imports varies widely from year to year, depending on local crop and pasture conditions.

From January to August, 1956, imports amounted to 27,805 tons. During the same months of 1957 imports amounted to 19,702 tons. While complete official import figures are not available for subsequent months this year, present indications are that imports will be substantially lower than they were in the same months last year.

Recent reports from British Columbia indicate that a substantial part of current imports is being carried by truck, but again no complete current statistics are available.

Market reports indicate that imported alfalfa hay of good quality is being delivered to Williams Lake at about $31 per ton and to Vancouver at from $26.75 to $27 per ton. Rail freight from the northern Okanagan and Shuswap is approximately $11.40 per ton; hence alfalfa hay of good quality originating in the north Okanagan area and shipped to Vancouver should be worth between $15 and $16 per ton at the shipping point.

An estimate made by the provincial department of agriculture indicates a surplus of about 1,500 tons of hay in the north Okanagan and Shuswap areas, but it is also indicated that these areas normally ship very little hay to the coastal region. In any event the amount available seems to be very much less than will be required, particularly for the dairy herds in the lower mainland.

In view of these facts and estimates and of the admitted urgent need of both dairy farmers and beef cattle producers for additional supplies of hay, it would not appear desirable to consider any restrictions or controls on imports of hay at the present time. In addition, of course, there is at present no legal basis for such action. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary sent in a similar question.

POTATOES—IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES INTO VANCOUVER REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Notice of it has been given. Is the Minister of Agriculture aware of extremely heavy shipments of United States potatoes into the Vancouver wholesale region? If so, what action is intended to be taken by his department?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Trade statistics are not available to cover recent imports, but the record of unloads on the Vancouver market by rail and truck indicates that during the period November 1-15, 1957, a total of 68 cars of domestic potatoes and 22 cars of United States potatoes, including 18 cars from Washington or the dry belt area, reached that market. This compares with 60 cars of Canadian and 38 American, including 28 Washington, during the same period in 1956. In other words, imports this year during the same period are just over half what they were last year.

No. 1 grade ranged from $2.90-$3.35 for domestic potatoes and from $3.25-$3.50 for United States potatoes. Comparable prices a year ago were $3.15-$3.65 for domestic and $2.85-$4.65 for imported potatoes.

Imports of United States potatoes must meet the requirements of Canada No. 1 grade, or the equivalent of United States No. 1 grade. In addition, all such imports during this period were dutiable at 37½ cents per 100 pounds.

The Vancouver market normally requires a quantity of potatoes over and above local production. There is no indication from current imports and prices that the situation is unusual or requires any action.

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—PRESS COVERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the house leader. I did not have time to give him notice, but I did send him a copy of a press report.

In view of reports from London that heavy-handed officialdom, both British and Canadian, has resulted in an order to press reporters to leave the sessions of the Canadian trade delegation meeting with United Kingdom officials, can the house leader say whether it is official government policy to withhold such information that may be obtained by the press?

Mr. Speaker: It strikes me that the hon. gentleman himself recognizes that he is going beyond the rules of the house in asking the government to take responsibility for the press of the United Kingdom.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce or his parliamentary assistant. Has the government yet received a report from our trade mission in Hong Kong in regard to its 20-day tour of communist China? If he has, will he advise the house what communist officials our trade mission visited in communist China and what was the result of that trade tour?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of this question and see that it is answered.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—STATEMENT ON ARMS EXPORT PROHIBITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on November 19 the hon. member for Cartier addressed the following question to me:

> Can the minister tell the house whether any member states of the United Nations have violated or are violating the request of the United Nations not to send military equipment to the Middle East?

I took that question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and I regret my tardiness in replying to the question but I was at the United Nations last week.

Before addressing myself to the substantive part of the question of the hon. member for Cartier I might first correct the misapprehension implicit in the wording of this question regarding the area to which the United Nations resolution was intended to apply. That resolution was not applicable to the whole area of the Middle East, but only to that part of it in which hostilities were taking place at that time, namely Israel and Egypt.

Turning now to the question of whether other United Nations member states are observing the United Nations recommendation, I can only say that it would obviously be a tremendous task for the Canadian government to attempt to keep track of the attitudes and activities of the other 81 fellow United Nations members. It is no secret that there have been deliveries of significant military equipment to the area in question by members of the Soviet bloc, and there have been press reports about deliveries from other countries. However, as I pointed out in my statement of November 19, the Canadian decision to observe the spirit of the United Nations recommendation is not determined by the example of others but rests upon a combination of respect for a United Nations resolution and national considerations relating to our participation in the United Nations emergency force.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): May I ask a supplementary question arising out of the answer given by my hon. friend. In view of the fact that his earlier answer covered merely the area of this resolution, Egypt and Israel, does the same policy of prohibition of the export of defence equipment apply also to the other Arab countries in that area?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): At present it does, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

"FREE PRESS" STAMP ISSUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Postmaster General, now colonel in chief of philately and a former caustic opposition critic of the postal engraver's art. With respect to the stamp to be issued as a tribute to the contribution of the press to the development of Canada, does the minister consider it appropriate that Canada should be stood on end to achieve this objective?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. It immediately occurred to me that this stamp is just one other example of the many things stood on end by the previous government which my colleagues and I have been straightening out to their proper relationship.

I made inquiries, Mr. Speaker, and I am informed that this stamp, the design of which was approved in April preceding the election; and the colour, which is that black so regretted by many people using stamps, which was approved in May preceding the election, hardly come within the purview of this government. I also understand, Mr. Speaker, that the design, including the stood on end Canada, had the approval of certain advisers of the department who are considered qualified in matters of art.

In reference to this particular stamp, Mr. Speaker, and in reference to some of the comments we have heard in the past, I may say that we are considering somewhat of a broadening of the group of advisers to be consulted about designs in the future.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the five months since June 21 has the Postmaster General not had time to stop this issue if he felt the way in which he has described it in the house?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I was hoping someone would ask that question, Mr. Speaker; that is why I left one point unanswered. The stamp was originally intended for issue in October; therefore it went into production immediately following approval of the plate and the colour before this government moved into office and we had a chance to review these things. The reason it was not issued in October, and it now stands ready for issue—printed, of course—has been that the stamp commemorating the royal visit was used to replace this stamp, and it is now intended to release this stamp in January.

[Later:]

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I did not send him notice of the question, but I judge he will know the answer. Will the stamps in the future have larger numerals on them than in the past? Also will the stamps of certain denominations all be of the one colour?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): As to the size of the numerals on stamps, something which has been a matter of concern to the hon. member for Peterborough for some time, may I say that these numerals are being enlarged. I might also say in this connection that we are currently in consultation, and have been over the last month or so, with an expert on the question of lettering generally so the lettering included on our stamps might be as satisfactory as possible.

Generally, where possible, we will try to follow a standard colour pattern for stamps, but very often that proves to be difficult. A case in point is the special issue which received so much commendation, commemorating the royal visit. The selection of the colour was dictated by the fact that this design was based on a photograph and was intended to represent a photographic technique, and therefore black and white was the appropriate colour for that particular stamp. But generally an attempt will be made to follow a standard colour pattern.

SHIPPING

LAKEHEAD—STATEMENT ON ICEBREAKING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, recently the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) and the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) both asked me about the proposed icebreaking program my department has in mind for this year. I would like to make a very brief statement on this. Departmental officials have been maintaining daily contact with the situation at the lakehead in this regard over the last few days. The contract was awarded last week to the Hindman Transportation Company of Owen Sound, the lowest tenderer when tenders were called for this purpose, for the normal end of the season icebreaking at the lakehead; and the first of two tugs to be provided for this purpose was dispatched to the lakehead over the week end and is due to arrive some time today. The second tug is presently having an ice plow fitted and is expected to be available at the lakehead by the end of the week.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WATER RESOURCES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR REPAIR OF WING DAM AT REVELSTOKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, of which he was given notice last Friday. A wing dam built on the Columbia river, within the city limits of Revelstoke, B.C., by the federal government in 1907 is now in such disrepair that river bank property is suffering serious erosion. Has the department given any consideration or formulated any plans to rebuild this dam?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The answer has not yet been prepared. We are checking old files of the department, and I hope to be able to give the hon. member his answer in a day or two.

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION OF ST. MALO DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the serious problem existing in Provencher due to crop losses caused by excessive rains, would the minister say if a start is to be made this fall on the St. Malo dam project in order to provide some employment for the farmers in that area this winter?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a start will be made on that project. As a matter of fact, I received information either yesterday or today from the director of the P.F.R.A. that the brushing operation for the reservoir was to start today, I think.

MANITOBA—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION OF RIVERS DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture in view of his reply to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson). Is work on the dam at Rivers, Manitoba, also going to be started soon?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): There are no immediate plans for starting work on the dam at Rivers. Surveys are still going on, and as yet the surveys have not reached a point where work could be started.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

BREAD—ALLEGED PRICE WAR IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Notice has been given. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the existence of a bread price war in western Canada being carried on by the Weston company, with the apparent purpose of eliminating competition and thereby creating a monopoly? Will the minister consider having action taken immediately under the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for notice of his question. In reply I would advise him that no complaints have been received by the combines branch concerning the matter to which he refers, but if he or other parties have information which is relevant to the Combines Investigation Act I should be glad to receive it in order that I may refer it to the director under the act for consideration as to whether it merits an inquiry.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

DRUMMONDVILLE, QUE. AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 7 for production of papers was passed by the house on October 25. I would ask the Secretary of State when I can expect the return to be tabled.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. My attention was momentarily diverted. Will he repeat his question?

Mr. Boulanger: Notice of motion No. 7 for production of papers was passed on October 25 and I should like to have the report tabled.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, the motion which was on the order paper for production of papers involves several departments. I will do what I can to have it produced shortly.

FRUIT

APPLES—REPORTED FLOODING OF B.C. MARKET BY JAPANESE PRODUCT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I sent him notice, as well as pertinent information respecting the question. In view of the distressed financial condition in which the apple growers of the Okanagan find themselves, would the minister have an immediate examination into and announce what immediate action, if any, his department intends to take to prevent the flooding of the lower mainland region of British Columbia with Japanese solid packed apples at this time, in the light of the fact that Okanagan packed apples can be had in sufficient supply to look after this market?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, imports of processed apples are not segregated in trade statistics; therefore, the quantity of canned apples imported from Japan is not available. As a result we do not know whether or not they are flooding the market. The department is aware, however, that canned apples have been imported from Japan. These apples have met Canadian grade or quality standards for import, as specified in the processed fruit and vegetables regulations, and are subject to the tariff of 1 cent per pound. Since these imports have met the standards established there is no basis for prohibiting their entry. However, I am having the officials of the department look into the question further.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister is having the question looked into, I would also ask him to examine an advertisement by one of the major stores in the area affecting fancy Okanagan Jonathans, which were said to be Canada grade, while inside the box there was a typewritten slip with the words "produced in the United States".

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member would send me all the details he has in connection with this matter I shall certainly be glad to have it investigated.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF JUDGE FROM CASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister any comment to make on the letter which Mr. Lewis Duncan, Q.C., of Toronto wrote to him under date of November 23? In particular, has he any comment to make on Mr. Duncan's request that a certain question of law be brought before the Supreme Court of Canada or that, if necessary, it be dealt with by legislation presented to this parliament?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): In reply to the hon. gentleman's question and with particular reference to the second part of it, I should like to advise him that the issue is being studied in the department now, and I hope to be in a position to reach a decision fairly soon.

With regard to the question in general, I wish to take the opportunity to clear up a misapprehension resulting from some of the reports in the press. I have not had the opportunity to consider the full implications of the letter in detail, but I should like to say that I can find in the text itself absolutely no foundation for a charge or suggestion of impropriety in connection with the conduct of Mr. Justice Locke; and there can be and is no suggestion whatsoever of impropriety in connection with the conduct of that distinguished judge.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED DISCUSSIONS CONCERNING THE SENATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and in his absence whoever is acting can take it as notice. Will the dominion-provincial conference now in session remain in session to discuss the making of the Senate an effective arm of democracy or does he consider the appointments made to that place since July 1 to have carried out this aim? This is as promised by the Prime Minister in his national policy.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I am sure the great majority of the members of the house will agree with me when I say that I do not believe that question merits any answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

REQUEST FOR DISTRIBUTION OF VERBATIM REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Might I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, the house leader. Will the government have the verbatim report of the dominion-provincial conference containing the statements made by the premiers delivered to the members of parliament so we can all know and have on record the speeches that have been made at that conference?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I believe it has been the practice to do this in the past. I have no doubt that the same course will be followed at the present time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—ASSISTANCE TO HOME OWNERS SUFFERING LOSS THROUGH LANDSLIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question which I should like to address to the house leader, of which I have given him notice. Will the government undertake to offer some sort of relief to the residents of the city of Prince Rupert who had their houses demolished by recent landslides and to those who had to evacuate their homes because of threatened additional slides?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. The members of the government have been very much concerned to learn of this disaster. The course which is followed in such cases is that the municipality in which the disaster took place should get in touch with the provincial government if assistance is needed. Then if the provincial authorities feel that help is needed from the federal government, that further step is taken. In this particular case I believe the disaster was within the boundaries of the city of Prince Rupert. The course I have just pointed out is open to that municipality.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the house leader. In view of the fact that we are getting close to the end of the month, which means the government may shortly be running out of money, is it the intention of the government to ask the house for interim supply at an early date?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I believe it is the intention to ask for interim supply, but I cannot yet say on what day that step will be taken.

AGRICULTURE

MEASURE TO PROVIDE GUARANTEED PRICES FOR CERTAIN COMMODITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture, or perhaps more properly to the house leader. The question arises out of the continuing drastic drop in agricultural prices and the recession in that industry. Can the minister assure the house that the resolution regarding agricultural prices supports will be brought forward at the earliest possible date, perhaps Friday of this week, or during government business next week?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I can assure the hon. member that it will be brought forward just as soon as possible.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Before Christmas?

Mr. Harkness: Well, I cannot say whether it will be brought forward this Friday or any other particular day. I would like to point out, however, as I have done before, that this habit of prefacing a question with a statement about a drastic and continuing fall in prices is not one which is borne out by the latest statistics which I have received. As a matter of fact during the past week or 10 days prices of both cattle and hogs have gone up by from $1.00 to $1.50 per hundred. The price of lambs is up about $2.00 to $2.50 per hundred, and the general level of poultry prices and so forth is higher than it was at this time last year and higher than a few months ago.

Therefore to keep on reiterating that there has been a drastic fall in prices in recent months and that it is still continuing is just not in accordance with the facts. The one commodity which has fallen quite materially in price is hogs, and I think I have already made a statement in connection with that commodity.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a supplementary question, in view of the minister's statement. Would the minister agree that since his government has taken office the trend in the price of grains in this country has been down a very substantial amount, or does he not consider wheat, oats and barley to be agricultural products?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think I will just give the hon. member the statistics in connection with grains, certainly as far as wheat is concerned. No. 1 northern, stored at Fort William in September, 1956, was priced at $1.72.

Mr. Argue: You were not in office then.

Mr. Harkness: Just a minute. This is for the purpose of comparison. In July, 1957, the price was $1.67, in August, 1957, $1.66 and in September, 1957, $1.71.

An hon. Member: Not much of a drop there.

Mr. Harkness: One cent drop in a year.

Mr. Argue: Could the minister give us the price of feed wheat and the drop in the price of barley?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, it happens that I do not have the statistics on feed wheat before me or in my head. As the hon. member is aware, he can get those figures from the dominion bureau of statistics or from the wheat board, and therefore there is no need for me to put them on the record at all.

Mr. McIlraith: We are entitled to get them from the minister.

Mr. Argue: I would like to ask the minister if he is bringing forward only those prices which support him and not those which have gone down?

Mr. Harkness: It just so happens, Mr. Speaker, that I have with me a piece of paper which I got at noon today and which is entitled "Canada—Prices of Selected Agricultural Products". This publication comes out regularly, and I think the hon. member would be well advised to have a copy of it delivered to him; then he would not be making these constant mistakes in regard to what is happening to prices of agricultural products in this country.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): May I ask the hon. minister this question. Does the government take credit or blame for the rise or drop in prices on the world market?

Mr. Harkness: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, I think, knows that we do not take any blame or any credit—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: —for the general rise and fall in world prices.

An hon. Member: Just the interest rates.

Mr. Harkness: I would point out to the hon. member, however, that we do take some credit for some increase in the prices of fowl, turkeys and certain other products which has taken place in Canada since we have assumed office, and as a result of actions we have taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might address another question to the Minister of Agriculture or the house leader—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Argue: Since the agricultural prices support resolution was placed on the order paper on October 31, and since the house leader on two different occasions intimated to the house that it would be brought forward as soon as possible, does he not think it is now time that this resolution should be brought forward?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows very well that we are trying to get some of the estimates approved by the house at the present time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): How about the farmers in eastern Canada?

Mr. Cardiff: We waste one and a half hours every day answering questions.

Mr. Chevrier: Closure?

SUPPLY

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I desire to congratulate you upon your election as presiding officer of this house. With your host of friends across Canada I felicitate the house on your elevation. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I desire to address some remarks to the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson). I congratulate him on the unique distinction that has come to him in the award of the Nobel peace prize. He has brought recognition to himself and great prestige to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that the award to him has made my task no easier, but having that in mind I still congratulate him and share the joy of Canadians in that award.

It is indeed a great privilege for me to represent Hastings-Frontenac in this house, an area which is so distinguished in the founding and building of Canada, and I say to my constituents that I will endeavour to be worthy of the support they accorded me. I am not unaware of the fact that the parties in this house did not contest the by-election, and I have only this to observe, that I trust it is the beginning of a habit with respect to this.

I know the people of this country are indeed interested in the foreign policy of Canada, our actions and policies in the field of external affairs, and I also know that other governments are equally interested in the actions and policies of this government. We have been considering in this house, and we shall be considering in this house, matters of great moment which might be described as domestic or national. I am not discounting in any measure the importance and significance of these matters when I observe that the solution of the grave problems which confront the nations of the world in 1957 has a practical bearing on the health and happiness of Canadians and on the welfare and progress of Canada.

We cannot expect in this field of external affairs to find ready made solutions. Only the eradication of fear and the establishment of mutual confidence among the nations will provide the basic solution, and the government will endeavour in every way to bring this about. Second, to bring about this state of affairs we shall need steadiness, strength and patience.

In view of the fact that today I am making my first statement on foreign policy, and having regard to the fact that there are many new members of the house, freshmen like myself, I propose to outline in somewhat general terms some of the relations and relationships of Canada with other nations. In common with Canadians of all political persuasions I take pride in the advancement of our country to a position of respect and influence in the international field. We are regarded as a leading country of middle-status in the world. Our role is an important one in the commonwealth, in the affairs of the United Nations, in NATO and in all the other various organizations to which Canada adheres. That is a position which Canada has attained by reason of its growing strength, its sense of responsibility and its willingness to accept responsibility; and I believe it is also due to the exercise by Canadians of a certain wisdom and maturity of judgment.

Natural resources and the development of those resources which Canada has achieved have helped to give us a prestige out of all proportion to the size of our population. Our sacrifices in two world wars, and then in recent years in securing the peace in Korea, the Middle East and Indo-China, have added to that prestige; our contributions, of which I will speak later, toward raising the standard of living in various parts of the world, and our contributions toward the alleviation of want and suffering have, too, enabled Canada to speak with confidence and authority.

Moreover, I think we bring to the consideration of the solution of international problems peculiar qualities which Canadians possess. We are the heirs of a European civilization, and I would think, having regard to the development of our national scene that we have a national, or perhaps I should say a natural, tendency and gift for compromise. We are possessed of an idealism which has been somewhat modified by the skepticism which Canadians must have when they realize that the solution of any problem cannot come about by miracles but only as the result of persistent and hard endeavour.

And so, Mr. Speaker, it is with these encouraging yet challenging thoughts in mind that I take up my new office as Secretary of State for External Affairs. As I enter this field I assure this house that having regard to the firm foundations which have been laid in respect of our foreign affairs by successive governments I will endeavour to build on these foundations and, as a member of this government under the leadership of the Prime Minister, I will do my best to help in building something distinctive and valuable upon these foundations.

In this context it is clear that Canada must seek to understand the aspirations of other countries; Canada must endeavour to apprehend the motives of other nations, whether they be ill or good, and work closely with friendly nations. But all the while Canadians must think for themselves, and Canada's foreign policy should not be merely a pale reflection of the views of other countries.

My first assignment after I became a member of the government was to go to the United Nations. I think that was an excellent introduction for me because it enabled me to study at first hand, at the beginning of my political and diplomatic career, the machinery, the aspirations and the objectives of that great organization.

There was in the United Nations, I found, a curiosity with respect to the attitude of the new government in Canada toward the organization, and I can best describe the views of this government by repeating to this house the words of the Prime Minister when he spoke to the general assembly on September 3, 1957. He stated: "We stand on this question now where Canada has always stood since April, 1945. And I emphasize this, with the support of the party which is now in power. So far as Canada is concerned, support of the United Nations is a cornerstone of its foreign policy. We believe that the United Nations will grow stronger because it represents the inevitable struggle of countries to find order in their relationships, and the deep longing of mankind to strive for and attain peace and justice." That is the stand of this country toward the United Nations.

Our confidence in the United Nations, Mr. Speaker, is not blind. It is, we know, an imperfect instrument. Yet one can understand that. The United Nations is not, as the secretary general stated in his last annual report, a supra-state, and how can we expect the United Nations to be better than those who constitute it? The United Nations is, indeed, a microcosm of an imperfect world, a world now in the shadow of nuclear weapons. However, the United Nations has had its successes, and I think it warrants the designation or description that it is the work shop of world diplomacy.

And amidst all the portents and dark threats of 1957, I suggest to you, sir, that the United Nations is the greatest hope for peace. If the United Nations were not in existence I do think mankind would have to invent something like it in order to afford a forum in which 82 nations could sit down together and discuss face to face their differences and their agreements.

It is a gratifying yet a sobering thought for us that Canada will take its seat for the second time on the security council. That will happen on January 1, 1958.

I was particularly pleased that my first task at the United Nations was to endorse the admission of Malaya and to welcome that country as the newest member state of that organization. The United Nations has now become a more universal body, and many of its new members have risen from the status of colony to that of nationhood. It afforded me even greater pleasure to say on that occasion that I saluted Great Britain, because here was another case that we in Canada know so well of Great Britain encouraging a colony to become a nation. I could not refrain from observing that this had been the historic, the outstanding record of Great Britain, while the U.S.S.R. reversed that process of developing colonies into nations by reducing nations to colonies.

Canada has worked and will continue to work with these new members of the United Nations, and as far as my experience is concerned it has been a joy to co-operate with them.

Among the topics which were discussed at the United Nations this year was the question of disarmament, which was perhaps the major topic. I and members of my delegation at the United Nations had some reason to be not entirely satisfied about the consideration in the twelfth session of the United Nations of that topic which means so much to mankind. The 24 powers did put forward a resolution that was drafted by the subcommittee on disarmament on August 29, 1957, and that resolution did receive endorsation by the general assembly. In fact the U.S.S.R. was not able to line up any votes in opposition to that resolution except those of its own satellites. It is true that there were some who abstained from voting on that 24-power resolution, but I judged that in many cases the abstention was due not to any opposition to the resolution but because they really thought any resolution put forward and adopted by the United Nations would be ineffective as the U.S.S.R. said they would not co-operate in further negotiations under that resolution.

Mr. McIvor: Would you mind stating the resolution?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I have it here but it is quite long. Could I offer it as a paper to be put in my speech? It would take about five minutes to read, Mr. Speaker, but I could outline its purport. It is to the effect that we should make a partial step in disarmament.

After we had obtained for that resolution approval from the general assembly which was unanimous but with abstentions, the U.S.S.R. said they would not participate in the discussions of the disarmament commission or of the subcommittee. We were greatly disappointed to hear that, because in getting that resolution so admirably supported in the United Nations we felt we had a vote of the peoples of the world that would carry some weight with the U.S.S.R. because it reflected a world-wide opinion that they should consider the rejection of the western proposals.

We tried to make it clear to the United Nations that the resolution that was so widely supported in the general assembly was not necessarily in our opinion the only means whereby disarmament could be promoted. On October 23, 1957, I spoke in the political committee and asked our soviet friends to look at the resolution; not to regard it as coming from us in a take it or leave it manner, but to accept it on our assurance that it would be a basis for further negotiations. Well, after the U.S.S.R. stated definitely that they would not negotiate any further, they did put forward the suggestion that the disarmament commission should be made up of the 82 member nations of the United Nations, and indeed that the complexion of the general assembly itself should be reflected in the new disarmament commission.

We all felt that this was a manifestly impractical proposition, and we were bound to conclude that it was merely a propaganda move. It would be entirely unwieldy for 82 nations to sit down and discuss the problem in one meeting or series of meetings on disarmament. That was, however, put to the general assembly by the U.S.S.R. and it was rejected by the general assembly.

Even after that Canada, taking the lead in some cases and in other cases co-operating with other friendly powers, tried again to find a well-balanced and reasonable group by way of a suggestion for the composition of the disarmament commission that would satisfy the U.S.S.R. Finally there was put before the general assembly a proposal for the extension and enlargement of the disarmament commission to include the members of the security council, 11, and Canada, and in addition 14 other countries. That was adopted by the general assembly to the extent that three-quarters of the governments of every group in the United Nations endorsed it. That proved unacceptable to the U.S.S.R., although at one point in our negotiations we did hope that it might be acceptable to them.

Now that the enlarged disarmament commission has been established the U.S.S.R. say they will not participate in its discussions and our only hope is that they will reconsider their views so we can sit down together with them to the end that the armament race will not be continued, because as I endeavoured to tell the political committee of the United Nations—and I have no desire to indulge in scare headlines here today—the issue is in effect and in essence human survival.

In all these arguments in the committee and in the general assembly the Russians came back time and time again to their proposal. The first part of their counter-proposal is that the nations of the world who are members of the U.N. should resolve to ban the use of nuclear weapons. Since I have come to Ottawa I have had letters from many persons throughout Canada which said, "What a laudable proposal that is from the U.S.S.R."

Now, sir, one must confess it has an immediate attraction and appeal. "Ban the use of nuclear weapons." I ask you, sir, and I ask this house why, then, can we not accept this laudable proposal? The answer, the grim answer, is that a promise not to use nuclear weapons is good only until one nation decides to break it. There must be, for our security, a measure of inspection that will ensure that the undertakings in that regard are being carried out. Disarmament cannot be achieved by the stroke of a pen or the mere passing of a resolution.

My colleague the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) who was vice-chairman of the Canadian delegation at the twelfth session of the assembly, took a very active part in these negotiations, and I know he will be ready and willing to amplify what I have endeavoured to tell the house this afternoon.

In addition to disarmament, a striking characteristic of the debate had to do with the words I used a few moments ago, "human survival". It is evident that the advances or discoveries in the field of science and technology pose a new and urgent problem in international politics. We cannot solve that problem merely by talking about our endeavours of yesteryear. New scientific weapons and scientific discoveries have provided an urgency about the solution of those problems. Canada, I can assure this house, will endeavour in every way possible to advance further discussion and negotiations with respect to disarmament. For 11 years representatives of Canada have carried on those endeavours, and we hope we can keep the Canadian flag waving in respect of a matter of such vital concern to the human race, at least to make suggestions in negotiating a first-stage agreement with the U.S.S.R.

Apart from disarmament there was consideration of political crises. One had to do particularly with Syria. The Syrians lodged a resolution with the secretary general that would provide for a discussion of the threat to their security on the Syrian-Turkish border. Several efforts were made toward negotiation in that regard. I was there when the debate opened and I can still remember the polemics and the propaganda that were indulged in by the chief delegate for the U.S.S.R. Our approach to that problem was that any nation such as Syria should have the opportunity to bring before the general assembly what it thought was a threat to its security. That did not in any way indicate that we had in mind that Turkey as a responsible member of NATO would act in an irresponsible way. But we endeavoured to provide every possible way of finding out the facts.

Hon. members may recall that King Saud of Saudi Arabia offered to intervene and mediate, and there were suggestions that the security council might come into the picture. In association with Japan, Denmark, Norway, Paraguay, Peru and Spain we put forward a resolution that would call attention to the availability of the secretary general for consultation between Syria and Turkey, or even the availability of the secretary general to carry on an investigation; and then rather dramatically Syria and Turkey decided that the debate should be terminated.

I said it was dramatic, but it was not very spectacular. I do not think the press gave it enough publicity. It really was a product of what the secretary general of the United Nations has said of the United Nations "diplomacy of reconciliation." There in the general assembly these charges and countercharges were exchanged, and it was undoubtedly felt by the U.S.S.R. that it was up to Syria in this regard; that they were losing the battle of polemics and that their propaganda concepts and objectives were being turned against them. That was indeed a victory for the United Nations and for the participation of the nations of the world in that debate in the general assembly.

It would be an illusion, Mr. Speaker, to think that the underlying causes of tension in that area, and the fever and the rise in tempers, are gone. We would all hope that the diplomacy, the reconciliation which was provided by the United Nations could be again brought to bear on the lowering of the fever and on the lowering of tempers.

I now desire to say something about the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East. Notwithstanding press reports today with respect to another sector, the Jordanian-Israeli border, of which we in the department as yet have nothing more than we have read in the paper, I can say that the record of UNEF, the United Nations emergency force, has been one of great satisfaction not only to the U.N. but to the world. There have been on the border few incidents in recent months. Indeed, I was talking to Major General Burns and he told me that in the last few weeks there have not been any incidents on that border. Undoubtedly UNEF contributed at least to arrest the movement that might have resulted in war, and we in Canada must be proud of our participation in that force. One-fifth of the force come from Canada, 1,200 out of 6,000. We must take a particular pride in the commander in chief of the force, Major General E. L. M. Burns. On all sides he was praised by members of the general assembly in the debate that took place last Friday morning. I would say, in the words of our Prime Minister who spoke to the general assembly in September, that as long as the United Nations considers the presence of the UNEF in that particular area as necessary, Canada will continue to support by participating in its composition.

The secretary general in his recent annual report, having mentioned the temporary nature of the force, with the limited mandate in a particular area, went on to say that the value of such a force in such situations has been fully demonstrated. I would certainly subscribe to that view, as all the delegations from the west would. In that report the secretary general suggested that an agreed stand-by plan for a United Nations peace force which could be activated on short notice might be given consideration. Small wars, small conflicts, expand into great wars, and if agreement could be reached on the establishment of such a force I would think it would be a most significant step in making the United Nations a more effective organization for the maintenance of peace.

The establishment of the United Nations emergency force as an experiment gave rise to certain consequences, and one had to do with money. The estimated cost of the force during the period from November, 1956, to December 31, 1957 is in the region of $30 million. Against this sum the total amount received or firmly pledged so far is some $24 million. That includes the recent offer from the United States of $12 million and the recent offer from the United Kingdom of $1 million. It now appears that there will be a shortfall for the period ending December 31, 1957, of approximately $3 million to $4 million. It is estimated that in the year 1958 the force will cost $25 million.

I have used these figures, and I do not regard them as large or high when you put into the balance the great benefit that has followed the establishment and deployment of that force on that border, the release of tension thereby preventing further expansion of the conflict in the area. On Friday last I introduced in the general assembly a resolution for which 20 other countries offered their co-sponsorship. That resolution reaffirmed the principle that the responsibility for additional funds required in 1958 for the maintenance of this force should be shared by all members of the United Nations in accordance with the scale of assessment that is invoked for the normal United Nations budget. That resolution was adopted despite the opposition of the U.S.S.R. bloc, and was adopted by a larger majority than we expected, with the result that I can say to members of the house that the financing of UNEF is now assured.

Other Middle East isues continue to be the centre of attention at the United Nations. One of them has to do with the grave plight of the Palestinian refugees, and in this context one cannot say that any real progress has been made during the past year. The United Nations relief and works agency for Palestine refugees in the Near East, to give it its full title, has continued to provide essential rations and other relief services, but shortage of funds has increasingly hampered the agency in its effort to maintain these services or to proceed in an orderly way with the limited rehabilitation projects possible under present conditions.

I am happy to report that Canada during the past nine years has been the fourth largest non-Arab contributor to Palestine refugee relief, and in 1957 Canada was the third largest contributor. We have continued to urge other countries that they should accord greater support to UNRWA in order that there will not be a further decline in the standard of living of these unfortunate refugees. The estimates for 1957-58, at present before the house, seek approval of a Canadian contribution to UNRWA of $750,000 to cover the 18-month period ending December 31, 1957. When the estimates for 1958-59 are brought before the next session, parliament will be asked to approve a Canadian contribution to UNRWA of $500,000, which is relatively the same as the figure of $750,000 in relation to 18 months.

Before I turn from the United Nations I desire to inform the house of certain other contributions to the United Nations extra-budgetary programs. The following amounts are included in the 1957-58 estimates at present before the house to cover Canadian contributions to these programs of the United Nations during the calendar year 1957. In the 1958-59 estimates parliament will be asked by the government to approve Canadian contributions of the same amounts to cover the programs of these organizations during the year 1958.

These are the amounts. In addition to UNRWA there is $2 million to the United Nations expanded program of technical assistance, $200,000 to the United Nations refugee fund and $650,000 to the United Nations children's emergency fund. All these proposed contributions are on the same scale as those to which the previous parliament gave its approval.

I turn now, for want of time but not for want of subject matter, from the United Nations to another vitally important sector of our foreign policy.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Would the minister permit a question? I wonder whether the minister could assure the house that notwithstanding Canada's negative vote in the economic and social council, Canada will support the SUNFED program which is currently being debated in the general assembly.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I am very happy to respond to that question. There are negotiations going on now at the United Nations—the Minister of Finance referred to this in the house last week—with respect to the providing of financial assistance outside of the Colombo plan to nations not only in southeast and south Asia but throughout the world. I would ask the hon. member to believe me when I say that I do not regard the negative vote against the proposal of SUNFED as indicating that the Canadian government will not support a proposal that I hope will come out of the negotiations.

Those negotiations are still being carried on and, as the Minister of Finance stated, the government has not yet heard of their results and has, of course, made no decision. When the decision in that regard is made the government will quickly inform the house. Without going into the details—and it would not be fitting for me to disclose the details of negotiations—I think perhaps another proposal will be even more helpful to these underdeveloped countries than the particular SUNFED plan.

If I may leave the United Nations and go to the Colombo plan, I doubt, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any single task in the international field which Canada has undertaken that should receive greater approval and endorsation from Canadians of all walks of life and all political persuasions. No reasonable man could doubt the benefits which this type of enterprise is bringing to all of us in the western world, in the non-communist world, to put it that way, whether we are benefactors or whether we are beneficiaries of the operation of the Colombo plan.

Two of my colleagues in the government have recently been in south and southeast Asia, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne). They have returned to Ottawa, and from each of them I have heard of the unceasing struggle of the undeveloped countries in that part of the world to raise their standards of living. The hon. member for St. John's West, who attended in my place the Saigon meeting of the consultative committee of the Colombo plan, can testify to the benefits that have accrued from Canada's investment in these particular projects.

These grants, hon. members of the house —and I say this from the bottom of my being—are not hand-outs. We should really think of them as helping hands. There is another feature, members of the house, about our investment in the Colombo plan. Famine, distress and low standards of living create the seed-beds of unrest and indeed could create—and in some instances have done so—the seed-bed of war. It worries me to talk in this vein, but if anyone wants to talk about these matters in mere monetary terms, I would offer a good argument and, I think, a conclusive one that in time these countries in which we are making investments will become good customers and provide much opportunity for Canada. But I put that suggestion forward in second or third place.

As some hon. members of this house know, particularly the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson), the Colombo plan was a concept initiated and brought about in the commonwealth. Here is another instance of the commonwealth creating a nucleus which in due course produced a strengthened, forward-looking and beneficial international enterprise. In the routine aspect of carrying forward the program under the Colombo plan there always has had to be and there will have to be discussions with engineers, administrators and economists. Then there will have to be discussions with the countries to whom help might be offered, as to their needs. When decisions in that regard are made, Mr. Speaker, we will of course report to the house.

On November 22 in this session of parliament the Prime Minister informed the house that the government will seek parliamentary approval of an appropriation for 1958-59 of $35 million. The estimates that will be considered in a few days provide for a contribution of $34,400,000. We are proposing an increase of $600,000 for 1958-59.

Time does not permit me to go into detail with respect to other parts of south and southeast Asia but in passing I would refer to the work of the international commissions in Indochina. The task of the commission in Cambodia is, in our opinion, about completed. There have been difficulties in the way of dissolving or disbanding the commission. In Laos where we are members of an international commission, after nearly three years of negotiations between the royal government and the Pathet Lao, an agreement has finally been reached whereby the Pathet Lao which has been controlling one part of Laos will be integrated into the national community. I seize this opportunity to say that we sympathize with the desire of the Laotian people to achieve a political settlement within the terms of the Geneva agreements of 1954. We hope that this latest development will result in a strong Laos and a continuation of the democratic approach that has been followed by the royal government.

Viet-Nam remains divided. It is in this area where the sort of international supervision that is provided by the international commissions has been most important for the maintenance of peace.

In relation to south and southeast Asia I would reiterate what I have endeavoured to say, namely that the recent visits of ministers of the government to that part of the world should be taken as indicative of our interest in the area, our close interest in commonwealth ties, our desire to help the countries of the area to improve their standard of living and of our willingness to do our part in preserving peace.

A few moments ago I mentioned the commonwealth. May I interpolate here—and this is a personal note—that after I reached the United Nations in the middle of September I was asked to attend a meeting of the commonwealth group. It was not a bloc but a group. I am sure that no one else in the room could appreciate how thrilled I was, indeed how excited I was, at that first meeting. Here sitting around a horseshoe table were representatives of ten independent nations of the British commonwealth, men and women coming from various climes, of various religions and cultures. There they sat. It seemed to me—and this is the basis of my thrill and of my excitement—that there was before me a brilliant page of British history, the bringing of colonies to nationhood. There was no treaty binding them together. Indeed I would say, for the want of a better word, that there was something mystical in their adherence to common ideals of the dignity of the individual, of justice, fairness and fair play.

I now come closer to home, Mr. Speaker, and I desire for a moment or two to mention our neighbours in this hemisphere. I would point out first our relationship to the republics of Latin America. Some of my first conversations at the United Nations in September were with representatives of the republics of Latin America. Since I have been in Ottawa I am gradually beginning to get to know better the ambassadors from Latin America. I know that in the assembly and the councils of the United Nations our Canadian representatives over the years have acquired a deep appreciation of the strength, the wisdom and the vision which representatives of the Latin republics have brought to the discussions, deliberations and decisions of that body.

I refer, just by way of example, to only two. Colombia and Brazil made contributions in men and equipment to UNEF. Colombia and Brazil have each served three times on the security council. I think of Brazil today, which is the largest Latin nation in the world, with a population larger than that of Spain or Italy or France, with enormous natural resources scarcely tapped, a country of great promise. We have traded with those countries over many years, indeed for a century I am informed. I hope that the substantial volume of our two-way trade with the Latin American nations today is only a stage on the way to greater expansion.

But it is only in the post-war years since 1945 that there has been an increased exchange of personnel, visitors and businessmen between Canada and the Latin American republics. Attending our colleges and universities are a considerable number of students who have come to us from Latin America. Visitors and tourists are increasing. Commercial aviation has been a significant factor in helping us to become better acquainted with the Latin American countries. The Mexican air line operates a regular service between Mexico City and Windsor, Ontario. Our own Canadian Pacific Air Lines now ranks as a major air service in the Americas. Those 20 independent nations are playing an increasing part in deliberations that are designed for the solution of international problems—and I express the hope that the cordial relations which now exist with those 20 nations will be enhanced and increased.

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to our closest neighbour, the United States. A kindly providence has willed the geographical location of that country with respect to Canada. With the United States we share a continent and a common heritage from many lands beyond the seas, moulded around political philosophies which have become, in some measure perhaps, the central core of the institutions of both our countries. These philosophies, coming from our twin motherlands, Great Britain and France, have been shared by us as comrades in arms during two world wars. Again, when we fought with the Americans under the flag of the United Nations in Korea, we Canadians knew the value of our American friends.

We have been in close association with our neighbour in the United Nations and we also work closely with them in NATO. Particularly those of us who remember the years before the first world war, welcome their assumption of world leadership during the last two decades. I must however observe that sometimes in pursuit of common objectives the means chosen by the United States to effect these ends may have side effects which are injurious to Canada and which in many instances are not made clear to the American people and of which therefore they are not properly aware.

When we in Canada consider that such effects may stem from any action or inaction on the part of the United States and may affect what we deem to be the best and just interests of our country and our people we must, without petulance or sophomoric sensitivity, seek from our United States neighbours the consideration of those effects. There is nothing wrong or improper with conscientiously facing the problems or difficulties separating true friends. This is also true in the field of international relations. What to my mind would be wrong and improper would be for us to dig and dig for slights and to magnify oversights. It would be equally wrong on the part of Canada and equally improper for the two governments to allow old and burning problems to fester, if I may use that word, and to continue unresolved. It is in that way that misunderstandings grow and fair-mindedness of the people and their governments may be warped. There have been problems between our countries throughout our history. The territorial part which we know as Canada did not exist in the early days but those who have read the biography of Sir John A. Macdonald by Professor Creighton will appreciate what I have been saying.

From those early years there have been problems between us and they have continued, indeed, down to our present difficulties with respect to the United States wheat surplus disposal programs. I declare, Mr. Speaker, that considerate frankness will not endanger true friendship between our countries. Above all, it is of paramount importance to international peace that Canada and the United States, unequal as they are with respect to military and economic force but equal in their common respect for the dignity of the individual, should set a continued example to the whole world of how friendly nations can live together.

May I state as simply as I can how I see the development of our relations with the United States. We must be friends; friendship however means something more than the absence of enmity. Friendship really means the existence of positive and effective interest on the part of each nation in the welfare of the other.

In recent weeks we have been dramatically stopped in our tracks; we have been forced to give closer examination to our collective security arrangements by reason of the success of the U.S.S.R. in the launching of the intercontinental ballistic missile and in the launching of two earth satellites. It has been a shock but it has had a salutary effect in terms of the re-appraisal of our common defence.

We in the democracies are apt to relax until pressure is brought upon us by the course of events; then we jump into action. I do think that in this age of infinite risk we should have some concern about this characteristic tendency to relax in the absence of pressure. That attitude of relaxation when there is no pressure on us may, and in this case probably has, tempted fate. However, we have now been dramatically reminded of the terrible menace of nuclear warfare and as a result all members of NATO recognize they are faced with the necessity of making far-reaching decisions in the military field while, at the same time, having to cope with political problems of exceptional complexity. I claim your indulgence at this time as I desire to make a careful statement in this regard. I wish to say a word about military and political problems because I think the success of NATO in rising to the occasion will depend largely on how it can merge its military and its political objectives.

Despite soviet accusations that NATO is an aggressor and was designed for aggression, the sole military purpose of NATO—this has been declaimed over and over again and we have no reason to doubt it—is to deter aggression by providing firm evidence that aggressors would be quickly and successfully met if they should attack any member of the alliance. In NATO there is a formidable capability—as General Norstad stated in Ottawa 10 days ago—to deter aggression. In this connection he also said that this capability is not altered or modified by the possession by any other power of a nuclear intercontinental ballistic missile.

This is a field, I am aware, where theories abound and often conflict. I do not intend to do more at this point than to state the government's position, indeed its conviction, that the value of NATO as a deterrent remains intact and that it is incumbent upon us—we who have banded together in NATO—to exploit the opportunities which exist for closer co-operation in the fields of military, economic and scientific affairs.

We must seek for co-operation by increased exchange of scientific and technical information and from the stimulation of scientific education and research in the NATO countries. We should be able to find that further co-operation is possible in the economic production of modern weapons.

Military problems will loom large on the agenda of the NATO meeting which is to be held next month in Paris but, in the minds of many governments and of many peoples, that meeting will be judged just as much by its achievement in the non-military field as in the military field and, with the challenge of communism all the time advancing, NATO must move with the times in the field of politics.

It is dreadfully essential that we of the NATO alliance should intensify and develop our military contribution. But that is not enough. It is essential that we should work together to improve our machinery for consultation and promote the intimacy of our intramural understanding. These obligations are with us and they must be observed, but they are limited. To confine ourselves in NATO to attaining them alone would be to cultivate our own interdependence as members of NATO without realizing that the health and strength of the alliance depends on its relations with the world outside. There is, in other words, a global interdependence in this age of scientific discovery and nationalist ferment, and it is important for us and important for NATO not to underestimate that need.

No one should think of letting down his guard at the present time; no prudent man can deny the need for defence insurance. What I am suggesting is that the security organization will be successful or unsuccessful according to the degree of intelligence with which its political policies are formulated and pursued.

To give an example, I turn for a moment to the problem of soviet activity in uncommitted neutral states. This is a serious and growing danger. How are they going? Are they going toward the soviets or toward the west? This cannot be ignored by NATO members, and yet NATO as such is perhaps not well equipped to deal with such a problem. The difficulty lies in the fact that while the Asian and African nations which are uncommitted have no more desire than we have to see greater domination of other countries by the U.S.S.R. Having regard to the historic relations they have had with the west and having regard to their desire to flex their muscles as new and independent nations, they might think that the steps which are being taken at NATO are designed for our security, and of course they are, and they would not necessarily adopt them wholeheartedly as their measures.

We must recognize, too, that nationalism is not necessarily synonymous with communism in young countries, but we have to realize also that nationalism has been exploited by communism. There are real risks in dealing with these uncommitted nations. Their peoples may succumb to the blandishments and to the plausible and insidious appeal of soviet tactics, but we must respect them as independent nations. We must work with them and assure them that we regard them as independent nations, and try to establish a mature and wise relationship with them. Or, to put it another way, unless we assure them by word and deed that our participation in NATO is complementary to and not in conflict with our membership in the commonwealth and in the United Nations we may not be able to make much appeal to them.

Canada is a middle power with roots in the three associations, in NATO, in the commonwealth and in the United Nations. I think Canada has a special reason for avoiding an absolutely rigid dependence on any one of these organizations as the sole instrument or channel of its foreign policy.

I come now to my final point in relation to the NATO meeting projected for Paris in December. The house will not expect me—and even if it did I could not do this—to predict the specific terms of the agenda or the likely outcome of the deliberations. I am more concerned to suggest to this house the general philosophy which I think should govern our approach to that meeting. We must, as I have already indicated, start from the premise that new and intensified efforts at military and scientific co-operation are essential, and we must be prepared to do our part in developing that co-operation. We must, in the second place, in view of the unhappy events of the last two or three weeks, renew our determination to consult frankly on issues which have caused, or are likely to cause, divisions in NATO. And, thirdly, to return to the point I was trying to make a few moments ago, we must assure the world outside NATO that no one need fear aggression from us; that far from regarding the forthcoming meeting as an end in itself, the whole world, including ourselves, regards it as a symbol of our determination to protect ourselves and, no less important, of our genuine and sustained interests in finding ultimate peaceful solutions to the issues that divide us from the communist world.

I have endeavoured to put before this house a diagram of Canada's relations with other nations. Nothing that I have said should obscure our intense resolution to reduce tensions between the west and the U.S.S.R. No sane person could run the risk of shutting any promising door on the possibility of co-existence. Yet—and this is not double talk—we should not fall into a propaganda plot; we should not be lulled into complacency by empty or hollow professions such as happened after the Geneva meeting. We must keep up our defences pending the arrival of the day for which we have hoped, the arrival of the day of substantial mutual trust between the west and the east. And I should add this: we must have convincing proof that the U.S.S.R. has abandoned its policies of domination. Co-existence cannot be used as a cover for subversion on the part of the U.S.S.R. in free countries. What I have been trying to say, sir, is that we must keep our powder dry and put the hand out.

Mr. Speaker, I have just been handed a message. President Eisenhower has sustained a cerebral spasm, apparently very serious. The White House now says it is a form of heart attack. That is not unrelated to what I have been trying to say.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, before I say anything else I think I will be voicing the feeling of all hon. members of this house when I express our sense of shock and regret at the news we have just heard; of the tragic misfortune which has befallen a great president of a great country, a man who has served not only his country but our own country and the world in war and in peace. We must hope, Mr. Speaker, that this misfortune is only temporary and that the president will soon return to health and vigour. The information which I have received is to the effect that this is likely to be the case. I know we will all hope sincerely that is the case.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate my hon. friend who has just spoken, not repeating the congratulations and good wishes which I have already addressed to him in the house and outside the house, but to thank him for his comprehensive and very interesting review of the international situation as he sees it. I know that he has not been in office very long but he has already entered into the duties of that office with vigour and, I know, with the highest ideals. Perhaps I may say now what it was not possible for me to say when I occupied his position, that I am sure he is already grateful for the help and assistance he has received and will receive from the officials of the Department of External Affairs, a body of men who I think are not excelled in intelligence, devotion and industry by the foreign service of any country in the world. Perhaps I may also be permitted to thank him for his very kind words about the honour that has been recently bestowed on me because of my work in external affairs over the years.

The minister referred to his election and to the fact that he was not opposed in that by-election and expressed the hope that perhaps this would be the beginning of a habit. I must tell him that when I entered the house in a similar way in a by-election some years ago I was also not opposed by a Conservative candidate but in my case it was not the beginning of a habit and I suspect it will not be in his case either. However, we noted with interest how successful he was in what I might call a "dry run", or perhaps a "red run" would be more appropriate in this case.

In regard to what the minister has said about the necessity of maintaining good relations with other countries and in regard to the principles he laid down which would help to bring that about—and I am not going to go into this in detail—we on this side are of course in complete agreement. He did not —and I do not criticize him for this—go into detail on some of these matters but in regard to the principles he enunciated I am sure there will be no disagreement on this side of the house.

It is a good thing for parliament to develop and maintain as much unity as is possible in such things as external affairs and as I have said more than once—and on more than one occasion I have been the beneficiary of this sentiment—however vigorously we may disagree in this house on domestic affairs and indeed on foreign affairs when it is unavoidable, we should do our best to bring about a situation where it is possible for politics to end at the water's edge.

So far as the foreign policy of the present government is concerned, in so far as we have been able to determine it during its short period in office, there does not seem to have been very much change. I think we on this side can welcome that for the reasons which I have just indicated. But as events a year ago showed there can be division, even vigorous if not bitter division, in this house on fundamental questions of foreign policy. If I detected in some of the observations of the minister a change in attitude on some of these matters from that which I experienced in the house about a year ago perhaps that is an evidence of the chastening effect of responsibility in office. In that connection I think the minister's references to the United Nations are an example of what I have in mind. It was just about a year ago on January 22, 1957 that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), as reported at page 527 of Hansard of that date, said:

—we are making a great mistake—

The hon. member at that time was criticizing our policy at the United Nations. He said:

—we are making a great mistake in placing too much reliance on this organization—

He meant the United Nations—

—for the preservation of peace.

He later added in his statement that it is the height of folly to place so much dependence on it. When he was itemizing the factors on which our foreign policy should be based he placed the United Nations at the bottom of the list at that time. The other factors mentioned by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce were the commonwealth, NATO, the United States and then the United Nations. Therefore I heard with some satisfaction the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker's) statement at the United Nations on September 23, 1957 which has been referred to and indeed this particular paragraph was quoted by my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith). The Prime Minister said:

Support of the United Nations is the cornerstone of Canada's foreign policy . . . we believe it will grow stronger—

I echo that observation.

—because it represents . . . the deep longing of mankind to strive for and attain peace and justice.

There is a relationship, I think, between this feeling that the United Nations is the cornerstone of policy and the policy which we on this side tried to bring about last autumn when we were in office in connection with the Middle East. It will be, of course, very fresh in the minds of many hon. members of this house that last autumn some members of the present government when they were in opposition rejected United Nations' intervention in that dispute and attacked us very vigorously for supporting and indeed doing our best to initiate and strengthen such intervention. That Canadian policy which was based on support of the United Nations in this matter was characterized by hon. members opposite at that time as abandoning our friends. Indeed, they used stronger language than that and again I quote the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he said on November 27, as reported at page 100 of Hansard:

—why in the world should we not have stood by our friends and allies . . . But no, in their hour of need we stood on the sidelines.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not think it was fair then to say we stood on the sidelines and I do not think it is fair now to characterize our action in those terms. We did not stand on the sidelines, but rather we did our best to support United Nations' intervention. If we at that time had followed the policy which was advocated by some hon. gentlemen opposite we would have had to vote against the intervention of the United Nations in this issue at all, and if that motion had carried and if the United Nations had not been permitted to intervene, believe me the United Nations today would not today be the cornerstone of our foreign policy.

Indeed I doubt whether the United Nations as a political organization would have been able to survive that kind of decision.

Mr. Speaker, that was one reason why I myself greeted with great pleasure the appointment of my hon. friend as Secretary of State for External Affairs. I recall how at that time he had taken what I thought was a very sound and forthright view of the Suez crisis and our policy toward it. I remember that when speaking in Quebec on April 3, 1957 to the English-speaking union in that city he said, according to the press report:

The role of Canada in the great British family of nations had been particularly noticeable and brilliant during the Middle East crisis last autumn.

He also repeated on that occasion what he said today, and I could not agree more with him, that Canada's foreign policy is not merely a reflection of the United States or of the United Kingdom. This is from the press report:

Using the Suez crisis, as an example, Dr. Smith showed that this independent policy—

This Canadian policy, working through the United Nations—this is my own interpolation—

—had not broken the ties and had not weakened the structure—

—of the commonwealth; I confess, of course, that when my hon. friend assumed office a little later—and we would not expect him to do otherwise—he characterized our action of a year ago in somewhat less forthright terms of approval, but he did say that he agreed in the main with what we did then. He made the qualification, however,—and I think it is an important one—that there could have been better communication within the commonwealth on this issue at that time —I agree with that, but I think it was not the fault of a Canadian government that there was no communciation at that time in regard to the Suez crisis. Perhaps at this press conference the minister might have pursued the matter a little farther but the Prime Minister interrupted him at that point.

In his statement I thought the minister made some very appropriate references to the commonwealth and to the important part it is playing in the world and the important part it should play in our development of foreign policy as well. He mentioned his own feelings when he went down to the United Nations and for the first time sat around the table with the 10 members of independent commonwealth governments from all the continents of the world except perhaps South America. I remember also—and perhaps this is an even more dramatic tribute, dramatic evidence, of the value of this association—sitting around the table with those same commonwealth members a year ago when we were not in agreement on important policy, when we were split not only two ways but three ways and four ways and yet during those difficult and indeed tragic times that friendly, fraternal association characterized by those meetings around the table persisted. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is the real test of an association, the ability to remain in friendly and intimate contact when you cannot agree on policy. Even when we do not agree on policy within the commonwealth we always try to agree, and that is the test of an association.

Perhaps I might join with my hon. friend in welcoming into this association the new independent state of Malaya. I recall how fitting were the words he used at the United Nations on the occasion of the entry of Malaya into the United Nations. That entry into the commonwealth of another Asian state, Mr. Speaker, underlines the fact that this commonwealth of nations is now in its membership predominantly Asian-African.

Of course, the core, the heart, the centre of it remains the United Kingdom, and it will always be that; but five-sixths of the population of the nations of the commonwealth are now Asian-African.

That introduces new problems of commonwealth relationships which will undoubtedly —it has already—introduce certain difficulties which have at times resulted almost in strains to our relationship. But it also gives us new opportunities inside the commonwealth, and perhaps one of the greatest and most valuable roles this association can play—and this has been said by many people before—is that it can act, it can become a bridge—it is now a bridge when there are very few bridges indeed—between Asia and the west. I join with my hon. friend in the hope that we shall do everything we can in this country to maintain and strengthen the association.

The minister also spoke of the work going on at the United Nations and I should like to congratulate him, the vice-chairman and other members of the delegation on what I think is the constructive part they have been playing down there in New York. I know a great many of the discussions, of the most difficult discussions, have centred around disarmament and I know they may have been disappointed, though they worked very hard indeed to bring about a compromise. They must have been disappointed when their efforts were not successful but only because the soviet union has refused to participate in the new committee which they and other delegations were successful in setting up. But I would not myself indulge in any great disappointment in that failure in substance because if it were not possible to work out these armaments problems in a subcommittee of five, including the four great powers, then I doubt whether a committee of 25, even with a broader composition, and including more points of view would have any greater chance of success.

I also agree with what the minister said about the effort to bring about a ban on the use of atomic and nuclear weapons. This is something that appeals to us very much indeed and must do so when we contemplate the effect of the use of those weapons on our very survival; but nevertheless it is essential, as it was considered by us when we were in office, that prohibition of that kind, to be effective and to bring about not only the ban but the confidence and trust which must go with a ban of this kind, must be surrounded by adequate provision for inspection and control. That is where the main difficulty occurs, and a difficulty which it has not yet been possible to surmount.

I would also like to join with the minister in the tribute he paid to the United Nations emergency force for the fine work it is doing in this tense and disturbed area of the world under a distinguished Canadian. Perhaps the importance of that work can be exaggerated, but nevertheless that force did bring some kind of order to a border which was in flames.

If it had not reached that area at that time and come between the opposing forces that limited conflict might have spread into something much wider, deeper and more catastrophic.

Therefore, this particular experiment, because that is all it is, has shown that the United Nations can be useful in that kind of operation. I congratulate my hon. friend for the resolution which he introduced on behalf of the Canadian delegation which would, I hope, have the effect of making this kind of thing more permanent, make it easier to set up a permanent organization and perhaps encourage the construction on those foundations of something which will be of more permanent value.

The minister then went on to talk about relations with the United States. I suppose in so far as difficulties and problems are concerned no relations between Canada and any other country—I am talking now about difficulties and complications—are as important as those with our neighbour, the United States, which, in the words of the minister, a kindly Providence has willed should be our closest neighbour. There have been occasions in the house when it has seemed to me that on some sides there has been inadequate recognition of the kindliness of Providence in putting us alongside this great neighbour. But, nevertheless, when the dust of debate clears away we are all conscious in the house of that good fortune when we compare our lot as a middle power alongside the United States, which may be a bigger power but is a partner power, with that, if you like, of a satellite communist nation alongside the Soviet union.

The minister said, I hope I am not misinterpreting what he said, that perhaps we did not make our position sufficiently clear to our neighbour when they took action which had a harmful effect on us. He went on, and I agree with him, to say that we should not be afraid to talk to them about mutual problems in a very frank and forthright way. I agree with that, Mr. Speaker, and that is one reason why I should talk this afternoon about one matter which seems to me to be not only important in our relationships with our neighbour but which might, if we are not careful, lead to difficulties and complications which could be avoided. I talk about this also because there may not be any other opportunity during this session and it certainly is an important aspect of our foreign relations.

I refer to the continental air defence agreement with the United States. I am going to ask a good many questions about it because I think we are entitled to ask these questions. We have done so already in this House of Commons and I do not think that we have received answers which clear up our worries about this subject. What is this agreement? How was it reached? Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not yet know. There have been answers to questions in the house. I and members of the opposition have characterized those answers as confusing and contradictory, a characterization which has been repudiated by the Prime Minister. I think, however, it is accurate to say that the answers have not been very clarifying and that the two statements made by the Prime Minister on this subject have not added much to the clarification to which I think we are entitled.

It was complained by the Prime Minister himself, that we are pressing for secret security information. That, Mr. Speaker, is not the case, as I hope to show. But I do think that the house, and through the house the country, should be given at least as much information about this matter and the implications of it as is being given to the people of the United States by the secretary of state, Mr. Dulles. Indeed, it is in part the statements that have emanated from Washington and other places in the United States by persons in high positions of responsibility that have made it all the more necessary in our view that more information should be given here.

I do not think it is fair and I do not think it is right that responsibility in regard to this matter should be evaded by accusing us of asking for information which cannot be given on security grounds, and I do not think it is accurate to try to draw any parallel with the Ogdensburg agreement which is not the same kind of agreement at all and which was in fact tabled and discussed in the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister said the other day that we were departing from the normal course followed in the house in asking for this kind of information. I should like to quote to him from some of his previous speeches or if I cannot do that at the present time I should like merely to remind him of some of the speeches he made when on this side in regard to parliament's right to know. It has been suggested by the Prime Minister and I think by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) that this North American air defence command, NORAD, is a normal development of NATO and that the arrangements regarding it were made through the United States-Canadian planning group of NATO, one of the regional groupings of NATO.

But I would point out, and there should be no misunderstanding on this score, that the NORAD air defence command or, indeed, continental defence generally—I am talking about North American continental defence generally—is not directly related to NATO at all and this particular headquarters is not a NATO command in any sense of the word. I wish it were. There is no NATO supervision or control of this organization, this agency. The regional planning group of NATO to which reference has been made is something very different indeed from a NATO command.

What we would like to have in connection with this important development in United States-Canadian relations is not any secret information about the plans which this agency may be developing or the representatives of the two defence departments may be developing. What we would like to have is information about the principles under which it is operating, the relations of the two governments concerning it and some statement which will clear up the contradictions which we think have already been made. Certainly we would expect any intergovernmental agreement, as it has been called, between the two governments of a formal, binding character to be made public but that is very different from saying that we would expect the plans under that agreement to be made public. Some of these are obviously bound to be secret and could not be made public.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what we did with the North Atlantic pact. When that was tabled, discussed and debated in the house for two or three days it was not, as the Prime Minister said the other day, primarily because it meant Canadian troops would be serving under it beyond the confines of Canada. When we discussed NATO we did not know at that time where they would be serving. In any event, if that is the main reason for bringing agreements of this kind before the House of Commons, I suppose under this agreement there will be Canadians serving outside Canada in the United States of America. Indeed, some are there already.

So far the information we have on this agreement is, as I have said, in our view confusing and contradictory. Therefore I should like to ask a few more questions concerning it. For instance, I should like to know how much consideration was given to a plan of this importance? Was it discussed in the cabinet defence committee? How often was it discussed in full cabinet?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Green: Is he asking members of the present government to disclose on how many occasions this question was discussed in cabinet?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That is what he said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No; he did not.

Mr. Green: If so, how does he justify asking a question of that kind in view of the oath he himself took when he became a cabinet minister?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is not a very difficult question to answer. Indeed, when the Prime Minister was talking about our own relationship to this matter, he did not hesitate to put on the record communications about cabinet discussions, as he thought they were, on this subject. They were communications which did not make it clear from whom they were or to whom they were addressed or whether or not they were cabinet documents. I am not asking what was discussed in cabinet concerning this or any other matter. I am a privy councillor. I have taken the privy councillor's oath and I know what it means.

Mr. Green: You had better read it again.

Mr. Pearson: I am trying to find out—if this matter is so important as has been indicated—how much consideration was given to it in cabinet, whether it was discussed interdepartmentally or by the cabinet defence committee before it went to the full cabinet. Surely there is no violation of the privy councillor's oath of secrecy in disclosing that kind of information. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we should not be so greatly interested in this matter now if more information had been given about it when the agreement was first announced to the press at a time when it caused a great deal of attention. I think it was last August when it was announced at a press statement, after which a press conference was held in August by the Minister of National Defence. So far as the press statement is concerned, it merely states that an agreement has been reached presumably between the two governments, to set up a system of integrated operational control of the air defence forces in the continental United States and Canada; that for that purpose an integrated command in the United States under a United States commander was set up with a Canadian deputy, and that plans and procedures would be worked out.

When it was asked in this house: Are these plans for an integrated defence under this organization now effective, the Minister of National Defence on November 5 said "yes, on an interim basis until the formal agreement has been drawn up". But he will agree with me, I know, when I say that when this matter was first made public and when it caused so much interest no mention was made of this two-stage procedure. Therefore what is the nature of this interim agreement between our two countries, on such an important matter, under which this headquarters is now operating? What is the formal agreement contemplated to which reference has already been made? Can everything be done under this interim agreement which is contemplated under the formal agreement?

At the August press conference to which I have referred the minister, dealing with some of these questions, said that the integrated headquarters would develop plans and procedures required for the tremendously rapid decisions which will have to be taken. There is no doubt that in an emergency they will have to be taken rapidly but they will be taken by whom? At a press conference the minister said, and I quote from a record made at that conference:

> I think that the commander (who would be an American) or in his absence the deputy commander will decide on the proper action.

That is a quotation from a record made at the press conference. Then, as he is reported, he went on to say this and I quote again from this record:

> It is a matter of seconds—there is no time for consultation. If war comes they will put their agreed-on plans into effect.

Does that mean, Mr. Speaker, that this can be done and the decisions to which reference has been made therefore taken only "if war comes"?

The minister appeared to answer his own question, and this is where some of our confusion began when, according to this report, he added that the joint operational control will become effective "as soon as a group of planes has been determined to be hostile". That means that that decision might have to be taken—and I certainly agree with this—before war comes. Therefore, in the light of this press conference and in the light of the statement made at that time, surely hon. members opposite should not have been surprised when we had some questions to ask about this matter on the assembly of parliament. What about the answer to those questions in parliament in clearing up some of these ambiguities of the earlier questions and answers? On November 5, in answer to a question—and I may say that I am quoting from page 758 of Hansard—the Minister of National Defence said this:

> —the arrangements for setting up this command—

That is NORAD.

> —followed a similar pattern to those governing our forces serving with the supreme allied command in Europe and the naval forces in the Atlantic under the supreme allied commander, Atlantic . . . and followed closely the procedure which had been set up during the Mackenzie-President Roosevelt conversations before the last war . . . for the mutual defence of this continent.

I contend, Mr. Speaker—and I have already said this—that there really is no basis for that kind of parallel at all between those two situations. The NATO treaty was debated in this house for days and the Ogdensburg agreement was also discussed before the house. Yet on the same day the Minister of National Defence, in answer to another question, seemed to me to contradict his own statement at the press conference of August. As reported at page 758 of Hansard he said this:

> In the event of a national emergency occurring General Partridge,—

That is the United States commander.

> —after consultation with the Canadian and United States governments, would be able to commit either American or Canadian forces in the defence of this country.

Naturally, after his having said that, we asked him how would consultation take place and he replied the next day "by telephone or other means". The Globe and Mail next day characterized that reply as "arrant and dangerous nonsense". The Winnipeg Tribune put it in this way, "Slogan should be shoot now, telephone later".

General Partridge himself had said, however, on September 6, that he did not have to obtain first the permission even of the president of the United States or to wire Washington in an emergency. The secretary of state, Mr. Dulles, on November 20—and this is more recent evidence—said this, according to the press report of his statement:

> If an attack were made on NATO forces the decision to shoot would be made by the commander on the spot.

If this command is not a NATO one, nevertheless American and Canadian forces presumably defending our own continent are NATO forces.

Then to come back to the minister's reply in the House of Commons on November 7, it seemed to me that he really had watered down this command to a purely planning agency, and emphasized quite rightly that the decision to go to war must always rest with the government. No other interpretation would be tolerable. But that does not, of course, answer the question. What about the decision to put planes into action? Does that await a declaration of war? If not, who makes the necessary decision? Also, if this command is merely a planning group, then why all the fuss about it? Why make so much of it? Why make so much of it and why make this announcement about it in July and August under an interim arrangement? Why not wait until parliament met in October when we could have learned all about it?

It seems to me that the crux of the correct Canadian position could be put into a single sentence: If General Partridge and the air defence command of the United States have any authority over Canadian forces they should have it as officers responsible not only to the United States but also to Canada. That is the situation in Paris at the present time and it has worked very well there in the NATO command. If, as may be assumed, General Partridge has to secure the authority of the president before he launches into the air the forces under his command—unless an attack has already begun—and those forces include Canadian forces, then surely he must also have authority from the government of Canada.

If this is to be included in any intergovernmental agreement we would like to know about it. If authorization is to be given in advance to act under certain conditions, which may well be necessary in the circumstances under which we live today, then those conditions must be clearly defined and agreed to by Canada as well as the United States, through its constitutional authorities acting in accordance with constitutional practice. Yet, from the answers we have received, it is very difficult indeed to find out just what is the situation.

Now it is not a question of approving or disapproving the setting up of a continental command; how can we approve or disapprove of such a thing when we really do not yet know anything about it. It is not a question of giving up or hanging on to sovereignty. We have previously acted in ways which involve the abdication, in the interests of our security, of some of our sovereignty. Perhaps rather than using the word abdication I should say we have made our sovereignty work for our security and that is the only way a country can guarantee its security in these times. We have shown this by our participation in the European forces of NATO and I am sure we would be glad to do the same thing in respect of our participation in continental defence if it is found necessary to work in that way after discussion and approval by this house.

Now that I have mentioned NATO, I would like to say something about this organization which, in my opinion, remains indispensable to our policy of collective security. I was very glad to hear what the hon. minister had to say about the approach of the government and himself to NATO. He indicated, and I certainly agree with him, that it is regrettable that in NATO we seem to act only after we have received some shock from those who, in a sense, were responsible for NATO in the first place.

This has been very dramatically demonstrated in our reaction to the launching by the soviet union of the satellites. That indeed was a surprise and a shock, but perhaps it should not have been so much of a surprise to us. If we had been aware of what was going on in the soviet union, it certainly would not have been. However, the reaction which has taken place as a result of this shock, so far as NATO is concerned, has I think been a healthy one. It has underlined the necessity of a stronger and more unified organization; it has I think also emphasized the necessity of a stronger and more imaginative diplomacy. In that regard perhaps we would do well, without minimizing the importance of the United Nations as a great forum for the discussion and hammering out of international problems on a world basis, to pay greater attention to the resources and effectiveness of well-tried and normal channels of diplomacy, as we face these new problems.

I was reading in the New York Times just the other day a review of an article by a distinguished American and former ambassador, Mr. John C. Wiley. He said, and this is worthy of attention today:

> Today it is of vital importance to edge, if possible, the grave issues of the moment back into normal diplomatic channels . . . Perhaps only a meeting in the valley, a meeting on the working level, could begin to disentangle the tortured skein . . . a meeting under the tyranny neither of clock nor calendar.

If I emphasize, as I believe my hon. friend emphasized, the necessity of pursuing that kind of diplomacy vigorously and effectively in our desire to try to solve, one by one and step by step, the problems which now divide the world, that does not mean that we need to weaken in any way shape or form either our collective defence or our collective action in NATO. So far as closer co-operation and unity in NATO are concerned, I welcome and I am sure all members of the official opposition welcome this meeting to take place at the summit in December and I hope that as a result of that meeting some steps will be taken to bring about the closer unity which we, when we were in government along with our friends in NATO, were not able to make effective.

I know how big the problem is; I know how when there is a shock everybody talks about unity and when we recover from the shock we go back to our old ways of doing things individually. Certainly the problem is not a simple one and to solve it we will have to use NATO more as an agent for consultation and co-operation than we have done in the past.

Mr. Spaak, the very energetic and able secretary general of NATO put it this way, and I cannot think of any better text for the next meeting of the NATO council than this speech which he gave in Bruges during September of last year. Said Mr. Spaak:

> It remains to be seen now whether one can start a discussion amongst the members of the Atlantic community, a real preliminary consultation which is really loyal and really complete, that is to say, before the individual governments have come to final decisions. I must tell you frankly that the success of this stage is essential to the survival of the Atlantic alliance and I do think that if we do not succeed in achieving that, and if in its day to day political life the large countries of the alliance did not, with their lesser allies, succeed in finding common ground upon which they could take up unchallenged positions and defend them together, but if on the contrary they continue to make difficulties for one another, I am quite certain that the alliance would crumble, with the consequences that I have indicated.

Now that was the secretary general of NATO speaking, a man who is not given to pessimism. It was only a year ago that a report dealing with this very subject, the strengthening of consultation and co-operation within NATO in the non-military field, was made to the NATO council by a committee of three. In making that report we were not working under the influence of a shock such as we are doing today. A year ago, when that report was discussed, everybody agreed with it and, so far as I know —and I admit perhaps I do not know all about it—the report was then pigeonholed and little or nothing has been done to implement the recommendations.

That report, for instance, recommended among other things an exchange of information on scientific and technical matters. Indeed, it recommended the calling together of a scientific and technical NATO conference. That proposal, when it was made, did not attract very much attention but I am glad to note it is being taken up now by those who are in a position to put it into effect. And when we discussed this question of consultation about a year ago, everybody was in favour of it in principle, but at the same time the more powerful members of NATO soon let it be known, as indeed they are beginning to let it be known now as the day for this summit meeting comes closer, that consultation is a wonderful thing in NATO but that it must not be carried out in such a way as to interfere inappropriately with the prior requirement of consultation within a government, and that it must not be allowed to interfere with the requirement for quick national action. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is far less danger of that happening than there is that these reasons will be used to prevent consultation being carried out in NATO beforehand, not after events had taken place.

We have had a very good example how not to proceed in this regard in the recent case of arms shipments to Tunisia. I know how difficult and complicated this problem can be and I know it impinges on a great many areas of policy, but surely it could have been discussed confidentially beforehand. The NATO council might have had a part to play before the disagreement between the three powers concerned became public. Perhaps if the question had been discussed inside the council this type of public disagreement which has come, to say the least at a very unfortunate time, might have been avoided.

NATO, then, remains the foundation of our policy for collective security. But behind NATO and more important even than NATO is the necessity for the negotiation of problems which divide the two worlds, as and when opportunity affords or may be created for that purpose. Therefore I should like to end on this note: while we must, as the minister said, remain strong in our defence, we must also remain strong and imaginative in our diplomacy, and we must work together, in NATO and elsewhere, not only to be strong but so that we can solve the problems which lie behind the division of the world, whose solution, if one can be found, would perhaps make it unnecessary for us to be so strong in a military sense that we in this country today have to divert about 40 per cent of our revenue to defence.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with other hon. members who have spoken in expressing the concern we all feel about the condition of the President of the United States. We know this creates a great problem for the American people because, unlike our own constitution, there is no settled way of dealing with business when the president is incapacitated.

Should a president die, there is, of course, a vice-president to act in his place, but I understand that incapacity is not provided for, and therefore I wish to join with others in expressing our sincere concern about the position of the United States.

I should like also to congratulate the minister on the assumption of his new duties in the government of Canada and in the House of Commons. I was hoping this afternoon that as a new minister in a new government he might have laid before the house a comprehensive statement of the policies of the government with regard to international affairs along more general lines than he did, but we will look forward to his doing this on a future occasion.

I must tell the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) that I did sympathize with him when he was "needling" the government a bit about its attitude a year ago at the time of the Suez crisis, and citing the minister for external affairs in support of the position taken by many of us in this house at that time. I do not think any of us were asleep when we read about the introduction of the minister when he arrived at Ottawa by air and was asked a question about Suez, to which he was proceeding to reply when the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) intervened rather hurriedly to say that of course the minister's policy is consonant with that of the government of the day. Hon. members who had taken a different view from those who are now members of the government with regard to the Suez crisis were not slow to notice this incident.

I was glad to hear the minister say that Canada would continue to press for measures of disarmament and methods of reaching agreement in that field. The minister said that he and his colleagues would continue to press for disarmament, and I think it is right Canada should do so because it is obvious that the time has come when national armaments can no longer guarantee the safety and security of any country.

At this time we are witnessing a desperate and dangerous arms race between two of the great powers. I say only two great powers because there are only two great powers, Russia and the United States. They alone remain great in terms of power. These two nations, and the other nations which by domination or alliance are associated with them, have failed to reach any agreement on how we might eliminate the threat of war. All nations engaged in this arms race must eventually face drastic reductions in their standard of living and social services. The President of the United States has warned his people to this effect while demanding still greater appropriations for scientific development of new and terrible weapons of war.

Canadians who were hopeful of reductions in defence expenditures are being warned that instead of money being diverted from defence we may find we may have to expend more in producing scientific instruments of war. That, of course, would prevent the diversion we should like to see, namely aid to underprivileged nations which I think is essential for the welfare and peace of the world.

I said that discussions among the great powers had failed to reach agreements. Their discussions have filled mankind with anxiety because since the war their diplomacy has degenerated into insults and threats. As the days pass their insults become more direct and their threats more violent. As their weapons become more terrible, mutual fear of ultimate destruction overshadows ordinary people everywhere.

The time has come when this parliament of Canada should take a new look at both our foreign policy and our defence commitments. Recent developments in international affairs have filled thoughtful Canadians not only with anxiety but with understandable apprehension; apprehension not so much of threats of war from any potential enemy, but indeed fear that the policies we, with others, have followed in recent years are fraught with danger to our own country and to the peace of the world.

The nations assembled at the San Francisco conference in 1945 and the delegates who comprised the delegations there together with the populations behind them believed that the charter of the United Nations provided an effective means of preventing another world war. Of course, it should be said that in spite of recurrent threats of war the United Nations has provided a forum where disputes could be aired and where means could be taken to stop minor acts of aggression which might lead to the outbreak of war among the great powers. May I say immediately that this justifies our support of the United Nations and indeed makes it essential that the United Nations shall be the cornerstone of our external policy.

The instrument for the prevention of aggression approved in the charter was never brought into being. The military staffs of the five principal powers have never established the international security or police force that was to function under the direction of the security council of the United Nations. Because of this, last year largely because of the proposals made by Canada, the United Nations assembly created an emergency force to prevent the continuance of war in the Middle East and ordered the withdrawal of British, French and Israeli troops from Egypt. I want to say immediately that to their credit the order was obeyed promptly. While no similar action with regard to a force was taken to ensure the ending of the Russian aggression and the withdrawal of soviet troops from Hungary a similar order was ignored by the soviets. The action taken in the Middle East however showed that some advance had been made in the prevention of war by United Nations action.

We believe that Canada should give leadership in the cause of world peace and security by urging the United Nations assembly not only to maintain this security force but to urge the establishment of an expanded international police force designed to maintain international law and order. The great powers having failed to fulfil their function the assembly must assume the responsibility of maintaining law and order among the nations and if this requires amendment to the charter of the United Nations we should press for that amendment. Canada is not one of the so-called great powers but from time to time nations with populations many times our own have looked to us as a nation with no ulterior aim, without colonial ambitions and with no desire to dominate anyone else for the leadership which I think at times we have failed to give.

The common people of all nations without exception cry aloud for deliverance from ever pressing fears and for peace in our time and in the years beyond our time. The C.C.F. believes that this parliament at this time should seek a new approach in external affairs to match today's scientific developments to cope with the social and economic problems that confront the world. That is what I meant when I said at the outset that I had hoped with a new government and a new minister we might have had something more specific regarding our international policy than we received this afternoon.

The great powers having failed to find such an approach we believe that the lesser powers, if I may term them as such—the smaller and middle nations—should assume the responsibility of demanding the elimination of the dreadful threat of nuclear war and that we should associate ourselves with and give leadership to the smaller and middle nations in pressing this point home. We believe further that because of the confidence that has been shown in Canada from time to time by many nations this government should take immediate steps to accept leadership and to play a more significant role in mankind's efforts to establish peace on a firm and lasting foundation.

Now, you ask how this can be done. In the first place—and here I agree with the former minister of external affairs—whenever a proposal is made by one or other of the great powers which seems even remotely to offer an opportunity for negotiation Canada should be ready to advise and to press for acceptance, should be prepared to assist in arrangements and, when possible and proper, should be prepared to join with other nations in such negotiations.

Very recently the Russian leader Khrushchev made a public pledge never to start a war. At the same time he proposed a new high level conference with representatives of capitalist states to ban war, to end the armament race, to achieve co-existence and the settlement of ideological differences through peaceful competition for the development of economics, culture and the better satisfaction of man's needs. Now, what was the immediate reaction? The immediate reaction from Washington was that this was another propaganda move and should be ignored. Canada accepted that opinion as did other nations which followed the United States lead. Yet, Mr. Speaker, was it not possible that the Soviet union, having recently demonstrated her strength through remarkable scientific advances, was making a new and this time perhaps a genuine attempt to bring about some easement in the cold war?

We know they have achieved leadership in the production of guided missiles and altogether likely in thermonuclear weapons. They are well aware that their country is surrounded by air bases manned so the newspapers tell us—not only the newspapers but the officials of the United States—with many hundreds of jet bombers equipped and ready with unbelievably destructive warheads. They know that an attack on North America, an attack on any part of Europe or elsewhere would be met by equally devastating attacks immediately on Russian industrial centres and populations.

I ask you if it is not remotely possible, therefore, that a new approach to peaceful negotiations might offer some success? Can we go along with the President of the United States who, in the first series of broadcasts discussing the earth satellite described the Soviet union—I listened to him carefully—not as a rival in the scientific process but rather as "the enemy", as though his nation were at war. It is true that frightening statements have been made from time to time by soviet leaders but certainly frightening statements have also been made by Mr. John Foster Dulles of the United States as well as by many other leaders in that country.

Where will all this lead us but eventually to war, a war in which there would be no victors, only victims; a war of mutual suicide? We do not believe that Canada should sit idly by and tolerate this drift toward disaster. This parliament and this government should demand that a new look be taken not only at our external policies but those of our Department of National Defence for defence and foreign policy are inextricably mixed up together.

We of the C.C.F. have supported measures that were in the previous stage of international affairs, we believe, designed to protect our people and indeed our friends from unprovoked attack. That seemed reasonable and proper but we know now that neither we in North America nor the people of Russia can find security in early warning radar lines, jet fighters or nuclear warheads on our guns. The only road to peace and security, it appears to us, surely now lies in promoting understanding and by negotiation arriving at mutual agreements to live and let live.

Our government should make it abundantly clear that we will support no policy or diplomacy of threats of studied insults, of abusive language in international affairs which may end in war. This we should make known both to the Soviet union and to the United States. Over the years I have been at the United Nations, I have heard the Soviet leaders indulge in insulting and abusive language. And, if I may mention him again, I think it should be made known particularly to Mr. John Foster Dulles whose meanderings around the world making provocative speeches everywhere fill intelligent people with alarm.

It is time then that Canada followed an external policy consonant with our international interests and our international reputation. We have not always done that, as witness our policy regarding China. Throughout history and indeed under international precedent nations recognize revolutionary governments when they obviously control a nation. Our own history is replete with examples. Nations had to recognize the British revolution of 1689, still celebrated in many parts of Canada on July 12 and the American revolution of 1776 when the forbears of many Canadians suffered grievously because they resisted it.

We remember the terror of the French revolution of 1789 and the bolshevik revolution of 1917; but the world finally recognized the facts of the new revolutionary governments, that they ruled the nations involved. Why then should recognition be withheld from 600 million people in China proper when such a policy has driven them closer to the Soviet union, a nation which the President of the United States characterized earlier this month as the enemy? I believe it is because Washington would frown upon our doing so.

The Chinese, like the Russians, are on the march. Soon we may discover that the stories we have heard of their backwardness, their illiteracy, their ignorance, will be in the same category as stories told until very recently about the Russians. Perhaps, too, many of us were brought up in childhood, as I was brought up, to believe that the Chinese were heathen Chinese, people who were on a lower level than ourselves. We know that that is not true and never has been true.

So long were our people fed propaganda about Russia, to which I have alluded, that when journalists like I. Norman Smith, bankers like James Muir, businessmen like James Duncan, told us of the educational, industrial and scientific progress of Russia, what was said of them? They were characterized as dupes of communist propaganda.

Now, many of us, of course, knew that while there was widespread illiteracy, poverty and disease in China, there were also many thousands of highly cultured Chinese who were heirs of an ancient and historically peaceful culture which even revolution could not destroy.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): They were not in sympathy with the Chinese government.

Mr. McPhillips: You don't believe in that.

Mr. Coldwell: As a matter of fact, I am stating a historical fact. If the minister understands the history of Asia he will know that the Chinese throughout their history have had leaders who were highly cultured and who were peaceful in their intent.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a point of personal explanation, may I say to the hon. leader of the C.C.F. that I was not questioning the intelligence of a large group of independent people in China but I said they were not in sympathy with the Chinese government.

Mr. Coldwell: How do you know that?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Well, I know.

Mr. Coldwell: As a matter of fact, many of us were not ignorant of the fact that the Chinese revolution against a corrupt regime was led in part at least by scholars in their universities, joined by thousands of university students. In other words, in the leadership, among others, were Chinese intellectuals.

The European situation was commented upon as lately as Sunday by Mr. George F. Kennan, the former United States ambassador to Moscow, who is now lecturing at Oxford University. He was speaking over the British Broadcasting Corporation network. He urged in a radio address from London that the western nations make a re-appraisal of their policies, leading to the possible withdrawal of both eastern and western troops from Germany. I found considerable satisfaction myself in his remarks because, speaking in Montreal on December 14, 1956, I advocated a similar policy and I should like to quote what I had to say on that occasion. I was criticized for it. I said:

> The west should be prepared to make imaginative and far-reaching proposals that will, by diplomatic means, achieve the freedom of the peoples of eastern Europe.

I was talking mainly about the Soviet aggression in Hungary. I said:

> We cannot intervene militarily but we can make a bold attempt by other means to obtain the right of these states to determine their own destiny. Canada should take the lead in urging that the western nations offer to withdraw all foreign troops from Europe in return for the withdrawal of all Russian troops from eastern Europe and for the establishment of a guaranteed neutral zone between the U.S.S.R. and the western European powers. It would be best if the whole operation were conducted and guarantees given under a United Nations auspices. There may very well be some prospects of success in this suggestion if the west has the imagination to make it in a constructive way.

Consequently, I was very interested indeed in reading what the former United States ambassador to Moscow had to say, a man who cannot be charged with friendliness to the communist regime during the time that he occupied that important position in the Soviet union. One appeals to governments to act; but if governments will not act to achieve peace by negotiation and otherwise to remove the threats of war, does any other approach offer any hope for the easing of tensions and the imminent threat of war? I think there are other channels.

The C.C.F. believes at least that there are channels open to us to approach the soviet people. I was happy to view the hockey match last Friday evening between the team from Whitby, representing Canada, and the Russian team. The huge crowd in Maple Leaf Gardens at Toronto were obviously friendly to the visitors. The players showed every sign of good will and sportsmanship in victory and in defeat. Such events here and in Russia can exert an influence for good. I hope there will be more of them. It confirms our opinion that the ordinary people of all countries are just people who want to live in peace with their neighbours.

I think another and much more important channel is the subject of editorial comment in the New York Herald Tribune of November 8, and has been, I may add, the subject of editorial comment in some of our own Canadian papers in more recent days.

The Herald Tribune, republican in sympathy, conservative in outlook, cannot be accused of communistic sympathies. The editors drew attention to a special bulletin sent out by the editor of the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists of the United States, a most important and interesting periodical. Ever since it was first published I have subscribed to it.

This special bulletin contained a communication from 155 leading Soviet scientists, together with a formal resolution by the presidium of the academy of sciences of the U.S.S.R. The communication itself was signed by six of the soviet's outstanding scientists, including the world famous physicist, Peter Kapitsa, a graduate of Cambridge University whose laboratory was moved to Russia and established there with the assistance and cooperation of the English university's most eminent nuclear scientists some 25 years ago. Kapitsa is said to be the scientist responsible for the satellite. The resolution proposed a broad international conference of scientists to discuss the dangers to mankind of a thermonuclear war. I am going to read the letter, It is in these words:

> Let not only atomic scientists of all countries but also representatives of other disciplines, biologists, medical scientists, philosophers of all schools, economists, historians, sociologists, educators, etc., express their weighty opinions in a broad international meeting of the most important representatives of science. In such a tense time, full of danger of a general destructive war, scientists cannot remain aside. Their duty is to add their voice to the requests for the cessation of atomic tests. The danger which hangs over mankind because of the possibility of using atomic energy for war purposes is common to all countries independent of their political and economic systems.
> We the soviet scientists express our full readiness for common effort with scientists of any other country, to discuss any proposals directed towards the prevention of atomic war, the creation of secure peace, and tranquility for all mankind.

The editor of the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists comments that while the letter repeats some communist propaganda demands, the writers recognize the necessity of avoiding atomic wars rather than merely that of abolishing atomic weapons, a very significant difference in approach. The editor urged scientists of the west to take up this offer.

The Herald Tribune then pointed out that this soviet offer grew from a conference on a smaller scale held in Canada last summer at the summer home of Mr. Cyrus Eaton at Pugwash, Nova Scotia. On the same page of the newspaper Mr. Cyrus Eaton had an article warmly approving of the suggestion and naming Canada as one suitable location for the conference.

Of course I realize that this appeal, as the Prime Minister said when I drew it to his attention, was not on a governmental level, but I see no reason why our government should not encourage our scientists to invite such a conference to Canada and assist them in every way to make it a success. On the contrary, I see every reason why our government should do so.

Here surely is a new channel of approach by men and women whose activities are based on scientific knowledge which is international. A few years ago some people were prone to refer to scientists and philosophers as "egg-heads". Today who will deny that the future of the world rests with such people rather than some irresponsible politicians—

An hon. Member: You are one of them.

Mr. Coldwell: —some rather open-mouthed generals and admirals and some back-benchers who have made and are making a sorry mess of their opportunities and their responsibilities.

In 1945 some politicians in the United States made the mistake of believing that the mathematics at the root of scientific advances could be the secret of their country. Future historians may regard this erroneous opinion as one of the important roots of the distrust and misunderstandings that have plagued the world in the past decade. They refused to allow their knowledge to be shared with their allies, even some who had provided them with the very basis of the atomic discovery they determined to keep to themselves, and principally among these, of course, were their British and Canadian allies.

I might add that Mr. Eaton pointed out in the article to which I have referred that the men who produced the first atomic bomb were not all Americans. They were Italians, Danes, Poles and Germans as well, I may add, as British, French, Canadians and others. Of the proposed scientific conference suggested in the Herald Tribune Mr. Eaton had this to say:

> It is certainly something that colleges and universities can back. Certainly anyone who is a capitalist ought to go for it because in a war all the material accumulations of the past would go. One hydrogen bomb would lay this great city (New York) in rubble.

Surely capitalists, socialists and, yes, communists, share this common dread and should seek a common way out of the danger that overhangs the world.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect of this problem which deserves more consideration by this house than it has received in the past. In the end, war or no war, annihilation or not for many millions, the most potent urge among mankind will remain "hunger" and hunger today is widespread across the world.

As a vital part of our external policy, the government should be supporting more completely and more generously every intelligent proposal for economic and technical aid. We should not gear our support to that of any nation, as we have been doing. Canada has said that because certain nations pay certain fractions of funds for technical aid, we are prepared to contribute only what we consider to be the proportionate fraction too. The United Nations assembly is again debating the special United Nations fund for economic development which has been before the assembly for several years and which is designed to provide capital grants and loans to the underdeveloped countries of Asia and Africa, under the auspices of the United Nations. Canada has joined the United States and the United Kingdom in opposing this project both before the economic and social council and the appropriate committee of the United Nations. This fund is designed to plan capital assistance with political and profit considerations giving way to human need.

May I say that this afternoon I was disappointed that the minister did not accept the suggestion made by my friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Macdonald) and give a more hopeful answer to his question.

In the vote about to be taken at the assembly Canada should assert its moral leadership among the nations that want to support this fund in spite of the opposition of the United States delegation. Apart from this, we should be prepared to make further and large appropriations for the Colombo plan. The increase in the Colombo plan proposed by the government at this session is paltry in comparison with the needs of southeast Asia, in particular India, and our own gross national production, as are the other contributions mentioned this afternoon by the minister in his address to the house. We should divert at least one-quarter of the amount this parliament is providing in our defence appropriations to SUNFED, technical aid, the Colombo plan and other international humanitarian efforts. Other nations should do the same so that disease and hunger could be banished from the world in a relatively short time. That would do more to remove the threats of world-wide dictatorships of the communist or fascist varieties than all the stockpiles of atomic warheads and guided missiles the western nations could conceivably acquire.

When we come to a discussion of the government's defence proposals we shall have more to say about this aspect of our defence expenditures. Suffice it now to say that we look forward to and must work for the day when Canada can abandon armaments entirely for offence as well as defence all across the world.

To sum up, then, we state categorically that we are not satisfied with our external affairs policies. They do not meet the needs of the country in this period of danger from new and terrible weapons that modern war would loose upon mankind. We therefore take this opportunity of urging this house and this government to adopt a new approach to the problem that besets us. There must be an end to a diplomacy based on threats and insults. Canada, which has been comparatively free from this type of diplomacy, should denounce it whenever it is indulged in and whoever indulges in it.

Our approach to international problems must be devised to meet today's scientific developments and to cope with the social and economic problems of the nations and the peoples of the world, regardless of race, creed, colour or ideology. We should thus give every encouragement and support to plans and financial contributions for the relief of hunger and disease among the less privileged peoples of the world as well as, indeed, within our own borders. Hence, because the United Nations does offer and afford opportunities to exercise such leadership, we must continue to support and to enhance the prestige of the United Nations.

We believe that Russia and the United States both must know that either they will meet to achieve a settlement of political differences between them or, sooner or later, mutual suicide will result. Canada's role now should be to give a definite and imaginative lead, to the middle and smaller nations at least, to demand that negotiations between the two great powers and their allies should be undertaken on every possible occasion. Today, because of the anxieties we all feel, there is at least a possibility that such leadership offered by Canada might meet with a large measure of success since the peoples of all nations share our fear that a continuance of the present nuclear arms race can have no other end than universal destruction for us all. We want the world to heed the message which in less than a month will ring out once more across the world as it has for centuries in the past among the Christian nations of the world: "Peace on earth, good will to men".

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I should first of all like to associate the members of this group with the expressions of regret and sympathy we all felt when we heard that the President of the United States had been stricken. It is our sincere hope and prayer that he may speedily be restored to his usual health.

I should also like to extend congratulations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) as he takes over the portfolio of this extremely important department. We welcome the opportunity that is presented at this time to discuss the world picture in general and Canada's position within that picture in particular. I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that the time for this debate is so limited. I should like to remind the house that more time was spent yesterday in debating the advisability of setting up a committee to consider the installation of a translation system than has been allowed today for the debating of our position in international affairs. I am not in any way minimizing the importance of the debate of yesterday. However, in view of the tremendous factors involved in the debate today, I feel that much longer than one day should have been set aside for this important discussion.

I should like to thank the secretary of state for his report this afternoon, for it was a report dealing with the activities of the Canadian delegation at the United Nations and also the contribution Canada is making in respect of a number of other phases of our international policy and program.

I should like also to say that we would have welcomed a direct statement of policy on the part of the minister and the government at this time in order to help us get a grasp and an understanding of the direction in which this government proposes to lead Canada in relation to our external affairs. Of course, I think it has been fairly definitely stated that there would be no fundamental change in policy. We therefore can only assume that the direction that was followed by the previous government will to a large extent be followed by the present government.

Reference was made today to the NATO organization. Right at the outset—and I do not propose to spend very much time tonight on these individual organizations—I should like to say that we are in complete agreement with the objective of the NATO organization. In view of the inability of the United Nations to cope with the problem and in order to place us in a position where we can defend ourselves and maintain our own security, we feel it was necessary to set up a separate organization such as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; and today, as never before, we are impressed with the necessity of maintaining this organization and perhaps strengthening it but certainly in no wise minimizing its importance.

When I state our support of this organization I should like to say as well that we believe that a clear statement should be made, and reiterated time and time again, that NATO is a defensive organization, and a defensive organization only, with no plans for aggression, with no designs upon other nations, and that it is there solely as an instrument to effect and maintain our security.

Reference has been made to the Colombo plan and of course we in this group have always given our wholehearted support to the principle underlying the Colombo plan and the expanding program for technical assistance of the United Nations. We have always felt, as we still feel, that the contributions made by Canada to these organizations are an investment; they are not a handout or just a contribution given to ease our conscience in view of world need, but an investment whereby we contribute to the betterment of the world, enabling the underprivileged to assist themselves, to raise their standards of living and to place themselves on a much higher plane than that on which they are existing at the present time from economic and social points of view.

Now since we last discussed foreign affairs events have moved with incredible speed and we now find ourselves being directed away from our role as earthbound peoples into the realm of space and inter-planetary travel, with all the exhilarating or catastrophic possibilities which these ventures may produce. At least to the ordinary citizen of Canada, the achievement of soviet scientific knowledge and skill has caused an impact that will not soon be forgotten. We had imagined that the United States and Britain were so far advanced in these scientific and engineering fields that no other nation could possibly eclipse them, but what we have heard and read during these past few weeks has disillusioned us and we are asking "Now what?"

I am sure we all remember the forebodings and the fears consequent upon the dropping of the A-bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. We were on that occasion ushered very unceremoniously into a new age but it was an age of fear besides being an age of wonder. Following that circumstance we heard the dire predictions that the end of the world was really in view and may I remind hon. members that these predictions were not made by some so-called wild-eyed preachers of doom but by scientists, legislators and statesmen the free world over. Perhaps it could be that we were at that time arriving at the point referred to in the scriptures when men's hearts were failing for fear of those things which were coming to pass upon the earth. Now, upon the minds of men, already taut with the remembrance of those things to which I have referred, there comes the terrific impact and realization of new and even greater inventions, the fearsome or the beneficial results of which are still clouded in the mists of uncertainty.

Now what is the significance of this great new advance in modern science? What does it mean to us that this invention is first of all in the hands of a power constituting possibly the greatest and only threat to our free way of life? These are important questions. However, we find that fear in many instances in the past has provided an incentive for action in other fields of endeavour and so the fear of this new advance in science by the soviet union has had the effect of shaking those in the western world out of their complacency.

I ask this question: Why did this thing come as such a surprise to us? How was it possible that these achievements could be reached without any intimation being gained or received by the western world that such things were in the offing? Was it because we had been lulled into a false sense of security; was it because we had somehow settled back and under perhaps the relaxation of certain tensions had forgotten the tremendous possibilities that existed in other parts of the world? Why was it that this thing had to come with such an element of surprise?

Perhaps the former government could give some answer to that question, but granted that this thing which has been invented could be of inestimable value from a purely scientific point of view—and we are reminded that the soviet union has promised to share the data and information obtained with the rest of the world—I do not think we can get away from the conviction that its value from the military standpoint is far beyond the present conception of most individuals and, in the hands of a great and unfriendly power, could have disastrous consequences for the free world.

Without question it was the realization of this fact that threw American military and scientific brains into an all-out effort, not only to close the gap, but to again take the lead in this all-important field. President Eisenhower ordered full speed ahead, and then, in consultation with the leaders of our other friendly powers has urged the consolidation of the free nations of the world into a unified force to defeat the worldwide designs of the communist leaders.

Now it is against this backdrop that we pause to take our bearings today and to discover, if we can, just where we as a nation fit into the international picture; to try and discover, if we can, whether or not our foreign policy is designed to accomplish the greatest good for ourselves and for other parts of the world. That is why we would have welcomed today a more direct statement of policy on the part of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We ask the question: What is involved in the marshalling of the united forces of the free world into a unit or instrument capable of defeating the aggressive designs of the soviet? First of all I suppose it comes to our minds that this involves the pooling of our military power and potential.

For some years now we have been engaged in a feverish race for military superiority. Canada's contribution to this end has cost us in the neighbourhood of $2 billion per year and although I am sure Canadians right across the country are prepared to make every sacrifice necessary to preserve our way of life and freedom, yet the question is becoming increasingly persistent: Just where are we going? What is to be the final outcome of all our feverish activities? I do not have to take the time tonight to refer to the tremendous military build-up of the past few years the arms race where each nation was trying to outdo the other, not only in manpower but in fighting power in armaments of all descriptions. Think of the cost to the nations. We see that with all our expenditure and with all our efforts and all the application of our skills and powers, when we reach a certain plateau we still have further expenditures before us and greater sacrifices than ever before. So the question is: where does it end?

They tell us that before one aircraft is in production it is obsolescent and they are already working on something new. There was a tremendous expenditure for something, but we did not know whether or not it was going to be brought into use. And yet because we could not wait for the ultimate in weapons I suppose we had to fill in the gap with these other things. The struggle, it seems to me, still goes on.

I remember well back in 1954 when it was my privilege to attend the United Nations session as an observer, debates were then going on relative to disarmament, and it seems to me I spent most of my time sitting in that committee listening to speech after speech, debate after debate, trying to find some common ground, some common meeting place of opinion. But it seemed to end in frustration. And so, year after year, it goes on, and it does not seem that we are getting any closer to the answer to the problem; it does not seem as if we are reaching a solution.

And now, as outlined today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, we find that seemingly the matter has reached a stalemate, that the Soviet union refuses to participate any further in the deliberations on disarmament. However, we must continue to press on; we must continue to seek a solution; we must endeavour to find an answer to the riddle which has proved so perplexing down through the years.

But, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the futility of armaments as an effective system for the building of the kind of world we envisage for ourselves and for succeeding generations. What kind of world do we want? If we want a world where men can live without fear, if we want a world free from want, if we want a world where an opportunity is given for the full development of human prosperity, then all our military endeavours, necessary though they may be now, will not, I suggest, hasten the coming of the kind of world that we envisaged. There must, surely, be a stopping place somewhere in the arms race and military build up, a point where the futility of this mad struggle will dawn upon us and when, like the prodigal son, we will return to sanity.

Adequate defence is wise, but a constant struggle for greater and more potent weapons of destruction is nothing short of imbecility. I think the suggestion of pooling our resources would involve the pooling of our scientific knowledge and skills. I think significant progress has been made in those things which contribute to human happiness, but it is a sad commentary on human intelligence that the greatest progress which has been made has been in the field of destructive capabilities. Who can estimate the sum total of good which could accrue to the human race were all the skills and knowledge of men brought to bear upon constructive living, and if the results of scientific progress were made available to all people? Today, however, it appears that the great goal is to eclipse others in the technical field so that through these means our military capability will be increased. We now have the power to blast the nations into oblivion. I ask the question: what more are we striving for? What is the object of scientific research and technological development? Is it to open the way for mankind into a fuller and more creatively worth-while life? If so, that is well and good. Is it to develop our capacity to destroy civilization with one bomb instead of two? If that is the case, it is devilish.

No doubt, this suggestion involves, also, to a certain degree at least, the pooling of economic resources. We have already referred to the Colombo plan and to the United Nations program for technical assistance, and I believe that it is the purpose of the nations which are gathered together in peaceful alliances not only to maintain themselves but to extend a helping hand to those who are in a less fortunate position than themselves. As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, we in this group have given full support to these programs and have urged that our contributions in this field should be extended. We still say that.

But let us ask a question here, as well. What is the motive behind the contributions which are being made to the under-developed countries? Is it to try and place them in a position of indebtedness to us, so that we, in turn, may expect their support in further programs that we may have? If our motives are unworthy they will soon become very obvious, and instead of buying support and buying friendliness they will bring instead antagonism and bitterness. If it is to feed the hungry, if it is to discharge our responsibility to those who are less fortunate than ourselves, and if we give gladly and willingly, without any hope or expectation—

An hon. Member: How much did you give?

Mr. Patterson: What was that asinine remark down there? Now, that is something. That is really something profound. We are dealing here with one of the greatest programs that we have for the betterment of mankind and then someone down in that end of the house raises that foolish question. Perhaps I should ask him what he gave.

Mr. Speaker, if it is to assist those who are in need, then I say: let us do our utmost, increase our contributions and do everything we can to discharge our responsibility in this particular field.

I believe also that this co-operation and this pooling of our resources must include the pooling of our moral and spiritual resources also. There are certain features in soviet policy which we deeply deplore and one of them is the disparity between their preaching and their practice. But let us not imagine that they alone are guilty of this.

Down through the past we have been subjected to a tremendous peace offensive. In the past, as I have stated, we have been engaging in disarmament conferences and discussions. There has been the proclamation of the great principle of freedom for all men and the right of self-determination and sovereignty for all nations. Let us just think of this for a moment. I say we have been subjected to a great peace barrage and I suppose our views differ as to the sincerity of that peace offensive and what the purpose behind it all was. I believe it goes without saying that we are all in favour of peace but the only trouble is to find some way of making that dream a reality. That is the difficulty.

Much has been said and written about the self-determination of peoples and may I say that some of those who have been the loudest in proclaiming this doctrine have been the leaders of the Soviet union. However, while the so-called colonial powers of the west have been leading colonial peoples on toward the goal of nationhood and then standing by with moral and other support as those nations gained strength and confidence, the Soviet union stands out not only as the greatest colonial power but as the most ruthless of any who have ever held control over the minds and bodies of men, those peoples whom they profess to protect. As a matter of fact, some of the nations granted sovereignty by so-called western colonial powers are now struggling for their very existence against attempted communist domination.

Communism promises an era of peace and progress based upon the right of self-determination and mutual respect but institutes rather an iron rule that, while proclaiming the gospel of sovereignty and self-determination, proceeds to stifle the deepest aspirations of peoples and nations to live in freedom and dignity. Communism promises freedom from exploitation and a guarantee of civil rights but imposes a system which denies man the very freedoms which it professes to guarantee. We have many illustrations of this: the Ukraine, the Baltic states and the other satellite countries.

When men and nations reached the point of desperation and rose up ready and willing to sacrifice life and everything to try and regain their freedoms we had the illustration of the brutal suppression of the Hungarian people in their struggle for freedom and liberty.

Following the great conference of the communist nations we had the issue of this broad declaration: We are extending our hands to all people of good will. Jointly we will throw off the burden of armament which suppresses the people. We will free the world from the danger of war, death and destruction. Before us is a bright and happy future for mankind which is advancing toward progress. Hon. members will perhaps recognize these as the words of Mr. Khrushchev.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in order to demonstrate their sincerity there are two things which the Soviet union should do. The first is to settle down to a determined effort within the framework of the disarmament commission to work out a plan and program that would accomplish the very things they have been speaking about. I would also say that in order to prove their sincerity they should grant an opportunity to the nations under their control for a full and free expression of their wishes and desires relative to the system of government under which they choose to live. However, the leaders of the Soviet union are not the only ones who are guilty of hypocrisy for I believe that in assessing the world situation and striving for a solution we have to a large degree forgotten the application of the moral concept to our own activities.

There are two opposing forces in the world. On one hand we have a system of tyranny and oppression diametrically opposed to the way of life to which we pay lip service but unfortunately so often fail to practise, a totalitarian system in which the state is god and individuals are but pawns, a system characterized by suppression, fear and liquidation. On the other hand we have a system which extolls the glories of private enterprise and which recognizes the dignity of man and the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

In the past our whole attention has been devoted to an attempt to counter some move already made by communism in its bid for power and expansion, and in practically every case we have failed. What has happened is that in our hatred of communism we have begun to hate the communists. In our endeavour to contain communism we have become tragically negative in our approach to world problems. In our defence of the free way of life we have been almost ready to sacrifice our freedoms. If we in our defence of freedom yield to a dictatorial regime nationally or internationally we shall become the victims of the very processes that we despise. We must not only require others to recognize and live according to the high principles of justice, honesty and humanity but we must scrupulously observe them ourselves, being sincere, fair and aboveboard in all our dealings with other nations. We must, I suggest, cleanse ourselves from uncharitable attitudes and ulterior motives and dedicate ourselves to the pursuit of those high principles in international affairs with courage, faith and determination. We must revitalize our democracy so that by a positive demonstration of the virtues of our system we will confound those who predict the deterioration and eventual collapse of the private enterprise economy. This will do much to strengthen the morale of our people and convince others how worth while is the democratic way of life.

I would now like to refer to what I understand has been the policy for many years in this house. Based on the idea that even though the full and free expression of party views could contribute greatly to the efficiency of internal parliamentary democracy, it was considered most desirable in so far as it was possible that our foreign policy should represent the united thought and attitude of parliament as a whole. Therefore, as nearly as possible, Canada followed a non-partisan policy in the field of foreign affairs.

I believe this desirable end may be secured or effected in different ways. Government could abdicate its responsibility and leave the formulation of policy to the non-partisan civil servants and career diplomats and both government and opposition view this as a good way out. That, of course, would be unthinkable. On the other hand, the opposition could abdicate its responsibility and for the sake of unanimity become "yes" men to government-sponsored policy. In closing my remarks I would like to propose another approach to this important question, namely the setting up of an all-party consultative committee with which the Secretary of State for External Affairs could confer with a view to acquainting himself with the views and proposals of the people's representatives.

In this way the elected representatives of the people could be kept informed of conditions and could have a part in recommending policy. We recognize, of course, that the minister and the government would of necessity have the final responsibility but, on the other hand, the opposition would retain their right of criticism. Parliament also would exercise final control and the supremacy of parliament would be maintained in foreign affairs.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that such a committee should be composed of the leaders of the respective parties, with possibly the addition of one or more members from each of the groups. In this way I believe it would be possible for the setting forth of a truly Canadian policy with respect to foreign affairs.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Parliamentary Assistant to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to extend to you my most sincere congratulations on your election to your very high office. It may come a little late but I have not had the opportunity of doing so before during this session.

It may appear, Mr. Speaker, from the latest dispatches, that the condition of President Eisenhower is perhaps not as grave as the information we received this afternoon led us to believe, and I would like to say on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) and not only members on this side of the house but I am sure all members that we pray this is the case, that his condition is not so grave, and that this great leader of the free world will be restored to his accustomed vigour.

This evening, Mr. Speaker, in entering this debate on the subject of external affairs I propose to deal exclusively with the subject of disarmament which is a matter of the greatest interest and importance not only to the people of Canada but to people all over the world. I would like to take this opportunity of dealing with this subject because I have, in the last eight weeks, had the honour and the opportunity of serving as vice-chairman of our delegation to the United Nations and of following the whole subject at first hand.

The disarmament negotiations of the subcommittee, which was held last summer in London, came to an abrupt end at the beginning of September after the soviet representative, Mr. Zorin, had rejected the proposals for partial measures of disarmament submitted by the four western powers in a working paper on August 29. This abrupt termination of the subcommittee's work was clearly a matter of great concern to many countries when the general assembly of the United Nations opened last September 17. The opening statements of all the great powers in the assembly reflected this concern. Speaking for Canada on September 23, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) expressed the hope that the current session of the United Nations assembly might be known in future years as a disarmament assembly.

[Mr. Patterson.]

These words were quoted with warmth by a number of successive speakers and I think the general tenor of the debate opened with fairly high hopes.

In general the debate concentrated upon the resolution of October 11, introduced by 24 of the major powers. Much of this resolution was based on the western proposals in the subcommittee on August 29. The subcommittee, of course, was held in London.

This afternoon the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) made a request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs asking that he deal with those proposals in detail and this evening I think I might outline the proposals of the 24-power resolution. They are condensed, of course, Mr. Speaker, but I think they reach the heart of the matter. This resolution was based upon six points which are as follows:

One. The immediate suspension of nuclear testing in conjunction with an adequate control system to ensure that this was carried out.

Two. The so-called "cut-off" or the cessation of the production of fissionable materials for weapons purposes.

Three. The reduction of stocks of nuclear weapons.

Four. The controlled and graduated reduction of armed forces and armaments; that is, conventional armaments, a field in which agreement had almost been reached.

Five. The progressive establishment of a ground and aerial system to guard against surprise attack.

Six. The study of an inspection system to ensure that objects would be sent into outer space only for peaceful and scientific purposes.

These six points presented a more complex resolution than any of those put forward by the U.S.S.R.; for they represented a series of concrete proposals on which the western powers and their allies in NATO had negotiated for months to ensure agreement. As a member of the subcommittee, Canada participated in the drafting of this resolution and co-sponsored it.

In contrast, the soviet resolutions were simple, propagandistic in their appeal and in their essence completely uncontrollable. Briefly, the Soviet union presented two proposals. The first was for a five-year ban on the use of nuclear weapons. This clearly meant nothing more than an uncontrollable promise which would be valid until the day it was broken. This resolution, I might say, received only 11 votes in favour.

The second soviet proposal called for the immediate cessation of testing, without regard to any other measures on disarmament. It became quite evident that many nations were attracted by a proposal of this kind. India had submitted a very similar resolution and Japan presented a compromise resolution which linked the objective of a temporary suspension of nuclear testing to negotiations for an adequate supervision and inspection system to verify this. The Indian proposal received a vote of 22 for, 38 against and 20 abstentions. The Japanese proposal was opposed by the soviet bloc as well as by the west and was defeated by a vote of 18 for, 32 against and 31 abstentions. Canada voted against all these proposals because it felt, as did many other countries, that the question of nuclear test suspension can only be settled as a part of a more comprehensive disarmament agreement which also does something to solve the more fundamental matter of the arms race in nuclear weapons.

Perhaps because of the reservations which many countries had on matters such as nuclear test suspension, the disarmament debate showed little enthusiasm at the beginning. For some time there was a shortage of countries willing to speak; and while it was apparent that the 24-power resolution would receive an adequate majority many of the uncommitted nations questioned the value of requesting support by the assembly for what was essentially the position of one side to the cold war alone.

Many of our allies were slow to make public their support, as if they were waiting for some further clarification of the western position. For these reasons the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when he delivered the Canadian statement in the committee on October 23 last, emphasized repeatedly that Canada, while it had sponsored the 24-power draft resolution and urged its adoption, remained open-minded. I should like to make a brief quotation from the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the political committee of the United Nations which was at that time discussing disarmament:

> Canada is sensitive to every possibility of improving it. Let us not be inflexible in this regard. We of Canada certainly do not say that the particular proposals with which we are now associated are the only means by which at least some progress can be made toward disarmament. Canada has co-sponsored plans for partial disarmament, but I repeat that we do not necessarily regard them as the last word.

Canada's position of flexibility was enthusiastically welcomed by the representatives of many countries, including Norway, Mexico, Pakistan, Israel and Nepal. It was particularly noteworthy that in the closing remarks of the representative of the United States, Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, he said that the United States associated itself at some length with the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Ambassador Lodge added that the United States also desired openmindedness and flexibility and they too were not suggesting that our proposals, the 24-power resolution, were the last word. It is perhaps not too much to say that this position of flexibility contributed to the large vote by which the 24-power resolution was passed. The resolution, incidentally, received 57 votes in favour, 9 votes against, being merely the soviet bloc, and 15 abstentions. This vote was later sustained when the resolution came from the political committee to the general assembly.

It would have been a very satisfactory result for the west and for Canada except for the dramatic soviet announcement just before the vote was taken that they would not return to participate in the work of either the disarmament commission or its subcommittee. Shortly before Russia had introduced a resolution calling for the establishment of a permanent disarmament commission consisting of all 82 members of the United Nations which would discuss disarmament continuously and without any secrecy whatsoever. It is hard to believe that the U.S.S.R. really wants such a commission or that this move was anything but a propaganda move. Only a few days earlier the soviets had argued that it would be wrong for the committee to vote for a disarmament agreement which should properly be the result of unanimous agreement among merely the great powers. Now the soviets appeared to be calling for a commission where just such votes would be taken all the time. One can only conclude that the soviets were resorting to their normal tactics of bargaining at an oriental bazaar; by demanding the impossible they were hoping to obtain a little more than they otherwise would.

The first reaction of Canada's allies was to discount the soviet intention to boycott the commission as an idle threat of no importance. This was not the Canadian reaction for we had always considered the composition of the disarmament commission and its subcommittee to be in question. One month earlier our Prime Minister, speaking of the disarmament subcommittee, had said in the assembly:

> We consider that a salutary effect might be achieved by securing the participation of other powers; they may be capable of rendering assistance in the processes of seeking an agreement that we have not been able to achieve. But let me say this: Geography alone should not be the basis for choosing additional members, for all members are not equally equipped to contribute towards the agreement for which we all devotedly hope.

Some of our allies had said in the course of the debate that there should be no expansion either of the commission or its subcommittee, but we had been careful in our concluding remarks on November 4 last to keep our position open on this matter. Thus when the soviet made it clear that they would boycott the existing commission, we made strong representations to our allies that the question of commission expansion should be reconsidered. It was not—perhaps I should stress this point—a question of caving in to the Russians; it was not a question of doing something merely to bring them back to the disarmament negotiations. On these matters I think nearly everyone would agree that the Soviet union is inscrutable and, as events proved, they are quite capable of appearing to work for a compromise and then demanding something more, something quite unacceptable, when a compromise is offered them.

However, we felt that many countries in the United Nations were deeply concerned about the future of disarmament proceedings and that intransigence over a relatively small matter, the question of commission expansion, would appear in retrospect a foolish intransigence, particularly if it gave the U.S.S.R. a good excuse not to negotiate in the future at all. At this time many of our allies, unlike Canada, were under firm instructions to oppose expansion of the disarmament commission. Therefore, on November 6 we made only a guarded statement in the political committee just before the votes were taken. At that time I made certain remarks and I should like to quote what I said. I do so only because I think the remarks are pertinent to the remarks I am making at the moment. I said:

> We do not believe that the size or composition of the disarmament commission and the subcommittee has been a major obstacle in the way of agreement. But, by the same token, we do not believe that a matter of some alteration in the United Nations disarmament bodies need inevitably be allowed to stand in the way of at least the opportunity for further negotiation. . . . Our fundamental approach to a possible change in disarmament bodies was defined by Prime Minister Diefenbaker in his statement in the general debate on September 23. He made it clear at that time that we were certainly not opposed in principle to associating other countries with these disarmament talks if there was any chance that this would improve the prospects of success. If, however, the very possibility of continuing the negotiations at all is now jeopardized, then the willingness to accept some reasonable adjustment is all the more essential.

As we expected, this statement was warmly welcomed by many countries, including some of our NATO allies. Very shortly thereafter our allies on the subcommittee indicated to us that they would not now be opposed to reasonable expansion of the disarmament commission.

The disarmament commission, I may say, is of course composed of the eleven members of the security council. In addition, Canada has the unique honour of being a permanent member of the commission, as well as of its subcommittee, whether or not she is a member of the security council. The western position in the security council has always been quite secure, as may be illustrated by the fact that nine of the eleven powers composing the newly elected security council voted for the western disarmament resolution at this assembly.

It was therefore agreed that some neutral or uncommitted countries, notably India, and some satellites such as Czechoslovakia, could be seated in the commission without any danger to the west. After this we were in constant consultation with the representatives of our three allies on the subcommittee. Ambassador Lodge for the United States, Commander Noble for the United Kingdom and Mr. Jules Moch for France.

At first it was agreed that an addition of five new members might be reasonable. Then immediately rumours of our negotiations began to spread, as they do down there, and many countries indicated that if there were to be any commission expansion then their own region, or more particularly their own country in some cases, should not be excluded. Thus, our subcommittee allies themselves asked that not five but ten countries should be added. These ten were Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Czechoslovakia, India, Italy, Tunisia and Yugoslavia.

It was agreed that if such a resolution for commission expansion were to be effective it should unite rather than divide the assembly, or at least that part of it outside the soviet bloc. Therefore, along with our allies we had been in constant consultation with India and with other leaders of the uncommitted nations. We had also had some contact, I may add, with the soviet delegation who had made it clear that they would not commit themselves to any resolution in advance. At times we seemed on the point of finding a list of countries which would be acceptable to all the powers concerned. However, after some days of negotiation it became more and more clear to the Canadian delegation that, regardless of our own views, it would be very hard to get prior agreement between all of our subcommittee allies on the one hand and the major uncommitted countries on the other. Therefore, in order to get the ship launched, so to speak, together with Japan we introduced a resolution calling upon the assembly "to enlarge the disarmament commission by the addition of ten member states which, for the first year, from 1 January, 1958, to 1 January, 1959, shall be"—and then followed the ten countries I have previously mentioned. Our tactic on this occasion was, in the words of an eminent statesman of the past, to wait and see the reaction of the assembly to this resolution.

We were not surprised to learn that there was widespread feeling, even among some of our NATO allies, that while our resolution was a good thing it was perhaps not quite good enough, and that a more equitable and satisfactory list of countries could still be found. In short, Mr. Speaker, we continued to negotiate with the same intensity after our resolution was introduced as we had before. Twice the discussion of our resolution was postponed and once the assembly was adjourned for this purpose.

At length it became clear that India, Sweden and Yugoslavia would be satisfied with an amendment to our resolution which we ourselves had been considering, namely the addition of four more countries, Egypt, Mexico, Norway and Poland. When it was clear that this amendment could be accepted by all of our subcommittee allies we tabled a revised version of our resolution, one which was in our view very much more satisfactory and which would add all of these 14 countries and thus give the disarmament commission a membership of 25 countries. We were particularly pleased to obtain for our resolution the co-sponsorship of all the middle powers most concerned, namely Canada, India, Japan, Sweden and Yugoslavia. Later Paraguay joined the sponsors as a representative of Latin American countries.

At this point there was some reasonable optimism that in view of the wide sponsorship and support for our resolution, the U.S.S.R. would not oppose it and would indicate its return to the commission. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, this was the information that we and most of the other member nations of the assembly had received. However, such was not to be the case. At the last minute the soviet position hardened again and our resolution was honoured with a public rejection by the soviet representative to the United Nations. At the last minute the soviet tabled, in the name of Albania, an amendment calling for the addition of seven more countries. These countries were Austria, Bulgaria, Ceylon, Finland, Indonesia, Romania and Sudan, not one of which could truly be considered pro-western in its disarmament attitudes. The U.S.S.R. supported this resolution in all seriousness as an effective "compromise" to meet the western position "half-way". They made a firm statement that only if this unacceptable amendment were accepted would they return to the disarmament commission, a statement which led most countries to conclude that the U.S.S.R. simply did not wish to turn to the commission at all.

The voting on our resolution and on the soviet proposal showed that the Soviet union had allowed itself to become completely isolated on this matter. Many "neutral" countries were offended by this abrupt soviet rejection of a serious negotiated compromise on which much labour had been expended. Yugoslavia in particular expressed its regret that our resolution had not been generally accepted. Because of this disappointment Yugoslavia declined to vote on the resolution in any way. After the Albanian amendment had been defeated by a vote of 19 for and 38 against, with 19 abstentions, our resolution was then passed by the impressive majority of 60 for to 9 against, with 11 abstentions. Only the hard core of the soviet bloc voted against our resolution. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that our resolution was supported by most of the Asian countries and almost the entire Arab group, including Egypt, Jordan and Syria. The soviet proposal for a permanent 82 member commission received only the 9 votes of its own bloc.

If the U.S.S.R. persists in its refusal to negotiate, one may well ask what Canada's efforts in this matter have achieved. I think that question was probably in the mind of the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) when he made his remarks this afternoon. We have at the very least shown a constructive willingness to make reasonable concessions in order to continue serious talks on this vitally urgent question. No one can say that western stubborness on the mere machinery of United Nations disarmament talks has been an obstacle to progress. For a long time there has been in the assembly a feeling that, due to the composition of the security council on which it is based, the disarmament machinery has been heavily weighted towards the western point of view. This was a genuine issue, one which prompted the remarks of the Prime Minister in the assembly. In the light of the soviet position, many countries felt it imperative to remedy this matter, if only to reassure countries all over the world of the sincerity of the western desire for a negotiated disarmament agreement. That has been done, and many countries are now looking forward to playing a constructive, if small, role in the complex negotiations which must still take place.

It would, of course, serve no constructive end to allow the commission to become a mere sounding board for soviet propaganda. In our negotiations we were constantly mindful of this danger. But since the passage of our resolution all of our subcommittee allies have indicated to us that they have no misgivings at all about the composition of the new commission. On the contrary, they are glad to welcome countries which ought, in their opinion, to be able to learn more of the complex issues involved in this great question of disarmament.

The point has been made by the hon. member for Algoma East that if agreement could not be reached in a committee of five, it cannot be expected in a committee of 25. This compares the old subcommittee of the disarmament commission with the new disarmament commission as a whole. Perhaps I did not understand the hon. member's remarks this afternoon, but that was the interpretation I took from them.

The new larger disarmament commission of 25 members does not rule out further meetings of a smaller subcommittee. If the major powers concerned will agree, there can be further meetings of the old, indeed of a new, subcommittee. There was also in New York a Mexican proposal for a subcommittee to meet under a special chairman such as the president of the general assembly. This too would be by no means unacceptable to us if the major powers would agree to it. However, during the recent weeks of meetings of the general assembly it did not appear that this proposal was acceptable to any of the major powers, nor indeed did it appear to be acceptable to anyone else in the assembly. The problem was to find machinery acceptable to all or, failing that, to offer a reasonable compromise to make our desire for further negotiations on disarmament abundantly clear.

One can still ask whether the Soviet union can afford to boycott a commission where countries like India, Egypt and Yugoslavia have come to hear the U.S.S.R. defend its position on disarmament. Thanks to our resolution, if the U.S.S.R. does boycott the commission it will no longer have any respectable reason for doing so. It will certainly not endear itself to these uncommitted countries; while the west, on the other hand, will be in a position to make its point of view much more clearly understood.

In the voting on our resolution, the U.S.S.R. was already isolated from these uncommitted countries. Many other countries have approached us to express their gratitude and relief that a sound and constructive resolution to expand the commission was introduced and passed. For this means that the assembly has done what it could to further disarmament negotiations; and the onus is now squarely on the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to justify its position. Even the U.S.S.R. cannot continually fly in the face of world public opinion, and particularly public opinion in those uncommitted parts of the world in Asia and Africa. Since the end of world war II the U.S.S.R. has been attempting to gain the sympathetic public and official support of these new Asian and African countries in order to further her plans for ultimate world control. If the U.S.S.R. continues to act as she did on the disarmament question as well as in the recent Syrian situation referred to this afternoon in the remarks made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and in the Hungarian affair of scarcely a year ago, she—that is the Soviet union—will not long continue to enjoy much public or official support in the neutralist countries in Asia or Africa.

By having exposed the true motives and behaviour of the U.S.S.R. to the peoples of the uncommitted countries of Asia and Africa and indeed everywhere, we have done much not only to prevent further Russian advances in the world struggle for men's minds but we have indeed, in my opinion, forced her to give ground.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house listened with interest this afternoon to the first statement on foreign affairs by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith). While we cannot all share in domestic matters the same political views, he has given us a good example today, as he did on the day when he was sworn in, of the possibility of a maximum measure of unity between all political parties in the important matter of our relations to other nations in the world.

No doubt it was part of this desire to transend political divisions which caused him to remind us again of the signal recognition given to one of our number in this house, the former secretary of state for external affairs who recently was awarded the Nobel peace prize. I would like, as a colleague of the member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson), to take the opportunity in this particular debate to say that those of us on this side of the house join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs in noting our pride and satisfaction at the recognition of the efforts of his predecessor, over a long period, in the cause of peace.

I think it is appropriate that I should utter these words because, except for the right hon. gentleman who leads the official opposition, possibly I have had a better opportunity than anyone else in this house to know how deserving has been the hon. member for Algoma East to become the recipient of a Nobel award. I have served with him on many occasions at the United Nations, both when he was president of the assembly and when he was chairman of the political committee of the United Nations, as well as in other fields of endeavour in international affairs, and I can attest in all sincerity to the fact that he, above all others, is deserving of this recognition given to him in succession to such great figures in foreign affairs as Aristide Briand, the former minister of foreign affairs for France; Frank Kellogg, the former secretary of state for foreign affairs in the United States—(co-authors of the Kellogg-Briand pact)—Dr. Albert Schweitzer and of course Dr. Ralph Bunche. I think it is also appropriate that I should say, as one who on behalf of some hon. members recently had conversations with the secretary general of the United Nations with regard to his coming to Canada to join with us in marking this recognition, that the secretary general regrets events of the moment necessitate his departure for Europe. And so he will be unable to share with members of this house the privilege of paying tribute to the honourable member for Algoma East.

The country, and I know the house, welcomes the appointment of the hon. gentleman to a portfolio which, until his appointment, was held by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), a busy Prime Minister whose preoccupations, understandably, in so many fields of action did not in the judgment of many people commend the retention by him of the administration of external affairs. This is particularly so at a time when the international situation is so tenuous, so tense, and so difficult of solution.

We have, I think, because of the complexity of modern day events, realized that the decision of the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King to have a separate minister in charge of external affairs was indeed a wise one. It is not possible under the circumstances obtaining in the world and which now confront us for anyone to hold the portfolio of Secretary of State for External Affairs as a sideline. We all therefore welcomed the decision of the Prime Minister to appoint a fulltime minister of this important department. I am sure the hon. gentleman will bring to his task the qualities of intellect and heart which he possesses, and that he will pursue these matters of vital moment, with skill and tact.

As he narrated this afternoon, one could not help but conclude that basically he is carrying out a policy already laid down by his predecessor. He recognizes, of course, the value of the United Nations but he, too, recognizes that Canadian foreign policy is predicated upon the fact that we are a member of the commonwealth of nations, that we are a neighbour of a great world power, the United States, and that we are an active member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. These four affiliations, it seems to me, have characterized the basic foundations of foreign policy in this country. I believe all of us recognize that while there is a difference between our affiliation or our relationship to the commonwealth and the United States of America—important as are both those relationships—we do not in any way deprecate the importance of the United Nations. This principle was set forth—as we were reminded by the member for Algoma East, this afternoon—by the Prime Minister himself in the statement made by him on September 23 of this year. He said that the support of the United Nations is the cornerstone of Canada's foreign policy. The Prime Minister continued:

> We believe that the United Nations will grow stronger because it represents the inevitable struggle of countries to find order in their relationships and the deep longing of mankind to strive for and attain peace and justice.

Those words, somewhat similar to those uttered by the former prime minister, I believe represent the conviction of most members of this house and that of the great majority of the Canadian people, in the present and ultimate purposes of the organization which arise from the charter signed at San Francisco in 1945. The United Nations may not be the perfect instrument to preserve order among the nations, but it does represent in the international sphere the same kind of instrument which in the course of history, the community has developed to preserve order in the domestic realm. It is one to which we must give our continued support along the lines laid down by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canada can play, notwithstanding the fact that she is not one of the great powers, an increasingly important role as was demonstrated during the past decade by the former secretary of state for external affairs and the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent).

My own connection with the United Nations goes back to the first meeting at Church House in 1946 when I went to the United Nations under the leadership of the present Leader of the Opposition, and again with that right hon. gentleman to the second part of the general assembly of the United Nations, also in 1946. As I have paid inadequate but deserving tribute to one of my colleagues, I think the house would want me to say that we also recognize that the former prime minister and the present Leader of the Opposition, one of those who proposed the concept of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, will be remembered in this house and in this country, not only for his contribution to the development of Canada, but for his great contribution to the maintenance of peace in the world.

We will take the opportunity now, because of our membership on the security council, to play an increasingly important role, because the political questions which come before that body—a body which has, in this particular, a primacy of interest and authority—will afford to Canada and to its representative an opportunity of conciliation and mediation not open to us, except during the course of the general assembly, since the time we were last a member of the security council, when our representative was General McNaughton.

Hon. members will recall the important contribution which General McNaughton made on a number of matters, not the least being the constructive role he played in carving out national status for Indonesia. Likewise, our representative on the security council will have the opportunity of playing a useful role in matters of consequence, in a sense the kind of role signalized this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he referred to the work of the international commissions in Indo-China, Laos and Vietnam.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not mention the situation in Cambodia where an international commission also operates. If I understood the Secretary of State for External Affairs correctly, the work of this international commission has been completed. I do not know whether or not the commission is to be disbanded but, if I may, I would suggest to the hon. minister, based on the experience of my visit to Indo-China last year, that there is a role which the commission can play apart from its precise terms of reference; there are opportunities, possibly, for some form of continued action in the light, particularly, of the kind of situation which prevails in South and North Vietnam.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I wonder if the hon. member for Essex East would permit me to correct an impression, which, evidently, I made upon him this afternoon? I did not intend to say, and I do not think I said, that the international commission would be abandoned. I did intimate to the house that the task of the commission in Cambodia is about completed. The other international commissions in Laos and Vietnam still have work to do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for that correction. Likely the error was mine, not his. But I had the impression a year ago that the situation in South Vietnam was such that that kind of international body could serve a desired purpose. But my reference to it is largely to point out that a country like Canada can play a useful role, not only at the United Nations but in keeping the peace, as these commissions have obviously done in all three countries of the old Indo-China.

I do not know whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs was too enthusiastic in the conclusions he reached about Laos, but in any event I am sure he is aware of the implications that flow from the integration of the Pathet Lao with the royal government. This is a matter which requires great scrutiny, having in mind the need to preserve the integrity, not only of Laos but of South Vietnam, and of Cambodia and countries like Thailand in the neighbouring area.

We listened a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, to a detailed and interesting account of recent disarmament discussions in the general assembly given by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), parliamentary assistant to the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker). I think the house would wish me to say to him how grateful we are for this report of his endeavours. The question of disarmament does not necessarily mean that the continuation of heavy armaments is in itself a necessary provocation for conflict. The high level of armaments is rather a reflection of the condition of our world than a cause of those conditions. In any event, as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said this afternoon, it must be the aim of governments by all means within their power always observing the requirements of security, to do everything they can to ease the heavy burden placed on their peoples by high defence expenditures.

But I think we must bear in mind that this situation is not one of our making. The kind of world in which we live demands, at this stage, certainly, strength of arms in the face of the might of that group of communist nations which confronts us in almost every sphere of international action. In the face of this situation there can certainly be no unilateral disarmament. That mistake we made once before. But just as we have learned that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has served as an insurance premium against aggression, I think we must recognize that difficult as it is, we must be practical in our assessment of the need for armaments and for defence arrangements at this time.

However, I repeat we must seize every opportunity at the United Nations and elsewhere to resolve some of the great political problems which confront us, all of which have their bearing on whether or not it would be possible to bring about any specific measure of disarmament. The present disarmament discussions arose, I suspect, out of the decision of the Soviet union in September, 1954, when that country announced it had abandoned the position which it had taken since the end of the second world war. No longer, Andrei Vishinski said, would the Soviet union insist on an agreement to ban the use and production of atomic weapons as a condition precedent to disarmament in the conventional arms field. And it was that important declaration of the abandonment of a principle, which had stood in the way of any progress whatsoever during the preceding 10 years, which gave some encouragement to the possibility of arriving at some agreement through the subcommittee of five of the disarmament commission in the fall of 1954. That subcommittee is an agent of the disarmament commission itself, which had its genesis in the first meetings of the United Nations. This subcommittee was created—and this should be remembered in the light of what has just been said—primarily to provide a more efficient way of providing a forum for discussion of disarmament objectives. It was said, and argued, that the only way to provide discussion of disarmament was to see that it took place among those nations on whose shoulders rested the primary responsibility, namely the great powers. These meetings were to be held in camera. In this way it was hoped there might ensue a comprehensive agreement on disarmament.

I served on the disarmament committee over a period of two years. I think I can speak with some experience of the nature of those discussions and of the problems involved. I do not propose to go into any detail, but may I say that once it was evident that the Soviet union had abandoned its original position of insisting on the prohibition of the manufacture and use of atomic weapons as a condition precedent to action in the conventional field, an effort was made to try to get some limitation in the number of armed forces which would be available to the five countries represented on the subcommittee, namely, the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Soviet union and Canada.

It looked at one time as though it was going to be possible to arrive at some limitation of armaments and that we were going to be able to get an agreement; for instance, that the Soviet union would be limited to 2,500,000 men and the United States to a similar limitation, Great Britain and France to 650,000 and countries like Canada to something like 250,000. But one of the essential conditions laid down was that at every step there should be in existence some organ of control that would include inspection, not initially air inspection but certainly ground inspection. In any event the position taken by the western nations was that we must first of all agree on what were the objects of control and then we must decide on the methods by which the control system was to be operated. The concept of control, we thought, need not be complete; it need be no greater than the stage by stage process agreed on. In any event there must be some control body and the methods necessary to make that control effective must be agreed upon in advance. There should be no reliance merely on the good faith of the Soviet union, we argued.

I agree with what the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has said. The reason we have not had any real success in this matter lies largely at the doorstep of the Soviet union which at no time was willing to give any indication of its concept of what the objects of control were or what steps should be taken to make that control effective. That will be found not as a matter of obiter dictum by those of us who participated in these discussions; it is a matter of record that at every turn when these requests for these indications were put the Soviet union was unwilling to give an answer which would give some justification for feeling that at least in one stage or in one step some progress could be made without violating the conditions of national security.

We were confronted not only with the control of conventional arms but the more difficult question of the control of nuclear weapons. The house will recall that in July of 1955 the heads of the governments of the four great powers met in Geneva. Because of the difficulties of control and because it was recognized by the Soviet union and by the United States through Premier Bulganin and President Eisenhower that it was not possible to control nuclear weapons that question had to be shelved. In the meantime it was agreed that some effort should be made at reaching a partial agreement on disarmament. Let me repeat, it was because the complete elimination of nuclear weapons could not at that time be effectively controlled or made part of any program of disarmament capable of implementation in the foreseeable future that President Eisenhower, as a means of creating a healthier international climate, suggested a method to avoid the dangers of a surprise attack.

The house will recall that that proposal involved the exchange of military blueprints as well as affording to both sides the opportunity of aerial inspection. The proposal was not accepted by the Soviet union although it was accepted at that time in principle by Canada and accepted by the prime minister of this country in greater detail during the course of the last summer.

The history of this matter then is that if we have not succeeded in reducing armaments we must blame the intransigent position taken by the Soviet union. This does not mean that the fault is all on one side nor am I suggesting that. I say now as a private member that I think it is regrettable more consideration was not given two years ago, not only to dealing with the question of armaments in being but with the question of weapons not then in existence. We are now in the age of the intercontinental ballistic missile. Its significance for the world of course needs no comment by me. The position of countries like the United Kingdom only 800 miles away, and countries now within the reach of missiles with a travel power of 5,000 miles speaks eloquently for the potential power of this new instrument of war.

The proposal was then made—and this was along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar—that the scientists of the world dealing with outer space and with future satellites and the like should foregather under international auspices, just as they did in Geneva in 1955 prior to the setting up of the atomic energy agency, to see if they could not pool their knowledge in the hope of avoiding the terrible installations of war that are now apparently a fact. Well, that is all history but it does in part reflect the reluctance and I believe the unwillingness of the Soviet union to recognize that this development, costly and burdensome as it is on the peoples of the world and diverting as it does our resources from more constructive purposes, gave the Soviet union the opportunity of making the contribution which their leaders now say they are prepared to do and which they urge can now be done in new meetings and in new peace pacts. I believe that the world does not want new peace pacts; what it wants is a determination on the part of the Soviet union to live up to the commitments to which she has already obligated herself. That is the way, it seems to me, to begin to deal with the situations that confront us.

The hon. member for Algoma East this afternoon raised another question to which I would like to devote a few moments. He referred to the matter of continental air defence known as NORAD, the defence of the North American continent, now under the command of General Partridge of the United States air force. No one will quarrel with the importance of this particular objective. While all the details are not known to us, and on that account do not endow us with the opportunity of passing a final judgment as to merit, it would seem at least that the objective the government had in mind in the concurrence it has given is one to which there can in principle certainly be no exception taken. Indeed in this thermonuclear age the only way we can defend ourselves, as we learned in 1947 when we set up NATO, is by some common defensive arrangement among likeminded nations. Certainly the defence of this continent presupposes common action between the United States and Canada. Therefore, any observations that we make on this side with regard to this matter or any questions we put have nothing whatsoever to do with the objective of preserving and guaranteeing the maximum measure of defence for the North American continent.

We are a nation dedicated to the principle of parliamentary democracy and under our system of government while the cabinet, the executive, is responsible for the formulation of foreign policy and also responsible for its execution, nevertheless either during the stage of negotiation—and that is a matter to be determined by the government—or after negotiations have been concluded and policies decided on it is the obligation of government under our parliamentary tradition to submit its policies to the representatives of the people for approval.

We are not asking the government to let this parliament decide on policy. We recognize that it is the responsibility of government alone to decide policy, but once they have decided, parliament has the right to be informed, to be given the opportunity of approving or disapproving. That opportunity has not been given to us in this matter. In fairness to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes), this particular arrangement is of an interim character, as he himself says. What is that interim arrangement? We have not been told about it. We are entitled to know how it was reached. As the former secretary of state for external affairs said today, while we have no right to ask what discussion has taken place in cabinet, we have the right to know whether or not there was a discussion in cabinet on this matter. We have the right to—

Mr. Pearkes: May I ask a question? The hon. member will recall that the Prime Minister said this matter had been discussed in cabinet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What the Prime Minister said in answer to the questions I put to him was that this represented the policy of the government as a whole. That was the reply of the Prime Minister to my question. Was this matter discussed in cabinet? Was this matter discussed in the defence committee? When I asked these questions exception was taken to them. The Prime Minister told us later that the pattern being followed in this matter was the same as that we had followed in the matter of the Ogdensburg agreement which followed the discussions between the president of the United States and Mr. Mackenzie King in 1940. Again the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had been decided on by the government of the day as a matter of policy, and later that treaty was submitted to parliament for approval. Contrary to what the Prime Minister did say, the Ogdensburg agreement likewise was submitted to parliament; it was submitted to parliament on November 12, 1940, by the right hon. prime minister of that day. He outlined not only the terms of the agreement but the conversations that began a few months previously at Hyde Park with the president of the United States, and he also indicated something which has not been yet indicated by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask the hon. member a question? He just made the remark that the prime minister of the day introduced the debate in the House of Commons in August, 1940, and then he went on to say that the conversations had taken place a few months previously at Hyde Park. How much had parliament learned in the meantime?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will look at the debate he will see that parliament was told everything. There is a difference between conversations in the stage of negotiation which had yielded no decisions and conversations which resulted in actual agreements.

I argued a few moments ago that no one expects the government, in the conduct of its foreign policy, during negotiations to reveal the details of those negotiations. No one contends that; but what I am saying is this. What the prime minister of that day did, as a result of his discussions at Ogdensburg with the president of the United States, was to give the information to parliament at the earliest possible opportunity. He outlined for parliament the nature of those discussions and the agreement concluded.

Mr. Pearkes: Agreement made in August.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All right, let me finish this. I asked the Minister of National Defence whether before the present government arrived at its decision, did it, let us say, as a matter of courtesy—although I think it could be put on much stronger grounds—advise Her Majesty's government in the United Kingdom? My hon. friend has not yet replied to that question. In the case of the Ogdensburg agreement, the prime minister of the day pointed out at page 56 of Hansard that His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom had been apprised of the nature of the discussions with the president of the United States.

I am not suggesting that there is any constitutional necessity for doing so, but in the matter of collaboration, particularly in matters of defence, it seems to be the elementary thing to do, namely to discuss such matters with one's associates, one's allies. We asked the government, was there an order in council giving effect to the decision arrived at? Was there a minute of council?

And, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that when we asked for a minute, on reflection I thought that I should not persist in that request, that possibly it was an improper one. But on further reflection, I do not think it was because I find that on November 12, 1940, the prime minister of that day, in reporting on the Ogdensburg agreement, actually tabled in parliament the minute of cabinet by which this matter was decided on by the executive arm of government.

In this particular matter, a matter of the greatest importance to this nation, we have no document whatsoever, no interim agreement, no order in council, no minute of cabinet.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he suggesting that cabinet minutes should be tabled in this house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has not been listening to what I have said.

Mr. Green: I have.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On November 12, the government of the day did table the minute.

Mr. Green: Are you suggesting now that any cabinet minute should be tabled in the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I do not suggest that. It is up to the government to decide whether any particular document that it has should be tabled. If it involves matters of security, the government alone should determine whether or not that information should be given; but, subject to that reservation, this house ought to have some indication of the decision taken by the government in respect of a matter so important as this one.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. member again? He has not answered my question. Is he claiming that any cabinet minute should be tabled in the house, if requested?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That has nothing to do with this and my hon. friend knows it. There are certain—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Green: You have a phony argument, that is all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows perfectly well that in a matter of this sort there is no occasion for the kind of levity suggested by his question.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are not asking for any information that is contrary to the rules of security. The other day, when the hon. member for Algoma East was putting his questions, the Prime Minister said: All right, we will give you this information, but on your shoulders will rest the responsibility for all that is revealed.

The hon. member for Algoma East quite properly replied, of course, as he repeated today, that that is a responsibility that belongs to the government. We have not had in this house the slightest information, except to be told by the Minister of National Defence that the responsibility in this matter, in the final analysis, rests with the government of the day and not with the continental air defence commander. He has not yet cleared up the inconsistency between that reply and the statement made by General Partridge on September 6, in which he said there would be no opportunity of consulting Washington and that there was no necessity in the context for him to consult the President of the United States. I do not think I do the Minister of National Defence injustice when I say that he has given us no information whatsoever by which we can reach a satisfactory conclusion, in the absence of the presentation in this house of the interim agreement. Here we have Time magazine—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member at this stage in his argument but it is my duty to inform him that his time has expired.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all regret the changes in the rules that require the subject to be finished tonight. I know I do for one, because I had hoped to have a few minutes to say something about the Colombo plan conference which was held in Saigon in October. Still, I will take advantage of the few minutes that remain.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo rose first in his place.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that are left tonight I have one or two things that I should like to say. In the first place, I should like to add my congratulations to those of others to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) on the assumption of his post and taking his seat in the house, and also to congratulate the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) on his receipt of the Nobel peace prize. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I was very disappointed that neither the present Secretary of State for External Affairs nor the former secretary of state for external affairs gave to the parliament of Canada this afternoon any comprehensive survey of the world situation in which we find ourselves today. We had instead a rather limited account of certain actions in the United Nations. We had some very smart political footwork from the former secretary of state for external affairs, but it does seem to me that the people of Canada are asking for something better than that today.

I believe that the people of Canada are asking for the type of thing to which the leader of the C.C.F. referred this afternoon when he referred to Mr. George Keenan's statement with regard to the solution of problems in Europe. I believe the people of Canada will find a note in Dr. Hugh Keenleyside's recent speech that will strike a responsive chord, and I think that now is the time when both the government of the day and the official opposition should be taking a very serious look at the world in which we find ourselves to decide whether or not Canada's role should be entirely different from that which we have pursued in the past.

I believe we have to ask ourselves certain questions and to abide by the logic of the answers. The first question that I suggest we have to ask ourselves is, do we consider that the Soviet union is preparing at any time to launch a military war of aggression on the rest of the world or do we consider that the evidence points in the other direction? Many spokesmen in eminent places in the world have of recent months reached the conclusion that there is no evidence to support the idea that the rulers of the Soviet union are so insane that they are preparing to launch a war that must be as destructive to themselves as to the west.

If we agree with that point of view, Mr. Speaker, then I think we have to ask ourselves another question. In the light of that assessment of the situation, what is the most useful role that Canada can play in order to relieve the present extremely dangerous world tensions? I was thinking earlier this evening when we heard a long report on the abortive disarmament discussions at the United Nations that perhaps we are barking up the wrong tree entirely when we imagine that it is possible by such discussions to bring about a disarmament program without having previously allayed those tensions in the world which have caused the armament race. I think perhaps we are trying to put the cart before the horse, and I believe history bears me out on that.

I have lived long enough to remember repeated occasions upon which there were attempts to stop earlier armament races and on no occasions were those attempts successful. They were not successful in those earlier periods. There was always the possibility of military success in carrying out national policy and if there is a possibility today of reaching some agreement on disarmament it can only be on the basis that there is no longer that possibility of military victory.

I suggest, sir, that we should take another and rather realistic look, not without regard to our national pride, as to just how important a role Canada can play in actual fact in the military situation in the world today. I think we have to admit that our role will be almost imperceptible no matter what efforts we might put into it. What we are facing is two giants poised in an extremely dangerous position and because all our sympathies, shall I say, lie with one of those giants, is no reason in my opinion for us imagining that we are serving the cause of peace by tying ourselves to the policies of that one great power. In fact, it seems to me that we have a duty towards our friends in the United States to aid them in extricating themselves from the extremely dangerous position in which they find themselves today.

I suggest, sir, along the lines suggested by the leader of this group earlier this evening, that Canada should turn her attention to other serious matters in the world rather than making and continuing what are now admittedly ineffectual attempts to make a worth-while and significant contribution to the war between the giants. All the areas of the world that are undeveloped at the present time are in fact the most important sections of the world today because it is on the decisions made in those nations that will depend whether or not the spirit of democracy or totalitarianism is going to prevail in the world. We in Canada have a choice of continuing with defence expenditures—

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock, it is my duty, in accordance with the arrangement reached between all parties, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the motion now before the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

61. Departmental administration, $604,729.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

119. Departmental administration, $2,157,871.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence services—

240. To provide for the Canadian forces, the defence research board and other expenditures relating to defence, including costs incurred in the participation of the Canadian forces in the United Nations emergency force and contributions toward the military costs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; to authorize expenditures in the current year out of the amount hereby provided, not exceeding $130,000,000, under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and to provide that, notwithstanding subsection (3) of that section, where equipment or supplies are transferred, the estimated present value thereof shall be credited to this vote instead of being paid into the special account mentioned in the said subsection (3), and when so credited may be expended for the purposes of the Canadian forces; and notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act to authorize total commitments for the foregoing purposes of $3,338,164,131 regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,521,731,982 will come due for payment in future years), $1,669,450,149.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and excise divisions—

290. General administration, $3,761,303.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Privy council office—

337. General administration, $444,962.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

414. Departmental administration, $672,473.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions in order to move that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs be referred to the standing committee?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister has leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I move for Mr. Fleming, seconded by Mr. Brooks:

That items numbered 94 to 118 inclusive of the main estimates 1957-58, item numbered 617 of the supplementary estimates 1957-58 and item numbered 778 of the further supplementary estimates (2), 1957-58, be withdrawn from the committee of supply, and referred to the standing committee on external affairs, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: What is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with the resolution preceding the measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, which is No. 14 on today's order paper. I understand arrangements have been made with the three opposition parties that this measure will be put through all stages tomorrow. Then we shall follow with the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs; after that the estimates of the Department of Justice and then the estimates of the Department of Naional Revenue.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what the intention is for Friday? I note that the business for Thursday has been outlined but for Friday it was suggested that we might have legislation or estimates. Has that matter been decided?

Mr. Green: The present intention is to continue with estimates on Friday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps one point should be made clear, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Public Works as house leader said that it was agreed amongst the parties to put the unemployment insurance measure through all of its stages tomorrow. So far as we are concerned, I think the agreement was that if the resolution stage was completed we would not insist on second reading being held over until the next day. I am not saying that it is impossible to get it through all stages tomorrow. The point I wish to make is that if, perchance, owing to others speaking at length, the debate is extended, it is conceivable that the legislation might not get through tomorrow. However, we have undertaken that if the debate at the resolution stage is completed, we will give consent to the second reading stage being proceeded with tomorrow.

Mr. Green: I believe the situation is that if the bill does not become law by Friday there will be disadvantage to the people who would be recipients of the benefits under the measure. As the hon. member knows, Thursday is a private members' day. We are never quite sure how long the other place will take to debate any of these measures as they are quite jealous of their rights. I thought it had been understood by all parties in the house that, as this is a measure which everybody appears to approve heartily, it could be put through tomorrow. However, we are in the hands of the house.

It being seven minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

INDIAN BAND LISTS—NAMES REMOVED AND ADDED

Question No. 159—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. How many names have been definitely removed from Indian band lists as a result of action taken under section 9 of the Indian Act, since its coming into force?

2. How many names have been definitely added to the band lists in the same circumstances?

3. How many cases are still in dispute under section 9, subsection 3 of the Indian Act?

4. Are there any other questions as to the Indian status of an individual still in dispute and, if so, how many?

1. 21.

2. 244.

3. 5.

4. 14.

IMPORTS OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLES, B.C.

Question No. 183—Mr. Christian:

1. What quantities and what varieties of fruit have been imported into British Columbia during the past twelve months and what duties have been assessed and paid to the government in respect to such fruit?

2. What quantities and what varieties of vegetables have been imported into British Columbia during the past twelve months, and what duties have been assessed and paid to the government in respect to such vegetables?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1 and 2. The quantities and varieties of fruit and vegetables imported into British Columbia during the period August 1, 1956, to July 31, 1957, (latest period available) are shown in the attached statement.

No statistics are available for duties which have been assessed and paid to the government in respect to these imports.

In addition to the imports shown in the statement, there were some imports of "Guavas, mangoes, plantains, and pomegranates" (statistical classification 8) and of "Fresh fruits, n.o.p." (statistical classification 20) for which statistics of quantity are not available.

Questions

1 and 2. Imports of fruits and vegetables cleared through customs ports in the province of British Columbia during the period August 1, 1956 to July 31, 1957.

PULP AND PAPER MILL, MIRAMICHI RIVER

Question No. 190—Mr. McWilliam:

Has the federal government made representation to the provincial government of New Brunswick, towards the establishment of a pulp and paper mill on the Miramichi river in that province?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

There is no record of any such representations having been made.

ICEBREAKING EXPENDITURES, LAKEHEAD

Question No. 212—Mr. Fisher:

1. What has been the contract price paid for icebreaking at the Canadian lakehead harbours for 1955, 1956 and 1957?
2. Is the contract price set annually? If not, what basis of variation is there for changing ice difficulties from year to year?
3. When will the tenders or contracts be advertised for the 1958 season?
4. Has the department any knowledge of suitable icebreakers at, or likely to be at, the Canadian lakehead for the 1958 season?
5. If so, what are the ships and owners?

Answer by: Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

1. $95,000 per annum under a three-year contract, January 1, 1954 to January 1, 1957. Besides icebreaking, this contract covered the transportation of lightkeepers, their assistants and families to and from certain isolated island stations in the vicinity of the lakehead; and the maintenance and servicing of certain floating aids to navigation. A separate contract was entered into for the opening of navigation, 1957, at $75,000 and covered lightkeeper transportation and buoy placing, as did the previous three-year contract.

2. (a) Answered by No. 1 above. (b) There has been no basis for price variation. Contracts have been on the firm price basis and the contractor assumes the risk for severe winter conditions and consequent prolonged icebreaking activities.

3. On or about October 1, 1958, if the Department of Transport's icebreaker and lighthouse tender, presently under construction, is not ready for service in time.

4. A contract is being entered into for the winter season of 1957-58 with the Hindman Transportation Company, Owen Sound, Ontario, which was the successful tenderer in a recent tender call for this purpose.

5. S.S. Ruth Hindman and M.V. Helen Hindman owned by Hindman Transportation Co., Ltd, Owen Sound, Ontario.

N.H.A.—OPEN END MORTGAGES

Question No. 221—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received representations from any body, through the regional employment committee of the city of Windsor, to consider the amending of the National Housing Act to allow for the setting up of open-end mortgages?
2. If so, has the government taken any action to amend the National Housing Act in line with such suggestions?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation met with a delegation from the city of Windsor, led by Mayor Michael Patrick, on October 7, 1957 and discussed with them some aspects of having an open-end clause in mortgages taken to secure loans under the National Housing Act.

2. If it is decided to introduce legislation to amend the housing act in this or other particulars, an announcement will be made by the government at the appropriate time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. JOHNSON (KINDERSLEY)—REFERENCE TO REPORT IN SASKATOON "STAR-PHOENIX"

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, which action I delayed until the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources had returned to the house from the recent dominion-provincial conference.

It is reported in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of November 19, 1957, that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, when speaking to a Conservative nominating convention in Moose Jaw and referring to the cash advance proposal, said:

> C.C.F. members oppose the move as useless, although it was supported by farm organizations.

My question of privilege is based on this false statement. The minister must know full well that every member of the C.C.F. party, far from opposing the legislation, voted for it. On the other hand, six members of the Liberal party opposed the measure by voting against the cash advance proposal. The C.C.F. members in supporting the proposal made it quite clear, as have the farm organizations, that cash advances, as a welcome first step, will not solve the problem of the cost-price squeeze facing western farmers, but that further comprehensive legislation is required.

I noticed in the same paper the minister's complaint of inadequacy of news reports on western members, and it would appear to me that this inadequacy is not being resolved by the distortion of facts by the minister. I am sure the minister will want to take the first opportunity of correcting the statement he has made and of giving an apology to the members of this group who have been misrepresented.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I have no hesitation at all in supporting the question of privilege on the part of the hon. member for Kindersley. What I said, but what was not quoted in the press, was that one member of the C.C.F. had opposed this proposal, and I used his own words. I made no mention at all in that speech of the C.C.F. in general opposing cash advances.

Mr. Coldwell: Might I ask who was the one member concerned, because I have no recollection of this.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I said one member, in his remarks in this house, had described it as useless.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, who was that? I have no recollection.

An hon. Member: He does not know.

STATEMENT ON PROCEEDINGS BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make concerning the dominion-provincial conference, and also I should like to table for the information of the house two copies of the communique as well as several copies of the report of the proceedings in English. A French translation thereof will be available shortly. In tabling copies of the preliminary verbatim report of the public proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference, I should like to make clear that the verbatim reports tabled herewith are those furnished to the conference immediately following the session, and have still to be corrected by the speakers themselves before they are issued in final, printed form, which will be distributed to each hon. member of the house in due course. The report speaks for itself in detail, and all I will do is give a general summary of the substance of the agreed communique.

In my letters to the provincial premiers of September 16 and October 31, which have been printed as appendices to Hansard, I indicated to the provinces the nature and purpose of the conference that we proposed. I think the accounts of the proceedings indicate clearly that the conference in fact carried out these intentions.

As I made clear in my opening statement to the conference, it was convened in order to seek the ideas and proposals of the provincial governments and to explain the general views of the dominion government. This government did not place any rigid formulas before the meeting for approval, nor did it adopt any take it or leave it attitude. It endeavoured to learn the up to date views of the provincial representatives.

I will not endeavour to recapitulate here the points of substance I made in my opening statement to the conference. Printed copies of that statement will be in the hands of hon. members in due course.

The agreed communique of the conference indicates that sufficient progress was made on certain items to permit action to be taken on them. In particular, the government is proposing to bring before parliament at this session an amendment to the Unemployment Assistance Act to remove the so-called threshold provision, under which the dominion treasury makes no contribution toward the cost of the eligible cases upon relief roles until they exceed .45 per cent of the provincial population. A suitable measure will be drafted and placed before the house in due course to carry out this policy, which should make it easier for a number of the provinces to make suitable arrangements to assist their municipalities in carrying this burden of assistance to persons in need. It is proposed to make this change effective at the beginning of 1958.

In my statement to the conference I said that the present government was inclined to recommend to parliament a change in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to remove the clause providing that the payments to provinces under that act shall commence only when six provinces, containing at least half the population of Canada, have entered into agreements under it and have their own related acts in force. In place of that we would substitute a more definite date for commencement of the plan.

We found no provinces expressing any strong views against this change, and consequently I would now like to announce our intention of proceeding with it when opportunity offers. Consideration will have to be given as to what particular time will be selected and as to whether other changes in the legislation will be desirable.

I am sure all members of the house will welcome the announcement in the communique that:

> It was generally agreed that the over-all economic position of the Atlantic provinces is now such as to justify some special grants in aid to the governments of those provinces from the federal government.

This is the most important immediate result of our meeting this week. The dominion government will now proceed to consider in detail what it should propose in order to implement this general policy.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The conference was invited to review the present tax sharing arrangements, and possible changes suggested by some of the provinces in the tax sharing arrangements act were discussed. As I made clear in my opening statement, the dominion government did not put forward any suggestions in this field, and it was understood that no endeavour would be made to reach definite conclusions on it at the meeting this week. Further consideration will be given by the government to this general subject in the light of the statements made during the public sessions by the provincial premiers, and also the subsequent discussion that took place in committee.

The discussions were generally held in a harmonious spirit, and I would like to pay my tribute personally at this time to the manner in which the provincial representatives came to the meeting to discuss in a most constructive manner questions of interest to all the provinces and to the nation as a whole. At the conclusion of the meeting the representatives of the provinces expressed their satisfaction at being able to put their views before the conference, both in open session and in committee. A subsequent meeting as soon as possible in the new year will be held in accordance with the proposals made by this government in calling the conference.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has mentioned that a good measure of agreement has been reached on certain matters. Might I ask if the premier of Quebec has acquiesced to the signing of an agreement regarding unemployment assistance; and second, if the premier of Quebec has signified his intention to establish a hospital insurance plan in that province?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, any representations made by the premier of Quebec in the open session are available in the records. Any arguments or considerations that were advanced on behalf of any of the provincial prime ministers or by any of their representatives in committee of course are not open and available.

Mr. Lesage: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister was the one who mentioned that a good measure of agreement had been reached—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Yes.

Mr. Lesage: —on definite matters, and those two matters were mentioned. It seems to me that members of the house are entitled to know—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lesage: —if the province of Quebec participated in that measure of agreement that was reached.

An hon. Member: It was in camera.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I simply pointed out the facts, and I am sure the premier of Quebec will be able to express himself, if he chooses to, so that my hon. friend will understand what was said by him during the progress of the in camera sittings.

Some hon. Members: That is not an answer.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Skating on thin ice again.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the statement he has made regarding the federal-provincial conference. In view of the fact he has now made statements outside of the house that we were unable to get from him in this house concerning legislation of this parliament, may I ask him if he will now tell us what date he has in mind for bringing the hospital insurance act into effect. Will he also tell us what the government intends regarding the inclusion of mental and tubercular illnesses under the provisions of this act, since this too is a subject that he discussed at the federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first question I would point out this. In view of the fact that any decisions that might be arrived at in this regard would generally affect the whole field of dominion-provincial relations as between the government of Canada and the provinces, there was no information furnished to the provinces or their representatives that was not available to parliament. As far as the date of commencement of the plan is concerned, in my earlier statement I said that after consideration by the cabinet of the views expressed yesterday by the provinces this will be brought first and foremost before parliament.

With regard to the other matter raised, as to the inclusion of the particular types of hospitals to which my hon. friend made reference, that decision, too, will have to be taken by the cabinet in the light of the representations made during the past two days, and when the decision is made it will be immediately communicated to the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the way in which the Prime Minister ties the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and other matters in with federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, can he say whether these two changes in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act have to wait until after there has been another federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The practice the house has followed so far this session with respect to statements made on routine motions has been for one member of each group to comment or raise questions, and I do not think we ought to go beyond that. It seems to me to be a sound limitation on statements of this kind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my hon. friend has not had an opportunity I think he ought to be allowed to ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no objection on the part of the house, I have none.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I thank the Prime Minister for his generous attitude in this particular matter. I was going to say that no one on this side had asked the Prime Minister any questions regarding the matter of hospital insurance. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his proposal made on Monday to the provinces for the inclusion of mental illnesses and tuberculosis, tied in as it is with the further grants which the government may or may not make to the provinces, was accepted by any province at this conference; or is it not a fact that the provinces generally wanted the inclusion of mental illnesses and tuberculosis but they wanted it without any conditions attached, or without any withdrawal of moneys which might be made available to them pursuant to the fiscal agreements that may come into being as a result of my hon. friend's new policy?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will not, of course, reveal what took place in the in camera sessions, but I will read what I said which indicates that what my hon. friend has interpreted as a condition was in fact not a condition:

> My colleagues and I have no objection in principle to introducing amendments in parliament to provide for inclusion of mental hospitals and tuberculosis sanatoria which have been estimated will cost $68 million to begin with if all the provinces come in and the cost will mount year by year but we wish to make clear that whatever is offered to provincial treasuries in this matter—

And, as I pointed out, the cost is $68 million.

> —cannot be provided in other forms, and in particular must be taken into consideration in any revision that takes place of the tax-sharing arrangements act.

There is no condition in that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If my hon. friends do not appreciate it, certainly I think the premiers of the provinces did. It is simply a statement of fact that if, over and above what the government of my hon. friend provided for in the legislation, we are to advance a yearly amount of $68 million, certainly a figure of such size will have to be taken into consideration in any revision of the agreements which, incidentally, were signed in April, 1957, and have five years to run.

We wanted to get the views of the provinces. There is no responsibility on us to endeavour to open up that which has been agreed to.

But feeling as we did that reconsideration should be given, it was pointed out by me in these words, not as a condition but as a fact, that the voluntary assumption of something the government of my hon. friend had refused to do, having regard to its cost, would necessarily reduce available moneys for other purposes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There was a condition, obviously.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I had intended asking a question similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Essex East, but that question has been asked and answered. However, there is another one that I should like to ask. The Prime Minister mentioned that the government was giving consideration to payment of grants in aid to the Atlantic provinces. I was wondering if we are correct in assuming that these grants in aid are to be in addition to payments made under the formula contained in the tax sharing act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, Your Honour. Actually any additional assistance to meet the peculiar position of the maritimes would be over and above those payments now provided for under the tax sharing arrangements act.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I desire clarification of the reply he gave to the hon. member for Peace River who asked him, I think, if the grant in aid which the government is considering making to the Atlantic provinces is in addition to the payment under the formula contained in the tax sharing agreement. In his reply the Prime Minister used the words "maritime provinces". Is Newfoundland included in the reply?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave was supposed to cover all the Atlantic provinces. I referred to the Atlantic provinces yesterday, and I certainly intended that they should all be included today.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may also ask a question for the purpose of clarification of the use of language. During part of his speech the Prime Minister referred to the leaders of the provinces as premiers, and in other parts he referred to them as prime ministers. Perhaps he could inform us which he regards as correct usage?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I think that question has been asked several times of persons in my position, and having regard to the past record it seems to be a case of you take your choice.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AGGREGATE AMOUNT AVAILABLE, DOWN PAYMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954 to increase from two hundred and fifty million dollars to four hundred million dollars the aggregate amount that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund under subsection 1 of section 22 of the act; and also to provide for the reduction of down payments.

Motion agreed to.

STARRED QUESTIONS

CANADA COUNCIL—APPLICATIONS FOR CAPITAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 24—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Canada Council received any applications for capital assistance under section 9 of chapter 3, 5-6 Elizabeth II?

2. If so, from what schools or colleges that are not recognized as universities?

3. What are the names of any schools or colleges which have been approved or accepted as "similar institutions of higher learning" as phrased in section 9 of this act?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I will summarize the answer to the three questions in this way. Paragraph 13 of the Canada Council Act states precisely:

The council is not an agent of Her Majesty—

Paragraph 23 of the act clearly specifies the manner in which the council is to report to parliament annually. You will recall that an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) during the debate on the second reading of the bill, whereby provision is made under this paragraph for a review of the report by parliament. Neither the Canada Council Act nor any other legislation lays any duty upon the council to report to parliament otherwise.

In so far as these questions are concerned, we do not have in the records the information requested, and we have no power to direct the council to furnish that information. It will be recalled that when the now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) moved the resolution he emphasized this aspect of the legislation, and stressed that the council should be made as free as possible of possible government interference.

As a result of the legislation as passed, we do not consider that we have the power to ask the council to reveal information about applications it receives, other than the information given in the annual report. I would point out it could only be damaging to the organizations concerned if the council were to reveal information about applications which it had received and had not approved. Under the circumstances I trust my hon. friend, having regard to the law as it is, will not press further for answers respecting these questions.

ARCTIC OCEAN—CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Question No. 26—Mr. Lesage:

Are the waters of the Arctic ocean north of the Arctic archipelago up to the north pole, in the so-called Canadian sector, Canadian waters?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that all the islands north of the mainland of Canada which comprise the Canadian Arctic archipelago are of course part of Canada. North of the limits of the archipelago, however, the position is complicated by unusual physical features. The Arctic ocean is covered for the most part of the year with polar pack ice having an average thickness of about eight feet. Leads of water do open up as a result of the pack ice being in continuous motion, but for practical purposes it might be said for the most part to be a permanently frozen sea. It will be seen, then, that the Arctic ocean north of the archipelago is not open water nor has it the stable qualities of land. Consequently the ordinary rules of international law may or may not have application.

Before making any decision regarding the status which Canada might wish to contend for this area, the government will consider every aspect of the question with due regard to the best interests of Canada and to international law.

Questions

BUTTERFAT IMPORTS

Question No. 32—Mr. Peters:

1. Has butterfat in a semi-solid form, or any synthetic form of butter or butterfat been imported into Canada since January 1, 1957?
2. If so, from what countries and in what quantities from each country?
3. Has a tariff been levied against this product, and if so, at what rate?
4. Has the government taken steps to analyse the content of this product, and if so, what is the chemical result?
5. For what purpose is this product now being used?
6. Has the government received any submission opposing the importation of this butterfat concentrate?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): The answer to section 1 of this question is yes.

The answer to section 2 is that since there is only one importer, under the terms of section 15 of the Statistics Act this information cannot be released.

The answer to section 3 is yes, the most favoured nation tariff rate of 20 per cent ad valorem under tariff item 711.

The answer to No. 4 is that the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare has analysed samples of butter oil imported into Canada and has found the product to contain 99.6 per cent milk fat and 0.4 per cent moisture. These samples were also found to comply with the chemical specifications of milk fat as stated in the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act.

The answer to section 5 is that importers of this commodity are not required to file with the government any statement of usage. However, it is common knowledge that butter oil is used in the manufacture of a variety of processed dairy products.

The answer to section 6 is that butter oil and any other form of butterfat containing 55 per cent or more of butterfat were placed under import control by P.C. 1957-1475 of November 13, 1957.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE—UNION AGREEMENTS

Question No. 33—Mr. Fisher:

1. In the contracts made and pending between Northern Ontario Crown Corporation and contractors building the pipe line, are there any provisions regarding union agreements between the labour force to be used and the contractors?
2. If so, what is the substance of such provisions?
3. With what unions and locals did agreements exist for the working season of 1957 on the four pipeline spreads west of the lakehead?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce: The answer to part 1 is no.

There is no answer to part 2.

The answer to part 3 is as follows. The united association of journeymen and apprentices of the plumbing and pipefitting industry of the United States and Canada; the international union of operating engineers; the international hod carriers' building and common labourers' union of America; the international brotherhood of teamsters, chauffeurs, warehousemen and helpers.

AIR TRAFFIC SECURITY ORDER SOR/57-450

Question No. 34—Mr. Barnett:

1. What is the purpose of security control of air traffic order SOR/57-450, air navigation order, series V, No. 14?
2. What are the main departures from past flight requirement regulations affected by this order?

Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport: The answer to part 1 of this question is that this order was produced at the request of the Department of National Defence and is designed to permit the identification of aerial traffic within certain areas of Canada by means of flight plans and radar. These regulations are required by national defence in the interests of national security.

As to part 2, the answer is that security rules for coastal and domestic air defence identification zones and security identification zones have been before the public for some years in other form. The order combines those requirements with the rules for flight into and within the mid-Canada and distant early warning identification zones. The main departure from past requirements is that the requirements for security control of air traffic will be more readily enforced.

AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION, ALMA, QUE.

Question No. 38—Mr. Gauthier (Lake St. John):

1. Is consideration being given by the government to the construction of an airport at Alma (St. Joseph d'Alma), in the county of Lac-Saint-Jean?
2. Has the town of Alma transferred to the Department of Transport the necessary land for the construction of this airport?
3. If not, what stage has been reached by the proceedings in this respect?
4. Will the Minister of Transport give consideration to including necessary amounts in the estimates next year for the carrying out of this project?

Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport: The answer to part 1 is that the government has already assisted with the construction of a gravel surfaced landing strip at St. Joseph d'Alma and is now considering further development of the strip to provide a hard-surfaced runway.

As to parts 2 and 3, the answer is that the land has not yet been transferred to the Department of Transport, but the Department of Justice has recently appointed an agent to act on behalf of the crown in connection with the transfer.

The answer to part 4 is that the matter is receiving active consideration.

FOOD CONTAMINATION BY RADIOACTIVITY

Question No. 39—Mr. Argue:

1. Has the government taken any action to determine if the food consumed by the Canadian people is being contaminated by radioactivity as a result of atomic bomb fall-out?
2. If so, what policy directives have been issued to this end?
3. Has the government authorized the setting up of a specialized laboratory or other equipment to determine the levels of radioactivity in the food supply?
4. If so, (a) have any reports been made so far as a result of these experiments; (b) what conclusions have been reached; (c) if no reports have been made so far, when may they be expected?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, yes; surveys have been and are being made by the Department of National Health and Welfare of canned fish and of other canned and uncanned foods.

With reference to part 2, no specified policy has been adopted other than the enforcement of the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act. So far as the Department of Fisheries is concerned, frozen and canned imported tuna fish which could come from an area affected are examined by the use of suitable equipment in the department's fish inspection laboratory at Vancouver. Up to the moment no evidence of radioactivity has been found. There have been no policy directives issued in this connection.

With reference to part 3, yes; the Department of National Health and Welfare has begun a program to study the radioactivity of foods, environmental factors such as soil and pasture, and other biological substances.

With respect to section 4: (a) while no reports have been published to date, results have been submitted to the United Nations scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation; (b) the levels of radioactivity in food which have been determined to date are very low and (c) the work done will be summarized in the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO UNINSURED UNEMPLOYED, ONT.

Question No. 40—Mr. Houck:

1. Has an agreement been entered into between the federal government and the government of the province of Ontario for financial assistance to municipalities in that province to aid unemployed persons who are not covered by unemployment insurance?

2. If not, has the province of Ontario been in negotiation with the federal government regarding an agreement being reached, and if so, what is the status of these negotiations?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker the answer to the first part of this question is no.

With respect to the second part of the question, the matter of participation by Ontario in the Unemployment Assistance Act of 1956 is currently under discussion with the Ontario authorities.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE—U.S. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 41—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Has the government ascertained if all American nationals at work on the sites of the pipe line spreads under construction in northern Ontario for the pipe-line company have entered Canada lawfully and have governmental authorization for working in the particular trade each is actually performing?

2. If not, will the government send representatives of the R.C.M.P. or the departments of citizenship and immigration or labour to investigate?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question is in two parts. The answer to part 1 is that all applicants for entry to Canada are examined to ensure that the applicant qualifies under the laws and regulations in force. In addition, applicants for non-immigrant entry to Canada for employment, from firms or individuals, are closely scrutinized and liaison is maintained with the national employment service to determine whether qualified Canadian workers are available. If it is ascertained that qualified Canadian workers are available, permission to enter Canada for employment is refused.

In answer to part 2, where a specific complaint is registered against a company or an individual for alleged contravention of the conditions of entry for employment, a joint investigation by the Department of Labour and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is carried out.

NUNS' ISLAND BRIDGE

Question No. 42—Mr. Leduc (Verdun):

1. What are the names of the persons who prepared the plans and specifications for the new bridge over the St. Lawrence river between Verdun and Laprairie, via Nuns' island?

2. Have the said plans been finally accepted by all parties concerned?

3. Have tenders been called or advertised for this construction? If so, (a) by what means; (b) what are the names of those who submitted tenders and the amount of each tender?

4. Has a general contract been awarded? If so, (a) by whom; (b) to what firm and at what price; (c) does it cover the whole undertaking or are there separate contracts for concrete, the substructure and/or superstructure?

5. Have subcontracts been awarded? If so, (a) under whose authority; (b) to whom and at what price; (c) by what means were they invited?

6. What stage has been reached in the preliminary work, about what date are the substructure and the superstructure expected to be laid, and when is the work to be completed?

7. Who undertook the construction of the concrete piers on the south shore on the approaches to the bridge?

Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer available to question 42; it is a rather lengthy and detailed answer, and I wonder if the hon. members would allow me to table it so it can be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the answer be printed on Hansard as though it had been read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough):

1. Dr. P. L. Pratley, with Lalonde & Valois as associates.

2. No—all plans not yet completed.

3. Three contracts for preliminary work have been let—(a) By public tender notice; (b) construction of piers 1E, 1W, 2E and 2W, Atlas Construction Co. Limited, $620,063.40; A. Janin & Cie Limitée, $666,537.00; Walsh-Canadian Construction Co. Ltd., $696,036.90; Canit Construction Company Ltd., $721,210.00; McNamara (Quebec) Limited, $778,142.04; Pentagon Construction Co. Ltd., $823,976.85; the Foundation Company of Canada Ltd., $968,759.00.

Fill material—north end: Edouard Monette Limited, $63,000.00; Highway Paving Co. Ltd., $150,000.00.

Supply and placing of fill for roadway, south shore: Walsh-Canadian Construction Co. Ltd., $47,450.00.

5. No.

6. Plans for the major portion of the bridge are now in the final stage of completion and it is anticipated that the work will be put under contract during the first half of 1958. Completion date cannot yet be definitely determined.

7. Atlas Construction Co. Limited.

NUNS' ISLAND BRIDGE

Question No. 43—Mr. Leduc (Verdun):

1. When completed, who will operate the new bridge over the St. Lawrence river between Verdun and Laprairie, via Nuns' island?

2. Will tolls be charged on this bridge?

3. If so, will users desiring to leave the bridge to proceed to Nuns' island be exempted, and will citizens of Verdun receive preferential treatment?

Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is: the national harbours board. The answer to the second part is: yes, in accordance with the first announcement of the construction of the bridge by the former minister of transport.

In answer to part 3, exemptions and preferential treatment are not anticipated.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

THERMAL POWER PLANT, ALBERTA

Question No. 57—Mr. Hansell:

1. Has the government of Canada negotiated with any person, firm or corporation, during the past year for the installation of a thermal power plant at Blairmore, Alberta, or any other community in the Alberta section of the Crowsnest pass?
2. If so, with whom were negotiations carried on and with what results in each case?

PUBLIC SERVICE—WAGES AND SUPERANNUATION

Question No. 171—Mr. Hansell:

1. How many persons are employed by the dominion government in Canada: (a) on a temporary basis; (b) on a permanent basis, as at the latest date upon which statistics are available?
2. What was the total amount paid in salaries and wages as of that date?
3. How many civil servants are now in receipt of superannuation, and what is the total amount of superannuation paid during the last month for which the figures are available?

BRITISH COLUMBIA ROYAL COMMISSION

Question No. 195—Mr. Christian:

To what extent to date, since January 1, 1957, has the federal government assisted the royal commission investigating the problems of the fruit farmers of the Okanagan valley, British Columbia?

MONT TREMBLANT AND WASHINGTON CONFERENCES

Question No. 197—Mr. Cameron:

1. How many delegates of all countries attended the meeting of commonwealth finance ministers at Mont Tremblant earlier this year?
2. How many days was the conference in session?
3. What was the total cost to the government of Canada?
4. How many persons, in addition to the Minister of Finance, comprised the Canadian delegation to the conference in Washington on trade and economic problems earlier this year?
5. How many days did the conference last?
6. What was the total cost to the government of Canada?

CANADA BOND PURCHASE, 1957

Question No. 216—Mr. Hansell:

What amounts of Canada government bonds were purchased in 1957 by the Bank of Canada and each of the other dominion government crown companies, corporations, boards, commissions or departments?

PUBLIC SERVICE, REGINA

Question No. 227—Mr. Ellis:

1. How many employees of the federal government by departments were employed in the city of Regina as of June 1, 1957?

[Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough).]

2. How many employees of the federal government by departments were employed in the city of Regina as of November 1, 1957?
3. Is any action under way with respect to reduction in staff of any department or departments of the federal government in the city of Regina in the immediate future?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE—EMPLOYMENT PREFERMENT

Motion No. 34—Mr. Benidickson:

For a copy of the clause or clauses in pipe line construction contracts of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation having reference to contractors' obligations relating to employment preferment for residents of Canada, hours of work, wage rates, and other working conditions for employees.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Motion No. 37—Mr. Haidasz:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, briefs and other documents exchanged during the last three months between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and representatives of (a) the Canadian medical association; (b) the association of Canadian medical colleges; (c) the Canadian hospital association; (d) the dominion council of health, with regard to health insurance.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTS OF AUTOMOBILES AND TRUCKS

Motion No. 39—Mr. Coldwell:

For a return specifying the number of imported automobiles and trucks, together with their countries of origin, purchased by the government of Canada between (a) April 1, 1956 and June 21, 1957; (b) June 21, 1957 to November 1, 1957.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

REPORTED BOYCOTT BY INTERNATIONAL TRADE UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I would like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a report in this morning's Montreal Gazette that the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships may be boycotted by the international confederation of trade unions, a world-wide organization of 53 million members? If so, does the minister not now agree that the company should be encouraged to reopen negotiations with the seafarers' international union, thus avoiding complete cancellation of a West Indies-Canadian trade service?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have noticed the article in this morning's press.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question I would like to address to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a telegram from the secretary of the international confederation of free trade unions protesting the transfer of these ships from Canadian registry, and claiming that transfer to another country is for the obvious purpose of avoiding a negotiated settlement with the striking seamen? If so, would he acquaint the house of the nature of his reply to this telegram?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram from the people mentioned by the hon. member, but I cannot relate verbally, now, the nature of my reply; I should have to look in my files to see exactly what it was. However, Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the Minister of Labour particularly. It is an action which has been taken by the Canadian National (West Indies) steamship company.

Mr. Byrne: A supplementary question. Does the minister not think this is a serious situation, when our trade with the West Indies is to be brought to a standstill?

Mr. Hees: I think it is obvious from what I have said that this is a serious matter, and that is why the steamship company took the action it did to try and preserve that trade.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, was it only last year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry; I have recognized the hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Would the minister not now consider immediately convening the special committee on railways and shipping with power to call in witnesses from the seamen's international union, officials from both Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited and the union, and such other witnesses it might see fit, as well as for documents and papers it might require for the purpose of examining into the circumstances resulting in the transfer of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, to Trinidad?

Mr. Hees: The management of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships advise me that they are engaged at the present time in a thorough examination into all the implications of the restoration of the service.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask a supplementary question for clarification. Did I understand the minister to say that after consulting his records he will bring down to the house tomorrow the substance of his answer?

Mr. Starr: That is what I intended to convey to the hon. member.

Mr. Byrne: A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Was it not only last year that the Minister of Transport himself said there should be no more transfers of Canadian bottoms to any foreign or commonwealth registry?

Mr. Hees: I do not think it was last year. I think it was two years ago that I spoke on this subject. At that time, I think, I expressed the view that if it was practical and possible—

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Hees: If hon. members will look at the record—and looking at the record is valuable—they will find that I said that to have ships sailing under Canadian registry is very desirable, if practicable.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SHAWINIGAN FALLS—PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works.

(Text):

May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it the intention of the minister to commence construction at an early date of a public building at Shawinigan Falls, in which all federal services would be housed? An affirmative decision would contribute to the relief of unemployment, which increases alarmingly from day to day.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The answer is that in the estimates of the previous government for the year 1956-57 there was a vote of $525,000 for this building, but nothing was done. In the year 1957-58 there was a vote of $275,000, but as yet the plans have not been completed. It is expected that they will be finished by January 15, 1958, and once that has been done public tenders will be called, and we hope the work can be proceeded with late in March.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the minister can tell this house the date on which he hopes to introduce the budgetary proposals and the reductions in taxation he promised T.V. audiences last night.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I made any promises to any T.V. audience last night, but when the appropriate time comes for making any announcement to the house I can assure the hon. member that the announcement will be made.

SUCCESSION DUTY ACT—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. On October 31, in answer to a question I asked, he stated that amendments to the succession duty act were under active consideration. My question is, has this active consideration reached a point where action can be taken, and when can we expect amendments to be brought down?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The consideration of this matter is advancing, and I think my hon. friend will have the full answer to his inquiry very soon.

INQUIRY AS TO REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES ON COMMERCIAL LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Stinson (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. What information has the government as to the prospect of a reduction in the interest rates charged by banks on commercial loans?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to inform the house that one leading Canadian chartered bank has today announced that effective next Monday it will reduce the prime lending rate from 5¾ per cent to 5½ per cent, and it is expected that this move will be followed by the other chartered banks in due course. I am sure this further move toward easing money, credit and interest rates, will be widely welcomed.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Minister of Finance take credit for this move by the chartered banks?

Mr. Fleming: The government will certainly claim the credit that is its due for a great many things it has done to seek to ease money, credit and interest rates, and is very gratified that its efforts in this regard have borne fruit.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further question. Will the Minister of Finance take the occasion before too long to tell us just what the government has done in this field?

Mr. Sinclair: Make a television broadcast.

HEALTH INSURANCE

SUGGESTED DIRECT GRANTS TO REPLACE PRESENT METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement made this afternoon by the Prime Minister, however, perhaps the Prime Minister would be in a better position to answer it.

How many of the provinces have indicated that they want the proposed hospitalization plan set up so that the federal government makes a specific contribution to national health and the details and administration of the scheme will be left in the hands of provincial authorities?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, notice of intention to ask this question was handed to me after I entered the chamber this afternoon. I would say that if the hon. member means we should have no Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, in other words that we should do away with Bill No. 320 and simply give grants to the provinces for those purposes, I know of no correspondence from any of the provinces to that effect.

Mr. Sinclair: Too good an act.

Mr. Monteith: I may be wrong. As I say, I have not had an opportunity to check my files, but if I have made an incorrect statement I will let the hon. member know.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, which perhaps will make my question more clear. How many provinces feel that the federal government is attaching too many strings to the bill?

LIVESTOCK

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION PROVIDING HUMANE METHODS OF SLAUGHTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has under consideration legislation this session providing for the humane slaughter of farm animals?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this question could more properly be directed to the Minister of Justice, who made a statement with regard to the matter some time ago here. We have not at the moment any particular legislation ready to bring in this session.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might supplement the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture by saying that ten days or two weeks ago we met with representatives of the committee which has been working in Ontario, and we did examine very fully the contents of their report and the results of their investigations. While we have not at the moment any legislation ready I wish to assure the hon. gentleman and the house that we are making continuing studies of the matter, because we recognize the great seriousness of the problem and the importance attached to it by so many of our people.

TELEVISION

DISCONTINUANCE OF "THE PLOUFFE FAMILY" PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister aware that in its current issue the Montreal weekly Radio-Monde carries under the signature of Andre Rufiange the widespread rumour that following criticism in this house by the hon. member for Beauce the popular T.V. program "The Plouffe Family" would be discontinued. Can the minister deny or confirm such a report?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to send me notice of his question before the house opened, and the answer to the first part is no; my attention had not been called to that article in Radio-Monde, nor had I been aware of the contents of the article from any other source whatever. The answer to the second part of the hon. member's question is also no, because the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation does not communicate with the minister with respect to programming in any of its aspects, and neither does the minister communicate with the C.B.C. or advise or instruct with regard to programming.

Mr. LaCroix: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rouleau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency has a new question perhaps he would permit the hon. member for Dollard to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Rouleau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister tell the house whether the new house built by the Plouffe family has been built with funds recently provided under the National Housing Act for new housing?

FLAGS OF CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO PROVIDE NATIONAL FLAG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the declaration of the Minister of Public Works on November 15 in which he stated that the flag question is a very important one, my question is, is it true that the government has decided on the advisability of taking steps to give this country a truly Canadian flag and, as reported on November 13, 1945, at page 2138 of the House of Commons French debates—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to stop the hon. member but it seems to me—

Some hon. Members: Sit down; Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will resume his seat I will tell him why I consider his remarks to be out of order. If he will consider the motion which he himself made in this house I think he will realize that this is dealing with a matter which he himself brought before the house, and therefore about which he should not inquire from the minister at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TERRITORIAL WATERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF CANADIAN POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, notice of which I sent him yesterday. Has the interdepartmental committee which we were informed last session was being set up reported to the government the position Canada should take on the legal position of the continental shelf and territorial waters in its representations to the international conference which the general assembly of the United Nations recommended should be held in March, 1958? If so, is it the minister's intention to make the government's views known to the House of Commons, and will provision be made for a discussion on this all-important subject?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Vancouver East for sending me a copy of his question which I received—and I do not know what happened—only this morning.

Mr. Winch: It was sent on November 26.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I will accept it as notice and reply at the earliest possible moment.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA—JOINT AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of his statement on Friday, which was the last day he was able to be in the house because of the federal-provincial conference, that Canadian troops should never be required to serve beyond the confines of Canada except with the consent and on the determination of parliament, can he say when parliament gave effect to its consent and determination regarding Air Marshal Slemon and the 40-odd R.C.A.F. personnel who are being required to serve at Colorado Springs? Would he also comment on the statement of the Minister of National Defence in August that R.C.A.F. personnel under orders from NORAD would ignore the international boundary if the exigencies of battle so required? When did parliament give its consent to such a course of action?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has given me no notice of this question, and it involves many considerations. The suggestion that the appointment of Air Marshal Slemon to the position in question in any way violates the principle I enunciated is of course untenable, as I am sure the hon. member will conclude after reconsideration. Appointments such as that are regularly made and in no way vitiate or violate the principle I enunciated, that Canadian troops cannot be required to serve beyond Canada on the basis of the traditional discharge of parliamentary responsibility, and also the general realization on the part of leaders of all parties that such should be the fact. Certainly following 1930 there has been no suggestion that they should serve beyond Canada unless with the leave of parliament.

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister answer the rest of my question referring particularly to the 40 other R.C.A.F. personnel being required to serve at Colorado Springs; and would he also comment on the statement the Minister of National Defence made in August?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I will have to peruse the statement, because I do not have it before me. If later I conclude that the matter in question requires elucidation at length I will do so. Otherwise after reading the question, which I will take as notice, I will answer it at a later date.

U.S. PLANES WITH LIVE BOMBS FLYING OVER CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of a reported statement made by the British foreign minister to the effect that United States bombers flying on routine flights over Britain carry live bombs in order to maintain a state of readiness at all times, can the minister state whether United States planes with such bombs are permitted to fly over Canada?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): By agreement with the United States, only with prior permission from Canada.

BRIDGES

ALASKA HIGHWAY—RECONSTRUCTION OF COMMUNICATIONS OVER PEACE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Why has the federal government turned over the job of reconstructing the Peace river bridge to the highways department of the province of British Columbia instead of having the work done by the army engineers, who have done such a fine job in reconstructing and maintaining the Alaska highway during the last 10 years?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for praising the work which has been done by the Royal Canadian Engineers in restoring traffic over the railway bridge. Regarding the first remark the hon. member made, to the effect that the work of repairing or restoring the Peace river bridge has been delegated to the provincial government, that is not correct. It is the intention of the Department of National Defence to replace the bridge in approximately its present location at the earliest possible opportunity.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am sorry I did not give him notice earlier. Would the Prime Minister inform the house what progress, if any, he has to report from his discussion with Premier Douglas reportedly held earlier this day regarding the building of the South Saskatchewan river dam?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have such widespread interest in that subject. As a matter of fact we negotiated this morning and discussed the matter, and my colleagues and myself will again meet to continue the discussion this afternoon. I would not want to give any interim report on negotiations even if it were proper to do so.

Mr. Tucker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hahn: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that if he would speak into the microphone I would have been pleased to have heard his answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sorry.

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister, if I may, how soon after the six months from the time of his taking office he expects work to start on the South Saskatchewan dam. I think he is six days past that cut-off date now, and I would like to know how much longer it will be before it is started.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend's question is as correct as his timing, six months from June 10, then of course no answer is really required. But I would point out to my hon. friend that I seem to remember that in 1948 the dam was to be proceeded with after the result of a by-election in Rosthern in which the hon. member was interested.

Mr. Tucker: I should like to ask a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: If the further supplementary question is like the question, I doubt whether it will be accepted.

Mr. Tucker: Well, it is probably not truly a supplementary question; it is just to repeat the question I put to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister now carry out his promise and start the dam within six months of assuming office?

Mr. Fleming: The Prime Minister carries out all his promises.

[Later:]

Mr. Hahn: I have a question which is supplementary to the one I raised earlier with the Prime Minister respecting the South Saskatchewan river dam. I just learned what he had to say. In view of the widespread interest in this project I would ask the Prime Minister whether he will give the house a report very shortly in respect of the progress being made in discussions in connection with this important project.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, as soon as there is anything to report.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERMEDIATE COURT OF APPEALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a question. A recent issue of the Montreal Star carries a statement to the effect that there is to be established an intermediate court of appeals in Quebec province. The Montreal Star also states that it is dependent upon concurrent legislation passed at Ottawa. According to the Star this measure has already received first reading in the legislative assembly of that province. May I ask the minister whether he is aware of this legislation, and can he tell us to what extent its jurisdiction will extend; and has the federal government given any consideration to the introduction of this measure?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I read the papers, as does the hon. gentleman, and I am aware, as he is, of the reports that appear there. But I have no formal notification of the action, if any, which has been taken or is to be taken by the Quebec legislature, and I am therefore unable to give him any fuller reply.

CHEESE—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Lavigne (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received a resolution from the county presidents of the Ontario cheese producers association asking that the government guarantee and support cheese prices at 34 cents a pound?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have received a resolution, or perhaps it would be more correct to say two related resolutions, from the county presidents of the Ontario cheese producers marketing association. These resolutions, however, did not ask that the government guarantee and support cheese prices at 34 cents. What they requested was that the dominion government provide bank guarantees which would enable the cheese producers board to continue the operations they have been carrying on for some time in regard to the marketing of cheese.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

VANCOUVER—USE OF TUNNEL FROM C.P.R. STATION TO POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General of which I have given notice. Has the tunnel from the C.P.R. station in Vancouver to the new post office been completed? If so, what was the final cost? Will it be used for any purpose other than of taking mail from the C.P.R. station to the post office?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, while I am most anxious to supply all possible information to hon. members about my department, I also desire to observe the rules of the house, and it seems to me—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Perhaps I observe the rules of the house somewhat better than the hon. members of the opposition are observing them at the moment. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that questions regarding the purposes and cost of a tunnel which is designed to exist for something more than half a century are hardly of the urgent nature that is stipulated as one requirement for questions on the orders of the day. I think perhaps this was the specific question that Mr. Speaker Glen had in mind in 1940 when he said:

> But I would call hon. members' attention to the well known Canadian practice which states "a question which could be inserted on the order paper is not allowed on the orders of the day being called". That rule has been departed from during this session but if it were observed more strictly, many of the oral questions would be unnecessary.

Mr. Speaker: I took it that the minister was rising on a point of order. Does anyone wish to say anything on the point of order?

[Mr. Lavigne.]

Mr. Dupuis: Just one word; I checked up how many questions the hon. gentleman asked during the last session.

[Later:]

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I directed a question a moment or two ago to the Postmaster General and he raised a point of order. Does the Postmaster General think for a moment that I dug this question out of my imagination? I think I have seven letters asking this question of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I attempted to make plain in my response that we desire to give this information to the hon. member but that this was a question which, according to the rules of the house, should be placed on the order paper and not asked at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who is the Speaker?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): It should not be asked here and I might add, in any event, that the question should have been directed to the Minister of Public Works, under whose direction this matter comes.

Mr. Robichaud: May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question before the house. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond raised a question of privilege, which was that he had not received an answer to his former question. That is scarcely a question of privilege because, as I have explained before, hon. members are not entitled to insist upon answers. They are entitled to ask questions, and in the appropriate place they are entitled to comment on the answers they receive; but they are not entitled to press to receive an answer if an answer is not given.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—REQUEST FOR LOWER INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Public Works. I should like to ask whether he will take action at once to reduce the interest rate charged under the National Housing Act.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No; there is no intention of reducing the interest rate.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the serious unemployment situation in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories? If so, what action is the government contemplating to alleviate this serious problem?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In answer to the hon. member's question, may I say that the same principle applies to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories as to the rest of Canada. We have taken and are taking action almost daily to alleviate the problem of unemployment in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Sinclair: There is double the unemployment there was last year.

POWER

NOVA SCOTIA-NEW BRUNSWICK—STATUS OF AGREEMENT ON DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): May I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I wonder if the minister can tell us whether an agreement has been reached between the federal government and the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick on the details of the power development or, alternatively, when such agreement is expected to be signed.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The officials of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the officials of the federal government are still working on the details of this agreement. When it will be announced I really cannot say. I know they have been quite busy. I have not had a report from them for two or three days.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the point of order raised by the minister, will he inform the house when I may expect a reply to the questions I placed on the order paper on November 7, 20 days ago, concerning his department?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Just as rapidly as possible, Mr. Speaker. We do everything possible to accommodate the hon. member.

GRAIN

REPORTED REFUSAL OF ADVANCES BECAUSE OF LEASED ACREAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. However, in his absence I have redirected my question to the deputy minister or to the acting minister of the department. Has it been brought to the minister's attention that farmers are being refused cash advances on their specified acreage merely because they have additional acreage under lease?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I received notice of this question just a few moments before coming into the house, and I have not yet had time to inform myself. I shall have to ask the hon. member to let me take it as notice.

TRADE

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—ALUMINUM PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): May I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce with respect to the Canadian buying mission sponsored by the government of Canada, which mission is now in Britain. Is it true that members of the mission may make arrangements to buy aluminum products in Britain to import into Canada?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would have thought the hon. member is about as capable of answering that question himself as I am. I suggest that if he wishes to ask the question, of which I have received no notice, I will take it as notice and give him whatever answer I can.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SEASONAL BENEFIT PERIODS, PAYMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase the length of seasonal benefit periods; to increase the number of benefit payments for which claimants may qualify during those periods; and to provide for other related matters.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wish at the outset to thank the other parties in this house for their kind consent to allow me to proceed with the bill immediately following the debate on the resolution. I hope I will experience the wholehearted co-operation of hon. members in facilitating the passage of this bill. It must go through the Senate, pass the other house and receive royal assent. I am concerned that those who will be eligible for seasonal benefits under this new amendment will not be delayed in receiving those benefits.

During the past few weeks several hon. members have asked whether or not this government intends to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act this session. I think these questions were a reflection of the concern we all feel about the present situation with regard to employment.

Before explaining this bill, which proposes to amend the seasonal benefit provisions of the act, I should like to describe the present situation in what I believe to be its true perspective. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the last period during which the state of employment gave rise to serious misgiving was the winter of 1954-55.

I should like you to look at the figures for two of the months that led up to that time, and compare them with the same two months in this year. We find that in August, 1954, those without jobs and seeking work comprised 3.1 per cent of the labour force. In August, 1957, those without jobs and seeking work comprised only 2.8 per cent of the labour force. In September, 1954, those without jobs and seeking work again amounted to 3.1 per cent of the labour force, while in September, 1957, those without jobs and seeking work were 3.2 per cent of the labour force. We come to October and we find that in 1954 those without jobs and seeking work were 3.3 per cent of the labour force, while in 1957 those without jobs and seeking work were 3.5 per cent of the labour force.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it is also important to note that the number of persons gainfully employed in this country increased by almost half a million between October, 1954 and October 1957, while the number without work increased by only about 28,000 in that same period. In view of these figures, Mr. Chairman, and without attempting to minimize our problems, I think it is fair to say that we have already come through situations that were potentially as difficult as is the present one. Furthermore, a favourable factor now is that this government has no intention of sitting back and letting matters run their course.

Earlier in this session I noted that by curtailing the influx of immigrants for the balance of the year, by channelling $150 million into our economy for the construction of houses, by accenting the job finding activities of our national employment service, and by stepping up our winter employment campaign activities, we indicated our preoccupation with this problem. We are proposing now to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase the amount of benefit available to insured persons who are unemployed during the winter season when employment is most difficult to obtain. We estimate that the changes we propose would result in close to an additional $13 million of purchasing power being paid out to those who need it most and who can spend it to the best advantage.

At present the act provides that seasonal benefits may be paid for the period from the week in which January 1 falls to the week in which April 15 falls; that is, for sixteen weeks. However, even before January 1 there are substantial numbers of persons unemployed and unable to qualify for regular benefits, and also many are still unemployed when the present seasonal benefit period ends on April 15. The intent of this bill is to lengthen the seasonal benefit period by one month at each end, so that it will run from December 1 until May 15, that is for a period of 24 weeks. The effect that this lengthening of the seasonal benefit period will have can, perhaps, be best explained by reference to several basic examples.

First of all, there are two ways in which claimants may qualify for seasonal benefits. The first applies to those who do not have enough contributions to qualify for regular benefit but who, nevertheless, have 15 contribution weeks since the end of the previous March. The second applies to those who have had a regular claim terminate since the previous May 15, even though they may not have made a single contribution in that time. Under the present act those qualifying in the first group have a minimum duration of 10 weeks and a maximum of 16 weeks. The proposed revision will give a minimum of 13 weeks and a maximum of 24 weeks.

In regard to those qualifying in the second group, Mr. Chairman, the duration of benefit under the present act is the same as that authorized on the last regular claim with a minimum of 12 weeks and an automatic maximum of 16 weeks because of the end of the seasonal benefit period. Our proposed revision will leave the minimum unchanged but does, of course, increase the maximum duration to 24 weeks; that is, a 50 per cent increase.

The effective date of this proposed legislation is December 1, and by that I mean that this bill will apply to all claims made in respect of the forthcoming seasonal benefit period. There is a minor exception to this and that would be those in the second group, those who had a regular claim expire since April 15, 1957, who will be able to qualify for seasonal benefit this winter on that basis. In future years, the requirement will be that they must have had a regular claim expire since the previous May 15.

Another point is that the privilege a seasonal benefit claimant now has of serving his waiting period during December will not be extended. In other words, he will now be treated as an ordinary claimant and will have to serve his waiting period at the beginning of his seasonal benefit period. This will not, however, put claimants in any less favourable a position since the date at which they can begin to be paid is advanced by three weeks and the maximum period of entitlement is being substantially increased.

We estimate that a large number of Canadian workers will benefit from the provisions of this amendment. Last winter, some 214,000 persons established seasonal benefit claims. This year since our proposed legislation will increase the period by two months, we might expect that the number who qualify will be somewhat higher. It would seem safe to say that some 250,000 workers will benefit to the extent, as I noted earlier, of some $13 million.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will the minister repeat that? Did he say 250,000 benefited last year?

Mr. Starr: No, 214,000 established seasonal benefit claims last winter. I think it would be safe to say at this time that some 250,000 workers will be benefiting to the extent of some $13 million.

Mr. Sinclair: Is that 250,000 more or 250,000 all told?

Mr. Starr: About 36,000 more. I should like also to bring out the point that this amendment, as well as the revocation of the married women's regulation announced the other day, is bound to result in an increase in the number of persons registered for employment with national employment offices across the country. Therefore, when hon. members ask about national registrations they are bound to see that they are higher after these provisions go into effect in Canada. There will be more people registered and also they may be registered for a longer period of time. However, there should be little or no impact on the monthly dominion bureau of statistics "Without jobs and seeking work" survey, and this survey will continue to be the official estimate of the number of unemployed in this country.

Under the new fishermen's regulations which come into effect on January 1, fishermen will come under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act and as a result will be eligible for seasonal benefits which are being extended in the resolution presently under discussion. Under these new regulations fishermen will now be entitled to receive unemployment insurance payments after only 15 weekly contributions. Provision is also being made in the amendment to seasonal benefit regulations for benefits to be awarded to certain classes of claimants who have exhausted their regular benefits. A number of fishermen could conceivably come under this provision.

That is all I have to say at this moment, Mr. Chairman, in explanation of this resolution and the bill which will follow, but I would ask hon. members to facilitate the passing of this amendment as quickly as possible. I would be very glad to answer any questions that might be asked, providing I know the answers. I do not, of course, profess to know the Unemployment Insurance Act thoroughly, but will endeavour to obtain the answers as soon as possible.

Mr. Sinclair: Did the hon. minister say that the date for fishermen would be the same as for the others, December 1 to May 15?

Mr. Starr: They were to start from December 1 and will, under this amendment, begin at the same time as the seasonal benefits begin which will be December 1, with one week waiting period.

Mr. Sinclair: Thank you.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to clear up any misunderstandings which might be prevalent in this house as a result of the suggestion of the hon. house leader that there had been an arrangement with the three opposition parties to have this bill cleared through the commons in the one day. I am sure it would not be possible to make such an undertaking but it was tentatively agreed that should the bill get past the resolution stage we would not require the hon. minister to take a second day in which to introduce the bill, the hon.

minister, having been kind enough to provide a draft bill to some of the opposition members earlier.

The hon. house leader did say last night at the close of the sitting:

> We are never quite sure how long the other place will take to debate any of these measures as they are quite jealous of their rights.

Well of course members of the commons are equally jealous of their rights, as has been demonstrated on many occasions by members of the present government, so that we want it clearly understood that should this measure reach the second stage today we will be happy to go along with it. However, we do not wish the debate to be curtailed in any way.

The Minister of Labour in his opening remarks has gone to some length in attempting to minimize the unemployment situation today, in quoting the percentage of unemployment in relation to the labour force back in 1954. Now for that and other reasons I feel we should be entitled to quite adequate consideration of the unemployment situation as it exists. The fact that we now have a fall season for six months of the year is an indication that there is a very serious unemployment problem.

We have an old saying where I come from, high in the mountains where they do get frost almost every month of the year, as follows:

> Of course we have only two seasons, the first of July and winter.

Now I do not think we want to have it generally understood with respect to all of Canada that we have summer for six months and the frozen winter for the other six months, so we must realize that this is an emergency measure which has been brought forward, the government having fully realized such an emergency situation, despite the remarks of the Minister of Finance last evening and on television during his press conference and his other remarks of less recent date in Toronto, when he was endeavouring to prove that there is today no serious unemployment situation.

I just want for a few moments to point out what is in fact the situation across Canada today. In British Columbia the lumber industry has fallen off about 30 per cent, which means at the present time we have close to, if not more than, 30,000 unemployed in that industry alone. The base metal industry is certainly in the doldrums and many are being laid off from day to day. There is a disconcerting sign in my own riding. In the hungry thirties gold mining was a profitable undertaking and I now find that in the old Wild Horse creek area, where people were making a living during the early thirties, we now have a resurrection of the gold mining industry. They are erecting sluices and so on. Now while I welcome a new industry, I hope this is not a forecast for the future in the mining industry. We want to see gold doing well but we hope it does not mean that we are entering a time of depression when the gold industry indeed does flourish.

In Kitimat we have had some 1700 people laid off. These are the figures that occur to me at the moment but we know from day to day many people are being laid off. In Alberta, the oil industry is in a serious state of depression and much of that condition, I think, is due to the policies of the present government in stifling the gas and oil industry and related industries.

In other prairie provinces there is widespread unemployment. In respect to Ontario, in September there were some 27,000 unemployed in Toronto alone. And just the other day there were 2,400 laid off by the Ford Motor Company. These are large blocks but there are many smaller groups being laid off daily.

There are rapid cut-backs in the province of Quebec and in the maritimes, we have 35,000 unemployed and the labour force in relation to the rest of the country is very small. Yet, the Secretary of State, speaking at a Conservative rally the other day said that since the Conservatives came in they have created many jobs.

I am afraid the largest number of jobs they have created are in the unemployment insurance commission offices. I have clippings here—up to 20 of them—from various newspapers containing statements of responsible people about the serious situation which has evolved this fall.

An hon. Member: There were a lot of statements made on June 10.

Mr. Byrne: There was a question raised today in the House of Commons with respect to trade in the West Indies. That trade has been cut off for a period of almost six months now and no real effort has been made to settle the Canadian National steamship's strike and if something is not done soon there will be no revival of that trade.

That means a lot of unemployment, and certainly the fact that the sailors themselves are going to be out of jobs will cause another 250 to be unemployed.

One source says there will be up to 750,000 unemployed this winter. These forecasts must be made on the basis of some statistics which support the contention. What is the government doing to alleviate this situation? They are releasing more money, it is true, for home building in the middle of winter when it is unlikely more homes will be started, but the fact that we are releasing more money to enable labourers to build homes costing between $12,000 and $16,000 is not going to put a great deal of steam into the building program. Something more will have to be done, because the very high cost of homes at the present time is beyond the capacity of ordinary workmen to build if there is to be any hope of paying for them.

When the present government was in opposition they had many remedies to recommend with regard to housing. The Minister of Public Works was asked only today whether the government intended to lower the interest rate in conformity with the action being taken by the chartered banks. When the present government was in opposition they made many requests that the interest rates should be reduced, and the down payment reduced to 5 per cent or even less. We welcome what has been done with regard to releasing more money, but let us go further and come to grips with the situation.

Unemployment is due to the fact that we now have a surplus of goods. The shelves, apparently, are loaded. In this situation the government sent out purchasing agents. They sent 50 people to the United Kingdom to purchase more goods and piled those shelves even higher. We certainly want to do everything to increase trade with Great Britain, but it seems to me that when we are already selling more to Britain than we are purchasing the salesmen should be coming from the other side, attempting to show the people of Canada the articles which they believe are able to compete in our markets. The government's action looks to me, personally, as being salesmanship in reverse. We have stocks on the farms and in the factories but we have to go out and look for more stocks for the farms and the factories. It may be all well and good, but it occurs to me, as an individual, that we are attempting to carry election promises a litle further than is possible—putting on a bit of a show. While we hope this has the desired effect with respect to trade I personally doubt it will do as much as we have been led to believe it will.

There are large numbers of unemployed in southern Ontario even in the electrical industry, yet we have been told that an order has been placed already for $10 million worth of electrical equipment, generators and so on. That is all well and good. We certainly realize that if we are going to sell to Britain we must also buy from her, but this is a time of serious unemployment in Canada while in Great Britain, though I read British newspapers quite persistently, I have yet to read any reports of any mass unemployment, or, for that matter, of any serious unemployment there.

It has been drawn to my attention—and this, Mr. Chairman, is not an important matter—that while in the United Kingdom this trade commission will be steered very carefully away from southern Ireland. They will make a quick trip to Northern Ireland, but they are going to keep carefully away from southern Ireland. A report I have here, written by Harold Morrison for the Canadian Press and published in one of the maritime papers says:

> The members will be taken aboard a special train to visit all parts of England, Scotland and Wales. There will even be a one day trip to Belfast in Northern Ireland, though there will be a careful skirting of the Irish Republic of Eire. No trips are planned there.

Well, as an Irishman, I suggest that they should—

An hon. Member: Take a jaunt to Dublin?

Mr. Byrne: —take that special train on a little trip to southern Ireland just for the purpose of seeing what a beautiful country it is there. In addition, surely we want to be prepared to sell a few things, and while this commission is doing its work they might find that there is quite an extensive market in southern Ireland.

The minister has explained the bill. We certainly welcome the amendment. As I have said before, it does show that the government appreciates the fact that there is a serious unemployment situation in Canada, and that they are taking some steps to assist those who will be unemployed for a long period. The fact that it will be possible for those who are unemployed during the Christmas season to begin receiving their benefits during the first week in December is indeed helpful. I note that the provision extends to the middle of May, in which month, in some areas, there are some signs of spring, though this year, regrettably, there is every indication that there will still be a large number of people unemployed at that date.

The minister has not indicated whether the government is prepared to replenish this emergency fund if necessary from the consolidated revenue fund. I think, personally, in view of the fact that this is an emergency and the government has indicated that it is now prepared to grant greater assistance to the provinces by eradicating the so-called threshold section of the assistance act, that they should not expect to retrieve these moneys from the unemployment insurance fund which, of course, is accumulated from the contributions of the employers, the employees and the government.

I think that is all I have to say. We welcome the legislation and more particularly we welcome the fact that the government is realizing that there is a most serious situation and is now prepared to face up to it and not delude the public any longer.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wish first of all to thank the Minister of Labour for his rather straightforward and informative introduction to the proposals the government has in mind. I believe the information he has given as we enter the discussion at the resolution stage is such that we can intelligently discuss this proposal and it may very well have the result of requiring less extended discussion when we come to the second reading stage of the bill. I do feel, however, that at the resolution stage it is important for us to consider some aspects of the situation out of which this proposal comes and see it in its proper perspective.

The Minister of Finance apparently has been declaiming with great vigour on television and other places that we have no emergency unemployment situation. On the other hand I note that various spokesmen for the Liberal party, including the speaker who just took his seat, have been declaiming also with great vigour that the unemployment picture is very black and that we do have an emergency situation in terms of unemployment. Percentage statistics of the present total working force as compared with those without jobs and seeking work have been bandied back and forth. I want to say that at the present time at least I do not intend to engage in that particular discussion pro or con because I believe I can fairly say that we in the C.C.F. group have always maintained that an emergency exists if any one citizen in this country is unemployed and that the total of figures is simply multiplication of individual emergencies which should be dealt with and should be the concern of the members of this house.

There is without question, as the hon. member for Kootenay East suggested, more unemployment in the province of British Columbia this year than there was last year and when one finds those figures broken down to areas with which one is personally familiar and realizes that many of the people whom one knows personally are at this time finding a problem in seeking employment then of course it strikes home very directly.

I just noticed a little news dispatch which comes from the national employment service office of the commission in the area of the constituency where I make my home which points out that at the date of this dispatch there were 1,450 persons unemployed in the area as compared with 456 unemployed at the same time the year before. I would certainly suggest that this proposal which the Minister of Labour is now bringing forward is the very least that we should have expected from the government in the light of the current situation.

We cannot help but be reminded, particularly in view of the fact that the minister himself made reference to the situation that prevailed in the winter of 1954-55, that there is some similarity between the approach the present government is taking and the approach taken by the government of that day in the face of growing unemployment. Some of us recall that chapter one of the statutes of the 1955 session, which was assented to early in January 1955, was an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act for the purpose of bringing the seasonal or supplementary benefits as they were then called to the level of the regular benefit payments.

In its essence the present proposal is another emergency rush-job tampering with the Unemployment Insurance Act. Certainly this action will be welcomed by the persons who will be able to draw additional benefits as a result of it. However, I think it is important at this stage when we are being asked to rush this legislation through that we should realize that this is in a sense a tampering with the act, that the approach we are being asked to make in dealing with this question of the extension of seasonal benefits is not really the kind of approach which should be made to the matter of amending the Unemployment Insurance Act; that it is something to which hon. members of this house should be able to give careful and detailed consideration in the industrial relations committee.

The question as to whether or not this particular proposal is the most desirable one which the government could bring forward at this time is one that requires careful examination. I do not propose to attempt to do that at any great length this afternoon but I think I might make reference to the most recent proposals for the amendment of the act brought in by the Canadian Labour Congress in their memorandum to the government on October 21, 1957. On page 14 of their printed memorandum they suggest the extension of the seasonal benefit period to include the month of December. I take it that the government is perhaps going a little beyond that particular proposal in the measure it is bringing in; but I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the recommendation concerning the amending of the act which is made on the previous page, page 13 of the memorandum in which the Canadian Labour Congress has this to say:

> We remain concerned about section 45. Despite its amendment, the conditions affecting eligibility for benefit remain onerous. Many claimants genuinely in the labour market are unable to establish a claim and there is good reason to fear that the approaching seasonal unemployment will swell the numbers of unemployed workers who will be deprived of benefit because of this section. We believe that this matter is sufficiently urgent for immediate action.

As I understand it the proposal which the Minister of Labour is bringing before the committee at this time does not deal in any way with a change in the conditions affecting the question of eligibility for benefit. Section 45 of the Unemployment Insurance Act is of course the section which sets out the basic requirements for regular benefits but the terms of eligibilty in respect of those desiring seasonal benefits who have not had previous claims, as I understand it, will remain at 15 weekly contributions prior to the making of an application.

The minister will recall that yesterday my colleague the hon. member for Skeena raised a problem which some of the fishermen on the British Columbia coast are having because of the 15-week requirement in respect of their eligibility for unemployment insurance this coming winter, pointing out that one of the reasons they have not been able to have the 15 weeks of unemployment was because of closure regulations introduced by the federal Department of Fisheries and the international Pacific salmon commission which operates under authority granted by this parliament.

Situations such as these, which have been brought to the attention of hon. members, do lend weight to the contention of the Canadian Labour Congress that the onerous conditions of eligibility are something about which we must continue to have great concern. I well recall, and perhaps the present minister may recall, that when the Unemployment Insurance Act was being revised in 1955, the then member for Cape Breton South and the other C.C.F. members of the industrial relations committee emphasized very strongly the fact that we could not consider our unemployment insurance system to be complete until it was such that all Canadian workers who became unemployed through no fault of their own were eligible to draw benefits under the act. As I phrased it myself at that time, if they had paid one contribution or one premium into the insurance fund. However, we are still a long way from that, and this proposed amendment will not really deal with that aspect of the situation, although it will mean, of course, as the minister says, that several million dollars more will be paid out in benefits.

This, of course, does raise some question in my mind as to where the benefits are to come from, because many of us who have followed the situation in respect of the unemployment insurance fund necessarily must have some concern about the balance in the fund and the income and outgo with respect to it. In my discussions of or reporting upon unemployment insurance matters to groups of workers in my area I have emphasized the fact that the unemployment insurance fund is something which rightly has to be regarded as a trust fund belonging to the working people of Canada. I have emphasized that it is not in the ordinary sense of the term part of the finances of the government of Canada but that it is a trust fund set up to be administered by a commission in the interests of the working people of Canada and therefore any payments made from it must be made under the terms of that trust and with an understanding that that is the situation that exists.

The last annual report of the unemployment insurance commission for the year ended March 31, 1957, does give us a report, as we would expect, upon the state of the fund. On page 32 there is a graph which shows that over the period from 1953 to March 31, 1957, the balance in the fund amounted to something over $800 million and that it has risen once or twice to a figure approaching $900 million. It also shows that there was quite a drop in the winter of heavy seasonal unemployment, the winter of 1954-55, to which the minister referred in his remarks.

The report contains another table which shows the total annual revenue and expenditure from the fund. It shows that in the winter of 1954-55, or during that fiscal year, something over $40 million more was paid out of the fund than was paid into it and that in the subsequent years of 1955-56 and 1956-57, while the income of the fund was somewhat greater than the outgo, that was as a result of the investment of the funds and the income from the investment. The report shows that if it were not for the investment income, the fund, on the basis of the direct contributions made by employees, employers and the government, would have been going into the red in each of the last two fiscal years which generally have been regarded as periods of relatively low unemployment. Therefore, when a proposal is brought in at this time, and when there are signs that do point to a much higher level of unemployment during this particular season than we have had during the last year or two, this is something which should be considered by this house when we deal with a proposal to increase the benefits.

The minister suggested, I believe, that according to his estimate—which I assume can only be an estimate—this proposal would result in additional payments of some $13 million. I take it this amount will be in addition to the $30-odd million which it was estimated was paid out in seasonal benefits during the last fiscal year. Therefore, I think we have to face the fact, and ask the question, as to how these additional benefits are to be financed. There are no references in the resolution as to any change in respect of the manner in which the moneys are to go into the fund, or in respect of the source or the amount. That being so, unless something is done, I think we shall have to recognize it is highly probable that the fund will be depleted as a result of payments made out of it during the coming season. In addition, when the fund is depleted the income from the investments will decline. In effect, there will be a bit of a spiral of decreasing income created.

Therefore, I would suggest that the government should be prepared to state its intentions in this respect. I would agree that the $800 million to $900 million in the fund, which has sometimes been called a cushion, makes it quite possible financially, without serious risk to the fund, for us to agree to this amendment to increase benefits at this time. But I do believe that the government should be prepared to tell the house what its intentions are in respect of amendments to the act or otherwise so that the security of the fund will be maintained.

I myself am inclined to think that this might be the appropriate time to consider whether or not some fresh approaches to the question could not be taken, because this situation of seasonal unemployment, and unemployment which really is not seasonal in its nature, arises out of the actions to a large degree of some of the large corporate interests in this country.

The hon. member for Kootenay East mentioned the lay-off of 2,400 men down in the Windsor area in the automobile industry. He mentioned the lay-off at Kitimat in the province of British Columbia of some 1,700 workers. I would suggest that that particular lay-off in Kitimat is one of the most flagrant examples of the complete irresponsibility of the large corporate interests in this country that we have had in quite a while, and that if corporations like the aluminum corporation in Canada are going to create unemployment like that, just at the flick of the wrist because of some particular managerial whim, then the time has come when they will have to be assessed for their responsibility in creating the unemployment situation. All too long the working people of this country have put up with the complete heartlessness and ruthlessness of large employing interests who shove men out in the middle of the winter without homes or places or jobs to which to go, without any thought of what their responsibility is not only to those people as individuals but to this country as a nation.

The basis of contribution into the unemployment insurance fund rests on a principle that has application in a number of fields, namely on equal contributions from employees and employers with a smaller contribution in this particular case from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. When we see that so much of this current unemployment is being created by actions such as the one I have described at Kitimat, then the question is raised as to whether that principle of contribution into this fund should be maintained in the future or whether perhaps the time has not come when there should be written into this act some form of penalty levy on employers who act in that irresponsible fashion.

I think perhaps an example of that approach is to be found in the workmen's compensation legislation across this country wherein is embodied the principle that employers are assessed an amount sufficient to cover payments required because of the accident rate within their particular industry. Perhaps the time has come when we might consider some such approach as that in respect of contributions to the unemployment insurance fund, namely some penalties for those employers who will take on a large block of the Canadian working force and then, without any regard to the over-all national picture, suddenly dump them on to the employment market, as it is called.

That proposal is naturally something which would require some careful study. I think it would have to be devised in such a way that there was some flexibility in respect of the normal rise and fall of employment levels in certain industries. However, I think it is particularly applicable in a case such as the one I have mentioned in Kitimat in respect of a construction program. Either under the Unemployment Insurance Act or under some other form of legislative guarantee to be required by the federal Department of Labour, if an employer undertakes to start a project which requires the employing of, for instance, 1,000, 2,000, 3,000 or 5,000 workers, I think perhaps they should be required, when they undertake that project to give some reasonable guarantee of the continuity of that employment for a certain specified period or some guarantee of sufficient notice of their intention to lay these people off.

From time to time we have had in the house considerable discussion about the question of a shelf of public works. I think someone asked the Minister of Public Works not long ago some question as to whether the present government has a shelf. I would suggest that if we are going to have in this country a shelf of needed public works which may be undertaken, any government, no matter what their political complexion might be, should require that they be given some advance notice by these large employers as to when there is going to be a period when such a shelf would be required. It is obvious that if from time to time we are going to undertake various public developments geared to the fluctuations of industrial activity, those things cannot suddenly be put into high gear overnight and that a certain planning period is required. I think that an approach along this line could have quite beneficial results in respect of the number of people who are going to be making applications for benefits under the act and in respect of ensuring that the level of the fund would be protected when employers took action that dumped large numbers of people into the list of the unemployed.

I think I have made it clear that I am not suggesting that I feel this is a question that must be settled before this legislation is passed. However, as I said earlier, I think this question as to what is going to happen to the fund as a result of the increased drain on it is one which the government should be prepared to answer; and I believe that the government should be prepared to give us some indication as to what are their intentions. Unless they do that, while we will naturally be glad of a move which will alleviate the distress and the worry in the minds of a good many of the workers of Canada at this particular juncture, nevertheless there will be some good cause for worry in our minds as to what the future of the unemployment insurance plan in Canada is going to be.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that the government apparently have at long last realized that there is a serious unemployment situation in this country and have found it desirable in this instance to bring in remedial legislation. The fact that the Minister of Labour earlier in this session indicated that he had no intention of doing so, that there was not time in which to do it, caused a great number of us in this group a great deal of concern for we realized that there definitely was an unfortunate situation wherein many individuals were going to be in need of financial assistance and were going to have it denied them unless some changes in the act were brought about.

I should like to compliment the Minister of Labour on his straightforward statement in bringing in this particular legislation. He showed that he has considerable interest in the welfare of the workers and I am sure he feels that this particular piece of legislation will do the job it is intended to do, although I am somewhat dubious on one or two points.

I should like to thank him for giving this group a draft copy of this legislation. I think that is a procedure which might well be followed by other departments, so that we would have a draft copy of a bill before we reach the second reading stage. We could then refer to the legislation and might have something more concrete to offer for consideration.

The hon. member who has just resumed his seat mentioned a very serious unemployment problem in my own province in connection with Kitimat. He suggested that there was a flagrant show of irresponsibility upon the part of management in this particular case. I listened to him closely because I wondered whether or not he was going to suggest the federal government or the government of British Columbia should take over the Kitimat project. Then, I wondered whether, if such were the case, he would expect either of these governments to keep these plants open for an indefinite time.

I think we in this house too often find ourselves—

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit me to point out that I was referring only to a construction program which had been undertaken by that firm and suddenly cancelled.

Mr. Hahn: That may be true; in this instance, I shall accept the hon. member's explanation. However, those of us who have been here for any length of time frequently have heard the members of the C.C.F. not only suggest but tell us pointblank that big business management, and sometimes small business for that matter, is not doing the job it should. Certainly they leave us wondering about what they would do. They never tell us what they are going to do. They leave us wondering whether or not they would socialize that particular industry.

I notice a great number of resolutions and bills on the order paper indicating certain changes in respect to all types of legislation. I have heard a great deal of talk about the socialization of industry of one kind or another, but I have yet to hear a single item mentioned which they suggest they would socialize or a particular plant mentioned which they would take over. It is simple enough to draft a resolution on that subject. It would be interesting to discover, for instance, whether or not our friends from Saskatchewan would be prepared to socialize the oil industry. If my hon. friends believe that is the answer to our labour problem, then let us have a resolution to that effect debated so that we could arrive at some concrete decision as to whether they are right or we are right. The hon. member for Coast-Capilano has indicated to us how management is prepared to assist in the solution of these problems, even to the extent of losing thousands of dollars in order to keep a plant open so the workers will have a home in which to live during the winter months. I refer to the situation in the Britannia mines, Mr. Chairman.

I indicated I was pleased that the minister had introduced this bill. I regret, however, that the government has found it necessary to introduce changes in the act because I deem that to be an admission of defeat for the present economic ideas which this government accepted from the former government. It is an indication that while the former Liberal government of this country had adopted this policy to do a particular thing, the adoption of the tight money policy to raise interest rates and so stop inflation did not bring about that result. Now, the government finds itself in the unfortunate position of having to deal with the unemployment situation. This indicates only one thing, namely that the economic system of this country has failed us miserably. We must, therefore, have a look at it.

The Social Credit members of this house frequently have requested the government to establish a committee to examine into the actions of the Bank of Canada in respect to the tight money policy. In this way we could establish the effect on our monetary control, upon our labour force and all the other factors which might be involved. When I first heard that this legislation was to be put before us, I wondered what had caused the government to change its mind. Certainly, the government had indicated it had no intention of introducing such legislation. I could not help but ask myself whether or not the change was induced by the fact that the Liberals, the C.C.F. and ourselves had talked so much about unemployment that the unemployment situation had finally deteriorated to the point where action was necessary.

Mr. Hahn: The minister says, that is right. I would say this to the minister and to other hon. members in the house, particularly our Conservative friends, that they are saying in effect that members of parliament should not mention unfortunate problems in this house because those problems might become worse. I would say, sir, whether or not we spoke about this problem would make no difference. I would say that the tight money policy of the Liberals resulted in only one thing, namely that the Conservatives inherited it and, of course, having inherited it they want now to accept responsibility only for the good things and take none of the blame for the bad things.

May I suggest to you, sir, that the pretence there was little unemployment in this country would reflect no credit on any legislator in this house. We are fully aware of the conditions and this ostrich-like attitude of failing to recognize the problem would benefit no one. We know there is a problem. We are told there is a problem. We receive communications from our constituents indicating they are unemployed and asking what we can do to assist them. We read editorials in the newspapers indicating that there is a grave unemployment problem in this country, and yet we are told we should ignore it. We are told we are spreaders of gloom if we mention the question in the house, which is the logical place to raise this question, because it is through that means something might be done about it.

I have a clipping from the Vancouver Province of November 20 which interests me very much because the Minister of Justice was in British Columbia at that time discussing the very important question of the unemployment that might occur at Britannia mines unless this government took some action to forestall it. I am sure that all hon. members, as well as the members from British Columbia, are happy to see the mine in operation, despite the fact there was some talk about November 19 of closing it. However, in this article the Minister of Justice blamed the unemployment problem on the former Liberal government's tight money policy. The article says the Conservatives have relaxed the tight money as the first step in coping with the unemployment situation. Well, I do not know how long it takes parliament to feel the effects of a change. Certainly I think we all recognize that if inflation was stopped by the tight money policy, it has taken six or eight months to feel the effect of that particular change.

Our Conservative friends tell us that inflation is stopped. The Minister of Finance indicated just the other day that this is so. But it has taken from the first day when Walter Harris, former minister of finance, brought in the tight money policy up to now —a period of well over 1½ years—to apparently stop inflation, if it is stopped, and I doubt that very much. Now, in a matter of weeks, we are told that because the tight money policy has become loose unemployment is stopped overnight. How ridiculous can we get? The article goes on to say, in quoting Mr. Fulton's remarks:

> The prophecies of doom indulged in by our opponents are grossly exaggerated and are not in the best interests of this nation.

"Spreaders of gloom" the Prime Minister called us. "Spreaders of doom" we are now termed by the Minister of Justice. Is a man a spreader of doom if he sees the unemployment situation is worse now than it was at the same time last year? Is he a spreader of doom if he can point to statistics to prove that very point? Certainly not. Is the same man a spreader of gloom, or for that matter a spreader of doom, if he is advised by his constituents that there are certain men and women who are having to go on relief in his constituency because there is no unemployment insurance available to them and because they cannot get jobs? Are these same individuals spreaders of gloom or of doom if they find there are more individuals unemployed during one week than there are in the next? I would say to the government, Mr. Chairman, through you, that it is our responsibility to draw these things to the attention of the government if that government—as is apparently the case—has not realized that we have in fact a serious unemployment situation. I say this because we are told it is not serious and that we are spreading gloom. If the government is not aware of these circumstances and we do become aware of them, is it not our responsibility to let the government know where it has failed and to try to suggest some remedy?

This may be gloomy to the Conservatives, but we in the Social Credit group do see a way out. We believe in making financially possible that which is physically possible, and there is a lot of work to be done in this regard. We just need to use our imaginations and our brains in the operation of our financial institutions so that we can make these things financially possible.

Hon. members will undoubtedly remember that not too many weeks ago I spoke during the throne speech debate with respect to this very same question. At that time I drew to the attention of the house a particular clipping from the British Columbian in which it was indicated that there were some 4,500 new jobs created but that the jobless list was high. It went on to point out that there were 4,500 men and 1,300 women or a total of 5,800 persons unemployed and registered with the New Westminster unemployment commission office alone.

May I say that this figure, compared with 1956, was just about double. The same applies for 1954. However, I have another clipping, a more recent one, from the Vancouver Province of November 20. Hon. members will recall that I quoted just a few moments ago the words of the hon. Minister of Justice to the effect that we were spreaders of doom, because we were grossly exaggerating the conditions. Well now let me read to you what this article has to say:

> Statistics for last Friday showed 24,553 persons registered under the Vancouver unemployment commission and 6,370 under the New Westminster branch.

Now, am I a spreader of gloom when I say that on the very day the Minister of Justice was speaking to a group of students at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver and telling them we were spreaders of doom or spreaders of gloom, the unemployment figures in my own city had jumped by 500 in that very short while?

Certainly we must recognize that we do have a serious problem and the sooner we do so, the better. That is why I am happy to see that the minister has taken upon himself the responsibility of bringing in this particular bill to make it possible for some of these people to gain unemployment insurance since this government does not have a better answer, which would of course mean giving them jobs. In the alternative it would mean making it possible for industry to employ them.

Now this is just one instance but there are many more. I have clippings here from three places, including the Montreal Gazette. These articles become more common as conditions get worse. One headline reads:

> Unemployed father of two arraigned in $32 hold-up.

A headline in the Vancouver Province of November 20 reads:

> Man says he joined hold-up to get food for wife, child.

And yet another headline:

> Door-breaking job-seeker draws three-year prison term.

Now, I am not saying that I accept statements to the effect that "Well, I broke into a place because I found myself in dire straits with no money to buy food for my family or myself". No, that is not the answer and those may not be true statements. But I do know, as one who has read the newspapers in my district for years, that this sort of thing becomes prevalent whenever the unemployment situation gets serious. Little stores are held up, the garage man on the corner has a gun stuck in his ribs and he is told to hand over the cash. These things are not so apparent or so frequent in good times when we have a period of full employment. Not at all.

This matter was drawn to the attention of the former minister, not just the fact of unemployment alone but the problems which were going to result from the policies carried out by the former government. That government had pretty well lost the lumber markets for my province. We drew to its attention the various changes which were needed to make it possible to sell more lumber, but the members of that government were prone to laughing and scoffing it off and to saying, "Well, we just didn't know the answers". It was not prepared to bring the dollar down to its dollar value; it was not prepared to accept sterling, whether convertible or block, in exchange for goods and finally develop its use in a foreign land which might use that particular kind of currency.

It was not prepared to take this particular problem sufficiently into consideration or to make the study that was warranted at that time. The continuance of these financial policies will result in the continuation of the problems of unemployment we face today; they will be repeated year in and year out. The fiscal policies which we have adopted, and which are being followed today, are outmoded as we have said time and again in this group. Those fiscal policies have proven false. Orthodox Liberals may say they are right. The Conservatives may say they are wrong. Yet there is not an individual in those groups, either among Liberals or Conservatives, who could point out the difference between the two policies which are accepted by those parties.

We, the unorthodox group, say it is time parliament had control of this money, and that it should not be left in the hands of a few individuals to do with it as they saw fit. The C.C.F. party say: let us socialize oil wells, gas wells, forests, dams, everything but what is mine. This will create more jobs without overproduction. How socializing anything would create more jobs, I do not know, but possibly some day they will explain. What has brought about the present difficulties? Several factors have contributed. There is the loss of the apple market in British Columbia, a situation which is well-established today, when Lebanon is supplying Great Britain, a market we supplied in full in earlier days. I think it is up to us to discover causes and effects and, having discovered the cause of unemployment, it is up to us to try to cure it.

Here is another item from this same newspaper of November 20. One could make speeches about what one sees in newspapers in a single day. And I have chosen one day on purpose to indicate how all these things, the items on the financial pages, the front page stories of murder and robbery and everything else, may be related. Here we read:

That is from the Vancouver Province of November 20. And here is another item: "Italy enters Canadian cloth market". We must find the answer to these problems. Unemployment insurance is not the answer to how we are going to keep people at work.

I was delighted to find the minister taking a positive attitude to at least one phase of this problem. His words, as I recall them, were along these lines, that the government's policy was "a means of putting purchasing power into the hands of the people." That is positive action and I would compliment him upon it.

Now the answer to this unemployment problem which has been suggested by hon. members opposite might be along lines of taking offence at the way in which big business is operating. I would commend to the attention of these hon. members another article in the same paper entitled: "In Kitimat they battle for prosperity". The article describes how the people there have endorsed a new by-law approving a new hospital whose construction will employ 250 men, and goes on to say how the workers are studying means of cutting down "moonlighting" and giving job preference to women whose husbands are unemployed. Rents and instalment payments are being deferred, and provincial and federal governments may be asked to take up the building slack by the construction of new public buildings and replacement of temporary structures.

We can understand why some men have to have two jobs. The cost of living today is so high that it is easily understandable, I am sure. These same individuals on the other side, frequently blame big industrial developments for their troubles. They take objection to these big interests going ahead and doing something for the nation to assist in a solution of the unemployment problem—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Hahn: Oh yes, they do. But their group in Saskatchewan is not prepared to socialize some of these very industries or, I suggest, they would have socialized the oil wells long ago.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, certain recommendations have been made by the Canadian Labour Congress with respect to modifications of the Unemployment Insurance Act. These suggestions were included in the most recent issue of the Canadian Labour Magazine for November, 1957. I am pleased to see that the minister has incorporated some of these ideas into his new bill.

In conclusion may I just say that this legislation, despite what the minister said earlier this session, despite the fact that the Prime Minister said we were spreaders of gloom and that there was no serious unemployment, despite the fact that the Minister of Justice said we were spreaders of doom and that there was no serious unemployment, is an admission by this government that it has no answer to the problem of keeping the people of this country at work.

I know we will be told that the new government has not been given a chance to develop its plans. But if they are to take credit for what the tight money policy has achieved they must accept the blame for what it failed to achieve, and if it does not keep the people employed they must accept full responsibility for that as well. The economic system we have today offers no solution to our problem. I say that in present circumstances this legislation is a "must", and that in all probability it will need to be improved. I wish to compliment the minister again for having brought it in, and say that it is my intention to support it.

Mr. Cauchon: Mr. Chairman, by now the hon. Minister of Labour must be well aware of the unemployment situation as revealed by the dominion bureau of statistics. It has been reported both in the press and in this house.

As my riding is primarily industrial, I too feel it my duty to draw his attention to the rapid increase in the numbers of unemployed. For instance, in the Montreal area alone the increase is 14,000, according to figures released from the Montreal unemployment insurance commission to the Montreal Star, of November 22. In the country at large, as reported by the hon. Minister of Labour on November 21, 1957, there were 188,362 unemployed last year, as at November 8, 1956. As of November 7, 1957 the number stands at 327,388.

What has caused this sharp decline in employment and how does the hon. minister explain it? I refer to Hansard of October 16 this year. Here, in reply to a question put by the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the minister says, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, we are aware that there will be seasonal unemployment this winter. We have stepped up our winter program to take care of winter unemployment. We have also advised our national employment service offices to step up their tempo in obtaining jobs for people as soon as they become unemployed. I might say also, on behalf of the government, that we have curtailed for the balance of the year the influx of immigrants which swelled our total labour population. In addition we have channelled $150 million into our economy for the construction of houses. These are the things the government has done so far in order to cope with unemployment this winter.

How can the rise in unemployment be attributed to the usual seasonal decline? It has doubled within the year. Furthermore the minister assured us that the national employment bureau has been requested to find work for these men and women. I do not understand this, sir. Does the bureau now await the minister's order before it does the task it was set up to do? If jobs had been available surely the bureau could have filled them among the registered unemployed.

As far as the $150 million for the construction of houses is concerned, I would like to read what the president of l'Association des détaillants de bois du Quebec has to say about that. I quote:

(Translation):

> Mr. Paul A. Durivage, of Montreal, will preside over this two day congress that will deal with several matters pertaining to the building industry. Ways and means will be sought to spur construction. For some months lumber dealers have been particularly concerned over the drastic slump in house building and delegates to the congress are planning representations to the federal government asking for other funds in addition to the $150,000,000 already made available.

(Text):

Moreover, certainly none of those presently unemployed will be able to benefit from that if they had been planning to build. The applicant for such loans must be able to show an increase. Here and there, however, the construction workers may temporarily benefit.

Now, coming back to the cause of this problem of increasing unemployment I contend that uncertainty and fear resulting from the Mont Tremblant conference are powerful factors. Industry became uneasy, afraid of the free trade policy proposed, and started to reduce capital expansion. For example, the Aluminum Company of Canada has halted construction on two smelters at Kitimat with the subsequent lay-off of 1,000 men. I quote from an article which appeared in the Gazette on November 1 which says:

> Aluminium Limited does not see much point in making a capital investment of $30 million creating productive capacity for which there will be no demand.

Slowdowns in the manufacturing of electrical appliances and clothing have also contributed to the increase in the numbers without work as have those in the Canadian textile industry. Not only is management becoming reluctant to take a chance on expansion it is also reducing stocks. But I venture to say that unemployment would not be so severe now if business and industry had the same sense of security that was given them by the Liberal administration. On several occasions since I have been in the house I spoke on the subject of employment especially on the employment of older workers. In my opinion there are three categories of unemployed. First, there are those who are out of work because of lay-offs. Second, there are those who are out of work because of age, that is those who are age 40 and over. Third, there are those forced to retire at the age of 65.

On April 17, 1951 I outlined in this house measures that I believed would help prevent discrimination in employment because of age. The present Minister of Labour will probably then ask, "Why was nothing done by the previous administration?" In reply to that question I would point out that it did seek the co-operation of management through its film "Date of Birth" but prejudice and pension schemes are not changed nor overcome easily. Today, against the background of ever-increasing unemployment, the matter is even more urgent. As I pointed out in January 1957, "It is the workers over 40 who suffer most when production methods change". It is this group which also suffers most during periods of unemployment but workers of all ages want security of employment.

According to a survey conducted by the institute of public opinion and reported in La Presse on November 20 this year, 87 per cent of those questioned preferred steady work to increased wages. That demand has resulted in some cases in what is known as the guaranteed annual wage. Together with the demand for steady work is the demand for opportunity to work. Again I say that this latter is more often denied to the man of 40 or older. Those aged 65 have no chance of competing in the labour market. In this connection I was glad to see that in its policy declarations and resolutions for 1957-58 the Canadian Chamber of Commerce referring to employment of older workers had this to say:

> Population forecasts indicate that the proportion of older persons will be increasing. The problem of the older worker must be faced if we are constantly to raise our national product, not place an unfair burden on the employed population, and enable those older competent people who wish to do so to remain in productive and useful employment.

> Studies have indicated that the older worker if properly placed can compare favourably in performance with other workers and can make a considerable contribution to the production of the country. Furthermore, the older worker group represents a reservoir of skill and experience that the country can ill afford to waste. The addition of older workers to our labour force would enlarge our productive capacity.
> The chamber is of the view that Canadian employers should give full consideration to the desirability of employing older workers in suitable employment to the fullest extent practicable.

And notice especially its recommendation:

> The chamber urges that Canadian employers recognize the skill and experience of older workers and give consideration to the suitable employment of this group to the fullest extent practicable.

Surely if the problem is now recognized by an influential national body such as the Canadian chamber of commerce it is time for government to take steps to solve it. Much information regarding this class of workers, their capacities and abilities can be obtained from a book called "The Golden Years" by Senator Desmond of New York State. The state of Massachusetts with its anti-discrimination board has almost abolished discrimination in employment practice. What that state has done, Canada can do.

I maintain that the government at this session should set up a committee to study the causes of the increase in unemployment, ways of checking unemployment and ways of preventing discrimination against both those aged 40-plus and those now automatically retired at age 65 without regard to their skills, health or efficiency. It is only after a study of these questions and the establishment of a vested pension plan such as I outlined in January 1957 that we shall be able to assure our older workers of employment and avert unemployment in the future.

(Translation):

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Chairman, I would like first of all, to congratulate the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) on his proposed amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act. The increased benefit period will unquestionably prove most helpful to many unemployed workers in Canada, and in the constituency of Beauce in particular.

Nevertheless, I am sorry to note that, while the bill which will follow upon this resolution is bound to relieve unemployment, large numbers of unemployed will not benefit from this legislation. Now it so happens that in my constituency at least, they are the very ones who most need help. I shall now attempt to prove this statement with facts and figures.

For the last few weeks, in my visits to my constituency, I have personally studied the situation of the workers and have had others do likewise, and I have thus obtained some valuable information. Of course, I have had a pretty good knowledge of the situation, acquired over the last few years because on several occasions since I have been a member of this house, I have explained the difficulties facing the workers of my constituency and more particularly bushworkers and small farmers.

According to figures provided by the employment office at St. Georges, in mid-November 1956, there were 796 unemployed looking for jobs. Those figures apply to the constituency of Beauce and to the workers in commerce and industry. This year, for the same period, 1,642 people were in the same situation. In other words this year twice as many unemployed are looking for work as there were last year. I must admit that, as far as that category of workers is concerned, the present resolution providing for an increase in the number of weeks during which benefits may be paid, will be most helpful. Most of these workers have accumulated enough contributions over the last year or two to be entitled to normal and supplementary benefits and this payment will certainly be greeted with a great deal of satisfaction by the workers themselves and their families.

However, there remains the case of the bushworkers. There are two types of bushworkers, those whose chief occupation is employment in the bush, and then farmers and farmers' sons whose main occupation is farming but who, every year, go to work in the lumber camps to supplement farm income. Now that extra income is an extremely important item, and has been very much so over the past two years since net farm revenue has fallen off considerably, in line with rising costs of production. Just take, for instance, the constant increase in the price of fertilizers, feed and farm implements. Workers in this latter group usually received seasonal benefits because of the contributions they had accumulated in the fall when they were working in the bush. This year, however, they could not find jobs in the bush, they could not accumulate the required contributions. Therefore, they will not qualify for supplementary benefits and the improvements brought by the amendment to the act will not help them in any way.

Now then, what will happen to the first group of these workers, those whose main and generally sole occupation is working in the bush? I should say at this point that the figures which I am going to quote are approximate ones which I have collected in the course of my personal investigation. They reveal a rather serious situation and I would be very glad indeed if official figures showed them to be wrong.

There are about 6,000 workers in this group, approximately half of them usually working in the United States, the other half working either in Quebec or in Ontario. Of the 3,000 working in the United States there were 2,500 at work in October 1956 and only 225 at work in October 1957. This means that, in the constituency of Beauce, 2,275 bushworkers who usually work in the United States are at the present time unemployed. And, what is more tragic still, as it has not yet been found possible to conclude an agreement on the exchange of benefits between Canada and the states of Maine and New Hampshire, those 2,275 bushworkers have not accumulated any contributions because they had practically no work in the summer and will therefore receive neither regular nor supplementary benefits. Consequently, the excellent measure which this resolution leads us to expect will do nothing to brighten up their dark situation.

I should like to add incidentally that in the constituencies bordering on the state of Maine, the constituencies of Beauce, Dorchester and the others, there are about 18,000 Canadian bushworkers who generally work in the United States and who, for the reason mentioned a few minutes ago, can never take advantage of the Canadian Unemployment Insurance Act. I have in the past made representations to the Canadian department of labour requesting some agreement with the state of Maine in particular, and I know that the government of that state refuses to consider the matter.

The minister of labour of the previous government had looked into the matter. The present minister also takes an interest in the matter and I congratulate him for it. I therefore take this opportunity to ask him to keep trying to get the labour department of the state of Maine to change its policy. It would possibly be a good idea to explain to the authorities there that, unless there is a change, they will end up by being short of Canadian bushworkers. In fact the number of such workers going to the United States—outside of unemployment periods—has been dwindling at the rate of about 500 a year. If in a year or two there was a sudden increase of opportunities for employment in the bush, —which is quite possible, and I do hope it happens soon,—Maine will certainly be out on a limb, as far as Canadian bushworkers are concerned.

Now let us look at the situation of the 3,000 bushworkers of Beauce who usually work here in Canada. In October, 1956 there were approximately 2,500 at work, as against 2,000 only in October, 1957. In this group then, last October, we noted a decrease of 500, in other words an increase of 500 in the number of unemployed.

Now then, for the past few weeks woodcutting has stopped in several large lumber camps. The camps have closed down and some companies which usually end their operations by early January or soon after will suspend those operations within eight or ten days. It means that, if we add the number of unemployed workers of each of the two groups mentioned, we have, at the present time, approximately 3,400 unemployed and that there will be between 4,200 and 4,500 of them by the 10th or the 15th of December, out of a total force of 6,000 bushworkers. And here again, as the great majority of them worked in Canada this summer and became unemployed recently or some time ago, they will not qualify for the regular or for the supplementary benefits since woodcutting operations were very much reduced this year and the number of available workers much greater. As a consequence, operations were of much smaller duration and these people could not have a sufficient number of stamps affixed in their books to make them eligible for the benefits.

It is therefore, I believe, a conservative estimate to say that if the present regulations under the act remain in force there will be, on January 1st, in the constituency of Beauce, from 3,800 to 4,000 unemployed bushworkers who will not receive any unemployment insurance benefit and will not be helped by the proposed amendments to the act. How could the act be amended so as to give assistance to this large number of unemployed who do not qualify for benefits because they have not been able to accumulate the necessary contributions? I venture to suggest that it could be achieved by reducing the number of required contributions. As of now, the act requires 15 weekly contributions. But if that number were reduced to 10 or even 8, I believe that about 40 per cent of the 4,000 unassisted unemployed could obtain their benefits and would particularly be able to take advantage of the generous amendments the government is now bringing in by increasing the supplementary benefit period. This is, I know, an extraordinary change; it should of course be only temporary, but drastic situations call for drastic remedies.

And yet, there will remain the group of those who went across the border—about 2,500 of them—who will find it quite impossible to take advantage of the unemployment insurance act, even when amended as indicated by the government, and it would be so even if an amendment included my suggestion of cutting by half the number of contributions required to qualify for the benefits.

That group represents about 2,500 unemployed. Is it not a tragic situation? I confess to some reluctance in submitting a constructive suggestion in the case of this latter group. One way out would be to call for the enforcement of the Unemployment Assistance Act which authorizes the federal government to pay 50 per cent of the relief granted by the provinces to the unemployed and needy while the other half would be paid by the provinces themselves. This, however, brings back the sad memory of direct relief and the meagre allowance paid to idle human beings who could work and wished to do so. In my opinion, such a legislation should be but a last resort. Moreover, I understand that the province of Quebec has rejected that proposal and has refused to come to an understanding with the central government on that matter.

On the whole, would it not be preferable for the government to consider the possibility of undertaking certain projects, whose importance is shown by the persistence with which people in Canada have called for them for many years in certain areas, as, for example, the construction of retaining walls along the Chaudiere river in some parishes and villages of the county of Beauce? I know that in normal times, such projects should be carried out in accordance with the Water Conservation Assistance Act. However, we are in an unusual situation as far as employment is concerned and, for that very reason, the central government could carry out these works without encroaching upon the autonomy of the province of Quebec since they have recognized their responsibility in the matter of unemployment when they established unemployment insurance. Similarly, the government could also speed up the development of certain projects whose necessity they seem to have recognized since they are making plans for their implementation. Among these, I would mention the construction of a government building at St. Georges de Beauce. Such works, and many others as well, would stimulate the economy of the whole area and would greatly reduce unemployment.

I wish to be fair, however, and to recognize that the government is not unconcerned over the situation which now exists all over the country. The resolution dealing with a supplementary expenditure of $150 million for housing, which is now on the order paper, is ample proof of this and I warmly congratulate the government about this initiative. However, I greatly fear that this excellent piece of legislation will bring no improvement to the particular situation existing at the present time in the county of Beauce, a situation which will surely worsen within a few months.

I have tried to explain very simply that situation as I see it and to offer my humble suggestions for its solution. I have the right to expect that the government, through its experts and even through the Minister of Labour, will be kind enough to give it their serious consideration. If they feel that my suggestions are impractical, I shall be glad and anxious, together with the population of Beauce county, to hear about better solutions.

(Text):

Mr. Christian: We are today giving consideration to resolution No. 13 which reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase the length of seasonal benefit periods; to increase the number of benefit payments for which claimants may qualify during those periods;—

That is basically what is being asked for under the resolution. It would seem that the intention of this resolution is to liberalize the periods and also the payments. I was a little bit concerned with regard to this particular resolution when I heard that fishermen are able to qualify under the act whereas, as I understand it, agricultural workers are still in the category of an excepted employment. In my own Okanagan Boundary area agriculture is our main industry. In that area are a great many workers who are engaged in agricultural work and pursuits. It would seem to me that it is only fair and reasonable that those agricultural workers be included under the act. Later on I should like the Minister of Labour to tell the house whether consideration was given to the matter of including agricultural workers under this scheme; and if not, why not? The very fact that fishermen are included and other occupations, such as agricultural workers, are not included I think is unfair and this act should be extended as soon as possible to cover other occupations.

However, there is one good feature of this proposal and that is there will be an additional sum of $13 million which will help to increase the purchasing power and the extent of the coverage will be increased by about 36,000 persons. However, I do feel that in so far as these amendments are concerned they are actually only in the nature of emergency legislation. They are only a palliative and not a remedy; that is one particular point I wish to mention. This is not a solution of the basic unemployment problem which we have in our country.

You are no doubt aware that in our country today there are two destroyers of progress: One is unemployment and the other is a lack of purchasing power. In my own Okanagan Boundary constituency we have a number of industries such as ranching, lumbering, base metal industries and fruitgrowing. Those persons who are engaged in those industries are having an exceedingly difficult time today. In my constituency unemployment has doubled and the situation is getting worse all the time.

In so far as British Columbia is concerned, information available from reports of local offices of the unemployment insurance commission pertains to the Pacific region, which comprises the Yukon Territory and all but the northeastern portion of the province, and as at September 19, 1957, the number of persons registered for employment at local offices in the Pacific region was 29,837. The figure for the comparable date, September 20, 1956, was 15,619. I would not doubt but that the figure has substantially increased since September 19, 1957. It is well known throughout this country that unemployed people congregate in British Columbia during the winter months and more particularly on the Pacific coast.

It is necessary that action be taken to combat this serious unemployment problem. I have not as yet received from the government any satisfactory answers to questions which I have asked. For example, under date of November 13, I put the following questions on the order paper:

What steps have been taken by the government since June 10th, 1957, to help the base metal mining industry in British Columbia and in particular the base metal mining industry in the Okanagan Boundary area?

What steps have been taken by the government since June 10th, 1957, to help the lumbering industry in the province of British Columbia, and especially the small loggers who face adverse market conditions?

I should like to point out to the committee that since November 13 I have asked other questions pertaining to various matters about which we are concerned, and I have received answers to those questions. However, I have received no answer to this particular problem as yet, and it does relate to the matter of unemployment. I am aware that this government did set up the sum of $150 million to help house construction, but it seems to me that British Columbia is being sadly neglected by this government. Apart from the matter of housing, I should like the government to tell us what has been done in so far as the construction of capital projects is concerned in British Columbia. I am not aware of any at the present time, except perhaps the expenditure of a certain amount of money in regard to housing.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Christian: Mr. Chairman, prior to the recess I was speaking on the Unemployment Insurance Act and unemployment generally. To me it is hard to realize that we in Canada have the unemployment situation which we do have, being aware as we are of Canada's rich heritage and its population of only about 16 million people. Yet we have a national debt of about $11 billion and our debt charges annually amount to about $500 million. This situation is indeed difficult to understand and it appears to me that it is a sad commentary on the performance of the previous and the past governments of this country.

I note at page 1360 of Hansard for November 21, 1957, the hon. member for Levis asked the Minister of Public Works this question:

> Can he tell the house whether it is the intention of the government to launch now a special program of public works across Canada to alleviate the very serious unemployment situation?

In reply the hon. Minister of Public Works said:

> Well, I have no intention of launching an overall program of public works across Canada—

I think it is a most unfortunate state of affairs if that is the present policy of the Conservative government. It seems to me that this is indeed a defeatist attitude. What I am particularly concerned about is what the government plans to do to bring about a public works program across Canada and, in particular, to help the province of British Columbia. As I have said previously, apart from the matter of housing, I am not aware of any large capital project under construction in British Columbia at the present time. In my own constituency in the Okanagan Boundary area there is great difficulty in selling lumber at a reasonable price and the small holders are having great difficulty, especially with respect to selling their fruit. As a matter of fact this year I have noticed many many tons of fruit have been dumped in various dumping grounds throughout the Okanagan Boundary area.

I am interested to know if when the various provincial premiers were here this week this matter was given consideration by them particularly with respect to a public works program for Canada. So far I have heard nothing whatsoever in this connection.

Now the Unemployment Insurance Act is no solution to the problem which is facing us in this country; it will certainly not give work to the people of Canada and unless something is done in this connection it will be the people of Canada who will be the sufferers.

I would like now to deal with that other destroyer of progress; I mentioned unemployment as one, and the second I consider to be the lack of sufficient purchasing power in the hands of the Canadian people. I say that if unemployment and the lack of purchasing power continues it could wreck the Conservative party. It could also be a sad blow to the welfare of our people. I am not thinking of the Conservative party, I am thinking of the Canadian people as a whole. I think there is one very important economic truth which we should remember which is that the sole purpose of production is consumption. This was said by the famous economist Adam Smith many many years ago and his statement is as true today in our country.

As we know production is no problem whatsoever; we have no problem in that regard in Canada at all, but the real problem faced by all parties in this country in years past and today is the problem of bringing about proper distribution of goods and services among the people; this is of course the problem of consumption. I know of nothing that is being done today to try to solve that particular problem.

I submit that our monetary system is old fashioned, it is archaic. As a matter of fact it is full of moth-holes and is in need of a new cloak. I would like to read a few remarks quoted in a newspaper entitled The Fundy Fisherman published at Black's Harbour, Charlotte county, New Brunswick. This particular issue was published on Wednesday, October 9, 1957, and the heading of the article is as follows:

> Royal commission on finances needed. High interest, tight money condemned.

Another heading reads:

> Bank of Canada methods challenged as unsuited to needs of present day.

The article reads as follows:

> Premier Hugh John Flemming of New Brunswick has thrown his influence strongly behind the rising tide of progress against the antiquated policies of the Bank of Canada. The premier, in a strongly worded speech before the Atlantic provinces' economic council called for a royal commission inquiry into the application of the Bank of Canada policies to the Canadian economy of the present day.

Now, Premier Flemming is actually a Conservative premier in the province of New Brunswick and personally I think he would be a welcome addition to the present Conservative party in this house. At least he would introduce into its ranks some flexible and constructive thought. The article goes on to say:

The New Brunswick leader's statement came at a time when evidence mounted daily to show the failure of the high interest, tight money to provide Canadians with increased production at a steady cost of living.

Further in the article it says:

In the United States, the rather odd monetary and economic situation we appear to be in, has resulted in the United States senate finance committee holding hearings on "the financial condition of the United States". These hearings began on June 18 and continued in high gear during July and August. The whole banking and financial structure of the United States is being subjected to a most careful and searching scrutiny.

I think that something similar should be under way in Canada. After all, our monetary system has not been given a really careful examination since the royal commission on banking and currency was appointed in 1933—almost a quarter of a century ago. The result of this royal commission was, of course, the setting up of the Bank of Canada.

Further on in the article Premier Flemming says this:

Is our present monetary and financial structure really suited to the needs of the Canadian economy in the mid-twentieth century? Is it too centralized? Can it not be made more flexible so as to meet, to some degree, the needs of particular regions? I think that these matters should be the subject of enquiry by a royal commission. We, in this region, are determined that the future shall be better than the past—that is the reason that we, the premiers of the Atlantic provinces, meet in conference here today. This is the purpose for which APEC exists. But all our efforts could be in vain if we are constantly faced with a monetary policy which is completely unsuited to our regional needs.

Now if they had this conference in the United States I submit that it is only reasonable that a similar inquiry should take place in our country. As I said in the first speech which I made in this house, it is high time that we had an independent group of men appointed to study all aspects of our financial system and to bring about a substantial improvement thereof for the benefit of the Canadian people as a whole. The Social Credit group, in making the amendment to the throne speech, recognized that it was time we had a scientific modern policy to bring an end to the tight money policy and to reduce the rise in cost of living.

Mr. Sinclair: I would like to start, Mr. Chairman, by saying a word of compliment to the minister for the very frank and concise statement he gave on this measure which is so important at this time. He is new to his job and his job is a difficult one. I think before this winter is over it will probably be the most difficult one in the cabinet of Canada. Nevertheless I think those of us on this side of the house, knowing the problems as we do, do congratulate the minister on the way he has faced up to and tried to give us the facts without evasion. I think his conduct might well be copied by one or two of his colleagues over there who have not been as frank in giving us the facts.

I am very glad of this chance to speak on this question of unemployment. I think that to many Canadians today this debate on unemployment is of much more immediate importance than the important debate on external affairs which took place yesterday. The minister gave a brief review of the conditions which necessitated the introduction of this emergency legislation and he also sketched in some of the things which this government had done in an attempt to solve the present serious unemployment conditions in this country.

Well, the Minister of Justice this afternoon, in another debate, said the proof of the pudding was in the eating, and I think perhaps the success of these measures mentioned by the minister can best be judged by their results. The results, as shown by the figures produced by the minister himself in recent weeks, are that unemployment in Canada is, on the whole, twice what it was this time last year, and the very fact that we are having to take special action today to hurry this legislation through, extending unemployment insurance benefits over a six-month period in the year, is also an indication of at least the appreciation of the Minister of Labour that this is an emergency. And all the brave words used by the Minister of Finance on the T.V. last night or in Toronto last week will not convince the Canadian people, especially the 327,000 registered unemployed as of November 7, that there is not an emergency in this country.

The fact that this legislation is going to extend what were seasonal benefits to cover half the working year is another striking example of the fact that we have a real problem in Canada today and the fact, too, that this legislation will extend to people who normally would have been covered by the present act but who have exhausted their benefits is further evidence.

I will not comment on the actions taken by the government to relieve unemployment, as listed by the minister, but I want to speak with special feeling about one action which the Conservative government has taken which, I am sure, is going to bring very serious consequences in my own province of British Columbia in particular as far as employment is concerned, and across Canada to a lesser degree. I say "to a lesser degree" because we in British Columbia are especially vulnerable in this field. When conditions are good in Canada they are very good in British Columbia; when things have been bad in Canada they have been very bad in British Columbia. We have greater swings in the economy, mainly because we are still, principally, producers of primary products. Today, in British Columbia, I see from studying the record, that we have a higher ratio of unemployment to population than any other province in Canada.

The government action I refer to is the announcement of the Prime Minister at a press conference at an airfield during the summer that he intended to try to divert 15 per cent of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom, a total volume of $625 million a year. We British Columbians find the biggest market for our three principal products the production of which is the chief source of employment in our province—in this American market, namely, our fish, our base metals and our lumber. I list them in growing order of importance, but in putting fish first I do so because it is the thing which is closest to my heart. We have been under considerable pressure, as far as our markets in the United States are concerned in recent years because of the cry of American protectionists groups to stop the flow of these products from our forests, seas and mountains into the United States.

I say that the action of the Canadian government in announcing that they intend to take $625 million worth of trade away from the United States has strengthened the hand of every protectionist in the United States who is clamouring for high tariffs against Canadian products.

I should like to deal briefly with each of the three main industries which, I contend, are likely to be adversely affected. First with regard to fisheries. We Canadians are blessed with tremendous fisheries, fisheries far greater than our population can make use of, and so we must look for foreign markets, and for foreign markets near at hand. Fish is not like wheat; it is not very storable, but highly perishable and the closest markets are best. Over one-half of our fish products today is sold for consumption and use in the United States.

In the last five years the New England senators and congressmen have maintained an important lobby to raise tariffs and bring in quotas against Canadian fish, and twice they have succeeded in having the tariff commission of the United States bring forward recommendations recommending tariffs which would have a most detrimental effect on the Canadian fishing industry. But we have good friends in the United States who value Canadian trade, and we have a good friend in President Eisenhower, because twice President Eisenhower has himself vetoed the recommendations of this tariff commission inspired by this protectionist lobby from the New England states. I say that President Eisenhower is going to have a more difficult time this spring in resisting the pressure for these tariffs from these New England senators, who can now say: "why should we worry about Canada, since Canada is devoted to taking $600 million of trade away from our markets."

An even more difficult situation prevails as far as our base metals are concerned. Canadian production in this field is far greater than a nation with a population of 16 million people can ever absorb. And, once again, the biggest and best market for base metal products is in the United States and, again, because prices have been sinking we have encountered a very powerful lobby mounted in Washington by the senators from the mining states of the west and by the miners union in the United States maintaining in senate representations last August that there should be introduced, not just tariffs but punitive tariffs on an extraordinary scale against the importation of our zinc and lead, a scale of tariffs increasing from one cent to two cents, three cents and four cents a pound on zinc and lead as they fall in price. Normally ad valorem tariffs increase, of course, as the price goes up but these tariffs will increase as the price goes down.

The whole purpose of these tariff recommendations was not to restrict the entry of Canadian zinc and lead but to block it completely. These hearings, which had been held over, are to resume this December. Earlier this week the Canadian mining association attended hearings in Washington to press the case of the Canadian mining industry, explaining the extent of its dependence on the American market and how, if these tariffs were brought in, at least one-third of our Canadian base metal mines would close immediately and the others be forced on to part-time production. There again is an example of how the action taken by this government could have a dreadful effect on the industry of my province and, for that matter, on the base metal industry across Canada.

There is a third great industry in British Columbia based on our great timber production. Still in our province over 50 per cent of the payroll comes from our forests and here again the best market over the years for this tremendous production has been the United States, after which comes the Canadian market, and thirdly, and a long way behind, the British market. Once again we find these protectionist groups in the United States clamouring for tariffs against British Columbian lumber and, I expect, against maritime lumber, too. They have had a fair measure of success as far as plywoods and hardboards are concerned. Because of that, in my riding, in the riding of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and in the riding of the hon. member for New Westminster, timber companies are closed or working with greatly reduced staffs with little opportunity for increased markets in the future. And once again those who are clamouring in the United States for still greater protection, as they call it—still greater exclusion really of our natural products are going to be greatly strengthened in their arguments in the senate and before the tariff commission. Once again they can say: "why should we worry about this Canadian government when as government policy they are trying to take $600 million worth of natural trade from us and divert it to the United Kingdom?"

The minister mentioned the impact of $150 million made available under national housing. That is a good step forward because housing probably does provide more labour per dollar spent than any other industry. The figures, however, show that in British Columbia there has been remarkably little advantage taken of those loans. Our province of British Columbia has generally led the nation in housing construction but the most recent figures on the distribution of that money show that while Ontario had taken $49 million, British Columbia had taken less than $3 million. That is about one-sixteenth of the amount, about one-quarter of the rate of construction in Ontario.

This matter of growing unemployment in British Columbia is one which has given great concern to all our British Columbian members. That is one reason why all British Columbia private members of all parties joined so unanimously in asking the government to take positive action in a case which we regard as a key case where very little government help can keep a great industry operating this winter. I refer, of course, to Britannia mines.

Now, it is true that unemployment insurance has changed the picture a bit so far as the plight of the unemployed is concerned. During the days of the Bennett government unemployment was the scourge of the people. The people were on the 20 cents a day dole and young men were herded into labour camps—out of sight out of mind—as apparently the Prime Minister would have us ignore unemployment today when he says we are creating a fear complex if we even mention it.

The floor of Liberal social security legislation brought in in the last 20 years, unemployment insurance, unemployment assistance paid jointly by the federal and provincial governments, universal old age pension and family allowances put cash money into the family group which did not exist of course during the thirties. All these things are helpful and the amendments put forward by the minister today are helpful but they are no substitute for employment. The answer to unemployment is not the diversion of trade from one country to another but the expansion of trade in every country and above all the development of secondary industry here in our own country. We want to see an expansion of jobs through national development. The government can take a great deal of immediate action to stimulate public works. Day after day we hear the Minister of Public Works say that these things are planned and are being revised or reviewed. This is not the time for the review of public works, this is the time for positive action and every possible public work contemplated should be undertaken as soon as possible.

There is one other item I would like to mention before I sit down. In his argument the minister pointed out how helpful the $13 million which he expected would be paid in these extra benefits would be as far as purchasing power is concerned and my Social Credit friend, the hon. member for New Westminster, concurred in that. I find that very curious economics. When they were working these men had at least three times that purchasing power, approximately $40 million; and to drop from $40 million when this group was working to $13 million when they are unemployed and drawing benefits does not seem to me to be very sensible economics.

Mr. Hahn: They would not have anything without this.

Mr. Starr: Would you prefer to give them nothing?

Mr. Sinclair: No, I would rather see them enjoying the high level of employment they enjoyed under the Liberal government.

Mr. Starr: So would I like to see them enjoy a high level of employment but this is better than nothing. It is good economics.

Mr. Sinclair: I am glad the minister has risen because now I am going to suggest that if he wants to do something positive to put real purchasing power into the hands of the Canadian people his government should meet the request that has been made by our party, the C.C.F. and the Social Credit group since this session started and have the Minister of Finance bring down a budget this session with these great tax cuts which he promises because that would really put purchasing power far greater than the $13 million into the hands of the Canadian people. That would really spur employment and activity in this country.

Mr. Charlton: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Pearson: Because we had employment.

Mr. Sinclair: Last June we had the highest level of employment and the greatest peak of prosperity in all the history of this country.

Mr. Brooks: What about 1955?

Mr. Sinclair: Let me just tell this committee what this would mean in terms of purchasing power. When the Minister of Finance brings down his budget it will not be any surprise to the Canadian people because the record is filled not only with the election promises but the declarations of the Minister of Finance when he was the financial critic of the opposition. They are going to increase the exemption from income tax from $1,000 to $1,500 for the single man and from $2,000 to $3,000 for the married man.

Mr. Charlton: That was never stated.

Mr. Pearson: Yes it was.

Mr. Sinclair: He is going to wipe out the excise tax on automobiles and bring in at least a 25 per cent reduction in sales tax. If these promises—and after all the Prime Minister said his promises were solemn obligations which would be effectuated—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, it is all right for you to say, "Hear, hear" but what we are asking is that these promises be effectuated as quickly as possible. What we ask is for the Minister of Finance to give some definite answers such as those for which I congratulated the Minister of Labour earlier and when he brings down that budget and effectuates those promises—

Mr. Charlton: You just can't take it, that is all.

Mr. Sinclair: —it will be, by my calculation, $300 million which he will put in the hands of the Canadian people to spur the economy.

I have one last subject on which to speak. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni mentioned a point which is of concern to those who watched the unemployment insurance fund from the start. The fund is now over $800 million. It is a good thing to have a big stable fund which can be drawn on in times of emergency. Over the years the fund should grow in amount as our working population grows but there will be dips. I do agree with him, however, that the present legislation extending the winter's unemployment season to six months of the year is unusual and was not contemplated when the original act was drawn up or when the actuaries calculated what premiums would pay for what benefits. I do not agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that the minister should contemplate making direct contributions from the national treasury into the fund because of these emergencies. I think it would be very difficult to know how much will be needed over this winter. Experience, after all, is the best teacher in a field such as the insurance field and I would think a review should be taken of the situation in the spring time.

An hon. Member: Too late.

Mr. Sinclair: Organized labour of course is interested in this fund because two-fifths of the contributions have been put there by the working population. Management is just as interested because again two-fifths represents their contribution. And we, the parliament of Canada, representing the taxpayers have an interest too because one-fifth came from the government's contribution. Therefore, while I think the fund must be kept under very constant review I would congratulate the minister for taking action at the present time and we shall await the results in the spring to see whether or not it has been actuarially unsound and if the fund should be supplemented with a direct contribution from the government.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for Coast-Capilano would permit me to correct what apparently is a misapprehension on his part. I did not make any suggestion about the government making direct contributions to the fund but I did raise the idea that consideration might be given to some increased payments to the fund by certain employing interests who I said were in large part responsible for the unemployment situation.

Mr. Sinclair: I am sorry if I misunderstood the hon. member. I thought he was suggesting direct contributions from the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Chairman, when I was just listening to the hon. member for Coast-Capilano I thought how fortunate he must feel to be able to be sitting on this side of the house at this particular time.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You would not have this trouble if we were on the other side.

Mr. Fraser: It would be ten times worse.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): For 22 years you prayed for it and your prayers were never answered.

Mr. Cameron: I doubt that the people of Canada would be particularly impressed by hearing the Liberal pot calling the Conservative kettle black and the Conservative kettle hurling the charge back again. It has always puzzled me why members of the House of Commons who have access to so many documents seem to have an aversion to looking at the documents which are produced by such organizations as the dominion bureau of statistics and the Bank of Canada because if they did so they would realize that the impasse we have reached today is the end result of a long and fairly steady curve which has been going on for some time. As I say, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano is fortunate that he is now able to point with horror to what is going on rather than having to do as his Conservative opponents are doing, pretend the thing he is pointing at is no longer there.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I have been rather impressed with the philosophy of the Conservative party which seems to be that unemployment is some sort of nervous disease that affects society, the sort of thing that attacks a hypochondriac, and that if you just pay no attention to his complaints they will go away, a sort of don't look now at the D.B.S. figures and perhaps the next time you look at their report unemployment will be gone. It would be amusing were it not disturbing to hear supposedly responsible ministers of the crown suggesting that unemployment is caused by members of the House of Commons, or spokesmen for industry or labour, who look at the D.B.S. figures and point to the fact that we have a serious unemployment problem are causing unemployment. As I say, it would be amusing if it were not disturbing. It is disturbing to me because I have lived long enough to have memories of previous governments which used to tell us that prosperity was just around the corner. It took us some 10 years to get around that corner.

I would also remind the hon. member for Coast-Capilano that while it is quite true that the Bennett government was apparently unable to do anything with the catastrophe that had overwhelmed the Canadian economy in 1929, there was the period from 1935 to 1939 when the Liberal government was equally helpless.

Mr. Sinclair: It improved steadily every year.

Mr. Cameron: Equally helpless, and it is a sad commentary on our economy that it was the evil machinations of a gentleman in Germany that finally came to their rescue, because there is no evidence in the record that the Liberal government of that period was any more capable of dealing with the situation than the helplessly bankrupt Canadian government that preceded it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Will he tell the committee exactly how effective the socialist governments of those days were?

Mr. Cameron: The socialist governments of those days in Scandinavia—and those were the only places in which they were in power and are still in power—were even at that time giving an example to the rest of the world of how to organize on a rational basis a modern industrial economy. I do not expect that my hon. friend knows that because I have come across vast bogs of ignorance in the history of some of the members on that side of the house.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It must be a reflection of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Cameron: It may be a reflection, as I walked into those bogs, possibly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we have to take a more serious look at this situation and realize that it is not what the Prime Minister airily described the other day as a mere temporary situation. There are far too many serious portents on the horizon now to let us believe that this is something of a delusion, if we just avert our eyes from it.

I was interested in the suggestions from our friends of the Social Credit party that there was some magical way in which, by the manipulation of the monetary system, we were going to be able to overcome those problems. I was interested, too, to hear the hon. member for New Westminster demanding what was the socialist solution to the problem because you know, Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here for five years and I have been disappointed session after session that I have never yet heard explained in this house just what is this miraculous method by which, by the manipulation of the monetary policy of the country, we are going to overcome serious economic dislocations.

Mr. Sinclair: You have heard the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. Cameron: No, because I was always so bogged down by the hon. member for Lethbridge in the consideration of the problems of the Turko-Mongolian menace.

Mr. Blackmore: It has nothing to do with the financial system.

Mr. Cameron: That is exactly what I thought.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that our friends of the Social Credit party are unable to distinguish between cause and effect, unable to distinguish between what is the moving force and what is the object that is moved in our society. They seem to have no grasp of the role which money plays in the modern economy, no grasp of the fact that as the former governor of the Bank of Canada told me in the banking and commerce committee in effect, it is nothing more than a reflection of the level of economic activity at a certain time.

I have been interested also in hearing from very many sources, including the extremely eminent Minister of Finance of Canada, talk —and backed up by our Social Credit friends —about the tight money policy of the previous Liberal government. Now, far be it from me to go to battle for the Liberal government, but I did notice during the election campaign that my Conservative and Social Credit opponents were violently attacking my Liberal opponent for the tight money policy of his government. My Liberal opponent was rash enough and ignorant enough to dash to the rescue of the government for the tight money policy that had existed.

I have referred before to those documents that we can get and I would refer hon. members who have ideas about tight money to look at the September report—it is the latest one I have—from the Bank of Canada and I think they will find the same situation even to a greater degree if they look at the October issue. They will find that there is not a single month in the year 1957 in which the total money supply has not been larger than it was in the corresponding month of 1956.

An hon. Member: What about the interest rates?

Mr. Cameron: My hon. friend asks me about the interest rates. I have observed a strange sort of predilection on the part of the Minister of Finance to imagine, or at least to imply to us, that it has been some virtuous action on the part of himself and his colleagues which has caused the slight decline in interest rates which has taken place, the same line of reasoning which used to cause him to attack his predecessor in office and accuse him of having raised the interest rates. But, as anyone who has any grasp at all of the workings of the modern economy knows, he knows perfectly well that these interest rates were set by the demand for capital in a vast, booming period of expansion, and no action on the part of the government, either the former Liberal government or the Conservative government, had the slightest effect on those interest rates.

Sometimes we have pointed out to us the action of the Bank of Canada in altering discount rates and it seems that the governor of the Bank of Canada can speak until he is blue in the face and everything he utters falls on deaf ears when he tells us over and over again that the bank rate of the central bank of Canada is merely a reflection of the interest rates which have been achieved through the actions of our economy.

I would suggest to you, sir, that in this situation of unemployment that we are facing today we are not facing anything so simple as a mere manipulation of the monetary system; we are not facing anything so simple as some action—what action it would be I would not know—on the part of the Minister of Finance to lower or to raise interest rates. We are in effect reaching a position that it was practically inevitable we were going to reach, although for 20 years we have been able to avoid certain problems. But the problems come back again and they were outlined very ably just a few moments ago by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I may say I noted he also had the same sort of philosophy as our friends across the way when he suggested that the rash suggestion of the Prime Minister that he was going to divert 15 per cent of our trade to Great Britain had really caused a decline in our export markets. I do not think he really believes that. I think he knows enough about the workings of the international economy—

Mr. Sinclair: Just one correction; I did not say that. I said it stimulated a feeling in the United States which is going to result in tariff reprisals.

Mr. Cameron: I understood the hon. member to mention the fact that our markets there had been curtailed and he linked that fact with the suggestion that it was caused by this rather rash and unconsidered statement of the Prime Minister. I think we are obliged to face the fact that no matter what we do or say those markets are going to shrink and are going to continue to shrink for some very simple reasons.

During those 20 years we have had a number of historical accidents which have enabled us to put off coping with this problem. We were bound to hit it now. We had, for instance, the period after the war when we had a tremendous backlog of demand and when also we had certain former rivals in the industrial field completely shattered as a result of the war. In the ensuing 20 years those countries have come back; they have rebuilt their economies and they have reproduced the situation in world trade that we faced 20 years ago.

There are various suggestions as to how we are going to cope with the resulting strains on our economy. I was interested the other day to get a copy of the text of a speech made by Mr. Graham Towers, the former governor of the Bank of Canada, to the life underwriters association in Toronto. It was delivered on November 14 of this year. At page 4 of that speech Mr. Towers is discussing inflation. I suspect that his comments are aimed at certain people who have been demanding that there shall be an end to the tight money policy and that there shall be a little more shot of inflation into our economy. He has this to say:

> It should be noted that those who think continuing inflation is inevitable or even necessary do not regard it as a good thing, but rather as less evil than possible alternatives. One alternative which they have in mind is a situation in which demand is not pressing on supply, employment is less than full and credit policy not inflationary. Wage increases would of necessity have to be restrained, because increased costs could not be passed on to the consumer. It is assumed that in these circumstances, there would be a political swing to the left, particularly on the part of trade unions, and governments would be found willing to countenance and support inflation or perhaps turn to direct controls in an effort to combine full employment with some degree of stability in prices. So it is argued that it would be better to accept inflation—preferably creeping inflation—in the first place, rather than make an abortive attempt to avoid it.

Mr. Towers is, I suppose, the most eminent voice in Canada of orthodox capitalist finance. I think it is of interest to us to realize what his view is on the now widely accepted theory of full employment as the goal of a worthwhile society. He has this to say:

> In the course of this argument, we leave the field of economics and get into the field of human behaviour, because it is necessary to prophesy what the reaction of the majority will be to a given set of circumstances; and that is a very risky game, unless one goes to extremes in setting up the circumstances. For example, I think it would be quite safe to assume that massive and continuing unemployment on anything like the scale of the thirties, would produce formidable political reactions and adoption of policies of the kind I mentioned a moment ago. But can one assume that the same thing would occur if unemployment at times rose moderately above the average level of the post-war years? Government figures have put this at about 3.8 per cent of the working force in the United States and 3.1 per cent in Canada. The Canadian figure of course includes seasonal unemployment, which is much more of a factor in this country than it is in the United States. These unemployment figures have generally reflected a situation in which some unemployables are listed, plus others who are in the course of changing jobs and are out of work for only a brief period of time. Can unemployment go no higher than this without forcing the adoption of policies which impose on everyone the penalties of continuing inflation?

I have quoted that portion of the speech because it seems to me to reveal the fact that a very eminent spokesman for what is amusingly called the free enterprise economy considers that the theory of full employment is not a valid one and that in order to keep our economy working we must be prepared to have more than 3.1 per cent of our working force unemployed and run the risk of social and economic dislocation. I am interested in that suggestion because this afternoon the Minister of Labour quoted the figures for October of this year when he told us that 3.5 per cent of our working force was unemployed during October. The figure of 3.5 is considerably higher than the 3.1 figure mentioned by Mr. Towers. But, far from the people of Canada accepting 3.5% with equanimity, we have seen in this house this afternoon various members reporting from their constituencies the very serious plight of a large part of the working force of Canada. That leads me to the conclusion that those who speak in this vein—and may I say that it seems to me that those who speak in this vein are in essence supported by both the government party in this house and the official opposition and even more stridently by the Social Credit party—are prepared to have this type of unemployment as a means of keeping the economy going and putting the burden onto other people.

Some while ago I read the report of a speech made by one of the most eminent members in this chamber; I refer to the hon. member for Algoma East. It was a speech made shortly after the arrival of sputnik I on the horizon. During it he made this remark—and he will correct me if I have it incorrectly—or said something to this effect, that it now appears obvious that our social and economic organizations did not fit us to keep pace with the Russians. He qualified that statement later by saying that of course, even though it did not fit us to keep pace with the Russians, it was much to be preferred to that of the Russians and was much superior. It struck me, however, as a rather hopeful sign that a gentleman of his eminence should be prepared now in public to state that perhaps the time has come for a serious overhaul of our economic and social organization.

Mr. Pearson: Will my hon. friend tell me when I am supposed to have made those strange observations?

Mr. Cameron: I must apologize for not being able to do so because I did not clip out the article. But I will get it for the hon. member. I will admit that I was very much surprised to read it.

Mr. Pearson: So am I.

Mr. Cameron: I will get it for you; I have it in my office. It may be, of course, that the hon. member had a much more limited definition of the term "social and economic organization" than that which I have. But, as I say, that struck me as a hopeful sign. Apparently I was altogether too optimistic and my suspicions are confirmed that the Liberal party is as sunk in the past as is the Conservative party and is prepared to go on in the face of the growing evidence that we are now coming back full circle to where we were some 20 years ago.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that rather than continue to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act—I welcome this amendment but I am perfectly sure the Minister of Labour will be back in a few months with another amendment—it might be better to take some positive steps to solve at least temporarily the situation in which we are rapidly finding ourselves today. We used to hear some years ago about the former Liberal government having on its mantle shelf a whole shelf of public works that were going to be embarked upon the moment the economy began to sag. I guess a careless housemaid must have cleared off that shelf and thrown it into the ash can because we have not heard of it for some time.

Mr. Sinclair: What about the seaway?

Mr. Cameron: That has finally to come.

Mr. Sinclair: We finished that up.

Mr. Cameron: No.

Mr. Sinclair: What about the pipe line?

[Mr. Cameron.]

Mr. Cameron: Are you mentioning the pipe line?

Mr. Sinclair: I did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Saskatchewan dam.

Mr. Sinclair: That is theirs. December 10 is the deadline.

Mr. Cameron: I would suggest that this government should seriously consider the necessity of laying plans for a large body of public works. I would suggest something else, too, that it is time we considered placing contracts for capital equipment for the undeveloped areas of the world on much the same basis as we have been placing contracts for the production of defence equipment which now, apparently, was money down the drain.

Those are two methods I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, whereby this government could at least temporarily stem this tide that seems to be rising all across the country. While I am certainly glad to welcome this amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, I am afraid that although it does reveal the fact the government is really uneasy about the unemployment situation, it reveals also the fact that the government has not the foggiest idea what has caused it or the slightest idea how to cope with it.

Mr. Blackmore: Have you?

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, representing as I do an industrial constituency, it will come as no surprise to you to hear me speak on a matter concerning the working people.

I am certainly quite happy to express to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) as well as to the Conservative government the approval of the working people with regard to this measure which proposes to increase from 16 to 18 weeks the period during which benefits will be paid during the winter.

Over the past few weeks, we have heard hon. members from the other side of the house, Liberal members, speak of the situation of the workers in very lugubrious tones indeed. However, they have forgotten to say that a situation such as this does not spring overnight. If in certain parts of this country at this time there are a few areas where unemployment is prevalent, it can be attributed to the lack of foresight of the former government. It is from the former administration that we have inherited the situation facing us at this time.

However, it is of good omen that the Conservative party be called upon to deal with the situation. Every time this nation has found itself in more or less difficult situations, it has turned to the Conservative party. I am happy to be a member of this party and to have the opportunity of helping my colleagues solve this problem which we inherited from our predecessors because of their lack of vision.

Workers in various centres will certainly be happy to learn that the benefits have been extended from 16 to 24 weeks under a Conservative government. In my own constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, official figures show that unemployment, far from increasing, has been decreasing.

Official figures which I obtained from the St. Hyacinthe unemployment insurance office show that last June there were about 1,500 unemployed registered at the local employment office. On October 31st last, always according to the figures from the unemployment insurance office in my district, this number was down to 1,100, which means a decrease of about 400 since we came to power in June last.

I would therefore like to draw the attention of this house and also of this country to the fact that the Conservative party is not the party of hunger, the party with a short memory or the party which spreads hardship everywhere but rather the party which can sympathize with human need, the party whose members all join here together trying to bring a solution to the problems left to us by our predecessors. In this, I choose to see evidence of the great satisfaction and also the great confidence we have in our Minister of Labour and in the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take part in this debate this evening. I do not wish to delay the passage of this resolution,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): —but for the information of the members who just spoke I would tell them that the reason I must take part in the debate is that one of the cabinet ministers stated, during a visit to Moncton, that it was strange we have heard no effective protest in the House of Commons from the member of parliament for Westmorland on behalf of the residents of that area. The minister was referring to the Canadian National layoffs. If I were to resume my place and not say a word in this debate, then I would be open to criticism from the Minister of Transport who made that statement in Moncton about a year ago.

I should like to commend the Minister of Labour for introducing this resolution so quickly. We know that the minister is one of the most sincere members we have in the government. I know that when I remind him of some of the things he omitted from this resolution he will take note of them and perhaps give greater thought to the policy of his party than some of the members on the treasury benches. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister what his party said they would do when they were elected. Again I am reading from the Diefenbaker national policy, which some members of the cabinet seem to regard as being unworthy of merit when inquiries are made about it. I am reading to the minister from the new national policy, verbatim quotations from the speeches of the Prime Minister, and on page 7 it says:

> The Progressive Conservatives are convinced now, as always, that the free enterprise system coupled with effective free trade unions, offers Canadian labour the best assurance of opportunity, security and highest possible standard of living. To attain this end we shall—

And among other things it says:

> Improve unemployment insurance legislation to include: Coverage for greatest number of wage earners; increases in benefits and allowable earnings; extension of benefit period to 52 weeks; elimination of waiting periods; prompt payment of claims;—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Those people who are now applauding this statement should recall that this afternoon the minister told us about waiting periods. I would advise those members to take a very serious view of this matter because I think many of them will be laid off after the next election.

Mr. Baskin: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Furthermore, I may tell them a little more about their party.

Mr. Broome: We are ready.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): They do not seem to know what the policy of their party is or the statements their minister made in the past year.

Mr. Baskin: You are reading the policy.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Just take it easy.

Mr. Baskin: You take it easy.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I would pass on to you a few gems of wisdom that were given out by your own Minister of Transport. There is a clipping in a newspaper report of a speech by the Minister of Transport while he was in Moncton, New Brunswick.

Mr. Baskin: You are the only man in your family who went astray.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): The hon. member for Renfrew South—

Mr. Baskin: Right.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): —should enjoy himself while he is in the House of Commons because it is felt that his stay will be a very short one.

Mr. Baskin: Thank you.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): The Minister of Transport visited Moncton as president of the Progressive Conservative party and the headlines of this article says:

P.C. party head raps recent C.N.R. lay-offs here.

But he goes further than that. He went into unemployment insurance while in Moncton as follows:

The unemployment insurance fund amounts to a billion dollars today and was built up by the workers and their employers to tide over the working people while they are out of work. The government, therefore, has adequate resources in the unemployment insurance fund to continue to pay unemployment insurance benefits to workers who have exhausted their credits, and it is therefore the responsibility of the federal government at Ottawa to continue to pay unemployment benefits to those who are out of work and through no fault of their own are unable to find a job.

Now listen very carefully.

Mr. Baskin: We will.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): To continue:

He emphasized that the only permanent unemployment insurance was a job and that that was what every Canadian wanted—

Now that was the thinking of the Minister of Transport when he was the head of the Progressive Conservative party; not payments, but a job for every Canadian. At that particular time he even went on to tell us why we had no jobs in the Moncton area, as follows:

Mr. Hees charged that the situation created by shops lay-offs in this area was aggravated because the work was being shifted to Montreal where the additional employment would mean little, if anything, to that city. "But", he said, "it is a very serious blow to the Moncton area".

Mr. Baskin: You are the biggest blow to the Moncton area.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): The hon. member for Renfrew South is quite an orator while he is seated. Now since this government has taken office, in fact just a few weeks ago, I brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport a similar situation. At that time the Canadian National war veterans association wrote to him telling him—they also sent a copy of their letter to me—that thousands of dollars worth of valuable machinery was being dismantled in the Moncton shops and being taken to other places. The minister said he would look into it and we have heard nothing since. Now we have lay-offs in Moncton in the order of 110 men at one time, and a further 50 in the running repairs shop. Because we have said something about these lay-offs, they have taken a new approach and now, very quietly, they are laying off half a dozen at a time about every week or second week from the Moncton shops. Thus they are quietly putting them out of a job by the back door.

Now the Minister of Transport met with the management and said there would be certain moneys available to assist these persons. I have asked him how much of this money would be available to assist in a works program in the Moncton shops for the relief of these men. I asked him where the money was coming from—from what authority—and one day I almost got an answer. He stood up in his place, smiled and got ready to answer when that little man, the Minister of Finance, told him to sit down and I haven't got an answer from that day to this.

An hon. Member: You mean a big man.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): In the meantime our men are walking the streets of the city of Moncton and then, to add insult to injury the government and the management of the C.N.R. threw the whole thing back into the lap of the unions and blamed them for the unemployment situation, in particular they blamed the seniority system.

I am told that press dispatches say that this works program would be set up in the Moncton shops for the manufacture of cars. This was made known to the unions who met with management and objected to the men from other crafts being taken on in the car ships while the carmen were still being laid off. There was no disagreement among the different crafts at that time but it was just another attempt on the part of management, which in turn is controlled by this government, to smash the unions of the Canadian National Railways shops in Moncton.

I have also brought to the attention of the house a resolution from the machinists lodge in Moncton suggesting that they are working seven days a week to expand that shop and make switches and frogs, not only for the Atlantic division, but also for other divisions. It would seem that although the government put on a good show with relation to the C.N.R.—in fact we had a big celebration in Moncton recently when the Minister of Transport was down there—

Mr. Baskin: After June 10.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): That's right; that's right, but the hon. member should wait until he hears the rest of it. We were celebrating the 100th anniversary of the opening and the operation of the railway from Saint John to Shediac and the next day they laid off 100 men to mark the occasion. Last week they were rejoicing in the northern part of the province, when they had a real Conservative rally, the opening of the C.N.R. spurline. The Minister of Veterans Affairs was there with a C.N.R. trainman's cap on his head—

An hon. Member: It was a good picture.

Mr. Baskin: Were you there, "Murph"?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I said it was a Conservative rally. The premier of the province of New Brunswick was there with another C.N.R. cap on—

Mr. Broome: Were you there?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I was not invited if the hon. member for Vancouver South would like to know; if I had been invited I would have gone. At that time the Minister of Veterans Affairs pulled the switch and the premier of the province took control of the engine and drove it down to the mines. Premier Hugh John Flemming and the Minister of Veterans Affairs seem to be the only two who would be secure in the employment of the C.N.R. There are men being laid off by the C.N.R. who have given 17 years of service and who have contributed to this fund for that length of time and I think the government should make provisions to safeguard this fund so that it will not be depleted because, in a few years, there will be more men laid off by the C.N.R.

They are building a railway yard down in Moncton and, as hon. members may remember, I asked the Minister of Transport about it. He said he was not aware of the project but they are building that yard. That is a step towards automation and undoubtedly men will be laid off who have given 18 or 19 years of contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. It would be tragic if the fund was depleted and these people could not draw the benefits to which they are entitled.

Now besides those people who are registered unemployed there are a great number who are not registered, people who have been working for themselves in the woods cutting pulp and other forest products, and they do not draw employment insurance benefits. And when we think back to the promises made by supporters of the present government during the election campaign I think it is time this government got under way a constructive program of capital projects to assist these people who draw no benefits whatsoever.

I have suggested already to the house the building of the Prince Edward Island causeway and the Chignecto canal and, of course, I expect the support of the Minister of Veterans Affairs with regard to this latter proposal because he supported it on many occasions. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert had this to say on May 23:

> John G. Diefenbaker, Q.C., the national leader of the Progressive Conservative party, on May 3 here, in Saint John, discussed the merits of the canal and joined the long list of its promoters. I am pleased to associate myself with his remarks on that occasion.

I wonder if the Prime Minister takes as much interest in this project now as he did when he was in New Brunswick last June? I would also suggest to the Minister of Public Works that a certain portion of the money to be made available for housing should be earmarked or allotted to the maritime provinces because when the last $150 million was made available we know, according to the reports, that less than one-half per cent of that $150 million was received by the maritimes. But, of course, when people are not working they do not have any down payment to enable them to take advantage of these loans.

All these matters which were so seriously debated last year should be remembered at this time. We had a very rosy picture painted to us of what this country was going to be like when the Conservative party took office. We had candidates going over the country holding rallies. Here is an advertisement from the Moncton Times of June 8, an advertisement inserted by the Kent county Progressive Conservatives calling for a rally. It says: "Fun for All". I wonder how much fun for all there is in Kent county today when they cannot sell one cent's worth of pulpwood?

And again there was a Conservative rally in Shediac, New Brunswick, run by the Progressive Conservative association—

An hon. Member: What about Beechwood?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I will tell you about it, sure. We have to pay $1,300,000 in interest the first year back to the federal government though they have given interest-free loans to the west—

As I was saying, we have an advertisement here for the Progressive Conservative party which says: "P.C. rally in Shediac—Come and See the Magician". That was during the second visit of the present Prime Minister. Now it is time the magician came to perform some of his magical works.

An hon. Member: He is.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Terrifically talkative members over there.

Mr. Baskin: What did your opponent say in the last campaign, Murph?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Probably helping you in Renfrew South.

When the 33 Conservative members met in Moncton they drew up the Atlantic resolutions. I have asked about these Atlantic resolutions and, I was told, of course, that these matters which would help the employment situation were taking up the time of the house, that these questions should not be asked and did not merit answers. But I wish to commend one of the Conservative members from the maritime provinces—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): It is easy to get a hand now, isn't it? —and that is the hon. member for Pictou. The hon. member for Pictou placed on the order paper a resolution dealing with the Atlantic resolutions for the decentralization of industry and the establishment of crown corporations in the maritime provinces. Of course, that would assist us in dealing with the unemployment situation. Also the resolutions called for discussion of special fiscal considerations to provide encouragement for industries who locate themselves in that area.

Mr. Broome: What about the $20 million Atlantic aid?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I certainly will support the hon. member for Pictou in his resolution, and I hope that when he brings this matter up in this house it will not be treated as a joke as it was treated when I asked the Prime Minister a question about it, as something which takes up the time of the house unnecessarily. To the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture I would say that parity prices for potatoes for New Brunswick growers would be more in his line than to ridicule the decentralization of industry and helping industry in the maritime provinces.

These are some of the ways in which employment could be assisted in the maritime provinces. I was referred by the Minister of Finance to the speech from the throne with regard to the special fiscal considerations for private enterprises. He did not understand them at first, but then he referred me to the speech from the throne. I hope he will not refer the hon. member for Pictou to the speech from the throne when this matter comes up for discussion.

Besides these people in Kent county I spoke of there are those in Albert country represented by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, many of whom work in Moncton with the C.N.R. and other industries in that area. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert held rallies there in May and June, and the advertisement for the rally on June 6 speaks of refreshments. I wonder if he is prepared to go back to Albert county and offer those people ice cream instead of jobs.

This resolution is a move in the right direction. However, I will commend once again to the Minister of Labour the new national policy outlined on page 7, article 5, so that before this measure goes through the house he may have an opportunity to broaden the resolution so as to include the matters contained in the Diefenbaker doctrine.

(Translation):

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take part in this debate for a few moments only in order to express my gratitude to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) with regard to the amendments he is bringing forward concerning the present Unemployment Insurance Act.

Like those who have taken part in this debate before me, I do wish however to express the fear that the suggested amendments may not be precisely those which we would have liked to be brought to this act, at least with regard to the area I represent in this house. On the few occasions when I have had the opportunity of speaking about this matter in this house, I have expressed the views of my constituents in this connection. I have asked, above all, for the decentralization of unemployment insurance offices and, then, for the simplification of the procedures to be complied with in order to obtain benefits.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that when this proposed resolution has been adopted, the amendments will allow a certain number of people to receive benefits to which they would not have been entitled otherwise. According to the figures quoted by the minister, the number of people thus involved will range between 30,000 and 40,000.

I respectfully submit Mr. Chairman, that one of the amendments which had been forecast and which hon. members were expecting concerned the qualifications of claimants, a provision which will be found in section 50, subsection 2 of the legislation. The amendment I have in mind would have reduced at least from 15 to 10 the number of stamps required for qualification in the case of those who claim unemployment insurance benefits.

Like the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin)—his constituency is nearly adjacent my own or, at least, has the same general living conditions—I will state that those who have been most seriously hit in previous years by unemployment are in the first place workers in the construction industries and then bushworkers.

If it is recognized that there are unemployed people at this time in these two classes of workers, we also know that a great number of those workers have not worked long enough since March 31 to accumulate a sufficient number of stamps to make them eligible for the benefits and, consequently, they will not be helped by the improvements in the act, as they nevertheless might have hoped to be.

Another point on which I wish to draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, is the state of emergency which is invoked for the presentation of this bill. To my mind, it is somewhat contradictory to propose an amendment to the act presumably because of a state of urgency and not providing that this amendment is only for a temporary period.

According to information given us by the minister, the amendments to this act will cost the unemployment insurance fund at least 15 million dollars and most likely a still greater amount. It means that the present unemployment situation is not normal and that, as the case of the unemployed people is to be considered as a whole, the amendments must be helpful to the majority, whatever their effects on the fund, even if afterwards the fund has to be brought back to its present level.

A short while ago I heard the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) say that the Conservative party was not the party of unemployment and hardship. Well, I say to him that if he wants to place the blame for unemployment on a political party, the Liberal party has many achievements to its credit. During 22 years, as was so well said by the former minister of fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) a few moments ago, the Liberal party, through the numerous social security measures which it has introduced, including this Unemployment Insurance Act which now serves as an expedient to the Conservative party to cope at least in part with the present serious situation, has not been a negative but a truly positive party. Without all the measures which have been introduced by the party to which I belong, I wonder in what situation the population of the whole of Canada would be at the present time.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege. Does my hon. friend allow me to ask whether the Conservative party, in the light of the legislation which it has now introduced, is a negative or a positive party?

Mr. Laflamme: I do not mean that the Conservative party, because it is introducing that legislation, is a negative party. I do not complain about that. I say that my hon. friend, in referring to his party at the end of his remarks, stated that it was not such and such a thing; therefore, his party is perhaps a negative party. I wish also to point out to him that the proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act are possible only because, under Liberal governments, we have lived through periods of prosperity which have made it possible for the contributions paid to the unemployment insurance fund to reach about a billion dollars.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, would my hon. friend be kind enough to answer my question?

Mr. Laflamme: I cannot tell whether the Conservative party is a positive or a negative party but I am sure of one thing—

Mr. Ricard: Please answer my question.

Mr. Laflamme: I told you that I did not know; moreover, it is not for me to pass judgment on that.

Mr. Habel: Supremely negative!

Mr. Laflamme: I can simply tell my hon. friend that he himself mentioned a moment ago that his party was not the party of hardship and unemployment.

Let me also tell him that people are interested not so much in what a party is not as in what a party has done, and I repeat what I said a few moments ago, i.e. that if all the legislation now enjoyed by the people did not already exist, depression and hardship would be upon them. Now, all this legislation has been introduced and passed by Liberal governments and not by the Conservative party.

Mr. Ricard: Never has the Conservative party—

Mr. Laflamme: I want to say this to my hon. friend.

The Chairman: Order! I would remind hon. members that when the house is in committee of the whole, the matters discussed must be related to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Laflamme: Very well, Mr. Chairman.

I was just pointing out the effects of the present amendments, when they are adopted, upon the invested capital of the unemployment insurance fund.

I want to remind the hon. minister that if those amendments are such as to decrease the unemployment insurance capital fund, these amendments must be temporary. Otherwise, it would be an admission that the present government is unable to foresee that they will be able, within the next few months, to meet the situation which is leading to unemployment all over the country.

The Unemployment Insurance Act, I must remind my hon. friend from St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) is Liberal legislation of which the Conservative party is taking advantage in order to face the population. Since the introduction of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the fund has greatly and continually increased, and this offers a guarantee both to the employers and employees for the years of depression which may occur.

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

How many unemployed would there be if the Liberal party were sitting on this side of the house?

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I will answer my hon. friend on that point. There have been two main causes as far as I can see, and as far as many people can see, there have been two great things...

Mr. Ricard: There has been June 10th.

Mr. Laflamme: ...which brought about unemployment. First, the fact that the Conservative party has come to power; and, secondly, the fact that this same Conservative party is unstable.

Mr. Ricard: If you think we do not have the confidence of the people, then go ahead and vote against the government.

Mr. Laflamme: Even if the Conservative party had gained power with a comfortable majority, it would have left in the minds of the people bitter memories...

Mr. Ricard: You are still not answering my question.

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, in closing I would simply suggest once more to the house that we have here, I think, a most important law and a serious situation, and I do not see why we should not be able to discuss it fully, so that each member may be able to express his opinion about a tragic situation now prevailing throughout the country, that is, unemployment.

I want to tell the hon. minister, while commending him for the amendments he introduced, that they unfortunately do not do much for the construction workers, nor for the bushworkers of my county, who, at this time are jobless.

It might perhaps have been better if the unemployment insurance commissioners and the Minister of Labour had increased the number of those entitled to benefits, as was done during a period of prosperity, i.e. last year, so that a proportional number of unemployed might benefit this year under this legislation. Thus more jobless people would get greater benefits this winter, and the number of beneficiaries would not be smaller than during the years of plenty.

Mr. Landry: Mr. Chairman, it was with great interest that I listened this afternoon to the explanations given to the house with regard to this measure which I would call emergency legislation designed to relieve unemployment. I do not think that we should entertain any illusions about this for, in spite of the optimistic statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) unemployment is becoming a national danger and we have every reason to feel anxious about it.

Naturally enough, as this measure comes up for discussion, I feel I should recall briefly that in my first speech in this house on October 18 last I referred to this unemployment problem which is possibly more serious in my constituency of Dorchester than anywhere else in the Quebec area. At the time I had reminded hon. members of the fact that the working people who make up my constituency are, for the most part, farmers who because of the poor quality of the land, find it necessary to work several weeks a year in the forests of Quebec and often also in those of the United States.

The minister is not unaware of the fact that lumbering operations on the Canadian side of the border have been reduced. According to information at my disposal I believe I can state that it has been reduced in the proportion of 60 per cent. On the other hand certain American companies have even decided this year to close down operations entirely. All this has had in my constituency results which are not difficult to imagine, that is, increasing unemployment and great anxiety on the part of hundreds of heads of families on the approach of winter.

It is for those reasons that in the very first days of the session I respectfully submitted to the government the urgency of amending unemployment insurance legislation in order to relieve that unemployment. I had also suggested that these seasonal benefits be paid as of December 1 and I am happy to note that the department has lengthened the period provided by adding a month at the beginning and another month at the end. I know that that particular aspect of the legislation will be greatly appreciated in my constituency as well as in every other working constituency in Canada. Unfortunately, I regret that the minister did not see fit to accept my second suggestion which, in my humble opinion, was far more important than the one dealing with the extension of benefits.

I had in fact expressed the opinion that the government should lower from 15 to 10 the number of contributions required for qualification for the seasonal benefits and I notice with great disappointment for the unemployed of my constituency that this was not considered favourably. I regret that the government did not see fit to adopt this suggestion all the more so because I believe that a measure such as the one just proposed by the Minister of Labour misses the objective—completely in our case and partially elsewhere—which the minister no doubt had in mind.

The measure as proposed will not unfortunately have the good effects which a reduction of the required contributions would have had for my constituents because most of our unemployed, as a result of lack of work in the lumber camps, have been unable to accumulate enough contributions to qualify for seasonal benefits.

And we will have a rather sorry situation where a measure intended, in short, to assist the unemployed will precisely penalize those people for not having accumulated enough contributions.

I notice with pleasure in this proposal that the minister took into account the special situation of an important part of our population, namely the fishermen. Without knowing all the details of the measure, I believe it will be highly appreciated by this class of Canadian workers. However, I am still wondering why the Minister of Labour did not consider proposing an improvement in favour of our farmers by the repeal of the section of the Unemployment Insurance Act which requires them to pay 22 contributions or at least to prove that they worked outside the farm for at least 22 weeks in order to qualify for the seasonal benefits.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to suggest to the hon. minister to take in serious consideration these few remarks and to alleviate, as much as possible, the distress which is now felt in this country. I have welcomed the recent statement of the hon. minister about the changes made to the unemployment insurance regulations concerning married women. But this is not the most serious problem, in my view, and it would have been much more important to consider the case of the heads of family and of the farmers of our rural areas.

Naturally, Mr. Chairman, we all know that such a measure is but a temporary remedy. It will not settle at all the serious problem of unemployment, let alone relieve the government of its obligation to take the necessary steps to cope with unemployment. The Canadian worker will accept this expedient but would prefer a tonic which would restore his health.

I have received today a copy of a letter addressed to the hon. Minister of Labour by Mr. Philip E. Smyth, representative of an international organization. This letter was accompanied by a copy of an article published in a Washington newspaper and announcing that a conference between representatives of the United States and Canada would meet in Ottawa, on December 1st next, to study Canadian-American affairs, particularly from the economic point of view. May I express the wish that, in the course of that meeting, the hon. Minister of Labour will succeed in coming to an understanding with the authorities of the States of Maine and New Hampshire on the question of reciprocity in the matter of unemployment insurance so that our Canadian workers who must earn their living in the neighbouring country but who, nevertheless, are Canadian taxpayers, can benefit from our Unemployment Insurance Act when they come back home on account of a shortage of work. May these few suggestions convince the hon. Minister of Labour that we are following with much interest and anxiety, on behalf of our electors, any forward move that may be made to improve our Unemployment Insurance Act which, in view of the urgency of the present situation, is necessarily inadequate and ineffective in some areas as hard hit as my constituency.

(Text):

Mr. McMillan: I am very much in favour of this resolution which provides for a bill enabling the government to make payment of seasonal unemployment benefits starting December 1 instead of January 1. I might say that I am sorry indeed that the government finds it necessary to have seasonal unemployment benefits extended. In the 1955 session I had a resolution on the order paper suggesting higher regular unemployment and supplementary benefit payments under the Unemployment Insurance Act. At that time my resolution was superseded by amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act introduced into this house by the government.

I may say that at that time there was considerable unemployment in my riding and I even came into the house and dared to use the word "unemployment". I might say that in speaking at the resolution stage of that bill I referred to unemployment several times and my repetitious use of that word

"unemployment" was exceeded only by those now sitting on the government side of the house. I might say that a week or two prior to that time the present Minister of Labour expounded at great length on unemployment and the perils of unemployment. I think he was referring to Oshawa at that time.

At that time, as may be found in Hansard, I said that responsible heads of municipalities, heads of unions and others came to me complaining about the inadequacy of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which representation I brought here to parliament. These same heads of municipalities and these same heads of unions are coming to me now complaining that many of these unemployed workers cannot get any unemployment insurance benefits. They tell me now that unemployment will become worse as the winter progresses. I thought I heard the Minister of Labour say the other day that unemployment might even reach the half-million mark. I may be wrong in that figure but I have seen other references saying that unemployment might reach the figure of 750,000.

I maintain that unemployment insurance figures as announced in this house do not present a proper picture of the situation. In parts of my riding there are people who are working part time; they work two or three days a week and they are not classified as unemployed, but they have a hard time to meet their financial obligations. Our unemployed and those on short time have certain fixed obligations which they must meet. They must meet rent, heat, tax, insurance and public utility bills. These costs must be paid because they are fixed. Some have bought new homes and furniture on a monthly payment plan. In my part of the country foreclosures on mortgages and seizures by the bailiff of furniture and so on are beginning to appear. These actions certainly do not assure others who feel that they are approaching the same condition financially.

One aspect in this whole matter is that with all of them the family budget is tight and the amount that is left for food is much less than it used to be. I think we should see that our people, particularly our children, have adequate food—an adequate, nutritious diet—in order that they may have maximum health. At that time I argued against cutting off seasonal unemployment insurance benefits as of April 15. I thought at that time that we would have a considerable number of unemployed on that date, but employment conditions improved and by April 15 we did not have so many as had been predicted here in the house. April 15 was close at hand and that is why on April 4 a good many members in this house argued for the extension until May 15. Likewise, at this time when unemployment is mounting, I am very much in favour of advancing this date to December 1 when supplementary payments may begin.

In Canada, because of our climate, we are bound to have considerable seasonal unemployment. I think, too, that in our free enterprise system—and in fact in almost any system—we are bound to have some ups and downs in unemployment. A good part of our economy depends on world trade. I therefore think our government should do very little to interfere with the free flow of trade. Our government has sent a very expensive trade mission to Great Britain. Its purpose is to purchase only, as announced by the high commissioner in London, and it was announced in this house that its purpose was chiefly to buy. I can assure you that the unemployed in my area are more interested in helping to make things that they can sell than in buying something that they cannot pay for.

The members of the government when in opposition always talked about processing our own raw materials. Not once since I have been here this session have I heard any member of the government say anything about the fabrication of our raw materials. The former leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Drew, two or three times every session, I believe, talked about the processing of our raw materials. Certainly he gave that as one of the ways in which to cure unemployment at the time of the debate we had in April, 1955.

I am in favour of doing all we can to trade with Great Britain but all the articles that I read in the papers say that there is little or no unemployment in that country. I was a little bit surprised when the leader of this buying trade commission to Great Britain placed a good will order of $10 million in that country for certain hydro materials, and this at a time when we have unemployment in Peterborough, Hamilton, Toronto and the Niagara district where hydro have placed orders for their requirements in the past. I should like to have from this government some assurance that when we in this country buy British manufactured articles and Britain earns Canadian dollars she will spend those dollars in the purchase of our wheat and of our other raw materials. When I say this I have in mind the fact that while the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in Britain this fall, wheat was bought from the United States but I understand that no wheat was bought here in Canada.

We live in a country rich in natural resources and I think that this government is admitting defeat when they introduce this sort of legislation to look after unemployment. Surely, this is an indictment of the government that promised Canadians almost everything under the sun at election time. I think instead of having to extend this insurance measure, the government should find jobs for our people.

Mr. Cannon: As we are getting very close to ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief and to the point.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): They will not be to the point.

Mr. Cannon: I wish to congratulate the minister upon the clear manner in which he introduced the legislation we are studying here this evening. I am sure he is one of the most hard-working ministers in the government. I can only say that I sympathize with him because it seems that the harder he works the less work there is for other people. It seems very unjust, but that is the fact.

I do not have to tell you, Mr. Chairman, or the members who have been in this house with me over the last few years, how pleased I am with this legislation. It will be of great benefit to the fishermen of my constituency. Most of the workers in my constituency are fishermen, and as fishermen they get seasonal benefits. This resolution, and the legislation that will follow, will greatly increase those benefits. There is one point I wish to stress in particular, and that is if it had not been for the legislation introduced last year by a Liberal government and by Mr. Gregg, the former minister of labour, which placed fishermen under the action of the Unemployment Insurance Act, then this legislation that is being introduced tonight would have been of no benefit whatever to these fishermen. It was legislation that I had advocated over the last six or seven years. I say to the fishermen of my constituency and to the fishermen of Canada that in appreciating these amendments they should not forget the fact that if they benefit from them it is due to the fact that last year a Liberal government placed them under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I wish to associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano when he said that the attempt of the government to remove a great section of our purchases from the United States and divert them to Great Britain could have disastrous effects on our fishing industry. All hon. members know how close our fishing industry came to being faced with an embargo from the United States. As the hon. member for Coast-Capilano said, it would be disastrous if such an embargo were applied, and it may be if the present government continues the policy it has started.

Mr. Broome: May I ask a question?

Mr. Cannon: I have no time for questions; my time is very short. We are now very close to the adjournment hour and this legislation should pass today if at all possible. I shall curtail my remarks at this moment, but I wish to repeat that if these amendments are of benefit to the fishermen of Canada it is due to the legislation that was passed last year by the Liberal government.

Mr. Breton: I am pleased to be able to congratulate the minister upon these benefits, and I shall be very brief on this subject. I just want to draw the attention of the minister to two complaints that have often been received from my district. The first is with reference to article 47 which fixes the weekly benefit for the unemployed on the basis of the average weekly contributions for the last 30 weeks. It often happens that some people who are employed on an hourly or day-to-day basis, and who earn more than $60 a week, suffer from the fact that during the last 30 weeks they have missed a few hours or a few days work and so their average is lower than it should be. It seems to me that in such cases the average should be based on more than 30 weeks, and perhaps the unemployment office could take into account the previous year, if there are enough stamps for that.

Another complaint I receive often arises from the fact that in our district some people are obliged to work for farmers. In those cases they are losing the benefit of the stamps. Would it not be possible to amend the law so as to enable people who desire to pay for their stamps to do so, even if the farmers themselves are not obliged to pay for stamps. There should be a system to enable these employees to pay for their stamps if they so desired, so that they would be entitled to the benefit of insurance.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Starr thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 171, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Unemployment Insurance Act

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. 171, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time; now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave.

Mr. Starr moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Could I inquire of the house leader what will be the business tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow is private members' day.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

KINGSTON, ONT. RAILWAY STATION

Question No. 69—Mr. Henderson:

1. What continuity in progress is there to establish a new railway station at Kingston, Ontario?
2. When will the site be purchased?
3. When will the new railway station be completed?
4. What use will be made of the present railway station site?

Answer by: Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

1, 2, 3 and 4. The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that the facilities at Kingston are at present under review.

CORNWALL, ONTARIO, AIRPORT

Question No. 109—Mr. Lavigne:

1. Has the government been asked to build an airport in the city of Cornwall?
2. If so, has the site been approved by the officials of the Department of Transport?
3. What was the cost of such project?
4. What contribution would be made by the Department of Transport and what contribution by the municipality?
5. Has the item been placed in the estimates of the department by the previous administration, and if so, for what amount?
6. What progress has been made towards the construction of such an airport?
7. In view of the importance of the city of Cornwall and its strategic location on the seaway, will the government consider providing the facilities of both land and equipment for such an airport?

Answer by: Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

1. Yes, on the basis of a tentative approach by the city.

2. Yes.

3. No detailed estimate of the cost has as yet been made.

4. The Department of Transport would construct the runway or runways provided the municipality purchased the land and agreed to administer and maintain the airport and provide any necessary buildings.

5. Yes, $5,000 for investigation purposes.

6. None, as the municipality has not yet indicated that it wished to proceed.

7. It is not considered there should be any deviation from the present policy in cases of this nature of requesting municipalities to provide the necessary land and operate the airport after construction.

DISABLED PERSONS

Question No. 119—Mr. Christian:

How many persons at the present time are totally and permanently disabled within the meaning of the Disabled Persons Act and the disabled persons regulations, P.C. 1954-1831?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

Persons receiving allowances under the Disabled Persons Act numbered 35,540 as at September 30, 1957. Such persons had been medically certified as being totally and permanently disabled.

The regulations under the act were amended by order in council P.C. 1957-715 of May 27, 1957. Among other changes, the definition of "totally and permanently disabled" was revised, to take effect July 1, 1957, as follows—

"For the purpose of the act and these regulations, a person shall be deemed to be totally and permanently disabled when suffering from a major physiological, anatomical or psychological impairment verified by objective medical findings which is likely to continue indefinitely without substantial improvement and, as a result thereof, such person is severely limited in activities pertaining to normal living."

LANDING FIELD GRANT, ATHABASCA

Question No. 156—Mr. Dechene:

1. Has the director of air services for the Department of Transport at Edmonton made any recommendation relating to a grant for the completion of a landing field north of the Athabasca river and the town of Athabasca?
2. If so, when will these recommendations be acceded to and the grant made?

Answer by: Mr. MacDonald, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

1. A report has been received from the departmental district headquarters in Edmonton regarding the request for assistance to a landing field near Athabasca. It is not, however, customary for the department to reveal the views of individual members of the department either for or against individual projects.

2. This report is still receiving consideration by the department.

FEDERAL BUILDING, EDMONTON

Question No. 174—Mr. Holowach:

1. How many properties have been purchased by the Department of Public Works for the construction of the federal building in Edmonton?
2. What is the total amount paid to date for these properties?
3. What is the total amount paid to date for the construction of the federal building?
4. What is the estimated total cost when the building is completed?

Questions

5. What departments of the federal government will occupy space in this building?

6. What date has been set for the official opening?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. A notice of expropriation was filed on November 21, 1951, against lots 14 to 20 inclusive and lots 69 to 73 inclusive, block 7, plan "B", Hudson Bay reserve (11 owners). Two additional lots were acquired from the city of Edmonton by exchange of properties (lots 67 and 68).

2. $265,549.00.

4. $6,390,000.00.

5. Civil service commission and the departments of agriculture, citizenship and immigration, defence production, finance, labour, national defence, national health and welfare, national revenue, northern affairs and national resources, public printing and stationery, trade and commerce, transport and veterans affairs.

6. The date has not yet been set.

PEAT MOSS INDUSTRY, NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.B.

Question No. 189—Mr. McWilliam:

What steps, if any, has the government taken towards promoting the establishment of a peat moss industry in Northumberland county, New Brunswick?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

The mines branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, from time to time, has provided, to parties interested in developing the peat moss industry, information on New Brunswick peat bogs including detailed data on the extent and quality of the Northumberland county bogs as shown by investigations of the geological survey of Canada and further 1939 to 1941 extensive field investigations published in 1947 in "Peat Moss Deposits in Canada", bureau of mines report No. 817.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Question No. 218—Mr. Johnston (Bow River):

1. How many miles of the trans-Canada highway are now paved and completed according to specifications: (a) across Canada; (b) in each of the provinces?

2. How much of this construction has been paid for by the Canadian government to date?

3. How much has been paid to each province by the federal government to date?

4. How many miles of the trans-Canada highway run through the Banff national park, and (a) how many miles have been completed and paved according to specifications? (b) How many miles have been paved and then been repaired, and what was the cost of the repairs?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. (a) 1706 miles to October 31, 1957.

(b) Newfoundland, nil; Prince Edward Island, 67; Nova Scotia, nil; New Brunswick, 77; Ontario, 430; Manitoba, 246; Saskatchewan, 406; Alberta, 214; British Columbia, 266.

2. $122,468,045.47 to November 16, 1957.

3. Newfoundland, $8,923,850.82; Prince Edward Island, $3,272,532.20; Nova Scotia, $2,700,630.57; New Brunswick, $8,938,921.91; Ontario, $31,947,031.89; Manitoba, $10,765,-984.90; Saskatchewan, $13,611,197.86; Alberta, $12,349,423.03; British Columbia, $29,958,472.29.

4. 51.1 miles.

(a) Mileage completed and paved (final paving) according to specifications, nil. However, there are 29.7 miles covered with bituminous stabilized base course.

(b) Minor repairs have been carried out to the stabilized base course. Involved was the placing of approximately 257 tons of bituminous stabilized base course material between mile 11 and 12 at an estimated cost of $1,500.00. The repairs were attributable to settlement on high fill sections and can be considered normal maintenance prior to final paving.

TRAINING AND RETRAINING OF UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

Question No. 219—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the government received representations, through the national employment committee or any other body, to consider further implementation of schedule "M" to include training and retraining of unemployed workers to qualify them for available job opportunities?

2. If so, has the government taken any action to implement such suggestions?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. Yes. Representations from and on behalf of the city of Windsor, Ontario, and the town of Milltown, N.B.

2. Yes. Proposals for the establishment of training programs under schedule "M" at Windsor, Ont., and at Milltown, N.B., were discussed with the appropriate provincial authorities. Following thereafter a training program under schedule "M" was organized at Windsor, Ont., by the province of Ontario and the renewal and extension of such program is now under consideration by the government of the province of Ontario. A training program has been organized by the government of the province of New Brunswick at Milltown, N.B., and is in operation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS, KENORA

Quection No. 224—Mr. Benidickson:

1. How many persons are receiving unemployment insurance benefits from the Kenora office?
2. How many persons are receiving unemployment benefits by mail from the Kenora office?
3. How many of these claims originate from persons residing at Dryden, Oxdrift, Waldhof, Eagle River, Vermilion Bay, Wabigoon, Dinorwic, Dyment, Ignace, Red Lake Road, Quibell, McIntosh?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. Number of active claimants (persons whose claims are 'live') at Kenora local office at October 31, 1957—266.

2. Number of active claimants reporting by mail at October 31, 1957 (included in item 1)—129.

3. No figures available, as no separate record made of origin of claims within a local office area.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS, FORT WILLIAM-PORT ARTHUR

Question No. 225—Mr. Benidickson:

1. How many persons are receiving unemployment insurance benefits by mail from the Fort William or Port Arthur office?
2. How many of these claims originate from Atikokan, Ontario?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. Number of active claimants reporting by mail at October 31, 1957:

(a) Fort William local office	167
(b) Port Arthur local office	541
Total	708

2. No figure available, as no separate record made of origin of claims within a local office area.

UNEMPLOYMENT REGISTRATIONS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 228—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What was the total number of unemployed registered in each of the areas served by the Edmundston, Campbellton and Bathurst offices for the week ending November 16, 1957?

Questions

2. What was the number on November 16, 1956?
3. How many unemployed were registered in the province of New Brunswick on the two dates mentioned?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. The number of persons registered for employment at local offices of the unemployment insurance commission is derived from a count made of the live file on Thursday of each week.

At November 14, 1957, the number of persons registered for employment at the Edmundston office was 969; at the Campbellton office 1,133 and at Bathurst, 1,314.

2. At November 15, 1956, the number of persons registered for employment at the Edmundston office was 444; at Campbellton, 407 and at Bathurst, 615.

3. At November 14, 1957, there were 16,008 persons registered for employment at offices in the province of New Brunswick and at November 15, 1956, there were 8,479.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 233—Mr. Byrne:

1. What is the total amount in the unemployment insurance fund?
2. What was the amount in the month of October, 1957?
3. What was the amount of contributions to the fund in the same month?
4. What amount was paid out of the fund in the month of October?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. At October 31 (the latest date for which figures are available) the amount in the unemployment insurance fund was $884,800,516.26.

2. See answer to No. 1.

3. Contributions in October, 1957:

(a) By employers and employees	$16,720,914.67
(b) By government	3,376,830.41

4. Amount paid out of the fund during October 1957, $16,305,464.48.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 28, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS—FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina) presented the first, second and third reports of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, and moved that the first report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East) presented the first report of the standing committee on external affairs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Third report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Fraser.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARTIN (TIMMINS)—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN OTTAWA "CITIZEN"

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In yesterday's copy of the Ottawa Citizen there is a report which is quite erroneous. I will read the paragraph which refers specifically to my point; it is criticizing the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix) with regard to the matter of the flag, and it says:

> Moreover, he could have withdrawn his motion, thereby saving many Liberals and C.C.F. members from voting against their own actual wish for a national flag.

I sent out for copies of Le Droit and I found this paragraph in the edition of Tuesday, November 12, in an editorial by Mr. Pierre Chaloult, which reads as follows:

(Translation):

> . . . thereby saving many Liberals and Social Crediters from voting against their own actual wish.

(Text):

My point is this, and maybe it has to do with simultaneous translation between the newspapers; that my interpretation of this article is that it referred to the Liberals and the Social Credit party, and I should like to correct the matter because all the members of the C.C.F. party voted in favour of the flag.

MR. ROBICHAUD—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege based on an editorial which appears this day, November 28, 1957, in a daily newspaper and which concerns all members of this parliament as well as members of previous parliaments. In the Montreal Gazette of this date the following editorial appears:

> Christmas Cards And All That
> Thousands of Canadians this year will not be receiving the Christmas cards they had from Ottawa in other years. The reason they may not be receiving them is quite simple: they will no longer be paying for them.
> It seemed, for the time being, rather pleasant to have Yule greetings from your member of parliament. It showed that he had not forgotten you. He had even gone so far as to send you his greetings and his best wishes—for Christmas and the New Year, and all that.
> But the unpleasant thing about these pleasant greetings is that you had to pay to be greeted. And you paid nonetheless because you never actually saw the bill. It was still charged to your account, in the taxation you paid.
> This year there will be no Christmas cards for members of parliament, provided by the courtesy of those to whom they were to be sent. The estimated saving is $50,000.
> Perhaps there may be some elector somewhere anxiously waiting for his member's card. But it may be doubted. That $50,000 saving will be quite a compensation for not being greeted with your own money.
> But perhaps the happiest electors of all may be those who helped pay for these cards but never even got one. They are now being forgotten at less cost to themselves.

The point of my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that this editorial leaves the impression the members of parliament were in the past supplied with free Christmas cards which they were sending out to their respective constituents. This is absolutely false, and the newspaper responsible for such an irresponsible and untrue statement should apologize to this parliament and to the people of this country for misinforming them. Furthermore, most members of this house present and past paid for the postage used on their Christmas cards and did not take advantage of the privilege of the frank to which they were entitled.

FINANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OVERSUBSCRIPTION OF BOND ISSUES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will be interested to receive the announcement that I am happy to be able to make. At nine o'clock this morning the books were opened on two offerings of government of Canada bonds, the first an issue of $250 million of 3 per cent bonds, due October 1, 1959, issued at a price to yield a return of 3.81 per cent, and another issue of $400 million of three-year 3 per cent bonds maturing December 15, 1960, for conversion applications only, issued at a price to yield a rate of 3.85 per cent to maturity.

The books on these two offerings opened at nine o'clock this morning, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the house will be glad to know that both issues were immediately and substantially oversubscribed and the books were immediately closed.

Since these offerings come on top of the twelfth Canada savings bonds campaign which has raised now the record sum of a billion dollars by this method, I think it right to say that the response of the Canadian public is deeply gratifying, and I am sure in the eyes of all members it reflects not only the strength of the Canadian economy but the confidence of our people in the economy of their country.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): May I be permitted to ask one brief question. Instead of quoting the effectual interest rate, will the minister give the actual sale price of the $100 bond?

Mr. Fleming: Yes. In the first issue the bond was issued with a coupon rate of 3 per cent. The issue price was 98.6, to yield a return of 3.81 per cent to maturity. On the second issue, that for conversion applications only, the coupon rate is 3 per cent. The issue price was 97.6, to yield a return of 3.85 per cent to maturity.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that the first rate is on a maturity exactly the same as the issue we put out two months ago, precisely the same maturity, namely October 1, 1959. I think it may be observed that the effective interest return on this same bond now is 1.18 per cent lower than the effective return on the bond of the same maturity issued just two months ago, which is an indication of—

Mr. Sinclair: A sagging economy.

Mr. Fleming:—the growing strength of the Canadian economy and the confidence of the Canadian people in their economy; and also of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that interest rates have come down substantially and that money, credit and interest in this country are easing substantially.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and ask him whether any farmers in the west who were fortunate enough to obtain cash advances on farm-stored grain have sought to put it into any of the bonds the minister said were so advantageous.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure no hon. member of the house is going to ask the Minister of Finance to disclose the private affairs of any citizen.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, notice of which I did not give him. In view of his statement about the increase in the price of bonds I wonder if he would tell the house whether the province of New Brunswick will get the advantage of the lower interest rates for loans to be advanced by this government in connection with the Beechwood development, or will that interest rate be maintained at 4⅜ per cent? I would also like him to comment on the rate that government bodies like the St. Lawrence seaway authority pay for loans from the government.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that when the Prime Minister made his announcement in the house about two weeks ago concerning the proposals of the government to lend sums to the province of New Brunswick for the purpose of meeting the financing requirements of the Beechwood power project he indicated that the agreed rate was 4⅜ per cent. I am happy to report to the house that the rate on federal borrowings has continued to drop since that time, and I can assure the house, as we have already assured the province of New Brunswick, that that province will receive the full benefit of any further reduction in the effective rate which the government of Canada must pay on its borrowings.

Sir, as to the second part of my hon. friend's question concerning the rate charged on loans made by the government of Canada to crown corporations, I would point out that as to loans that have already been made the rate has already been established. It was established in the light of the cost of current borrowings by the government of Canada. As to any future loans to crown corporations by the government, the rate of interest on any such will of course have to be established in the light of the cost to the government of Canada of its borrowings at that particular time.

REPORTED REDUCTION IN EXCISE TAX ON AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he say whether there is any substance in the story that came over the radio at noon today to the effect that there is to be a 50 per cent reduction in the excise tax on cars this session?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no such statement has been authorized by the Minister of Finance or by any government source that I am aware of.

Mr. Sinclair: What did you promise during the last election? Total removal.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I am sure the Minister of Finance will appreciate the importance of this question. In view of the reply he gave to the hon. member for Acadia with regard to the excise tax, and in view of the request by the representatives of the automobile industry to see the Minister of Finance, whose preoccupations we all understand, I wonder if I might ask him whether, in the interests of promoting sales, which are now somewhat stagnant, he could not give further consideration to the reply he gave a few moments ago, and if he could not expedite his meeting with the representatives of the automobile industry.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I have met with the representatives of the automobile industry on the subject several times since the new government took office, and I have also met the associations of dealers and others interested in the subject. I think they realize that the door is always open when there is any point in our meeting to discuss the subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question. Is the Minister of Finance in a position to say whether or not he can see them tomorrow? My information is that the minister has not found it possible to do so.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, whether a meeting can be arranged tomorrow I cannot say at the moment, in view of a heavy program of commitments, including the sittings of the house. The question remains whether anything further can be added to the rather complete knowledge which the government has on this subject. I do not need to assure the house of the government's concern with regard to the matter.

[Later:]

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance supplementary to the questions raised by the hon. member for Acadia and the hon. member for Essex East. Is the house to assume that by the swinging-door policy enunciated today by the Minister of Finance, the question of excise taxes is being given due consideration in relation to the budget the minister is likely to bring in, in due course, at this session?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend could have asked that simple question without labouring it quite so hard.

Mr. Sinclair: It is the example he gets from you.

Mr. Fleming: I can assure the hon. member that the policy which he described as a swinging-door policy is by no means new. It has been the policy of government to hear all citizens and all groups of citizens who have any case they wish to submit to the government, and the government tries to give proper consideration to whatever representations are made to it from responsible sources.

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF LOAN FUND FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it true that the government has decided to propose legislation at the present session to establish a loan fund which will be available at low interest so that small businesses will not be driven out by larger groups? This was a promise made by the Prime Minister at Cambridge, Nova Scotia, on June 4, 1957. If so, when?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a somewhat similar question was asked a few days ago in the house and answered by me. I pointed out that representations have been received by the government from associations and organizations representing small business. They have submitted various proposals, and those proposals are under study at the present time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION TO BE INTRODUCED THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would inform the house now, or at the earliest convenient date, what legislation in addition to that already on the order paper it is intended to introduce during this session. I ask the question now because we have already commenced to consider the extension of the sitting hours. The hon. gentleman will remember that when his party was on this side of the house I used to have the experience of being asked similar questions.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): And it is a very laudable attitude, because it shows a desire to co-operate to bring about at the earliest possible date the closing of the house after the business has been expedited. I wish to say to my right hon. friend that I shall endeavour very shortly, within the next day or so, to bring before the house in general something of the alignment of future legislation in addition to that already on the order paper. I hope to do that on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RETURNS OF CANDIDATES' ELECTION EXPENDITURES NOT FILED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State arising out of information contained in a return tabled yesterday with respect to a motion of mine passed by the house on October 25. Can she say whether any of the members of the House of Commons referred to in sessional paper 3-B as not having filed their expense returns for the recent general election received judges' orders permitting them to delay the filing of these returns?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am assured that the three members who had not filed obtained orders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the hon. lady give us the information as to the dates on which these orders were obtained?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not have that information. If the hon. member would like to put a question on the order paper, it can be procured.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should be glad to do that, but would it not be just as easy for the hon. lady to give that information at the next sitting of the house?

Mrs. Fairclough: I will be very glad to procure it.

[Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East).]

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES—PASSES FOR MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that this present session may run close to Christmas, or even go over that time, can the minister speed up his negotiations with T.C.A. relative to an occasional pass being issued to members of parliament who, like myself, live around 3,000 miles from Ottawa and would like to become reacquainted with their families and constituents?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I will be very glad to speak to the management of Trans-Canada Air Lines about that matter.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is yet in a position to report to the house on the progress being made in the discussions with the Saskatchewan government respecting the construction of the South Saskatchewan river project and, if so, will he make a report?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not, because consideration and negotiation are still continuing, and this afternoon I will be meeting the premier of the province of Saskatchewan again.

QUEBEC—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF INTERMEDIATE COURT OF APPEALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the reply given yesterday by the Minister of Justice to the hon. member for Laurier regarding the establishment of a court of review in the province of Quebec. In view of the Canadian Press dispatch of last night, of which I sent a copy to my hon. friend, may I ask him if he is in a position to say now if the government intends to propose legislation at the present session for the purpose of the establishment of such a court of review in Quebec?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. gentleman for having sent me a copy of the press dispatch referred to, which appeared in this morning's Montreal Gazette, as I recall. I can only tell him that we have not yet received a copy of the bill introduced or to be introduced in the Quebec legislature. Therefore I am not in a position where I have official knowledge of what is intended, and until I do receive official notification, which will be by getting a copy of the bill, it will not be possible to arrive at a decision.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask the Prime Minister if the premier of Quebec discussed the matter with him in the last few days?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is no.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REPORTED ABANDONMENT OF U.S. CHEST X-RAY PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has he seen the report in the press that the United States public health service has recommended the abandonment of the mass chest X-ray program on account of the possible radiation danger, and has his department any similar action in mind?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have seen the press report, and I would say that my department has no similar action in mind.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO DECEMBER MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he can assure the house that notwithstanding the illness of President Eisenhower, which we all so deeply regret, the very important meeting of the NATO council for next December in Paris will take place as arranged.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no definite information in this regard, although I think it can be taken as certain that the meeting in question will take place. I have heard of nothing that would indicate a postponement will take place. At the same time I realize that the meeting will naturally feel the effect of the absence of the President of the United States, who means so much in the world today.

TERRITORIAL WATERS—STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East addressed this question to me, and I took it as notice:

> Has the interdepartmental committee which we were informed last session was being set up reported to the government the position Canada should take on the legal position of the continental shelf and territorial waters in its representations to the international conference which the general assembly of the United Nations recommended should be held in March, 1958? If so, is it the minister's intention to make the government's views known to the House of Commons, and will provision be made for a discussion on this all-important subject?

The answer is that the interdepartmental committee, which is making preparations for Canada's participation in the international conference on the law of the sea, which is to be held in Geneva commencing February 24, 1958, has not yet completed drafting its recommendations to the government on all the matters which will be discussed at the conference. The basis of the discussion at the conference will be a report of the international law commission of the general assembly incorporating some 73 recommendations on the various aspects of the law of the sea: territorial waters, continental shelf, navigation, fishing and so on.

The interdepartmental committee has, however, made recommendations to the government on some of the more important aspects of the international law commission's report, among these the questions of the territorial sea and the continental shelf, as a result of an invitation addressed to governments by the Secretary General of the United Nations for comments on the international law commission's report.

It is the secretary general's intention to include the comments he receives from member governments in documentation being prepared by the secretariat of the United Nations for the conference.

Provisional comments of the government were forwarded to the secretary general on September 10 last. I would draw attention to the fact that they are provisional comments, Mr. Speaker. These may be modified in view of the discussions to be held at the conference, and having regard to the negotiations that might take place at that time among the nations.

Since these comments will be of general interest I would ask leave of the house to have the note which was sent to the secretary general printed as an appendix to Hansard. This note is six pages long and it is single spaced. To discuss at this time the whole range of matters which will be taken up at the international conference would, I think, be premature. However, the house will now be acquainted with the views which have been put forward by the government on some of the more important aspects of these matters.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the minister if what he is going to file includes the recommendations of the government on the continental shelf?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs has leave to have printed in Hansard the document to which he has made reference?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[For text of document referred to, see appendix, pages 1653-56.]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAYS TO GREAT SLAVE LAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Would the minister advise the house if he has received a report on the surveys carried on by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific concerning the advisability or otherwise of extending Northern Alberta Railways to the south shore of Great Slave lake?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): My department has not as yet received any report in an official way, though we have had informal comments from the railways concerned.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): May I ask a supplementary question. If the minister has received some information unofficially, as he mentioned, is he ready to make a statement to the house on the subject in the near future?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I do not believe the situation at this stage would warrant a statement. The only information we have received concerns the relative cost of building such a railway, some information on the various routes examined, and so on. There was nothing decided, so I do not believe the situation warrants a statement at this time.

Mr. Lesage: Would the minister table that information?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am a little dubious about how to table a telephone conversation, but I would be glad—

[Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac).]

Mr. Lesage: There is only one way to know what is going on; it is to ask questions.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): About all we know is a rough estimate of the cost of one of the routes, and I do not mind mentioning it. The estimate is between $60 million and $70 million, and that is the extent of my knowledge.

Mr. Hardie: Can the minister give any indication whether or not there will be a report, and whether he will be in a position to make a statement before the end of this session?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am speaking from memory now, but it seems to me we were promised a report some time this fall. Obviously we are getting along into the fall, but I do know one has not been received as yet. I shall look into the matter to see what I can tell the hon. member.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD FROM HAY RIVER TO TREE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Will he consider the advisability of conferring at an early date with his colleague the Minister of National Defence and the United States defence authorities on the advisability of both countries participating in the construction of a road from Hay River, Northwest Territories, to Tree River on the Arctic coast, to serve the distant early warning line?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that anything that can be done to enhance the opportunities and increase the development of the Northwest Territories will certainly be considered by this government.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF ACT TO INCLUDE CREDIT UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister had from the Co-operative Union of Canada or other co-operative organizations representations asking that the Farm Improvement Loans Act be extended to include credit unions as lenders under the act, thus giving the same guarantee to credit unions as is now provided to banks? Can the minister say what consideration has been given to these representations?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I thank my hon. friend for his courtesy in sending me notice of this question. Representatives of the Co-operative Union of Canada met with the cabinet on September 11 and made certain representations, including one to the effect stated in the question of my hon. friend. I understand that some of my colleagues are meeting this week with representatives of the credit union national association. Consideration of course is being given to all the representations that were made to the cabinet.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FURTHER STATEMENT ON REPORTED CLOSING DOWN OF HOWE SOUND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice, not in his judicial capacity but as the minister who has taken the lead in negotiations with the Howe Sound Company with the hope of keeping the Britannia mine in operation this winter. Can the minister report any action the government proposes to take to halt this threatened closure?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Since I last reported to the house I have had two further conversations with officials of the mining company in New York. The last conversation indicated that the company had received just recently, since our talks began, a report from a consultant whom they had sent up to inspect the property. It was also indicated that as a result of this report consideration would have to be given to the whole question by their executive committee. I am expecting to have conversations with them early next week. Until the executive committee has considered the position, there is no way in which the matter can be advanced further. We will know more definitely what can be done after we hear from them early next week.

FRUIT

APPLES—ADVERTISEMENTS IN C.N.R. DINING CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister—he will not do anything but I should like to ask him, nevertheless—why only British Columbia apples are advertised on the C.N.R. dining car menus on trains in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where excellent apples are also grown, and whether he will do anything to remedy this matter.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I really have no knowledge why both types of apples are not advertised, but I will make inquiries of the railway company and give the hon. member an answer.

BRIDGES

NIAGARA FALLS—REPORTED CONTACTS WITH U.S. AUTHORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have been unable to give the Minister of Transport notice of this question, but I know he can answer by saying yes or no. I noticed a report that Chairman Moses of the New York state power authority and his officials are now in contact with federal officials concerning a new international bridge at Niagara Falls. Is that a fact?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of any officials with whom Mr. Moses is in contact. If the hon. member can give me more information perhaps I will be able to give him an answer. I will make inquiries in my department and see whether any of my officials have been in touch with Mr. Moses.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER OIL—ORDER IN COUNCIL IMPOSING IMPORT CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On November 19 the minister made an announcement of a change in the price support on butter and butter oil, and then I believe he referred to butter oil and similar products being brought under import control. I wonder if he has tabled the order in council, or orders in council covering this and, if not, whether he will do so.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I do not know whether or not the order in council covering this matter has been tabled. I think it will appear in due course in the Canada Gazette, and I presume that will serve the purpose which the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, there is real interest in what is being done to help the farmers of Canada, and I think there will be a real desire to find out much sooner than that what the government has done in this regard.

Mr. Harkness: I do not think there is any question on the part of the dairy farmer as to what was done. The price support legislation—the price support order, I should say —as far as butterfat is concerned was extended, and in order to include butterfat of any nature, or in any form, several forms not having been previously included were covered. At the same time all the forms of butterfat which would be included in the price support legislation were brought under the import control order which had previously existed.

This applied particularly to the product known as butter oil, which has been coming into Canada during the last three months in very considerable quantities. If it had continued to come in at that rate, or if these quantities had been increased, I think there is no question but that the entire dairy industry price structure would have been very badly disarranged and perhaps destroyed. Therefore this action was taken in order to maintain the dairy products price structure which we have had in existence now for some time.

Mr. Tucker: A supplementary question. I take it from what the minister has said that an order in council has been passed on this very important matter. Do I also take it that in the light of the protests which have been made by the leader of the government there is objection to disclosing to the country what the government has done by order in council in this matter?

Mr. Harkness: There is no intention in the world of trying to conceal anything that was done in this matter. The hon. member for Rosthern is trying to set up a straw man so he can go through the motions of knocking it down. I have just finished disclosing to the house everything contained in the order in council. If there is any need for it to be tabled I will be delighted to have it tabled but, as I say, the order in council will appear in the Canada Gazette in the normal course of events, and I should think that is all that is required.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the Minister of Agriculture, in accordance with the policy his government appears to stand for, to table this important order in council.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

QUEBEC CITY—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEW POSTAL TERMINAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister any information regarding progress on the construction of the post office in Quebec city?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the house some weeks ago, the situation with regard to this post office is that the government acquired a site, but that site was not satisfactory to the town planning commission or committee of the city of Quebec. The city authorities wished to have the post office built on a site owned by the Canadian National Railways.

The Department of Public Works is ready and anxious to proceed with this work, but as yet the city of Quebec has not been able to arrange for the necessary transfer of the land. Responsibility for further progress does not rest at the present time with the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Bourget: A supplementary question. I think the answer given by the minister is right, but I should like to ask him if it is his intention to discuss this matter with officials of the C.N.R. so that an early agreement can be reached between the railway company and the city of Quebec.

Mr. Green: It is a question which will have to be worked out between the authorities of the city of Quebec and the Canadian National Railway Company.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSIONS OF SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government still giving consideration to taking whatever steps are necessary to increase the pensions of retired civil servants, along the lines of the assurance he gave to the house on October 23? If so, may we expect action on this matter at this session?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I have already stated. As to whether or not this and various other matters will be brought before parliament at this session depends to a major extent on the extent to which we get on with the business at hand and the legislation already placed on the order paper, and also those matters to which reference will be made on Monday next. If we get on with what we have to do we will have a job on our hands to conclude parliament before Christmas, and it will require the co-operation of all hon.

members in that regard if we are to discharge our responsibilities to the fullest measure.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the Prime Minister accept a supplementary question? Is there any reason why he cannot include reference to this matter in the list of business he intends to bring before the house on Monday next?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago and as I stated earlier the matter is under active consideration, but there has been no determination in this regard as yet to such an extent as would permit the introduction of the necessary legislation.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING CHANGES MADE IN PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister pursued the representations which were made by his predecessor, Mr. Gregg, to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway concerning certain complaints having to do with changes made recently in the pension plan of that company? Surely the minister has had letters about this matter from some of the Canadian Pacific Railway pensioners concerned? I wonder whether he is pursuing the matter on their behalf.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What does the "no" refer to?

Mr. Starr: I am not pursuing the matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the representations which are being made by Canadian Pacific Railway pensioners in regard to this matter to the minister and to other members of the cabinet—if he shakes his head I will have to send him copies of letters which have been sent to him.

Mr. Starr: I have not had any representation made to me on this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall send the minister copies of letters which have been addressed to him.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

REPORTED BOYCOTT BY INTERNATIONAL TRADE UNIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question asked by the member for Comox-Alberni yesterday regarding a telegram from the secretary of the international confederation of free trade unions on the question of the transfer of registry of Canadian National ships, I would like to table the reply I made, if that meets with the wish of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, and ask whether in view of the seriousness of the situation he would not convene in his office a meeting of labour and management and perhaps the president of the Canadian Labour Congress?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, my reply to this question is very simple. I have on two previous occasions attempted to mediate this unfortunate strike, and my offer was twice rejected by Mr. Banks. My feeling now is that I would be willing to try again provided I could be assured of the willingness of both parties to strive sincerely to reach a satisfactory conclusion.

WATER RESOURCES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR REPAIR OF WING DAM AT REVELSTOKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke asked me a question about a wing dam on the Columbia river at Revelstoke. I find it was decided in 1949 that the federal government had no further responsibility in respect of this wing dam, and there has been no work done by the Department of Public Works since that time.

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of that answer. Could the Minister of Public Works advise us on what grounds such a decision was made and why the responsibility of the department was abrogated in 1949?

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, apparently on the basis that there was no question of any damage being caused by navigation because, as the hon. member knows, there is no navigation on the Columbia river at that particular point any longer. Therefore there was no ground on which the dominion government could be made responsible for any such work.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MANITOBA—REPORTED HOLD-BACK OF P.F.R.A. FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, this is a question directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sorry I could not notify him of my intention to ask it, but the inadequate secretarial supply in this house sometimes does not permit us to do what we want.

According to a statement made by the minister of public utilities of the province of Manitoba, assistance to the province under P.F.R.A. has been withheld until after the dominion-provincial conference. Is this statement correct, if so, was the matter discussed at the conference?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the carrying on of P.F.R.A. activities in Manitoba or elsewhere has had nothing whatever to do and no connection with the holding of the dominion-provincial conference. The statement to which the hon. member refers is not correct. As I indicated in the house some two days ago some P.F.R.A. work on the St. Malo dam and reservoir is now under way.

WAR DEAD

GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION TO COST OF PILGRIMAGE OF MOTHERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I fully realize that he has been very busy for the last few days, but I should like to ask him whether he is in a position to state whether in the near future he can answer the question I asked him some time ago and which he promised to answer. My question was whether or not consideration is being given to the request of the white cross mothers' association for some financial aid to a pilgrimage of mothers to visit the war dead overseas.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brought to my attention at an earlier date a letter which he asked me whether I had received from mothers and widows whose sons or husbands had died in action so as to assure them an opportunity of visiting the graves of their loved ones.

This is a matter that has a tremendous appeal to the feelings and the emotions of all of us. I am sure it is an appeal that would commend itself to all hon. members. There has been no final determination made on the question, but I assure the hon. gentleman that whatever the decision may be it will be one which will take into consideration all the factors and all the needs, the demands and requests of those who are desirous of visiting the graves of their loved ones, as well as those other matters which are also of importance in the decision of questions such as this. I am not in a position to say more at this time.

Mr. Winch: It is under consideration?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the letter has been received by myself and I think by other members of the cabinet. Every consideration consistent with all the things that must be taken into view is now being given the matter, but I must say frankly I am not too hopeful of an affirmative answer at this time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHURCHILL—REPORTED POWER SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware of the reported shortage of electric power in the town of Churchill, which is now supplied by his department, and what has been done to alleviate the situation?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I shall be very pleased to look into that question and let the hon. member have a definite answer shortly.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. 4, to provide for minimum wages for employees.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I address myself directly to the motion for the second reading of this bill may I say a word as to my own intentions today, in view of the fact that a number of the public bills on the order paper are in my name. This is the only Thursday we shall have this session for public bills, in other words bills regarding public matters brought forward by private members. If the consideration of this bill were completed it would be unfair on my part if I were to ask the house to take the rest of the day dealing with another of my bills. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will not take too long on this bill but that a decision can be reached—naturally I hope it will be a favourable decision—and that having been accomplished, I should like the rest of my bills in this first group to stand so that other members with bills on the order paper might also have a chance to present their bills to the house this day.

In keeping with what I have just said I shall endeavour to speak as briefly as I can in support of Bill No. 4. To put it in a nutshell, the purpose of this bill is to establish a minimum rate of wages with respect to all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction.

This bill provides that such minimum rate of wages shall be $1 per hour. The bill also provides that its terms do not affect any employee whose rate of wages is higher than the minimum established by this legislation. However, any rate of wages less favourable to employees than $1 per hour is superseded by this bill.

With one exception, Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the only occasion in the history of the Canadian parliament when a bill has been presented proposing a minimum wage law for Canada. That single exception was, of course, in 1935, when the government of the late Mr. Bennett, who was prime minister at that time, presented to parliament what was popularly known as the Bennett new deal legislation. Parliament in that session before the 1935 election passed chapter 44 of the statutes of Canada for that year, which was known as the minimum wages act. However, that act, along with several other pieces of that Bennett new-deal legislation, was declared ultra vires of the powers of the federal parliament when it was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada by the Liberal government that came into office after the election of 1935.

The reason that act was ruled ultra vires was that it had been established by the courts by that time that labour matters come in part under federal jurisdiction but in part under provincial jurisdiction. Therefore it was not competent for the federal parliament to pass one minimum wages act applying to all workers in Canada. I think it is fair to say that Mr. Bennett, the eminent lawyer that he was, knew of this difficulty and he tried to meet it by a rather lengthy and interesting preamble which can be found in chapter 44 of the statutes of 1935. The gist of that preamble was that Canada, having agreed to an international convention regarding the establishment of certain labour standards, including minimum wages, was obligated by that treaty arrangement to put such legislation on the statute books of the country. Nevertheless that position did not stand up when the minimum wages act of 1935 was taken to the supreme court. So far as I can ascertain, from that day to this parliament has not had occasion to debate an actual bill for the enactment of a minimum rate of wages so far as the federal parliament is concerned.

The bill now before us, Mr. Speaker, clearly avoids the error of Mr. Bennett's bill of 1935. The bill now before us, like the two bills respecting annual vacations with pay now on the order paper, like the fair employment practices act and like the act providing for equal pay for equal work, makes it clear that it covers only those employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction. Not only have we in the federal parliament the right to legislate regarding employees in those works and undertakings that come under federal labour jurisdiction but some of us feel that we have the duty and obligation to do so. In other words, just as we have already enacted the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and these other pieces of legislation to which I have referred, some of us feel that the so-called labour code at the federal level should be rounded out and that we should make provision for such things as annual vacations with pay, statutory holidays with pay, minimum rates of wages, maximum hours of labour and so on for all those workers who are not protected by provincial legislation but who come under federal labour jurisdiction.

I say that this is the first time since 1935 that the house has had a chance to debate this issue. It is, of course, not the first time that this suggestion has been made on the floor of parliament. Some of us have been doing that for a long time, as we have been arguing for uniform labour standards across Canada. In addition, I might point out that this bill has been introduced and given first reading in parliament previous to this session but this is the first time that it has actually been reached for debate on second reading.

We in this group who present this bill to parliament are not alone in our support of the idea that there should be this kind of legislation providing for a minimum rate of wages for all employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction. The point, of course, was made very effectively once again this year in the submission made by the Canadian Labour Congress to the new government on October 21, 1957. Most of us remember that very interesting occasion in the railway committee room when the Canadian Labour Congress, only a week after parliament had met, appeared before the government at which time Mr. Jodoin read this brief and at which time the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) replied on behalf of the government.

One of the points that is underlined in the brief is that in filling out the gaps in labour legislation there should be legislation providing for a minimum rate of wages for employees who come under federal jurisdiction. The Canadian Labour Congress says this about it on page 18 of its brief:

> But the dominion should not confine itself to doing as well as the best of the provinces. It should give a lead. It should, specifically, establish a legal maximum work week of 40 hours and a legal maximum wage of $1 an hour. This is not really a very drastic proposal.

After some references to the maximum work week the brief goes on to say:

> As for the minimum wage, there must be precious few workers in industries under dominion jurisdiction who are not getting at least $1 an hour. In some industries under provincial jurisdiction, a minimum of $1 an hour might be hard to apply immediately; but in most provinces the legal minimum rates are preposterously low, and if parliament set a minimum of $1 for industries under its jurisdiction, that might provide a spur to provincial laggards.

I remind the government that these are the words of the Canadian Labour Congress in its brief to the cabinet on October 21, 1957, and that therefore the bill now before the House of Commons is a clear-cut implementation of that request for a minimum wage of $1 an hour enacted by the federal parliament to cover all those employees who are in works, businesses and undertakings that come under federal labour jurisdiction.

I am satisfied that there is support for the principle of a minimum wage at the federal level in the other parties in the house. It has been indicated to me by members of both of the other opposition parties that they like this legislation. Some of them have changes here or there that they might like to make, and I may say in that connection that if the bill is given second reading, as I hope it will be, I will then move that it be referred to the committee on industrial relations so that there may be public hearings about it and so that any details of the bill that members might like to have altered could be adjusted so as to meet the various viewpoints. In other words, all we are dealing with at second reading is the principle of the bill.

Of course, we could get into an argument as to what the principle is. I think the principle of the bill is that there should be established by law a legal minimum wage for employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction and that that legal minimum should be not less than $1 per hour.

Mr. McIvor: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. As we have legislation providing equal pay for equal work for men and women, does this $1 an hour apply to both sexes?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The answer is definitely yes. That would be the case because of that other legislation but as far as this legislation is concerned it is worded so that it applies to all employees without discrimination as to sex, race, colour, creed or anything else.

Mr. McIvor: Good boy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not only does the principle of this bill have the support, to my knowledge, of members in all opposition parties, but I have before me evidence that it must have the support of members on the government side of the house. I have before me a clipping reporting, by the Canadian Press, an address made by the present Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition, at Vineland, Ontario, in February of this year. It was a speech that seemed to be directed mainly to labour matters in which the then leader of the opposition promised that if his party came to power after the then ensuing election there would be a number of items of labour legislation put on the statute books. One of those items, as indicated by the then leader of the opposition at Vineland was in these words, within quotation marks, "enact legislation to provide minimum wages."

It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister, did not just say something casually when he made that promise in February because I, too, have in my hand a copy of a document to which frequent reference has been made in this house, namely, the "Highlights of Progressive Conservative Policy", which are contained in a booklet spread far and wide in Canada during the recent election campaign. It is a document, on the front of which is that famous picture of the Prime Minister. On page 7 of the document there are quite a number of items which the Conservative party promised would be implemented if that party came to power. I find here exactly the same words that the Prime Minister used in his speech at Vineland in February. I read from page 7:

> The Progressive Conservatives are convinced now, as always, that the free enterprise system coupled with effective free trade unions, offers Canadian labour the best assurance of opportunity, security and highest possible standard of living.

Then, I jump down to the point that is relevant to the bill now before us:

> To attain this end we shall:
> (d) Enact legislation to provide minimum wages, hours of labour, and vacations with pay for all workers under federal jurisdiction.

Well, that is quite clear. The Progressive Conservative party, like the other parties in this house, favours legislation at the federal level to provide minimum wages for all workers under federal labour jurisdiction. Since that is the case, I hope that this house will see fit, in an hour or so, to give second reading to this bill so it might be sent, on the motion I would then make, to the committee on industrial relations.

I suppose that, despite my hope that the bill will be approved by the house, I should anticipate some of the objections that might be made and give answers to those objections even before they are presented. One objection that may, of course, be made by some—I do not know why it would but it could be made—would be that the minimum rate specified in the bill is too high, a rate of $1 an hour. The only possible reason for anyone making that objection would be, of course, that so far as I know no province yet has passed a minimum wage order that is that high. The answer to that, Mr. Speaker, has already been given to the government in the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Surely, there is a place in Canada for the federal government to give leadership. The federal government cannot dictate to the provinces in matters of labour legislation. The provinces are sovereign in this field, as is the federal parliament, but a lead can be given. Surely in this day and age, at today's cost of living and in the light of today's gross national production, the suggestion that anybody should be asked to work for less than $1 an hour is ridiculous and grossly unjust. I hope that no one will seriously argue against that rate. In fact, I suspect there may be those who will criticize me for not having made the figure higher, and that is a criticism to which I would not object. I hope, nevertheless, that that is a point we might thresh out if and when the bill gets to the committee on industrial relations.

Another objection that may be offered is that the provinces that have legislation regarding minimum wages, for the most part if not entirely, provide for the rate to be fixed by the lieutenant governor in council or by some minimum wage board or in some other way than by including it right in the statute. This practice has more justification in the provinces where a much wider range of industries and kinds of work is involved. So far as federal labour jurisdiction is concerned it extends to a limited number of kinds of businesses and industries. They are set out in one of the sections of the bill. Since we know the exact categories of workers to be covered by this bill we are in a better position than the provinces are to decide what is a reasonable minimum wage.

I might point out also that there is a certain tendency on the part of some provincial governments to crawl out from under their responsibility as to what the minimum wage should be by saying that this is for the minimum wage board or some such advisory body to decide upon. We think that in terms of responsible government it would be better to have the minimum put right into the act. I would not be averse to the act being changed to permit the governor in council, on the recommendation of some advisory body, to raise the figure higher. I think, in any case, parliament should take the responsibility of putting right in the act what the bare minimum should be.

Another objection that might be raised would be the suggestion that this bill, unlike some of the provincial measures, covers all the workers in the field covered by federal labour jurisdiction. Most of the provincial statutes pick out certain sectors of industry, some of them even make a division on geographical terms. I point out again that that is because provincial labour jurisdiction extends to just everybody who works at anything except those in the categories reserved for federal labour jurisdiction. Since that is the case, it is necessary to leave a certain amount of latitude to the lieutenant governor in council to deal with matters.

So far as federal labour jurisdiction is concerned, once we get beyond transportation, the employees in banks and in communications, there are few employees covered, so there are not so many questions about the kinds of employees who may be covered. Hence, there really is no doubt but that we have a responsibility to draft the legislation in such a way as to cover all of those who come under federal labour jurisdiction.

Another objection that might be offered, if someone is just looking for an excuse as a basis to oppose the legislation, would be that this is in advance of what the provinces have put on their statute books thus far.

I think we have already answered that in the quotation I gave from the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress. I do not apologize for this bill being in advance of what the provinces have enacted. I am proud of that fact. That is the sort of thing we should be doing in this parliament, namely giving a lead, proposing legislation that matches today's conditions.

Surely in today's conditions no one can seriously contend that the minimum wage should be anything less than this figure of $1 per hour. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members generally will realize that this bill is in line with the position that has been taken by all parties, namely that it is time to round out our labour legislation.

Particularly I hope that hon. members on the government side will realize how fully the presentation of this bill coincides with the things they said during the election campaign with regard to labour. They promised a great deal more. In fact, from what was said during the election campaign and from what was said by government spokesmen after the new government came into office on June 21, I thought that we would have at this session a review of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act and the introduction of legislation on vacations with pay, statutory holidays, maximum hours of work and minimum wages. But the Prime Minister today gets to his feet and, in reply to one question, says that it depends on the co-operation of the house whether certain measures can be brought forward. But when we come back with a supplementary question he admits that some of the matters that we want are not ready as far as the government is concerned. In other words, that excuse about the co-operation of the house becomes a hollow one when one really examines into it. I hope that excuse will not be put up in relation to this matter. When the Conservatives were on the opposition side of the house they promised for a number of years back that they would review and overhaul the labour legislation. They have stood for the principle that is contained in this bill. They said so during the election campaign. They have said so since then. Here is another opportunity, along with several others that we are giving the government in bills that are on the order paper.

I hope the house will see fit to accept the principle of this bill. That is all that is involved in voting for the second reading, namely approval of the principle of a minimum rate of wages for all employees under federal labour jurisdiction. Implicit in that approval, of course, is approval of our proposal that the figure, the rate itself, whatever it is, should be not less than $1 per hour. I present this bill for second reading, Mr. Speaker, hoping that the house will approve it so that I can then move for its reference to the standing committee on industrial relations.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be limited to only one aspect of this legislation. I do not intend to make any comment whatsoever as to the over-all effect of this bill or its desirability. There has been one thing which has come to my attention and that is the problem as to whether the hon. member in this case can bring forward a bill of this type. The explanatory notes of the bill indicate that the purpose of this bill is to establish a minimum rate of wages with respect to all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, the third section reads as follows:

> This act applies to and in respect of employment upon or in connection with any work, undertaking or business that is within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, including, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing—

Then the bill goes on with many itemized types of works and services which are to be covered by it. I think it is a generally understood principle that a private member cannot propose legislation which would have the effect of increasing the amount of moneys to be spent by the federal government. If the explanatory notes are correct and if the section to which I referred covers the situation, I believe that this legislation would cover all employees of the federal government. I am not aware as to what are the rates of pay that are presently in effect with the various employees of government and in the various departments. I am not so sure that my observations can be extended to the numerous crown companies which may be affected by this legislation. However, I am wondering whether we may not be on dangerous ground and may be creating some precedent in connection with this type of legislation.

I would respectfully submit for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, this question as to whether in fact—without referring in any way to the general effect or purpose of the bill—it may not be overstepping the rules in so far as what a private member may introduce into this house. I would raise that matter at this time as a point of order. It may be that other members will have something to say on this particular point. I might say that I think it should be disposed of before we continue with the debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If this is a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I had better deal with it now. May I do so?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Casselman): Yes. It is my intention to allow you to go on and then when we have heard the discussion, I will set the matter over until such time as the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point of order which the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) has raised is, I take it, to the effect that a private member may not introduce a bill which directly involves the expenditure of public money. May I point out to him that there have been decisions on points of this kind in the past. For example, at page 457 of Beauchesne's third edition, there appears a decision of some length, the headnote of which reads as follows:

A bill, which does not involve a direct expenditure but merely confers upon the government a power for the exercise of which public money will have to be voted by parliament, is not a money bill and no resolution is necessary as a condition precedent to its introduction.

Similarly at page 459 there is set out another lengthy decision, the headnote of which reads as follows:

A bill designed to furnish machinery, for the expenditure of a certain sum of public money to be voted subsequently by parliament, may be introduced in the house without the recommendation of the crown and without a resolution being first considered in committee.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is not a bill which calls upon the federal government as such to spend any money. This is a bill which requires employers who come under federal labour jurisdiction to meet certain conditions, and it undoubtedly would result in increased costs to those employers. The bill does not specifically name the civil service or employees of crown corporations. But if, as a result of the passing of this bill and its becoming general law, the federal government as an employer or crown corporations had to get money to meet the terms of that law, there would have to be further votes in the usual way.

That is what is envisaged in the two decisions of Mr. Speaker Sproule to which I have drawn attention by referring to pages 457 and 459 of Beauchesne's third edition.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that not long ago—last session, I am told—the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) presented a bill which is on the order paper again today proposing that cheques issued by the federal government be printed in the two official languages of this country. Mr. Walter Harris, then minister of finance, raised the point of order that this would involve the expenditure of money. We made the point which I have made right now that the bill itself did not directly involve the expenditure of money, but that if any money had to be spent by the government to meet the terms of that law there would have to be another bill, another appropriation, another vote. That contention, made from the opposition side of the house in support of a bill presented by an independent member of the opposition, was sustained by the Speaker at that time.

There have been other examples of that kind. In fact, I myself have sponsored bills which have been challenged on that point, but in all instances where they have been challenged the Speaker of the house has admitted that so long as the bill was merely one laying down a general law, one that did not in itself directly involve the expenditure of money, it was within the competence of a private member to introduce that bill.

Let me give further examples. A few years ago—and I give her credit for it—the hon. member for Hamilton West, now Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough), presented to the house a bill to provide for equal pay for equal work. Did the hon. member for York West raise a point of order about that bill? I am waiting for a reply. No, he did not. But that bill, so far as the section indicating what employees were covered was concerned, is exactly the same as that to which the hon. member for York West is now referring. No point of order was raised at all. The bill was presented, debated from time to time, and in due course its provisions became law though, of course, in a bill presented by the then minister of labour, Mr. Gregg.

Mr. Speaker, I have one other example. In this very session of parliament, on the order paper which is now before us, there is a bill in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) providing for annual vacations with pay. This is similar to a bill of mine, except, of course, that my bill is better. But may I point out that the bill of the Minister of Labour lays down a general law which affects pay to be granted to these people when on vacation. Again, the Minister of Labour has exactly the same categories as I have in my bill. Did the Minister of Labour precede the introduction of that bill with a resolution? No, he did not. If it were a money bill, that is what he would have had to do. And the fact that this house permitted him, quite properly, to introduce that bill without a prior resolution means that that was not a money bill in the terms in which we understand that phrase. That bill, presented by the Minister of Labour, was in order without the prior resolution required in the case of a money bill because it is not a bill directing the expenditures of money but, rather, a bill laying down a general law. If, in keeping with that general law, private employers have to spend more money, that is their business. If the federal government feels that it is morally bound to meet the terms of that law and has to expend more money then it has to take the necessary steps to get that additional money.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no question that the Minister of Labour was perfectly in order with respect to that other bill. No point of order was raised against it by the hon. member for York West or anyone else, and I suggest that though he is a smart lawyer and I am not—

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Don't be modest.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —he is off the beam in the suggestion he has made at this time.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I should only like to ask you to refer again to the meaning of the words "direct expenditure", as used by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in order to determine whether this will not be the direct result if this legislation is passed, that it may mean an increase of federal expenditures. I am not saying that it will, I doubt very much if it will, as far as present rates of pay are concerned. But it might, and I ask you to consider the effect of the words I have mentioned.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): On this point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has effectively disposed of the matter, but there is one point I wish to make, and that is that I personally do not believe that every time an adjustment is made in wages it becomes a direct charge. On the contrary, a satisfied employee usually performs his work in a more satisfactory way for the industry in which he is engaged—in this case, the civil service—and simply to say that conditions will be improved does not mean, in my opinion, that there will necessarily be an extra charge.

Mr. Arthur Maloney (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order? I hesitate to disagree with observations made to you by a recognized authority on the rules, but the contention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is that the proposed legislation does not directly involve the expenditure of money. I would have thought, with respect, that in simple terms the legislation he brings forward in his capacity as a private member would oblige the government of Canada in its capacity as an employer to increase, in certain cases, the moneys it pays out by way of salaries, and that therefore nothing could be more directly an expenditure of public money.

I do not think that the failure of the hon. member for York West to raise a point of order in respect to some piece of legislation at some other session would have any binding effect on Your Honour. All this must, too, be considered in another context, as the hon. member pointed out when he read our platform with such great glee—

Mr. Byrne: Interesting reading.

Mr. Maloney: Very interesting reading, and it will be followed by interesting actions.

Mr. Byrne: But fiction.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Maloney: The government has it in mind in its comprehensive view of labour and management to introduce its own legislation of this kind. That rather makes the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a Conservative in a hurry. But the government cannot do everything at once. I think this bill clearly involves the expenditure of money, and I therefore speak in support of the point of order.

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word in support of the point of order. I would judge from the contents of this bill that it would mean the federal government would have to employ extra inspectors to go around to these different business premises employing workers and according to the bill before us they would have to inspect or take extracts from any books or documents, etc. I would judge that this would involve an outlay of moneys on the part of the government.

Mr. Chown: Mr. Speaker, I thought our discussion of this point of order could be appropriately carried one step further when one looks at clauses 5 and 6 of the bill where the sponsor attempts, in clause 5, to move into existing contracts between employers and employees which in the case of crown corporations would again involve the expenditure of public funds in certain instances, and in clause 6, to make a financial encroachment, by providing that certain minimum amounts should be allowed for meals, namely 40 cents, and again that $50 a month should be allowed for room and board. I note that in clause 8 he provides a saving clause whereby if the contents of existing agreements do not come up to these standards, then the clauses I referred to and other clauses shall prevail.

At the same time, however, I think it is important while we are discussing this point of order that we should point to additional encroachments provided for in clauses 5 and 6. Indeed, one feels in reading the explanatory note of the bill that it is simply a bill to provide for a minimum hourly rate of $1 an hour and no more, and yet in the clauses I referred to, it proceeds to carry the whole matter two steps further and disturb many existing agreements between employers and employees by moving into areas which have probably already been negotiated at some considerable length. It is the point that it does involve the expenditure of public funds which I think should be brought to your attention, that is in clauses 5 and 6 as well as in clause 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Casselman): I am sure that hon. gentlemen have had a very interesting discussion on this point and I think you will also agree with me that it is a highly technical point and one that I with my limited experience in this chair should not undertake to decide. For that reason I would ask that the debate proceed. I will report the matter to the Speaker and when he returns to the chair he will then give his decision.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as a new member of this house who is availing himself of the first opportunity to rise to speak I would like at this time to extend belated but nonetheless sincere congratulations to both Mr. Speaker and Mr. Deputy Speaker on their appointments to their high offices. In the short space of time which has elapsed since the opening of this house we all have had, I am sure, ample evidence of their capabilities in discharging the responsibilities involved in occupying those high positions.

In speaking to the bill which is presently before the house, which is a bill to provide minimum wages for employees, I wish to state at the outset that I am in wholehearted support of any measures within reason which may tend to better the lot of the wage earner be he a labourer or any other type of employee because like many other hon. members in this house I am one who has been in that particular class all his life.

I have been closely associated with labour for many years and feel that I am well aware of the problems of the employee. I have been a mine employee for the past 22 years and prior to that I worked for a long period of time in various jobs in the city of Winnipeg. If I might be permitted to dispel any doubts as to my personal experience with the problems of labour I would like to cite the following example. I have in my hand an urgent letter which I received from a national publication in this country, Maclean's magazine, which is in the process of preparing an article which I hope will shortly appear in their publication concerning the district and town of Flin Flon. This most recent letter which is one of many I have received from them lately lists a great number of questions which they have submitted for my approval, verification or correction. In bringing up this point I would like to refer to one question they have submitted for my verification or approval. They ask me to confirm that I am now a Conservative member of parliament representing the constituency of Churchill and that in the mid-thirties I earned 56 cents an hour and worked 56 hours a week in a northern Manitoba mine. That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the questions I will have to correct for Macleans Magazine because although I did work 56 hours a week my wages were not 56 cents an hour, they were 42 cents an hour at that time.

In case you might think 42 cents an hour is a fantastically low figure I would hasten to explain that one of the main reasons for my going to the northern part of Manitoba to work for that kind of money was due to the fact that it was approximately double the amount I could possibly have earned in the city of Winnipeg in those days.

During my years as a mine employee I have been a union member continuously wherever possible and when possible I acted as a union steward. I hope hon. members will realize from these remarks that I am not only very sympathetic to the problems of employees but I would like to see those problems alleviated to the greatest extent and as quickly as possible.

Many of the provisions of this bill to provide minimum wages for employees are highly commendable and well thought out and some of them would tend to lessen to an appreciable degree some of the burdens presently being shouldered by a great many employees. There are, however, certain aspects of the bill which I think should be given much more consideration.

I hope that I have convinced this house that I know partially from personal experience the problems of the working man and that I am wholeheartedly in sympathy with him. We must, however, be fair, honest and open minded about these considerations; especially so when in many cases under this bill we shall be legislating in regard to public money. In this regard, I might say that be it public or private money with which we are dealing we must have the same consideration at all times.

I am one who will always look on both sides of the fence, and despite the fact that for over 15 years I worked as a labourer or mill operator,—and I believe did a good enough job to earn my money—I still feel that I and many others owe a great deal to the mining industry of Canada. I grant that over the years shareholders and promoters have made millions of dollars, but they also—and I know this very well—provided me with an opportunity to bring up my family in an atmosphere which was the essence of security. I believe and I honestly think that that is one of the things that the working men of Canada want today. People might say, or some might think, that I should be afraid that some of my constituents might feel that I am saying these things merely to get into the good graces of a mining company. Well, the people of the Flin Flon area certainly will not say that because there are too many thousands of them up there who feel just the way I do. We are fortunate in many ways to have experienced fine labour-management relations and these have resulted, I believe, in the building of one of the most happy, hospitable and congenial communities in the Dominion of Canada.

I say these things to try to show the house that I believe there are two sides to the story of many problems and sometimes both of them are very worthy. I have to say these things so that no one will feel that I am favouring one side or the other. For instance, after saying that some of the principles of this legislation to provide minimum wages were well thought out and that some should be given more consideration, I should like to point out—I have been very interested in this, especially if I am not out of order in referring to clauses—that clause 6 reads:

> Where board or lodging are supplied by an employer to an employee and are accepted by the employee the value of such board or lodging for the purpose of calculating the minimum wages the employee shall be paid under this act shall not exceed $.40 per meal for board and $.50 per day for lodging and no employer shall deduct from the wages of such employee any sum for board or lodging in excess of the values fixed herein.

Mr. Denis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, are we allowed to refer to clauses at this stage on the second reading of a bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Casselman): No; I am afraid the hon. gentleman is out of order but I can see the reason why he referred to the clause. During the argument on the point of order it was quite in order then to refer to clauses. I am sure the hon. member will keep himself within the rules.

Mr. Simpson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for stepping out of bounds and I certainly hope that on Saturday the Winnipeg Blue Bombers will not be charged with that infraction on too many crucial occasions.

In regard to this particular part of the bill, I wonder whether it is the feeling of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that this is a sufficient amount properly to feed and house an employee, or to what extent does he feel the employer should be willing to subsidize this venture? I am sure that extensive subsidization would be necessary. If it is public money we are dealing with this has to be considered. I can say, for instance, that in my area alone we can find many places where board alone runs from $2.10 to $3.00 per day, and still there have to be subsidies paid by the employer. Incidentally, in many instances these feeding places are running at a loss. We are fortunate, of course, to have some system set up in many of these places where the subsidies are taken care of by the employer. However, I cannot see, Mr. Speaker, where 40 cents per meal and 50 cents per day for lodging in certain areas of Canada is going to provide adequate money to house and feed those employees. I must say I would be quite happy if we could make desirable living conditions available to those employees at that amount; but from experience in the northern areas, where some of the provisions of this legislation will take effect, I am quite sure that this figure is quite a long piece off what would be required.

I think also the principle of the bill which suggests that the employer should provide articles of clothing, or necessary clothing for the employees, clothing which by regulations they have to wear, is a very good move; but there are aspects to that which, from experience in other places, have caused a great deal of concern. Consideration should be given to just how much of this type of clothing is included. For instance, safety-toe shoes, hard hats, miners' slickers, and things of that nature are provided in some places by the employers, but there is always the question of when new equipment is necessary. Some provision would have to be made with regard to how much of that equipment would have to be provided by the employer. I might say that in some instances a very good plan has been worked out under which the employer pays half of the cost of those articles. Therefore, there is no decision made as to when new equipment has to be purchased because the employee, since he pays half of the cost himself, just about calls the shot as to when new equipment is necessary. These are just two of the points that I feel should be given more consideration in this bill. Generally speaking I am in full support of the bill with some minor changes.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, with respect to what has been said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, I want to say that any miner who may have been required to work over the past few years for anything less than $1 probably would not have a stomach large enough to accommodate a meal valued at more than 40 cents. I am sure he is having some difficulty in justifying his position on the bill and for that reason has made some statements which should not be taken too seriously.

Mr. Simpson: I think the hon. member misunderstood me.

Mr. Byrne: Over the past several years when I have been in the house it has been the policy of some members of the Liberal party to take the attitude that questions of this nature were best left for labour-management negotiations. I, of course, have not shared their opinions on all occasions, but one reason the Liberal party has been so popular throughout the years is that there is such a wide range of views in the party.

An hon. Member: How popular?

Mr. Byrne: In the past I have personally supported legislation of this type.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You were not here.

Mr. Byrne: I make no excuses for that position. There is perhaps another reason why such legislation has not been brought forward since 1935. In 1935 it was deemed necessary to put a floor under wages because we did have a Tory administration at that time and there was a natural apprehension that the bottom was going to fall out of things. It may be understandable that there is such a feeling throughout the country now and that may be one of the reasons that prompted the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to bring forward this legislation again at this time.

There should be no quarrel among hon. members regarding the setting of a floor of $1 under wages. Some service industries make use of the gratuity system in order to make up the wages of those who are required to work at very inadequate wages. This legislation may go a long way towards eradicating that type of thing and it would lead to a much greater feeling of self-respect among employees. An employee who is being paid a living wage should not and would not be looking for gratuitous assistance from those whom he is required to serve.

I remember that back in 1947 the battle cry of the miners was for a wage of $1 an hour. They thought that if they could reach such a wage they would have achieved a goal really worth striving for. Since that time, of course, wages of miners in most instances and certainly of those in other industries have more than doubled.

It is hard to visualize people in this day and age being required to give their services for anything less than $8 for eight hours work. There are precedents even in this house for the setting of a floor. I refer to farm products. For instance, does not the wheat board, a body established by parliament, set at the beginning of the crop year the minimum price that they are prepared to pay for wheat? New legislation is anticipated, in fact it is on the order paper even today, which we hope will be brought forward before the Christmas recess so that we will be able to deal with it and give farmers producing other products some assurance that they will receive a proper price for their goods.

Therefore it is not setting a precedent for parliament to accept legislation which would establish a minimum wage of $1 an hour for all employees. The unemployment insurance commission considers that an unemployed person sitting idly by his fireside—perhaps I should not say "idly" but it is correct—is entitled to at least $30 a week, and if he is able to go out and work for a day or two a week he can have an income of $43 a week. The average work week in Canada is in some cases even less than 40 hours a week but 40 hours is more or less standard. Such an unemployed person is entitled to be idle and receive up to $43 a week. Surely a person working in a service industry or other productive industry should be entitled to at least a minimum of $40 a week.

I do not want to take any more time in this debate. I hope the bill will be voted on this afternoon and that if it is given second reading it will go to the committee on industrial relations where it may receive a thorough study and where we may be able to find out if there is in fact a large or small number of people who even at this date in 1957 are being required to work for less than $1 an hour.

Mr. Christian: Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to ask a question at this time of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)? I thought he would have dealt with the particular point during his speech. In what work, undertaking or business, to which clause 3 of the proposed bill has application, are the employees now receiving less than $1 an hour?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I speak now I will close the debate. I should be glad to do so, but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Casselman): I am afraid the question is out of order. We are on second reading of the bill.

Mr. Christian: Would the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre agree to answer the question later?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to make a few comments in connection with the bill presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Since this is the first time I have undertaken to make a formal address in the house, I wish to take this opportunity of expressing my most sincere thanks to all members of this house for their kindly reception of me as a new member, and to the members of the civil service who have been so kind in every way in helping to make my stay here pleasant and effective. I have a difficult role to fill in representing the riding of Middlesex West. My immediate predecessor was the parliamentary assistant to the minister of agriculture in the former government and his predecessor was, for many years, the postmaster general and minister of public works. The standards of service, therefore, to which the people of Middlesex West have become accustomed are very high. I feel somewhat at a disadvantage. However, it is my purpose to give them the best possible representation I can, and to be a good member of this house. If the great Canadians who have preceded us here and who have passed to their reward ever come back in spirit and hover around this place, I hope that anything I might say or do will meet with their approval.

In so far as this bill is concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of great pride to me to belong to the party which was mentioned by the member for Winnipeg North Centre in opening his remarks, which party under the administration of the late Right Hon. R. B. Bennett attempted to introduce into Canada a minimum wage act. I am glad that the member for Winnipeg North Centre, and no doubt his colleagues in that part of the house as well, have made a careful study, not only of the minimum wage act but a number of other acts which were introduced by that administration. I am sure that after studying these acts anyone would reach the conclusion that the Conservative party, now the Progressive Conservative party, has been more courageous and more ambitious in passing legislation for the benefit of the people of Canada than any other party in the house.

This effort to establish a minimum wage act has remained dormant now for many years. It is being revived, and no doubt while there are arguments both for and against it, as a conservative, spelled with small "c", I would probably be justified in reminding the members of this house that every time we increase our social security we decrease our individual liberty. However, as a Progressive Conservative I think it may be fair to say that as a result of the interference which has taken place with the natural laws of supply and demand, these laws are altogether too harsh in their application now. If we were to allow the law of supply and demand free play, and to follow that through to its logical conclusion we would have people starving in our country today, lying on the streets suffering from lack of hospital care, without sufficient clothing to protect them from the winter. However, we have come a long way from the days when people did starve to death, die from exposure or from lack of care. I am glad that we have come a long way and, so far as I am concerned, there still may be a long way to go before we reach that Utopia that we may relegate to the land of our dreams and leave as an objective to which we can aim but an objective which we can never attain in full.

I am going to take up for a moment the relationship of this act to the majority of the people in the riding which I represent who are farmers. I am going to suggest to you that although there is no mention of farmers in the bill and it does not apply to farmers I am sure that one of the reasons behind the introduction of the bill is that the actions of this government in setting a minimum wage should have an influence on the people in the country. It should influence every employer, and it should influence all wage earners. It should influence everybody. It should set an example of fair dealing in the matter of wages.

With that in mind, I should like to point out to this house that it is out of the question for the average farmer to come anywhere near living up to the provisions of this bill. I have made a little calculation. We know that there are slightly more than 30 days in the average month, but we will take 30 days for ease of calculation. Three meals a day at 40 cents a meal would come to $1.20, and for 30 days that amounts to $36. If we allow 50 cents a day for a bed to sleep in, that would amount to another $15, and $15 added to $36 gives us a total of $51 for board and lodging which a farmer could expect to deduct from the cash remuneration he paid his hired man. Then, if we limited ourselves to working eight hours a day, and I do not know of any farmer who does because it is mostly ten hours or more, at $1 per hour this would amount to $8 a day and for 30 days it would amount to $240. We must remember that on a farm Sunday is just like most other days. Then, if we subtract $51 form $240, we arrive at $189 per month, plus board, that the average farmer would be expected to pay if he lived up to the good example set by this bill.

If anyone inquires at the unemployment insurance or labour offices, I think he will find that the average wages paid to newcomers to the country run from about $65 a month and board up to possibly $100 for those with some experience. The hired man has disappeared from the rural scene in the area which I represent. I know of two or three hired men in the township in which I live. They are men who have worked for their employers for 25 years or 30 years. They are elderly men who can no longer depart for other places or other jobs. They are going to finish right where they are. That is the only type of help left in that area.

Last spring while I was going around campaigning I passed a field one morning and in it saw a neighbour lady. I knew her and I know her husband. Her husband is crippled up with rheumatism. I expect that both of them have been drawing old age security allowances for some years. The little old lady was out on the tractor trying to plant some oats. That is the farm situation in the area from which I come. The young people are leaving. The old folks are left struggling as best they can to keep the homes together.

I am pointing this situation out only to show that we must do something. If we are going to set minimum rates of wages and if we are going to relate rates of wages and prices, and are going to protect industry which includes both management, labour and invested capital, then I wish to point out to this house that we are also going to have to take similar action in raising the status of our farmers.

I do not know whether or not the resolution is out of order as I have no technical knowledge in that regard. I do not know that it matters very much whether it is or not. I am in favour of legislation of this kind. I hope that something can be done to improve the standard of living of those on lower rates of pay. However, we must equalize the rest of our economy so that one class of people is not discriminated against by passing legislation of this kind for the benefit of another group in our economy.

Mr. Louis Deniset (St. Boniface): I just wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I am in favour of the principle behind this bill. From time to time the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) advances many ideas with which I am not in agreement but this is one with which I am in agreement and I am pleased so to state at this time. We must do all we can to help government employees and, in fact, all employees. Of course I reserve the right to study the bill when it reaches the committee stage. However, I do not want to bury this bill under flowers. I hope that no party in this house intends to bury it under flowers. This matter, of course, might be gauged by the length of speeches. Therefore at this time all I want to do is to register my approval.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): I rise at this time, Mr. Speaker, to express my sympathy for the general intention behind this bill. As I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) outline the historical background to this particular measure in this country I could not help but recall that the first minimum wage law was passed in the United States in 1938 and that its passage was possible only after a long series of court cases which finally resulted in the admission that this type of law was constitutional in Washington. It is interesting to recall that the first hourly rate established under the minimum wage law in that country was 25 cents an hour and had increased only to 40 cents an hour in 1945. When the measure was first introduced in the United States there were large numbers of employers who objected to the passage of the measure because they felt that it would have an extremely injurious effect on employment in that country. The main effect of the legislation, as experience later showed, was to displace several thousands of pecan shellers in the state of Texas and other southern states who at that time were working for eight cents an hour. Of course, the industry had to mechanize and become more efficient, so there were gains to be had on all sides.

The effect of this measure in the United States has been studied and the experience has been that it has had no harmful effect on employment opportunities, the chief difficulty being in the field of enforcement, a fact which caused difficulties to enforcement officers in the first years in the United States.

I feel that this particular measure reflects the advances that we should be making in the field of labour legislation in this country, however far they are behind those made by our neighbour to the south. For that reason I give it my support. However, I want to take the opportunity provided by the introduction of this bill to discuss some related and pertinent wage problems in my own constituency of Inverness-Richmond.

One of the hon. members of the Social Credit party asked the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre whether he could outline any employees presently receiving an hourly rate of less than $1. During the past hour or so I have been examining the wage rates now prevailing in the national parks of Canada, particularly the Cape Breton Highlands national park. I find that in that particular park there are 11 classifications of employees receiving an hourly rate of less than $1 an hour. I am sure that there are other national parks, particularly in Quebec and the maritime provinces, where classifications of employees receive an hourly rate of less than $1. I hope that the passage of this bill will have the effect in certain instances of superseding the results that are gained from the present wage surveys conducted by the Department of Labour. At present, as hon. members are aware, these prevailing rate employees are paid according to the results of wage surveys conducted by the Department of Labour whose recommendations are then submitted to the appropriate department for action. This procedure has resulted in extremely unusual distortions and anomalies in the payment of wages to various employees in various parts of Canada. Of course the purpose of using wage surveys was a good one because an attempt was made to guarantee that government employees would receive at least the maximum average rate prevailing in any particular labour market. However, I think this particular system has serious deficiencies or at least it works well in only two particular situations.

First of all, in a situation where there is a very competitive labour market and where employers of labour are bidding for workers, with the result that the highest possible rate is paid, the wage survey table will guarantee the government rate is based on a competitive rate provided in a competitive labour market. The wage survey works well in that situation. It works well, also, in a unionized market where the action of the trade unions has guaranteed that the union rate is being observed. And then, of course, the prevailing rates to government employees is based on that type of sample.

However, in the Cape Breton Highlands national park there are very serious limitations on the use of wage surveys. I think hon. members of this house will be surprised to learn that there is a great difference in the wages paid to employees of the Cape Breton Highlands national park, for example, and the employees of the Banff national park, although both groups of workers are hired by the same employer, the government of Canada or the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. For instance, a labourer employed at the Cape Breton Highlands national park receives 70 cents an hour, while the rate for similar work in the Banff national park is $1.35. Likewise, the prevailing rate employee—the labourer in the Cape Breton Highlands national park who works a 44-hour week is paid $39.60 under the present rates, while his counterpart in the Banff national park receives $59.40, a discrepancy of almost 50 per cent in the payment made to Canadian workers employed by the same employer. For a carpenter in the Cape Breton Highlands national park, the weekly pay is $55; in Banff, it is $88. For a motor mechanic in the Cape Breton Highlands the rate is $58; in Banff it is $74.80. The weekly rate of a painter is $48 a week in Cape Breton in respect of a 44-hour week, while in Banff it is $79.20.

I do not believe any sensible Canadian can justify this wide discrepancy which exists between these rates of pay, and members of parliament who have national parks in their constituencies, particularly in the eastern parts of Canada, should compare the wages received by their constituents with those received in other parts of the country, particularly in the western parts.

I know it is a great privilege to live on the island of Cape Breton, particularly in areas surrounding the finest and most beautiful national park in Canada, but I doubt whether employees are prepared to pay for this privilege by receiving in wage payments almost 50 per cent less, in the case of labourers, than workers in the Banff national park.

The situation is made even more absurd by the fact that wage surveys undertaken to establish the prevailing rate in this particular park are based upon a survey of wages in two fishing villages, the villages of Ingonish and Cheticamp where there is no real industrial employment and where there are no unionized plants. Even the Department of Labour would, of course, be making some improvement in its rate-setting if it took into account the wages paid to labourers in the adjacent coal mines in the Cape Breton coal field or in the steel mills in Sydney where the rates are much higher. Instead, we find the Department of Labour using these wage surveys in areas where they were never intended to apply and in which there is no basic competitive labour market or unionized market to guarantee that these workers will receive just and fair treatment.

I am supporting this measure, Mr. Speaker, as a first step toward remedying the injustice which now applies to prevailing rate employees in certain parts of Canada. I believe that its passage would guarantee to at least 11 classifications of employees in the Cape Breton Highlands national park a basic minimum of $1 an hour. I do not regard that as sufficient or proper, because I believe that these prevailing rate employees should be treated in exactly the same way as civil servants or employees of the Canadian National Railways are treated. These employees receive exactly the same rate no matter where they live in Canada. While I am supporting this measure on that ground, and for other reasons, I do not believe that the rate which would ensue under this legislation would provide fair and just treatment for these classifications of employees I have mentioned.

It is the object of this government and of this parliament to do something about narrowing the gap in income which exists between various regions of Canada. A very modest but important step would be to make the rates paid in the Highlands national park in Cape Breton equal to the highest rate applicable in Canada. Failing this, I will settle for the moment as a first step with having these 11 classifications raised to at least $1 an hour as a basic minimum.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my first word is to congratulate the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas). I think he has made a splendid beginning, and it looks as if he is going to continue as the champion of the farmer. Of course, I do not agree with him about the wages paid to those who work on the farms. I think the man who drives a tractor on the farm has a good right to have the same wage as the man who drives a tractor in the city or for a corporation. But I will not answer him any further on this, because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has included in his resolution an explanatory note with respect to "all employees". That is why I asked him if it included the fair sex.

Mr. Speaker, I have a right to speak on this question because I know something about it. I have worked on the farm. I have worked in an office in the government. And in my first year out of university in Winnipeg I earned 15 cents an hour carrying bricks. I became the president of the first labourers' union in Winnipeg, but I was there only a short time because I went on to timekeeping and was then considered a capitalist. But the man who hired us for 15 cents an hour became a millionaire in less than ten years. Therefore, my interest in the matter today is that the labourer should get a square deal.

My interest in supporting this resolution is because it deals with the lowest paid workers. A man employed in the construction work in which I was engaged at that time received 15 cents an hour. A bricklayer got 45 cents or 50 cents; he was always paid three times as much as a labourer. And I think the outstanding argument which can be voiced in support of this bill is that it deals with the people who are in the lowest income bracket, the labourers who receive $1 an hour. Of course I know that in Fort William we pay our labourers more than $1 an hour. I asked the hon. member if this applies to both sexes because we do not pay our working ladies $1 an hour. I doubt that the wives of any hon. members pay their charwomen $1 an hour.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. McIvor: These ladies who work in private homes and do decent honest work have as much right to receive $1 an hour as if they worked in a factory or an office. I am convinced that corporations ought to pay $1 an hour for their labourers because this is only fair but as it is well understood today our labour organizations realize what the corporations are making and they endeavour to have the wages adjusted accordingly. I do not know whether or not this bill is in order and I have just a little doubt about that but if it is in order I am going to support it. Thank you.

Mr. S. H. S. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, we presently have legislation for equal pay as between the sexes. The legislation which is presently introduced indicates a minimum wage of $1 per hour regardless of the type of work done by either of the sexes. I would like to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) how he brings the two principles into agreement. The provinces have had control of labour legislation because of the wide differences in economic conditions across the country. Subject to an assurance that the legislation will not supersede the proper authority of the provinces and subject to an explanation regarding my first question I should like to fully support this bill.

In his introduction of the bill the hon. member referred to the universal shortening of the work week as being desirable. I feel that in relation to some industries this is questionable particularly when no consideration is given to the particular industries involved.

At the moment we have a serious problem in winter seasonal unemployment. In this connection I think it is particularly true of the western provinces where winter weather is so much more severe. This is a difficult problem for those in the agricultural industry who become unemployed but it also has another effect. Due to the large number of unemployed at that one particular time of the year we have a falling off in purchasing power right across the nation. This is inclined to create a chain reaction such as we are experiencing at the moment which then starts to create unemployment in industries across the land and produces what can develop into a serious condition of general unemployment.

What have been the original solutions adopted to meet seasonal unemployment? Much consideration has been given to this question throughout the years by unions, management, individuals and government. The first solution of course was higher wages during the working year to compensate for lay-offs. This worked fairly well at first but gradually more people who were regularly employed were able to obtain higher wages and the unemployed person became worse off than ever before due to the increased cost of living. Another attempt made in recent years that met with some success was the promotion of winter employment and improvements in winter construction through scientific methods. This has been of particular assistance to tradesmen but is not of too much benefit to general labourers.

The basic answer to the problem on the part of the government has been unemployment insurance. This of course assisted the individual in enabling him to live during that particular period providing he qualified for receipt of benefits and the government has now acted in the face of a serious situation to improve the benefits which unemployed workers may receive at this time. This, however, does not answer the problem created by the terrific shortage of purchasing power during the winter season and it will not answer the problem facing us this winter.

The unions have recently been considering and advocating a new type of approach to this situation known as the guaranteed annual wage. In some industries which are relatively stabilized this may work and in fact in some instances the unions have been able to negotiate contracts which brought this about. Strangely enough it is not particularly new in developed countries. Some years ago when the price of tea rose sharply in Canada the reason was that the government of India had decided that the tea producers in that country should provide accommodation even if it were a mud hut and should provide food even if it were only rice to the people employed in the tea industry.

I believe that in certain industries we should direct our efforts towards shortening the work year rather than shortening working hours or the work week. This would mean a great change in thinking on the part of most concerned, away from the idea of shorter hours and a shorter work week toward a shorter working year with a paid holiday period falling in the months of January and February. This is already done in one large profession. Although they are not affected in the winter period we have long grown accustomed to acceptance of the fact that those engaged in the teaching profession receive regular pay throughout the year and we do not even think of them as being unemployed during those long periods in the summer when the schools are closed and the teachers are not doing their usual work.

A similar system could be introduced particularly for labourers in fields where their work cannot be accomplished or is economically unsound in the winter months. In this particular group I think it is essential that they be available for work when work is available for them and that it might be wise for them to be on paid holidays in that period when no work is available due to the fact that it simply cannot be performed or conducted at that time. This would have the effect of equalizing their pay and levelling out their purchasing power throughout the year so we would not be regularly thrown into this rise and fall in market conditions across the country.

The thought I have introduced at this time is not of course directly related to the legislation before us but it is an idea to be left before this house for those who may be interested in management, unions or the problems of government in dealing with the serious difficulties created by unemployment at a time when seasonal unemployment is of so much concern to the nation.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, representing as I do a constituency which is partly made up of working men, I could hardly do otherwise than support every measure which tends to improve the lot of these people. That is why I wish to go on record as favouring the resolution introduced by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

The main object of the bill is to provide for a basic minimum wage of $1.00 per hour for every employee coming under federal labour jurisdiction, whatever his age or ability, as long as he remains in the service of his employer, that is the government.

This bill would also authorize the governor in council to establish a higher hourly rate for part-time employees, that is for all those who work at least 32 hours a week.

This legislation is not conceived along the lines of provincial regulations regarding salaries. It constitutes a new approach to the matter and is designed to establish a minimum wage on the national level, since as yet no Canadian legislation applies in this field.

In all the provinces, minimum wage legislation (every province except Prince Edward Island has such legislation on its books) merely provides for bureaux where the rate of wages is determined after consultation with the employers and labour organizations concerned. It is generally provided that this wage must be approved by the lieutenant governor in council.

The minimum basic rates established in this way vary considerably among the various provinces and within particular provinces. The highest rates, with the exception of certain rates established for particular industries, is $30.00 a week for men in the urban centres of Alberta, and for both men and women in Saskatchewan. On the basis of a forty-hour week, this rate yields an average hourly wage of 75 cents, and on the basis of a forty-four hour week, an average of 68 cents.

It will therefore be seen that the rate proposed by bill No. 4 goes much farther than the minimum wage rates generally applied in the provinces at this time.

No province has struck a minimum general rate for all its workers. A distinction is generally made, in the provinces, between more experienced workers as well as between communities of various sizes.

Generally speaking, certain exceptions are also made with regard to certain groups of employees such as those belonging to a particular age group or those classified as apprentices.

I am sure that hon. members would find it rewarding to study provincial legislation in this regard before expressing an opinion on the matter.

In principle, this bill appears to be more along the lines of American legislation whereby a minimum wage rate of $1.00 per hour is established for employees under federal jurisdiction. This legislation was originally enacted around 1930 and provided at the time a minimum of 25 cents per hour.

One question which arises immediately is that of determining what effect that proposal would have on wages now being paid to employees who would come under the act.

According to the estimate made by the economic and research division of the Department of Labour, probably no more than 5 per cent, or approximately 20,000 employees of industries subject to federal jurisdiction are now paid less than $1.00 an hour. These are mainly to be found in a limited number of occupations such as the telephone industry, radio, transportation, grain elevators and hotels. The occupations most directly affected would be junior office employees, a certain number of telephone operators and service employees such as cleaners, watchmen, etc.

In terms of costs for the industries involved, the whole thing does not seem to be overly expensive. If this proposal were implemented, it could very well have far reaching effects on the standards of wages in the provinces. It would certainly force the provinces to increase their basic rates. How would this proposal affect the rates paid to more experienced employees? That remains to be seen and considered.

According to available information on surveys carried out in the United States, any minimum wage legislation generally tends, in the long run, to affect salaries paid to other employees, as well as to those who come under the established minimum. By that I mean that if the lower salary ranges were increased, the higher salary ranges would be increased also.

In establishments where there are a substantial number of workers who are at present under the prescribed minimum, a large proportion of these could expect salary increases over the few months following the implementation of this legislation, a fact which would upset the economic balance of the industries concerned.

The major provisions of this bill are along the lines of a recommendation contained in a brief presented to the government by the Canadian Labour Congress on October 21 last, with regard to the establishment of a minimum wage of $1.00 per hour through legislative action.

I believe that on that occasion the representatives of the congress were informed that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) would give serious consideration to this recommendation. I think I can also say that the minister has already under consideration legislation along those lines which he will shortly bring before the house. It will be noted that the house has not been told how this basic rate of $1.00 per hour was arrived at. This matter will require more thorough consideration because of the substantial margin between that rate and the highest minimum rate provided by provincial legislation.

I think there is merit in the suggestion that this matter should be thoroughly discussed so that the house may obtain as many details as possible before coming to a decision.

While I am in favour of this bill, I would like everybody here to give the legislation serious study before arriving at any opinion in this regard.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon Chown (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised when my hon. friend launched the debate this afternoon to find that the ranks behind him were so thin. Indeed, all I saw over in that corner was emptiness. In view of the history of sympathy for the ranks of labour across this nation of that party I do not for a moment suggest that his absentee fellow members would not in their speeches give support to the legislation we are considering today. To show that the Progressive Conservative party likewise have their hearts in labour and are in sympathy with the things that they were seeking and sought from the previous government so unsuccessfully. I should like to put on the record the history of our party in this regard.

The Conservative party first gave recognition to labour as far back as 1873 when they recognized the principle of fair wages and reasonable working hours. They set up the first federal machinery to promote industrial harmony between employers and employees. They gave the first recognition to compensation for employees injured at work. They appointed the first trade union member as minister of labour. They gave the first federal aid to provinces and municipalities for unemployment relief. They established the principle of unemployment insurance and set up the first national employment bureau. They established minimum wages, limitation of hours of work and fair wage contracts and, to show the country that you should never underestimate the power of a woman, in February, 1953, the Secretary of State (Mrs. Fairclough) first introduced a bill to provide equal pay for men and women in the same occupation.

She presented the bill again in November, 1953 when it received only first reading. In April, 1954 the bill was presented in the house and at that time it was voted on and defeated by a vote of 109 to 78, although several members of the previous administration supported the bill. In February, 1955 it was again defeated by a vote of 107 to 83. In January of 1956 the bill was placed on the order paper. In August, 1956 the previous administration brought the same bill in and it was passed. In that field our party forced on the previous administration, through the efforts of one of our outstanding members, legislation applicable to both sexes across the country.

Since the government has been in power it has already taken steps to combat the problems of unemployment by the very sweeping changes in the unemployment insurance benefits that were passed yesterday with the consent of all members of the house. Indeed, the government has on deck a bill to provide for statutory holidays with pay, one week in the first year of employment and two weeks thereafter.

Then to show that our interest continues in the problems of labour, a great number of whom live in my constituency of Winnipeg South, particularly in St. Vital, our party is on record that it will do all in its power to maintain full employment with the highest possible standard of living, and towards that end it has already provided indirect legislation. For example, there is the legislation to provide cash advances on farm-stored grain. That is a measure which will put in circulation a great deal of money, namely $150 million. Such money will provide additional employment and additional wages pursuant thereto for many people in western Canada.

The government has under review, and I am sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has made this clear, national labour legislation which they are considering in consultation with labour, management and all levels of government. Towards that end they have under consideration as well the need or lack of need for compulsory arbitration as an instrument in settling labour disputes, the elimination of delays in conciliation procedures, the limiting of hours of labour and the provision of vacations with pay for workers under federal jurisdiction, which is already on the order paper. In addition, as I have already pointed out, they have brought into the house changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which will undoubtedly benefit a great number of people who for the time being during this temporary set-back are without employment for a longer period of time than is usual.

Therefore I think we can well be proud of the efforts that have been made by this party throughout its long and glorious history. We can assure with confidence hon. members across the way that all aspects of labour-management problems are already under consideration by the cabinet and indeed have been discussed by private members with private members and by private members with the cabinet. But you cannot build Rome in a day. We have not been encouraged by some of the antics of some of the opposition members in our desire to bring before the house as expeditiously as possible and in the interest of everyone's Christmas holidays the legislation that was set down and considered in the throne speech debate. I think it is necessary as far as members on all sides are concerned that we should move forward without any further delay to endeavour to consummate before Christmas arrives what we offered to the public of Canada before June 10.

I am one who in the practice of law has had the privilege of representing both management and labour. I represented management as an alderman of the city of Winnipeg where I was a member for three years and chairman for one year of the committee on personnel and legislation which dealt with all wage problems brought before it by the federation of civic employees. On the other side of the fence, it was my privelege to represent the firefighters of greater Winnipeg and the municipal police forces of greater Winnipeg in their labour negotiations with management in the various municipalities surrounding our great city.

Therefore I am not one who walks on either side, favouring management or favouring labour, but one who has sought out on all occasions a compromise agreeable to both parties. I think the point of order which was raised dealing with the appropriation of public funds to meet the costs of crown corporations and other contractors and units of the federal government was very well taken, and it seems to me that in clauses 5 and 6 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has encroached on an area which I, with the experience I have outlined to the house, consider part of the bargaining and conciliation procedures that must of necessity take place towards the acquisition by labour of certain fringe benefits.

In the experience I have had I have found that these are benefits that work in favour of labour as an instrument for compromise, and to legislate them into existence through this bill as an adjunct to the clause providing for a general minimum wage or $1 an hour is, in my opinion, going beyond the intent that the hon. member had in mind when he first brought the bill into the house. I would be more sympathetic, by a great degree, to the principle involved here if these two clauses had been omitted.

There is another point which I feel deserves consideration and that is—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he not aware of the fact that the clauses of the bill to which he is referring, perhaps improperly so under the rules but I am not raising that point, do not add additional benefits but are inserted there merely to make sure that the benefit that is provided will not be subtracted from by some subterfuge?

Mr. Chown: It may be that the hon. member's point is as outlined, but my concern with it is this. In certain instances, under existing agreements, there may be no provision whatever for the contents of clause 5. Then, in the normal course of events and through changing practical application of the company's purposes for existence, this may become the subject of negotiation in agreements in the future and in my opinion might deprive the union of an instrument or weapon with which to negotiate—and this has been my experience with fringe benefits—which would lead to the consummation of a happy agreement. For that reason I would rather have seen that clause in particular omitted. I think it is the minimum benefit which the hon. member is getting at in clause 6, which concerns the minimum benefit for the provision of meals, board and room in certain areas of industry across the country, mining in particular.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a further question? Would he not agree that if this clause were not in the bill an employer could pay an employee $8 per day and then deduct a $5 per day charge for board?

Mr. Chown: I cannot agree with that thinking, because I would not expect the business agent of workers in that area of employment would agree to such terms provided the workers were organized. I know the hon. member is speaking probably of workers who are not organized, but I cannot envisage that happening in the field of operation where board and room is involved because there would be few workers who were not organized. If they were organized, I think the practical experience—I cannot cross the country and I do not know what the regional situations may be—would be to the contrary. It may be that that is not true of the maritimes, for example.

Again I feel that this is better left to the field of conciliation than to be provided for in legislation and enforced upon employers across the nation.

Mr. Barnett: I do not think the hon. member knows much about collective bargaining.

Mr. Chown: I outlined my experience earlier, and probably it is greater than that of the hon. member who made the comment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no; and I know both of you.

Mr. Chown: Perhaps the thing to be considered by the house is the fact that there is a conference on the uniformity of legislation across the nation which takes place just a week or so before the Canadian Bar Association convention.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa,
November 28, 1957

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 28th November, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to a certain bill.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General
(Administrative)

A message was delivered by Mr. C. B. Larose, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) for the second reading of Bill No. 4, to provide for minimum wages for employees.

Mr. Chown: Before we rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I made brief reference to the work of the commission on the uniformity of legislation under the auspices of the Canadian Bar Association. Every year that association, meeting in convention, has done very valuable work in connection with provincial legislation in promoting uniformity of legislation with regard, for example, to acts dealing with bills of sale, chattel mortgages, and conditional sales, besides—getting nearer to the subject—with the matter of the workmen's compensation acts of the common law provinces of our country. The commission is, no doubt, about to consider other labour legislation which is already on the statute books of the provinces, and in this useful service they are making a great contribution, without any interference by federal legislation, in this field.

I know that as late as October 21, 1957, the congress of labour submitted to the dominion government and cabinet their memorandum on what they are seeking in the form of labour legislation from this new government, and on page 17 thereof they said in part, and I quote:

But the dominion should not confine itself to doing as well as the best of the provinces. It should give a lead. It should, specifically, establish a legal maximum work week of 40 hours and a legal minimum wage of $1 an hour. This is not really a very drastic proposal. About 65 per cent of all plant workers in manufacturing now have a standard work week of 40 hours or less; so have all railway workers and a host of others.

So, they dwell primarily on this point of a 40 hour week. However, a little later they go on to say, and I quote again:

As for the minimum wage, there must be precious few workers in industries under dominion jurisdiction who are not getting at least $1 an hour. In some industries under provincial jurisdiction a minimum of $1 an hour might be hard to apply immediately, but in most provinces the legal minimum rates are preposterously low and if parliament set a minimum of $1 an hour for industries under its jurisdiction, that might provide a spur to the provincial laggards.

In its own submission, the Canadian Congress of Labour, by using the words "a minimum of $1 an hour might be hard to apply immediately" would indicate that having tapped the information available to it, the congress recognizes that there could be some difficulty in the application of federal legislation of this sort right at the outset.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question. Was that the end of the quote?

Mr. Chown: That was the end of the quotation. I went down to the words "provincial laggards".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member repeat the part of the quotation he used, when he stopped before he got to the reference to the provinces?

Mr. Chown: I did not stop before the reference to the provinces. I went right through the quotation, as you will find by reference to Hansard if you read it tomorrow.

There is something which arises out of that quotation which was brought to our attention by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) when he said there were certain depressed areas in the economy of the country where in present circumstances, subject to change by the new administration, it might be most difficult for employers to pay the minimum wage of $1 an hour suggested by this legislation, and that it would not be in our best interest to impose on provincial governments dealing with these depressed areas a wage rate which they in their present financial situation cannot possibly meet immediately.

Another thing which comes to mind is the question of casual employees. All of us have had some dealings with this matter in the past and have found that because of the stringent application of provincial legislation a certain hardship has been worked on people who are advanced in years, for example, and who are perhaps not able to work full time, or who, if they can work full time, cannot work to full capacity. This situation occurs when a person is suffering some physical handicap and in cases where the nature of the work is such that it can, perhaps, be done by a child, for example, but is made available to some one who requires some sort of income to supplement an old age pension.

This legislation would encroach on the supplemental earnings of many of our older citizens, and bring hardship to bear on them, because it would be necessary for the inspectors who we would have to employ under this act to prevent these people, or their employers, from engaging in this sort of relationship notwithstanding the fact that the employee might be perfectly satisfied to take less than the legal minimum of $1 because the amount he was earning did provide supplementation to a war veteran's pension or to a disabled person's pension or to an old age pension. That is a conflict which might arise if such legislation as this, or even, indeed, certain provincial legislation, were applied too stringently.

So for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel that labour should be given the opportunity to follow up the brief which they submitted to the cabinet, perhaps to the industrial relations committee; make their representations, go into all the details of the possible difficulties I have endeavoured to outline, and then come forward with a well thought out act to be proposed by the government for the consideration of parliament after all these things have been thoroughly discussed and a greater degree of unanimity has been reached as to the terms and conditions to the act than is apparent at the present time.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, this act, an act to provide minimum wages to employees is, I feel, a very important act, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to be congratulated for having brought the matter to the attention of the house. The legislation has a great deal of merit and whether it should be proposed as a motion on the order paper or whether it should be brought into the house as a bill might be debatable. However, it is my opinion that this question should receive the attention it warrants.

I feel that the government should be the first to recognize it has an obligation to those over whom it has jurisdiction. In introducing his bill the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre read from the explanatory note or perhaps the text of the bill itself which we have before us but he did not enunciate in specific terms exactly which groups would be involved should this bill become law. The hon. member should be given an opportunity to outline to the house how many individuals might be involved and those industries to which he had particular reference in drafting the bill.

In this day and age it is unthinkable that any one should be able to pay an employee less than $1 an hour. We in this house recognize the tremendous increase in the cost of living and we found it necessary to increase the pensions of the aged, the disabled, the blind; to increase the war veterans allowance and assistance under the Old Age Assistance Act in order that the recipients of these welfare payments would be better able to meet present day costs.

The bill before us relates to individuals who are doing work in an industry whether or not it is a government-operated one. In this regard I would point out that our minimum is definitely too low. Costs are an important factor, of course, and must be borne in mind but I feel that the additional work we would get from an employee if we paid him a fair wage would be ample compensation for whatever increase might be granted.

As I listened to the hon. gentleman who introduced the bill I wondered in exactly what category temporary employees engaged by the Post Office Department would come and whether or not they would be affected by this proposed legislation. If they do come under the provisions of this bill then I would accept that as one of the reasons why we have so much difficulty at the Christmas season in securing adequate temporary help to handle the additional mail.

In crossing the country I have frequently discussed this and similar problems with those with whom I have been associated. I discovered that some of the individuals who work in our national parks receive a sum considerably less than the figure quoted in this bill. Choosing an example at random I would point out that the waitresses employed in the hotels in the national parks are dependent for a large portion of their livelihood upon the whims and fancies of philanthropic people who are prepared to reward them for their services in the way of tips which help to augment their salaries.

Recently a friend of mine who is a business executive and frequently has occasion to travel across the country drew this very question of tipping to my attention. My friend felt that individuals receive sufficient money in the form of salary and should not be given gratuities and went on to suggest that if they did not receive a sufficient wage it should be increased so they would not be forced to rely on the philanthropic individual who is prepared to give them a few cents for the small extra services performed for him. I believe we should pay people in these circumstances a sum sufficient to enable them to live comfortably without depending on gratuities the general public might give them. The people who depend on the receipt of tips dislike being forced into the position of parasites just as much as would an employee who receives a fair wage.

I have frequently asked myself about the question of those civil servants who are not doing the jobs they should be doing. That is not just an irrelevant statement, it is a matter of fact. I am sure that hon. members in this house have frequently heard from their constituents about cases of this nature. Frequently we are told that some of our civil servants are just not doing the job they should be doing. Whether or not an individual is a civil servant and whether or not he receives $1 an hour the fact remains that if industry in the surrounding area pays more than $1 an hour or more than the wage he receives for doing a similar type of work or for the time spent in doing a specific job you have a disgruntled employee.

Naturally enough, if you are going to pay someone less than $1 an hour you are going to have an employee who is worth less than $1 an hour and if he is worth more than that sum it is reasonable to assume that the only reason he stays on the job is because he has no other job to which he can turn. In some instances he may be a person raised in an atmosphere of fear concerning the loss of his job and his inability to secure other employment. As long as such conditions exist they will not be conducive to an employer receiving from an employee the best service he can perform.

One hon. member opposite in the Liberal party mentioned that the provisions of this bill would not add to the cost of production and I would agree with him because, as I said earlier, if the present rate of pay of an employee is lower than that offered by industry in the surrounding district for comparable work the employer will not get his dollar's worth in terms of productive labour and if the employee is paid less than $1 an hour the employer will receive performance in like kind.

[Mr. Hahn.]

Mr. R. H. Small (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, when the bill was introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) he expressed the view that is common to most of us, that we are in general accord with the principle of the bill. The first time this legislation was presented was by the Bennett regime in 1934 when Canada agreed to conform to the international conventions of the League of Nations and the legislation that followed was declared ultra vires on the question of split jurisdiction. He covered the general purposes fairly well.

With respect to a minimum wage, I can recall when the matter was first introduced into and adopted by the city council of Toronto some years ago. It was more or less sponsored by James Simpson, who was active in the trades and labour councils of that day. They desired to have a minimum wage on all work pertaining to the city of Toronto. Pratically all of the labour men endorsed the idea but Jimmie Simpson pointed out that a minimum wage eventually became a maximum wage. The unions did not have the strong status they have today. Instead of calling it a minimum wage, Mr. Simpson had it accepted as a fair wage.

To see that it was enforced they had to appoint a fair wage officer and the fair wage officer was probably someone who just filled in from another department. He was not very conversant with the demands for labour at that time, and there was considerable difficulty in having the provision adhered to in the work that was being done by the various contractors for the city of Toronto. It was confirmed at that time that 50 cents an hour was the amount that should be paid to ordinary labour. Skilled labour at that time, as it is now, was generally paid a higher amount and did not come within the purview of the provision.

Then, the time came when there was unemployment. There was no unemployment insurance at that time and they had to make provision, on a welfare basis, for the people in Toronto who were out of work. That was done mainly through the removal of snow. One of the other controllers, who employed labour, conceived the idea that the way to make more work was to place more people on the snow removal and he also thought it would be a good idea to have the fair wage minimum reduced to 45 cents an hour. He was not successful in doing that; the amount of 60 cents an hour was maintained; but the point I am trying to make is that a minimum wage eventually has a tendency to become a maximum wage in the ordinary flow of lower grade workers, as I might call them.

I can remember the discussions that went on, and it was always the desire of the council to create more work. Only a certain amount of money was appropriated and when that was spent there was the usual wrangle to get more. In some winters the necessity for snow removal was not very great because there was very little snow to remove. At other times, when there were severe storms, they did not have a sufficient labour force to move the snow, and even if they did have a sufficient force they could not move it in the time required.

As the war came on they resorted to mechanical methods of removing the snow. Therefore, they reduced the labour force and they moved the snow by mechanical equipment at a considerably smaller cost.

Then there is the question of talking out this bill. Everyone who has spoken here today has said that he is in favour of the purpose and the principle of the bill; but no one is being deluded. No one can be fooled. Everyone knows that this is a case of jockeying for what might be called position. We witnessed the same performance when the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) sat on the opposition side of the house and introduced her bill calling for equal pay for female labour for equal work. We all know what happened. For three or four years in a row the matter was talked out because it was not expedient, in the eyes of the government of the day, that a bill should be brought in by a private member, because it did not give them the necessary kudos to go to the people and have to admit that some person on the side benches or in the opposition had brought in such a bill. We are in the same position. We do not intend that legislation such as this should escape us. It is covered here very amply.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was very fair in his statement today and no one can complain about that. No one can complain about his having the desire or the initiative to try to get this legislation on the statute books in his name and in the name of his party. That is fair in the hurly-burly of politics. Each one of us is striving for the ascendency of his own party.

When the Canadian Labour Congress met here on October 21 they presented their memorandum to the government. They covered what I would call the whole gamut of the scale. They outlined what they desired of the government, what they approved and what they disapproved and related the hopes they had for the future. At the conclusion of their memorandum the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) replied and said this:

> No one reading this document or hearing it read, would have any doubt that it had covered in general most of the problems of our country, not only in relation to labour, but in relation to the economy as a whole. Your representations will receive mature consideration, based upon the emergency nature of some of the representations which we believe at the present session will have to take precedence over many others that we would like to deal with.

I could read further from the Prime Minister's comments. The congress delegation were very fair in making their presentation. The government received them and listened to them very carefully and I think attentively. I think the Prime Minister left a favourable impression on the delegation and indicated that he intended to do something about most of their problems. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will agree with that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The former cabinet also listened attentively.

Mr. Small: But there is this vast difference. Since the present government listened to them they have implemented two or three things that I can recall. They rescinded the regulations that discriminated against married women so far as unemployment insurance is concerned. They have extended unemployment insurance benefits to take care of the unemployment situation. Six particular items have been brought down since the session opened and probably three or four more will be dealt with, since the government has the benefit of the wisdom of the Canadian Labour Congress. The government is implementing its promises as fast as it is possible for it to do so. The only difference that has come up in this house is that we are accused of having made very many promises, which is quite true, and various remarks are made about how we are fulfilling them. Some say that we are not accomplishing them to the full, down to the very percentage point. Others say we are not getting the legislation through fast enough, but the fact is that we are taking our promises one by one and are fulfilling them having regard to the expediency and emergency of the situation. I think you will find that the people of the country will realize that the government is endeavouring to meet its promises, and as time goes on I think that even the opposition will say that we have done a very good job.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question? Do I gather that the hon. member and his colleagues really support the idea of minimum wage legislation but want to vote for it on their own motion rather than on a bill from the opposition side of the house?

Mr. Small: You have described it aptly. Do not let us fool ourselves about this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is quite an admission.

Mr. Small: Well, as far as I am concerned it is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You will not vote for it just on its merits but you will consider it depending upon which political side it comes from.

Mr. Small: We are taking the matter as the Canadian Labour Congress presented it to us and they have enunciated it very well. I will not read the whole memorandum but there is one clause in their presentation that struck me as being very appropriate to the situation. The Canadian Labour Congress said that a judicious relaxation in monetary policy would also help. They went on to say further in their presentation to the government:

> The situation is markedly different from what it was when the tight money policy was adopted.

That shows they are cognizant of the effort that the government made last summer when $150 million was made available to help the building and construction trades. That is now bearing results in relieving the situation created by the tight money policy that was in effect and the situation will continue to improve because $200 million more is being made available to keep that industry going. The money will be available in the right places at the right time in order to help the right people.

An hon. Member: In Ontario?

Mr. Small: No, that is the game you were trying to play during the election. You were trying to set one province against another.

Mr. Hardie: What was your game?

Mr. Small: This money was made available to any province that wanted to apply for it in order to build homes for the people who needed them.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): One-half of one per cent for the maritimes.

Mr. Small: The maritimes are being looked after and better than when you people were looking after them.

An hon. Member: Don't try to be a leader. You cannot.

Mr. Small: I think the official opposition should be the last people to say anything about what is being done for the maritimes.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The government is now fulfilling its promises and it is probably hurting to the extent that the opposition are now trying to outbid. When their convention is held you will see the greatest bid ever made to the people of Canada to try to encourage them to support the Liberal party. They have not done anything about a minimum wage bill since 1934. They are the ones who took it off the statute books, and even though it was ultra vires it was good legislation. At that time the government of the day thought it was the right thing to do because it was under the aegis of the League of Nations but the Liberals opposed it. Why? Because it came from that man they cursed up and down the nation the late Richard Bennett who put such good legislation on the statute books that right down to the last sentence the Liberals took it over and put it back upon the statute books of the country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Liberals were against that other bill because it originated with Mr. Bennett and you are against this bill because it comes from the C.C.F.

Mr. Small: No, we will line up behind this and we will support this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Good.

Some hon. Members: Let us vote.

Mr. Small: Sure you would like to vote.

An hon. Member: Of course we would. How about you?

Mr. Small: Then there is the legislation brought down by the hon. member for Hamilton West. That is an example of what you did when it came to voting. You did exactly the same thing as we are doing tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Let us hear about that.

Mr. Small: We are going to bring in this bill. It will be brought in under the aegis of the Conservative government after proper thought and consideration has been given to it. It will probably be broader and wider and go farther towards meeting the wishes of the labour people. There will not be just one little piece of legislation that will be brought down.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What portfolio does the hon. member hold since he seems to speak for the government?

Mr. Small: I do not hold anything and I have never aspired to hold anything.

An hon. Member: You probably will not be here when the vote is taken.

Mr. Small: I will be here, don't worry. I should like to remind hon. members of the old fashioned labour days under Samuel Gompers whose goal was to attain a roof over the head of every worker and three square meals for every worker 365 days of the year. He was the old fashioned type of labour leader. He did not pin his faith on any one political party. The former A.F. of L. labour union to which I belonged always adhered to that. They always maintained that they would support the party that looked after their interests. If the labour people of this country follow the concept of Samuel Gompers they will go far, and keep going in the right direction. There are certain things I should like to mention with regard to that.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You still have ten minutes to go.

Mr. Small: Minimum wages are set out in a memorandum I have and nowhere in the country does the minimum wage exceed 75 cents an hour. In Newfoundland it is 50 cents for men and 35 cents for women. In Nova Scotia it is on a weekly basis and the figures are $16.80 a week in the larger centres and $14.80 in the smaller centres. In New Brunswick the rate is 50 cents an hour for women working mostly in specialized trades. So far as Quebec is concerned, on Montreal island the rate is 60 cents for Quebec city and other municipalities it is 55 cents and for the rest of the province 50 cents. If you go through them all you will see that the situation is the same. This is a little more important than appears on the surface. If a minimum wage of $1 an hour is adopted it will be some time before it can be enforced because the provinces will have to make adjustments. If I had my way I would make the amount a little higher.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us what the minimum wage rate is in Ontario?

Mr. Small: I will give it to you. It is no higher than the rest; it runs from 75 cents to 80 cents. It covers a wider ambit. It is the same as in Alberta and British Columbia, where the going rate for mechanics or tradesmen is around $1.50 per hour and up. Probably the minimum wage in none of the provinces exceeds that of British Columbia which is 80 cents per hour. I am not trying to set up one province against another or say that one is any better than the other. However, we are going to need something more than the mere passage of this bill and putting it into force.

Before resuming my seat, there are many other things in connection with this subject that I should like to bring to the attention of the house and which were not mentioned in the labour brief. Probably they do not have very much to do with the government, but they are things upon which I have had strong feelings for some considerable time. I feel there has to be a re-alignment or adjustment in the ranks of labour itself. It is all very well to pass legislation of this type and to attempt to regulate business, but I think the time has come when in this country we are going to have to enact labour legislation of our own, set up our own courts, lawyers and judges that will handle this situation in Canada for Canada. There should be no dictation from outside, either by management or by labour. We should set our own rules, make our own decisions and labour as well as management will have to conform to them.

This is not a one-sided affair or we would not be experiencing the situation we have with regard to the seamen down on the St. Lawrence. I think the member for Winnipeg North Centre knows exactly what I mean. When you find gentlemen amongst the ranks of the upper brass of labour who should not be in the country and have no right in this country if the laws of the land were enforced, then I say labour itself has got to conform to certain rules and regulations. This must be done if labour is to have an organization, as we would want it to be, above reproach. Therefore, these things will have to come into being.

Personally, I would work to obtain all the things mentioned in the memorandum here, plus all the things I have mentioned. We do not want any repetition of the episodes that are taking place south of the border which are bringing labour into disrepute. Labour does not deserve this because the people who are bringing disgrace upon the movement form a very small fraction of the movement. Such episodes could occur in this country unless we wake up and establish laws in this country that will regulate labour for the benefit of Canadians. The sooner that is done the better it will be for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to be able to make a few observations on this important subject of minimum wages for employees. There is no question but that there exists a hiatus in our labour legislation as long as no provision is made for a minimum wage in Canada. What surprises me, indeed, is the fact that in years gone by such legislation was not enacted. It is hard to conceive, having in mind the highly industrialized development of Canada and the long and noble history of labour unions, that legislation covering such an important subject has been overlooked. Perhaps there are difficulties in the drafting of this kind of legislation which would be satisfactory to all parts of Canada.

I can foresee variable factors, such as differences in the cost of living as manifested by such items as the cost of rent, the cost of food, influencing what would be a suitable minimum wage standard in the different parts of Canada. Again, the nature of the occupation would have to be taken into consideration in establishing a suitable minimum wage. Some occupations are undoubtedly more hazardous, some are more arduous, some are more demanding of skills than others, while still others require special contributions which may not be common to all situations. These factors certainly increase the difficulty in arriving at a figure which would be both fair and adequate to meet the needs of the working man in all parts of the country.

Again, the setting up of what might appear to be a moderate and fair sum may within a very short period of time be viewed as an almost niggardly amount, especially if the buying power of the dollar continues the path it has followed during the past 20 years or so. I can well remember, Mr. Speaker, that after graduating from high school and following a special course in commerce I was able to obtain employment at the handsome sum of $12 per week, with a $2 deduction for five lunches which were served me during the week. This took place not so long ago; in fact, it was in the late thirties. It would be better, sir, in establishing such legislation to take into account the cost of living index. By tying this cost of living index to the minimum wage, we would thus ensure labour its rightful reward for services rendered. The $1 per hour rate outlined in the bill which is before us may be adequate for some parts of the country, but I am sure that in the high cost of living sections of this country this provision is totally inadequate.

Provincial legislation in some of the provinces may be more efficacious than the proposed bill. However, I do not think that this nullifies the necessity for such legislation, nor does it detract from the principle contained in this bill. What is desirable, however, Mr. Speaker, is, as I have outlined, a provision which would assist the greatest possible number of people throughout the entire land. Under present circumstances the minimum wage earned in many sections of the country has to be greater than that proposed by virtue of the higher cost of those essentials to life which people must provide for themselves. In the light of these circumstances the present proposal looks rather small and inadequate.

Looking at the problem in a general way, it appears that the only real solution to this problem is to take into account the cost of living and tie the minimum wage per hour to this figure. Otherwise we are failing to meet the problem face to face. I know in the area from which I come an amount such as $40 per week, based on a 40-hour week at $1 per hour, would be totally inadequate for any person to say nothing of those who are the breadwinners. This legislation would serve some useful purpose only if wages were to come down, but no purpose whatever when wages are rising. The important thing to keep in mind is, what will this dollar buy? If the basic commodities are priced high, then the standard of $1 per hour would be entirely futile. Certainly in the light of our observations during the last two decades, the dollar is buying less and less all the time.

There is still another aspect of the $1 per hour minimum wage proposal which I feel is worthy of mention, and that is the consideration of including a clause to that effect in all government contracts.

We who are believers in this principle of a minimum wage per hour should also give deep and thoughtful consideration to whether the contracts let out by the federal government contain assurance that the spirit of this minimum wage principle is incorporated within those contracts. It should be a matter of concern to us that fair wages are being paid on government works. Then it would be a matter for government officials to make certain that not only is the minimum wage per hour being paid but also, in keeping with this principle, that the minimum wage per hour be consistent with a fair wage for a particular region of the country, in keeping with the standards of living and the cost of living in a given area.

The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small) has pointed out that in the city of Toronto, of whose local government I also happen to be a member, we have a fair wage clause considered in all the contracts that we let. In other words, our fair wage officer investigates the person who sends in a tender on a given contract in order to find out whether he pays what we consider to be a fair wage in our area. I think such a principle might well be considered to apply to any part or to any region of Canada.

Does a minimum wage per hour as outlined in the bill before us satisfy the requirements of such a fair wage? If we answer that question, then we must come to the conclusion that a minimum wage per hour must be such that it will be guaranteed by some means which would take into account the variables to which I have already referred.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the principle of a minimum wage is a sound one and one with which I heartily agree along with other hon. members of this house. I am concerned, however, whether we are protecting the best interests of the working man when we set an arbitrary figure which does not guarantee against any depreciation of the buying power of our dollar. There is also the problem of applying such a standard to an area where the cost of living is so high as to nullify the good motivation which is contained in the legislation which we have before us. In so far as the minimum rate of $1 per hour is concerned, these are some of the problems which require a solution in order to bring about in this field sound legislation which would assure the working people of this country a decent minimum rate of wages.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that we have in the house tonight a great party, the Progressive Conservative party, that great friend of labour. But let us tell our labour friends that they are great only in that we have heard some very silly remarks put on Hansard not for the purpose of supporting this great labour movement which they profess to support but in order to talk out a very minimum bill; and may I say that when we ask for $1 as a minimum wage, we are certainly asking for the very minimum.

An hon. Member: It is better than you have ever been able to do.

Mr. Peters: If the Conservative party feel that they have people employed to whom this act will apply, that it is going to cost a few dollars somewhere, they certainly should hide their heads in shame. If they assert that they are Progressive Conservatives, I would say that tonight there are no progressives but rather a great number of conservatives. Let us take a look at the rate of $1 an hour for a wage in this atomic age. We heard today from a gentleman who represented a mining community. I refer to the riding of Churchill. He went on to say that the miners in that area had worked for so much money so many years ago and pointed out what a great debt they owed to the mining industry. I worked in the mining industry, I am sure as long as has anyone in this house and I certainly owe nothing to that mining industry because everything that I received out of it I worked extremely hard for. I might suggest that when I started to work in the mines in 1940 the rate of pay was $4.64 a day; the rate was 58 cents an hour. We did not accomplish more than that rate because of a Progressive Conservative government giving a minimum wage law of $1 an hour.

We also heard the farmers speak of labour and how this minimum wage law would affect the farmer. I do not know whether this has something to do with immigration policy or what the situation is, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that farmers are going to go bankrupt if they sit around waiting to hire men for $65 a month. I live on a farm. We pay our hired men three times that amount. Even the Ontario compensation board will allow another $45 for his room and board; and I may say that in calculating wages the compensation board is not very generous. I can assure the hon. gentleman of that fact. If labour on a farm receives the rate of $150 a month which is not an unusual amount to pay on a farm for labour —and I suggest that that labour should also work for a reasonable length of time—he will be getting $1,800 a year. Then if you add another $540, he will receive more money than would be paid under this minimum wage if the man is working a 40-hour week. He will be receiving $340 more than this minimum wage and I do not think that that man is overpaid but I think the other is underpaid.

We have also heard some labour people—and I suggest that labour would not recognize them—speak in support of that valiant party that the old A.F. of L. supported. Frankly, it is my opinion that they never supported any political party and that is one of the problems that we face today. If they support a party, then that is probably what is being asked for tonight.

This act, I would suggest, will be something for the people of Canada. It is not going to cost the government any money because I am sure that representatives of all parties in this house would not be satisfied to see any of the workers under their jurisdiction receiving a dollar an hour or less. I am sure that they would all be in agreement that the payment of any employee under their jurisdiction should be far greater than that. But we find in Canada people who are still working for less and they continually look towards the provincial minimum wage laws as an "out"; and the provincial labour departments continually look towards federal labour jurisdiction for an act on which they can pattern their own provincial acts. I suggest that the Progressive Conservatives remember that word "progressive" and, instead of trying to talk this bill out, give it their support in the only way in which that support can be given, namely with a vote, and that they allow the vote to be taken immediately.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take just a few moments in which to deal with this bill inasmuch as it affects the people in my constituency. If we were to listen to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) perhaps I should not get up and talk here at all, because he stated that lawyers should not be talking on farm bills. If that is true, I have no right to talk on a labour bill. But this bill does affect the people I represent, and therefore I should like to make a few comments on it.

I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is quite sincere in his desire to help the people he represents, and I am equally sure that his colleagues, particularly the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), who has been a very able spokesman in this house for the farmers, is equally sincere.

But there are some difficulties, as I see the situation. I fear this bill is going to create an imbalance between industry and agriculture. There are real problems which exist in agriculture today. The price of the things we have to buy is increasing, while the price of the goods we have to sell is falling. This is a real problem and the disparity has been growing apace in the past few years. I would not suggest for a moment that wage increases are the only course of price increases. Indeed in these days of automation and organization wage increases in industry represent a very small portion of those price increases. But to the small businessman in towns in rural areas this presents a problem.

I should like to give the house just one example. I know of a businessman in my local town who wanted to hire extra help for the fall months. I think most hon. members will know that the margin of profit in most of these small businesses is very small. This individual managed to secure the services of an old age pensioner who was very happy to supplement his meagre pension, and they agreed on a salary, but the businessman was later informed that he was violating the minimum wage law of the province. Consequently he had a choice of increasing his wage or of letting the man go. He chose the latter course.

Now this was a disadvantage for both, and I am sure that this bill is not going to help the situation. In the result, the old age pensioner lost his opportunity to supplement his income, and the businessman could not provide the type of service that he wished to provide for his customers who were mainly farmers, without increasing the cost of what he had to sell. He could, of course, have complied with the regulations, but that would have meant increasing the cost to the farmers.

This appears to be the confused philosophy of the C.C.F. group—playing both ends against the middle; giving a great deal of lip service to the needs of the common man, yet advocating policies which would prevent him from making decisions which are rightfully his. I do not deny to organized labour the opportunity or the right of collective bargaining, or the right to achieve for themselves the highest standard of living possible, but I do believe that we should not assume the responsibility for arbitrarily determining what wages should be.

I, for one, would be interested to hear what the farmer members of the C.C.F. party will say about this bill. I note they have been strangely silent up to now. I feel that the passing of this legislation will be another stage in increasing the disparity between conditions in industry and on the farm.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Jorgenson: I am through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What would be his attitude to this kind of a minimum wage bill if his own government brought it in?

Mr. Jorgenson: My attitude, as far as I am concerned, would be that it would have an adverse effect on agriculture.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How would you vote?

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I had great hopes for the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) when he came to this house. I thought he might bring a breath of fresh air from Manitoba to the government side of the house, and that in this new government with its many new members we should not see so often a repetition of the kind of thing we have experienced in this house for so many years. But I see that the hon. member, after a few weeks experience in this house has become as adept in talking out, and in pitting farmer against labour as a great many other members have succeeded in being after many years in this place. I will always be prepared to stand in my place in this chamber and say that any person who does an honest day's work is entitled to an income in keeping with that honest day's work, and I do not believe you help the agricultural industry of this country by promoting and maintaining depressed wages and depressed areas in this country.

I have read the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress which was presented to this government a few weeks ago, and far from suggesting that there was any basic conflict between the people who work on the farms and the people who work in industry, organized labour came out in full support of the position of agriculture. In support of that contention I quote from the brief at the bottom of page 7:

> We are alarmed by the drastic fall in farm income. This is bad for the farm people, most of whom are far from rich, and who still make up one-sixth of the Canadian population. It is bad for the economy generally, which is still heavily dependent on exports, of which farm products make up about one-quarter. It is also bad for Canadian workers, for whose products a prosperous agriculture would provide a substantial market. This is particularly true of the agricultural implement industry, which remains in a very depressed condition, with employment only about two-thirds of what it was in 1949. We urge the government to redouble its efforts to sell our wheat at fair prices. Canadian labour will fully support anything the government can do to restore the purchasing power of Canadian farmers.

I say that is a statesmanlike position which has been taken by the Canadian Congress of Labour and consequently I fully believe—

An hon. Member: I don't.

Mr. Argue: —that Canadian farmers will fully support anything the government can do to restore and maintain at fair levels the purchasing power of all working Canadians.

The hon. member who is a member of the farmers union and who held an office of importance for some years and who, I have no doubt, is still a member of the Manitoba farmers' union today, knows that his organization sponsored with some success for a number of years a joint committee of the farmers union and labour called the interprovincial farm labour economic council. That body has been able to adopt and promote a common policy in the interests of farmers and labour in this country; and not only have they presented this common position but they have taken it to the government, so that it is becoming increasingly difficult for the government to say that because organized agriculture wants a certain body of prices the consumer is automatically against it. We know it is not so, because organized labour, representing almost a million and a quarter members in the Canadian Labour Congress, have supported and are supporting fair labour legislation and fair legislation in the interest of the farmer.

Not only is there growing co-operation between the farmers union and the Canadian Labour Congress but the other day I saw a report of an event which I think marks a great forward step in this country in terms of progressive thought. I refer to the announcement of the setting up of a joint committee composed on one side of representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress and on the other side of representatives of the Co-operative Union of Canada. Hon. members know that the Co-operative Union of Canada represents consumer co-operatives in this country as well as the credit unions and so we have the co-operatives—which are very important not only in western Canada and the maritimes but in all parts of Canada —now joining hands on behalf of their membership which includes consumers generally and also a large body of agricultural producers, with labour in a common front to get rid of the kind of policies and conditions this bill is directed against.

I think the Conservative government is going to get in trouble if it continues in the future to adopt the kind of attitude it has adopted today. Its attitude has been undemocratic for two reasons. In the first place, it is quite obvious that members of the government are talking the bill out.

Mr. Jones: You are.

Mr. Argue: We want a vote on it but members of the government want to talk out the bill. If the government were prepared to call a vote I would sit down but I know it has no intention of doing so because one speaker after another on the government side of the house has been getting up to enter the debate.

Mr. Brooks: Have they not as much right to do so as you have?

Mr. Argue: The second reason that the attitude of the government is undemocratic is that members of the government have gone all across this country representing the Conservative government as the friend of organized labour. But where is this government that is the friend of organized labour tonight? The government has entered speakers in the debate who have risen to say that the passage of this bill would make it more difficult for certain important sections in this country. We do not have a Progressive Conservative government today; the way it is behaving it can only be described as a straight Conservative government. This is a government of two faces. We cannot see one of its faces tonight. We can only see its Tory face.

I am sure that legislation giving labour its fair share of the national income is something that will be supported by all Canadians. Members of the Conservative party have risen to say that the passage of this bill would hurt some other sections of the country. I would be far more impressed personally if they would stand up in this house and say it is time the government got on with its legislation to provide improved prices for our agricultural producers instead of attempting to stall and delay the legislation they promised many months ago to give the agricultural industry its fair share of the national income.

I have been in this house in other years during which controversial debates occurred affecting both labour and agriculture and on behalf of the members of this group I can say that we are prepared at all times to stand four square in support of the best interests of the working people of this country whether they work on farms, in factories or in offices.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Vote.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, it is with some interest that I rise at this point in the debate especially after listening to the previous speaker. I think he will perhaps now realize how some of us on this side of the house have felt—especially those of us who are amateurs at this game—as we have seen how long it has taken the members of the opposition groups to say "yes" to that part of the legislative program the government has brought forward to date. I do not think that in all sincerity they can criticize us if we continue to reserve the right to bring in the labour program we wish to bring in that will cover the whole national picture instead of bringing it in on a piecemeal scale as has been advocated by one particular group in the house.

I agree with the principle of minimum wages set forth in the bill and I do not think there are many hon. members in this house who would oppose that principle. I do not believe this bill will affect very many people but I do not know in fact what groups it will affect or what effect it will have in respect to the prices of goods and the services produced by these groups. In any event we cannot oppose the principle of it because we believe that legislation of this kind would cover a group of people who have been overlooked in the passage of time, who have not been protected by the unions or by the demands of labour which would give them a living wage. For that reason it is good to set a minimum wage and although the amount suggested would not give these people an entirely adequate wage it would perhaps be something better than what they have. I hope there are not too many people in this group who do not receive this minimum wage, but it would serve as a good example to those who are not receiving such a wage.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would reserve the right to criticize certain particular aspects of the legislation. For instance I would question whether the provisions in clause 4 (1) are too rigid in saying that the minimum wage of $1 would be effective from one end of the country to the other. This is perhaps not correct because in certain industrial centres such as Toronto and Montreal a minimum wage of $1 an hour might not be sufficient and perhaps there should be some variation from region to region in relation to the costs of living in those areas.

I also would raise a question in respect to clauses 5 and 6 which I realize have as their purpose guaranteeing that the minimum wage would not be destroyed by employers causing employees to buy their own tools. I am wondering, however, if the implications of those clauses go beyond what was intended. Is it intended, for instance, that an employer should pay for the normal tools and equipment of an employee? I do not think that was the original intention. I feel that the intention was to cover special tools, equipment and clothing but as it is expressed here it leaves the implication that an employer might be responsible for paying for all the tools of a tradesman. Perhaps that does not matter very much because as a rule most tradesmen have their own tools and are receiving much more than the sum set out as a minimum wage but what I am concerned about is whether it would in effect add to the expense of employers who are already paying high wages to skilled tradesmen who now supply their own tools.

One other question which arises concerns enforcement. We note there are quite a number of clauses relating to the enforcement of the proposed legislation. It seems to be human nature that when we set out a laudable principle we have to have almost a police force to ensure its enforcement. With respect to clause 14 I suggest the imposition of a time limit which might be one year from the date of the commission of the breach or one year from the date of the discovery of the breach. I have no particular recommendation one way or the other but I observe that in one clause it requires that the records be kept for a period of two years but there is a possibility that an offence might be committed beyond the period and nothing could be done about it.

These are the few comments that I have on the bill itself. I would say, as I said at the beginning, if some of us on this side are taking a little longer to say yes than was expected it is because we have learned so well the tactics of the hon. members opposite to us.

(Translation):

Mr. Auguste Maltais (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, as it seems obvious that the Conservative party intends to extend this debate to the very end of the day so as to forestall a division, I feel justified in taking this opportunity of expressing my appreciation for the bill now before the house. I shall be very brief, and will merely state my reasons for approving the bill.

In the first place, the lowest rates of pay are those received by the least organized workers. In most cases, employees who draw good salaries are members of very strong labour organizations so that this bill providing for minimum wages would help the least organized workers of this country.

The second reason why I feel justified in supporting this legislation is that the bill to provide for minimum wages would tend to create more uniform standards throughout the country.

We have the experience of legislation enacted by this house to set up floor prices for certain products; I do not believe that the setting up of floor prices for some agricultural products has done any harm anywhere in this country.

The provision of a minimum salary of $1 an hour would tend, in my opinion, to rectify some situations existing in some parts of the country.

Those were, Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I wished to make concerning this measure since we shall not have the opportunity to vote on it, because the government members intend to speak until the time allotted to such measures has expired. I wish however, to emphasize that I am certainly in favour of this bill.

(Text):

Mr. R. C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, in Nova Scotia one finds the finest type of working man. Examples of his ability are many. Probably it was never better exemplified than during the last war when a then unindustrialized area welcomed war industries and supplied the manpower. And they did a job as well at that time as any done in any part of Canada.

Another fine example of their abilities and their virtue was provided in Springhill last year during the Springhill mine disaster and the later rescue of the survivors from that disaster. I feel this bill would be a great step in the direction of giving the labouring man of Nova Scotia the one recognition he has yet to receive, namely a rate of pay similar to that in other parts of Canada. I do not feel it necessary for me to cite examples of the inequities. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) made it quite clear inequities do exist and they are not peculiar to his constituency alone.

Clauses 5 and 6 are both steps in the right direction; for it is indeed unfortunate that in some instances labourers are forced to pay rates of board and lodging far out of proportion to their earnings. Further, in Nova Scotia, we find a labour force older than the labour force in some parts of Canada through the exodus of youth to greener fields. The older labourer has not the bargaining power of the younger man and I feel that this bill would assist him in his bargaining powers. To my mind this bill is a tribute to the forgotten man, the labouring man.

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, in rising on my first occasion in this house I should like to congratulate you on your elevation to the very high post which you now hold, and I should also like to extend my congratulations to your deputy. I might say, sir, at the beginning of the session I thought that had I been congratulating you at this time it would have been in what I would have liked to think were the dying days of the session. However, as things stand now it looks as though we may continue on until Christmas and perhaps into the new year.

Since I come from the riding of Essex South, which embraces the Windsor area, I would not like to miss the opportunity of speaking on this bill and to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on bringing the bill to the attention of the house.

In view of the time, it would not appear that the bill will pass tonight, but I do think that the principle behind it is the one thing that those of us in the Windsor area are heartily in favour of. We like to feel that Windsor is the cradle of our modern labour unions in Canada. Along with other hon. members I personally feel that legislation of this kind is necessary. It provides a floor for wages in the same way as floor prices are provided for agricultural products which may come under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

I would like to think, sir, that this legislation could be brought in by the present government. I would not want the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, for whose industry I have the highest regard, to have the opportunity of taking credit for this legislation, of course; but I do recall when I was just a young man, and I remember the days of the Conservative government from 1930 to 1935 when we had legislation of a similar nature. Hon. members who now form the official opposition were responsible for having that legislation declared ultra vires.

I am not certain, sir, whether I am in complete sympathy with everything set out in the bill. I would like to have the opportunity of hearing more on the minimum wage of $1. I do not know whether that is a proper amount. I am a little concerned about clauses 5 and 6, about the price of 40 cents for a meal and 50 cents a day for room. I am not certain whether these are proper amounts. I am also questioning the fact whether such measures should be included in this bill. Certainly labour should have some protection for gratuities that an employer may offer; but if such gratuities were spelled out or put on too high a plane, it may happen that the employer would pay a wage and then charge the employee something for those gratuities and thus bring an end to them. For that reason probably some other method should be designed to give labour the protection that it needs in this particular measure.

In conclusion, sir, I should like to say that I am supporting the principle of this bill.

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the bill I do so coming from a riding that has in the past been famous as an agricultural riding and is now day by day becoming highly industrialized. I can therefore appreciate all the arguments that have been advanced today both from the agricultural point of view and from the industrial point of view. But I do not appreciate the arguments advanced from the other side of the house that we on this side, because we see fit to discuss a bill which, after all, is the duty of parliamentarians, are attempting to talk it out. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows, it is our parliamentary function to speak in this place and any suggestions from the other side to the effect that we are not entitled to speak on the bill are, I suggest, quite improper.

As to delaying tactics, let it not be forgotten that every day since the house has opened the question period has extended from not less than one hour up to an hour and three-quarters, taking valuable time of the house and, sir, I suggest that most of the questions were not properly asked at that time. So let there be no suggestion from the other side that when we on this side seek to speak properly we are perhaps not exercising our proper function in this place.

Mr. Hahn: We are not debating the bill. We are co-operating. We want the bill to go through.

Mr. Pallett: Hon. members of the Social Credit party gave examples in the last session of the house of their regard for parliamentary traditions.

Mr. Hahn: We certainly do not try to ram business through in one day, whether it is unemployment insurance or anything else, and try to finish estimates, involving the spending of $4 billion, in 20 days.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member who introduced the bill belongs to a party which enjoys the confidence of the people of one province. I think it would be of interest to put on the record the type of legislation they have in that province with respect to minimum wages. As I understand it, in Saskatchewan there are two general orders, one applicable to all establishments not covered by other orders in the cities and the 15 larger towns and one applicable to such establishments in the remainder of the province. These orders set rates of $30 and $29 a week respectively for full-time adult workers and fix lower rates for employees under 18 years of age.

In addition, there are nine special orders covering specific groups of workers. The coverage of the special orders and the rates set for full-time experienced workers are as follows: hotels and restaurants in cities and the 15 larger towns, $30 per week; hotels and restaurants in the remainder of the province, $29 per week. For educational institutions, hospitals and nursing homes in cities and the 15 larger towns the rate is $30 per week; for educational institutions, hospitals and nursing homes in the remainder of the province it is $29 per week. Janitors and caretakers in residential buildings have a minimum rate of $40 per week. For truck drivers the rate is 85 cents per hour or 3 cents per mile, whichever is the greater. For logging and lumbering the rate is 70 cents per hour. For amusement places it is $30 per week and for oil well drilling rigs it is 70 cents per hour.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that as the government formed by the party to which the hon. member who introduced the bill belongs recognizes in a single province that it cannot legislate right across the board for an hourly rate, we too should recognize the limitations in attempting to establish across this wide dominion one particular rate to apply to all classes of persons. It must be recognized that in certain areas of the country fuel bills are higher. In other areas there are higher transportation costs. In other areas rents are higher. All of these factors must be taken into consideration.

I suggest that my friend could have improved the bill if he had followed the pattern, to which I point particularly with a certain amount of pride, laid down in my own province of Ontario as set out in the minimum wage act. I refer to the establishment of a board which may hold hearings in certain areas and negotiate and define minimum wages for those areas. For the hon. member's information I should like to read section 2 of the act. It is in these words:

> The board may arrange for a conference between employers and employees or their representatives in any business, trade, work, undertaking or occupation for the purpose of obtaining information as to the prevailing rates of wages and conditions of employment and may accept recommendations from the conference with respect to any matters which may be dealt with by an order of the board.

Section 3 of that act reads as follows:

> The board may establish minimum rates of wages for all employees and generally enact such provisions with respect to conditions of employment as may be deemed necessary for the betterment of the physical, moral and intellectual wellbeing of employees and without restricting the generality of the foregoing the board may make orders and by means of such orders may,
> (a) designate or define any business, trade, work or undertaking or the part or parts thereof to which the order is applicable;
> (b) designate or define the zone or zones within Ontario in which any order or part thereof is applicable;
> (c) classify employees and separately provide for any one or more classifications with respect to any matter over which the board has authority;
> (d) establish a minimum wage for the prevailing weekly work period in the business of any employer or for any other working period which the board may establish;
> (e) establish the maximum number of hours of labour which may regularly be worked in the business of any employer with respect to any minimum wage established.
> (f) establish minimum hourly rates of wages for overtime work;
> (g) establish minimum hourly rates of wages for employees who regularly work less than 40 hours per week;
> (h) define any term used in any order;
> (i) establish a special method of payment for any classification of employees;
> (j) specify when and under what conditions deductions may be made from the minimum wage established for time lost by employees through illness, holidays, absence from duty or for any other reason and also for special privileges or perquisites resulting from the nature of the work performed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pallett: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the hon. member is speaking in such praise of the minimum wage legislation of Ontario, will he tell us what the highest minimum wage is that has been established under that legislation?

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member knows the answer to that question himself. I do not have that information before me. But the point I was seeking to make—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member not know it?

Mr. Pallett: The point I was seeking to make was this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That proves that that kind of legislation does not have the effect the hon. member thinks it has.

Mr. Pallett: The machinery set up both in the province of Saskatchewan, where my hon. friend's party is in power, and in the province of Ontario is machinery designed to recognize conditions that may be found in different categories of employment and which would enable the different classes of employees to be dealt with equitably. If my friend's argument were followed to its ultimate conclusion, he would say to every man in the ranks of labour, no matter what your own particular qualifications are, whether you are skilled or unskilled, whether you have years of experience or no experience, you must work for exactly the same pay. I am sure that that principle would not be recognized in any way in any labour negotiations in the country. I would suggest that we, in parliament, should not for one minute attempt to recognize a principle that would not be recognized in labour negotiations throughout the country.

A minimum wage set at too low a level would have a very adverse effect on labour generally. If you set the minimum wage too low the effect would be to bring down the pay that employees receive and such a generalization would defeat the very purpose which I think my hon. friend is honestly trying to achieve but perhaps has not succeeded in setting out in the bill as clearly and as succinctly as might have been done. I think he recognizes this, as a matter of fact, because in the second last section of the bill, section 17, it says:

> The governor in council may make such regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act according to their true intent.

Immediately when one sees a section such as that in an act he says that the draftsman did not quite know what the act meant and is leaving it to the governor in council to draft the necessary regulations. A wording of that sort, Mr. Speaker, could only leave that sort of an impression.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question? Could he name me another bill similar in any way which does not contain a provision for the drafting of regulations by the governor in council?

Mr. Pallett: You evidently heard but you did not understand.

An hon. Member: That is not strange at all.

Mr. Pallett: I was speaking to the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, when I addressed that comment. The bill before us says:

—make such regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act—

If the section had stopped there, that would have been fine, but it goes on to say, "—according to their true intent". Those are the words to which I was referring in suggesting that the person who drafted the bill did not quite know what the bill meant and therefore was leaving it to the governor in council to be interpreted through order in council.

I believe there has been some suggestion by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), who took a great delight in twisting around his tongue the words "Tory", "Conservative", and all that sort of thing—I do not mind running as a Tory, a Conservative or a Progressive Conservative...

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Make up your mind.

Mr. Pallett: They all stand for the same thing. They stand for Canada and the interests of this party in labour was recognized in the brief to which the hon. member referred. I would suggest that the hon. member might read the first paragraph of that brief, which says:

Mr. Prime Minister and members of the cabinet: This is the first formal meeting between this new government and our only slightly older congress. But such meetings are part of the tradition of the Canadian labour movement. Indeed, they have been going on so long that they might almost be said to have become part of the unwritten constitution of Canada. It was on May 18, 1891, that the executive committee of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, successors to the Canadian Labour Congress of 1883, and predecessor of the Canadian Labour Congress of 1956, "waited on the Right Honourable Sir John A. Macdonald and the members of his government . . . when the various subjects of interest to our organization were laid before them".

[Mr. Pallett.]

I would suggest to the hon. member that the interest of this party in labour is a lot older than the interest of his party.

Mr. Argue: But yours did not continue.

Mr. Barnett: Was not the statement the hon. member read an indication of the interest of the labour body in the government, rather than the converse as the hon. member is suggesting in his argument?

Mr. Pallett: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that that interest has been maintained from 1891 until now. I say to the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in this government today will go down as one of the greatest Ministers of Labour this country has ever had.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He will go down all right, and all the other Tories with him. Will the hon. member permit one more question? If the government which he supports brings in a bill providing for a minimum wage for employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction will he support it?

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question put by the hon. member. However, I can say to him quite frankly that if the government did introduce a bill in exactly these terms, without the proper recognition across the country, I would very much hesitate to support it. I would point out to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that one very good reason why I could not support the bill in the form as drawn is that he has completely neglected the armed services in this bill. One of the largest groups employed by the government of Canada does not even get a mention in this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member knows that as a private member I could not introduce a bill that would call for expenditures directly to civil servants or to members of the armed forces. The hon. member surely knows that is the reason there is in this legislation no reference to any person who receives his wages or salary directly from the government, but rather that this is an act of general application.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He did not know.

Mr. Pallett: With that extra clarification from the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am amazed at his inability, with his long experience in the house, to draft a bill. If that is what he intended to say, it is not set out in so many words and it does not mean what the hon. member suggests it means because if the bill came in in that form, with that intention, I know it would not be brought in by the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Apparently the hon. member cannot read.

Mr. Pallett: In many languages he can, Mr. Speaker. There is another thing I should like to bring forward.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Pallett: I do so with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. Since reference has been made to the Canadian Labour Congress brief to the government I therefore think it has been brought into this debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The five minute whistle has blown.

Mr. Pallett: I should like to bring in something else. This is a matter that affects my own riding and I am going to point it out at this time since this brief has been introduced into this debate. It is a recommendation by the Canadian Labour Congress:

> The second matter is one of government policy. Under section 54 of the act, the late government saw fit to take Canadian Arsenals Limited out from under the act, nine years ago. The congress, and the employees concerned, have repeatedly asked to have this action rescinded, so that Canadian Arsenals' employees should enjoy the same rights as the employees of the C.N.R., the C.B.C., Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and so forth. The congress can see no justification at all for the existing discrimination against Canadian Arsenals' employees, and hopes the government will end it forthwith.

I would point out to this house that in the United States employees of a similar type enjoy the collective bargaining right. At one time there may have been in the minds of the government of the day some justification for leaving this group of employees out of the section of the act. I hope that some time in the not too distant future some steps may be taken to grant this right to these employees. I think perhaps if that happens, the hon. member would have to admit that the "Progressive" was back in ahead of "Conservative" and that we were moving along in the direction that we have always moved in the past. Having said that, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Say it over again; there are only two minutes left.

Mr. Pallett: The hon. member who has just interrupted—

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Say the first paragraph over again.

Mr. Pallett:—certainly had his opportunity to take part in this debate in the past.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minute flag is up. You have time for only one more kick.

An hon. Member: The quarterback down there has not had a chance to carry the ball.

Mr. Pallett: When the chitter-chatter subsides, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to start again. A labour policy is not formulated with the introduction of one bill that deals with only one aspect of labour legislation. The brief of the Canadian Labour Congress recognizes the fact that labour is vitally interested in every aspect of this economy, whether it be internal of external. By the same token, hon. members of this house must recognize the fact that we must not be interested solely in one aspect of labour legislation. If we attempt to pass single bills dealing with one aspect only it would be like trying to build a house without a plan; and everyone here knows what ensuing chaos would result. Consideration must be given to every particular feature that affects a large body of the population.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): You had better shoot the puck.

Mr. Pallett: I have often been on the ice with 30 seconds to go, so I know what it feels like. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Tory friends of labour have done it again.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall take up the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, then those of the Department of Justice and of the Department of National Revenue.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ORDERS IN COUNCIL, JUNE-OCTOBER, 1957

Question No. 187—Mr. Hansell:

How many orders in council have been issued in each of the months of June, July, August, September and October of 1957?

APPENDIX

PROVISIONAL COMMENTS ON REPORT ON LAW OF THE SEA

The Secretary of State for External Affairs presents his compliments to the Secretary General of the United Nations and has the honour to refer to note No. LE 130(3)-9-2 dated March 25, 1957 from the director of the codification division requesting any provisional comments which the Canadian government might wish to make on the international law commission's final report on the law of the sea and related matters.

The Canadian government desires to say that it considers that the increased interest of states in the exploitation of the resources of the sea and the consequent need for conservation and regulation of these resources along with the need to preserve the principle of the freedom of the seas calls for a reappraisal of the existing law of the sea and subsequent agreement on generally accepted rules, whether they be existing rules reaffirmed or revised or entirely new rules. Accordingly the Canadian government welcomes the convoking of an international conference to examine the law of the sea and proposes to be represented at this conference, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the secretary general on April 17, 1957. Regarding the international law commission's report on the law of the sea, the following are the views of the Canadian government on some of the recommendations of the commission:

(a) Breadth of the territorial sea and contiguous zone.

The relevant recommendations of the international law commission are as follows:

"Article 3:

1. The commission recognizes that international practice is not uniform as regards the delimitation of the territorial sea.

2. The commission considers that international law does not permit an extension of the territorial sea beyond 12 miles.

3. The commission, without taking any decision as to the breadth of the territorial sea up to that limit, notes, on the one hand, that many states have fixed a breadth greater than 3 miles and, on the other hand, that many states do not recognize such a breadth when that of their own territorial sea is less.

4. The commission considers that the breadth of the territorial sea should be fixed by an international conference."

"Article 66:

1. In a zone of the high seas contiguous to its territorial sea, the coastal state may exercise the control necessary to

(a) Prevent infringement of its customs, fiscal or sanitary regulations within its territory or territorial sea;

(b) Punish infringement of the above regulations committed within its territory or territorial sea.

2. The contiguous zone may not extend beyond 12 miles from the base line from which the breadth of the territorial sea is measured."

The Canadian government consider that any new rules must meet the essential needs of coastal states. The 3-mile limit is not adequate for all purposes. It is not adequate for the enforcement of customs, fiscal and sanitary regulations. It is also not adequate for the protection and control of fisheries. The commission has recognized in Article 66 (quoted above) the need for extended jurisdiction in respect of the enforcement of customs, fiscal and sanitary regulations. The Canadian government considers it to be fully as important that the rules of international law should provide adequately for the regulation and control of fisheries off the coast of any state. One way of providing for this would be by accepting, for general application, the 12-mile breadth for the territorial sea. That would allow for complete fishery, customs, fiscal and sanitary control and regulation within that limit and dispense with the need for any provisions along the lines of those contained in Article 66. It is recognized, however, that a general extension of the breadth of the territorial sea to 12 miles could have consequences of importance with regard to the freedom of sea and air navigation. Instead, therefore, of having a general adoption of the 12-mile breadth for the territorial sea an alternative approach which would not affect the rights of navigation by sea or by air would be to agree on a contiguous zone of 12 miles as recommended by the commission but with the modification that within that zone the coastal state should have the exclusive right of regulation and control of fishing. Rights over fisheries accorded by such a zone should, in the view of the Canadian government, be as complete as those that are afforded to a coastal state within the limits of territorial waters.

(b) Straight base lines

"Article 5:

1. Where circumstances necessitate a special regime because the coast is deeply indented or cut into or because there are islands in its immediate vicinity, the base line may be independent of the low-water mark. In these cases, the method of straight base lines joining appropriate points may be employed. The drawing of such base lines must not depart to any appreciable extent from the general direction of the coast, and the sea areas lying within the lines must be sufficiently closely linked to the land domain to be subject to the regime of internal waters. Account may nevertheless be taken, where necessary, of economic interests peculiar to a region, the reality and importance of which are clearly evidenced by a long usage. Base lines shall not be drawn to and from drying rocks and drying shoals.

2. The coastal state shall give due publicity to the straight base lines drawn by it.

3. Where the establishment of a straight base line has the effect of enclosing as internal waters areas which previously had been considered as part of the territorial sea or of the high seas, a right of innocent passage, as defined in Article 15, through those waters shall be recognized by the coastal state in all those cases where the waters have normally been used for international traffic."

This recommendation is acceptable to the Canadian government as reflecting the decision of the international court of justice in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case. The Canadian government agrees that the employment of straight base lines as outlined by the commission should be recognized universally as being a proper means of establishing the datumline for measuring the territorial sea or contiguous zone, in appropriate cases.

"Article 67:

For the purposes of these articles, the term 'continental shelf' is used as referring to the sea bed and subsoil of the submarine areas adjacent to the coast but outside the area of the territorial sea, to a depth of 200 metres (approximately 100 fathoms), or, beyond that limit, to where the depth of the superjacent waters admits of the exploitation of the natural resources of the said areas."

In its final report on the law of the sea (United Nations document A/3159, section III, paragraph 2, page 40) the international law commission stated that it "accepted the idea that the coastal state may exercise control and jurisdiction over the continental shelf, with the proviso that such control and jurisdiction shall be exercised solely for the purpose of exploiting its resources....." The commission believed, however, that the legal boundary of the continental shelf should be a fixed limit in terms of the depth of the superjacent waters because a boundary defined in terms of the admissibility of exploitation as the commission's first draft of 1951 proposed, would "lack the necessary precision and might give rise to disputes and uncertainty". The 200-metre depth was selected by the commission as the limit of the continental shelf because it considered that this depth is where the continental shelf in a geological sense "generally" comes to an end and that the limit proposed would be sufficient for all practical purposes at present.

Against the contingency that exploitation of the seabed at depths greater than 200 metres might prove technically possible the commission recommended at its eighth session that the continental shelf in the legal sense might be considered as extending beyond the 200-metre depth mark to areas at greater depths where the superjacent waters admit of the exploitation of the resources of the seabed of these areas.

This additional provision reintroduces the uncertainty which led the commission to favour a fixed limit in terms of the depth of superjacent waters for determining the legal boundary of the shelf. It is considered that the foreseeable possibilities of exploitation at greater depths than 200 metres might be provided for without sacrificing the element of certainty concerning the extent of states' rights to exploit the resources of the seabed. It is understood that in 90 per cent of instances, excluding polar regions, the edge of the continental shelf is well-defined geographically. It is suggested, therefore, that in these cases the boundary of the shelf should be its actual edge. Where, however, the edge of the shelf is ill-defined or where there is no shelf in a geographical sense, the boundary might be set at such a depth as might satisfy foreseeable practical prospects of exploitation.

It should be added that this suggestion might also solve the special problem raised by the international law commission regarding submerged areas of a depth less than 200 metres which are separated from the main shelf by narrow channels. While the scarcity of soundings in many areas makes it impossible to be definite concerning the number of such submerged areas it is thought that if the actual edge of the shelf were considered to be the boundary, by far the greater number of these "islands" would then be included as part of the shelf and would so not create a special problem.

(d) High seas fishing

The Canadian government has the following comments with regard to the draft articles indicated:

"Article 51:

A state whose nationals are engaged in fishing in any area of the high seas where the nationals of other states are not thus engaged, shall adopt measures for regulating and controlling fishing activities in that area when necessary for the purpose of the conservation of the living resources of the high seas."

There is a possibility that in a given area the nationals of one state could be exploiting one kind of living marine resource and at the same time the nationals of another state could be exploiting another kind of resource. The article, as presently drafted, does not seem to take account of such a situation. It refers to an area rather than to a particular resource. A more explicit statement appears to be desirable.

"Article 52:

1. If the nationals of two or more states are engaged in fishing the same stock or stocks of fish or other marine resources in any area of the high seas, these states shall, at the request of any of them, enter into negotiations with a view to prescribing by agreement the necessary measures for the conservation of such resources.

2. If the states concerned do not reach agreement within a reasonable period of time, any of the parties may initiate the procedure contemplated by Article 57."

The article, as drafted, might be interpreted as applying only to a case where the nationals of two or more states fished the same stock or stocks of fish in any one area. In some instances, to provide adequate conservation measures it would be desirable to have them applied to the same stock of fish even though it were fished in different areas. A clarification in wording is therefore suggested.

The criterion suggested by the commission (see paragraph I of its commentary to Article 52) for invoking the procedure envisaged in this article is that a state be "regularly engaged in fishing". Under Article 53 an existing regime does not apply to a newcomer unless he is engaged in substantial fishing (see paragraph 2 of the commission's commentary on Article 53).

It would seem reasonable therefore that under Article 52 a state ought only to be allowed to call for the establishment of a regime if it is engaged in substantial fishing, subject of course to Articles 54, 55 and 56.

"Article 53:

1. If, subsequent to the adoption of the measures referred to in Articles 51 and 52, nationals of other states engage in fishing the same stock or stocks of fish or other marine resources in the same area, the conservation measures adopted shall be applicable to them.

2. If these other states do not accept the measures so adopted and if no agreement can be reached within a reasonable period of time, any of the interested parties may initiate the procedure contemplated by Article 57. Subject to paragraph 2 of Article 58, the measures adopted shall remain obligatory pending the arbitral decision."

The article, as drafted, would make conservation measures adopted pursuant to Articles 51 and 52 applicable to other states only in the case of fishing for the same stocks of fish in the same area. From the conservation point of view the provision is inadequate. It is the stocks of fish which must be protected regardless of the fact whether they are fished in the same area or not.

In paragraph 2 of the commission's comment on this article, it is stipulated that the regulations should be applicable to newcomers only if they engage in fishing on a scale which would substantially affect the stock or stocks in question. It would be preferable to have this stipulated in the article, for instance, by adding after "any of the interested parties" in paragraph 2 of the article the words, "engaged in the fishing on a substantial basis".

"Article 56:

1. Any state which, even if its nationals are not engaged in fishing in an area of the high seas not adjacent to its coast, has a special interest in the conservation of the living resources in that area, may request the state whose nationals are engaged in fishing there to take the necessary measures of conservation.

2. If no agreement is reached within a reasonable period, such state may initiate the procedure contemplated by Article 57."

Although there may, in certain circumstances, be some justification for a state not engaged in fishing in an area not contiguous to its coast requesting a fishing state to take certain conservation measures, care should be taken that this request would not extend to measures necessarily having to be taken within the boundaries of the fishing state. This article, therefore, should be qualified to indicate that the fishing state would be under no obligation to take measures within its boundaries.

The government of Canada is of the opinion that the commission's articles on fishing should be subject to the "abstention principle" which was considered at the technical conference on the conservation of the living resources of the sea held in Rome in 1955 and which is stated in the report of the conference (page 7, paragraphs 61-62) namely:

"61. A special case exists where countries, through research, regulation of their own fishermen and other activities, have restored or developed or maintained stocks of fish so that their productivity is being maintained and utilized at levels reasonably approximating their maximum sustainable productivity, and where the continuance of this level of productivity depends upon such sustained research and regulation. Under these conditions, the participation of additional states in the exploitation of the resource will yield no increase in food to mankind, but will threaten the success of the conservation program. Where opportunities exist for a country or countries to develop or restore the productivity of resources, and where such development or restoration by the harvesting state or states is necessary to maintain the productivity of resources, conditions should be made favourable for such action.

62. The international north Pacific fishery commission provides a method for handling the special case mentioned above. It was recognized that new entrants in such fisheries threatened the continued success of the conservation program. Under these circumstances the state or states not participating in fishing the stocks in question agreed to abstain from such fishing when the commission determines that the stock reasonably satisfies all the following conditions:

(a) Evidence based upon scientific research indicates that more extensive exploitation of the stock will not provide a substantial increase in yield;

(b) The exploitation of the stock is limited or otherwise regulated for conservation purposes by each party substantially engaging in its exploitation; and

(c) The stock is the subject of extensive scientific study designed to discover whether it is being fully utilized, and what conditions are necessary for maintaining its maximum sustained productivity. The convention provides that, when these conditions are satisfied, the states which have not engaged in substantial exploitation of the stock will be recommended to abstain from fishing such stock, while the states engaged in substantial exploitation will continue to carry out the necessary conservation measures. Meanwhile, the abstaining states may participate in fishing other stocks of fish in the same area."

All of the above comments, are of course, provisional at this stage. The fact that comments have not been submitted on other matters does not indicate that the remainder of the draft articles are necessarily acceptable to the Canadian government as they now stand. The comments are submitted with a view to facilitating the exchange of views among countries that will be essential in working out agreed provisions on the law of the sea.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 29, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave of the house to withdraw notice of motion No. 8 on the order paper, which reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of encouraging reasonable early vesting of pension rights of employees by disallowing in whole or in part the employer's claims for a deduction of the expenses of pensions for income tax purposes where reasonable vesting provisions are not adopted.

I might say that I would like to discuss this matter on the appropriate estimates or on a motion to go into supply. It does not seem to me that we will reach this notice of motion this session. If it remains on the order paper it might be considered out of order to discuss early vesting of pension rights because of anticipatory discussion on the order paper. I would therefore ask unanimous consent of the house to drop this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to drop this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion dropped.

MORNING AND SATURDAY SITTINGS ON AND AFTER DECEMBER 4

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the house leader. When does the house leader expect to suggest morning and Saturday sittings to provide more time to discuss the government's estimates and further legislation?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Well, Mr. Speaker, we are planning to put a notice of motion on the order paper today which will appear on Monday, and which will ask for sittings on Wednesday mornings, Thursday mornings, Friday evenings and on Saturdays in the morning and afternoon only until the end of the session.

Mr. Pearson: What, not Saturday night?

BUFFALO AND FORT ERIE PUBLIC BRIDGE COMPANY

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CANADIAN MEMBERS, DESIGNATION OF AUTHORITY, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. 194 (from the Senate), to amend an act respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED CRISIS IN INDUSTRY—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the continuing crisis in the agricultural industry brought about by depressed prices of farm products, increasing costs of production and loss of markets, together with the inexcusable delay of the government in taking steps to provide farmers with guaranteed prices for their products at a level to create parity with other prices and to assure farmers a fair share of the national income as promised in the recent election, and the need for immediate action by parliament to deal with this grave emergency.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would add that one further reason prompting this motion is the fact that the government will not announce a date when it is prepared to advance its own legislation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would simply refer to government order No. 9 on the order paper, which reads in part:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a system of guaranteed prices for agricultural commodities to be named therein and to provide that prices may be guaranteed for any other agricultural commodity—

—and so on. I am not going to read the entire resolution. That resolution—

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, please—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Just one minute.

Agricultural Industry—Alleged Crisis

Mr. Irwin: We have not yet had your decision, sir, as to whether or not this is a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on the question as to whether it is a matter of urgent public importance. The resolution on the order paper—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order. According to the rules, when a motion of this kind is made does Your Honour not read it out and decide whether or not it is of urgent public importance?

Mr. Sinclair: Quite right.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is right; it is the Speaker's duty to decide whether the matter is within the rules, though I believe it has been customary to take brief advice on the subject. Will the house allow me a minute to consider this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was the attitude I was adopting, simply to bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that it is not one of those matters that are of such importance as require a motion for the adjournment of the house.

The resolution sets out in detail the various steps that are intended to be taken with reference to the agricultural problem of this country. I may add that the legislation committee has been working on the bill to be introduced and at twelve o'clock today will meet for the final determination of the terms of the bill. My submission is that the motion is premature; it is simply trying to beat the gun. Having regard to the resolution that is already on the order paper, it is not a matter of such importance as requires a motion for the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to make a comment on the statement that has been made.

Mr. Irwin: On the point of order, paragraph 3 of standing order 26 reads in part:

> He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not the Prime Minister.

Mr. Irwin: Not the Prime Minister nor any other member of the house. I continue:

> —and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house.

The Speaker himself decides whether or not it is a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Speaker: I know what the rule says. The Speaker is actually thinking and would appreciate a little assistance in this matter.

[Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf).]

He has had some from the Prime Minister, and would like to hear what the member for Assiniboia has to say on the subject.

Mr. Argue: I would like to make some comment on the urgency question. Any member who is acquainted with the position of the agricultural industry today will realize that it is in a very deep crisis that requires immediate attention.

On the basis of what the Prime Minister has said there is still no indication as to the date on which the government will advance its own legislation. The resolution to which the Prime Minister has referred was filed on October 31, and I suggest that that is an unwarranted delay.

As far as beating the gun is concerned, to use the Prime Minister's own words, I suggest that this is not likely to be the case in any way, since this motion says that the government should provide guaranteed prices for agricultural products at a level to create parity with other prices and to assure farmers a fair share of the national income, as promised in the recent election campaign. I would suggest that the terms of the government's own motion show that it is not the intention, according to that motion, to provide prices for agricultural products at a parity level. For all these reasons I submit that my motion is in order.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): May I point out that the terms of the hon. member's motion place it clearly out of order; and to assist Your Honour I would refer you to Bourinot, whose authority I have always found to be unquestioned. At page 310 of the fourth edition Bourinot says, in discussing motions to adjourn the house for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance:

> All the rules of debate apply, of course, to discussions upon such a motion. Discussion cannot be raised on such a motion on any matter already appointed for consideration or of which notice has been given.

The hon. gentleman has clearly brought his motion and the discussion which would arise therefrom within the ambit of item No. 9 on today's order paper, which provides for the discussion in committee of the whole of the government resolution to introduce a measure to establish a system of guaranteed prices for agricultural commodities. Whether or not that measure will be considered adequate is a matter properly to be discussed by the hon. member on that motion, but his present motion is clearly out of order in that it seeks to anticipate the stage at which he can raise that question.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their assistance. As they will appreciate, this is the first time I have had to deal with this question. It seems to me that the subject matter of the proposed discussion is one that has been discussed off and on throughout the session, perhaps not by itself but it has been a subject of continual discussion throughout the session and of questions and answers in the house. There has been and will be an opportunity to discuss the matter, more particularly because of the resolution on the order paper.

It seems to me that the hon. member's motion is defeated by subsection (d) of section 6 of standing order 26, to which the hon. member referred. It is in these words:

> The motion must not anticipate a matter which has been previously appointed for consideration by the house, or with reference to which a notice of motion has been previously given and not withdrawn.

That seems to me to be an insuperable obstacle to the motion. In any event, I would not have thought the matter properly debatable on a motion of this kind at this time in view of the opportunities there are to discuss the matter and the discussion that has already taken place in the house. Therefore I must reject the hon. member's motion.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister spoke to the motion of the hon. member for Assiniboia I understood that he was of the opinion that the subject was not of sufficient urgency to warrant moving the adjournment of the house. When the Prime Minister makes his announcement on Monday respecting further legislation for this session, will he give priority to the resolution to establish guaranteed prices for agricultural products?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in the first place I did not say it was a matter of no urgency, I said urgency of debate at this time. I would point out to my hon. friend that at no time has the house been held up by the failure of the government to have its legislation ready, and if less time was taken in the discussion of certain items we would get along much faster, and I am hoping we will.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Closure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have had the co-operation of my right hon. friend. I want to say that, but it has not been general.

Mr. McIlraith: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If there is a little more co-operation these matters will be introduced at the earliest stage possible. We want this legislation passed as soon as possible, but we have two items to consider. We have the item concerning the estimates that were left over from last session, which involves practically all the estimates. We have brought before the house the legislation that has been necessary to meet immediate conditions, having regard to the order of their urgency and the opportunity to have them passed by the house. The legislation with regard to agriculture is on the order paper, and if my hon. friends will get along a little—

An hon. Member: Is the bill ready?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and assist in getting the estimates out of the way, the legislation will be introduced, as will the other matters to which reference will be made on Monday.

Mr. Argue: I have a question for the Prime Minister, arising out of his remarks now as compared with his remarks earlier. Is the legislation to which he has referred now ready, in that the bill is ready?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If my hon. friend had listened to what I said earlier he would have had the answer to his question. The legislation committee has drafted the legislation. At twelve o'clock today, provided the question period does not continue on and on with questions that have no place in the house and merely kill time—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that not for Mr. Speaker to decide?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that committee will meet for the purpose of finalizing the legislation.

Mr. Argue: It is not yet ready.

Mr. Jacob Schulz (Springfield): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I have never had the privilege of asking him a question, so I do so today. If the Prime Minister is so sincere about bringing forward his agricultural legislation, why is it that the resolution extending unemployment insurance was brought in and acted on in two days—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member thinks of what he is saying I believe he will appreciate that he is making an argument and not asking a question of the Prime Minister.

NORTHERN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION INTO HARVEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is in a position this morning to tell the house in a general way the contents of the report which I understand he has received concerning the tragic crop situation in the Peace river country, and to let us know what measures his department proposes to take to help relieve the situation there.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there has been a very unfortunate situation this year from the point of view of weather in the Peace river country. I sent a special investigation team into the area some two weeks ago to make a report on the exact situation that existed there, with a view to seeing whether the crop situation was such that although no threshing had taken place in a large number of places it would be possible to put into effect P.F.A.A. payments.

The report I received was that approximately only 30 per cent of the threshing had been done in the Peace river area including the British Columbia block, and that it was extremely doubtful whether more than something between 10 per cent and 20 per cent of the remaining grain would ever be threshed. In view of those circumstances I issued instructions that something between 40 and 50 P.F.A.A. inspectors should be secured immediately to make a detailed assessment of the situation in practically every township in the Peace river area. As a result of this I expect that P.F.A.A. payments in very considerable amounts will be put into effect in the area.

In addition, the crop which was harvested in the Peace river country was nearly all tough and damp grain. Therefore representations were made that if this grain was to be saved and prevented from going bad, special means would have to be taken in order to get it down to a terminal elevator where it could be dried. I took up this matter with the wheat board and the Department of Trade and Commerce. They are now working on that problem, and I trust that some means will be evolved of getting this grain into the terminal elevator in Edmonton and possibly the terminal elevator at Vancouver, where it can be dried and thus made available for general use.

PUBLICATION "CANADA—PRICES OF SELECTED AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which perhaps might more appropriately be raised as a question of privilege. In any event, it has to do with the exchange which took place between the Minister of Agriculture and myself on Tuesday, November 26, as to whether certain agricultural prices in this country were falling. In his statement the minister referred to a—

[Mr. Low.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that if exception is taken to what is said in the house it must be taken at the time. We cannot go back and correct Hansard of the past.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I believe I can substantiate the point that the house was misinformed, misled in a very material way by the minister, and I think that is a question of privilege. If you believe at this moment that it has more to do with the argument itself I am quite prepared to drop it, but I do believe that if you will hear me out you will agree that it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: It may very well be a question of privilege, but my point is that the practice has been to limit the raising of objections to what is said in the house to the time when it occurs. It would be impossible, I think, as the house appreciates, to go back and deal with matters which are long since past, and I would ask the hon. member to try to correct it in another way.

Mr. Argue: I will make it a direct question to the minister. Can the minister give us the source and origin of the publication to which he referred last Tuesday, which he entitled "Canada—Prices of Selected Agricultural Products"? A most diligent inquiry at the bureau of statistics, the library of parliament and the library of the Department of Agriculture would indicate that this publication was either a fiction—

Mr. Fleming: Order.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this particular publication, which I took the precaution of bringing down with me again today in case there might be any other question in regard to prices, is entitled "Canada—Prices of Selected Agricultural Products". This particular issue is dated 20/11/1957. It is put out by the economics division of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ontario. I think the hon. member can see that it exists; it is not a myth.

Mr. Argue: I have a further question. Is it not a fact that this is an intergovernmental document and that it contains statistics produced by the bureau of statistics on the clear understanding that they would not be made public?

Mr. Harkness: Well, I cannot make any definite statement with regard to that. My understanding was that it was not a document of that kind, but I would have to inquire in order to find out the exact status of the publication.

Mr. Argue: I think you should.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the minister tell us if that publication is available to other members of the House of Commons?

Mr. Harkness: That is the very point I just made, that I will have to inquire what is the status of the publication. My understanding was that it was available generally but that may not have been the case.

Mr. McIlraith: Will you inquire?

Mr. Harkness: I have just said I would inquire.

Mr. Argue: I think it is classified.

GRAIN

DECREASE IN MARKETING—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister give an explanation to the house and the country as to why the farmers' marketing of grain in the prairie provinces from the start of the crop year until November 13 has been only 129 million bushels, which is the lowest figure at this time in the last 10 years and slightly more than half of the 10-year average? Is the minister prepared to give consideration to the immediate announcement of a deficiency payment in the form of a participation payment from the treasury on last year's crop to compensate for this drastic decline in income?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of this question just a few moments ago, and I shall take it as notice.

STATEMENT ON REPORTED REFUSAL OF ADVANCES BECAUSE OF LEASED ACREAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on November 27 the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort asked the following question:

> Has it been brought to the minister's attention that farmers are being refused cash advances on their specified acreage merely because they have additional acreage under lease?

The answer is as follows. I am unaware of producers being refused cash advances for the reason given by the hon. member. The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act became effective on November 25, 1957, and it may be several days before it is operating smoothly. The act provides for advances to producers who farm their own land and who have additional acreage under lease. As hon. members are aware these are advances and it is therefore necessary that all parties interested in the land, as recorded in the producers' permit book, sign the application form and agree to the deduction of one-half of the proceeds of subsequent initial payments for deliveries of wheat, oats and barley.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his absence possibly the acting minister would take my question as notice. It arises out of an answer he gave a few moments ago. Will the minister give consideration to amending the regulations in respect of a producer getting the cash advance on his own acreage, and thereby remove the present condition that is presenting a serious problem to those producers under the present regulations?

Mr. Macdonnell: I shall take the question as notice as requested, but I should like to emphasize the fact, as I stated in my previous answer, that the act became effective only on November 25 and today is November 29. Therefore there has not been very much time in which to iron out any small difficulties which may arise. Nevertheless, I will take it as notice.

REPORTED SLOWNESS IN PROVIDING ADDITIONAL QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question arises from a substantial number of complaints I have received to the effect that often where elevator space is available at marketing points for additional quotas, the quotas are not being quickly provided. Can the minister say whether such situations are being corrected, and what the wheat board's policy is in this regard?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of the Canadian wheat board to increase delivery quotas as rapidly as possible. The hon. member will appreciate, however, that before a delivery quota can be increased some space must be accumulated to take care of at least a part of the increase. This is particularly true at larger delivery points, where an increase of 1 bushel per specified acre requires a relatively large amount of space. Bearing upon the question of the hon. member is the fact that at a considerable number of delivery points in the prairie provinces there is some space available but not sufficient to take care of all the grain which producers can deliver under present delivery quotas. It will not be the policy of the board to hold this space for any length of time.

The present country elevator stocks of grain are 305 million bushels as compared with 296 million bushels at the same time last year. I can assure the hon. member that the wheat board will continue to increase delivery quotas just as rapidly as space permits.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question which the minister may not be able to answer and, if not, he could take it as notice. I take it from his answer that the wheat board is not following a policy of waiting until enough space has been made available for an additional quota merely because the wheat board is reluctant to give these points quotas higher than the general prevailing quotas in western Canada?

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will agree that this is a matter with regard to which I should consult with the board.

TRADE

SALMON—INQUIRY AS TO IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister received a letter from the united fishermen and allied workers' union concerning the heavy importation of Japanese canned salmon? If so, what action does he contemplate taking in the matter?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. However, the notice reached my office only a few minutes ago, and I am not in a position to make as full a statement at this time as I should like. I can say that such a letter did arrive in the department about an hour ago.

The question of the importation of Japanese salmon, which is said to be heavy—and I think that is a matter of opinion—is one which has existed in previous years. I understand the purpose of allowing these importations is to permit Canadian producers of salmon to maintain their best market, which is the British market. In any case I shall give a fuller reply on Monday.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Fisheries. While investigating the matter that has been raised by the hon. member for New Westminster, would the minister consider as well the fact that in the marketing of imported salmon from Japan, Canadian canners use the "Cloverleaf", "Gold Seal", and "Paramount" labels, which are the top brand labels of three of the largest companies. The words "Product of Japan" were printed in such small letters that few individuals knew they were not purchasing the Canadian product. Will the minister insist that adequate indication of the country of origin be printed on the labels?

Mr. MacLean: This is a matter that has already been brought to my attention, and I think the facts stated by the hon. member are substantially correct. This question has received careful consideration, and I will give a fuller reply to that question as well on Monday.

CANADIAN SURPLUS DISPOSAL PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, notice of which I sent him this morning. Will the minister inform the house what consideration has been given to establishing a disposal program for our surplus agricultural products in order that they may move more quickly to the underdeveloped countries of the world, now in urgent need of food?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall take this question as notice, since I received it just a few minutes ago.

ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF BRITISH TRACTORS AND PARTS THROUGH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce of which I have just sent him notice. Would the minister comment on the announcement in this morning's Gazette that a large portion of the $150 million Canadians spent last year for so-called United States tractors and parts actually flowed back to Britain because such parts were manufactured in Britain, exported to the United States and then re-exported to Canada? Would the acting minister also take steps to correct Canadian statistics on trade with the United States, as suggested by members of the trade mission now in Great Britain?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am informed that Canadian import statistics are based on customs entries, as is customary in all countries. This is the only practical way of gathering figures of imports and exports. It would be virtually impossible to adjust the statistics so as to allocate all components and materials to the ultimate country of origin. I would not even care to hazard a guess as to how such a compilation might affect our trade balance with different countries. For example, some of our imports from the United Kingdom are made from materials or components which come from the United States—for example, cotton textiles—and many of our exports contain items which are of foreign origin.

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—STATEMENT ON ALUMINUM PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on November 27 the hon. member for Kingston asked me the following question:

> May I direct a question with respect to the Canadian buying mission sponsored by the government of Canada, which mission is now in Britain?
> Is it true that members of the mission may make arrangements to buy aluminum products in Britain to import into Canada?

Of course I have no information on the business discussions which the more than 50 members of the mission are conducting while they are in the United Kingdom. However, I might point out that the Minister of Trade and Commerce described the purpose of the mission as "to stimulate purchases from United Kingdom sources of goods now imported by Canada from non-commonwealth countries".

As the hon. member knows, Canada is herself a leading manufacturer of aluminum products. In fact, this industry has made a great contribution to the economic development of our country, and its products are exported to all parts of the world. We do also import some aluminum products from various countries, including the United Kingdom and the United States. The hon. member may draw his own conclusions from these facts.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF BUDGETARY PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern that has arisen in the motor car industry because of press reports that there would be a reduction in the tax on automobiles, can the minister say whether he intends to introduce a budget at an early date or is he considering giving notice of tax reductions that could be effective immediately upon such notice, subject to approval by parliament?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): These matters are all under consideration, and I shall be only too happy to make any recommendations of the government known to the house as soon as possible.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Does his statement, that any recommendations to be made by the government concerning taxation proposals would be made known to the house mean that there is still the possibility of a budget at this session? Is he aware of the fact that his unwillingness to give direct answers to questions about the budget is not only a denial of information to members of this house, but is also causing deep concern in the country?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such thing, because it is not the fact.

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the policy he announced yesterday. In the interests of descriptive accuracy, would the minister change the name of his swinging-door policy to the flapping-door policy, or is it correct to assume—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Harrison: —that the minister is opening a chain of beverage rooms to recoup his losses?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I trust that the hon. member does not want to take the time of the house with a question phrased in those words.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

REPORTED STATEMENT OF MR. BANKS ON REFUSAL OF MEDIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the report in this morning's Gazette that United States citizen Harold Banks is reported as denying that he refused the minister's offer of mediation in the seamen's dispute, and as this is an implication that the minister did not inform the house correctly the other day, would the minister care to comment on this fellow's remarks?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that what I said yesterday in reply to the question put to me by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is correct.

[Later:]

Mr. S. H. S. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, further to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West concerning Mr. Banks, would the Minister of Labour inform the house whether it is the policy of the government to negotiate with other than Canadian citizens regarding the welfare of Canadians and Canadian industries?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear all of the hon. member's question. I wonder if he would mind repeating it.

Mr. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Would the minister inform the house whether it is the policy of the government to negotiate with other than Canadian citizens regarding the welfare of Canadians and Canadian industries?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice and see just what implications are contained therein.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO PRESSURE APPLIED DURING TEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Can the minister obtain the pressure rate which was being applied during the test on the trans-Canada natural gas pipe line just prior to the blow-out on the line near Mortlach, Saskatchewan, on November 3, 1957, in view of the earlier statement that the pipe was designed for a working pressure of 826 pounds?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I will make inquiries of the board of transport commissioners and try to obtain that information for the hon. member.

FRUIT

APPLES—STATEMENT ON ADVERTISEMENTS IN C.N.R. DINING CARS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to answer the following question which was asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy):

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister—he will not do anything, but I should like to ask him, nevertheless—why only British Columbia apples are advertised on the C.N.R. dining car menus on trains in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where excellent apples are also grown, and whether he will do anything to remedy this matter?

Contrary to the hon. member's expressed expectation I immediately, as I always do, got in touch with the management of the Canadian National Railways, and I have this report from them. This advertisement is a paid advertisement on the back of all dining car meal checks. Apple growers throughout Canada were asked to bid on this advertisement and none did so except British Columbia. They were therefore awarded the space.

Mr. Sinclair: The minister knows where the applause is coming from.

IRRIGATION

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he completed conferring with the representatives of the Saskatchewan government with regard to the South Saskatchewan dam? If so, is he prepared to make any statement on the matter?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer is that, to use my hon. friend's expression, the conferring is still continuing.

Mr. Tucker: Might I ask a supplementary question. Are those conferences still going on in Ottawa, or are they now going to go on by means of letters spaced several weeks apart?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As to that matter, as I mentioned the other day, in 1948 my hon. friend advocated in a by-election in Rosthern the election of Mr. Boucher, and said that the dam would be proceeded with at once if he were elected. May I say that we do not intend to follow that type of conferring, not weeks apart but years apart. Anything further that is done from now on will naturally consist of conferences as between engineers and officials, and also representations by letter as between the government of Saskatchewan and this government, to the end that at the earliest possible date an agreement will be arrived at to permit proceeding with the dam.

Mr. Tucker: On a question of privilege—

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): May I ask a further question. Would it be possible to draw the inference that the conference might be continued at the Grey cup game?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have known Grey cup games to be the excuse for many other conferences in the past, and possibly that suggestion has some ground for consideration.

Mr. Tucker: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister suggested that some promises were made during the 1948 by-election. Might I point out to him, as was pointed out in that by-election—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not raising a question of privilege, as far as I understand what he is saying—

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, the other day the right hon. Prime Minister made a statement which he repeated today, and I do think it is in order for me to be permitted to state what actually happened when it is within my own knowledge, which is all I wish to do. I think I have the right to frame a question without misrepresentations being made.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I disagree with the hon. member. As I understand it, he has endeavoured to correct a statement which the Prime Minister has made. That might be permitted as a matter of privilege if it were a reflection on any member in the house, but I do not understand that to be the situation.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may not regard it as a reflection when he speaks of not keeping promises, but when he makes that statement about me I regard it as a real reflection. He has now stated twice that this promise was made. I let it go once but he repeated it today, and I think I should be permitted to say exactly what was stated in that by-election.

Mr. Monteith: No, no; save it for the next election.

Mr. Speaker: I would appreciate it if the hon. member would repeat the statement to which he objects so I will know what is his question of privilege, if there is one.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister said that in the 1948 by-election, when Mr. Boucher was elected the representative for Rosthern, it was promised that if he was elected the dam would be proceeded with at once, and I wish to state that no such promise was made. It was merely indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Tucker: It was indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: When is a promise not a promise?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Tucker: It was indicated by me that if the people voted for Mr. Boucher it would show they were favourable to the dam being built.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the matter need not be pursued, but I did not think there was a reflection on any member in the house.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO SITUATION IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour and he may take it as notice if he is unable to make a statement today.

The question is as follows. Is the minister aware that persons in the Northwest Territories are having great difficulty in obtaining their unemployment insurance payments and, in some cases, are not even receiving acknowledgment of their application from the Edmonton office of the unemployment insurance commission?

Will the minister investigate this condition and recommend the re-establishment of the unemployment insurance office in Yellowknife in the very near future? In the meantime, will he dispatch a man from the Edmonton office to Yellowknife to look after this immediate situation, which is causing great hardship to many persons?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In answer to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we will look into all aspects of this situation to which the hon. member has brought my attention, and we will certainly do everything possible to rectify it.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FAMILY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the government intend to increase family allowances, as promised by Conservative candidates in New Brunswick, and will this be done in time for Christmas, 1957, in line with other social legislation of this house and because of the severe unemployment situation which paints a gloomy picture for the nation's children this Christmas?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You are not getting any press on these questions, Murphy.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I am getting more than you got, Bell.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Ding, dong, Bell.

Mr. Cardiff: You are getting to be a nuisance around here more than anything else.

Mr. Pearson: You ought to know how it feels.

FISHERIES

LOBSTER DISTRICT NO. 4, N.S.—OPENING OF SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him whether he has received representations from the Shelburne and other county ministerial associations, requesting that the opening of the lobster season in district No. 4 be changed from Sunday, December 1, to Tuesday, December 3? If so, what action if any does the minister plan to take?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I think the correct answer is yes, but I cannot be specific about this particular ministerial association. In any case, such a representation has been made by several ministerial associations, including that of Queens county, Nova Scotia. I might say that the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) has already discussed the same matter with me and had indicated his intention to ask a similar question.

A request was received on November 21 from the Queens county ministerial association that the Department of Fisheries investigate the matter immediately and, if possible, to take the necessary steps to change the opening date of the lobster season in this area for this year from December 1 to December 3. The lobster fishermen would thus be allowed to set their traps on Monday, December 2, instead of Saturday, November 30. Since the opening has already been advertised as effective December 1, it would be rather difficult to effect any change this year.

I might point out however, Mr. Speaker, that existing regulations permit lobster fishermen to set their traps on the noon of the preceding Saturday when the opening date falls on either a Sunday or a Monday.

This regulation was established pursuant to discussions between senior officials of the department and lobster fishermen throughout the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island; and I might point out that an overwhelming preference was expressed by the fishermen in favour of the existing regulation. Thus where the season opens on a Sunday, by reason of the fact that traps may be set on the Saturday preceding, the opening Sunday would be precisely the same as any other Sunday falling within the open season, and whether or not the traps are fished is left entirely to the discretion of the individual fisherman himself.

In other words, the decision is that the lobster fishermen can set their traps tomorrow, and that will result in Sunday being in exactly the same position as any other Sunday which falls within the lobster season.

PENITENTIARIES

KINGSTON—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF NEW WOMEN'S PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is consideration being given or action being taken with respect to the construction of a new women's penitentiary in the Kingston area?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): The matter is under consideration, but no progress can be made until a decision is reached as to what is to be done in connection with the recommendations contained in the Fauteux report. This matter is now being studied, and it is hoped that we shall be in a position to invite the provinces into a conference early next year. We realize that several of the provinces have their own building programs which are being held up by the lack of a decision, but it has seemed desirable to arrive at a decision on the over-all implementation of the report before such building programs, including our own, are proceeded with.

POWER

DISPOSITION OF DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS IN INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): On November 21 I asked a question relating to top level negotiations by our ambassador to the United States in the matter of downstream benefits. In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs this was referred to the Prime Minister and, in his absence, I received this answer from the Minister of Public Works:

I believe this question was sent to the Prime Minister's office before the house opened this afternoon, and answers are being prepared.

I am just wondering, Mr. Speaker, how much longer it is going to take to prepare the answer to this quite simple question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have it looked into. Certainly I will have it answered at the earliest possible date. I am sorry if my hon. friend has been inconvenienced. If he had given me a call on the telephone I would have seen that the answer was here by this time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sinclair: It was different when you supported these questions of privilege.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yesterday I asked the Minister of Labour if he would pursue a certain matter having to do with complaints regarding changes in the Canadian Pacific Railway's pension plan. The minister indicated that he had not had any representations concerning the matter. I can readily understand that he has a great deal of correspondence and since I had not given him notice I realize that his answer is not to be held against him. However, may I now send over to him copies of two letters and a note about a third which he received concerning this matter, and also copies of three of his replies concerning this same question. The minister's memory as to the correspondence having been refreshed, perhaps he might give me an answer next week.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Casselman in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

497. Departmental administration, $2,304,705.

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say at this time that I am very conscious of my responsibility in presenting the estimates for the current fiscal year, of the department whose duty it is to care for my former comrades and the dependants of those who gave their lies in the cause of freedom. I must ensure that the work of the department is carried on just as economically as is possible, but, at the same time insist that there be no downgrading of the several services that the department is required to render.

I welcome this opportunity to express publicly my appreciation of the co-operation I have received since taking office, from all members of the house, from the Canadian Legion, the national council of veterans associations in Canada, and other veteran organizations, from officials of the benevolent funds of the three armed services and from other organizations and individuals with whom the department is associated in its work. I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that this co-operation has rendered my task much easier.

As hon. members know, the main estimates of the department which are now before the committee were presented to the house by the former government, and were actually prepared by the department in October and November, 1956. The experience in the rate of expenditure for the first seven months of the current fiscal year indicates that there will be some reduction in the requirements estimated at that time. The organization of the department has remained unchanged during the past year and the establishment has reached a continuing level. There has been a decrease in the number of employees in practically every vote except treatment services. The increase in treatment services staff results mainly from the extension of the five-day week to all D.V.A. hospitals.

In spite of reductions in staff, all salary votes show an increase consequent upon the general salary revision effective May 1, 1957. Furthermore, taking the main and supplementary estimates together, the votes for pensions and war veterans allowances show increases resulting from the revision in rates and permissible income ceilings which were approved by the last parliament to be effective July 1, 1957.

Generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, the volume of work of the department has remained fairly constant, but it might be noted that the trend of the activity of the welfare services branch has continued to move away from work connected with rehabilitation benefits and toward the handling of war veterans allowance problems and individual welfare cases of a problem nature. The branch is successfully applying the provisions of the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, and it is gratifying to note that the number of applications has exceeded somewhat the number the department had expected. A total of 277 children have completed their training program, and 465 are undergoing training at the present.

The level of the treatment patient load remains steady. Construction continues with a view to bringing all D.V.A. hospitals to a modern standard. The construction at Colonel Belcher, Calgary, is now completed; that at Deer Lodge hospital near Winnipeg will be finished next spring; construction at Shaughnessy, Vancouver, has been started; and at Westminster hospital, London, Ontario, it is in the planning stage.

As hon. members know, the government, in the few months since it took office has already been able to prepare two bills, one of which to amend the Pension Act is now before this house and the other, amending the War Veterans' Allowance Act, has already received the approval of this house and the Senate and has been given royal assent. Other acts are being studied, and where changes are necessary amending legislation will be introduced at an appropriate time in the future.

Before resuming my seat I should like to say a word about the Vimy memorial. As hon. members know, this is one of the most impressive monuments built after world war I. Though undamaged by enemy action, the Vimy memorial has suffered somewhat by lack of adequate maintenance care during the war years. Extensive renovation work is now being carried out and is expected to be completed by next spring. The work will restore the beauty of this outstanding memorial to Canada's dead.

I shall have more to say, Mr. Chairman, on the different items in the estimates as they come up for consideration. I shall also answer, as far as possible, any questions which hon. members may care to ask on the first item. I assume, following the ordinary procedure, there will be a general discussion. We have already had an extensive debate on the War Veterans' Allowance Act and a considerable debate on the resolution preceding the pension bill.

Mr. Tucker: I do not intend to take too long at this stage, Mr. Chairman, because as the minister has stated most of the expenditures provided for in these estimates are expenditures authorized for pensions, war veterans allowance, treatment of veterans, Veterans' Land Act operations and the like. It is a matter of voting money for the splendid work being done by Canada for those who served in her armed services over the past many years. I have not heard the minister suggest that this is one of those departments in which there is waste or extravagance, reference to which has been made by other members of the government concerning proposed expenditures in the estimates brought down by the previous government. I hope the minister will definitely indicate whether or not he has found any evidence of waste or extravagance in his department.

I have more knowledge of this department than other government departments, and I must say that if other departments are administered with similar devotion to the duty of the department under the statutes passed by this parliament and with the same attempt to do the best possible job of which human beings are capable, then I am sure we have the finest administration by the civil service of Canada of any country in the world. Sometimes it seems to me that people do not realize the tremendous amount of good work that is being done in this department. Again I say that I do not know very much about the other departments, but I do know that at times there is a feeling there are more civil servants than are necessary to do the work involved. I am not saying that is true, but I know some people believe it. If the same conditions prevail in other departments that prevail in the Department of Veterans Affairs, then I can say decisively the statement is not true.

The various persons involved in the administration of this department are really trying very hard to do their work in a conscientious way and to carry out the purposes parliament had in mind when it passed the veterans charter and the amendments which have been made thereto from time to time. Sometimes we do not realize the amount of very hard work and devoted service we get from our civil servants. I think these remarks, made at a time when I am now in the opposition, will probably be more fitting and carry more weight than those of a person who is a supporter of the government. I have known many men in that department who have worked to the point where I felt they were endangering their health in order to get a good job done.

If one looks through the report of the Department of Veterans Affairs and considers the number of people in Canada who are benefited by the work of that department I think, even if he has some knowledge of the work of the department, he must be astonished at the amount of work that is accomplished. For example, let us consider the payment of war service gratuities. There was actually paid out a sum totalling $470 million, not including payments to the Korean veterans. Payments to Korean veterans numbering 26,476 amounted to over $6.5 million, according to the last annual report. Re-establishment credits, which helped so many veterans get re-established, totalled $299 million, not including the payments to Korean veterans. If we include the payments to Korean veterans the total is brought up to over $302 million.

There is another matter I should like to mention. The Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act was passed to ensure that the children of men who served their country and who were killed or disabled, do not suffer by virtue of that service. I am sure all hon. members approve of that measure, and personally I hope consideration will be given to expanding that act in order to see to it that when a person has lost his life or has been disabled in the service of his country, his children shall not suffer in any way shape or form having regard to the education they are able to get or the training they may get for life. In that regard the country should consider itself as stepping into the position of the parent who gave his service so unselfishly for his country. This work has gone on well but, as I say, study should be given to expanding it so as to make it apply not only to those who were killed but to those who were disabled.

As the minister knows, he and I have talked about this matter. I am sure he and his associates, the people in the department, are sympathetic to the idea I have put forward. I was pleased to see that even more advantage had been taken of this act providing for help to educate the children of the war dead than I think was expected at the time it was passed. I note that according to the annual report the total number who had been dealt with under that act is 872. When one considers what that means in the matter of helping the children of those who have served, one must be extremely glad that parliament has made that provision.

I should like to compliment the department on the work being done in connection with correspondence courses. I was glad to find that there were no less than some 9,500 being helped last year through correspondence courses under the Department of Veterans Affairs. Then I think of the welfare services, and I will not take the time of the house to go into that matter in any detail. However, that personal attention given to assisting veterans in their various problems and difficulties is something of which any one who knows anything of the work must be very proud and pleased.

The war veterans assistance fund, which was designed to help those people who could not supplement their incomes, also has been helpful and has been used, I think, more than many hon. members realize. I note that according to the last annual report there were no less than 4,058 on the list receiving help as at March 31, 1956, and that the total number of those who had been helped during that year 1956-57 ran up to something over 8,000 who were in receipt of war veterans allowance but who needed additional help under that war veterans assistance fund.

As to the number of veterans under the War Veterans Allowance Act getting help, I have heard that act described by many people as an act which is perhaps rather unique with regard to veterans legislation. Many people regard it as a pension for disability or something of the sort but it is, in fact, an act designed to give assistance to those who are not pensioned or not getting adequate pensions to get along. Several countries which were our allies in the war have no such provision to assist their veterans. I know that war veterans generally consider that act to be one of the finest under the veterans charter. The war veterans allowance expenditure, as I see it in the estimates, is nearly $50 million.

Then I come to the treatment services. There again continuing treatment of those who were disabled, particularly those who are permanently disabled, is a work that is going on carefully and with some consideration for services rendered by those being treated. I think ex-servicemen are highly satisfied with the treatment they are getting in our veterans hospitals. I note that according to the report the number of patients in departmental hospitals as of March 31, 1957, was over 7,800. Actually the number of admissions to departmental hospitals during that year had been over 50,000, the number of admissions to other hospitals some 18,000, and the number of out-patient treatments some 657,000.

I should like to mention prosthetic services. I venture to say most hon. members have no idea of the amount of good work that is being done in that particular field. I note that according to the report the number of appliances supplied during the year was no less than 123,000, with 20,000 repairs, and that the total number of patients dealt with in connection with prosthetic services in the last year were no less than 69,000.

The veterans bureau is something that is, in my opinion, of great value. No doubt the various veterans organizations such as the Canadian Legion, the army and navy and air force veterans association, and the Canadian council of disabled veterans, have given great help to veterans in pressing for their pensions and other needed assistance. The veterans bureau is always there to give help even where the Canadian Legion or other veterans organizations are willing to help. They may not be as well organized in one part of the country as in another. According to the annual report I note that the number of claims brought forward by the veterans bureau was 5,800. I think hon. members who have had anything to do with this work will realize the tremendous amount of work involved in preparing that number of cases for submission to the pension board.

There is one act to which I very much want to refer, and that is the Veterans' Land Act. Under the director of the Veterans' Land Act, Brigadier Rutherford, there has been set up a system of advising the veterans who are settled under the V.L.A., and of assisting them in being successful farmers, giving them the best scientific advice and the like, so the man who is the representative of the Veterans' Land Act I believe in most cases is regarded as the real friend of the veteran and not purely as a collector of outstanding accounts. The amount of good work done in enabling people to establish themselves in full time and part time farming, as evidenced by the number of happy and successful homes that have been set up as a result of this splendid legislation, is really something on which, in my opinion, we can look with a great deal of satisfaction.

I see in the annual report that $357 million had been expended on behalf of over 67,700 veterans, and I think hon. members can be very pleased that, up to March 31 this year, of the amount spent over a period of 12½ years in settlement operations approximately 40 per cent has been paid by the veterans themselves. This shows that the legislation was conceived in such a way as to give our veterans a chance to be successful, and it is also an indication of good administration over the years. In this connection I would like to sincerely compliment the people engaged in this work.

I would also like to mention the work done by the department in connection with small holdings and the encouragement of veterans in the building of their own homes. They have been able to save a great deal of money in this way, and I think it has worked splendidly in enabling them to become home owners for much less money than would otherwise have been the case.

I would like to deal for a moment with the Pension Act. I am going through these details rather hurriedly, as I do not wish to hold up the proceedings in the house, but I feel quite strongly, having been in contact with the department for many years, that it would be unfair of me not to take the first opportunity to commend the people with whom I have been associated in the department on the wonderful job they have done. I think the veterans of our country and the people of Canada generally do appreciate the good work done by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Now in regard to disability pensions, I think the average member can have no conception of the amount of work done by the pension commission. Each case, of course, requires detailed examination and, although I do not say that pensions have always been granted where I personally may have thought they should have been granted, it has been the feeling of veterans that it is desirable to have the matter left in the hands of an independent pension commission which would not be under pressure from any person in government. In this way the matter is freed entirely from any question of political partisanship, and this is only fair to our veterans. This tradition has been established by the pension commissioners down through the years, and they have tried to do a completely non-partisan job. As a matter of fact I know that members sometimes get letters about pension matters from their constituents, who find it hard to believe that the member cannot in some way bring pressure to bear in this regard.

What the member can do and in fact does —and this is welcomed by the commission— is to bring forward all the facts and arguments he can on behalf of the veteran. My own experience has been that these cases are given very sympathetic consideration, but there the matter stops so far as any influencing of the commission is concerned. The tradition has been established, and they decide as they think right in the light of the terms of the act provided for them by parliament. I am sure the people of Canada and parliament would wish this to be so.

According to the annual report I see that disability pensions in force at March 31, 1957, numbered 54,400 with respect to world war I. Pensions paid in respect of dependents numbered over 15,000. Payments in respect of disability went to dependents numbering 69,400. The grand total in receipt of benefits totalled over 114,000. This is in respect of world war I. This involves a tremendous amount of work, and one wonders how the people who have done this work over the years have managed to accomplish as much as they have.

With respect to world war I, their numbers are unfortunately dwindling. I believe the falling off in the number of people in receipt of pensions with respect to world war I totalled somewhere around 2,000 during last year. As the country sees the people who served it in war passing from their midst, I am sure they will be glad that at least as much has been done for them as has in fact been done, and will certainly feel that in all fairness if there is some further improvement which can be made it should be given sympathetic consideration.

With respect to world war II, of course, the department has been more active in connection with application for pensions and so on, and I see that the total number of pensions in force with respect to this war as at March 31, 1957, was 120,700. This again involves a tremendous amount of detail work, important as it is. I have not spent much time in dealing with the pensions received by men and their dependents with respect to service in the Korean war. I feel, however, in the light of our experience and the satisfaction with which the country has greeted efforts made on behalf of veterans in previous wars, that those who served in Korea will get at least as favourable consideration, if not better. The experience gained with respect to those who served in the previous wars will be invaluable in this regard.

I have not been able to deal in detail with the tremendous amount of work done by the war veterans allowance branch, but I find in the annual report that the recipients of war veterans allowances as at March 31, 1957 totalled 53,590. Here again I would like to pay tribute to the deputy ministers through the years, and particularly the former deputy minister, Walter Woods, for setting up an organization which has enabled all these matters to be dealt with in an expeditious and sympathetic way, and which has also enabled much of the red tape to be taken out of the administration of this department. This work has, I think, been very well carried on by the present deputy minister and the various heads of departments.

I have not done more than scratch the surface of this subject nor point out all the work done by the department, and I would apologize to those whose work I have not mentioned. I would commend to the members of this house a perusal of the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs so they may be made aware of the efforts of a very devoted department of our government.

I am sure the minister, having had long connection with the work for the veterans, the setting up of the veterans charter and the improvement of it from time to time, to which I know we are all devoted, has his heart in the making of this legislation as effective as it can be. I know he will want to see that it goes as far as it possibly can to give expression to the feelings and desires of all our people to be fair to those who gave their services to their country in times of war. I extend to the minister and his associates in the department the very best of good wishes, and express the hope that the work which has been carried on so well up to now may be continued and improved in the years ahead.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on the first item of these estimates I must again assure the minister of the support of this group for all his efforts on behalf of veterans, because we know that our co-operation in this respect will redound to the benefit of our comrades.

As a member of parliament I naturally take a very keen interest in the subject of veterans affairs, but I take a keen interest in it also for a number of other reasons. As one who was awarded the distinguished order of chattering teeth and quaking knees; as one whose father served in two world wars and at 82 kicked up a devil of a row because they would not take him as a quartermaster in the second world war; as one whose wife went to war with the old contemptibles as a nursing sister in 1914; as one who is the father of two daughters who served in the second war, and as the friend of many comrades in my own battalion and other battalions I have a deep, personal and abiding interest in this question.

Now, before proceeding with a few items of what I might describe as unfinished business, I want to express my appreciation of the work of the senior officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs including those delightful ladies, those charming senior officials who are so courteous and anxious to assist us and who, if they have not the information we seek, will usher us in the right direction to obtain the information. As the previous speaker said, I think this department sets an example for a good many other departments of government. This department is administered with every sympathy for the human beings those employed in it are trying to serve, and I feel that is generally recognized across the country.

I am going to make a sort of omnibus speech, Mr. Chairman, and I am going to save the time of the committee, as the previous speaker did, by taking the full time I have at my disposal.

Mr. Tucker: I did not do that, though.

Mr. Herridge: I am not going to deal with the Canadian Pension Act at this time, because Bill No. 38, to amend the act, will soon be before the house and we will have ample opportunity to bring its deficiencies to the attention of the minister when we discuss it.

However, I do want to deal with a number of matters. Some of them I have mentioned before, and I shall refer to them very briefly just to refresh the minister's memory so that when he gives consideration to amendments to veterans legislation he will have them all in order and in sequence.

With respect to the War Veterans' Allowance Act, I feel it should be amended to provide for certain unfortunate widows—and there are very few such cases—who are not married from the departmental point of view and who are not able to obtain the allowance because the husbands were not in receipt of the allowance before they died. I mentioned this on November 5, and my remarks will be found at pages 801 and 802 of Hansard of that date. I urge the minister to give some consideration to bringing in an amendment to correct that situation which will be of great benefit to those few people who suffer under the present terms of that section.

I want to bring to the minister's attention again the necessity for an amendment which would permit war veterans allowance recipients to leave Canada if their health required it, on the certificate of a departmental doctor or medical officer. I am all for giving these war veterans allowance recipients the right to reside outside Canada for at least as long a time as that allowed the recipients of other welfare legislation. That is now possible. I do urge that consideration be given to this question. My previous reference to it can be found at page 801 of Hansard of November 5.

I also want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that there are quite a number of people in this country who think the veterans of the merchant navy have never received complete justice to date. They played a most vital role during the war, many of them suffering great hardship and danger, but they have been denied up to this time the benefits of the veterans charter. I urge that the minister consider an amendment to the War Veterans' Allowance Act that would bring them under this legislation.

I also think there is a necessity for an amendment to the act to provide for certain dependent mothers not eligible at the present time. Here again these are rare cases where the veteran is the sole source of income for the mother concerned. I urge the minister to consider an amendment to the act to provide for those mothers who are at present destitute when their son, a war veterans allowance recipient, dies.

Naturally we support the constant Legion representations asking for an increase in the ceiling on permissive income to $1,200 for single persons and $2,000 for married persons. Those are the main things that require attention so far as the War Veterans' Allowance Act is concerned. I hope when the minister replies he will indicate his attitude toward these suggestions for amendments which have come from the Canadian Legion and various parties in this house.

I wish now to deal with another matter that is of great importance to Canadian veterans and which is mentioned in the last brief presented to the cabinet by the Canadian Legion; that is, that the government give consideration to amendments to the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. As far as I can ascertain this does not involve heavy expenditures, but it is a question of helping a number of children of war dead to secure a better education. In order to save the time of the committee and to be exact in presenting the case I am going to quote from the Legion brief, which says:

> We have noted with some satisfaction the benefits which young people have derived from the above legislation in the last few years. We have also realized that the original act leaves out many children deserving of educational assistance. These groups, which we feel the provisions of the act should be extended to include, are:
> (1) Children entitled to receive pension because the father was in receipt of disability pension at the rate of 50 per cent or more at the time of death but whose death was not directly attributable to his service;

I know of a few cases that would be included if that amendment were provided. The Legion's request continued as follows:

> (2) Those children who are unable to pursue higher education as presently specified in the act and regulations but who take vocational and technical training to better fit them for employment.

I think there are more of those cases, but that does not necessarily mean any increase in expenditure. It does involve, however, a widening of the basis of the assistance, providing opportunities for boys and girls without academic qualifications but who want to learn trades and things of that sort; and if there is one thing we are short of in this country it is skilled tradesmen. Nearly every small community finds it difficult to secure people capable of doing electrical work, plumbing and carpentering and work of that nature. This provides an opportunity to correct that situation in the future by assisting those who would prefer to take technical and vocational rather than academic training. Because of the situation that exists at the present time the Canadian Legion recommends that the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act be amended to correct it.

I want to mention two amendments the Legion thinks are required in respect of the Veterans Insurance Act. This legislation has been of great benefit to veterans throughout the years. First of all they ask for an extension of the application date for veterans insurance. The brief has this to say:

> Unless a veteran of world war II still has re-establishment credit his opportunity to apply for veterans insurance was cut off on December 31, 1954, or 10 years after discharge, whichever was the later. Veterans of world war I were given 15 years, following cessation of hostilities, in which to avail themselves of similar protection.

I think that is a very reasonable request. I am one of those veterans who came back after the first world war concerned about re-establishing myself, regaining my health and things of that sort, and looking after a young brood of children. I did not realize for four or five years the advantages of this veterans insurance, but when I did realize it some years later I took out a policy because I was permitted to do so by the extension of the time limit. These veterans are growing older; they are accepting their responsibilities, and more and more they realize the advantages of this act. I do urge the minister to consider an amendment that would extend the date for application. The Legion brief bears out what I have to say in that connection, because it goes on to say:

> Many disabled veterans seeking to provide security for their families, denied them by ordinary insurance, have found that their right to apply for veterans insurance has lapsed. There is no valid reason why the same privileges which were extended to world war I veterans cannot be made available to world war II veterans. The fact that this exists for those with re-establishment credits indicates its administrative acceptability.

As I said before, veterans more and more recognize the benefits they can obtain by taking out policies under this act, and I do urge the minister to repeat the procedure which was followed after the first world war. It is on this account that the Legion recommends:

> That the government of Canada amend the Veterans Insurance Act to extend the date of application for world war II veterans to December 31, 1960. Comparable treatment should be accorded Korean veterans.

The Legion suggests a second amendment to the Veterans Insurance Act respecting disability pensions, section 10(1). It has this to say:

> Widows of disability pensioners are deprived of the full effect as beneficiaries under the Veterans Insurance Act because they may receive less than the full death benefit of the policy. Technically, the veteran is charged with knowledge of this provision, but there is grave doubt that all understand its practical application. This is a violation of the accepted concept of life insurance.

The Legion therefore recommends:

> That the government of Canada amend the Veterans Insurance Act to eliminate this section.

The minister will recall when we discussed this section of the Veterans Insurance Act. At that time he took exactly the same stand we and other opposition members in the committee did. We took the stand taken by the Canadian Legion at that time, that the act should be amended to eliminate this discrimination. I ask the minister to give that his consideration.

Mr. Brooks: I am still of the same opinion I had then.

Mr. Herridge: We are making these representations in this form because we know the minister is of the same opinion. We just want to back him up to the fullest extent.

I now want to say a word or two about the Veterans' Land Act administration, which has been very successful across this country. A good many veterans in my constituency settled under the provisions of this act, the greater number under the small holdings section of the act, but we also have a number settled on farms. I must say that in my conversations with veterans generally I find they much prefer to come under the jurisdiction, or the administration, of the Veterans' Land Act. It is for that reason that quite recently the national council of the Legion urged an amendment to bring part II of the Veterans' Land Act under the complete control of the Veterans' Land Act administration.

There is no question about it, the veteran does not like being transferred to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. They tell me in good numbers that under the present circumstances their application under part II is made through the Veterans' Land Act administration and is serviced in that way. Then when it comes to later administration, collection, advice, suggestion, and all that sort of thing, they are transferred to the jurisdiction of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As a result of past experience, and because the departmental officials are sympathetic, they would very much prefer to remain under the Veterans' Land Act.

Mind you, when you read the figures in regard to collections under the Veterans' Land Act you find that the country does not suffer because of any deficiency in this respect. Because of the particular approach of the officials of this department and their knowledge of veterans problems, the veterans in Canada, generally speaking, would like under part II to come under the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. I would like to hear from the minister in this regard when he replies at the conclusion of this debate.

The Legion at a recent council meeting also asked for a reduction of the interest rate to 3 per cent. In my opinion, and I think in the opinion of members of our group, the small holdings section of the Veterans' Land Act is one of the finest pieces of housing legislation we have in Canada, and we would like to see its principles extended to a much wider section of the population. We believe there is nothing better you can do to lay a sound foundation for good homes and well brought up families than by making provision for good housing.

I also want to make what I was going to say is my annual plea—it is now a perennial plea—for a reduction in the acreage required to qualify under the small holdings section of the Veterans' Land Act. Generally speaking it is ridiculous. If the land is valued at over $500 an acre, then it is 1.6 acres. I would admit that the officials of the Veterans' Land Act administration do everything possible to assist the veterans and make allowances for certain circumstances, and so on, within the terms of the law and the regulations.

As far as our district is concerned—and I know it applies to a good number of other districts in Canada—land for this purpose amounting to 1.6 acres, or three acres in larger areas, is not available because of the topography of the country. Right in my constituency there are still 200 veterans of whom I have knowledge who are being denied the opportunity to build under the small holdings section of the Veterans' Land Act, because they must get at least 1.6 acres which is valued at $500 an acre, or three acres if the land is of lesser value.

I do urge that consideration be given to reducing the acreage to the former half acre. In my district the majority of those men are working for the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, or are working in the mines, in the lumber mills or in the sawmills. I know from experience that if a veteran has a good home and half an acre of good land that is all he can look after. That half acre of good land is of great assistance in reducing the cost of living, particularly for the younger veteran raising a young family. I do urge consideration of a reduction in this acreage.

In conclusion I want to mention one other group which I think is being overlooked. I refer to the approximately 400 members of the Canadian overseas firefighter corps. We had this out in the veterans affairs committee years ago. The minister was very frank in expressing his opinion concerning these matters, along with a good number of others in this group. He was just as indignant as we were that they were not included in and given the benefits of the veterans charter legislation.

[Mr. Herridge.]

We all remember that when evidence was being given to the committee at the time on that particular point we were told, I think on very sound grounds, that these men were promised the benefits of the veterans charter and of the veterans legislation prior to leaving for Canada. At this time there are only approximately 400 of them in Canada. You will find them scattered all over the country. A few of them are serving in various fire brigades. I do urge that consideration be given to the very reasonable case that has been advanced for the consideration of these men under the legislation provided for veterans in this country.

Those are the particular pieces of unfinished business that I wanted to bring to the attention of the minister and the committee. I will have a few things to say about hospital administration, admissions and things of that sort, and there are also a few other matters I wish to raise, but I will bring those up under the appropriate items.

Finally may I say there is no question that throughout the years there has been a continual improvement in veterans legislation, and we must give great credit to the major veterans organizations, the Canadian Legion and the national council of veterans, for that improvement. Those organizations have constantly paid attention to the needs of veterans and the legislation required to meet those needs. They have brought them to the attention of members of parliament and the veterans affairs committee when they had the opportunity, and have informed us very fully from time to time.

We recognize that we have some of the finest veterans legislation in the world, but I trust the government will give favourable consideration to the suggestions for amendments to remedy certain deficiencies in our legislation which will be brought to the attention of the minister by various members in this debate. We have done so well up to now, and the cost of what we may have to do in the future is very small in relation to the total cost at the present time. We can achieve so much with so little. I am not going to go further into what we should do, because the hon. member for Selkirk will be our second speaker on item 1 and I am going to leave him to deal with that question.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks I want to assure the minister that he will at all times receive the sincere co-operation of the members of this group in his endeavours to improve veterans legislation. I think we are fortunate in having very fine personnel in the Department of Veterans Affairs but, of course, they can only go as far as the legislation permits them. I also find that when I hear criticisms of the Department of Veterans Affairs they should in reality be criticisms of certain pieces of legislation they have to administer, and I am sure the minister will endeavour to bring down legislation from time to time to improve the operation of the department.

I think the minister has done very well so far. He has brought down amendments to the War Veterans' Allowance Act which have been a substantial improvement. We also have amendments to the Pension Act. I think those amendments should go considerably farther, and I will have something to say on that later.

On November 6 the minister stated that it was his intention to set up a veterans affairs committee at the next session of parliament with power to review all veterans legislation. That is a most pleasant departure from the past practice whereby the veterans affairs committee has been tied down to very narrow terms of reference. We have just been allowed to consider the specific piece of legislation referred to the committee.

I am hoping that when the minister decides to set up the committee on veterans affairs he will set it up as a standing committee. There has been a demand from veterans organizations and members of the house for a number of years that the veterans affairs committee be a standing committee. It would not involve any increase in cost to the government, and it does seem to me that is one of the recommendations of the veterans organizations the minister could very well carry out.

I want to turn now to the Pension Act. The hon. member for Kootenay West stated that we would have an opportunity to discuss the Pension Act when the bill was before us, but the bill has a number of specific amendments in it and as the matters I want to bring up are outside those amendments it would not, strictly speaking, be in order to bring them up when we are discussing the bill on pensions.

Let me make it clear that the criticism I have to make is not in any way a criticism of the pension commission; for, as I have already said, they are tied down by the legislation, and I think certain changes are necessary in order that a wider interpretation may be given in certain matters regarding pensions.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, the sections of the Pension Act to which I wish to refer are sections 13 and 70. Section 70 used to be section 62. There has been a great deal of discussion concerning these two sections in former veterans affairs committees. The minister and his colleague the Minister of Public Works have been quite eloquent in their pleas to get amendment to these two sections.

Section 13 deals with disabilities of pre-enlistment origin. We in this group have always taken the stand that a veteran's condition as recorded on his medical sheet at the time of enlistment should be regarded as his true condition, and that no attempt should be made to refuse a pension on the ground that the disability arose from a condition recorded some time prior to enlistment. We might have a case where a veteran was in hospital five or six years before he enlisted, and he was discharged as being cured. Later, when that record is looked up, the stand is taken that the condition for which he is seeking a pension actually arose out of the condition he had at the time he was in hospital and for which he was discharged as being cured.

The Legion has taken a similar stand. I notice that in the brief they presented to the cabinet last fall they recommended that section 13 (1) (a) of the Pension Act be amended so that where a pension applicant who has served in an actual theatre of war is found to have a disability resulting from injury or disease not recorded on his medical examination prior to enlistment, such injury or disease shall be presumed to have incurred or had its inception subsequent to enlistment. All I am going to say is that I hope the minister will give very careful consideration to that section, to see whether or not it might be possible to get a little closer to that principle.

I have often heard people criticize the pension commission for the decisions that they bring down in relation to that section. I would say that in the vast majority of cases it was not the pension commission that were to blame but it was the wording of the section. I do not believe we can hope to have any improvement in that matter unless we have an amendment to section 13 along the lines suggested by the Canadian Legion.

The other section, section 70, is I think far more important. You may say that it is the veteran's last resort in so far as getting a pension is concerned. There has been a lot of discussion about this section in the veterans committee. I recall that in 1948, I think it was, the late member for Lanark, Dr. Blair, moved an amendment in order to try to get a wider interpretation of the benefit of doubt. His amendment was to strike out the words "is entitled to draw"—perhaps I had better read section 70:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, on any application for pension the applicant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, which means that it is not necessary for him to adduce conclusive proof of his right to the pension applied for, but the body adjudicating on the claim—

Here, I should like to interject that the words used to be "is entitled to draw". Those are the words which the hon. member moved to strike out in committee.

—shall draw from all the circumstances of the case, the evidence adduced and medical opinions, all reasonable inferences and presumptions in favour of the applicant.

The hon. member moved that the words as I say, "is entitled to draw", be struck out. I was very sceptical as to whether or not that would make any difference because the words "shall draw" were in the act before and I could not see how the words "is entitled to draw" could affect the words "shall draw". However, the committee felt that it might be an improvement so the committee voted to strike out the words. The minister expressed approval of that amendment. I still claim section 70 is not wide enough. I am not quarrelling with the interpretation of the pension commission. I claim you will never get satisfaction from section 70 until the pension commission are given wider discretionary powers. The trouble is the pension commission have not the discretionary powers necessary to give a soldier a fair deal.

I am going to cite one case. I do not like citing cases, but in view of the fact this case has received a great deal of publicity through the Veterans' Advocate of November issue, I think it is well to read it. The minister can then say whether or not the explanation in the Veterans' Advocate is fair. Let me read it:

Another matter which needs urgent attention is a confirmation of the obligation to give the veteran always the benefit of the element of doubt. Especially in the case of death by cancer. As we write we have before us the history of a Winnipeg veteran whose widow and children have recently been denied a pension. This man suffered gunshot wounds in his back during world war II. He was discharged with a 30 per cent disability. As the years passed his back began to bother him. After many medical examinations it was finally discovered that a soft-nosed bullet still was embedded near his spine. This was finally removed in 1949. His condition continued to deteriorate until he died in 1956 from cancer, which the autopsy report stated was very widespread. There was no positive proof that this disease was caused by gunshot wounds, but there also is no positive proof that it was not. There definitely was proof of negligence inasmuch as the bullet in question was not discovered for several years. We realize that should this widow be granted a pension it might pave the way for many other claims. However, we contend that the element of doubt is there and that a pension should be awarded and that the act should be changed to strengthen claims where such doubt is present.

[Mr. Quelch.]

As I say, I do not know whether or not that is a fair description of the case, but if that is a true description then I believe the majority of the members of the house would agree that the widow should receive a pension. It may be that the doctors were of the definite opinion that that man died from cancer, and that his condition had not been affected by the bullet being embedded in the back near the spine for six years, but as I understand it the medical profession is not too certain as to the actual cause of cancer. Is the medical profession in a position to say that the fact the bullet had been embedded in the back for six years could not have had some effect upon that veteran's condition? I doubt it.

But even so, and granting that the medical doctors of the commission were justified in ruling that there was no doubt in this case that the man had died from cancer and the fact he had had a bullet in his back had nothing to do with that cancer, nevertheless I say in the light of all the facts of this case as disclosed in this article, the widow should receive a pension because for six years that man had a bullet in his back and his condition was deteriorating. Surely, the very least we could do as a form of compensation would be to award the widow a pension today. I say, therefore, what we need today is an amendment to section 70 to give the pension commission wider discretion. I am sure if the commission had it in their power to give the widow a pension, they would do so but they feel, under the terms of the section they are not able to do so. I say let us amend section 70 in such a way as to give the pension commission a greater discretion in such matters.

I now want to turn to the Veterans' Land Act. I have been somewhat concerned over the number of veterans who have been settled under the act and who are leaving the land. These veterans are not by any means misfits. They are not men who have failed. I would say that in the majority of cases the veterans who are leaving the land are men who are highly efficient and ambitious but who are not prepared to see their families continue to be obliged to live under the present low standard of living when they know very well that if they leave the farms and go into the cities they can greatly improve their condition.

I have followed a number of these cases through where men who were having a hard struggle on the farms left the farms and went into the city. I find that in the majority of cases those men have done extremely well. In my opinion a person is making a big mistake when he thinks that when a veteran or any other man leaves the farm today it is because he is inefficient or a misfit. That is not the reason. The reason is that they are ambitious, especially for their families. The other day somebody told me, "A man must have a love for the soil to carry on on the farm". I say that a man must have a greater love. His first love should be for his family. If that man knows that by continuing on the farm he is not going to be able to give his family the standard of living they deserve, his love for the soil will have to take second place to his love for his family.

I therefore think the officials of the Veterans' Land Act should do everything they can to help veterans to make the necessary financial arrangements to pay off their land and to leave the farm if they so desire because I do not believe you can ever hope for a soldier settler to be successful on the land once he desires to leave it, once he is no longer satisfied, or once his family is no longer satisfied.

I am suggesting that the officials should not try to stop him from leaving. We have now reached the stage where many veterans are now able to get clear title to their equipment and their livestock and many of them are able to make some financial arrangements whereby the amount remaining owing on the farm can be paid off. In some cases they assign their pension. In other cases they will assign the amount they receive from the farm to the Veterans' Land Act administration. Where satisfactory arrangements of that kind can be made, where a settler is desirous to leave the farm I think it would be a great mistake for the officials to try to put anything in the way of his leaving the farm.

After all, it must be remembered that most of the veterans who settled under the Veterans' Land Act had limited capital. In many cases their operations today are not large enough to give them the type of standard of living which they would be able to obtain if they went into another walk of life. Mind you, I am not criticizing the Veterans' Land Act. I think it is a good act. Unfortunately the situation that exists is that agriculture today is a distressed industry. Whether a man be a returned man or a civilian, if he is on the farm today in the majority of cases he is having a struggle to keep his head above water and at the same time maintain a standard of living that he deserves.

I want to say a few words with regard to the soldiers who settled under the old soldiers settlement act. It will be remembered that for a number of years the late member for Battle River, Mr. Robert Fair, used to introduce a motion to give clear title to veterans who had settled under the old soldiers settlement board. He received a very sympathetic hearing from the members of this house but no action was taken to give them a clear title, although I think we must agree that the government was quite considerate in cutting down the amount owing by those veterans. After all, the purpose of the soldiers settlement act was to try to re-establish these veterans within a period of 25 years. We find that 50 per cent of those veterans failed to become established. Today, 38 years after the veterans were settled under that act, we find there are still 39 veterans accounts unsettled, with an average debt of $616. I suggest to the minister that we could very well, at this late date, wipe out those accounts entirely. These veterans are getting old. They have not many years to live. They would like to have a clear title to their land. I think the least we could do now is to say to them, "We realize that you have had a struggle; you have stayed on the land and we are going to wipe out what you owe".

The other matter to which I should like to refer is the merchant seamen. As I understand it, today the only merchant seamen who can come under the Veterans' Land Act are those merchant seamen who are in receipt of a pension. I want to refresh the minister's memory with regard to the attitude taken by the veterans' affairs committee in the past during the war in connection with the merchant seamen. I have here a copy of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the special committee on land settlement of veterans of the present war for the sitting on June 23, 1942. We had Mr. Arthur Randles, director of merchant seamen, Department of Transport, before us. This is what he said:

> —it is recommended that Canadian merchant seamen be permitted to participate under the land settlement arrangements, provided that their record shows they have served for an appreciable period in dangerous waters or zones during the present hostilities, and I would suggest that a period of three months' service might be taken as a guide to determine their eligibility to participate. This is in line with the general requirements for the issuance of a merchant navy badge. In any case, under circumstances where a Canadian merchant navy badge is not issued, evidence of service in hazardous zones can be provided by the seamen's discharge documents.

I just want to quote what the minister of veterans affairs at that time had to say with regard to this question. Hon. Ian Mackenzie stated as follows:

My own opinion is that the men of the merchant navy are entitled to any and all of the privileges which anybody else serving in this war overseas or elsewhere gets. As I see it, they are twice as much in the line of fire.

The committee discussed that matter at some length. Later the minister said he thought it would be a mistake to allow the merchant seamen immediately after the war to be eligible to settle under the Veterans' Land Act because he said these men are needed on the sea. But he said at a later date that we might be able to change our decision in that regard. I would ask you to mark well the report that was made with regard to that matter and dated July 7, 1942:

That at a later date this act—

That is the Veterans' Land Act.

—be so amended as to make provision for persons having had service on ships, who are not in receipt of a disability pension.

I do not think anybody can argue today that we should not allow merchant seamen to come under the Veterans' Land Act for the reason that they are needed on the sea. Today we seem to have a number of surplus seamen, especially when we transfer Canadian ships to foreign registry. I think the minister might give that matter consideration and see whether or not it would be possible to make merchant seamen who had service in a danger zone eligible to come under the Veterans' Land Act. I am not suggesting that they should come in as full time farmers, but it would be of tremendous help to these men if they could take advantage of the small holding section of the act and perhaps have a small holding alongside the sea coast and possibly continue with a certain amount of fishing.

I see that my time is nearly up. I hope the minister will also give that matter his careful consideration so that at the next session when the veterans affairs committee meets he may be in a position to recommend some action be taken in that regard.

The only other matter to which I want to refer now—and it is one that I do not think I could raise on any other section—is the question of the aged veteran. I want to commend the Department of Veterans Affairs for their sympathetic attitude toward the aged veteran. I have received from veterans a number of applications or requests to try to find jobs for them. They have said, "We do not want to have to apply for the war veterans allowance; we would like to get some work. Could you get us a job perhaps with some department?" I have taken the matter up with the Department of Veterans Affairs. They have sent a counsellor over to interview the man and in the majority of cases they have found ways and means by which that man could be employed. In some cases they have recommended that he make application to the corps of commissionaires. I think it is called the Canadian corps of commissionaires.

In that way they have been able to get employment. There is one thing I would like to ask the minister to explain. I have looked at the report of the Department of Veterans Affairs and there is a reference to this corps; it states it does not receive any subsidy from the government. I wonder if the minister would explain how this corps is financed; how many offices it has across the dominion, and what connection, if any, there is between the Canadian corps of commissionaires and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. MacRae: In rising to speak for the first time in this house, Mr. Chairman, I would first like to pay a tribute to the hon. minister who heads the department and whose estimates we are now considering. The hon. minister is spokesman for the province in which we are now living, but he is also a veteran of distinguished service to his country, firstly as an officer in the New Brunswick fighting 26th battalion during world war I; secondly, he has rendered continuous service between the wars in the militia of this country; thirdly, he served throughout the whole of world war II, and now lastly on account of his record as a member of parliament for 22 years. During this period he has been almost continuously a member of the veterans affairs committee. His record is there and it speaks for itself.

It has been said that the Canadian veterans legislation is the best in the world. I think we all agree with that, Mr. Chairman, and it is a tribute to all of those who have served in the previous parliaments of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacRae: In my opinion it is also a great tribute to those who have served in another organization the name of which I have heard mentioned very often in our deliberations on the War Veterans' Allowance Act. The name of the organization to which I refer, of course, is the Canadian Legion which, for the past 30 years, has played such a vital part in guiding, advising and helping the government in its decisions with respect to veterans legislation. Like many who returned from this last war—and for that matter from the first world war—and being grateful that I had been spared to come home to my family, I determined that I would try to help those with whom I had served and their dependents. In the Canadian Legion I found the vehicle through which I could work. That organization has given outstanding help to the veterans and in the past score of years the leadership which it has attracted on its top level has been invaluable; I refer to such men as Alex Walker, Basil Price, Lionel Baxter, Alf Watts and Dr. Lumsden. Alex Walker, indeed, spent the full five years of the war here in Ottawa so that he could be near to the government and assist them in their decisions concerning war veterans' welfare. Dr. John Anderson is another man whose name I should mention and now David Burgess. All these men have given service of the highest calibre. The Legion is a big organization of more than a quarter of a million men and women. It is unfortunate that all the veterans of this country do not belong to the organization in order to give it even greater strength but we must not, of course, minimize the fact that there are other veterans' organizations. However, the Canadian Legion is the spokesman and has been the spokesman for the veterans.

In my own work as provincial president for that organization and also as a member of the dominion council I had the opportunity on two occasions to appear before members of the previous government, the government which was headed by the right hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of the Opposition. I would like to say that when we appeared with our briefs no group could have been received more kindly or more courteously. The representations of any group could not have been listened to with more attention than the representations made by the Legion on behalf of the veterans. I just wanted to pay that tribute to the right hon. gentleman and to his former colleagues.

That the work of the Department of Veterans Affairs was of considerable standing and would be projected far into the future was brought home to me very forcibly not very long ago when I read that recently the last pension attributable to the war of 1812 had just been paid in the United States. It seems rather amazing that it would last that long, that there would still be someone who was pensionable from that war. It therefore is likely that the task of the Department of Veterans Affairs will go beyond the time of any of us here today, even taking into account the hope, which I am sure is shared by all of us, that we will never have another war.

I recently had an opportunity to converse with the senior officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs, along with other members of the department, many of whom are here today with the minister. I was amazed at the scope of the work they are now doing. When we realize there are 190,000 active pension cases coming under the Canadian pension commission, that the war veterans allowance department has over 57,000 active cases; that the Veterans' Land Act deals with over 58,000 cases and that there are over 10,000 men and women in our hospitals under active treatment, we realize the tremendous scope of the work of this department.

I do not wish to take too long because I realize this house wishes to get on with the estimates and not to be held up, but I would like to speak about two or three things in connection with veterans legislation. To my mind, one of the finest acts that was ever passed in this house was that passed in 1953, namely the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. I say this because that act provided for the children of those men who had given their lives in world war II or who had since died from their wounds. There is, however, one regrettable feature in this respect, in that it took eight years from the end of the war before the act was passed and undoubtedly many youngsters during that period did not have the benefit of this legislation. I particularly recall a case in the city in which I live, the city of Fredericton, where a man who had served as a sergeant in world war I and in world war II was back in the forces because he was determined to be there. He served as a major in the regiment in which I also served and gave his life on D-day on the shores of France. He should not have been there, of course, and they did everything to keep him from going, but he was determined to lead his company on the shores that day and he was killed.

Now this man left two children and by 1953 the children had already received their education with the help of their widowed mother and also with some help from the Legion, from scholarships and bursaries. As I say, it is regrettable that we cannot undo the past; it is regrettable the act was not implemented at the end of the war.

I would like to speak for a moment about the benevolent funds. The story of the canteen fund of the first world war is not a happy one and perhaps through mismanagement or lack of wisdom the fund was rapidly depleted in many provinces. Those who emerged safely from the last war when the funds of the canteens and messes were frozen had the benefit of that experience and the benevolent funds of the army, navy and air force were set up. It seems to me they have been most wisely administered. I can speak from personal experience especially about the army benevolent fund.

I can well remember at the dominion conference of the Legion in 1946 sitting on a committee that considered very seriously how this fund would be administered. The present deputy minister if I remember correctly was a member of that committee. Over the years the fund which at that time, if I am not mistaken, was something like $7 million has been most wisely administered and has served an extremely useful purpose.

The hon. member who spoke just before I rose referred to the corps of commissionaires and addressed several questions to the minister. I would not attempt to speak for the minister but since I wanted to discuss this question too my remarks may be of assistance with respect to one or two of the problems raised because I have been deeply interested in the corps of commissionaires.

The corps of commissionaires is administered by a board of governors, in the case of our own province a board consisting of 40 men who serve without remuneration of any kind and are the guiding body for the corps. In the case of our province perhaps the most distinguished member is the lieutenant governor of New Brunswick, himself a war amputee as a result of service in the first world war and a man keenly interested in the welfare of his comrades and their dependents. The corps is non-political, non-partisan and non-profitmaking. It has no connection in that manner with any other organization. The governors arrange employment for the members of the corps. They are suitably uniformed and it seems to me that only the highest calibre of man is attracted to this corps.

I know of a very fine man in my own community who served initially in the Boer war and then in world war I and finally in world war II. The amazing thing is that he was granted his commission in world war II. I do not know just how old he is but it does not matter because he is still a young looking and active gentleman. I believe there is no finer example of a serving commissionaire.

Perhaps I neglected to say that five cents per hour is deducted from the fee which industry pays to the board of governors for the services of the men in the corps and that money is used for administration purposes, uniforms and certain other things. This splendid oragnization provides those men who do not wish to accept charity an opportunity of working and earning a decent living. The government of this country spends many millions of dollars annually in the interests of the Canadian people but I submit there is no group in this great country that is more worthy of consideration than those who served and the dependents of those who served when Canada was engaged in the terrible conflicts of this century.

It is and has always been a source of great satisfaction to me to be able to express words of commendation to the Department of Veterans Affairs and as a veteran I can say to this department—and as Canadians we all can say this—"Well done, good and faithful servants."

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my general support of the recommendations contained in the brief recently submitted to the government of Canada by the dominion command of the Canadian Legion. I should like in particular to express my unqualified support of their recommendation with respect to Newfoundland veterans which reads as follows:

> The Canadian Legion therefore recommends that a change be made in the Pension Act to make clear the status of these Newfoundland veterans in accordance with the spirit of the negotiations leading up to the terms of union and with the intent of the legislators as reflected in the other legislation quoted above.

I was very pleased to find that the brief dealt with the special problem of Newfoundland veterans at some length as found at pages 10, 11 and 12 of their submission. I do not intend to repeat the arguments to be found here which are almost indentical with the statements I made in the house as reported at page 914 of Hansard of November 8. However, I believe it would be useful and convenient, not only to hon. members of this committee but to those of the public who read Hansard if I were to place on the record the relevant sections of the legislation referred to in the Legion brief. The relevant section of the Canadian Pension Act is section 13, subsections 5, 6 and 7 which read as follows:

> (5) For the purposes of sections 50, 51 and 52, domicile in Newfoundland shall be deemed to be domicile in Canada.
> (6) A member of the naval or military forces of Newfoundland in world war I or world war II shall be deemed to be a member of the forces for the purposes of this section.
> (7) A British subject resident and domiciled in Newfoundland at the time of enlistment who served in the naval, army or air forces of His Majesty or in any of the naval, army or air forces of any of the countries allied with His Majesty during world war II shall be deemed to be a member of the forces for the purposes of this section, if the disability in respect of which the application is made is not pensionable by virtue of subsection (5) or (6).

The Canadian pension commission has interpreted these sections to mean that Newfoundland veterans are no different from Canadians who left Canada to enlist in the Imperial services and therefore they cannot be treated as if they had served in Her Majesty's Canadian forces as stated in the opening paragraph of the terms of union on which it was intended the status of Newfoundland veterans under confederation would be based.

Hon. members will recall that the opening section in the terms of union relating to veterans stated that Newfoundland veterans would be treated on the same basis as if they had served in the Canadian forces. In contrast, when we examine other legislation we find that this interpretation is expressly written into the act. For example the relevant section of the War Veterans' Allowance Act is section 30, subsection 11 (a) which reads as follows:

—for the purposes of this act,

(a) the expression "Canadian forces" includes any forces raised in Newfoundland and "domicile in Canada" and "residence in Canada" include respectively domicile and residence in Newfoundland, whether before or after the union of Newfoundland with Canada.

The Veterans Rehabilitation Act is even more explicit. The relative section of this act is section 6 (1) which reads as follows:

For the purposes of sections 7, 8, 9 and 11, a Newfoundland veteran who has been discharged shall be deemed to be a veteran as defined in section 2.

Section 2 reads as follows:

In this section the expression "Newfoundland veteran" means a person who served on active service.

(a) in any of the naval or army forces of Newfoundland or having been recruited in Newfoundland in any of the naval, army or air forces raised in Newfoundland by or on behalf of the United Kingdom; or

(b) in any other naval, army or air forces of His Majesty and at the time of his enlistment therein was domiciled in Newfoundland; or

(c) In any of the naval, army or air forces of the nations allied with His Majesty in active operations against the enemy in world war II, if he was domiciled in Newfoundland at the time of his enlistment therein and was domiciled and resident in Newfoundland within two years from the date of his discharge therefrom or the 8th day of May, 1945, whichever is the later.

It will be seen that the status of the Newfoundland veteran is very clear in the definitions set forth in the Veterans Rehabilitation Act and in the War Veterans' Allowance Act, but when it comes to the Canadian Pension Act there is some ambiguity. I should like to join with the hon. member for Acadia in urging that either the Canadian pensions commission be given greater discretionary powers or that the relative sections be amended to clarify the Pension Act to bring it into line with the other two acts and in line also with the intentions of the legislators, as set forth in the terms of union.

At this time I should also like to support the recommendations of the Canadian Legion with respect to the merchant navy. I have already referred to this group, as can be found in Hansard of November 6 at page 823. Hon. members will have received a further brief from the Canadian merchant navy veterans association, and I should like to join with the other members who have supported the requests contained in this brief.

The basis on which a war veterans allowance is paid is the theory that a veteran who served in His Majesty's forces is burnt out by reason of his services in comparison with those who did not serve. I am sure that this theory can be with equal validity applied to the merchant navy as to any other of the three services. These people suffered severe casualties, as I pointed out before. In some settlements in my district the casualties in the merchant navy, the numbers actually killed, were far in excess of those of any of the other services, and in some instances even in excess of the three services together. These merchant navy veterans underwent all the hazards of war, including gunfire, aerial bombing and torpedoing and, as a result of their misfortunes they often had to suffer the hardships of being left in the sea for hours on end, floating around in cold water, in shark-infested waters, or drifting for days in the ocean in very small boats.

I am sure everyone will agree that hardships of this kind must tend to shorten a man's life and make him age much more rapidly than would normally be the case. I strongly recommend that the minister consider the claims set forth in the brief of the Canadian merchant navy veterans association that the burnt-out pension be extended to veterans of the merchant navy.

I agree with the hon. member for Acadia that there is no good reason now why the merchant navy veterans should not have some of the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act and also civil service preference. I strongly recommend this to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I know that he cannot do a great deal at this moment, but very soon he will be considering his departmental estimates for the coming year, and I do hope he will be able to bring down at the next session the necessary changes in veterans welfare legislation to implement the recommendations of this brief and that he will find it possible to include the necessary provisions in his subsequent estimates.

Mr. Bryce: My colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West, dealt with a great many of the problems the veteran has today and I am not going to touch on these. It seems to me that when we begin to talk about veterans affairs the chips drop off everybody's shoulders and everybody is ready to agree with the other fellow because it is something that is really needed.

The hon. member for Kootenay West dealt with some of the amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. The first one was to benefit certain married women. The second one had to do with residence outside Canada. The third one dealt with certain dependent mothers, and then there was the increase in the ceiling up to $1,200 for single veterans and $2,000 for married veterans. Then, there was the inclusion of the veterans of the merchant navy. He talked about educational assistance, amendments to the Veterans Insurance Act and to the Veterans' Land Act, improved hospital treatment regulations and many minor adjustments. Therefore, I would be taking up a lot of the time unnecessarily if I repeated these things, because I believe in the thoughts that he expressed when he was speaking on this matter.

There is one thing that I do want to ask the minister about and that is this. When a veteran becomes mentally ill and is taken to a hospital and remains there for some considerable time does he get his pension while he is there, or what part of it does he get? Should the veteran get better, does he get what is coming to him when he leaves the hospital? If he dies, does the remainder that is left at the hospital revert to the crown?

I should like answers to these questions because I want to relay the answers to other veterans in Manitoba. I support the hon. member for Acadia in bringing up the soldier settlement problem. I think he said there are only 39 left now. We who farmed through the bad years must realize the hell they went through trying to keep body and soul together. I have a lot of these farms in my constituency and it must have been known from the time these men went on the land that it would never be possible for them to make good. They have not got clear titles yet, and if there are only 39 left I appeal most sincerely to the minister to give them a clear title because they deserve it.

There is another matter that has been brought up repeatedly in past years. I refer to the firefighters. I know that the minister is familiar with the matter because he has been here longer than I have. I feel quite sure he knows the story, that General Lafleche said they would be taken care of, but very little has been done for them. I think that they should get some consideration. I have a letter here from the president of the firefighters association in which he says:

> Our overseas firefighters in Winnipeg number 25 and we are in constant touch with members in the other provinces and no doubt you may hear from their respective members of parliament in our favour . . .

[Mr. Bryce.]

That is the other matter I wanted to bring up and I ask the minister to give it some reconsideration. I have also had some correspondence with the minister about some people who wrote me concerning Deer Lodge hospital. The gentleman I spoke to last about it wanted to know if the government was getting so hard up that it had to collect $500 a ward to establish wards. The minister was good enough to take up the matter. However, we have never got to the bottom of it and I should like to get to the bottom of it. Moneys are voted here in parliament for Deer Lodge hospital and why the hospital should need to ask organizations for donations merely so that the organization can have its name given to the ward I do not know. The minister can tell me about that when he is answering all the questions.

The Department of Veterans Affairs is one of the largest departments of the government and is asking for a budget of approximately $250 million this year. I brought in a resolution last year seeking the establishment of a permanent committee on veterans affairs. It was only before the house for one day and 19 members spoke in the debate, 20 including myself. Only two were against the resolution. Everybody else was in favour of it. I think such a committee is just as much needed this year as it was last year.

The argument has always been put up that a special committee of the house can be set up any time it is needed. I have now sat in the house under four ministers of veterans affairs, the late Hon. Ian Mackenzie, the Hon. Milton Gregg, the Hon. Hugues Lapointe and now the present minister. These hon. gentlemen could be classed as professional soldiers who knew as much as any other veteran knew.

Veterans affairs are going to continue to be with us, but the type of man who will head the department will change over the years and that is the reason I am so anxious to see a permanent committee on veterans affairs set up. Some day in the near future the head of the department will be a civil servant but not necessarily a veteran. A minister who has never seen active service can never be expected to understand the problems of the veteran in the same way as one who has had that experience.

May I say here, to make sure that I am understood, that I have nothing whatever against the people holding the various jobs in the department today. Over the years I have been here I have got to know them personally. They have become intimate friends of mine and I have repeatedly gone to them for advice in cases that have been brought to my attention. But the men who are there today are going to come to the end of the road soon and we are not going to have veterans in these positions. The sooner we get it in black and white that we will have a committee every year the better it will be for everybody.

Our veterans, including those of world war I and world war II, constitute a significant proportion of the total Canadian population. We have only to remind ourselves that 66,651 lost their lives in the first world war and 44,891 in the second world war. Furthermore, such a committee would facilitate the presentation of veterans problems by the Canadian Legion and other recognized organizations in Canada. Often in the past there have been times when there has been no committee on veterans affairs with the result that important problems affecting veterans and their families did not receive the proper airing to which they were entitled.

The Department of Veterans Affairs acts in an administrative capacity in dealing with veterans problems. Competent as the department may be in this role, the fact is that our veterans require additional attention which is beyond the scope of the administrators in the department. If a permanent committee were established and if it sat every session it was required parliament would be in a much better position to determine when changes in veterans legislation were required.

I feel sure that a veterans affairs committee dealing with these matters from year to year would be able to see that the legislation passed for the benefit of veterans was maintained and used for the benefit of veterans. Only by having a permanent veterans affairs committee of the house, which can keep close to the needs of the veteran, are we going to get the kind of administration the veterans should have.

I am pleased to learn from the minister that he is going to set up a permanent veterans affairs committee at the next session of parliament. I want to congratulate the minister on making this decision. I may say to the minister that my resolution is on the order paper and when it comes up for discussion I will let it stand and drop it to the bottom of the list. The minister will make many veterans happy across this broad dominion. The Legion asked for a permanent veterans affairs committee and I have their request here. When the Minister of Public Works spoke last spring he quoted the resolution passed by the Legion at their convention in Vancouver in June, 1956. As found at page 951 of Hansard for Feburary 4, 1957, it is in these words:

Whereas the government has not seen fit to appoint a committee on veterans affairs during the present session of parliament;

Whereas problems are continually arising concerning the Pension Act, War Veterans' Allowance Act, et cetera;

Be it resolved that this convention make representations for the appointment of a permanent standing committee on veterans affairs to which all such problems would be referred.

I am sure that everyone is going to congratulate the minister for making such a bold move. I know that when he was on this side of the house he gave full support to such legislation as we tried to get passed. It has been an uphill fight to try to get that but I do not for one minute think the minister will go back on me now. He told me he would do this, and I am withdrawing my resolution knowing full well that the minister will keep his word.

Mr. Hahn: I should like to be associated with those who spoke so kindly of the work of the department and with respect to the operations of the department itself. Certainly the spirit of co-operation we have had has been excellent. I may say that the Legion members in my area are very appreciative of it. I think the veterans are extremely fortunate to have a minister sympathetic to their cause. Those of us who have been on the special committee on veterans affairs and in the house in former years recall so well how frequently he spoke on behalf of the veterans. I am satisfied that if it is at all possible to have certain legislation introduced that would assist the veterans even more, he will do his level best to attain that end.

I speak at this time to give my measure of support to any legislation the minister may propose so that any influence we might have may result in such legislation finally being brought about. The hon. member for Selkirk just mentioned the resolution he had calling for a standing committee on veterans affairs. I hope the minister will be able to carry out his desire and introduce legislation next year to bring about such a committee. Last year when the hon. member for Selkirk introduced his resolution I was one who spoke in favour of it. I certainly have not changed my mind in the meantime. I was very pleased the other day when the minister, in speaking on veterans affairs, indicated that he, too, was going along with the idea.

There are two particular matters about which I want to speak today. One of these matters was touched upon only slightly when we had the bill on war veterans' allowance before us. I refer to the submission in the Canadian Legion brief respecting merchant seamen. At that time I indicated to the house that I could not recall the merchant seamen being represented before the committee, but apparently on June 7 and 8, 1954 a representative of these seamen was before the committee. He drew their problem to our attention. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has spoken on this question on more than one occasion, and I would certainly concur with him and with the hon. member for Acadia and others who have spoken on behalf of the merchant seamen. I feel that their case is deserving of every consideration.

I find I am not alone in my thinking. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo had a brief from these merchant seamen and I do not know whether or not he has the same information I have but certainly some of us received a copy of the brief. I do have a facsimile of a letter signed by J. G. Diefenbaker. This letter was written on March 2, 1948 and it is addressed to A. J. Heide, secretary-treasurer, Canadian Merchant Nav Veterans' Association, Montreal. It reads:

Dear Mr. Heide,

I thank you and your association for your letter of February 24th.

I will bring the case of you veterans to the attention of the house when the veterans committee is set up.

Those that won the "Battle of the Atlantic" deserve to receive the same treatment as other veterans of our country.

Again thanking you for your letter, I am,

Yours sincerely,
J. G. Diefenbaker.

I realize that the Prime Minister was then a private member of the house, but I feel sure he has not changed his sentiments, at least, I hope he has not. If he felt the merchant seamen were deserving at that time of being included in and given the same rights and status as veterans, then I think their case is just as commendable today and possibly even more so when we see so many of these merchant seamen in the difficulties in which they are today. I find, sir, that this question of assistance for merchant seamen is not a thought that was just brought hastily to the attention of this house at this time, nor is it something about which former governments were not made aware. I have information that the Hon. Brooke Claxton, who was minister of national defence in 1951, received representations from this same association asking for inclusion of merchant seamen in the veterans' legislation. Later Hugues Lapointe, who is not with us now, received such a request. In fact, he gave some recognition to it by introducing the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, under which the children of merchant seamen were eligible for assistance. Then, the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, who was minister of transport at the time, came to Vancouver last year and was met by representatives of the seamen's union. They approached him with the same plea. It seems that cabinet ministers were quite approachable, but they never saw fit to introduce the legislation to which all of us were sympathetic.

I believe Canadians as a whole feel quite badly about the fact that some men who suffered just as grave hardships as anyone else during the war years, and who should be entitled to assistance under the War Veterans' Allowance Act and other veterans' legislation, are denied that opportunity now. I am satisfied quite a number of families and young men gave up their lives in the struggle for the Atlantic. They are memorials to the fact that these people certainly did undergo every hardship that one could picture. For that reason, I would plead with the minister to give them the consideration they warrant.

As recently as June of this year the plight of the merchant seamen was drawn to the attention of the Prime Minister when he was in London. I have here a facsimile of a letter in which he replied to their request for some consideration.

While it was not so straightforward in its reply as was the former one, certainly it would give one hopes that the door was not shut and that the present minister would see fit to do something about it. I recognize that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is sympathetic to their cause. As I said earlier, I mention the matter with the hope that he will draw to the attention of his colleagues in the cabinet the need for the inclusion of these merchant seamen. The fact that so many members of the house support this plea might make it a little bit easier for him to get the inclusion of these merchant seamen past the treasury board so that something could be done to assist them.

The other question that I have in mind is one which I consider is a serious one. In fact, it arises out of a letter to a news editor which appeared in the Western Producer of April 4, 1957. It is signed by Kenneth Winter, Merid, Saskatchewan. The charges in this case, to my mind, are very serious and I believe that they should be given further consideration, possibly with a view to discussing the matter with the officials of the Saskatchewan government in order to see whether something could not be done to assist these people or to prevent what this war veteran charges is actually taking place. I am not going to read the full letter because some of it is not too complimentary to the present C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan. The pertinent part of it reads as follows:

However, in Saskatchewan where they are in control,—

That is the C.C.F.

—their attitude in dealing with their own farmers is slightly different. Saskatchewan crown land is leased to veterans on long term leases, also to non-veterans. The federal government through the V.L.A. extends assistance to veterans to purchase machinery to break and work this land. The veteran pays a smaller than usual share of crop as rental directly to the Saskatchewan government. Also, contrary to the usual procedure where the landlord pays the taxes, the veteran is responsible for taxes. Thus the taxes are actually part of the rental. If the farmer has a total crop failure, naturally that part of the rental which is crop share would be nothing, but the taxes still are required to be paid.

Thus the veteran really has a cash rental in the form of taxes to pay even if he doesn't harvest a bushel. Last fall, every holder of a veteran's lease on crown land received a letter from the Saskatchewan government (the landlord), stating emphatically that if any rural municipality reported taxes unpaid on a veteran's lease, the government would automatically cancel that lease. This is the most vicious system of merciless collection in existence. I do not believe any other landlord but the C.C.F. government could get away with it—a cash payment on the barrel head every year, crop or no crop. After years of picking rock and clearing and breaking land, a crop failure or delivery restrictions could cause a veteran to fall behind on his taxes—then, wham, the landlord (the C.C.F. government) cancels his lease and unless the unfortunate veteran could get more land to farm, no doubt he would lose his machinery to the V.L.A.

It is much easier for a veteran to lose his lease than for an established farmer to lose his land through the tax enforcement act, by which a tax lien must first be filed. This winter all holders of grazing leases on crown land who owed all or part of the 1956 rental, received a letter stating that as their rental was six weeks overdue, their leases would be cancelled unless the department heard from the renter within 30 days.

It carries on further but that is all it has to say with respect to the veteran and this particular problem. I would urge the minister and the department officials—

Mr. McCullough: I wonder if I might ask the hon. member from what document he is reading?

Mr. Hahn: As I said earlier, I am reading from a copy of a letter which was reproduced in the Western Producer open forum, Regina and Ottawa. It is a letter signed by Kenneth Winter, Merid, Saskatchewan and apparently dated April 4, 1957.

I recognize that the municipality must get its taxes as must any government. I am not suggesting for one moment that the Saskatchewan government should necessarily pay the taxes to a municipality for a veteran who is not in a position to do so. There is a definite problem there. But I feel that it is up to our Department of Veterans Affairs which has authority in this matter to discuss it with the officials of the Saskatchewan government in order to see whether we cannot work out a scheme whereby this matter could be settled more amicably.

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, this is going to be a wee speech. May I join with other hon. members in extending congratulations to the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the excellent manner in which he and his officers are administering the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. McIvor: Might I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): Yes.

Mr. McIvor: Why does he appear today in the national costume of his youth?

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): What is that again? Why do I appear in the kilt today?

Mr. McIvor: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): I will come to that matter just in a moment or two.

Mr. Sinclair: Will you answer that question "What is a kilt?" That is something we should all like to know.

An hon. Member: Is it true what they say about Scots in kilts?

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, already today I have had quite a few questions on the kilt, but I cannot let them go into Hansard.

It is a pleasure to follow the hon. member who spoke immediately before the hon. member who just sat down and whose speech indicates that he comes from the land of the heather. I refer to the hon. member for Selkirk.

Today is the eve of the feast of St. Andrew, patron saint of Scotland, and of all sons of Scotland throughout the world. Tomorrow Scots everywhere will follow the skirl of the pipes and the swirl of the kilt to partake of the traditional food of our ancestors—the haggis. Then will follow the songs of the immortal Robert Burns and others equally renowned; and the highland fling, sword dance, seann thruibhas, followed by the oft-repeated stories of our ancestors until the wee small hours of the morning.

Mr. Ashbourne: I would like to add my voice to those who have already given their congratulations to the hon. minister upon his appointment as Minister of Veterans Affairs and I feel sure that under his capable guidance the veterans will be well looked after. I also wish to thank him for the amendments he has already brought before the house, particularly those affecting Newfoundland and to add at this time my support to the arguments made this afternoon by my colleague, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, a veteran who served in world war I and also in world war II.

I also had a copy of this brief forwarded to me by Mr. W. R. Martin, the provincial secretary, Newfoundland Command of the Canadian Legion, British Empire Service League. I will not go into this in detail as was done by my colleague, but would like to say that it has my heartiest support and that I trust the minister will, either by regulations or if that is not possible, by necessary legislation, satisfy the arguments contained in this brief. I particularly hope that he will introduce before this house such legislation as will put the veterans of Newfoundland on a par with the rest of the Canadian veterans. I know at the time when veterans affairs were considered by those who arranged the terms of confederation with Newfoundland in 1947 and 1948, it was recognized that there would no doubt be certain items which would come up in future years and which would have to be straightened out. I feel sure that the hon. minister, who comes from one of the Atlantic provinces, will recognize the claims of Newfoundlanders in this regard and I think we can rely upon him to do anything necessary in order to solve the problems faced by those in that part of the country.

Before I sit down I would also like to indicate my support with those members who have already spoken on the matter of the merchant marine. Coming as I do from Newfoundland and living close to the Atlantic ocean I feel we are in a position to know the great work those men performed in peacetime, and particularly in wartime, in keeping open the channels of transportation by which we have been able to provide the necessary food to keep our population from starvation. I cannot speak too strongly in support of all necessary measures which can be taken in the interests of the veterans and merchant marine and if the minister feels there is any additional legislation which should be brought before this house I feel sure it will be given very sympathetic consideration.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join in paying tribute to the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs. His regard for veterans has been well known over the period of his service in this house and I know his sincerity and good will is unquestioned. I feel sure he has the support and confidence of all veterans organizations.

There are, however, two matters which I would like to bring before the committe which have been spoken to by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for New Westminster, and which concern nearly all members who come from seaports or from areas adjacent to the seas which border this land. This first subject to which I refer is the merchant marine.

I do wish the minister would take into consideration those men who in their service have battled a battle with no time out. I refer to the battle of the Atlantic which did not stop; there was pressure all the time and danger all the time. Their casualties in proportion to their numbers were, I believe, as high as those suffered by any of the fighting services in the second world war and his late majesty, King George VI, recognized the courage and devotion of the merchant marine by designating it the merchant navy, and gave it the distinction of being called the fourth arm of the fighting forces. These men received no re-establishment grants, no V.L.A. payments or gratuities but they gave outstanding service. I do not think it is fair to consider them in the same category as the firefighters or to say that the minister will have opened the door for a large number of other groups to receive the benefits of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. I think the merchant seamen could quite rightly be classed in the same way as the veterans of the army, the air force and the navy.

As I said when I commenced to speak, there is a second point about which I would like to say a few words and that is, if you will permit a little pun, rank discrimination. These remarks have to do with that part of the Pension Act which deals with what are called supplementary pensions. As is well known, Canada had no air service before or during the first world war and therefore a Canadian who desired to join a flying service had to join one of the imperial forces either the Royal Naval Air Service or the Royal Flying Corps. If he was an officer in the Canadian forces he was, with the consent of his commanding officer, seconded for duty with either of the above mentioned flying services, retaining the rank he held in the Canadian forces but in all other respects taking a junior position in the new services. He was paid by the Canadian government at a consolidated rate of pay, equal to the rate of pay in the new service. On the return of this officer to Canada he was treated entirely as a Canadian, both for the purposes of gratuity and pension. If pensioned he could draw such either in or out of Canada and he would not come under supplementary pension regulations.

Now if you compare the seconded officer's position as set forth with that which would apply to an individual—not an officer—who was in the ranks of the Canadian army and wished to join the same flying service, this individual would, with the consent of his commanding officer, be discharged from the Canadian army and would then be taken on by the imperial flying services and commissioned. After his service and on his return to Canada he would be treated as an imperial in regard to gratuity and pension and would be allowed to draw Canadian rates of pension upon proof of residence in Canada at the date of August 4, 1914. He could draw the supplementary pension under the act only if he continued to live in Canada, and not even medical opinion would suffice to allow him to go abroad to live and still receive it.

As I said before, that is rank discrimination. The same treatment should be accorded to the non-commissioned officer or the private who joined the Royal Flying Corps or the Royal Naval Air Service as would be accorded to him if he had held a commission and had been seconded to those services. I do wish the minister would take this matter into consideration. I do not believe it would involve a great deal of trouble to recognize the facts; there cannot be too many people concerned but it is not right to leave things in that way.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I am going to be very brief in my remarks. We have a problem which concerns veterans in Medicine Hat and as a matter of fact it is the number one problem there in so far as the veterans and the branch of the Canadian Legion are concerned.

This problem arises out of the offering for sale of houses in what is known as the Medicine Hat project No. 38 which is 100 per cent occupied by veterans. These sale prices were set at an amount almost 100 per cent of the initial cost in spite of the fact that these are frame buildings and are almost 10 years old.

Now the total cost including payments for land and so on, according to information I have received from one of the departments here was, $722,114 and, also according to this information, the anticipated recovery from the sale of these houses is $710,500, or very nearly 100 per cent of the initial cost plus the cost of the land, which of course would have to be paid to municipalities as soon as they are sold. This does not, however, take into consideration the fact that $365,000 has been paid in rentals during the period from 1948 to 1957. Surely any reasonable person would have to agree that there must be some depreciation on a frame building over a ten-year period.

Having had to pay 100 per cent of the initial cost this deal ties the veterans down for the next 25 years at these high prices and with a 6 per cent interest rate.

I will admit, as the veterans do, that the maintenance, appearance and general value of these buildings has been kept at a high level during these years but I would like the members of this committee to know that the main reason for this is that the veterans have taken money out of their own pockets to pay for interior decorating, landscaping and in fact everything that was necessary in the way of maintenance with the exception of major replacements such as a hot water tank or some other significant purchase.

I do not want to speak on this subject at great length because I intend to bring it up in more detail when the estimates of the Department of Public Works are brought in. Since this is a matter that is of concern only to veterans I would urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs to look into it. I would like him to study the picture, the arrangements for financing over the 25-year period and the other details and then decide if he thinks it is fair to ask these veterans to pay back all the money that was expended to construct the project. They have regularly paid their rent throughout the years and as I said this amounted to $365,000 so it is obvious that there is a substantial profit some place. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation advise me they are not actually making a profit on these buildings but they have not as yet been able to show me what has happened to the $365,000.

On June 11, 1956, an hon. member asked what was the amount of expenditure on the upkeep of this project for painting, repairs, etc. up to March 31, 1956. The answer was $17,995. It was also asked what was the cost of administration up to the same period and the answer was $22,350. This represents only a very small portion of the $365,000. I realize of course there was some interest that had to be paid on the original capital investment but even with a reasonable rate of interest and taking into consideration the maintenance and administration the cost would not come anywhere near the amount that was paid in rent. There must be a profit some place but I do not know where. If Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has not made any money on this project then one can only conclude that some money has been transferred. I do not know where it has been transferred to, but I think a large part of it should be applied to depreciation. If that were done the asking price for these houses could be lowered. This would satisfy the Canadian Legion and the veterans who are living in these houses.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say only a few words at this time but before doing so I wish to express my appreciation to the officials to the Department of Veterans Affairs. In the short time I have been here

I have referred a number of problems to them and have been extremely pleased with the kind reception I have received.

I would like to refer for a moment to the work that is being done under the Veterans' Land Act and the amount of information and assistance that is being given to young farmers under this act which is certainly appreciated by the farmers concerned. I think it would be advisable for the department to again take a look at the prices that are being paid for land because in some cases the prices that are being offered by the department are unrealistic in my opinion. However, it may be that revaluations have not been made to date but are in the process of being made.

Another matter the department should keep in mind is one I raised previously regarding insurance for service personnel. I believe we should adopt a system similar to that used in the last war by the United States government of carrying an insurance policy of $20,000 to $25,000 on service personnel so their dependants would receive some assistance in the event of the death of a veteran or one who is hurt or maimed during hours when he is not covered, at the present time, by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Certainly all Canadians are proud of what we were able to give our service personnel following the war in terms of the equality we were able to establish between what they had before giving their service and what they received upon return to civilian life. We would like to constantly improve conditions for our service personnel and this could be done quite effectively if the government would put into the pay structure an amount to cover the premium on a paid-up insurance policy on a term basis of $20,000 to $25,000. For instance, in the case of one of our service personnel serving in a foreign country who was killed in an automobile accident while off duty, the adoption of such a plan would provide his dependants with something to tide them over in that time of need. It may be argued that this is not the responsibility of the government and that the service personnel are aware of such eventualities and should make provision accordingly, but this thought is of small comfort and no compensation to the wife and family of a member of the services who dies in circumstances such as those I have outlined. I urge the minister to give consideration to this suggestion and I would hope that it would be adopted.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister one question. Will the government consider the granting of pensions without a means test at age 60 to veterans who have served in active warfare?

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I have several observations to make with respect to veterans legislation. I realize the desirability of proceeding as soon as possible with the consideration of the actual estimates. However, I might just mention several matters with respect to veterans legislation. I believe that the veterans across the country are experiencing an increased sense of satisfaction with the legislation which is being brought in from time to time, much of it to clear up some of the ambiguity that existed. Other measures were introduced to close some of the gaps in the legislative program, and I do know that the veterans are very pleased with the interest taken by members of parliament in these particular matters.

I should like to refer once again to the position in which some of the veterans find themselves when, although they are in receipt of war veterans allowances, they are not able to supplement their income through casual earnings. There are various factors which contribute to this situation. It may be a health factor, or else the economic situation of the area in which they are residing, and they find it impossible to supplement their incomes in any other way. These veterans are still finding themselves in a very serious position economically, and I feel that real consideration should be given to the matter to try to improve the lot of veterans in this category. I believe there is disappointment over the fact that there is no increase in the basic pension; but there are several other factors which I would like to mention in connection with pensions. One was raised by the hon. member for Acadia. It was the Legion's request as follows:

> Where a pension applicant who served in an actual theatre of war is found to have a disability resulting from an injury or a disease not recorded on medical examination prior to enlistment, such injury or disease shall be presumed to have occurred or had its inception subsequent to enlistment.

Now, I feel in this particular respect many of the veterans are suffering from a very serious injustice. I believe that the Legion is taking only a very sensible attitude to the situation in making the request that this particular matter be clarified. I am not saying that the pension board would deliberately use this particular loophole to deprive an individual of his right to pension or the benefits that should be his; but I do feel that the legislation should be opened up to the extent that the pension board itself possibly could exercise more initiative and consider the applications on their merits rather than just being held to a strict and severe interpretation of the letter of the law. This is one of the matters which I would bring once again to the attention of the minister and his department.

In connection with the awarding of pensions, I have been approached by at least one of my constituents not too long ago relative to this very matter. An application has been made but time has slipped by for months, in fact for years, possibly, and then finally the pension board awarded the pension to the individual but there is no provision for a retroactive award. I do not think it is quite fair that a person who qualifies for benefits in this way should be placed in the position where, after a period of months or even years, he loses the benefits because of the fact that the particular application had not been processed satisfactorily up to that time. I do feel that this matter should be given consideration. I know that the Legion in their brief refer to this matter as well. On page 14 of the brief presented to the Prime Minister of Canada and the cabinet by the Canadian Legion we find section 7 dealing with retroactive awards. The Legion says:

> We would advocate that it be made mandatory that when a decision is given favourable to the veteran, pension will be paid as of date of application.

The brief goes on to record the possible difficulties of establishing whether or not the person is eligible, but once he is declared to be eligible, then I feel the award should be made retroactive. I believe the Legion is very modest in its request in this regard because, on page 16, it states:

> This provision shall not apply to claims granted prior to January 1, 1946, and no retroactive payments shall be made for a period prior to that date.

It just means that the applicants who made their applications back at that time have no means of redress, and apparently they are just out of the benefits. However, I do trust that the minister will give his attention to this matter.

These are the only matters to which I wish to call attention at this time, Mr. Chairman. The rest can be dealt with as we proceed with the estimates.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I shall be exceedingly brief this afternoon because two of my colleagues have already spoken at some length in putting before the committee the pleadings of this group in regard to this very important matter. However, I should like to express my feelings in regard to one very important aspect of pensions for veterans. I have had a number of cases brought to my attention having to do with the failure of a veteran to receive a pension for service owing to the fact that he could not prove that his disability occurred during service. I want to add my voice to that of those hon. members who have already seen fit to bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

The hon. member for Kootenay West said earlier today that it would not take too much money to give further justice to the veterans of the first and second world wars. Many of the injustices of the past have been cleared up but I think, sir, that one of the most important things is the psychological effect on a veteran who has given service to his country, has come back and is unable to care for himself and his family when he finds that for some reason he is not eligible for a service pension. On occasions it has been pointed out to me that such a veteran, if he is indigent, can apply to the commission and get the war veterans allowance. I think, sir, that justice comes first and if the veteran has served, as have the individuals who have been brought to my attention, and for whom I have been fighting with the commission to try to get some type of eligibility for pension, then he should receive a pension. I do not think it is sufficient to say that that man can get war veterans allowance in lieu of entitlement to a legitimate veterans pension.

The point is this, Mr. Chairman, as is well known by all members in the chamber. If a veteran enlisted in either world war I or world war II, was classified as A-1 and then was discharged, not demobilized, with a disability, surely it must be admitted that the disability was due to service and the onus of proof must be on the pension commission to prove that the disability was not in fact caused by his service. That is the point I wish to make.

I have some case histories here and I should like to refer to one. I am not going to use the veteran's name, but this man enlisted and after examination by specialists was given an A-1 category. He had service in the first great war. When he was discharged he was in E category. It is well known that with an E category he should have been automatically boarded for his disability, but this veteran has been fighting to try to get a pension for his disability. He was discharged because of arthritis of the spine. His medical case history indicates that the disease or injury was arthritis of the spine, that the place of origin was unknown and the date of origin was unknown.

Surely we as members of the house do not have to continue to fight for justice for such veterans. I hope that the rumours I have heard are true that the government in the future will be more tolerant towards veterans making application for pension. I hope that members will not have to fight interminably for such veterans. If a veteran had an A-1 category when he entered one of the services after inspection by the medical officials and came out with a low category which necessitated his discharge, surely in the name of justice such a veteran should get a pension. I only hope that very soon all the outstanding cases that come before us and the pension commission will receive justice, that the onus of proof will, if necessary, be placed on the commission rather than on the veteran to prove the disability and that justice will be given to such veterans.

Mr. Brooks: I wish to say a few words in answer to the questions raised by different hon. members. First I want to thank them most sincerely for their very kind remarks with reference to myself and particularly with reference to my staff. I wish to thank the hon. member for Rosthern. I think he was the first to mention this very important matter, and I can assure him that the feelings he expressed regarding my staff are the same as my own and for the same reason.

The hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for Acadia, who have been in the house for many years and have been members of veterans affairs committees with myself, made, along with others, many recommendations. I appreciate very much the recommendations that have been made. They are not new. They have been made many times before. It simply goes to show that veterans problems are always with us and that while we may make amendments to the legislation at one session or in one year there is still unfinished business which has to be dealt with later.

The hon. members mentioned particularly the merchant navy and the firefighters. The hon. member for Kootenay West, the hon. member for Acadia and also the hon. member for Selkirk, who has been in the house for a number of years, will remember that these problems were discussed on numerous occasions in the past. When the veterans charter was being considered we had the advice of many veterans organizations across Canada. The merchant marine representatives and also the representatives of the firefighters appeared before us.

From conversations I have had with some of the new members I am of the opinion that many of them think there is is no legislation dealing with the firefighters and the merchant marine, but I should like to point out to them that in the firefighters act, which they will find in the veterans charter, many benefits have already been bestowed upon the firefighters. The same applies to the merchant marine and a number of other groups which were also considered at the same time.

One of the great problems we have encountered, and which was encountered when I was a member of the committee, is the fact that neither the merchant marine nor the corps of firefighters were considered to be part of the armed forces, and some of the advantages and benefits which they are asking now were denied them and have been denied them throughout the years on that account. That is a problem which still requires considerable attention and discussion. It is one of the matters which should claim the attention of a veterans affairs committee when such a committee is set up.

I want to assure the hon. member for Selkirk that it is my intention to have a veterans affairs committee set up at the next session of parliament. I made that very clear, I thought, when the war veterans allowance amendments were before the house a short time ago. I believe the hon. member for Acadia also mentioned section 13 of the Pension Act which has to do with pre-enlistment disabilities. This is also a subject which has been discussed in the house and in the committee on many occasions and it also requires further study. There is also the matter of the benefit of the doubt. The hon. member for Acadia will remember that we did not spend hours but days discussing this matter when it was before the committee in days gone by, and in his opinion and the opinion of many others it is still a matter that is not settled. Certainly it is not settled to the satisfaction of a great many and will still require attention.

The hon. member for Acadia spoke about the case of the widow in Winnipeg who should, in his opinion, receive a pension. I am sure he will be glad to know that the chairman of the pension commission will be pleased to look into the matter and give it further attention. I was very pleased to hear some hon. members give praise to the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. I have heard considerable praise of the administration of the act and I may say I was very pleased about two weeks ago to have the opportunity to meet the district superintendents from all across Canada, the men who are responsible for the administration of the act throughout the dominion.

Judging by the calibre of the men who came here to Ottawa three weeks ago, I would say that the administration of this act was in good hands all across this country. It is known to me, and I think it is known to hon. members here that the men who have settled under the Veterans' Land Act are taking a very leading part in the communities in which they live. We are very proud of that. They are certainly making a great contribution throughout this country.

There was a question asked regarding the corps of commissionaires by the hon. member for Acadia. The corps of commissionaires is an independent body, with its own board of directors, and it operates within all provinces. The hon. member for York-Sunbury, who was an executive of the Canadian Legion, was quite correct in his explanation. The commissionaires are employees of the corps and not of the government. The government employs some commissionaires, as a matter of fact about 50 per cent of those who are employed. In the case of private employers the rate is set by arrangement between the corps and the employers. When the government employ commissionaires, the rate is set by the treasury board on the basis of the prevailing rate for that area. I believe the rate differs across Canada and in some sections it is lower than in others. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that explains to hon. members the situation with regard to the corps of commissionaires.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo mentioned the Newfoundland problem. This is a problem which is peculiar to Newfoundland, and it is one which is being studied at the present time and one which will have to be very carefully studied when the committee is set up.

The hon. member for Selkirk brought up the question of the mentally sick. He asked if pensions were paid during mental illness. They are paid, and they are used for the benefit of the dependants of the mentally ill person.

Mr. Bryce: If the patient is receiving a pension when he goes into hospital, does he get the whole of the pension or just a percentage of it?

Mr. Brooks: The whole of the pension is paid.

Mr. Bryce: He gets the whole pension?

Mr. Brooks: Yes. The hon. member for New Westminster mentioned the merchant seamen. I might say in that connection that there is no one who appreciates what the merchant seamen suffered and the contribution they made to the winning of the war more than I do. We know of the terrific hardships they experienced, and we know also of the heavy casualties which they suffered. The hon. member for New Westminster asked for a further study of the situation concerning children of the war dead, and I can assure him that will be done. I believe the hon. member for Vancouver South was also interested in the merchant seamen. The hon. member for Medicine Hat mentioned the sale of land under the Veterans' Land Act, and this is a problem to which we shall have to give careful study before I can make any definite statement.

The hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned the Veterans' Land Act and I wish to thank him for the praise he gave the administrators of that act. He spoke about the information and assistance which was given to young farmers. He thought the price paid for farms was continually rising, and this is a matter, of course, which would have to be looked into. The hon. member also mentioned the insurance on serving personnel. This does not come under the Department of Veterans Affairs, but under the Department of National Defence.

I do not wish to take any more time. The individual items will be considered, and if there are any more questions which hon. gentlemen wish to ask we will do our best to answer them.

Mr. Broome: The minister did not comment on the question I raised concerning the enlisted men who had been discharged to serve in the royal flying corps as compared with officers who had been seconded.

Mr. Brooks: Will the hon. gentleman be satisfied if we write and give him the full explanation? There is quite a long story to that.

Mr. Tucker: It might facilitate the passing of the actual items of the estimates if the minister were to indicate whether or not he is recommending these estimates as they are found in the blue book or whether he is making any changes. If he finds the estimates satisfactory and there is no waste or extravagance, and is recommending them as they were brought in by the previous government and as studied by the estimates committee, then that might facilitate their passage. These estimates are very familiar to the members of that committee.

Mr. Brooks: I might say to the hon. member that I am recommending them as they are set out in the book. So far as waste and extravagance is concerned, at the beginning of his speech the hon. member wanted to know from me whether or not I considered there was waste and extravagance in the department. I might say at once that I have not found any waste or extravagance, but I did not expect to find them in this department. This department deals almost entirely with pensions, war veterans' allowances and many thousands of things which the hon. member mentioned in his speech. There is not any chance for waste and the money spent for our veterans could not in any way be considered waste or extravagance.

So far as the construction of our buildings is concerned, that is another matter altogether. This is looked after by another department and I have no intention of answering so far as that is concerned.

Treatment services—

500. Operation of hospitals and administration, including authority for payments, during the current and subsequent fiscal years, to canteen funds of departmental hospitals in amounts equal to the amounts of commissions received by or on behalf of Her Majesty from pay telephones in such hospitals, $44,368,445.

Mr. Herridge: I do not intend to delay the committee long but I want to raise a matter that I promised certain patients of Shaughnessy hospital to raise, certain veterans I have met, certain dependants who have written to me about this matter and certain Legion members who were at Legion meetings and who discussed it while I was present. I understand that under our regulations certain veterans, other than those who go into hospitals for their war disabilities and those in receipt of war veterans' allowance, are entitled to enter our hospitals provided they make certain satisfactory arrangements in relation to their financial circumstances. I understand if a veteran cannot meet the regulations of the department, then the officials—I know they do their best in this respect—make every effort possible to see they are properly provided for under the auspices of the provincial authorities concerned.

This matter first came to my notice when I was visiting Shaughnessy hospital when a number of patients took strong exception to the fact that they had comrades knocking on the door who could not get in because of the regulations while male immigrants were receiving hospital services, dentures, glasses and all other things that were required and certain female immigrants and children were getting a sort of out-patient service. We know that these people must be cared for but I remember very well when the late Hon. Ian Mackenzie dedicated Shaughnessy hospital and spoke at the opening of the hospital. At that time he said that this hospital was built to serve the needs of the veterans and the men who fought for this country. I am not blaming the minister or the department for these circumstances but I take strong exception, as do a good many Canadians, to the fact that there are veterans who fought for this country who are in needy circumstances and who, under our regulations, can be denied admission to veterans hospitals. I will admit arrangements will be made with the provincial authorities to care for them. We know that people who are ill must be cared for.

I understand that the department—and I judge this from some conversations that I have had at lower levels—rather reluctantly complies with the wishes of the immigration department. This matter that arose in Shaughnessy hospital came to a head, shall I say, rather as a result of the influx of Hungarians whom I prefer to call on the whole freedom seekers. I met some of the boys in there and they are quite stirred up about the matter. One of them told me that there was actually in the hospital a patient who had fought against this country, while he had a chum who needed treatment but who could not get in under the regulations. I think the situation should be the other way around. I think our immigration department should make arrangements with the provincial authorities and other hospital institutions for the care of those people because they pay for those services and that not a single needy veteran who requires treatment should be denied treatment in a veterans affairs hospital in this country at this time. These hospitals were erected and are maintained for that particular purpose.

I could speak at considerable length on this matter because I have had a good many representations in connection with it. I am rising to bring this matter to the attention of the minister at the request of some of my comrades in British Columbia and in my constituency. I should like the minister to inform the house of the numbers of immigrants who have been admitted to veterans hospitals in Canada during the past year and the numbers of Canadian veterans who have been denied admission under the regulations, and of the arrangements that are made by the immigration department for these free services to immigrants.

Mr. Brooks: I am rather surprised to hear of this complaint from Shaughnessy. I think I can assure the hon. member immediately that there were no veterans refused admission to Shaughnessy hospital. That is my information. As to the number of Hungarians admitted, we have not that information before us, but I will get it and see that the hon. member receives it. However, I know that in the Ste-Foy hospital in Quebec a request was made that some of the Hungarian immigrants be admitted to the hospital and I know that every care was taken to see that our veterans were not denied beds in that hospital before any Hungarians or any one else was admitted to the hospital. That is the policy of the department. This is my first information that the policy has not always been carried out. However, if the hon. member will supply us with the particulars we will certainly see that there is an investigation in this connection.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the minister a further question. Do I understand him correctly that no needy veteran—that is needy from a financial point of view—will ever be refused admission to a veterans affairs hospital in Canada?

Mr. Brooks: No eligible veteran.

Mr. Herridge: Pardon me; a distinction is made. What does the minister mean by the term "eligible"?

Mr. Brooks: Under our treatment regulations provision is made for eligible veterans.

Mr. Herridge: That is my point. There are veterans who are not eligible under our regulations, and who can be denied admission at the present time. I suggest that no needy or destitute veteran in Canada, regardless of the present regulations, should be denied admission when we can make provision for other persons.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous payments—

510. To provide for payment to the last post fund; for the payment under regulations of funeral and cemetery charges, including the perpetual care of graves where applicable; for the cost and erection of headstones in Canada; for the maintenance of departmental cemeteries; for the maintenance of Canadian battlefields memorials in France and Belgium and for Canada's share of the expenditures of the Imperial war graves commission, $1,378,800.

Mr. Peters: May I have from the minister an explanation as to what extent this item 510 applies, the extent of funeral plots under perpetual care, the extent of headstones that are erected across the country and what are the requirements for obtaining those.

Mr. Brooks: Does the hon. member refer to the last post fund?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: The Last Post Fund Incorporated. This vote covers certain expenses incurred by or provided for by the Department of Veterans Affairs in respect of burials and memorials. An explanation of the various administrative functions, cost of which is provided for herein, is as follows. The Last Post Fund Incorporated operates under a dominion charter for the purpose of preventing the burial of a veteran in a pauper's grave. Veteran, for the purpose of the regulations, means a former member of our armed forces. There are certain amounts paid. As to funerals and cemetery charges, under the veterans burial regulations the department is authorized to arrange and pay for the funeral and burial of certain veterans who died while on treatment strength of the department, but only when no other person or agency will accept final responsibility therefor. For a funeral, the department may pay an amount not exceeding $175 for the services of one funeral director or $225 when the services of two funeral directors are necessary and are provided. In addition to funeral costs the department is authorized to pay certain cemetery charges and to provide a grave. That is the general principle under which we operate. I wonder whether that answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. Peters: Do I understand that it means that this is applied to those veterans under treatment who are going to come under that pauper section?

Mr. Brooks: If they die under treatment in our hospitals or while on treatment strength they are looked after by our department under this particular vote. If they die outside, they are looked after under the last post fund to which we make contibutions.

Item agreed to.

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

516. To provide for the cost of administration of Veterans' Land Act; soldier settlement and British family settlement, $5,029,545.

Mr. Quelch: I wonder whether the minister could give us what is the deadline for applications under the Veterans' Land Act.

Mr. Brooks: There is no deadline.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether I got the minister's answer correctly. I have had one or two veterans say to me that the expiry date under which they might receive money under the Veterans' Land Act is soon to be reached. I think perhaps this is in relation to re-establishment credit which they might receive and which they might have to pay back. I am not an authority on this bill but veterans have spoken to me and they were under the impression that they had very little time remaining during which they might receive money under the Veterans' Land Act for the purchase of homes. If they are under any misapprehension I am sure they would be very pleased to have reassurance from the minister.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member has referred to the deadline for the re-establishment credit, that is 1960. There is a deadline there.

PRIVATE BILLS

INVESTORS TRUST COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 29, to incorporate Investors Trust Company—Mr. Morton—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, before clause 1 of this bill carries there is a question I would like to ask. Is the sponsor in the house?

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, I have been asked to stand as sponsor in the absence of the hon. member for Winnipeg South.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then I wonder if the hon. member for Davenport could make any statement to the house concerning a line of questioning which was pursued in the committee when this bill was under consideration. I believe it was brought out in the committee on banking and commerce that the position of this company is affected by recent changes in the Income Tax Act having to do with moneys put into annuities. I believe as a result of that questioning the point had been reached where the superintendent of insurance was asked whether anyone on behalf of the government inspects or examines the forms of application completed by individuals; a request, as I read the report of the committee, directed to making sure that individuals are protected under the changed situation. I would like the hon. member to say whether that matter was pursued and whether anything has been learned since the committee met as to what is being done with respect to making sure that this kind of protection is offered.

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, as I understood the answer in committee, it was that while the government did not take upon itself the duty of being responsible for the contracts between the individual and the company as such, because of the procedure and the close scrutiny actually given each and every application by some governmental agency—I believe the Department of National Revenue —the net result is that the individual is well protected. As I say, this is in view of the answers to questions and the varied information which has to be supplied to the Department of National Revenue which insures that the individual is, in fact, protected.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 18, respecting the British Columbia Telephone Company—Mr. Jung—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to discuss this bill at length in the committee of the whole. The standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, of course, was the scene of some detailed discussion. In view of the rather complicated nature of some of the evidence given by the officials of the company in the standing committee it is perhaps unfortunate that the proceedings of that committee reached the mail boxes of hon. members of the house only today which means we have not had an opportunity to properly study and analyse the verbal representations made in the standing committee by the officers of the company.

As far as those members of that committee who sit in the C.C.F. corner of the house are concerned we did recognize and were satisfied as a result of the evidence given by the officials in the committee that there is need for a considerable capital expansion program in the telephone services in the province of British Columbia. Certainly many of us who represent constituencies in that province and who are receiving constant information from our constituents about their desire and need for an extension of the existing telephone facilities hardly needed to be told that by the officials of the company.

The position of the C.C.F. group in respect to the British Columbia Telephone Company has been well known over the years in the province of British Columbia. We feel that this being a monopoly public utility in our province it should more properly come under public ownership and that if steps were taken to bring that about substantial savings to the telephone users of the province of British Columbia could result.

As I say, much of the evidence which was given by the company officials in the committee was rather complicated, at least as far as a layman like myself—in matters of high finance—is concerned, but I think there were one or two facts which became generally apparent as a result of that discussion. One was the fact that this company which in the province of British Columbia is known as the British Columbia Telephone Company is in fact not a British Columbia telephone company at all but it is a company which is in part owned and in fact controlled by United States financial interests. That information given by the company's officers as a result of a little prodding here and there during the course of the questioning coupled with the facts relating to the interrelationship between the parent company and the British Columbia Telephone Company and some of the concerns which are engaged in supplying telephone equipment does reveal that there is a great possibility that under various arrangements unnecessary costs are entering into the picture in the province of British Columbia as far as telephone rates are concerned. That is to say, when the board of transport commissioners reviews the applications of the company, because of this very complicated corporate structure that lies behind the carrying out of their operations there are as far as I was able to judge from the evidence given in the committee a good many possibilities that hidden costs and charges which of course have to be passed on to the users of telephone services within the province of British Columbia will not be revealed.

As I said when I rose, Mr. Chairman, it is not my desire to discuss this matter at length but I did feel I should report to the committee of the whole at least those conclusions I arrived at after having sat in the committee meetings during the presentation of the evidence by the company. I can assure the committee of the whole and possibly also the British Columbia Telephone Company that those of us who come from the province of British Columbia and are elected to this house under the banner of the C.C.F. certainly intend to continue to pay a great deal of attention to the operation of this company.

In a province such as British Columbia where many of the communities are separated by long distances and where modes of travel in many cases are limited the type of telephone service that is provided is a very vital concern to the people who live there. Certainly this is true in respect to many of the people who live in the more isolated areas along the coast, a large part of which falls within the boundaries of the constituency of Comox-Alberni. I know that many of the people who live in those areas are not satisfied with the service they are getting at the present time. Rightly or wrongly they have the feeling that this telephone company whose primary concern is the making of profits for its shareholders has been inclined to concentrate upon the richest fields of endeavour, that is the more heavily populated areas in the lower mainland of the province. They feel that because of the primary concern of this privately owned utility in the making of profits for its shareholders services are not as good as they might otherwise be.

On the other hand from suggestions I have heard made by some of my colleagues who live in the more heavily populated areas I understand that some of their constituents also feel there is room for improvement in the service provided by this company and that in many cases they feel the rates they are paying for the service are higher than they think they should be paying.

As we indicated at the second reading stage of this bill, we realize that basically the bill is not concerned with the form or type of ownership of our telephone system in the province of British Columbia and the passage or otherwise of this bill is not going to give us an opportunity to bring about the changes we would like to see made. I think we made it clear that we had no desire in any way to prevent the British Columbia Telephone Company from being able to finance the carrying out of the services that are needed in many of the growing areas of the province and after having heard the evidence given in the committee I think I can say we hold substantially the same views we expressed on second reading and we are not at all happy about some of the indications that were revealed as a result of the questions we asked in the committee.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the hon. member on presenting his bill and I hope he will be successful in piloting it through the house. I would like to ask him one or two questions. Are there any independent, provincial or municipal telephone systems in the province of British Columbia?

Mr. Jung: Mr. Chairman, I believe there is one, the Okanagan Telephone Company. There have been other telephone companies that have since been absorbed by the B.C. Telephone Company. The B.C. Telephone Company purchased the Mission Telephone Company Limited in 1952, and with that purchase the company expanded its territories by the addition of operations in the Fraser valley north of the Fraser river. Then, in 1953, the B.C. Telephone Company purchased the Kootenay Telephone Company Limited and that completed the expansion to the east Kootenay section of British Columbia. In the following year, 1954, the Chilliwack Telephone Company Limited was also purchased and in 1954 the government telephone and telegraph service was also taken over by the B.C. Telephone Company. Since taking over the government service substantial improvements have been made. There have been major conversions from magneto to battery sets, pending the installation of new equipment, which will enable automatic dial telephones to be put in. New offices have been installed and improvements of the distribution plant; that is, pole lines have been rebuilt and extended. It is proposed that hundreds of thousands of dollars will be going into that area.

Mr. Castleden: Can the hon. member tell us something about the comparative rates, say for a private phone of the independent company in the Okanagan which is, I believe, a municipal phone system, and those charged in similar areas by the B.C. Telephone Company?

Mr. Jung: That question, I think, was asked in committee but I do not see the answer printed in the proceedings.

Mr. Broome: It is not a municipal system; it is a privately owned system. Its rates are above those of the B.C. Telephone Company for equivalent service. I have a telephone in the Okanagan and a telephone in Vancouver and therefore I know.

Mr. Castleden: I was not questioning the information at all. Does the B.C. Telephone Company have to apply to the board of transport commissioners for permission to increase rates?

Mr. Jung: Yes, it does.

Mr. Castleden: What is the history of its applications in the past?

Mr. Jung: They have all been subjected to most searching and exhaustive inquiry and they have always been granted. The board of transport commissioners does not, I believe, have any control over the type of service, but it does exercise indirect control through asking questions about its rate structure and the price of the equipment which it purchases. It indirectly controls the service extended to the subscribers in that area.

Mr. Castleden: How many applications have there been for an increase in rates, say, over the past 15 years?

Mr. Jung: I am sorry, I cannot answer that question but I can secure the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. Castleden: What is the basis upon which the board of transport commissioners grant the increase? In case an application is made, what do they take into consideration, costs and so forth?

Mr. Jung: I am sorry I cannot answer that question because I am not a member of the board of transport commissioners and I am afraid it is outside my sphere of knowledge.

Mr. Castleden: What about the value of the stock of this private company on the market? Has it been on the increase or has it been increasing lately? I believe their shares are of a par value of $25?

[Mr. Jung.]

Mr. Jung: I am sorry, I also cannot answer that question but I am quite sure if the hon. member will refer to the financial page of any of the newspapers he will find that information will be available.

Mr. Castleden: What I want to know is whether or not the board of transport commissioners would take into consideration, when they were asked for an increase in rates, the amount of dividends which were being paid on the shares of this company?

Mr. Jung: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure they would. I understand the reason why the hon. member is asking these questions but it does not fall within the report of this committee. I am quite sure the board of transport commissioners will inquire into all phases of the company's activities if an application is made.

Mr. Castleden: I know they would inquire into it. They would probably have the information already. I was just wondering whether or not they would want to know what considerations went into it, as to whether the company was making sufficient profit on its stock as it is today and as to whether or not it requires some increase in its rates, based on the profits it was making. The other question I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill is whether or not there has ever been a provincial telephone company established in the province of British Columbia to carry on this public service under provincial control and thus any profits accruing out of the operation of this public service would go to the people of the province rather than into the hands of a private company?

Mr. Jung: As far as I know, Mr. Chairman, the answer is no.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I think we all appreciate the great expansion that is required in telephone service in British Columbia. Because the B.C. Telephone Company controls over 90 per cent of the telephone business in British Columbia we understand its requirements in coming before this House of Commons at this time and asking for an increase in its capitalization. I feel sure, Mr. Chairman, because of the requirements of service and assistance in employment, no member in this house will place any obstacle in the way of this bill going through.

However, along with the statement that the telephone service and employment situation in British Columbia are such that this bill must go through, we also have the responsibility of drawing to the attention of the committee the situation which has developed in British Columbia, and also throughout Canada, in so far as a communication monopoly is concerned. We also must raise the question, perhaps not for decision now but for investigation later, as to the intricacies and complications in the company's management and in its method of financing.

I do not raise the question in order to block this bill, but I do believe that hon. members and the public should take note of the information given in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines to the effect that it is the declared intention of the B.C. Telephone Company to issue new capital to be authorized by this bill to the present shareholders of the B.C. Telephone Company.

It will be done at a cost to present holders of shares between 5 per cent and 6 per cent less than the market value of British Columbia Telephony Company shares. If you sell at less than the market value somebody has got to pay and in the long run it can only be the consumer. I think it is wrong in principle that privileged persons or companies should have the right to buy shares at 5 per cent to 6 per cent less than the market price and then be in the privileged position of not having to pay any income tax because we have no such thing as a capital gains tax in our country.

I was most interested, Mr. Chairman, in reading a remarkable speech made by a member of the other place not on this bill but on one of a similar nature. In a speech that must have taken him over half an hour he pointed out the dangers of monopoly in communications services and made a suggestion which I believe should be repeated on the floor of the house so I am going to do so now. He suggested that there should be a joint committee of the other place and the House of Commons to make a thorough investigation of the set-up, in all its intricacies and machinations, of companies in the communications field.

It was clearly apparent from the evidence given before the standing committee of the house with respect to the British Columbia Telephone Company that there are terrific intricacies and machinations. For example, it is correct that the B. C. Telephone Company is mostly owned in Canada but there is one block of shares amounting to about 35½ per cent, I believe, owned by the Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company with headquarters in Montreal. Who controls Anglo-Canadian? It is controlled in the United States. It was honestly admitted in the evidence before the committee that the B.C. Telephone Company does not do its own purchasing or installing. It uses a company that is owned wholly by Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company and one-third of its purchases are from a company which is owned in the United States and again owned by the same company that indirectly controls the B.C. Telephone Company.

Here we have the situation of a company that has almost a virtual monopoly of the communications system in British Columbia, or 90 per cent of it, which, in the words of its own president, is controlled in the United States, does its purchasing and installation through a company owned wholly by Anglo-Canadian and controlled in the United States, and buys one-third of its equipment from a company which is owned in the United States which company is in turn owned by the same octopus. From the manufacturing to the purchasing, installing and service end we have a vicious circle, a circle which I honestly believe is of such a nature that if investigated thoroughly would show that the cream from the profits of the B.C. Telephone Company is being drained off by these other companies and that the people of British Columbia are paying rates for telephone service which the company can prove on the basis of its own operations but which are unfair because the public utilities commission does not take into account the draining off of profits by subsidiary companies.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that we are aware of the need of extension of service in British Columbia. We know that it requires money. We are not going to block the passage of the bill in any way but we do think very seriously that in accordance with the suggestion made the other day by a member of the other place it is high time that a thorough examination was made of all the intricacies and manipulations of communications companies, the tie-up of interlocking directorates and operations through subsidiary companies in order to be able to assure the people of British Columbia and Canada that they are not being, as I honestly believe they are, rooked by monopoly corporations in the communications field, the British Columbia Telephone Company in my own province and other telephone companies in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Broome: I should like to speak for two or three minutes on the bill. I was a member of the committee which considered it and what we have just heard shows how people can take different interpretations from the evidence put before them. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni said that under prodding he got certain information. It seemed to me that it was freely and factually given. So far as financing is concerned, the hon. member for Vancouver East talked about a 5 per cent to 6 per cent lower price through the use of rights. It was explained that it was not 5 per cent to 6 per cent but was three or four points. It was also explained that the cost of financing a major issue like this is considerable and that what the company does is to offer shares to its shareholders at a price which takes into account the cost of financing.

Mr. Winch: On what page of the evidence is that? Come on.

Mr. Broome: I cannot give the page.

Mr. Winch: I will call you on that.

Mr. Broome: When the president of the company was asked I believe he said four to six points.

Mr. Winch: Five to six.

Mr. Broome: It was points, not percentage. Secondly, any fair comparison would be a comparison of rates charged in cities of equivalent size. In that regard I may say that the rates charged are equivalent to those charged in other places across Canada. I was just trying to get the record straight for the members who were not in the committee.

Mr. Winch: So am I, so give page references in the committee evidence.

Mr. Broome: It seemed as though C.C.F. members were trying to drag out something which was pretty bad. This company pays Anglo-Canadian supply company about three-quarters of one per cent, I believe, to do their purchasing. They pay the installation costs.

Now, a great deal was said about United States control. Yes, it is controlled from the United States but the staff is 100 per cent Canadian and that is a lot more than can be said about other companies which are controlled from the United States. The company is operated for the good of the province and it is operated by Canadians. I believe it is operated in a right and proper manner.

Mr. Jung: The hon. member for Yorkton earlier asked a question as to the number of times applications had been made to the board of transport commissioners for an increase in tariff rates. My information is that the last increase was made in 1953. There have been no applications since that time. I believe that in the last ten years that has been the only application. I say that subject to confirmation from the head office in Vancouver.

Mr. Castleden: What was the amount of the increase in 1953?

Mr. Jung: I shall include that in my reply.

Mr. Stanton: Are there any more than two telephone companies in British Columbia, that is, the Okanagan Telephone Company and the British Columbia Telephone Company?

Mr. Jung: There are other smaller ones, but their activities are confined more to the interior of British Columbia.

Mr. Stanton: Far be it from me to anticipate the time when all independent telephone companies will be out of existence, yet I believe the committee fully realizes that these independent telephone companies which we have across Canada form the only competition which the larger companies have. I believe also that we are of the opinion we should not put anything in the way of assisting these different companies, both the larger ones such as the British Columbia Telephone Company and the smaller independent companies, in furthering their services to the people. British Columbia is a rapidly expanding province. We have to realize fully the service the telephone company is required to give. I am sure it is not the desire of any member in this house to block this bill because I am sure its passage will contribute much to the services rendered to the people of British Columbia. In addition, the passage of the bill will contribute much to employment across that province. I am sure that when this bill is passed the company will immediately promote the installations which will give better service to the residents of that province.

RIO DE JANEIRO TRAMWAY, LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 31, respecting the Rio de Janeiro Tramway, Light and Power Company, Limited—Mr. Morton—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Section 2 contains a provision requiring the change of head office of the company to be sanctioned by the unanimous vote of all the shareholders present in person or represented by proxy at a special general meeting of shareholders duly called for the purpose at which at least 99 per cent of all the issued and outstanding shares in the capital stock of the company are represented. It seems to me that this constitutes a rather extraordinary provision to require, for any corporate action, the unanimous vote of the shareholders. There may be some special reason for such provision in this bill and the companion bills, and I wonder if the sponsor could tell us what the reason may be.

Mr. Morton: Perhaps it may sound rather a stringent regulation, but under the circumstances, since this company and the two other subsidiary companies mentioned in the other bills are solely owned by the Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company Limited, there is no practical problem that arises. This company owns all the shares and therefore, I presume, they have the complete say. I suppose if there were circumstances where there were a number of shareholders we should perhaps look into the principle involved to see if it were too stringent.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On the preamble—

Mr. Castleden: Before the preamble carries, would the hon. member state when this company was incorporated in Canada, and whether or not the shareholders of the stock in Canada are protected under the new regulation or does complete control of this company now transfer to Brazil?

Mr. Morton: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might explain again that the three companies referred to in the first three bills are subsidiaries of the Brazilian Traction Light and Power Company Limited. They are completely owned by this company. There are no other Canadian shareholders except the head office in Toronto. The other shareholders indirectly concerned would be the shareholders of the parent company. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Castleden: Yes. I should like to know about the holders of these shares. Are these shareholders now living in Canada, and how are their interests protected in case the company's head office is moved to Brazil?

Mr. Morton: I presume the hon. gentleman is referring to the shareholders of the parent company?

Mr. Castleden: That is right.

Mr. Morton: The only thing I can say in that respect is that in the past the complete assets of the company have been in Brazil. There is no change in respect to the assets. The only difference is that for the purpose of financing in Brazil the three subsidiaries have had to change their head office to Brazil. There is no practical difference, as a result of that, as to the security of the assets of the company than there is at the present time. If, for instance, the Brazilian government were to expropriate or take some action in respect of the assets now, there would be no difference so far as the parent company is concerned and its shareholders than if that had happened before this transfer.

SAO PAULO ELECTRIC COMPANY, LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 32, respecting Sao Paulo Electric Company, Limited—Mr. Morton—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—

Mr. Castleden: I have a question I should like to ask the sponsor of this bill. Is this company the same as the one that is referred to in the explanatory note of the previous bill? The explanatory note says:

> The head offices of two of the companies associated with this company in operations in Brazil have already been transferred from Canada to Brazil pursuant to legislative authority given in Canada by chapter 74 of the statutes of 1953-54 relating to Brazilian Telephone Company and chapter 126 of the Statutes of Ontario, 1954, relating to The Sao Paulo Light and Power Company, Limited—

Is the Sao Paulo Light and Power Company, Limited referred to the same as the Sao Paulo Electric Company Limited?

Mr. Morton: No. That is another subsidiary which already had been transferred at the date mentioned. I believe that company was a provincial company of Ontario.

DIVORCE BILLS

The Deputy Chairman: There are a considerable number of divorce bills. I think it is customary that they be called in a group. Does that meet the wishes of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Castleden: What is the request, Mr. Chairman? Is the request that these bills be approved together?

The Deputy Chairman: Yes. That is what I asked the committee.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to have these bills called individually, if possible.

The Deputy Chairman: Very well.

CLAUDINE YVETTE FELICITE CAVALLERO NEELY

The house in committee on Bill No. 37, for the relief of Claudine Yvette Felicite Cavallero Neely—Mr. Rea—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. Castleden: I wonder whether the sponsor of this bill can tell us whether any children are involved in this family and what provision has been made for them.

Mr. Rea: I do not know what provision has been made for the children.

Mr. Castleden: I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. Rea: I do not know what provision has been made.

Mr. Castleden: The hon. member does not know that. Would he know whether or not any children were involved in this case?

Mr. Rea: I would have to get that particular bill and look at it.

Mr. Castleden: The hon. member has no information on that matter?

Mr. Rea: I saw it when I read the bill but I cannot remember the particulars of every individual bill. I am sure the hon. member must realize that.

Mr. Castleden: Since the hon. member is sponsoring so many of them I thought perhaps he might be able to inform us. It is a matter of considerable importance.

Mr. Rea: If you give me time to look into the matter I can tell you. I have checked every one.

Mr. Castleden: Can the hon. member assure us that no children are involved?

Mr. Rea: I cannot assure the committee of that.

Mr. Castleden: And if there are any, can he tell us what provision has been made for them?

Mr. Rea: I do not know.

Mr. Castleden: You are not aware of that?

Mr. Rea: No. I have not the bill in front of me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No reference will be made to that matter in the bill; it would be in the evidence.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Rea: I say that I do not know. I have not the bill in front of me. It is in my office.

Mr. Castleden: You are just sponsoring it.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

RONALD VICTOR TURNER

The house in committee on Bill No. 39, for the relief of Ronald Victor Turner—Mr. Rea—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the hon. member for Spadina whether any of these 64 bills which are now being put through the committee of the house was considered separately in the committee on miscellaneous private bills?

Mr. Rea: These bills were considered en bloc in the committee. Three of us read them all individually. Of these bills that are now in the committee, none was contested. That is why they were passed en bloc in the committee; none of them was contested.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When we were at second reading of divorce bills a week ago today, one of the members on the government side of the house suggested that there was a piece of fraud in connection with one of the bills. Was that matter looked into by the committee?

Mr. Rea: It was never brought up at the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The committee does not seem to be working very hard on this matter.

Mr. Rea: I did not hear that remark.

Mr. Hansell: I happen to be a member of the miscellaneous private bills committee, and I can assure my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the committee has worked fairly hard. When we met the other day we had several other bills to consider and we jointly agreed that since there was no particular difference between any of these bills, we could save time by taking them all together. In fact, I think we could save time this afternoon by doing the same thing. The hon. member for Yorkton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre have asked a few questions. I do not like to be mean to anyone or to any party, but I would suggest that perhaps they could save time if they asked their members who were on the miscellaneous private bills committee exactly what happened in the committee. I would suggest that they do that, if they care to do it. Then they would find out a great deal more than they are asking here. I am just making that suggestion to them.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. member tell the committee how many members of the C.C.F. party attended that committee?

Mr. Hansell: I try not to be mean and I put the matter in another way. I think if you look at the minutes you will find that information given. I am sorry; there are no written minutes kept for that meeting. But I am sure if you telephone the clerk of the committee he will give you the names of those who were present.

The Deputy Chairman: In view of the plea made by the hon. member for Macleod, is it the wish of the committee, by unanimous consent, that all of these divorce bills be taken together?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Castleden: No. In view of the very kind remarks of the hon. member for Macleod, I should like to point out to him that for a good many years we have objected to the procedure of having divorces dealt with in this house in this manner. It is not good for the house and I do not think it is good for parliament, and we have said so on a number of occasions. We can only continue to voice our objections. We can only continue to say that we dislike this procedure and that we think it would be a good thing to have divorces taken away from parliament altogether. We have revealed on a number of occasions that collusion and other corrupt practices occurred in divorce cases.

An hon. Member: What corrupt practices?

Mr. Castleden: Such as, for instance, evidence that has been given by persons who are scarcely qualified to give it. In a number of cases we have been able to stop what I think was a very grave injustice or what would have proved to be a very grave injustice when we blocked this kind of thing and stopped certain of the bills going through the house. Some day the house will take this matter under consideration and perhaps will take this procedure with respect to divorce away entirely from the parliament of Canada. The parliament of Canada is not constituted to act as a court.

But the evidence over the years has shown that these things are wrong and we are merely making a further objection. I would like to say for the benefit of the hon. member who is sponsoring some 150 of these bills that sometimes people get wrong impressions, even about members of parliament. I was talking to a person who wanted to know whether the sponsor of the bills was paid for the sponsoring thereof in the house. He was under the impression that somebody was presenting a—

Mr. Rea: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I want to make this quite clear. As chairman of the private bills committee, I have acted as sponsor of these bills, for which function I have not been paid. I cannot answer for the other chairmen although I am sure that they have not received payment either. I am sure the hon. member for Yorkton already knows this, but if he does not, let me once again make it clear that I am not being paid, and I am sure the other chairmen of this committee before me were not paid. They were doing this strictly as a matter of convenience for people in these two provinces who could not get relief in their own provinces. We felt that there should not be a penalty to them because they happened to live in a province where they could not get such relief.

Mr. Castleden: I am very glad to have that information. As a matter of fact this is something which needed clearing up and it does show how things can get tangled and how a wrong impression can be gained of this house through the actions of the committee. People are under that impression; as a matter of fact, the person I mentioned received a bill from the lawyer for the carrying out of this divorce, and among the items in the statement appeared an item, in this case I think for $50, for the sponsoring of the bill in the house. I think discussion of this kind would be well advised in order to clear up this kind of misunderstanding and I feel that the hon. member's statement today has been a valuable service in order to make it known that no such payments are made in respect of sponsoring these bills, in so far as he is concerned. For these reasons I feel a debate on the divorce bills is a good thing. In this case we are passing, as I say, about 150 cases appearing on the order paper and I do not think it is good for parliament to have them passed en bloc. Furthermore I do not think it is good for parliament to have them here at all.

Section agreed to.

On section 2

Mr. Patterson: I would like to say a word with respect to the remarks just made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. The hon. member states that sometimes people get the wrong impression, even of members of parliament. I think perhaps a contribution has been made to such misunderstandings this afternoon by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he suggested that it did not look as though the members of the committee had worked very hard on some of these things.

I would just like to say that I am a member of this committee, and it is the first time I have served on this particular committee. I thought the members did apply themselves but I would like to make this observation: Those who have raised this issue are hardly in a position to say whether or not the members of the committee did perform their work well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member for Fraser Valley tell us how many minutes the committee spent in dealing with these 64 cases?

Mr. Sinclair: That is a good question.

Mr. Patterson: I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, but I would, through you, assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that a considerable amount of time was devoted to the discussion of the bills and the procedure which was followed. Furthermore, had some other members been present at the time they could have relayed this information to the hon. member who is asking the question.

Mr. Castleden: I would like to ask the sponsor of these bills whether or not he can find out by the time when the house next sits on these private bills if provision is being made to take care of the children who might be involved in any of these cases.

Mr. Rea: In answer to the question of the hon. member I would like to say that that is a provincial matter and if he will read the bills he will find out whether or not there are any children involved.

Mr. Sinclair: Oh, they are learning fast over there.

Mr. Rea: I do not sponsor these bills so much as I am being used as a vehicle for the benefit of all members in facilitating their passage through this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Marler: What business will the house be taking up on Monday?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, Monday will be private members' day and on Tuesday we propose to take legislation including the following: No. 11 on today's order paper which is a resolution preceding a bill to provide for the construction of a branch line of the Canadian National Railway Company. The intention is to send that bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. We shall try to make copies of the bill available to the leaders of the three opposition parties on Monday in the hope that it could get second reading on Tuesday and be referred to the committee. Then the resolution which is order No. 14 on today's order paper. That has to do with a bill to provide for loans to the Hamilton harbour commissioners and the remarks I made with regard to the first resolution also apply to this second one.

We then propose taking the bill which is No. 5 on today's order paper, the second reading of a bill to amend the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act. That bill is particularly complicated and the intention is to refer it to the same standing committee. Then, second reading of the bill which is order No. 4 on today's order paper, an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Mr. Marler: That is not No. 4, is it?

Mr. Green: I am sorry; it is order No. 6 on today's order paper. It is No. 4 on my list. The proposal is to refer it to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

We then propose taking four resolutions on the order paper. I am not sure in which order they would be taken but they include item No. 12 on today's order paper, a resolution dealing with the Export Credits Insurance Act; No. 16 on today's order paper, dealing with the National Housing Act; No. 9 which is the resolution in which the hon. member for Assiniboia has been so interested—

Mr. Sinclair: Hear, hear.

Mr. Green: —and then the resolution which appears on today's Votes and Proceedings providing for a loan to the province of New Brunswick in respect of the Beechwood project.

Mr. Marler: It seems to me there is a certain amount of optimism in the mind of the leader of the house.

Mr. Nowlan: It characterizes every house leader at this stage.

Mr. Green: I am a little afraid of that myself.

Mr. Marler: Would the hon. gentleman say which of these resolutions he would wish to take up first because they cover quite a lot of ground and I think a number of hon. members would be interested in one but not necessarily in the others.

Mr. Green: I think in the order in which I called them but I cannot be sure with regard to the last four resolutions to which I referred.

On Wednesday we propose to move to go into interim supply and then carry on to finish off those items to which I referred earlier. On Thursday we propose to take estimates commencing with the estimates of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to say a word in view of the line-up of business for next week which has been announced by the house leader. I think it is appropriate for me to say that through the usual channels there have been negotiations about the business of the house and as the house leader knows there is a definite change in this line-up for next week from what I thought we had agreed to. I refer in particular to the announcement for Tuesday. I thought it had been understood that next week and the week after, like the week we have just had, would be marked by private members' day on Monday and a supply motion on Tuesday. Now if the government has decided not to move a supply motion on Tuesday as was planned and if it is not made up in some other way later on, we may have to reconsider our position as to the basis of agreement on which we have been trying to work.

I do not make any definitive statement to the minister just now but I thought it should be clear that this does represent a change, as the minister knows, and we may have to give further consideration to our attitude toward the plans for the business of the house in the weeks that lie ahead.

Mr. Green: There has been this difficulty arise in connection with next week, that we must get interim supply, and I did not want to be put in the position that we would spend Tuesday on a supply motion and then on Wednesday ask for interim supply with the result that none of these legislative measures to which I have referred could be considered next week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be kept clear that there is a difference between a supply motion such as we counted on for Tuesday and interim supply. None of us of course can speak for the entire house but I doubt very much whether there will be any extended debate—perhaps there will be no debate at all—on the motion for interim supply. As a matter of fact there will not be a motion to go into committee for interim supply; that is done without the question put; but the other matter, the supply motion, is one of the rights spelled out in the rules of this house. We are entitled to six of these motions in a session of parliament and the debate is to consist of two days on each of those six motions. We have already agreed to cut down the number from six to something less. We have already agreed to take only one day rather than two for some of those motions. We are a bit concerned at unilateral changes that seem to detract still further from our rights in this session.

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think there has been very good co-operation between the parties thus far.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is right, Mr. Speaker, and we would like to keep it that way.

Mr. Green: I am sure that will continue for the rest of the session.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I think that for this group we would be very anxious to have the resolution that is No. 9 on today's order paper considered and the bill that will follow it made available for consideration at an early date. I think that would probably also suit the convenience of hon. members of other groups because there have been requests or suggestions from them with respect to this bill that is to be provided for by the resolution that is No. 9 on the order paper of today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, what the Leader of the Opposition says is quite correct and if the house leader in proposing the legislation for Tuesday had suggested that order No. 9 would come first rather than seventh the remarks I have just made might have been a little different.

Mr. Green: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre must still leave us the responsibility of deciding in what order we will call government business.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As the house leader has said there has been a high degree of co-operation and agreement among the parties as to the order of business and I hope we can keep it that way.

It being twelve minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

HUNGARIAN REFUGEES—ONTARIO AGREEMENT

Question No. 158—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has any settlement been reached with the government of Ontario regarding the financing of Hungarian refugees?
2. If so, what is the basis of such settlement and how does it compare with the agreement with the government of Saskatchewan?
3. If not, have there been any discussions with the government of Ontario since June 21, 1957, looking toward such a settlement?

Answer by: Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. No.
2. See answer to question No. 1.
3. Yes.

WHEAT DELIVERIES TO U.S.S.R.

Question No. 217—Mr. Tucker:

1. How much wheat has been taken delivery of by the U.S.S.R. since the trade agreement made between Canada and the U.S.S.R.?
2. How much was taken in each year since the signing of said agreement by the U.S.S.R.?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. The total exported to the U.S.S.R. up to and including November 21, 1957, is 16,805,886 bushels.

2. Under the terms of the agreement, the U.S.S.R. undertook to purchase from Canada between 1,200,000 and 1,500,000 metric tons of wheat in annual amounts between 400,000 and 500,000 metric tons. The first year of the agreement commenced on February 29, 1956, the second year on February 28, 1957 and the third year of the agreement will commence on February 28, 1958. During the first year of the agreement, U.S.S.R. took delivery from Canada of 14,790,447 bushels (402,530.0 metric tons). During the second year of the agreement U.S.S.R. has taken delivery to date of 2,015,439 bushels (54,851.2 metric tons).

FEDERAL BUILDING, THETFORD MINES, QUE.

Question No. 235—Mr. Lafontaine:

1. Has the Department of Public Works called public tenders for the extension and addition work to the public building at Thetford Mines, Quebec?
2. If so, on what date were tenders called and on what date were they opened?
3. What are the names of those who tendered, their respective addresses, and what amount was submitted by each one for carrying out of such work?
4. Was the contract awarded?
5. If so, to whom and on what date?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 2, 1957

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SPORTS

FOOTBALL—CONGRATULATIONS TO HAMILTON TIGER-CATS ON WINNING GREY CUP

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to offer wholehearted congratulations to the Hamilton Tiger-Cats on winning the Grey cup? I was there rooting for the other side, but Hamilton won; there is no doubt about that. As for the Winnipeg Blue Bombers, we are still very proud of them. In football, as in elections, there is always the next one. Watch out for it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING—STATEMENT AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That, commencing on Wednesday next, December 4, 1957, and thereafter until the end of this session, the hours of sitting on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays shall be from 11 a.m. until 10 p.m. with the usual intermission at 1 p.m. and 6 p.m. daily.

That the house shall sit from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m. with an intermission at 1 p.m. on Saturday, December 7 next, and on every Saturday thereafter until the end of the session: that the order of business and procedure on Saturdays shall be as for Thursday (government day) and

That the provisions of standing orders 2 (1) and 6 (3) shall be suspended in relation thereto.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped, and I know the hope is shared by many on this side of the house, that the Prime Minister would be informing us about the additional legislation that is to be brought before parliament during this session before we had to deal with the motion extending the time for the consideration of that business. If it would be convenient for the Prime Minister to give us that information, we would be obliged to him.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the other day the Leader of the Opposition asked what additional items of legislation, over and above those already on the order paper, the government hoped would be introduced and considered at this session. The additional items which we have in mind are as follows: An amendment changing the basis for contributions in respect of unemployment assistance; a bill to authorize a loan to the government of New Brunswick for the Beechwood development and also in that connection, provided an agreement is arrived at between the government of Saskatchewan and the dominion government, the necessary legislation respecting the South Saskatchewan dam and irrigation project.

At the very earliest opportunity I intend to move a motion respecting the rule on closure. There will be a bill dealing with the power program in the Atlantic provinces and also, following negotiation and I hope before the session concludes, the necessary bill to provide adjustment grants to the Atlantic provinces. There are one or two taxation measures which will receive attention and an amendment to the Indian Act to prevent the possibility of Indians who are resident on reservations and were so resident prior to a certain date having their names removed from the band rolls. In the same connection, provided there is time, there will be an amendment to the citizenship act to remove the discrimination that now exists as between natural born and naturalized citizens in connection with the loss of citizenship.

Then there is a very important bill which we realize cannot be considered in full at this time. Indeed, I doubt whether we will have time for any consideration, but the matter has been given very considerable attention. I refer to the new estate tax act. That bill will contain many sections and I feel, with a view to giving members of the house and interested persons across the country an opportunity to give the fullest study to the various sections, that we should go no further than to give the bill first reading. This would enable consideration to be given between the present session and an ensuing session, and as a result of any representations made during the interval further changes might be made in connection with the suggested amendments or changes to the existing law.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is there any consideration or legislation intended to increase the pensions of retired civil servants?

Mr. Sinclair: No answer?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have already stated on a previous occasion that the matter is receiving most careful consideration. There are many details that require to be ironed out and anomalies that will be created which have made necessary the most careful study of the matter, and as soon as we are in a position to present the legislation covering that matter, parliament of course will have the matter brought before it.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you; we are expecting it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask a question concerning one item in the list the Prime Minister just gave us. He referred to certain measures having to do with taxation. Would those measures be in lieu of a budget or would they be measures that would grow out of a budget? Would he be more specific about what he had in mind when he made that reference?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In looking over the records of parliament throughout the years, I find there have been several occasions, and in particular when second sessions have taken place in the same year, when no budget has been introduced. This was the case in the second session of 1873; in the second session of 1919; in the second session of 1930, which was the first session under the new government. Then it will be recalled also that in December, 1947, there was no budget but there were extensive fiscal changes. Mr. Abbott made the announcement and named special tariff increases, and in implementing them he simply made a motion on going into committee of ways and means.

In so far as changes in the income taxes are concerned, those changes could be made by notice; and in my opinion the few changes that will be made, having regard to the shortage of time available and the fact that this is the second session this year and in the main to the fact that consideration is to be given to the estimates prepared and advanced by the former government, we feel that a formal budget is not necessary at this time.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party, as we have stated from the beginning of the session, are anxious to co-operate to have the house deal with the business that requires to be dealt with at this time, and we will make no objection to this extension of the hours and even the days of sittings. However, we express the hope that good use will be made of the additional time.

We wish to mention particularly, as I mentioned on Friday, the anxiety of the Canadian public to have brought down at the earliest possible moment the legislation dealing with the fixation of floor prices for agricultural products. We hope that legislation will be brought in at an early date so it may get the consideration which a matter of that importance deserves under the conditions which exist at the present time.

This subject of taxation is another matter about which there is uncertainty in the public mind which I think is rather detrimental to the economy. Rumours that have circulated in the press have created a situation which has been regarded by some as justification for ceasing production of such things as motor cars which are not being purchased at this time. In view of the possibility of there being a change in the excise tax on motor cars that would make a substantial difference in the price a purchaser would pay, we can all realize that he would be inclined to wait and see whether or not there is going to be that kind of reduction. I would suggest that the government give earnest consideration to removing that uncertainty as early as possible.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said there would be one or two acts making changes in taxation. I think everyone remembers what was said during the election campaign, and everyone remembers that in the speech from the throne there was a statement that there would be submitted to us for approval changes in certain taxing statutes. There have also been frequent assertions that the promises made during the election campaign would be implemented. I think hon. gentlemen opposite should feel rather complimented that the public should expect that those promises are going to be implemented and should be acting in a manner which shows that they are waiting to see just how far these changes are going to make it more attractive to indulge in certain purchases.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the tremendous amount of work that is yet to be completed in this session of parliament, we are not going to oppose the suggestion that the hours of sitting be extended. We are here to do a job, and we are prepared to sit whatever hours are necessary.

There is one comment about the hours of sitting that I wish to make before I make the comments which I originally rose to give to the house. That comment is this. A rather unusual situation has developed in the proposing of morning sittings, in that this motion proposes morning sittings for Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays but not for Mondays and Tuesdays. The reason for that situation is quite clear. This motion has come much earlier than usually happens in a session, and Mondays and Tuesdays are still available either for private members' resolutions on Mondays or for supply motions on both Mondays and Tuesdays. There is therefore no advantage to the government in asking us to sit Monday and Tuesday mornings so long as we are dealing with matters which are taken up mainly by private members of the house.

I would suggest to the house leader that if this session continues—as it may well do, in view of the tremendous amount of business yet to be done—to the point where the government wishes to ask us to sit Monday and Tuesday mornings as well, when that time comes consideration might be given to leaving Wednesday mornings clear. I think the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) will agree that across the years it has been the practice to leave Wednesday mornings clear for caucuses and other meetings which have to be held. I do not make this request at the moment because we still have Monday and Tuesday mornings clear for these purposes, but I do make that request if the other situation to which I have referred should arise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other comment I wish to make is that it seems to me the government should realize that this session is not just, as government spokesmen are so often wont to say, a session for the purpose of cleaning up items left over from the session that met here from January to April for this year. That is an excuse used by the government quite frequently for putting the pressure on us to speed up so far as the consideration of the estimates are concerned.

I think it should be pointed out that the main estimates which are before this house were presented to this session of parliament by the present government. The present government may say that it was the former government which prepared them, but it is the present government which laid them before parliament and it is the present government which is spending the money. Therefore as long as the present government has to take the responsibility for this money this present parliament has the right to discuss those estimates which the government has told us, time and time again, we must rush through and get out of the way so we can get on with legislation.

I find there is also a popular notion abroad —and I might say quite frankly that some of the new members have expressed this notion to me when we chat out in the halls and in the cafeteria—that we are duplicating, so far as estimates are concerned, discussions we had in the last session of parliament. I have checked the records very carefully, and I find that in the January to April session we spent about four days on the estimates of the Post Office Department. We completed those estimates and they are not now before us. Other than that, the only time we spent on main estimates between January and April of this year consisted of ten minutes on February 22, which we spent on the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and one hour on March 7 which we spent on the main estimates of that same department. We spent no other time in the whole of last session on the main estimates which were introduced in the last session and which have been reintroduced in this session.

Some hon. members may have it in their minds that we spent time in the committee of supply on agriculture and one or two other departments. That is true, but that was in relation to supplementary estimates for the year before last. I have checked this very carefully and other members can do the same, but I put it again in this very simple statement: that apart from the post office estimates which were completed and are out of the way, the only time in the whole of last session spent on the main estimates which are now before this parliament was one hour and ten minutes spent on the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Let no one say that we are duplicating discussion; let no one say that these estimates should be rushed through. Indeed the Prime Minister is the last person who can say that, because on April 11 of last year, in the last week of the old session, he complained, and I shared his complaint, that no opportunity had been given for a critical examination of the estimates.

The Progressive Conservatives, in opposition as they were then, demanded from the former government an assurance when interim supply bills were put through that we would still have our full rights to discuss the main estimates as fully and as completely as we wished.

The government may say that no one is curtailing our rights but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that every time a minister says we should put the estimates through so we can get along with the legislation, every time there is an appeal for co-operation, an attempt is being made to put these things through without that critical examination which the Prime Minister suggested was so important when he spoke from the other side of the house last April.

Mr. Speaker, I should like also to point out by way of opposition to this demand to rush things through that the way things are now going we are likely to go through two sessions of parliament, the one that started in January and ended in April and this one which started in October and will end heaven knows when, without having had debates on the motion to go into supply on the number of days which the rules entitle us to have in one session.

This is another point concerning which there are some popular misapprehensions. Only today one hon. member told me that we had spent plenty of time on supply motions last session. No, we did not. The Conservatives complained about that, too. We had only one full dress two-day debate on a supply motion in the last session. An amendment was moved to that motion by the then leader of the opposition with regard to the national development policy of the Conservative party. We had that one two-day debate, at the end of which six departments were put into supply.

There were complaints by Conservatives last session that more of these debates were not permitted. As a result of those complaints, during what was the last week of the last session the former government arranged for a one-day supply debate at the end of which no departments were put into supply. It was simply a day's debate as a vehicle to make it possible for the then leader of the opposition to move his amendment having to do with parity prices. Even if you count that day, which was rather perfunctory, we had only three days in the last session for debates on the motion that Mr. Speaker leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply.

As far as this session is concerned, the matter has been subject to some negotiations through the usual channels. I indicated on Friday at six o'clock that I was a little disturbed over the way certain things which I thought had been agreed to had been upset. We were, for example, to have had a supply motion tomorrow. I am not going to debate that just now, for despite the fact that agreements seem to have been forgotten, we are still prepared to negotiate. But I doubt whether, in fact, at the end of this session we shall come out with more than seven or eight days of debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply. If it is seven, plus three of last session, that will only be ten days in two parliamentary sessions. The rule book provides for at least six debates in each session, each of two days, which makes a total of 24 days for two sessions, or twelve days for one session.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that our rights are being curtailed. I say to the government across the way that we have no objection to the suggestion that we work longer hours and try to get along with the business before parliament. But I remind the government that one of the reasons they are where they are is that the people of Canada became apprehensive about the way in which the Liberal government was pushing parliament around and denying parliament as a whole and private members in particular some of their basic rights. What is being done is not at all like what was done during the pipeline debate, but it is not a long step from pushing parliament around in little ways to doing it in bigger ways.

I admit that the government has done a number of things this session which show respect for parliament. I suggest—I plead—that there should not be this attempt to tell parliament that it must not spend time discussing the estimates. Second, an attempt to curtail the right to debate motions that Mr. Speaker leave the chair is an attempt to curtail the rights of private members themselves. These things are part of the rights of parliament, and we are just as entitled to them under a Conservative administration as we felt we were under a Liberal administration.

I point out also, Mr. Speaker, that a number of committees will now be sitting. The external affairs committee has already had one meeting; it is to meet on Tuesday, and has arranged a number of meetings through the next few weeks. The house leader announced on Friday evening at six o'clock that a number of measures would be referred to standing committees of the house. Everyone who has been here before knows how difficult it becomes to do the business of the house and the business of committees when they are meeting concurrently. Let us not have added to that any difficulties so far as arranging the business of the house is concerned.

I say to the house leader, despite the difficulties we have had recently over agreements that have been made, that we are still prepared to negotiate so far as the business of the house is concerned, provided that we can come to agreements and stick to those agreements. But if agreements are to be set aside we shall have no option but to fall back on the rules of the house with regard to supply debates being for two days, with regard to the number of departments that can be put in, and so on.

One other word, Mr. Speaker. A couple of years ago, or was it more, we had a committee on procedure. Everyone knows what went on in that committee. Everyone knows that one of the desires of Mr. Harris, who on that committee, was to cut the number of days for estimates down to 20 per session. The Conservatives would not agree to it; we would not agree to it either.

I ask the Conservatives to remember that. They should not try now to cut two sessions of parliament down to fewer than 20 days for considering estimates that amount to a total of over $5 billion.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that was one other word. There is still another. I am deeply concerned about what the Prime Minister said a few moments ago as to his belief that taxation changes can be made without going through the requirements of our rules so far as the presentation of a budget is concerned. I noted that he had to go back a long way in history to find some examples. Some of them were quite ancient. One was in 1930, when Mr. Bennett came to power. I think some of the things that Mr. Bennett did should be forgotten.

The other example was that of 1947 when Mr. Abbott imposed taxation by radio. I could hardly believe my ears when I heard the Prime Minister quoting that as an example. Those of us who were here will remember the vehemence with which the Conservatives of that day criticized the course taken by Mr. Abbott in proposing tax changes by radio. The present Prime Minister, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) were strong in their denunciation of that practice, and so were we.

As a matter of fact it was in connection with that matter, when it was debated later on, that we were able on one occasion in committee of ways and means to defeat the government by a vote on the opposition side that was larger than the vote on the then government side. To complete the story, that result was set aside by an appeal from the ruling made by Mr. Golding, who was then chairman of the committee of ways and means. I recall this, Mr. Speaker, just to remind the Conservatives what they thought when they were in opposition about budgetary changes being made by means of an announcement, and then being put through the house in a way different from what is called for by the rules.

May I tell the Prime Minister that there has been a change in the rules since then. We now have standing order No. 58 which is in different terms from the standing order having to do with the budget prior to 1955. It seems to me that under a proper reading of standing order No. 58, if any budget presentation is being made on proposals for changes in taxation measures, the requirements of standing order 58 will have to obtain. The motion will have to be debatable, and if that is the case it is debatable for a period not exceeding eight days.

Now, I submit that it is possible for us to negotiate the matter of the number of days, provided there is respect for the rules; but if the government is going to say that the rule does not apply, then of course, any basis for negotiation is out the window.

We are concerned about this situation. We think what the country needs today and is entitled to have is not just bills providing for expenditures, bills providing for taxation changes, but a financial statement, an accounting as to where we stand in our national finances. We contend that the government is doing all the things that the present ministers condemned when they were on this side of the house, if it tries to make taxation changes without obeying the rules and having a budget debate, and without making a budget presentation through the Minister of Finance, and hence without letting the house know where the country stands so far as its finances are concerned.

These are procedural matters, Mr. Speaker; these are technical matters. When you talk about private members' days, when you talk about supply motions, when you talk about ways and means, the man on the street doesn't understand them the way the man on the street understood what was happening in the pipe-line debate. And yet, despite all that, I suggest that it is in these things that are wrapped up in the maintenance of the rules and the traditions of parliament that our liberty and democracy are at stake. I hope this government now in power, which so recently was talking about the rules, the traditions and the supremacy of parliament, will not forget those speeches either by pushing parliament around in terms of its business or by denying parliament its right to a budget presentation and its right to debate that presentation if taxation changes are to be proposed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at the outset, I say we are not opposed to the suggestion that we be asked to sit extra hours to get the business of the house completed in some reasonable time. But let us face the fact that we have before us this session, as I said, estimates amounting to $5 billion. We think they should be given the critical examination that the Prime Minister called for on April 11 this year. Also we have before us a long list of important legislative items, including what amounts to a budget. Parliament should not be rushed. Parliament should be given its opportunity to deal with these matters in the proper parliamentary way.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if with not everything the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, with certainly the great bulk of it, I find myself in complete agreement. He has summed up the situation very well indeed. I do hope the government will take into careful consideration what he has said.

I do not intend to repeat the arguments used by the hon. member, except to say this. I think it would have been better if the government had planned to bring in a budget this session. I still think it would be proper and in the interests of the country to bring in a budget. I am firmly convinced that in many parts of our country business remains unsettled very largely because it does not know what the government's financial proposal is to be, and it will remain unsettled until such time as a budget has been brought in and business is given assurance. For these reasons, amongst others, I do hope the government will yet find it possible to bring in a budget and let the members of parliament get their teeth into it.

I am quite sure I can say on behalf of my colleagues here that we are prepared to do everything we possibly can to help the government get the business of this session completed. We are prepared to sit longer hours to get the job done, if that is necessary. We have not wasted too much time. I am quite sure on other occasions there has been a shocking waste of time. I think—and I speak about this parliament, not just the government—this parliament thus far has done a remarkably large amount of work, has got through more work than any parliament I have seen in a good many years.

Mr. Pickersgill: Because there is a responsible opposition.

Mr. Low: Mr. Speaker, when we say we are prepared to go along with the government's proposal to sit longer hours, we do not want them to lose sight of the fact that by this time there ought to be some target date toward which we are aiming for the completion of the work of the session. No target date has yet been set or even suggested. I noticed a statement which shocked me in today's Montreal Gazette under the heading, "Current Session Will Run Into '58." It is a Canadian Press dispatch and reads in part as follows:

> . . . informants said today that interparty consultations have come up with this schedule:
> 1. An adjournment on Saturday, December 21, until Friday, December 27.
> 2. A very brief New Year break, with the M.P.'s just taking off January 1 and going back to work the next day.
> 3. Finishing up the sitting before the Liberals start the convention to choose a successor to Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

I want it definitely known, Mr. Speaker, that there was no interparty consultation to that extent with our group, and if a suggestion of that kind had been placed before us we would not have agreed to it by any means. Apparently the government now expects to complete the 26 pieces of legislation that are either on the order paper or were mentioned by the Prime Minister today plus the estimates of the 16 departments that have not been touched, and in addition we are entitled to three supply motions and two private members' days between now and Christmas. It is just utterly fantastic to think we can do justice to that amount of work in the limited time between now and Christmas. If it is fantastic to think we can get through that amount of work between now and Christmas, surely we ought to set some target date beyond Christmas in the new year toward which we can work.

I think the fault of the motion that has been moved by the Minister of Public Works is that it does not mention any target date or suggest to the house when the government would like to get through. Because I feel the motion is lacking in that regard I move that it be amended by adding the following:

> provided that the house shall prorogue or adjourn on or before December 21, and shall not reconvene before January 6, 1958.

That motion is seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch). I move it for this reason. I think members are entitled to a decent Christmas holiday, and we are not sitting in this parliament for the convenience of eastern members only. If we are going to have a decent Christmas holiday and not skip over the business, I think it should be understood that we will work here as hard as we can until December 21, will take a Christmas holiday from then until January 6, come back at that time and take up the work where we left off and do justice to every piece of legislation that is brought before us, and give members ample opportunity to debate as long as they wish the motions to go into supply and private members' resolutions.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I put the amendment. I am in doubt whether it is in order. I should like to have the house consider that point. It is moved by Mr. Low that the motion be amended by adding the following proviso:

> provided that the house shall prorogue or adjourn on or before December 21, and shall not reconvene before January 6, 1958.

The motion before the house is one to control the hours of sitting, and whether it is possible by an amendment to enlarge that motion to deal with the time of prorogation or adjournment seems to me very doubtful. I would think if the amendment attempted to limit this new regime for hours of sitting to the period up to December 21, for example, it would be in order; but to say "provided that the house shall prorogue or adjourn on or before December 21 and shall not reconvene before January 6, 1958" strikes me as attempting to settle by way of an amendment something that has a larger import than that. I wonder whether any hon. member would like to address himself to that subject before I rule on the amendment.

Perhaps the hon. member who moved the amendment would like to restrict it, making the amendment applicable only to the period between now and December 21, in which event I would accept it.

Mr. Low: Yes, I would be very glad to have the amendment read in that way.

Mr. Speaker: I would think that would be in order as an amendment. The motion now reads "December 4, 1957 and thereafter until the end of this session" and the amendment would be to substitute "until December 21, 1957" for "until the end of this session."

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we are gathered here in this parliament under very different circumstances than has been the case in any other parliament since confederation. The objective of the government under these conditions has been to get the business of the country done in the most efficient way possible under all the circumstances. We have tried to co-operate with the members of the three parties who happen to be in opposition and to date, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) has so truly said, great progress has been made. Many measures have been passed. In an ordinary session that would not have been the case; we would not have made the progress which has been made to date.

We must remember that in the background there is the fact that we are finishing up the business for the year 1957. Surely my hon. friends are not suggesting that we should be going further and doing some of the business for 1958. Yet that is the direction in which some of the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Peace River would lead. I am sure everyone in the house is aiming primarily at getting the business done, and under all the conditions I suggest there cannot be very much objection taken to having the house sit these extra hours.

No one is asking that there be any cutting down of the actual discussion. I know just as well as anyone else who has been here for any period of years that the more you suggest to members that they cut down discussion the longer they are going to take. That, of course, is true of some more than of others.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the hon. gentleman speak for himself.

Mr. Green: Anyone who wishes to talk during these extended hours is, of course, free to do so. I have no doubt advantage will be taken of that opportunity. We may not save any time at all by adding these extra hours if a sufficient number of members look upon this change as an opportunity to do more talking. But we are trying to do the business of the country, and to get it finished by the end of the year. This suggestion that members cannot sit at all during the Christmas holidays, that they have to go home and stay for two or three weeks, does not do justice to the spirit in which the members of the House of Commons are here. We were elected not to run home for long holidays but to do the business of the country.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the minister permit a question? I am in agreement with the extended sittings, but I understood the minister to say we had to finish the estimates this year. Is it not a fact that the financial year ends March 31, not December 31?

Mr. Green: I said we are trying to finish the business of 1957 in 1957. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar knows very well that that business for 1957 includes the estimates. Surely he is not arguing that we should continue a discussion of the estimates until March 31, 1958?

Mr. Coldwell: We could.

Mr. Low: May I ask the minister a question. Is the minister implying that this house should go along with him and not question what the government is asking if that requires another month or six weeks in 1958 to finish up the business of this session?

Mr. Green: I am not asking the house to go along with me, but I do suggest that the members of the house should try to get the business for 1957 finished in 1957, or as soon thereafter as possible.

The Leader of the Opposition asked us about two items of legislation. One was the proposal to provide guaranteed prices for certain agricultural commodities. He expressed the hope that this measure would be brought up for debate at an early date. As the right hon. gentleman knows, I announced on Friday that that measure would be on the list for tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No. 7 on the list.

Mr. Green: The other resolutions should not take very long. If my hon. friends want to take three or four hours on each one, that is another matter.

Mr. Sinclair: Closure.

Mr. Green: That is the plan of the government, to bring this resolution on for consideration tomorrow.

Then the right hon. gentleman also asked about any legislation which would change the excise tax on automobiles. Any change of this nature in a taxation measure will be announced just as quickly as possible. We realize the importance of having such an announcement made, and I can assure the right hon. gentleman that it will be made just as quickly as we can possibly do so.

Then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a statement which was very encouraging to me. He said the government was trying to push parliament around. I do not suppose there ever was a government of Canada that was in such danger of being pushed around itself as the present one is. If we have at least created the impression that we are able to push him and his colleagues around, let alone push around the other opposition parties, then we have not been doing too badly. However, I can assure him that the last thing we have in mind is to push anybody around. We are just as much interested in the rights of parliament as we ever were, just as much interested as my hon. friend and his colleagues. We intend to show every respect for parliament and all the wonderful things for which it stands.

I do not believe, really, Mr. Speaker, that we can be accused of trying to sabotage parliament by anything we have done to date. We intend to carry on in the same way during the remaining days of this parliament. We will try to respect the wishes of all three opposition parties, and try to work out a plan for doing the business of the house which will meet the convenience of all of the members, including the new members of the house. In the meantime I do ask for support for our original motion. We do not believe it is the responsibility of the Social Credit party, or any other of the opposition parties, to decide just when parliament is to be prorogued or just when it is to be adjourned. Those decisions are the responsibility of the government.

Mr. Low: No, the responsibility of parliament.

Mr. Green: There is one very good way to settle that. If the members of the house are not prepared to accept our recommendation as to when the house should be adjourned or when it should be prorogued, all they have to do is defeat us.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Another threat.

Mr. Green: This, too, is part of our parliamentary procedure, and we shall be very happy to abide by the result.

Mr. Low: Before the vote is taken I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works two questions relative to what he has said. The first is this. Does the Canadian Press despatch carried by the Gazette on its front page represent the plans of the government, when it says very definitely that well-informed people have said that is what the government intends to do? That is the first question.

Mr. Green: When the government, Mr. Speaker, makes an announcement, it does not make it to the press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): What about T.V.?

Mr. Green: I would not be surprised if the statement in the press came from my hon. friend's own party or from a member of the C.C.F.

Mr. Low: We deny that.

Mr. Green: It certainly did not come from me. The hon. member for Peace River stated that his party knew nothing about any such discussion. I may be wrong, but I think I intimated to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) on Friday, as I did to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I think to the Leader of the Opposition or to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), that we might give consideration to adjourning on Saturday, December 21, until the Friday after Christmas, and then sitting right on through, possibly with a holiday on New Year's day. I think I told my old friend the hon. member for New Westminster that on Friday. How the Canadian Press picked it up I do not know.

An hon. Member: Innocents abroad.

Mr. Green: It was merely a friendly conversation. Certainly the information did not come from me.

Mr. Low: The second question I wanted to ask the minister is this, Mr. Speaker. Will he, representing the government, consult with the representatives of other parties in the house with a view to settling this question of the terminal date of this session, the date of adjournment perhaps, and the target date for prorogation?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with the representatives of the three opposition parties very thoroughly and very frequently since the beginning of the session, and I certainly shall continue to do so. It is still the hope of the government that the business will be through before Christmas.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word with regard to the reference to what has been said in the press, involving my name as well as that of the hon. member for New Westminster.

The leader of the house is correct in his statement that he informed me on Thursday or Friday or both that a timetable something like that indicated in the press was in the government's mind. Where the press is wrong—and I am in the dark as much as he is as to where the press got it—is in the suggestion that there was any agreement to the proposal. As the minister knows, I did not agree.

Mr. Green: No. I did not attempt to get any agreement from anybody. It was simply a discussion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A one-way discussion.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I think the hon. member is mistaken. My colleague the hon. member for Laurier was not here on Friday. I had some conversation with the hon. gentleman, but I have no recollection of his having mentioned adjourning on December 21 and coming back on December 27, then to take a one-day adjournment at New Years. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman was perhaps intending to communicate that information to my colleague the hon. member for Laurier, but he was not here and it was not communicated to me.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the position of my name having been brought into this discussion in so far as a decision is concerned as to on what dates we had determined or decided the house might adjourn and be recalled. I must say that while there was some discussion with respect to the possibility, the only intimation I had was that we would probably be recalled the day after Christmas.

I can appreciate the position of the house leader with respect to this matter, because he has certainly consulted with me frequently, has tried to bring me up to date in every way possible, and has discussed this party's viewpoint as presented by me so we could possibly come to some agreement. But up to this time I must admit I had not definitely had the date of recalling the house drawn to my attention, nor was it suggested that December 21 would be the date when we would recess. It had rather been intimated that we would sit up to Christmas and be recalled the day after Christmas. The house leader might have been under the impression that he had discussed the matter with me, but I do not recall those particular dates being mentioned.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): As has already been said on behalf of this group, Mr. Speaker, we certainly have no objection to increased hours of sitting of the house. We realize that there is before parliament a great deal of business that must be dealt with. However, I am not at all satisfied that the government is giving to the various measures the kind of priority that should be given. With great deference to the Minister of Public Works, I suggest that to say that the resolution which would establish support prices for agricultural products is actually in fact listed for tomorrow, when it is listed in seventh place, is not to say something that has any great merit or any great basis in realism.

If the government were anxious that this legislation, which has been demanded by the official opposition and which this group has requested be brought forward at an early date, and which I am certain would have the support of members of the Social Credit group—when in response to this unanimous request by the three opposition parties the government say "We listed it for Tuesday but we listed it for seventh place," I would suggest that is putting a gun to the heads of members who are interested in the other legislation. I refer to the other six items that have been listed.

I therefore make this request, namely that the government list this legislation first for tomorrow, and we will see how we can expedite it. Some of my colleagues have suggested to me that if the government would be prepared to do that we might be prepared to sit tomorrow morning to deal with this legislation affecting agricultural producers.

What may be happening, Mr. Speaker, is this. The government, by delaying the passing of this legislation—and this is the best you can say for it—is in fact taking away a good deal of money that might otherwise accrue to the producers who are marketing products that might be affected by the resolution. Of course if that is not the case then there is not too much in the resolution. But it seems to me a shame, since the government has been in office since June 21, that there should be so much delay in bringing forward what we all understand to be an emergency measure.

No one can say that parliament—and in this I include all members of parliament—did not pass with great expedition the various pieces of legislation which the government itself listed as emergency legislation. This therefore is the first thing, I suggest, that the government should be giving consideration to.

I am not sufficient of an authority to know the technicalities with regard to bringing in a budget in a given session or not bringing in a budget, but it seems to me to be a very unsatisfactory state of affairs that because the government is playing coy as to its policy with regard to the excise tax on automobiles, we should have this further large number of persons added to the unemployment rolls in this country. Why does not the government make a statement now as to its position with regard to this suggested change in the excise tax on automobiles? I think it is a mistake that the government should leave this thing suspended for so long, thereby daily adding to the unemployment rolls in this country.

We all hope, of course, that there will be a cut in the excise tax. We hope the government will bring in a budget immediately. But I think this is the kind of problem that should be dealt with so this unemployment, if it is unnecessary as far as the automobile industry is concerned, is not continued. I can understand the position of prospective automobile purchasers in this country. They do not want to risk any chance of paying more than would be the ordinary price if they purchase an automobile now in advance of any prospective reduction. It would seem to me that this is just an ordinary thing that should be done.

Mr. Speaker: I was just going to remind the hon. member that we are dealing with hours of sitting, and that we should not get into discussion of business to come before the house.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I would think I was making a comment on the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition. As far as expediting the business of the house is concerned, I think we are in favour of it. A good deal of legislation has been announced that we shall have to deal with during the current session. As the Prime Minister stated that legislation that we would have to deal with this session it seemed to me there was one major omission, and that was legislation which would provide for payments under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act on behalf of mental and tuberculosis patients. The second obvious thing was an announcement which would make possible the coming into effect of the hospital insurance provisions at an early date.

I should like to say to the government that it is not compelled at every opportunity to say that if we want to vote for an adjournment, vote for the motion or vote against it, we face the possibility of an election.

There seems to be quite a desire on the part of the government to get defeated on any kind of a motion it can at the earliest possible date. It seems to me the government would be in a much better position if it would take the constructive suggestions advanced by the members of the various opposition parties as to what should be given priority in the way of very necessary legislation.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to keep to the motion which is before the house, but I would like to make one or two points in connection with what the leader of the government stated a moment ago.

It is true that certain discussions took place between us in connection with a general plan to deal with the business of the house from that time, which was at least a month ago, until the Christmas recess. The plan which was submitted appeared to me to be in order in so far as its general terms were concerned, but I do want to make it quite clear that at no time was there any agreement as between us in connection with any plan such as that announced in this morning's Gazette. I want to dissociate myself from any understanding or any agreement in so far as that is concerned.

As the leader of our party has said, I was not here on Thursday or Friday—

Mr. Green: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I said there was no agreement with anybody, but that it was simply a matter of discussion.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, that was not even discussed. I think my hon. friend indicated that this group had been told something about the plan. I want to make it quite clear that I, for one, was not consulted about this.

There are, however, one or two other points with which I would like to deal in speaking to this motion and to the amendment. The leader of the house has said that we are gathered here in unprecedented circumstances. Well, I do not think the circumstances are so unprecedented. After all, there have been two sessions within a 12-month period before, and the responsibility of the government is to bring in the estimates, the legislation and any other business. It therefore does not seem to me that there is anything unprecedented about the circumstances in which we find ourselves.

Our leader a moment ago asked the Prime Minister for the intended legislation, other than that on the order paper before us now, for the remainder of the session, and I am just wondering if it is the intention of the government to get through all of this business before the end of this year. After all, there are on this list some measures which it seems to me have no urgency, and certainly others—for instance, that dealing with closure—which could be of such a contentious nature as to take a great deal of the time of the house.

That being the case, I wonder how it is going to be possible that all this legislation now on the order paper, and that now announced by the Prime Minister, could get through in that time. We have from now until the Christmas recess, and so I ask this question with all deference. Is it really the intention of the government to get through with the business of the house, or is it inviting a vote of non-confidence so as to provide a reason to go before the country?

Those are the considerations which come to my mind at this time; and while we will facilitate the business of the house, as my leader has said, there is one thing I hope we will not be asked to do, and that is to put some of these measures through with such haste that it will be impossible to consider them seriously in the manner in which they should be considered, at least on second reading. Those are the observations I have to make on this motion.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): As the leader of this group has mentioned, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to adopt the hours of sitting mentioned in this motion, but I think the leader of the house should be prepared to at least be reasonable. He must admit that the proposal as it now stands is fantastic. He is saying the times we shall sit in this house until the end of the session, and if there was any possibility of making the end of the session before Christmas I would agree with the reasonableness of this motion. But the leader of the house knows very well that there is no possibility of completing the business of the house before us at the present time by December 21. Seventeen days left, 26 pieces of legislation, 15 departments, three supply motions and two private members' days. For anybody to suggest that all this could be completed before Christmas, as I say, is fantastic.

An hon. Member: Irresponsible.

Mr. Quelch: If, on the other hand, we are going to come back after Christmas—and undoubtebly we will have to do so in order to complete this legislation—is it necessary that we should sit this kind of hours for an unlimited time in order to complete this legislation, especially when the closure motion is among the measures? Mind you, closure is still in force, and the house leader may figure that his party will be able to use closure, get it through, and then do away with it.

An hon. Member: That's a hot one.

Mr. Quelch: But so long as we are going to debate this legislation on a reasonable basis I do suggest that the leader of the house should be prepared to accept the amendment of the member for Peace River that this should only apply until December 21 and then, if we have to come back after Christmas, we will adopt more reasonable hours.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is—

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion I should like to have a word. I did not speak on the main motion; it was my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who dealt with it. I want to say this to the government. Because of the condition that exists in this house at the present time the government would be well advised to do what was done when a government since I have been here had a very narrow majority. I am referring to the period between 1945 and 1949, when, from time to time in the discussions of the business of the house, the leaders and the whips of the opposition parties were called into consultation. They might come to some agreement without a long discussion of this description. Since the beginning of this session there has been no consultation. The leader of the house from time to time has seen members of the opposition groups and has said what the government intends to do. That, in reality, is not the kind of consultation that there should be under these circumstances. We are willing to sit all the hours that are necessary to do the business of this house.

There is a tremendous list of legislation now. I am amazed at the number of items that were added this afternoon. Some of them are of the utmost importance. I want to say to the government that some attempts should be made to organize the discussion of this legislation. We should try to get the legislation through. The estimates should also be dealt with by this house; but I want to say to the government again that the estimates we are now discussing are not the estimates up to December 31, 1957. These are estimates up to March 31 of next year and consequently we should be able to have ample time to discuss them. I do not think it is the function—that is perhaps why we did not vote with the Social Credit group—of either the opposition or the government simply to say that this is what we are going to do and have done with it. There should be consultation. I think we should try to get consultation—

Mr. Low: I tried to get consultation.

Mr. Coldwell: The leader of the Social Credit group was laying something down to the house. I think it would be far better if the government took the attitude of consultation. Let us organize the discussion of this legislation, if we can. Some of the legislation should go through immediately. Farm legislation has been mentioned several times this afternoon and then, of course, the financial position of the country should be known.

These are matters of the utmost concern to this parliament and they should take priority over everything else. The people of this country have a right to know—particularly if there is any intention on the part of the government to call an election in the near future—the financial position of this country and what the legislation that we have adopted this session means to the finances of this country. We have added these commitments which we support. I think the people of the country have the right to know above all things what the financial condition of this country is and we should not leave here until we know. That means, of course, that a budget should be brought down before this session winds up.

I want to make a plea to the government so that we may not have the kind of discussion we have had this afternoon, and so we may have consultation to try to get something agreed upon by the parties in regard to legislation and proceed with the estimates and give them a thorough going over, which they deserve. Incidentally, we owe that to those who sent us here.

Motion agreed to.

POWER

AUTHORIZATION OF LOAN OF $30 MILLION TO PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. Howard C. Green (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the House by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans, out of the consolidated revenue fund, to the government of New Brunswick, not exceeding $30 million, in respect of expenditures for the development of hydroelectric power at Beechwood on the Saint John river.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SHUTTING DOWN OF AUTOMOBILE PLANTS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 26 I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance. Your Honour will note that the mover of such a motion must, pursuant to subsection 3 of standing order 26, hand to Your Honour a written statement setting out the matter which he proposes to discuss as a matter of urgent public importance. That I have done and I now await your ruling as to my right to raise this matter.

Mr. Coldwell: What is the matter of urgent public importance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I followed strictly the rules set out in standing order 26. I have no objection to stating what Your Honour now has, namely that there is a matter of urgent public importance in our country arising out of the closing of automobile plants resulting in the lay-off of thousands of automobile workers for an indefinite period.

An hon. Member: Is that all you have got to say?

Mr. Speaker: The urgent matter of public importance which is the subject of this motion, as I understand it, relates to the closing or shutting down in whole or in part of automobile plants in Canada and the threatened closing of automobile plants.

While I think the house will agree that this is a matter of public importance and public interest, I wonder whether any hon. members would care, before I make the decision which it is my duty to make, to address themselves to the question of the responsibility of the government in the matter and the question of urgency of debate which, after all, is the important question I have to decide. It is not that the matter itself is of urgent public importance, as most matters before the house are, but whether it is a matter of urgency of debate, assuming that it is of urgent public importance. Perhaps the proposer would say a word.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may have the floor for a minute, I think we at least ought to know the wording of the motion so that we can speak to it. We have always had that courtesy shown before.

Mr. Speaker: In reading the motion I am not accepting it as being in compliance with the rules. The motion that will be made is "that the house do now adjourn". It is expressed in the document which has been handed to me in this way:

In accordance with this standing order—

That is standing order No. 26.

—I herewith submit a statement of the matter to be discussed. The matter of urgent public importance which I propose to raise has to do with the fact that two large automobile companies in Canada, employing thousands of workers, have closed their doors for an indefinite period and another large company, in fact, the largest, proposes to shut its doors tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. Winch: Is there not an additional paragraph to the effect that the confusion was created by the announcement respecting the excise tax on automobiles?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish to address you now, Mr. Speaker. I would call your attention to subsection 3 of standing order 26 which is explicit in this matter. Every move I have taken is in accordance with the rules, as Your Honour well knows. Subsection 3 is in these words:

He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house.

The grounds for this motion are another matter and they have been properly stated under the rules but I submit in the wrong context by the hon. member for Vancouver East. There is this large-scale lay-off which was announced by three automobile companies on Saturday last, as contained in the Saturday edition of the Globe and Mail, as the result of hesitation in the tax policy of the administration, clarification of which policy has been sought by representatives of the automobile industry, the factory workers and members of this house over a period beginning almost at the opening of this session of parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not want the hon. member to proceed as though the motion had been accepted. What I am concerned about is the matter of urgency of debate at this time.

Mr. Green: On that point of order, may I point out that earlier this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition dealt with this matter when he asked for an early announcement of policy with regard to the excise tax on automobiles. I attempted to answer that request made by the right hon. gentleman. Now we have the hon. member for Essex East coming along with the very same matter and trying to make it the excuse for moving to adjourn the house. I submit that is in no way covered by the provisions of standing order 26. This is not a question of raising an urgent matter of public importance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If you were out of work you would know.

Mr. Green: The question has already been properly raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Sinclair: I should like to speak to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Well, it is really not a point of order. It is in response to my request for some assistance in determining whether the proposed motion is in order, and I will hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who rose first.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to address myself to the question that is of greatest concern to Your Honour, namely whether there is urgency of debate with respect to this matter. Before I do so, perhaps I might point out to the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) that his motion, in the form in which he presented it to the house, was to say the least incomplete. He quotes subsection 3 of standing order 26. I wonder whether he read subsection 2, which comes before subsection 3. It says:

> The member desiring to make such a motion rises in his place, asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and states the matter.

The hon. member for Essex East forgot to state the matter. The fact that he sent notice to Your Honour in advance does not mean that he has complied with the requirement of the last four words of subsection 2 of standing order 26.

I would also draw the attention of the hon. member for Essex East to page 323 of Beauchesne's third edition. At the bottom of that page there is an instruction as to how to draft a motion of this kind. True, in Beauchesne's third edition, the reference is to standing order 31 but that was the number before the last revision of the rules and standing order 26 in today's rules is the same as standing order 31 was under the old rules.

Mr. Sinclair: What page?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Page 323 of Beauchesne, third edition. The instruction reads:

> The member, from his place in the house, says: "Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 31—"

Now standing order 26.

> "—for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely" (here describe the question to be debated). He then hands a written statement of the matter to be discussed to the Speaker who, having read it to the house, puts the question: "Has the hon. member leave to proceed?"

Now, if the hon. member for Essex East did not know where to find that in the rule book, he could have looked up last Friday's Hansard and copied the form of the motion put by my colleague the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I realize that the hon. member for Essex East, who has been in parliament for a long time, has not had any experience with this type of motion. He should have consulted some of us on this side who have had lots of experience in opposition. However, I gather Your Honour does not want to make an issue out of the incomplete form of the motion, for you can easily write in the words the hon. member for Essex East had in mind.

This leaves us with the more important and serious question of the urgency of debate. I support very strongly and wholeheartedly the proposition that there is urgency of debate. May I point out that in doing so I am asking the house to take up more time on this private members' Monday which otherwise would have been devoted to a motion standing in my name, so the impartiality of the position I am taking is obvious. It has been ruled many times, Mr. Speaker, that urgency of debate rather than just the urgency of the situation is the criterion. There is no argument about the urgency of the situation. Indeed, Your Honour has admitted that. The fact is employees are being laid off and there are other things happening that are upsetting the country in regard to this situation.

What about urgency of debate? The fact is that during the whole of this session we have been trying to get a statement from the government regarding its plans with respect to a budget. Up until today, we have not been able to get any kind of statement at all. All of the answers from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) have been, to put it politely, evasive. Even today the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) still leaves a great deal of uncertainty as to taxation changes, and that uncertainty is on two counts.

On the one hand, we do not know when they are coming, and I submit that is a matter that should be debated today because if there has been confusion in the automobile industry in the last few days there will be more confusion after the statement made today, with no follow-up as to when these measures are to be introduced. There is uncertainty as to whether the taxation measures to be introduced by the government will include changes in the excise tax so far as automobiles are concerned. There is also uncertainty as to the government's intention regarding the way this matter is to be introduced. Is there to be a budget debate or not? Are there to be resolutions that will be passed by parliament or just resolutions, notice of which will be given to parliament? All of this is in such a state of confusion, both so far as parliament is concerned and so far as the automobile industry and its employees are concerned, that it seems to me there is one thing that is required today—I will even say it is more important than debating my motion—and that is a debate in this house to find out where we stand in relation to the introduction of any measures affecting the exise tax on automobiles.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, despite the comments I made regarding the incompleteness of the form of the motion presented by the hon. member for Essex East, I hope you will consider my contention that there is not only urgency so far as the situation is concerned, with men losing their jobs, but there is urgency of debate. This matter should be discussed and cleared up in the House of Commons today.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I feel that one has to trace the origin and course of the question arising here in order to discuss it properly. The position of affairs is simply this. Someone wrote a press article based on conjecture, in no way supported by anything said in this house, and on the basis of that article allegedly certain things have taken place. As a matter of fact, those things had taken place earlier and have continued because they were in existence on June 10, namely a great deal of unemployment in the automobile factories.

What will happen here if this—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The question before the house now is not the merits of this matter. The question before Your Honour is whether or not this question is one that properly comes within standing order 26. What the right hon. gentleman is now doing is arguing the merits of the case and he can do that after Your Honour has given me permission to place before the house this motion.

Mr. Speaker: In order that there may be no doubt about the position, I am under the duty of making a decision and have asked members to speak. I am interested in hearing the Prime Minister speak to the question of why this matter should be debated now, the question of urgency of debate. I would appreciate it if members would address themselves to that point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member is the last person who should raise a point of order after the lesson he just received from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Chevrier: That is pretty cheap, coming from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You know how to be cheap.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend should not carry his frustration into this house. What would happen, supposing there was a debate? Supposing there had been a budget to be introduced next week, and a week in advance of the budget some newspaper in this country published a certain statement.

Mr. Sinclair: There is not going to be a budget. You said so yourself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would that force a discussion and be a matter of urgency of debate, Mr. Speaker? This is obviously simply a subterfuge in order to secure advance information as to what is going to be done by this government on a matter, responsibility for which rests with this government.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. gentleman has said that this was a subterfuge.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I said that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is a reflection on my motive for bringing this matter to the attention of the house. I brought this matter to the attention of the house because in my constituency thousands of men are out of work, that is the reason, and the right hon. gentleman should withdraw that observation at once or he will be reflecting on the unemployed people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I said that the adoption of this motion was a subterfuge, and I stand on that. This type of application was never intended to cover a situation such as the one in which it is endeavoured to be used by my hon. friend, and that being so it is indeed a subterfuge.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I should like to speak to the point of order, concerning the urgency of debate. If I might go back for a moment, even beyond subsection 2 of standing order 26, and go back to subsection 1 of that standing order, I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion that subsection 1 says:

> Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance must be asked after starred questions on Wednesdays—

And so on. The hon. gentleman has not yet favoured the house with a statement of exactly what he does want to have discussed or what situation he has in mind, whether it is a projected closure, a past closure of plants or just what is the situation. No one is denying for a moment that it is a serious matter. Of course, it is a serious matter. However, the course of the matter and the solution of that problem are not going to be advanced by such a vague and loose statement as the hon. gentleman has made today, because on the basis of the statement he has so far made as to what the matter is he wants to discuss no one can come to grips with the problem.

Apart from that, there is another reason, and I think a much more important reason, why the motion is clearly out of order and why it falls entirely within the type of procedure which the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has categorized as a subterfuge. The hon. gentleman who moved the motion and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who supported it have both made it perfectly clear—and indeed, of course, the facts speak for themselves and make it clear beyond any possibility of doubt—that their purpose is to raise a discussion involving the question of the government's policy with regard to taxation, both of them—as well as all hon. members—knowing perfectly well that it is entirely out of order to raise at this stage the question and demand from the government a declaration of its tax policy.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has indicated clearly today that in the course of a few days taxation measures will be laid before the house. It is but a pure subterfuge for them to say, "You have not told us whether or not there will be a budget." Such taxation proposals as there will be will be incorporated in legislation to be laid before the house and you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members know perfectly well that discussion of this kind simply cannot be carried on because the whole question involved is surely government taxation policy. Indeed I would suggest that if there had been any responsibility attaching to any member of this house or anywhere in this house for the situation that has developed in the automobile industry in respect of uncertainty as to taxation intentions, the responsibility lies over there on the other side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. member not to debate the issue. Perhaps the only way to avoid such debate arising is to give a decision on this matter. However, I see the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) and I should like to hear what he has to say about the matter of urgency.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself for a moment or so to the seriousness of the situation and the seriousness of the motion which has been presented by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it would shorten the matter and assist the hon. member in assisting me if I say that what I am concerned about is the question as to whether we should interrupt proceedings in order to debate this matter now or, in other words, the urgency of debate. I know there is an urgent unemployment problem. That is the matter to which I should like him to address himself. Then I will hear the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair).

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is to that matter that I was going to address my remarks which would be somewhat in order and not participate in the political wrangling which is going on between the Prime Minister and some of the members of the opposition. It seems to me that this is a matter of great public concern and certainly not only to an individual constituency.

The hon. member for Essex East pointed out how serious this matter was in his constituency. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) pointed out that he did not think it was fair that this matter should be brought up because there happened to be an article in a newspaper. It just so happened that this morning—whether it is coincidence or not I do not know—I received an urgent telegram from the department of labour and industries in the province of Alberta pointing out the urgency of this matter, pointing out also that the unemployment situation in that province has doubled since a year ago and that they are very much concerned. This question of seriousness and of concern is not one that affects any local constituency only. It is a situation prevalent all over Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say to the hon. member that what it is the purpose to discuss on the adjournment of the house is not the unemployment situation in Canada. It is stated in these terms:

—has to do with the fact that two large automobile companies in Canada, employing thousands of workers, have closed their doors for an indefinite period and another large company, in fact, the largest, proposes to shut its doors tomorrow or the next day.

That is the alleged matter of public importance. The assistance I need is on the question of whether we should interrupt the proceedings to discuss that matter today. If the hon. member has nothing further to say, I will hear the hon. member for Coast-Capilano.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I quite realize that the wording of the motion refers only to the lay-offs in the automobile industry. But certainly that becomes a matter of great concern to all those who are employed as dealers clear across the country and to all those who are employed in the manufacture of those things that go to make up the automobile. It therefore cannot be confined just to the one area. What I wish to say is that we are in entire support of the motion by the hon. member for Essex East with regard to the seriousness of the situation and believe that is should be adopted now.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I wish to speak only on the matter of urgency. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green), when he spoke, gave as his reason that this motion should not be adopted the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) was informed that in the list of legislation to come forward there were going to be tax measures and that they would be brought forward at the earliest opportunity. I should like to point out that just six weeks ago today I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) when those tax measures were going to be brought forward and received exactly the same answer. If it means that these tax measures are going to be delayed for another six weeks, that means that for another six weeks the automobile plants and the automobile salesmen in this country are going to be unemployed because of evasion and delay by this government in bringing in a budget.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on the point of order. First of all, however, I should like to say that no one speaks lightly of the question of unemployment. But in connection with this matter of debate, I should like to leave this thought with you. Should you make a ruling that this matter should be debated today, are we not leaving ourselves in the position in the future that if at any time any group of people wish to receive information from the government or to place the government in a defensive position, all they have to do is to inspire an article in the press and then we will have government by newspaper. Of course, once this type of article is printed we are left in a position where a group of citizens can use a big stick and ensure that this type of thing is brought before the house.

Mr. Speaker: May I say this to the hon. member. In what I have been handed today I see nothing that relates to taxation at all. The urgent matter as stated has to do with unemployment or lay-offs in the automobile industry. If the hon. member who is moving this motion intends to deal with taxation, that raises quite a different situation in my mind; and I am dealing with it as it stands before me now.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Surely what is attempted here is simply to do indirectly something that cannot be done directly. On that basis I say that this matter should not be debated in this house today.

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): In rising on the question as to the urgency of debate, may I say this. The only purpose of having debate is in order to get some action from the government in connection with the unemployment situation as it now exists in Canada. That is the only purpose.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sinclair: In Canada.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): The unemployment situation as it now exists in Canada.

Mr. Sinclair: In Canada, from coast to coast.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard enough to deal with the matter.

Mr. Fraser: May I just say a word?

Mr. Speaker: First I must hear out the hon. member for Essex West.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): The reason I suggest we want action is this. There has been set up a committee of municipalities in the Windsor area which have requested the co-operation of the government. I propose to show that they are not getting co-operation. All we want is a little bit of action on behalf of the government, for which action we are quite willing to give our utmost co-operation in the Windsor area. You cannot slough off the question of thousands of people being unemployed. It affects not only those people who are so unemployed but all allied and secondary industries. Therefore, all we want the debate for is in order to get a little bit of action out of the government.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me right,—and I think it does—at this time every year the automobile plants across the country generally lay off men for a few days or a week or so in order to have a readjustment as between one kind of model and another.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fraser: I have every sympathy with the men who are laid off but I know that has happened every year.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate what hon. members have said but I must say that it does not really assist me very much in dealing with this matter. What we have before us is a fairly definite matter of public importance and what we have been discussing is something quite different. Now if the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is moving the adjournment of the house to discuss the matter of the excise tax on automobiles, I would certainly rule it out of order because I could not understand how matters which are essentially matters for the budget could be projected into a debate of the house by an expedient of this kind. However, that is not a matter which I have before me and I must deal with what I have before me. The matter to be discussed has been put in the following terms:

> The matter of urgent public importance which I propose to raise has to do with the fact that two large automobile companies in Canada, employing thousands of workers, have closed their doors for an indefinite period and another large company, in fact the largest, proposes to shut its doors tomorrow or the next day.

Now this has to do with unemployment in three large automobile companies in Canada, which is of course a matter of public importance and interest. I suppose that, taking it at its face value, what it is desired to debate is what can be done about that unemployment situation? Now by looking at the order paper I can find nothing which will give the hon. members an opportunity to discuss this matter in the near future and it seems to me that this is a matter which does come within the rules to the extent that I must ask this house whether the hon. member has the leave of the house to proceed.

I put the question now, formally, to see whether there is any objection. The question before the house is this: Has the hon. member for Essex East the leave of the house to move the adjournment of the house to discuss this matter of urgent public importance?

[Mr. Brown (Essex West).]

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

And more than 20 members having risen:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the house generally will appreciate the care which Your Honour takes in a matter of this sort in trying to arrive at what he believes to be the correct procedural situation. I certainly join with other members of this house in recognizing the great patience and understanding which Your Honour shows, not only in this particular but also in other matters which have come before us during the course of the present session.

I would like to say firstly to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), for whose judgment on procedural questions if not substantive questions I have great respect, that he will possibly now understand—after the observations of His Honour—why I was careful as to the form of my motion. Notwithstanding the fact that I recognize my hon. friend's superiority of knowledge in these matters and though I might accept his advice on some occasions, I am sure he will recognize that in this particular instance he was not as wise as would seem to have been indicated by some of his earlier remarks. I say this in the light of the ruling of the Speaker with regard to this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I try to be helpful.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Now the matter before us, Mr. Speaker, concerns the fact that at the present time in certain centres of Canada plants have been closed and, as a result, thousands of men are out of work. However, as the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) has pointed out, this situation is not confined to merely those centres where automobiles are manufactured in this country. The very interdependence of our economy suggests, of course, that the situation is much more widespread in this particular instance, than a mere recital of the number of men who may be out of work in the city of Windsor, in the city of Oshawa or any other centres, such as Hamilton, where automobiles are manufactured.

One has to take into account that the situation affects the dealers in automobiles all over this country and in every community; one has to consider the effect on a score of subsidiary plants, not only in my own community but in other communities of Canada which are entirely dependent upon the manufacture of automobiles.

This, therefore, is by no means a local question or one of local consideration; this is a national matter and I do not argue for one moment that if the situation was confined to my own city that would preclude any hon. member from raising this particular matter but, to give emphasis to the nature of the problem about which we complain, I join with the hon. member for Bow River in indicating the nationwide character of the problem.

Now I want to be fair in a matter of this importance and I would not suggest that this is the first time unemployment has occurred within recent months or within a recent period in the automobile industry; that would be neither a fair argument nor would it be a responsible one, and I do not think I am inclined to make irresponsible arguments in support of a case in this house. However, I do have a duty, as a member of parliament representing an automobile centre, to raise a situation which, rightly or wrongly, does have certain attributes for which the government is responsible in this particular instance.

Now I wish to refer to a matter which I regret having to raise since the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), undoubtedly for good reasons, is not in his seat but I have to weigh the convenience of the hon. minister and the interests of my constituents, so I think he will not criticize me, in this instance at any rate, if I prefer the welfare of my constituents to his convenience. On Thursday last I asked the Minister of Finance if on the next day he was going to see representatives of the automobile industry. I indicated in my question that there was some concern about his refusal or his inability to see the representatives of that industry on the next day. The minister replied that he had already seen them several weeks before. He also indicated that he had seen the dealers and that he was aware of the nature of the problems confronting the automobile industry. He would give no commitment however as to whether or not he would see them. It was that statement, together with reported items of one kind and another, which have circulated since the beginning of this session which have caused, as I suggested in my question to the Minister of Finance, a stagnation in the sales of automobiles, an uncertainty in the minds of the consuming public and, perhaps not unnaturally, some hesitation on the part of the manufacturers.

Now the press of this country on Saturday last indicated the official attitude of the automobile manufacturers themselves, but I do know that groups from my own city have been endeavouring and propose to continue to endeavour to seek an interview with responsible members of the government in connection with this matter, to see if clarification of some kind will not ensue on the part of the government which would at least remove any uncertainty in so far as the relationship of the government to this particular problem is concerned.

Now we have in the Globe and Mail of Saturday a statement from General Motors of Canada Limited and Chrysler Corporation of Canada Limited to the effect that production will be suspended next week, meaning this week. I refer to the edition of Saturday, November 30, pending the clarification,—and because of your ruling, sir, I do not intend to go any further—of government policy.

Now there is only one field in this matter involving government policy which has any practical bearing on this matter, and we were told during the course of the election by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), speaking in my own city of Windsor with regard to the automobile situation, which at that time had its period of unemployment—there were then some 7,000 men out of work, and I do not hesitate to state that fact—"Elect me; I will see that parliament is called in September, and I will correct that situation."

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. gentleman to quote that remark from me. And we have come to exactly the point I raised. The question asked last Thursday had to do with the excise tax, and the hon. gentleman is now back to the subject which you said a while ago could not be discussed, and which you would not permit to be discussed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not mentioned the excise tax once.

Mr. Green: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say further that the hon. member for Essex East has said this is the only point at issue in this debate today.

Mr. Speaker: This is the difficulty which some hon. members foresaw and suggested would relate to this motion, and it is one which hon. members will have to bear in mind when they ask the question of what may be done about unemployment in the automobile industry.

May I refer to subsection (f) of section 6 of standing order No. 26, which reads:

> The discussion under the motion must not raise any question which, according to the standing orders of the house, can only be debated on a distinct motion under notice.

It may not be easy to draw the line, but I think hon. members should keep away from proposals which can only be raised by substantive motion, and certainly that is the category in which excise tax amendments fall. No excise tax change can be made without a substantive motion. While I do not say one cannot refer to what may be the cause of unemployment, I do ask hon. members to keep the debate as narrowly on track as possible, appreciating that we are interrupting the ordinary routine of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think Your Honour will agree at once that I have been scrupulous in my presentation with regard to the matter I have raised.

An hon. Member: Except by inference.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend may not like this, but we recall that when we were sitting over there, procedures such as this were used on a number of occasions, and the Prime Minister was always foremost in those projects.

The fact is, as I have stated, that we were confronted with this situation. Lay-offs were forecast on Friday by the heads of the three companies, the largest employers in the automobile industry. The Ford Motor Company of Canada had in the previous week laid off 2,400 workers, giving as the reason the matter which Your Honour has suggested we cannot deal with directly but which Your Honour said we have the right, as mature men and women in this house, to take note of, particularly if it is possible to have stories going out in the paper, as appear tonight, that the government proposes tomorrow to take action on the very matter about which we are complaining now.

The story has gone out that E.H. Walker, chairman of General Motors of Canada, said the Oshawa plant would be shut down Monday and Tuesday and that all overtime work would be eliminated immediately. Chrysler Corporation of Canada said production will be suspended next week pending clarification of a rumoured reduction in the excise tax. More than 16,000 workers will be affected by the lay-offs at these three companies. Chrysler in a statement said the production cuts were scheduled when—and then they go on to state something which is objectionable as far as this particular debate is concerned, but which hon. members will have in their minds.

The effect of this report, the published account states, has been to bring a complete halt to the shipment of cars from Canadian manufacturers to the dealers. And then the General Motors president said a decision concerning further shutdowns will be made as soon as more is known about the government's specific policy.

That being the situation, having in mind the Prime Minister's assurance that if he were elected parliament would be called in September and he would resolve this problem, and that by a deliberate policy either involving reduction or elimination he would provide the kind of stimulus needed—

Mr. Green: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Again the hon. member for Essex East is back on his one point which deals with excise tax. I submit he is out of order in proceeding along that line.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I cannot go along with the hon. minister that far. I have indicated my view that proposals with respect to tax cannot be made in a debate of this kind, but I do not think I can prevent an hon. member discussing what he may think to be a cause of unemployment if he wishes to relate that to tax.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this matter is not a mystery, as hon. gentlemen opposite know perfectly well what is concerned. I should have thought that the Prime Minister would point out that there are difficulties—and as a former member of the government I understand that there are difficulties—but to take a position as he has done today that no hon. member has a right or a duty in face of this situation to raise a matter of this sort is, I submit, not in accordance with what I have always understood to be the attitude of the right hon. gentleman toward an hon. member's obligations.

The Prime Minister knows that this situation of unemployment in the automobile industry can be cured tomorrow if this government would simply make an announcement one way or another as to the course it proposes to follow with regard to a matter which is agitating not only the automobile industry but thousands of workers all over the country who are indirectly—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): What matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member asks: "what matter"? The matter of the elimination or reduction of excise tax on automobiles.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You asked the question.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): On a point of order, is that not the subject you suggested as not being proper to be discussed at this time? The hon. member has actually mentioned it himself.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly did not intend to rule that no one should mention the matter of excise tax. All I intended to say in drawing this subsection to the attention of the house was that proposals respecting excise tax could not be made in this kind of debate. But as to the effect of the present excise tax or of a change in the excise tax as has been suggested; I do not see how that could be excluded from a debate on this issue, if you are going to accept the proposition that it has some bearing on the automobile industry.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I ask Your Honour to consider this: it is not possible, in my submission, for Your Honour to pursue the narrow line which, I believe in all fairness, you are trying to pursue. As I understand it, you ruled that although an hon. member may mention excise tax and its bearing on the situation, he may not make specific proposals with regard to the excise tax.

May I point out, however, that the only way in which excise tax can be discussed in general is by raising the most direct inference that the government should act now with regard to this tax. That is what the hon. member for Essex East has been seeking so assiduously to avoid; he has been trying hard to avoid falling into that hole, while always suggesting what the government's proposals should be.

My point is this, Mr. Speaker: That discussion is entirely out of order because the government would be committing the most deliberate breach of the constitutional rules if it gave any indication of its intentions with regard to excise tax.

Mr. Pickersgill: The rest of us have to be gagged.

Mr. Fulton: I have heard my hon. friend in the government of which he was a member many, many times give us what I thought was a correct answer although we did not always like it—

Mr. Stick: Now you are changing your tune.

Mr. Fulton: I never said it was incorrect; namely that the government's intentions with regard to the budget and with regard to taxation measures will be announced to the house when the government's decision has been made.

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend is not in the government any longer.

Mr. Fulton: What my hon. friends are asking the government to do is to say what are its intentions with regard to excise tax. My hon. friend would, of course,—and quite properly so—be the very first to raise the loudest outcries of outrage if we did indicate at this stage what were our intentions with regard to the excise tax. The Prime Minister has gone as far as the leader of the government can go in saying that it is intended to introduce taxation measures as soon as possible. Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that while it may be very pleasant for hon. members opposite to indulge in this skating exercise, the fact of the matter is they are out of order and they know they are out of order. What has taken place so far, Mr. Speaker, I submit to you with respect, proves to us all that the whole debate is out of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the point of order which has been raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton). I am not absolutely sure what his point of order is unless he is contending that Your Honour made a wrong ruling when you permitted this debate to take place. I hope that is not the burden of what the Minister of Justice just said. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that what you have a right to deny in this debate is the right of the government to announce in advance any changes that it proposes to present to parliament, changes which may be made tomorrow, according to tonight's papers, or maybe later on. But as for the right of members of the house who are not members of the government to urge, as a means of eliminating unemployment or for other reasons, that there be tax changes, I suggest that that right has been exercised in the past.

I have vivid recollections of some motions of my own having to do with the deductibility of medical expenses for income tax purposes, the deductibility of trade union dues for income tax purposes and other matters which were proposed in motions of that kind on this side of the house, and which were supported by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and others. The Liberals, who were then over on that side of the house, did not object to our having the debate, did not object to our making the request. What they did object to—

Mr. Sinclair: We said you could debate them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The member for Coast-Capilano was one of those who used to say: "You can debate this, boys, but we cannot tell you the answer because this is a secret until the budget is announced".

I submit that is the position. It may seem unfair that the members of the cabinet have certain facts which they cannot give to the house until they are ready to do so, but I submit it is perfectly in order for members of the House of Commons to urge as a means of eliminating unemployment, or for any reason, that there be tax changes. We might suggest something that would elicit from the government what their intentions are and I hope we can. But if they stand on their rights and insist it is their right to refuse to answer, there is nothing we can do about it. But I submit that hon. members opposite, the Minister of Public Works, the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) and the Minister of Justice, should just think back in the recesses of their memories to a few short months ago and recall how often on this side of the house they tried to get information as to the government's intentions regarding tax changes.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Not in this way.

Mr. Pickersgill: No?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Conservatives when they were in opposition perhaps did not do it by means of using standing order 26, but I can think of other means that were more effective. The Conservatives voted several times for my motion to allow all medical expenses to be deductible for income tax purposes. That was a request to the then Liberal government and on one occasion the house voted for it.

Mr. Sinclair: Only for consideration of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I accept the word of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano that consideration was asked for by this side of the house, and on one occasion the house voted for it and we still did not get it. As to what the government's intentions are it looks to me as though we have an indication of it in the newspapers tonight. It has gone all over Canada that there is to be an announcement tomorrow, and that—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is departing somewhat from the point which he raised, which was as to the extent that a discussion of excise taxes would be permissible. As I understand the argument of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), it is that unemployment in the industry is in some way related to uncertainty about taxation and it seems to me that is a perfectly proper course to pursue on this motion. I see nothing in the course that has been followed thus far to compel the government to do anything that would be a breach of its responsibilities with respect to taxation. After all, it is the responsibility of the government to decide on and to introduce the appropriate resolution when it wishes to make changes in taxation and it is not compelled by anything that has taken place here to abdicate its responsibilities. Perhaps I have got myself into a rather untenable position in trying to say that you can discuss excise taxes in their relationship to unemployment in the automobile industry and not discuss the rate of taxation. I shall probably have to abandon that position. I do ask hon. members to keep themselves as far as they can on the subject of unemployment in the automobile industry.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the house generally is disposed to assist Your Honour in the discharge of your heavy obligations. The point that has been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre it seems to me is a valid one. It is one that I did not press because I recognized the position in which Your Honour was, but now that it has been pressed and a clarification has taken place the situation, of course, is that much easier. But my own observations were made in answer to a question by the Postmaster General. He was the one who asked me to state how this particular problem could be corrected, and he himself raised a point of order because I replied to the question which he himself had asked me.

Now, the situation clearly is this. No one has the right to tell the government what its taxation policy should be. We have the right to argue, or to urge, that we believe a particular course should be followed but it is up to the Minister of Finance to declare the government's financial policy. Surely, it is the right of any member of parliament, speaking for a group of constituents who he believes need government attention and assistance, to lay before the government and before parliament what he conceives at the particular moment will be the most effective remedy. There can be no doubt about that.

I referred at the beginning to the promises made by this government during the course of the last election; and that the uncertainty, the stagnation, in the automobile industry dates from the promises made by the right hon. gentleman, the Prime Minister, who led the people of Canada and the industry to believe that once he got into office there would be changes made immediately in the excise tax and that those changes would remove the lack of sales and consequential unemployment.

If that is the situation since the ninth day of May when the right hon. gentleman made this promise in the city of Windsor, there have been a whole series of intervening observations and actions by the government in one form or another that have only added to this uncertainty. The Minister of Finance during the course of the summer, when the Prime Minister was at the prime ministers' conference, clearly indicated in a Canadian Press dispatch that there would be reductions of taxes as well as certain other modifications in existing legislation. That statement caused everyone in Canada to believe that at the earliest opportunity there was going to be a reduction or elimination of the excise tax which in its origin, Mr. Speaker, is a war tax, a tax imposed by previous administrations as a war measure.

Mr. Nowlan: So is the sales tax.

Mr. Sinclair: You are going to remove that too, you say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is another matter. In 1952 the excise tax on automobiles was 25 per cent. That tax was reduced from 25 per cent to 15 per cent, and in 1955 the tax was reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. It is significant that when confronted with the very kind of situation that now confronts the government of the day my leader, the former prime minister, in speaking of this tax pointed out that it had been reduced on two occasions and with reference to the period from January 1 until May 9, the day that the present Prime Minister made his promise with regard to the excise tax, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) went on to point out that in the first quarter of the present year sales of new cars in Canada were up by 18 per cent and that on that account he did not feel that the retention of the 10 per cent excise tax was a discouragement to employment at that time. But these are the significant words which my leader added. He said:

> To those who inquire whether there is a possibility of a further adjustment of the excise tax, I can only answer that should it become evident that sales were being adversely affected and that the benefit of a further adjustment would be passed on to the buying public, this new aspect of the situation would naturally have to be carefully considered.

But that situation is not the situation that now confronts us. Sales are down. When the Leader of the Opposition made that statement last June in the city of Windsor he had the background of an 18 per cent increase in sales for the first quarter of this year over the previous year. Now sales have gone down to a perilous point. According to the announcement the Chrysler and Ford plants will be completely shut down tomorrow or the next day and General Motors is now shut down, let alone the many allied plants of all kinds associated in one way or another with the automobile industry, parts plants and so on. They obviously will be affected.

Whether or not it is just that the automobile manufacturers should have taken this action, I do not comment. I simply say that whether or not it is just the fact before the house is that men are out of work because their employers believe that the uncertainty of government policy is responsible for this situation. All that we ask the government to do today is to give an indication at once of its intentions. It can do that. The government does not need to wait until it brings in its budget. In view of the emergent situation, the Prime Minister can rise right now and say that as of this day the tax shall be reduced to a certain percentage or it shall be completely eliminated. That course has been followed before in an emergent situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just do not recall but I do know—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All right. My hon. friend—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let me ask my hon. friend—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking you to answer that question. When was that done?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is perfectly justified in asking that question and after the dinner recess I will give him the answer. Let me ask my hon. friend this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the Prime Minister know of any constitutional reason why he cannot do that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have asked a question. Does my right hon. friend know of any constitutional reason why he cannot, in order to correct this situation, rise in his place now and make a statement? I am not saying he should be pressed if his government has not considered the matter but if it has I ask him why he should not rise in his place and say that the government is going to or it is not. Remove this uncertainty. That is all we are asking.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise. That suggestion would make the biggest caricature of responsible government in this country, and my hon. friend knows that. I repeat what I said earlier, that all of this is simply subterfuge on his part.

Labour Conditions

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to let my hon. friend get away with the remark that this is subterfuge.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what it is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to ask the Prime Minister to withdraw those words. There is nothing in my whole public life—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw! Withdraw!

Mr. Martin (Essex East):—that would warrant any hon. gentleman saying that I resort to subterfuge. I am interested in the welfare of my constituents and I ask the Prime Minister to withdraw that remark.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the hon. member has taken offence at the word "subterfuge". While it is certainly not a word that one plays with, it is not to my mind one that should not be used to describe a course of conduct in the house and I must say I cannot ask the Prime Minister to withdraw the statement he has made.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Is it not a fact that every time excise tax changes are made they are made on the introduction of a notice of motion by the finance minister and become effective at that moment or at midnight that night—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —subject to later approval by parliament? Is there anything out of keeping in that practice, which has been followed across the years, with the concept of responsible government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is, of course, right. That has happened repeatedly. However, there is one good case I do not have directly in mind at the moment but I will show it to the Prime Minister after dinner because I was reviewing it with others before the sitting commenced at 2.30. Incidentally, I will not pursue my objection. His Honour has said that the word "subterfuge" is not unparliamentary. I bow to Your Honour's ruling in this particular, but I should have thought that the Prime Minister, the leader of the house, would be the last man in the world to use that kind of remark towards any other hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sinclair: He is a master of it himself.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Subject to the reservation I made, namely if the government has considered the matter, the right hon. gentleman could rise today and make a statement. If that is not the case I appreciate that he should not be asked to do so but if that is the situation there is nothing to preclude him, if he thought it desirable, from rising in his place, or possibly one of his ministers, and saying that effective as of this date, so that no advantage can be taken from the announcement, the situation will be such and such, that there will be nothing done or that something will be done.

It stands to reason that in the face of the situation that confronts us since the promise made by the Prime Minister on the 10th of May the public were perfectly justified in the expectations that they had that there would be elimination or reduction of this tax as a means of stimulating sales, as a means of maintaining employment at a level higher than it was a few days ago.

Now, I suspect that if the hon. gentleman replies he will say that the member for Essex East has given his case away already because the hon. member referred to the fact that when I made this promise there were 7,000 men out of work in Windsor. There were 7,000 men out of work as I have indicated, but my hon. friend will not be on strong ground unless he looks back over the record of employment in the automobile industry in the past decade and he will find that employment in the automobile industry was at its highest level during the time when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. St. Laurent) was Prime Minister of this country.

An hon. Member: Because no cars were produced during the war.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): During the war and long after the war. When I came into this house, and the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) can bear me out in this as can other hon. members, in 1935 over 60 per cent of the people in the community were on relief and had been on relief for a period of over three years. The amount of employment in our city and in the neighbouring communities was proportionate. This situation has never been the rule since.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the hon. member a question? Will the hon. member explain what happened to the automobile industry in Windsor on November 22, 1956, when there were approximately 7,000 people unemployed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): During the whole period there have been men out of work. Since my hon. friend comes from Oshawa he knows better than any other member sitting on that side the nature of the automobile industry. During the past decade there have been periods of two or three months when there have been these loads of unemployed.

What we are pointing out today is that not only is there unemployment but the plants have been closed down. What is the reason for that? Allegedly the reason is the unwillingness of this government, in spite of the fact that we have been sitting here since October 14, to declare its policy. All we ask is that—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Someone says "Nonsense". Apparently that is the level of the contribution made by that hon. gentleman. We are discussing a very important matter. I ask the government to state its policy unequivocally so that we can ascertain the extent to which this particular policy of taxation is responsible for this situation.

Before I resume my seat I want to inform the government that it will not only be enough, as a means of stimulating sales in the present situation or as a means of stimulating employment, for the government to take a positive step either by way of reduction or elimination of the tax, but if the government is going to stimulate buying power, if it is going to stimulate sales, if it is going to maintain employment, then if a tax reduction does occur the government must see that reduction is passed on to the consuming public. I realize that there are difficulties in that. It will not satisfy this situation if the price of cars should go up, taking advantage of this particular situation.

Now, that did happen on one occasion when a reduction was made. When the reduction was made from 25 per cent to 15 per cent that reduction was not passed on to the consumer and the advantage that could have flowed from that reduction by way of stimulating sales was not provided.

Mr. Nowlan: Was it passed on to the dealer?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think there were some difficulties at that time.

Mr. Nowlan: What about the reduction from 15 per cent to 10 per cent, was that passed on?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend has raised a very important point. The other day I asked the Minister of Finance if there were elimination of or a reduction in the tax, would he satisfy the dealer as to his liability when the tax changes were announced. The Minister of Finance did give a statement which should have satisfied the dealers, but unfortunately the statement was clouded with a whole series of parentheses and reservations that made it difficult to follow. I think it would be desirable, even now, for the government to make an unequivocal statement, as the minister of finance did last May when the policy of the government with regard to the tax in so far as the dealers were concerned was announced. If those things are done, and if the government states its position as quickly as possible one way or the other, I am sure it will help to mitigate the severity of this situation.

We have used strong words today on both sides, largely because we all recognize what unemployment means in our society. We are faced with a situation in the country which in this particular debate I am precluded from mentioning, but this is part of the whole unemployment problem. It is one that must be faced and it is one which, in this particular instance, can be faced by a government which, on the eve of the election, was courageous and positive. We are simply asking for the development of a similar attitude that is positive and a character that is courageous, so that we can deal with a situation which has arisen long after the election.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I rise to support the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). I feel that the debate this afternoon was fully justified. I think that in the automobile industry, with growing unemployment, there was a great deal of misgiving as to what the future would be. I want to say to the government that this situation has arisen, like other situations might arise, first of all because of the failure to call parliament early enough. There may have been good reasons why the government did not call parliament early enough, but certainly one of the reasons for the present situation is that parliament was not called sufficiently early to deal with these problems. The second reason is this. I would remind my hon. friends of the Liberal party that when we moved an amendment in reply to the address we regretted that inflation and unemployment were not mentioned in the speech from the throne. My Liberal friends did not support us in that contention in supporting the amendment which we moved.

However, this situation has arisen because of another reason. The other reason is we have had no budget. If we had had a budget then a matter of this description would have been properly dealt with and properly decided. This doubt that has arisen in the public mind and in the mind of the industry which is resulting in such disastrous unemployment in Windsor, in Oshawa, in Hamilton would not have arisen. The results are being felt in St. Catharines, Welland, Brantford and other cities in this province because they are largely dependent on the automobile industry in the manufacturing of parts, tires and other equipment for the automobile industry. Brantford, for example, has taken a trimming over the years because of the fall of agricultural prices. Now, of course, those citizens will feel the pinch again because of unemployment and lay-offs in the automobile industry. When I was in Brantford two or three weeks ago I was told by the mayor that not so many years ago there were 15,000 men employed in the agricultural implement industry in that city. When I was there three weeks ago there were 7,000 employed in that same industry, and some of them had been transferred from the agricultural industry to manufacturing parts for automobiles.

One can see, therefore, that this matter is not the concern only of Essex East. This does not concern only Windsor; it does not concern only Oshawa or Hamilton, it concerns a very large number of other places in this country today. In view of the dangerous level to which unemployment has already risen in Canada, the fact that this confusion has arisen over whether or not the excise tax is going to be reduced from 10 per cent to 5 per cent or is to be wiped out is an aggravation of that unemployment situation.

So I am rising this afternoon to support the contention of the hon. member for Essex East. But there again, in view of the financial situation and in view of the position of other industries in this country, I think the question of whether taxes are to be lowered or raised, whether through income tax reductions more purchasing power is given whereby people may buy more things to help alleviate the unemployment situation and whether this tax is going to be reduced or eliminated, should be included in a review of the financial situation in this country by means of a budget. I do not think it is satisfactory for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to rise in his place perhaps tomorrow or next week and make some announcement.

I want to say to the government that I do not know how the rumour got abroad that a reduction was going to be made in the excise tax. Whether or not there was a leak, I do not know. But because that story appeared in a paper that is regarded as being very close to the present administration, namely the Toronto Telegram, great credence was given to it. There may be other factors in this situation also, of which some of us may not be unaware. When the story appeared in the press it may have alerted the automobile industry. The management and the owners of the automobile industry might have considered that at last they had been handed a very good lever by means of which to get rid of this tax and to put the government thoroughly on the spot in relation to it. I do not think we can discount that possibility. But whether or not that was the intention of the management, it is not the management that will suffer. It is the workers in the industry who are going to suffer.

As far as I am concerned, I am not interested in the high profits of General Motors, Ford or Chrysler or in the payment of big bonuses to the management of those automobile organizations. I am interested in the condition of the men and women who work in that industry. They are out of work today and are threatened with more unemployment unless something is done. I recall that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in his radio address on November 8 deprecated our talking about unemployment, said that warning of the dangers of unemployment was a dangerous course to follow and one which, he suggested, could lead to a depression.

We are not suggesting that the unemployment in this one industry is leading to a recession or depression but we are concerned with the general condition across the country. The more unemployment we have in the automobile industry, the larger are the figures which are already startling. The statistics that we have indicate the seriousness of the problem, to which unemployment in the automobile industry is adding. Unplaced applicants in October of this year, 1957, according to the latest figures, numbered 280,000 compared with 160,000 a year ago, a figure higher than the figure in October, 1954 when we were entering the bad winter of 1954-55. Of course it was not an opposition member who predicted that if unemployment continued to develop as it has been developing by the spring of next year we might have 750,000 people seeking work across this country. It was said by an official of the government. At a time when we are all worried over the condition of the working people in the various industries in this country this situation develops and I say that the government should clear it up and do so as rapidly as possible.

I blame the government for not bringing down a budget this autumn and allowing the people of Canada to know precisely what the financial condition of this country is, what the new taxation proposals were, whether they intend to reduce certain taxes, including income taxes, raise the exemption or what-have-you, in order that more purchasing power might be put in the hands of the people to help to buy the goods that industry is producing. Because those goods cannot be sold unemployment is developing in those industries. As far as the automobile industry is concerned, probably sales were dropping. I think the automobile industry in this country—and we are not discussing that industry except in so far as it affects unemployment—has gone crazy in the production of comparatively high priced cars.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The point is this. I am open to correction if I am wrong. The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) asked and obtained leave of the house, through you, Mr. Speaker, to make that motion. As far as I am aware, no motion has yet been made. He was to make a motion to adjourn the house for the purpose of discussing an important matter. No motion has yet been made.

An hon. Member: Yes; there was.

Mr. Sinclair: He moved the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): I would suggest to the hon. member for Essex East that he should make his motion. As long as there is no motion before the house, we have nothing to discuss.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I gave way to the hon. gentleman but may I say that there is a motion before the house. The motion is that the house adjourn to discuss a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Fulton: May I speak to the point of order for a moment?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: As I recall the matter quite clearly, when the hon. member for Essex East raised the matter he sent to Your Honour a statement of the matter he wished to discuss but he made no motion in writing—

Mr. Sinclair: Yes; he did.

Mr. Fulton: —and he handed him no motion. I will ask Your Honour whether you have before you a motion to adjourn signed by the hon. member for Essex East and seconded by another hon. member. I understood Your Honour to say that you had no motion but merely a statement of the matter proposed to be discussed. I point out that the hon. member made no motion while he was on his feet. I point out that the hon. member, having concluded his speech, is debarred from rising. I suggest that there is no question before the house and that the house must proceed to the matter which was interrupted when the hon. member raised it about 3.30 o'clock.

Mr. Sinclair: Closure.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I speak to the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I should like to hear the point of order discussed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry to interrupt the very interesting speech made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) but he will understand that it is only owing to the remarks made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Coldwell: I gave way.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Justice said—and perhaps this is a new form of closure—that I would not have the right to speak.

Mr. Fulton: No. I said the hon. member would not have the right to make a motion.

Mr. Speaker: May I hear the hon. member on the point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite right, Mr. Speaker. I could not resist taking up the challenge.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member is misinterpreting my remarks as usual. He is so confused about procedure that he cannot understand anything rightly.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Justice who is now a great lawyer and the most lucid member in the house can say these things. I acknowledge the superior quality of his intellect.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, standing order 26 is quite clear. The first section thereof reads as follows:

> 26. (1) Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance must be asked after starred questions on Wednesdays and on other days after the ordinary daily routine of business, standing order 15 (2), has been concluded.

We have done that today. Then here is a pertinent thing which the Minister of Justice obviously has not done and that is to read the relevant standing order which is as follows:

> (2) The member desiring to make such a motion rises in his place,—

I think the Minister of Justice will admit that I did that, at least.

> —asks leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance,—

And I think the Minister of Justice, who now nods his head, acknowledges that I did that.

—and states the matter.

I have stated the matter. It did not have to be stated in the motion.

Mr. Fulton: You forgot to move the motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, I did not. The only motion is "I move the adjournment of the house". That is the only motion before His Honour. Then you state why you move it, state the matter. Then subsection 3 is clear:

(3) He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker,—

That I did. I handed the Speaker a written statement which is not in the form of a motion. Standing order 26, I submit, is so clear that not even the Minister of Justice would be tripped by its reading.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out that subsection 5 of rule 26 reads as follows:

(5) Except with the requisite leave or support, the motion cannot be made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fulton: What my hon. friend did first was quite proper. He asked leave to move a motion to adjourn the house. The house gave him leave but my hon. friend neglected to make this motion, which shows how much seriousness he attached to the subject matter that he sought to bring before the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, because my hon. friend made this very clear from the words of his motion which Your Honour read out and which were not the usual words which would have been: "I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance". No, my hon. friend knew better; he departed from the time-honoured custom and therefore there is no motion. What I am pointing out is that thereby he did not realize that he was not making a motion; he could have corrected his error had he, during the course of his speech or at the conclusion of his speech, sent to Your Honour a motion, signed by himself and seconded by another member, that the house be adjourned.

Mr. Chevrier: He had already done that.

Mr. Fulton: But unless Your Honour corrects me, I think the situation is that you have no motion before you signed by the hon. member for Essex East and seconded by another hon. member without which there can be no motion. During the course of his speech he said he was going to beg leave to move the adjournment of the house but he did not do so. I submit there is, therefore, no motion before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member wish to speak again on his point of order?

Mr. Sinclair: I barely started and the hon. the Minister of Justice interrupted me—

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): If I may, Mr. Speaker,—I was interrupted in the first place. I appreciate the support of the Minister of Justice, but I would like to say that I was very careful from the time when the member for Essex East began to speak until he had finished to watch the proceedings most closely all the way through and that is why I raised the question and brought it to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice. There has been no motion moved in this house so far as I am aware. The hon. member for Essex East has been granted the leave of this house to make his motion but, up to the present time, he has not made it. Perhaps there is still an opportunity for him to do so.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): And then after the motion is put there can be a vote taken upon it at a later time.

Mr. Speaker: Technically I think the basis for the point of order is correct for, as I recall the sequence of events which the Clerk confirms to me, the hon. member did receive the leave of the house by 20 members rising in their places, as is required, although no formal motion was made after that. Therefore, technically the point of order is properly taken but it is, of course, taken somewhat after the event and I have not been advised as to what would be the consequences of accepting the point of order at this time. I think a point of order is properly taken at the time when it arises and when it is possible to deal with it.

Mr. Fulton: Will you hear argument, Mr. Speaker, on this point?

Mr. Speaker: Well, yes. I am in difficulties on this and I would like to hear what would be the consequences of accepting the point of order at this time.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I think you will recall I still have the floor.

Mr. Fulton: I think, Your Honour, it was necessary to let some few moments go by after the hon. member for Essex East had completed his speech, because until he had sat down and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar had taken the floor no one could be certain that the hon. gentleman was through and that he did not intend to, or would refrain from, moving a motion. After he allowed the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to proceed with his speech for some few minutes it became perfectly obvious that the hon. member for Essex East did not in fact intend to move the motion and it then became appropriate for the hon. member who raised the point of order so to do. I submit, therefore, that the point of order was raised at the first moment at which it could be raised; that is to say, at the first moment when it was certain that the hon. member for Essex East did not in fact intend to present the motion.

Now as to the consequences of accepting the point of order, I suggest it is simply that there is no question before the house and therefore the subject matter sought to be raised by the hon. member for Essex East is no longer before the house and that the house revert to the position on the order paper at which it stood when the hon. member sought leave to make his motion, which motion he refrained from making.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, while it may be true that the hon. member for Essex East did not move the motion he did give notice that the motion was to be moved. Mr. Speaker, would you accept the motion from me? I move that the house adjourn so that we may discuss this urgent matter of public importance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have heard enough about this point in order to be able to deal with it effectively, and I hope to the satisfaction of the house. Actually the point was well taken but the house proceeded—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly.

Mr. Speaker: —on the basis that a motion was before it and it tacitly gave unanimous consent to any irregularity which proceeded. If the point had been raised immediately it could have been dealt with and resolved. A member is free to rise and make a point of order at the time but I do not see how, after an hour and a half of debate on a motion supposedly before the house, we can then revert to the earlier position. It would lead to complete confusion in debates.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): May I say something more on this point—

Mr. Speaker: No, I have ruled and that is the end of it, unless the house chooses to challenge my ruling.

Mr. Coldwell: I suggest the matter could be put in order by my moving the motion, but if you do not wish me to do so—

Mr. Speaker: No, I think that would be piling irregularity upon irregularity. I think the members should proceed with the debate.

Mr. Coldwell: What I was proceeding to say when I was interrupted by the point of order, Mr. Speaker—which point of order was properly taken, I might say, and I have no objection to being interrupted on that account because I think in the future those hon. members who want to discuss matters of urgent public importance will see that they fulfil the requirements of the rule book.

I have been a member of this house for 22 years and this is the first time this point has been raised in the manner in which it was raised this afternoon. I do not recall any occasion quite like it. However, the debate has proceeded. I was saying that in view of the growing unemployment situation, the fact that lay-off announcements have been made by the automobile companies indicates how necessary it is for the government to take immediate action to resolve this situation. Mr. Walker, the president of General Motors of Canada, said the Oshawa plant will be shut down Monday and Tuesday, that is today and tomorrow and all overtime work will be eliminated immediately. This will mean that some 16,400 men in Oshawa alone will be affected, apart altogether from the McKinnon industries at St. Catharines and the other industries making parts for General Motors plant at Oshawa and which as I have said spread right out into the country.

Chrysler did the same thing and said:

> —the production cuts were scheduled when "widely-circulated but unsubstantiated news reports stated that a reduction in the excise tax is imminent. The effect of this report has been to bring a complete halt to the shipment of cars from Canadian manufacturers to the dealers."

Dealers on another occasion were caught when a sudden reduction was made in the excise tax and no adequate compensation was provided for the losses they sustained thereafter. I remember, in travelling around my own constituency shortly after the session in which that was done, that I found automobile dealers who were in very difficult circumstances because of the manner in which the reduction in the tax had to be absorbed by the dealers and which the company did not absorb.

To continue my quotation the president of General Motors said:

> A decision concerning further shutdowns will be made as soon as more is known about the government's specific plan regarding excise tax costs.
> Ford said it will continue with its early cutback program and plans no further reductions because of the decision of the other two companies.

And since that time Mr. Clifford Pilkey, president of Local 222, United Automobile Workers said that:

> Protests have been sent to Finance Minister Fleming and Labour Minister Starr.
> It is really peculiar that a company which has been hiring so many extra men recently should close down because of newspaper reports or other information that the excise tax is to be reduced.
> Mr. Pilkey said: "General Motors have reacted like the stock market would to General Eisenhower's illness."

That is true, as I said earlier. I think that probably the management of some of these companies are very anxious indeed to use this as a lever to get rid of a tax for whose elimination they have been asking for some considerable time. As I say, while I have no sympathy with the people who have been receiving large bonuses—with the executives of these corporations—I have every sympathy for the men and women who are perhaps being used as pawns in an endeavour to get rid of a tax. I hope the government will make an announcement. There is only one thing for the government to do now; it has been put squarely on the spot, and it must announce either that the tax has been reduced to 5 per cent or that it has been eliminated altogether.

Mr. Sinclair: Abolished. That is what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Coldwell: They tell me that the Prime Minister promised to eliminate the tax. I did not hear it. I know that the members of the official opposition keep very close tabs on what the Prime Minister says, and so do we, but I did not hear of that statement.

Mr. Sinclair: On May 29 in Oshawa.

Mr. Coldwell: In Oshawa?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not correct. At no time directly or indirectly, did I say that. What I said was—and I repeated it throughout the campaign—that this tax had an effect and that consideration should be given to its reduction in any event.

Mr. Sinclair: That is not the way the Ottawa Citizen reported you on May 30.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not responsible for that.

Mr. Sinclair: You certainly did not correct it and say it was untrue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, well.

Mr. Sinclair: You said it would be abolished.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into an argument about something on which I am uncertain, so I will leave the former minister of fisheries and the present Prime Minister to argue the matter out. I am not going to get between two fires. We in the C.C.F. party occasionally do that, and usually it is not to our benefit.

Mr. Pearkes: What book is that?

Mr. Sinclair: A book of newspaper cuttings. You will be hearing plenty about it.

Mr. Coldwell: My point is that because of the unemployment situation which has arisen, and because of the reports which have appeared in the papers, the government should make some immediate announcement and say either that it is going to do nothing with regard to this tax or that it is going to eliminate it altogether. If the government is going to reduce it by 5 per cent, as the newspaper reports indicate, it should make a speedy announcement. I ask this not on behalf of the shareholders or the management of the industry but on behalf of the working men and women whose jobs in that industry are adversely affected, and on behalf of many men and women in other parts of Canada whose livelihood and employment would be affected if this question is not settled immediately. Of course, this question is not limited to those directly concerned with the industry itself, it stems back to the steel industry, because rolled steel is used largely in the automobile industry, and some of our steel plants are looking for outlets for their rolled steel and so on.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter. The hon. member for Essex East was well advised to bring this matter up today, and I am hopeful that we shall get an announcement from the government. I would remind the Prime Minister that on one occasion a former minister of finance made an announcement not in this house but over the radio, and that announcement was approved later on by this House of Commons by the other place and, thereby, by the parliament of Canada. So I appeal for an immediate announcement as to what the government intends to do, either to continue the tax, which I hope it will not do, reduce it to 5 per cent or, better still, eliminate it altogether.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) is not here and I am prepared to say a few words in connection with this debate. We have heard today, and we are well aware of the fact, that the problem of unemployment is of nationwide concern. The cities of Windsor and Hamilton have been mentioned, in which places there are a large number of people who work in the automobile industry and who are now out of employment. I understand that approximately 16,000 people are affected. This is a very serious situation. It is not only the workers in this industry who are affected but other people as well who rely directly and indirectly upon the industry for a livelihood.

I personally have received a telegram from various members of the Penticton motor dealers association, which telegram urges me to do everything possible to arrange protection for dealers who have new automobiles in stock and en route in the event a reduction in tax is decided upon. It suggests that there should be a plan whereby dealers could be assured of a rebate on all new cars on hand unsold and unused at the time of the change.

As I said before, this matter is of very serious concern to the nation, and it would seem that the government should at this time declare its intention one way or the other whether the present excise tax is to stay as it is or to be reduced. In addition, I would say further that ever since the house opened on October 14 last questions have been asked by members of the opposition parties as to when the government proposes to bring down a budget and so far there is no indication one way or the other in that respect. I feel that we as members of parliament should know what the nature of the income and expenses is expected to be. Accordingly, I urge the government to give every consideration to the problem that is now facing the people of this country.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The matter raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) did not cover the whole panoply of unemployment but was specifically directed toward unemployment in certain industries. He referred more or less euphemistically to certain things which might be done to correct that situation. Since the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Christian), who has just taken his seat, also made direct reference to the matter of excise tax on automobiles I thought that for a moment or two I should perhaps deal with that situation within the scope of this debate because I know that the hon. gentleman opposite who moved this motion is not one of the Snow White and Seven Dwarfs, living in a state of fantasy, but is dealing specifically with this problem although trying to keep within the rules by avoiding any direct reference to it.

What is there, Mr. Speaker, that distinguishes this situation from other situations in other years? This parliament met on the 14th day of October. We are now in the second day of December and we have been here for a matter of one month and two weeks. We are told that owing to some delay in making some announcement this country is facing a very serious situation. It is a story, Mr. Speaker, which is not entirely original at this time; it is one which many of us have heard before. What distinguishes it? Can we tell this, from other years? Well, we are told that there was one newspaper story. In other years during which many of us have been here there have been scores of newspaper stories speculating on what might be done by the Minister of Finance on a certain unknown date, in a certain indefinite time in the future, and I do not know that the country went entirely to wrack and ruin because of this large number of newspaper stories speculating on what Speaker, how much importance we can attach to that story, or how much should be attached to the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) as to what use could be made of that story to hold a club over the head of this government at this time? But if any people in this country—certainly not in this house; I would not think of that—think they can use a newspaper story to wield a club over the head of the government, then they are certainly sadly mistaken.

What else are we told? We are told that there is unemployment in the country at the present time, serious unemployment, and that it is a most tragic thing that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has not yet made his announcement with respect to whatever the matter may be to which the hon. member for Essex East made reference this afternoon. Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that the unemployment of one man is a tragedy to that family and the unemployment of 100, 1,000 or 10,000 is a tragedy to all those directly concerned and to many others. It is not for me to deal with unemployment figures. My colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), can deal with those most effectively. But I suggest in all seriousness that to state that the degree of unemployment at this time is such as to compel the government to take action which has never been taken before and make premature disclosures of budget matters is absolutely not being realistic.

When the people who used to be on the other side of the house, some of whom are now on this side, used to talk about unemployment the right hon. gentleman who was seated to the right of where the former prime minister sits tonight used to get up and bark and say, "Have you lost your faith in Canada? I have got faith in Canada." He would deal with the matter in that way. I think he deserved credit for that. Have the car manufacturers of this country lost faith in Canada? Have the car dealers lost faith in Canada? Have hon. gentlemen opposite lost faith in Canada? Surely not. Certainly their record in the past would not suggest that because just before I came downstairs tonight I happened to look up the dates on which budgets were brought down by the preceding administration, particularly for the year 1955 when we did have a very substantial degree of unemployment as the winter went on, in fact, the highest degree in our history.

At that time the then minister of finance reduced the excise tax on automobiles by one-third, bringing it down from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. No disclosure was made. No statement was made. There were no cries to heaven in the newspapers about the threat of a disaster or the complete collapse of a ministry. In 1955 parliament met on the 7th day of January and the buget was brought down on the 5th day of April. January, February and March went by, three months of the greatest unemployment this country had ever known. On the 5th of April the budget was brought down and included in it was a reduction of the excise tax on automobiles by one-third.

Yet it is being suggested here that this government in some way is contributing to unemployment, is creating something of a disaster, by refusing to deal with the matter realistically, by refusing to deal with it prematurely and at the whim and behest of a newspaper story such as that. The matter of tax reduction is, of course, one which is in the hands of the Minister of Finance. He makes the disclosures. He makes his recommendations to the cabinet and then in turn to the House of Commons. In 1957 the house opened on January 8 and the budget was brought down on March 14. In 1956 parliament opened on January 10 and the budget was brought down on March 20, and in 1955, as I said, which was the worst year of all for unemployment, over three months elapsed before the budget was brought down.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that old adage about those who came to scoff remained to pray certainly applies to those who are now in the opposition. When they were in the government they scoffed at the pleas of the then opposition to take some action with respect to those things about which they are now praying. What the government proposes to do with respect to taxation will, of course, be announced by the Minister of Finance at the proper time and in that way we will be following the practice which has been laid down ever since confederation.

I think some special reference should be made to legislation which was passed last year by this parliament. We hear rumours and reports—some people were in my office today—of almost a sit-down strike between the dealers and the manufacturers and that a very serious crisis is developing between them. It is not for us to deal with matters of trade between the people engaged in that tremendous business. I am sure they are competent and able and can solve their own differences.

But when anyone suggests it is the fault of the government that cars are not being shipped out I want to draw the attention of the house to a bill of the preceding government which was passed by parliament this year permitting manufacturers to ship automobiles on consignment to the dealers with the dealers not having to pay excise tax on them until they take title to them after they have made a sale. We were told at that time by the parliamentary assistant to the then minister of finance, and he is still a member of the house, that that was the answer to this problem, that in that way they were going to cure this difficulty. Either they misled the house, misunderstood the legislation or else we are being misled by these hon. gentlemen tonight when they raise this question because that is what we were told last session when this legislation was brought down. It is perfectly possible under that act today to ship cars to any dealer in the country on consignment. The dealer does not take title to them in law until he has arranged his financing, in other words, until he has made his sale, and therefore, according to the words of the parliamentary assistant to the then minister of finance in March of 1957, this problem could be solved very easily.

I do not blame the dealers, Mr. Speaker. The situation goes deeper than that. The fault for this problem, as my hon. friend knows who raised it this afternoon, actually lies with the former government, the government of which he was a distinguished member. That is where the responsibility lies. He told us this afternoon—I do not say boastingly—that his government had reduced the excise tax on automobiles from 25 per cent to 15 per cent and then had reduced it from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. That is perfectly true. But what did they do? They stuck the dealers with the excise tax every time.

We on this side of the house, supported by hon. gentlemen in both corners of the house, urged, pleaded and begged hon. gentlemen opposite when in government to do something about it. They just laughed it off. They said it could not be done and nothing was done. The dealers have made up their minds that they will not be stuck again. It may be that they have forgotten about the consignment act to which I referred a few moments ago but they have been burned twice by our predecessors and they do not realize there is a different government in power which will not stick them again if, as and when reductions are brought in.

In that regard I am in a position to say this. What may be done about reduction of taxation I do not know. It is a matter for the Minister of Finance to make his recommendations to his colleagues in the cabinet and, if approved there, to make his recommendations to parliament and then parliament can approve of them if it sees fit. What his recommendations may be, what they will be, I do not know. But once the recommendations are made it happens to be my responsibility to direct and head up the administration of the Department of National Revenue with its experienced and able officers. I may say, remembering when we sat in opposition and urged the case of the dealers, that I made up my mind that if my colleague the Minister of Finance did reduce the excise tax on automobiles I was not going to be in the position that my predecessor was when he sat here of having to say, "I refuse to do anything for the car dealers."

I was told first that nothing could be done. I asked that the decision be reviewed or considered. I am now satisfied, Mr. Speaker, and I know, after consultation wtih my officers, with the car manufacturers, with the car dealers, the presidents of the associations, the responsible men all across this country, that if—I emphasize again—a tax reduction is made in the excise tax on automobiles, the reduction on that tax will be passed on to the dealers who have cars in their possession at that time. They will not be stuck for them as they have been in the past by preceding governments. So, let us clear this up. Let us get down to facts and realities. Notwithstanding any consignment act or anything else, in the light of the statement I have just made there is no reason why manufacturers cannot start rolling their cars out to dealers tomorrow and have their dealers take possession.

There is nothing further I can say on this matter, Mr. Speaker. I have made the position clear so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned. Although one cannot get too serious about this, I could not help but recall this afternoon the years during which my hon. friend sat with a dour look on his face parrying all the questions we asked about reductions in taxes and now he is worried about the fact that from October 14 to December 2 there has been no announcement made on tax reductions. I really felt sorry for him because I could just imagine the long worrying months and years he spent in trying to implore his colleagues to do something about health insurance, and that took him about seven years.

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Coming as I do from the constituency of Essex West, which comprises chiefly the city of Windsor, that is a great part of the city of Windsor and the township of Sandwich West, I am very vitally concerned with this matter. Unlike the speaker who has just sat down, and who feels he cannot get too serious about this matter, I think it is of very vital concern and one which goes to the very roots of the economic life of the whole of Canada. The automobile industry is not only applicable to those persons who are engaged in the handling and manufacture of automobiles, it goes to all parts of Canada, for most provinces in Canada contribute in some degree towards the manufacturing of automobiles, whether in Windsor, Oakville or Oshawa.

In addition to that, the secondary industries, the feeder plants in various municipalities in Ontario, Quebec, the maritimes and western Canada, are all affected by this matter. It is, therefore, of vital importance. It is something about which we should be most serious. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) has posed a question as to whether we have lost faith in Canada. Certainly we have not lost faith in Canada. If we had lost faith in Canada, we would not be here. I hear a few weak voices, but I do not know what they are saying.

However, I shall answer the question as to whether we have lost faith in Canada. We, in the city of Windsor, have absolute confidence, not only in Canada but in ourselves, to play our part in the economic life of this country. All we are looking for is an opportunity to work and an opportunity to help develop this country. We are no alarmists. We are not pessimists, but we do expect co-operation. We expect co-operation from the government. Although the government may not have confidence in itself, we are willing to give them every opportunity of being of assistance, not only to themselves but to the country as a whole.

For that reason the communities in the Windsor area have formed what is known as the metropolitan committee. It is composed of the mayor and reeves of Windsor, Riverside, Tecumseh, Lasalle, Sandwich East township, Sandwich West township, Sandwich South township, St. Clair Beach and Ojibway. Those are the municipalities comprising the Windsor area. They have formed a committee and have looked into the situation. They find there are approximately 12 per cent of the working force at present unemployed. The matter is most acute, and it is most acute to those persons who are primarily and immediately responsible to the public. These people are not in a position at the present time to pay out the large sums that are necessary for carrying these people. They are not able to set up their budgets for the coming year, and therefore find themselves in great difficulty.

Now, to that end, they are most anxious to co-operate with the government. They are most anxious to get the views of the government, so that they may, if at all possible, be of assistance. They are most anxious to do what is possible to help themselves, and to that end they addressed a letter to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on November 22, asking that they have an opportunity of interviewing him and discussing the matter with him and with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green). So far there has been no answer to that letter. On November 28, I telephoned to the Prime Minister's office. I talked with his secretary and asked him to look up the letter and let me have a word as quickly as possible when we might be able to see the Prime Minister and the other ministers of the government. So far I have not had a reply by telephone from the Prime Minister's office or the other ministers' offices.

I will say that I did have a personal conversation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was most courteous in trying to arrange this. I, not being satisfied, addressed a letter, because this is a matter of vital urgency to those parts of Canada which I represent, to the Prime Minister asking that he arrange an interview with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Public Works so that this matter could be placed before them by the elected representatives from that area. So far I have not had a reply to that letter, neither have I had a reply from the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Public Works. I assume that in due course they will get around to it, and when they do we will be very happy to get their views. If there is anything that we can do to be of assistance we will be most happy to do it.

[Mr. Brown (Essex West).]

This matter has created a great deal of concern in the area which I represent, chiefly I think because of the most extravagant promises that were made prior to the last election and which we understand the government is now trying to fulfil.

We wish them well. We hope they can manage all these things. But in the meantime there are things to be done in our part of the country, things which were started by the previous government and which we think should be carried out.

For instance, there is the addition to the new post office which would provide employment in that area. If it had been proceeded with expeditiously, as had been planned by the previous government, all the buildings would now have been demolished and we would be on our way to construction to relieve a large amount of winter unemployment. There are at present in the Windsor area over 9,000 unemployed. It is therefore a very serious matter, one which affects the whole life of the community and the whole life of that part of the province.

I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to try to get some co-operation out of the government. If there is any possible way in which we may be able to be of assistance in helping ourselves, we should like to know about it. But in the meantime, I would appreciate some action by the Prime Minister and his other ministers with regard to seeing a delegation which has been provided by the metropolitan committee in the Windsor area.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Last March or April, Mr. Speaker, I was sitting in a seat just behind the one I now occupy and the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) I think was about three seats away from me. I can recall the present minister last February, March and April sitting over here, and the way he thought and the way he spoke. I have now listened to him in the last few minutes speak on the motion that is now before you. It had not been my intention to speak but the Minister of National Revenue, under whose department it does not come, raised the question of excise tax, and was not challenged by any member in the house nor by yourself, Mr. Speaker. I therefore assume that that phase of the matter is now before the house. I raise a most interesting situation when we consider that in the last few minutes the man who raised it and who objected to the objections from this side of the house is now the present Minister of National Revenue, under whom it does not come, and who was critical in the past five years that I have known him of anything happening that could upset taxation or employment in Canada and who rose in his righteous wrath against the Liberal government and asked about it.

Mr. Speaker, under the actual term of the motion there is a serious situation of unemployment developing because the men in General Motors, Ford and Chrysler—and I imagine they are paid a great deal of money for their brains—have decided, starting this morning, to stop all overtime and to close their plants part of the week. The Minister of National Revenue who has no responsibility in the matter whatsoever—he has only to collect the money—thinks that those who support this motion are wrong and says that they have no responsibility as a government because 16,000 men are now out of work as a result of what he maintains is a rumour in a newspaper. If my friend the Minister of National Revenue were back on this side of the house where he was five months ago he would be raising hell in the House of Commons about this present situation.

Mr. McIvor: Not around here.

Mr. Winch: But because of that strange metamorphosis which has occurred—16,000 laid off directly and how many indirectly I do not know, because of something in a newspaper—he has gone into a cocoon not only physically but mentally and has atrophied. I mean that, Mr. Speaker. I am going to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Minister of National Revenue that he do not cause a blank in his mind since June 10. I am going to suggest that he remember the principles which I thought he had and which perhaps he thought he had prior to June 10 when he sat on this side of the house. Although he spoke as Minister of National Revenue on a subject that concerns wholly and solely directly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) but perhaps indirectly the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker)—I am going to say that—I suggest even if it were a newspaper supposition, a newspaper guess, it must have been of such importance that the biggest financial and industrial brains of Canada—the heads of General Motors, Chrysler and Ford—have closed their plants.

I am a socialist, Mr. Speaker, I am therefore practical. I admire brains. The brains of General Motors, Ford and Chrysler are not closing their plants and are not laying off 16,000 men directly and perhaps—I will make a guess and I think I cannot be proved wrong—100,000 indirectly on a newspaper rumour. They do not earn their money in that way.

And so we find ourselves in this position: there is something in the mind of this government with respect to the excise tax on cars and there has been a leak from the Department of Finance. If not, let that be stated very definitely in this House of Commons and let us find out why the heads of Ford, General Motors and Chrysler have closed their plants. If this is ever proven, then I am convinced that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker)—because I think he loves integrity as well as I do—will demand the resignation of certain members on his cabinet benches.

If however it is not correct, we are then in the position of trying to understand why some of the greatest financial brains in Canada have taken the action they have in laying off over 16,000 men. These men must go back to work. Now it is correct, and it must be correct, that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance cannot now say what is going to happen if they bring in a budget so far as changes in taxes and excise duties or tax laws are concerned but surely if the Minister of National Revenue is correct in his statement made on the floor of this House of Commons just half an hour ago, that that action has been taken on irresponsible newspaper reports, then there must be some statement which the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance can make to put those men back to work.

If they are not considering taxation changes, then one word from the Prime Minister right now and those men go back to work inside of 48 hours. One word from the Prime Minister now that no decision has been reached on the consideration of the entire taxation and excise duties structure but that there will be an announcement with respect to this matter when the budget is brought in—whenever it is brought in—will put these 16,000 men back to work tomorrow.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, through you, the Prime Minister—no I am going to change that—through you, the Minister of National Revenue who does not know a damn thing about it but through him to the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Winch: No, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of order at all because the Minister of National Revenue knows that although he is the collector of revenue, the taxation from which he collects revenue comes only through the Minister of Finance. Perhaps, therefore, some of the newcomers will consider changing that "order", keep their mouth closed and their ears open, and then they might know more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: O.K., I am sorry; if you want an apology you will get it. I say to the Minister of National Revenue who spoke and to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister, that if the Minister of National Revenue was correct—and I listened to every word he said—that these men who draw between $50,000 and $100,000 a year from General Motors, Ford and Chrysler, have laid off 16,000 men because of what the Minister of National Revenue described as wrong information given by somebody in the press, then could not the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance authoritatively give information to the press from the floor of this house which will put those men back to work and will assure Chrysler, General Motors and Ford that they can go ahead with the production of motor cars? I say this because the Prime Minister must know and he does know—you know I like him—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: It sounds like it.

Mr. Winch: —except for his politics—he must know what he and his government have in mind on this matter; he must know these plants should not be closed and thousands of men put out of work on a mere newspaper rumour which, if not correct, he—with his humanitarian instincts, his love for our Canadian people, his heart bleeding for everybody —must take action as the Prime Minister to correct. I repeat he must correct the situation if the press was wrong.

I have only known the Prime Minister over the past five years, and that was behind the curtain on this side of the house, but I am certain that if he wants to—I think perhaps he does if he can find a way to get a couple of his colleagues out of trouble—he can make a statement without—and this I want to emphasize—divulging any taxation changes. Obviously that could not be done because people would make or lose millions if they knew what changes were to be before they were scheduled. However, in view of the present circumstances I am convinced, knowing the ability and knowing the agility of the Prime Minister, that he can—I am glad he is looking at me—not only can but should do what he can now to clarify the situation without disclosing taxation changes. How honest can I get, sir? Without disclosing taxation changes he can give the necessary confidence to the buyers of cars, that if there are changes going they will be made also in respect to cancelled time; you can give an assurance to those who buy cars now in these and similar circumstances that if and when changes are made it is okay for Chrysler, Ford and General Motors to open up their shops tomorrow morning and put their men back to work.

[Mr. Winch.]

You can do it, Mr. Prime Minister, if you have the will, and I am certain that if you have the will you will not have much trouble in finding a way.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word with regard to this question, and the reason I rise to take part in this debate is that we in western Canada are affected just as acutely by any unemployment situation anywhere in Canada as those in the central provinces.

It does seem very odd that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) should have said today—at least this is my impression of what he said—that the large manufacturers of automobiles in this country should take advantage of a newspaper statement and deliberately close down their plants in order to embarrass the government.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not make that statement. It was made from the other side of the house first. I asked, when I spoke, if that was correct.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would agree with the hon. minister in that case, because I just do not understand how any reliable business organization in this country would do that, and I am sure that Chrysler, Ford and General Motors would not deliberately close down their plants and cause so much undue suffering.

I believe they must have had a very good reason, and I am inclined to think this reason was well founded in that the rumours they have received through the press have some very substantial foundations. I cannot understand any business organization in this country deliberately throwing 16,000 people out of work in Windsor, besides the very many hundreds of people across the country whose affairs are connected with the car manufacturing industry. That would be to undertake a grave responsibility. Not only do I feel concerned about the loss of revenue to the car industries themselves but I am greatly concerned for those people who are now unemployed as a result of these decisions. As I say, it does seem to me that there is a basis for these so-called rumours and therefore, if I were a betting man, which of course I am not, I should think it would be a safe bet that before long the government will come out and announce an excise tax reduction.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Probably tomorrow.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Well, according to the press it is to be tomorrow. Now it would seem to me that because of the serious situation which has arisen, no matter whose fault it is, the people who are unemployed are finding themselves in a bad spot and I think it would be to the credit of the government if the responsible ministers, and particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), would make it clear that there is going to be a tax reduction and that when this tax reduction is made not only would the dealers themselves not lose money but the consumers would not lose as a result of the new tax situation.

It is a well known fact that the car manufacturers are not in the habit of producing cars unless they get orders. Dealers in different parts of Canada and in our own city in our own province do not send in orders to any great extent unless they receive orders from customers. Those orders are then sent to the factory and the cars are put into production. So it can hardly be laid to the blame of the dealers or the factories that production has slowed down, or that they have not gone ahead to produce a lot of cars regardless of the demand. No business man would do this, and the government should be the last to suggest that a manufacturer or a dealer should cause a lot of cars to be produced when nobody has ordered cars. I think it reasonable, too, to suppose that no one is going to order a car in the present uncertain conditions, because a sum of $100, $200 or $300 is involved depending on the price of the car ordered. So it seems to me that from every point of view the blame for the present situation lies entirely upon the government.

How the information got out of the cabinet meeting, I cannot say. Maybe there was no leak; maybe there is going to be no reduction. Or, maybe there was a leak and the tax is going to be reduced. But the fact remains that there are thousands of people out of work because this statement has been made, and I think the government must share the responsibility because they have failed to do what they should have done, namely to bring down a budget and show what these tax proposals are. I do not understand why the government does not do this. Every other government has done it with the exception of the government which came in in 1930 when the late Mr. R. B. Bennett was prime minister. Surely the present government has learned from this lesson that it is proper to bring down a budget.

I sent out a while ago for the Ottawa Citizen and in it I see on the front page the words: "Auto tax decision on Tuesday." Possibly the press is wrong, and there is going to be no such decision, or no decision for some time yet. If that is true the conditions of unemployment which now face us are going to continue for some time to come; not only will the 16,000 people continue to be unemployed, together with all the other hundreds in the country who depend on the car industry, but we are going to have still more unemployment. The announcement goes on to say:

> An announcement is expected from the government this week, possibly tomorrow, on its intention in regard to the excise tax on motor cars.
> Finance Minister Fleming will be back from Florida tonight and in the house Tuesday.

I would suggest this would be a good place for him to be right now. Then the article goes on to say—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Florida would be a good place for him to stay.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): A good place to stay and an enjoyable climate, certainly, although it might not be as hot as it is here. The article goes on to say:

> Lay-offs in the car industry, based on uncertainty regarding the government's intention with regard to the excise tax, are a powerful argument for an announcement of tax reductions even ahead of the presentation of the resolution to the commons authorizing it.

I think that statement is very well put. No matter who is to blame—whether the leak went out from the government intentionally or unintentionally; and I think a lot of these things leak out intentionally for political reasons, but not being a politician in the so-called sense of that term I would not know what it means, but certainly a lot of these things happen accidently on purpose with the result, in this case, that thousands of people are being made to suffer—prompt action should be taken now.

As the newspaper clipping indicates, the government has a responsibility to make that statement now. For the life of me I cannot see why it should hurt them one way or the other. In fact, I think they have everything to gain and nothing to lose and they will save a lot of suffering in this country because it is a very serious thing, particularly for those who are unemployed. As one speaker said a while ago, it may not affect the large industries so much, but it will affect most directly the local dealers in the different centres throughout Canada and it will have the most dire effect on those who are unemployed if their families have to suffer as a result of this policy of the government.

In view of all of these things and the continual rise in unemployment, I suggest to the government that something should be done. I pointed out this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that I had a telegram from Alberta. I have the telegram with me now. It indicates that in the last year, up to November 28, as compared with a year ago, unemployment in our province has doubled. It is probably true that the unemployment figure is not rising as fast as it did in 1954 or 1955 but I think it is true to say that there has never been such a rapid increase in unemployment as there has been in the last few months. That is the alarming thing about it. This thing has come on us so suddenly that it is going to cause terriffic hardship on those who are affected. I would suggest to the government that now is the time to remedy the situation and save those people any more distress.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise principally to comment on some of the remarks made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). I want to start by assuring him that I do not think he is "atrophied in a cocoon". I have known him as an eminent lawyer and as a very competent member of parliament. It is not his intelligence I am going to question but the use he has made of the facts he has at his disposal.

First of all, I wish to congratulate my two colleagues, the hon. members for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and Essex West (Mr. Brown) on taking this parliamentary action in drawing to the attention of parliament and of the country the very serious unemployment occurring in the great motor industry which is centred in their city. It is true that it affects more than the city of Windsor; it affects the other automobile centres of Oshawa, Oakville and Hamilton, but it affects far more than that. It affects every supplier of parts to these great industries right across the country. Every car dealer today has found that his car sales are drying up and he has found it therefore necessary to lay off car salesmen. In my own riding, 3,000 miles from Oshawa and 2,500 miles, I suppose, from Windsor, the car dealers have told me that they are laying off salesmen because nobody is going to buy a car until this situation is cleared up.

I think all of us appreciate the fact that the automobile industry in North America has this problem of recurrent unemployment because of its practice of tuning up annually for new models, and they have to lay off men during that period when new dies are being prepared. The European car manufacturers do not suffer from that problem because they do not change their models as frequently or as completely, and the European car factories have been able to offer more continuous employment than the Canadian or United States manufacturer. It is because of this condition, I think, that the automobile workers union in North America, in both the United States and Canada, have fought so hard for a guaranteed annual wage in the hope that such action would induce the employers to try to spin the employment out over the whole year instead of working overtime for part of the year and no employment at all for other parts of the year. It is precisely because this great industry has this problem of seasonal unemployment that it is so disastrous when unemployment for other causes is forced on them as well.

The present unemployment without question is due to newspaper stories which have flatly asserted during the past week that there is going to be a tax cut of five per cent in the excise tax. We find these stories across the country and without variation. As my friend, the Minister of National Revenue, pointed out, there is always speculation in this field before the government brings down a budget. The newspapers fly kites which suggest that some taxes are going to go up or come down or no change is going to take place. The members of the opposition fly kites and probe around to see whether they can get some indication from the government what changes are going to be made. The government, of course, is bound by the British tradition and British parliamentary secrecy in budget announcements. And that is why in recent years newspaper speculation has covered the field. Some papers have said that taxes are going to come down; other papers have said that taxes are going to go up, and still other papers say that taxes are going to stay as they are. That is the difference in this situation, because all the papers across the country say that this tax is going to be cut five per cent and it is going to be done in this week. I do not say that there has been a leak anywhere. I think a thing like that would be hard to prove; but certainly there has been some indication given when these reputable gentlemen of the press come to a unanimous decision.

I want to point out to the Minister of National Revenue, however, that this situation today is very different from the situation in any of the 17 years that I have been in parliament or in the 12 years that he has been in parliament. This situation has been caused by the cumulative effect of three separate actions taken by the party which is now the government in this house. And these steps in succession have rightly or wrongly created in the public mind the impression that this excise tax on cars is either going to be reduced or abolished. It is because of that feeling which the public has that car sales have dried up. Naturally, no consumer, with the present high price of cars, is going to pay an unnecessarily high price when he thinks that in a week from now the price is going to $100 to $200 lower because of tax cuts. And that drying up of sales, of course, backs up on the dealers, which in turn backs up on the car manufacturers.

Let me trace these three steps in order. The first step was the extravagant election promises made by Conservative speakers across the country, and especially by the right honourable gentleman who is now the Prime Minister. He spoke twice on this matter. I have a very fine booklet here which contains the election promises he made to the Canadian people during the last election. He spoke on May 9 in the great automobile city of Windsor. Naturally, on that occasion, according to the press again, he spoke on the automobile taxes. In the press clippings I have of those Windsor speeches he said that this tax was to be reduced. However, he then moved along to Oshawa, another great car centre, and spoke again some three weeks later, on May 29.

Mr. Nowlan: What is the beautiful coloured volume the hon. member has in his hands?

Mr. Sinclair: It it red in colour for the Liberal party. This is only volume I entitled "Diefenbakers Election Promises". There is a smaller volume which we hope to publish some day which will contain the few of those promises which have been effectuated, to use the Prime Minister's words. We have quotations here, first of all, from the Windsor Star. Pardon me, the first quotation is from the Ottawa Citizen, May 30, which reads:

> John Diefenbaker last night promised that a Conservative government would abolish the excise tax on automobiles and eliminate "in the whole or in the main" all discriminatory excise levies.

The Toronto Telegram, a good Tory sheet, of May 30 had this to say:

> He told the automotive town audience his party would lift luxury taxes from cars because they are "an essential part of public and private transportation. There is no more justification for a luxury tax an automobiles than there would have been for one on the horse and buggy 50 years ago."

Then, in the Ottawa Journal, another good Tory sheet, we find the following:

> In Oshawa, a city of car production, Mr. Diefenbaker said that if he becomes Prime Minister—

And he is.

> —a special fall session of parliament would be called to reduce taxes,—

After seven weeks we have not seen much of that yet but we are still here in session.

> —including the 10 per cent excise tax on cars which would be removed in whole or in part.

When I reminded the right hon. gentleman of that this afternoon he said that he had been misquoted. I take his word for that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I did not say "misquoted". I said there was no statement that it would be removed wholly. I have never said that.

Mr. Sinclair: I have just read these three accounts of his speeches from very reputable journals. It is from these statements that the people of Canada generally got their information about what the right hon. gentleman was promising, and if these statements in these national journals were inaccurate one would have thought that the Prime Minister or that very great press staff that accompanied him across the country during the last election would have immediately sent corrections to the editors of the Ottawa Journal, the Ottawa Citizen and the Toronto Telegram.

But because no such corrections were made the public, rightly or wrongly, does think that the Prime Minister promised to abolish or at least reduce these excise taxes. I am not going to go into the much larger file I have of the promises of other Conservative condidates. I got one this morning from a correspondent in Huron who pointed out that the whip of the Tory party, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cardiff), pledged as well in a public advertisement that the 10 per cent sales tax would be removed, but I do not think the public would place as much importance on his promises as on the statement of the right hon. gentleman. That is the first step. I say these promises have created in the public's mind the feeling today that this excise tax is going to be either abolished or reduced.

The second step which brought about the present unemployment was the budget announcement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to Harold Morrison of the Canadian Press on June 25. The Canadian Press is, of course, a co-operative national news gathering service of all the newspapers in this country. The announcement was put on their wires and the next day newspapers from coast to coast carried the first public announcement of the new Minister of Finance promising a fall budget with substantial tax cuts.

The Canadian Press is not the only news gathering group in the country. There is the British United Press as well and there is keen competition between these two services. The British United Press found that it had been scooped when this Canadian Press story appeared in the newspapers of Canada. So one of the representatives of British United Press then had to track down the Minister of Finance, and finally that evening he got him at his hotel. He read the Canadian Press story to him paragraph by paragraph and asked whether each of these statements was true and that night he was told that they were true. So the British United Press as well then sent the story across the country that there was going to be a fall budget with tax cuts. Again the Canadian people, rightly or wrongly, were led to believe that at this session of parliament there would be tax cuts in this luxury tax field which, according to the right hon. gentleman, belonged in the horse and buggy age. That is the second step.

Then there was a third step taken here in this parliament which was the final step in building up this unanimous feeling in the country and in the press that this tax cut is coming and coming this week. Since the opening of parliament members of all three opposition parties, the official opposition, the C.C.F. and the Social Credit, have repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance, when is this budget to come down? Even more so than any handouts people of Canada get through social security legislation they are interested in tax cuts because most of them feel they can spend that money better themselves than any government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sinclair: I am now repeating a comment which used to be made at great length by the present Minister of Finance. This again is the question usually asked at the beginning of a session of the minister of finance. I can look across the floor and see half a dozen members who in the past have asked Mr. Ilsley or Mr. Abbott or Mr. Harris, on what date are you going to bring down the budget? Well, early in the session the finance minister would have to say that he did not really know because the work was in progress but as we got along to the end of February and the early part of March he would begin to give some indication. Finally, he would stand up in the house and say, "I am going to present the budget next Thursday night."

But here again the situation is different this session. After our questioning about when the budget was going to be produced and receiving nothing but evasion in reply, evasive denials that these Canadian Press and British United Press interviews ever took place, the opposition members began to doubt if there was going to be a budget. So then we changed our question and asked, not when but is there going to be a budget at all? We got the same long-winded evasive answers, red herrings dragged across our tracks and little sermons on political ethics as well.

Then we asked the Prime Minister directly. After all, he is the head of the government. On November 15 I led off and, together with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), inquired from the Prime Minister whether there was going to be a budget. He referred us to the Minister of Finance. Then, of course, we raised the question of the Minister of Finance having told the nation in this press interview that there was going to be a budget, and on page 1,176 of Hansard of November 15 the Prime Minister answered in this way:

> As far as the alleged representation made by the Minister of Finance is concerned—

That is the statement on the budget on June 25.

> —my recollection in that regard is that the Minister of Finance has already stated in this house that the statement in question had not been made by him.
> Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

You will remember that we said much more than "oh, oh". Hon. members who said "oh, oh" will remember that the Minister of Finance was sitting in the next seat to the Prime Minister and he sat there and squirmed and almost got to his feet to explain that he had not said the interview never took place, but nevertheless the matter was allowed to rest at that point.

After seven weeks of uncertainty, today at long last, when the Minister of Finance is absent on other duties, we did learn that there was not going to be a budget. The Prime Minister did tell the house that there was not going to be a budget. The right hon. gentleman and I have been friends since we came to parliament so I know he will not mind if I read back to him a little piece of poetry he read to the house in 1946 during a budget debate when he was criticizing the action or lack of action by our mutual friend, Douglas Abbott, then minister of finance. In view of these three steps, in view of the delay in bringing down a budget or telling us whether or not there was going to be a budget, I think his choice of poetry is particularly appropriate today. Let me read it.

> They promise, prepare, propose, postpone,
> And end by letting things alone.

No budget! I say, therefore, that the present unusual unemployment in the automobile industry caused by the dry-up of retail sales exists because of these three successive steps; first of all the election promises to reduce or abolish the excise tax on cars which excited public interest and was followed by the statement of the Prime Minister, when he was twitted after the election about these many, many election promises, that these promises—I think I am quoting him correctly—were solemn obligations which will be effectuated. That word "effectuated" drew my attention so I looked it up in the dictionary and I find that it means what I thought it meant.

So the public had that first of all in their minds. Then they were further excited or further heartened, I suppose, by the further statement of the Minister of Finance to the Canadian Press and to the British United Press four days after having assumed the portfolio that there was going to be a fall budget and there were going to be substantial tax cuts. That certainly confirmed the opinion that the public had formed because of the election promises of the Conservative party.

Then the third step was the evasion in the house of the simple question, first of all, when is there going to be a budget, and then, finally, is there going to be a budget at all, which was finally answered today. It is because of these three steps that we do not have any variation in the press summation of the situation. No papers in Canada tonight are saying that the tax may remain the same or that there may be a 2 per cent, 5 per cent, 8 per cent or 10 per cent reduction. They all say, as the headlines tonight show, that it is going to be a 5 per cent reduction and it is going to come this week.

Well, here in the house today we have learned two things. We have learned from the righteous indignation of the Prime Minister this afternoon that the tax is not going to be abolished so the public can rest assured the tax is not going to be abolished. The Minister of National Revenue when he was speaking either said too little or too much because anyone in this house who listened to him will also be convinced, as the gentlemen of the press were convinced, that the cut is going to be 5 per cent. It is for that reason we find plants closed throughout the country and salesmen laid off.

My hon. friend spoke about the value of the concession made on consignment. It was, of course, not original with his government. It was made by the minister of finance of the previous government. But if he will study his files of correspondence a little more thoroughly he will find that the automotive industry did not think very much of that concession, for two reasons.

Mr. Nowlan: No, but you did.

Mr. Sinclair: If the minister could only have seen the vigour with which he commended this proposal to the house—

Mr. Nowlan: I was trying to recapture that atmosphere of yours last year.

Mr. Sinclair: Let me tell you why the automobile industry does not think very much of this proposal. First of all, the dealers in my own riding tell me that automobile manufacturers do not send them many cars on consignment. The manufacturers expect the dealers to pay for the cars. The only way the dealers can avoid receiving the cars is not to take them out of the box cars in the railway yards in Vancouver, and of course that adds to the demurrage. There are some dealers with sufficient influence, apparently, to get cars on consignment but a great many of the dealers do not get cars on consignment. The sale is completed when the car arrives at the show rooms, and they are then beyond tax recovery.

We are not worrying so much about the dealers, it is the possible customer who is thinking of buying that car, we will say in West Vancouver, in my riding. If he buys that car today and the taxes are cut tomorrow he does not get any reduction because the dealer who sold him that car has taken that car and paid the sales tax before he could sell it to the customer. It is these people about whom we are really concerned because it is the drying up of sales to these people that has caused the whole unhappy chain of circumstances leading to the closing of these plants. It is for this reason I say that action should be taken immediately. Whatever elements of secrecy there were about this proposal, they have certainly been washed out by this series of events and by the statements made by both the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of National Revenue in this house today.

As the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) said, this is an action which can be taken instantly by the Minister of Finance, or in his absence by the Prime Minister, by merely putting a notice of motion on the order paper of intention to amend the Excise Tax Act.

We have a little difference in procedure here as compared with the British house. In the British House of Commons when tax changes are notified to the house they have a special statute, a one-year act, which makes these things effective between the date of the announcement and the date of the passage of the necessary act by parliament. Here, by custom, the announcement of the minister in the house, or even on one occasion on the radio, has been sufficient to make these tax changes effective. Naturally, if they are tax cuts no person in the country is going to complain. If they were tax increases, I am informed that a man could hire a lawyer and resist paying these increases until the actual bills have passed in parliament.

These bills, of course, would include a retroactive clause dating back to the announcement of the minister, and once those bills were passed the complaining citizen would be liable for the taxes and interest penalties. It is for that reason I say that all that is needed tomorrow is for the Prime Minister to give notice of his intention of these tax changes, which apparently he has decided and the situation, so far as unemployment caused by the drying up of sales is concerned, will be immediately cured.

If this action took place tomorrow I am sure the plants would start operating the day after and car sales would roll on at the normal rate from that day forward. If the Prime Minister and his government do not choose to take this action, every day of delay means that these many thousands of workers and car salesmen are going to be unemployed and their loss of income will be directly due to the procrastination, stalling and phony promises which have been made in this respect.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I am sure that the members of this house are probably aware of the fact we do not produce any automobiles in British Columbia. Nevertheless, I think the fact that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair), who has just taken his seat, and other members from that province are prepared to show some interest in the discussion we are having is an indication that the situation in the parts of Canada in which they do produce automobiles is one which we feel should be of common concern to all Canadians.

I do not profess to know very much about the intricacies of the production methods followed by automobile companies of Canada, although I do understand that the type of seasonal layoffs to which the hon. member for Coast-Capilano referred some minutes ago are characteristic of that industry and have led, as he described, to periods of seasonal unemployment. However, this particular situation is one that is of more than usual concern to the workers involved. We have heard a good deal of discussion throughout the day of the particular situation that revolves around this question of the possible reduction in excise tax on automobiles. In the lucid style for which he is generally appreciated in this house, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano has given us rather a concise summary of the situation and what has led up to it. Undoubtedly what he says is true that if the announcement which could and should be made is made that will of itself have a considerable effect in reviving production in the automobile industry.

Nevertheless, I think it perhaps is important when we are considering this situation to recognize that if it is this tax situation which has complicated the layoffs in the automobile industry, when we are thinking of unemployment in the automobile sectors of our economy we must be conscious of the fact that if production is to resume on a scale which would mean full employment there are other related problems which must be considered. As I said at the outset, we do not produce any automobiles in British Columbia. In recent years, however, we have been buying quite a lot of automobiles. I know that the workers in the Comox-Alberni district have been buying quite a few automobiles. I only have to look around me when I am at home to realize that has been the case. I think, therefore, while we are considering this situation in Windsor and the other automobile areas, and while we are discussing this particular tax situation, we should not overlook the general background situation which is closely related to the resumption of full employment in the automobile industry.

I noticed that the Vancouver press, along with the press in other parts of the country, has been carrying stories about the automobile situation, statements by management of the automobile firms that because of the decline in the demand for automobiles they were going to have to cut back their production. However, I think we realize that it is not alone in the automobile industry that such announcements have been taking place. Certainly many of the people on Vancouver island who not many months ago might have been contemplating the purchase of a new automobile this year or next year have not any such ideas in the back of their heads at the present moment and it is not all because of the fact that there is speculation or uncertainty as to the question of an excise tax reduction. A great deal of it is because of the fact that the people who have been working in the production of commodities that we produce in British Columbia are in the same boat as are the automobile workers.

I do not intend to attempt to outline in a barrage of statistics the situation in respect of some of the potential customers for automobiles in British Columbia but figures are coming out which suggest, for example, that there is something in the neighbourhood of a 40 per cent reduction in the over-all production at the present time of our great sawmill industry in British Columbia which means, one could argue, that there are 40 per cent fewer people in the province of British Columbia in that particular industry who are at present potential customers for automobiles. The same thing applies to some of the other related industries. A recent dispatch from one of the British Columbia papers carries an announcement by the management of Crown Zellerbach Corporation which states that the company's announcement is that they now face the poorest plywood market conditions since the war, proposed to drop 110 employees from their plywood plant on the lower Fraser river; the anticipated production cut is 25 per cent for at least the remainder of the year and possibly longer. That is an announcement coming from the company's side of the picture. On the other hand, I have in my hand a little bulletin that is published by one of the locals of the international woodworkers of America which represents the employees who are engaged in this industry. This bulletin of the Vancouver local of that union has a page here of items of news around the local. Under the heading of "Canadian White Pine" they say:

> Lay-offs have caused the majority of problems at the Canadian White Pine. There has been a series of lay-offs at this operation and as a result the whole situation is in a very fluid state.
> Dozens of grievances have been filed with the plant committee but most of the grievances have to be changed as a result of further lay-offs.

I imagine that situation is similar to some of the situations about grievances that may have been in process in some of the automobile plants in recent weeks. Then another plant within the jurisdiction of that local, namely Vancouver Plywoods, has this to say:

> Main topics of conversation these days has been: 1. The shut-down and general unemployment situation in this industry and others.

Then they go on and describe grievances that arise out of cutbacks which are creating seniority problems in the maintenance and construction sections of the plant. All of these things are, I feel, perhaps closely related to the situation in Windsor and things which should be considered along with the particular matter that sparked this debate when we think of the plight faced by the workers in the automobile industry of Canada at this present time.

The situation in Windsor, I suggest, is very much akin to the situation which has arisen in places like Port Alberni, Courtenay and other centres in my constituency. While we may not have any particular problem in respect of the removal of the excise tax at this time, nevertheless the indications are that as to a fall-off in the demand for some of the products which are produced in British Columbia we have a situation which is similar and one which must be taken into account by the government when it is considering what should be done with regard to creating full employment once again in the automobile industry in the province of Ontario.

I wonder if perhaps this story which is carried on the front page of the last issue of the Vancouver Sun—that is Saturday, November 30—which has reached us here is not indicative of the situation and of the attitude of mind which is developing in some of the areas where these problems of unemployment are arising. Apparently one of the new members of the Conservative party in the House of Commons has been having a little baptism of fire in dealing with this question of unemployment in the city of Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member that we are not dealing with unemployment in general but with unemployment in the automobile industry in particular. He has been roaming a bit over the whole field. If he could come back to the subject under discussion, I would greatly appreciate it.

Mr. Barnett: I thought I was attempting to indicate that the potential purchasing power of the people of British Columbia was an important factor in the maintenance of employment in the automobile industry in Ontario. While I may have perhaps been giving too much of the background of the situation that is causing a decrease in the potential market for automobiles in British Columbia, nevertheless I felt that it might perhaps be important for me to do it on this occasion. I think it is important that the government of Canada should recognize that these problems which arise in one particular area of the country are, in large part, the result of situations that may be in existence 2,000 or 3,000 miles away and that if they are going to take effective action beyond whatever they may be contemplating doing about this excise tax, certainly it is important that the necessary steps be taken to revive full production in our great forest products industry of British Columbia if the full potential market for cars in Canada is going to be restored to the level which it has reached at previous periods in our economic life.

I was going to suggest that the reaction of unemployed people in Windsor and in Vancouver is inclined to be rather similar. I do not know what the unemployed people down in Windsor are thinking and feeling but apparently the unemployed people of Vancouver expressed themselves rather vigorously when one of the members of parliament from that city apparently showed more interest in the Grey Cup when he raised the subject than he did in the situation which they were up against as unemployed citizens of this country. I certainly agree that the arguments which have been advanced by spokesmen in this group and by spokesmen from the official opposition, and in particular, as I mentioned a few minutes ago, the lucid argument which was presented by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, are matters which require immediate action and some immediate statement from the government.

I did feel I wanted to spend a little time in bringing to the attention of this house the broad background of this problem and what to me should be even more basic considerations in the minds of the government in approaching the problem raised today by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) than the consideration of an amendment to a particular tax.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, this is an opportunity which I certainly did not expect when I came to the house this afternoon. Nevertheless it has been an interesting day and I am sure the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) can feel very satisfied before taking off on his campaign to feel that he has today removed from the headlines the member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson).

Mr. Pickersgill: Also the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I am inclined to feel that perhaps my hon. friend is more concerned about just what he may be able to say to his constituents than he is about the actual situation in dealing with unemployment in the automobile industry. As a matter of fact I can only think that what is wanted here is some proof that the member for Algoma East can come before this House of Commons and prove that he, in fact, runs the government and not the party to your right.

Mr. McIlraith: Why Algoma East?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Well, the correction has been made—it should be Essex East.

An hon. Member: Not York West anyhow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Like your whole party, you are just confused.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Well I see they have awakened once more to your left, sir; they usually do. No one wants to take the unemployment situation in this industry lightly, least of all those of us who sit to your right because, of course, I think as we go along it is incumbent upon us to devise ways and means to ensure that the economy at all times works with full vigour. On the other hand I am greatly concerned that the attitude being displayed is one of despair and of fear. This was particularly brought to my attention by an editorial in a little local newspaper in my own constituency—

Mr. McIlraith: Did you write the editorial?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): No I did not write it but, believe me, my hon. friends opposite should have no complaint because they had the best propaganda machine outside the totalitarian countries.

Mr. Pearson: You flatter us.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Tely?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): But we are doing a little better now although we still have a long way to go to catch up with the performance of those people to your left over the last 22 years.

Mr. McIlraith: You have a long way to go, all right.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): This editorial is called "Funk Won't Get Us Anywhere!" I was intrigued with the title so I looked up the word "funk" in the dictionary and I found it meant fear or panic. Now the editorial in the Etobicoke Press of Thursday, November 28 among other things says this—and if you feel sir that I should not read this particular article perhaps I can follow the system used in our courts of justice and simply say I would like to adopt these words as my own.

> We are not a confirmed optimist—not by any means. But we are seriously concerned about this vicious circle of fear that is prevalent in the thinking of a lot of people today, is reflected in some sections of the dailies, and is having a deleterious effect on the nation as a whole, it seems to us.
> Facts are facts and must be faced.

And again:

> Over the weekend the fact that Ford lays off 2,400 workers gets the headlines, not the fact that most of them will benefit under the guaranteed annual wage plan (to the tune of half their salary—and that isn't peanuts).

An hon. Member: Well that is not as much.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): It continues:

> You'd think we were in the midst of a depression. We aren't! No one stresses that the government has released $180 million to boost building and has recently stated that it will order the release of further funds for the same purpose if necessary.
> No one stresses that Scarborough in September issued $11 million worth of building permits compared with $5,500,000 worth a year ago. No one stresses that in a small municipality like Trafalgar township recently permits were issued for building 77 houses.
>
> No one talks about the new industrial plants that continue to come into Etobicoke and these are only isolated cases!
> But the effect of this continued stressing of the bad and no underlining of the good news is this—that the dress manufacturer reads that story in the dailies about middle-class families going without so he immediately plans a smaller output and lays off half his workers. The workers, living close to the collar, can't make their payments on the frig and the car and the washer. These articles are reclaimed by the hundreds and thrown on the market at half price and the manufacturers of those articles immediately cut down their output staffs and more cars, frigs, washers go for next to nothing.

And all this because of fear—the stressing of the bad only, as we have said.

Give the national economy time—for heaven's sake, for your own sake!

The effect of the $180 million is being felt.

Subdividers are dividing, builders are building houses and factories. And those factories and houses need furniture and hardware and will be occupied by people who will go to the furniture stores and the drug stores and the gas and oil and electric companies for heat and light, and the employees of those companies will in turn be able to keep up their payments on their furniture and cars and whatnot, and people will remain employed and other people will be taken off unemployment and will be able to resume their payments on their articles purchased on time, thus keeping other people in work.

We may be accused of talking without our book, but we think there is a fair modicum of reasoning in what we have pointed out.

Fear creates fear and—well, nothing was ever righted or accomplished through funk!

It seems to me tonight that the chief problem we have to recognize here is that this particular problem in the automobile industry did not arise from a particular question with respect to tax. It arose over a period of time; it arose because, very simply, the opposition to your left while in office did not provide the drive or the dynamic policies required to keep the whole economy on the move. As a matter of fact, if there has been any problem over the last few years, it has been a problem of laissez faire as far as the opposition to your left is concerned. This country now requires government—

An hon. Member: It sure does.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Just a minute —and industry to go hand in hand whereas over 22 years the party to your left was prepared to stand aside and applaud while industry did the work. We have, I think, tonight reached the stage where we must determine who is going to run this country. Is is to be parliament; is it to be the newspapers or is it to be the large corporations?

Mr. Ellis: You are getting close to the truth now.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I did not catch that.

Mr. Ellis: You are getting close to the truth now.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I can only say, if I can come back to what I said earlier today, that if we are going to have a situation arise where, because of reports in the newspaper, it is necessary for the government to disclose immediately all or any of its plans in connection with its fiscal policy, then of course we have abdicated our position of government. If at the same time, because of such reports, corporations are going to be placed in a position where they can say that production shall cease until such time as a definite answer is obtained, then of course we have abdicated in the same way to them.

It seems to me that more than ever it is required that we obey the ordinary rules dealing with disclosure of information of this kind. I cannot help but recall the many times when this arose in the past and we were told very clearly that no information of this type would be given until such time as the government brought down its budget or brought in its budgetary resolutions. I do not think at this time it is a question as to what promises will be kept or not kept. The hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) places a great deal of importance on that beautiful red volume which undoubtedly will get a lot of reading, but I should like to say to him tonight that I feel confident that if he is going to prepare another volume in which to include the promises which have been kept then he will, I am sure, have just as large a volume or maybe a larger one.

As I said, this is not a question of keeping promises. The promises which this party gave in its campaign are being kept to a larger extent than ever before, and I am sure that this will continue down to any promises made to people in this or any other industry, but the issue at stake tonight is whether we should abdicate our powers either to the press or to the industry concerned, neither of which I am prepared to do. And I think we can go one step further and say that we have no intention of abdicating our power to the party on your left, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say a few words on this matter. It is a very important one since it affects not only the automobile industry but various other related industries. I believe that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) was well advised to raise this question so that the people of this country may be made aware of what course the government should be taking after the promises it made in this regard.

A moment ago I was listening to the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton). He reminded me of a familiar French song which says: "Everything has burned down, the stable and the horses too, but everything is just fine, Madame la marquise!" Frankly, the situation being what it is, we wonder what the government can be thinking about at this time.

It has just been said that this situation has nothing to do with the promises made by the Conservatives. But had the member for York West taken the trouble to analyse the speech made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair) he would have understood without any difficulty that this situation has not been brought about, essentially, by the fact that the press has reported statements made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the elections, nor those of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who, during the Prime Minister's stay in England, has continued, day after day, to make repeated statements calculated to convince those who heard them that Canada was to become prosperous overnight because the Conservative party was again in power. What is happening now is the outcome of the unrest caused in this country by the Conservative party in making promises it is in no position to implement, and which it has no intention of carrying out. And yet, today, we are told that is the fault of the Liberal party which has just been turned out of office.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in 1930 we realized that the promises of the Conservative party and of the then prime minister had caused the depression we underwent at that time.

Besides what the hon. member for Coast-Capilano said, the Prime Minister's statements about diverting to the United Kingdom 15 per cent of Canada's trade with the United States have caused uneasiness in the area of Windsor and surrounding cities where the automobile industry is the main employer of the people.

Well, Mr. Speaker, time has come for the Conservative party to remember its promises and to put an end to all those rumours which are left circulating without ever being confirmed. As already said by some members, if the Conservative party really intends to put an end to the present situation in the automobile industry, all it would have to do would be to say whether or not it proposes to change the situation existing at this time as regard taxes. The automobile industry, and the related industries, would then resume their activities and the workers would go back to their jobs.

We should not forget that, when there is unrest in one part of the country, it is felt in the rest of the country. It is like the human body; if one arm is aching, the rest of the body feels it. Since we are at the stage where we are suffering from extraordinary uneasiness and unrest, the Conservative party now directing the destinies of this country should pull itself together and take steps to remedy the situation. That is what we have been requesting all day and that is also what we intend to continue urging upon the government. Let the Conservative party keep the promises it has made to the Canadian people.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the leader of the house what is the order of business for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the business for tomorrow, will be, as I announced on Friday, first, item No. 118 on today's order paper, which is a resolution preceding a bill to provide for a branch line of the Canadian National Railway Company. I understand that copies of the bill have been handed to the leaders of the three other parties, and if the house is agreeable we would ask for second reading and then refer the bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

The second order will be No. 121 on today's order paper, which is a resolution preceding a bill to provide for a loan to the Hamilton harbour commissioners. This bill, also, has been distributed to the leaders of the other parties, and we are hoping it will be given second reading tomorrow and be referred to the same committee.

Next we will take order No. 111, which is second reading of a bill to amend the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act. The intention is to refer that bill, too, to the same standing committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Very complicated.

Mr. Green: I hope the hon. member for Laurier will be able to understand it better than I have been able to do.

The next item will be No. 112 on today's order paper, second reading of an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. It is proposed to refer this bill to the standing committee on banking and commerce. Then, item 119, which is the resolution preceding a bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act; item No. 122, a resolution preceding a bill to amend the National Housing Act; item 116, a resolution preceding a bill to provide guaranteed prices for agricultural commodities, and finally a resolution which appears today on the day's order paper under government notices of motions, preceding a bill to authorize a loan to the government of New Brunswick.

Mr. Chevrier: The leader of the house is very optimistic. I had been going to ask him what he intends to do on Friday, but I presume the list he has given us will keep us going until Friday. I noticed on Friday evening that the hon. gentleman gave the whole of the business for every day except Friday and Saturday. Could he give us any indication of what the business will be on those two days?

Mr. Green: I cannot say definitely, Mr. Speaker, but probably estimates.

Mr. Sinclair: In that case there will be no tax proposals this week?

Mr. Green: Could be.

Mr. Sinclair: You have not listed them.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT ACT PAYMENTS

Question No. 209—Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose):

1. How much was paid out of the Agricultural Prices Support Act revolving fund for each of the years from 1946 to 1956 inclusive?
2. How much was paid out of the Agricultural Prices Support Act revolving fund from January 1, 1957 to October 31, 1957?
3. What products were supported in each of the years mentioned in 1 and 2, and what was the loss incurred for each of these products for each of these years?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1 and 2. On the basis of fiscal year as shown by the public accounts, the amount of the revolving fund used under the Agricultural Prices Support Act was to the nearest dollar as follows:

for year ending
March 31, 1947	$ 109,395
March 31, 1948	1,061,353
March 31, 1949	3,473,295
March 31, 1950	39,515,860
March 31, 1951	36,902,816
March 31, 1952	8,356,718
for year ending
March 31, 1953	164,419,331
March 31, 1954	93,849,104
March 31, 1955	66,223,281
March 31, 1956	70,869,635
March 31, 1957	74,685,883
Preliminary for April 1 to October 31, 1957	39,422,569

The following net amounts in dollars were outstanding as a balance at March 31 in the following years before deducting losses provided by recoup through estimates in parliament:

1947	$ 109,395
1948	1,061,353
1949	3,473,295
1950	21,113,781
1951	1,743,515
1952	6,589,661
1953	101,601,886
1954	60,086,085
1955	34,725,232
1956	38,792,629
1957	25,733,743
As at October 31, 1957	31,876,627

3. No accurate accrued account of losses to October 31, 1957, is available since programs are still in operation, but as at March 31, 1957, the annual report of the board indicates the following net cost with respect to products supported according to production year:

Product	Year
1. Potatoes	1946	$ 170,748.48

PITWOOD EXPORTERS, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 239—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Did any officials of the federal government contact exporters of the Atlantic provinces in connection with 1958 shipments of pitwood?
2. If so, what are the names and addresses of the pitwood exporters who were contacted?
3. What was the nature of these contacts and the subsequent results?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Yes.

2. It is not the general practice of the Department of Trade and Commerce to make public the names and addresses of firms known to be negotiating for business.

3. The purpose of these contacts was to exchange information on current conditions affecting the business in prospect. Some contracts have already been placed with certain producers by the national coal board of the U. K. In addition a small contract has been obtained from Turkey. These contracts were negotiated privately and details are not known to the department.

LIVESTOCK—COMPENSATION PAYMENTS FOR T.B.

Question No. 242—Mr. Hansell:

1. Does the government pay compensation for cattle discovered to have t.b.? If so, what amount is paid per head?
2. How does the government determine what cattle have t.b.?
3. Are any veterinarians employed by the dominion government for the purpose of inspecting cattle to determine whether or not cattle have t.b.? If so, how many are thus employed and where?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Yes, when such cattle react to a tuberculin test under the terms of the restricted area and accredited herd plans. The Animal Contagious Diseases Act provides that compensation shall not exceed $100 each for pure-bred animals and $40 each for grade animals. In addition the owner receives the commercial market value for his animals at the time of slaughter in an inspected abattoir.

2. By the application of the intradermal tuberculin test.

3. Two hundred and fourteen full time salaried veterinary officers are engaged by this department in field disease control and part of their duties is the tuberculin testing of cattle. In addition to the full time salaried officers, there are 170 practising veterinarians employed on a part time basis.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

FOURTH AND FIFTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough) presented the fourth and fifth reports of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and moved that the fifth report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

REPORT ON CANADIAN MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thought I might take a few minutes to give a brief, interim report on the Canadian trade mission which is now in the city of Glasgow. I returned this morning from Glasgow, and I thought perhaps the house would like to know how the mission is getting on. Hon. members will recall that it left Canada on November 21 with the approval of all parties in the house; that it consisted of over 50 people representing all provinces and about 20 of the major industries in this country, and representatives from the fishing industry, agriculture and labour.

The mission arrived safely by T.C.A. on November 22 and was received in the customary friendly way by the people of the United Kingdom. We were met at the airport by the secretary of state for commonwealth affairs, the president of the board of trade, our own high commissioner, Hon. George Drew, and Sir William Rootes, who is chairman of the dollar exports council. Mr. Drew and I, along with Sir David Eccles and Lord Home, then paid a visit to Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, who spent half an hour with us discussing the purpose of the mission and wishing us well on our tour of the United Kingdom.

The reception by the people of the British isles, according to members of the British press, has surpassed anything within recent years except perhaps a visit from a member of some royal family. There has been an intense interest in the mission throughout the United Kingdom.

The press conference on the day we arrived had representatives from almost every newspaper in the United Kingdom. I counted more members of the press at the conference than there were members of the Canadian trade mission, and some of our reporters estimated there were 100 members of the press present on that occasion. This gives you an idea of the interest which was created in the mission before it set foot in England. The response since has been tremendous. Every day, on TV or radio or in the press, word has been carried throughout the British isles concerning the trade mission. The London newspapers, cramped though they are for space, have given some attention to the mission, and the newspapers in the provinces have in their turn given very good attention to the trade mission.

When we arrived in Glasgow just two days ago we were of course met at the station by a pipe band and 500 people who arrived to bid the Canadians welcome. They were not invited particularly, but they knew about the mission through the publicity the British press had given to it. The preparations made in the United Kingdom for the mission were elaborate and very well done indeed. The board of trade, under Sir David Eccles and his officials, operated closely with Sir William Rootes of the dollar exports council and with our own high commissioner and his officials at Canada House in the preparation of every detail for this mission, the largest and most representative to reach the shores of England.

The interest of the British businessmen in the mission has surpassed all expectations, either on our part or the part of the people in the United Kingdom. The mission is visiting quite a number of industrial plants in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland to see for themselves the progress of British industry. So much interest has been created in this visit that 700 British firms, in addition to the ones we are visiting, have written to the board of trade, the dollar exports council or Canada House asking for an opportunity to meet the members of the mission. This was totally unexpected, but we have made provision for that because within ten days' time the members of the mission will be in London for a three-day stay and offices have been provided for the purpose of seeing that the British businessmen who are interested may meet face to face with our Canadian representatives. This will give you some idea of the interest that has been aroused in the United Kingdom as a result of this visit.

Before I left we had seen a number of industrial plants, and all of us were impressed by the progress that has been made. It appears that a full recovery has been achieved in England from the war damage and from the early post-war years. The factories are coming into full production. They are efficient and well managed. A considerable amount of automation has been introduced into the factories. The British workingman is working efficiently and rapidly. The housekeeping arrangement in the factory was a matter of considerable comment by experienced members of our mission. All told, we were surprised and delighted to see how well advanced British industry is. We were similarly delighted and pleased to see the great interest that the British people have in Canada.

We announced that we had arrived to fulfil two main purposes: first, to investigate for ourselves and see the progress of British industry and its productivity; and second, to inform British businessmen of the great opportunities awaiting them in Canada. We pointed out that our imports into Canada reached the total of $5,700 million per year; that Britain prior to the second world war enjoyed an 18 per cent share of imports into Canada; that such share had now dropped down to about 8½ per cent to 9 per cent; and that in our opinion there was an opportunity at this stage for British businessmen to re-enter the Canadian field and to bring to our shores some of the products which they can so skilfully make because they have the skill and the ingenuity.

We noted with a great deal of interest their very fine apprenticeship system to train their mechanics and their technical experts. We also noted their courses for training their managerial staff. We saw with our own eyes the amenities that are provided for people working in the plants in the way of up to date canteens, recreational facilities and medical and hospital facilities. Along with Sir William Rootes, Mr. Schollie, our labour representative, and Mr. James Duncan, I had the pleasure of meeting with a group in one of the factories, of the shop stewards and others who were selected to represent the views of those who are engaged in the work in the factories. We exchanged opinions and told them about our mission, and they gave us some of their views with regard to what can be accomplished by British industry.

All told, the mission has been a great success. It has carried the name of Canada to the British isles in a way that name has not been carried since the end of the war. The warm feeling of the people in the United Kingdom for Canada cannot be fully expressed by me here this afternoon. It must be experienced to be completely appreciated.

Canada stands very high in the opinion of the United Kingdom. Among the members of our mission and the British people we met over there in conference after conference, there was general agreement that this is a very appropriate time for Canada and the United Kingdom to draw more closely together, not only in trade but in all other ways.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Did the minister take advantage of his trip to the United Kingdom to discuss further the offer of the United Kingdom to Canada of a free trade area? If so, can he report any progress as the result of such discussions?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I had no opportunity to participate in any such discussion. We were so busy looking at British industrial plants that our time was fully occupied. There may be an opportunity to do so some time in the future to satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Can the minister inform the house if there has been any concrete evidence of results of the trade mission, in the form of orders which have been placed with the various representatives who are in Great Britain?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we did not attempt to have a day to day report as to what the individual members of the mission did. After all, there are 50 members in the mission representing 20 major industries in this country. My hon. friend knows enough about business to realize that some negotiations extend over several days or several weeks before they are completed.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Can the minister say whether any discussion took place during the recent mission for the purpose of expanding Canadian exports to the United Kingdom?

Mr. Churchill: The purpose of the mission was not to expand Canadian exports during the course of the discussions. That will come, of course, as a result of increased trade between the United Kingdom and Canada, because if they earn sufficient dollars they will be able to buy more Canadian products. We did not enter into any discussion along that line at the time I was there.

Mr. Argue: Were any facilities made available so the farm representation on the delegation might negotiate such further increases in sales, or discuss them?

Mr. Churchill: There are three agricultural members of the delegation, who are all experienced farmers. They are spending this entire week under the guidance of Scottish and English agricultural experts in visiting farms and other establishments in the British isles. They have open to them an opportunity to see first-class herds of beef and dairy cattle. They have an opportunity to see the development of farm machinery in Great Britain. They have an opportunity to look at the research facilities in agriculture in that country. I think their time will be fully occupied this week in making that type of investigation.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is the minister prepared to indicate to the house whether in his opinion the decline of trade with Britain from 18 per cent in pre-war days to 8.5 per cent to 9 per cent today is by reason of the fact that Canadian industrialists and the Canadian government are not prepared to accept inconvertible or blocked sterling?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I think the decline in trade between the United Kingdom and Canada did not result from the policy enunciated by my hon. friend. I think he overlooks the fact that during the course of the war years British industry suffered very severely from bomb damage. We had plenty of examples of that in the stories told us of that bomb damage, and the remarkable recovery that has been made surprised the members of the mission. On the other hand, many of the industries of Britain had to divert their attention to the production of war materials. As a result of these two causes their trade with Canada was curtailed. They have now repaired the bomb damage, and their plants are again producing the materials for which they were originally designed, with the result that they are ready to come over here and re-enter the Canadian market.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): The minister mentioned visiting Glasgow. I was wondering why he did not visit the city which is the headquarters of the greatest linen manufacture in the world, Belfast in the north of Ireland?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest regret that I will not be with the mission on Friday when it visits Belfast. As my ancestors went from England to Ireland and thence to Ontario, Ireland has a special spot in my heart, and I would be glad to be there with them on Friday.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce state whether or not the Canadian trade delegation will visit southern Ireland? If not, was an invitation extended to southern Ireland to meet the delegation at the proposed meeting in London?

Mr. Churchill: No proposal was made, in organizing the trade mission, that a visit should be paid to southern Ireland. The second part of my hon. friend's question asks whether or not an invitation would be extended to the people of southern Ireland to meet with the trade mission in London. We have not extended invitations to anyone to meet us in London. The 700 requests I have mentioned came from British businessmen throughout the British isles, on their own initiative. We cannot accommodate any more. Other requests may come within the next few days and we will try to meet them, but we cannot, ourselves, extend invitations because we cannot look after all the people who want to see us.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in respect of the trade delegation. Can the minister inform the house whether or not any preliminary or concrete negotiations were entered into to increase bacon and beef product sales to Britain? If not, why was some official step not taken in order to restore our market for these products in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Churchill: No preliminary discussions were held with the United Kingdom with regard to that. The present trade mission, as I have pointed out, is interested primarily in getting British exports to Canada. We have, in conversations with some of the people we have met, indicated the extent of the decline in trade between our two countries, and how that has affected our agricultural producers.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. How many textile manufacturers were contacted by the Canadian trade mission in London?

Mr. Churchill: I regret that I cannot answer that question because I have not the information available.

Beef Cattle—Exports

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could he tell us if his trade mission to Great Britain has visited automobile factories in the United Kingdom with a view to making purchases of more automobiles, and if so with what result?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the trade mission is visiting a whole series of factories in England, some of which may be automobile factories. I do not know of any arrangements with the United Kingdom with regard to the purchase of British automobiles—

An hon. Member: Could we have a yes or no answer?

Mr. Churchill: Ask a simple question and you will get a simple answer—

Mr. Brown (Essex West): I think I have asked a simple question.

Mr. Churchill: I am not suggesting that the question of the hon. member is not a simple one. I was directing my remarks to some of his friends opposite.

[Later:]

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since the purpose of the trade mission was to increase purchases from the United Kingdom, would he tell us now whether in visiting the automobile plants it was the intention to increase purchases of automobiles from the United Kingdom?

Mr. Churchill: Each member of the trade mission had an opportunity to visit the plants for which visits had been arranged by the committee in charge, and also any other plants to which he might like to pay a visit. As to what those individual members of the trade mission do, as to whether or not they place orders, is entirely up to them. This mission was sponsored by the government with the approval of the entire House of Commons for the express purpose I outlined earlier today, but individuals on that mission are free to place orders or not as they see fit.

BEEF CATTLE—STATEMENT ON EXPORTS TO THE UNITED STATES

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement in connection with exports of beef cattle from Canada to the United States, as this is a matter of considerable concern and uncertainty at the moment.

During the past few days there have been conflicting reports as to the status of the last quarterly quota on cattle weighing over 700 pounds entering the United States, with news reports to the effect that United States customs were collecting additional duty on cattle over 700 pounds. The latest information available is that, as of November 23, 93,200 head of cattle over 700 pounds from all countries have entered the United States during the last quarter of the year, which would leave a balance of 26,800 head to fill the quota of 120,000 head permitted under the quarterly global quota. Actual exports of cattle weighing over 700 pounds from Canada to the United States for the last quarter are not available, but the exports approximate 79,000, with Mexican imports approximating 14,000.

We are advised that United States customs officers have not been instructed to and are not as yet collecting extra duty, but they have been instructed to date stamp all invoices in view of the fact that the quarterly quota is approaching completion.

Notwithstanding the fact that United States customs collectors are not actually as yet collecting extra duty, there is reason to believe that certain United States customs brokers handling shipments of Canadian cattle are collecting extra duty as a protection to themselves. This is probably the basis for the news reports that additional duty is being collected. It is customary for the United States customs officers to start collecting duty when the cattle quota for those over 700 pounds is approaching completion. Any duty collected by either the United States customs officers or brokers on cattle which eventually prove to be within the quota will be refunded.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): May I ask a question in regard to cattle shipments. As I recall the total number allowed under the arrangement made at GATT it was about 400,000 for the whole year, with 120,000 each quarter up to a certain number. Are there any other figures with regard to the total number down to the present time?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I can readily get those figures but most of the exports of cattle to the United States, as far as beef cattle are concerned, have taken place during the last quarter. The exports, I think, up to the last quarter were only in the neighbourhood of something under 5,000 head.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of his statement to the house with respect to the news in the papers that there will be an increase in the customs tax on cattle over 700 pounds going to the United States. Can the minister say whether or not the quota for the export of Canadian cattle to the United States has now been reached? Further, in view of the imbalance of trade with the United States, will the minister say if he will try to get the United States authorities to increase the permitted quota of Canadian cattle to the United States in the fiscal year?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that matter fully in the statement I made half or three-quarters of an hour ago, and if the hon. member was not in the house at that time he will find the answers to his questions in that statement.

Mr. McCullough: I was in the house at the time and I listened very carefully to what the minister said. As I recall it, he did not make any statement as to the number of cattle going to the United States, or as to whether or not the government has given any consideration to asking the United States government to increase the quota of Canadian cattle permitted under this agreement.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I gave in the statement the number of cattle which had gone to the United States so far this year and the amount of the quota which was still open for the balance of this quarter. As far as the latter part of the question is concerned, we have not approached the United States to ask for an increase in the quota. As a matter of fact we have not come anywhere close to filling the quota for several years past. Therefore there would be no reason, I would think, in going at the present time to ask that the quota be increased.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now that the trade mission which was dispatched to China has completed its work, is the minister in a position to advise the house regarding trade possibilities with that country?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The visit of a trade commissioner hardly constitutes a trade mission. I have not yet received a report from him on his return.

Mr. Bryson: Will the minister make a statement to the house as soon as that report is received, as he suggested he would do some time ago?

UNITED STATES—REPORTED ADDITIONAL AMOUNT FOR SURPLUS DISPOSAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question arises out of a news service report that the United States cabinet has approved a proposal to be presented to congress asking for an additional $1,500 billion for its surplus disposal program in the coming year.

Would the minister care to comment on this disturbing report, and does he feel the United States government is keeping faith with any understanding that was achieved when he recently met members of the United States cabinet?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The hon. member was good enough to send me notice of his question, but it reached me about two minutes before I entered the house. I have not seen the report, but we will look into it and advise the hon. member as to the results of our inquiries.

SALMON—FURTHER STATEMENT AS TO IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): On Friday last, November 29, the hon. member for New Westminster asked if I had received a letter from the united fishermen and allied workers' union concerning the importation of Japanese canned salmon. I replied at that time that I had, but to clarify the situation I think I should add to the brief answer I gave at that time.

The 1956 and 1957 salmon catches in British Columbia failed to produce sufficient supplies of certain species of salmon to fill the requirements of the Canadian market. The Canadian consumption of canned sockeye salmon has been running in the vicinity of 300,000 cases annually. In the sockeye season just ended only about 225,000 cases were packed, as compared with the average of 440,000 cases for the preceding five years.

The small catches in 1956 and 1957 were due principally to the failure of the runs of salmon to a number of the major producing areas, particularly in the north. Prior to the 1956 salmon fishing season in British Columbia it was known that one of the major river systems would not be a large producer. Hence in the fall of 1955 it was anticipated that there would be a shortage of canned Canadian sockeye salmon from the 1956 season.

In anticipation of the short packs of sockeye and pink salmon in 1956 and the short pack in 1957 of sockeye, the industry considered that it was most desirable to share the available Canadian canned salmon pack with buyers in the United Kingdom, which market has been a traditional one for Canadian canned salmon and is an important one to retain. The maintenance of the British market for Canadian canned salmon is important for both the fishermen and the operating companies of British Columbia.

Because of this situation it was necessary for the processing companies to supplement the stocks of canned salmon for the Canadian market by importing some species of canned salmon from Japan. This has resulted in the appearance of Japanese canned salmon in Canadian food stores, and has no doubt puzzled some consumers who have always looked upon canned salmon as an exclusively Canadian product. In view of the short supplies in 1956 and 1957 of some species of Canadian canned salmon, chiefly sockeye, it would seem to be good business to make available to the consumer a continuous supply of canned salmon, and this was done by importing high quality canned salmon from the only available source of supply, Japan.

When it was foreseen that there would be a short supply of Canadian canned salmon in the 1956 pack year, processing companies consulted with and advised the united fishermen and allied workers' union of their intention to bring in some supplies of the canned product from Japan. The union at that time concurred in the proposal of the companies. Approximately 165,000 cases of sockeye salmon were imported from Japan in 1956, and in the same year about 40,000 cases of pinks and approximately 40,000 cases of cohoe. The figures I have quoted are for full cases of 48 pounds.

In view of the small Canadian pack of sockeye salmon in 1957 it is understood the processing companies expect to import from Japan, but only sufficient quantities of canned sockeye salmon which will meet the requirements of the domestic market until the new Canadian pack of 1958 is available. The canned salmon industry of British Columbia is confident that the current shortage of sockeye salmon is only temporary, and that in 1958 ample supplies of Canadian production will again be available.

In the meantime, however, it is felt to be important that the market demand for sockeye salmon be satisfied, and that the competitive position of sockeye salmon with other foods be protected. I consider it fortunate that this supply shortage of canned salmon can be filled from Japan, an important buyer of such Canadian products as wheat, pulp, iron ore and other raw materials. It is fortunate too that the temporary shortage of Canadian canned salmon is chiefly confined to the sockeye species. The industry feels that sufficient supplies of Canadian produced cohoe, pinks and chums will be available to the Canadian consumer.

It is important to emphasize that all canned salmon entering Canada must be inspected for quality and high standard under the regulations for the inspection of canned salmon of the Canadian Meat and Canned Foods Act. The same rigid inspection is given to imported canned salmon as to the Canadian product. This inspection is carried out by the inspection service of the Department of Fisheries at its Vancouver laboratory.

In addition to the Canadian government inspection regulations, I am informed that the major importing companies send their own personnel to Japan to inspect very thoroughly all parcels of Japanese canned salmon which they expect to purchase. Thus it can be said that the Japanese canned salmon product undergoes very careful and thorough examination for quality, first by the purchasing companies and then by the Department of Fisheries, before the product is offered for sale in Canada.

With respect to price, I am informed that the basic price of sockeye salmon in Japan, plus freight and 15 per cent duty, plus labelling and selling costs, is so close to the current Canadian market price that there is little or no margin of profit for the Canadian importer.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, might I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Irwin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Essex West defer his question?

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Yes.

Mr. T. J. Irwin (Burnaby-Richmond): Will the minister tell us whether he is doing anything about the use of Canadian labels on Japanese products?

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) asked a supplementary question in the same regard on Friday last and I said I would answer him fully today. In connection with the question asked on the matter of imported Japanese canned salmon, may I say this.

The matter of using brand labels on canned salmon from Japan was a decision of the companies importing the product. There are no Canadian regulations against the use of such brand labels on imported canned salmon. It would appear obvious that the companies made the decision on the basis that they had spent, over many years, large sums of money in advertising their brand labels, and being satisfied with the quality of the imported product, not to have used the established labels would have meant the loss of their advertising and sales promotion campaigns of many years. The practice of using established brand labels on imported canned fish products, where quality is assured, is a common one. The labels mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley are also used on imported canned fish products from other countries, such as shrimps from the United States, sardines from Norway and many other fish imports.

As to the size of the lettering on the labels, "Product of Japan", this condition is governed by section 26 of the Meat and Canned Foods Act. The key words in section 26 are that these words should be printed in a "plain and conspicuous" manner. I might point out for the benefit of hon. members that in the case of meat products there are no specific requirements by the Department of Agriculture with respect to the height or size of labelling on importations of canned meats. In other words, the regulations concerning country of origin are identical for canned fish products and canned meat products.

As far as the labelling of imported Japanese canned salmon is concerned, I am satisfied that there have been no attempts to deceive the Canadian consumer in so far as the designation of the country of origin is concerned. In one or two instances where the Department of Fisheries considered the words "Product of Japan" were not sufficiently conspicuous on the label, this condition has been corrected by the importing companies willingly and without delay.

I might add that all the canned salmon imported from Japan has not been brought into Canada by British Columbia canning companies. In quite a number of cases imports have been made by brokers in Montreal and other centres.

Mr. Winch: When?

Mr. MacLean: Over the last three years.

Mr. Winch: Are you saying that in this last year any imports have been brought in by a broker from Japan?

Mr. MacLean: No; in the previous two years, 1956 and 1955.

Mr. Winch: Only the big three in British Columbia can import from Japan on British Columbia labels.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Winch: Answer that one.

Mr. MacLean: There are five companies, actually, which are importing salmon from Japan, and there is no restriction on any person bringing in salmon from Japan provided they pay the duty and meet the regulations.

Mr. Winch: Is my hon. friend saying—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member allow the minister to finish his statement?

Mr. Winch: That is not correct, and I know it is not correct.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacLean: In quite a number of cases—

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the minister?

Mr. Speaker: No. The hon. member will please keep his seat until the minister has finished his statement.

Mr. MacLean: These companies concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am sure jealously guard the quality of the canned fish products which they are selling under their own brand labels. These same companies, I am most confident, have a long-term interest in the salmon fishing and processing industry of British Columbia.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister be good enough to inform the house when the rest of his estimates will be coming up for consideration?

Mr. MacLean: This is not a question of estimates, Mr. Speaker. They are two matters about which questions have been asked and about which a great deal of misunderstanding has grown up. I therefore thought I should ask the indulgence of the house at this time to put the matter straight.

Mr. Speaker: I did not intend to deny the floor to the hon. member for Vancouver East; if he has a question to ask he may do so now.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the minister if he can give information to this house to the effect that the importation of salmon from Japan in the last 18 months could only have been done in the name of the big three of British Columbia, who have an arrangement with the big two in Japan? I have given information to the department of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and it has not been disproved. Will the Minister of Fisheries deny that statement?

Mr. MacLean: It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to go into commercial transactions which may take place between people who are engaged in the salmon importing business, but I can assure my hon. friend that salmon has been imported into this country by brokers who are not connected with the processing of salmon in both 1955 and 1956.

Mr. Sinclair: In Vancouver and Montreal.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): It has been drawn to my attention that while the minister has been answering questions respecting the contents of the can and the label on the can, it is actually labelled "c-a-n", which would indicate to any housewife that it was a can—

Mr. Sinclair: Just a can.

Mr. Hahn: I am fully aware that it is a can but the minister was asked about the contents.

Some hon. Members: It was just a can.

AUSTRALIA—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS FOR SALE OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to inquire whether his department has yet started negotiations with Australia for the sale of Canadian wheat to that country.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If Australia wishes to buy Canadian wheat, we are prepared to sell.

FOWL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONTINUED PRICE SUPPORT

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I wish to announce that the agricultural prices support board has been authorized to continue to support the price of fowl to March 31, 1958, at 23 cents per pound at Toronto, live weight basis, for No. 1 fowl 5 pounds and over, or in other words the same basis that has been in effect since July of this year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PRESENTATION OF WHITE PAPER BEFORE ESTIMATES CONSIDERED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister table a new white paper on defence before the defence estimates come before us later this week, as has been the usual practice, or does he intend to base the debate on the white paper that was presented by the previous government?

[Mr. MacLean.]

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): On the white paper as presented earlier this year. It is not the intention to present a new white paper before my estimates.

Mr. Coldwell: That is to say, the one presented by the former government?

Mr. Pearkes: That is correct.

CHURCHILL—STATEMENT ON REPORTED POWER SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Springfield asked whether the Minister of National Defence was aware of a reported shortage of electrical power in the town of Churchill. He then added the erroneous information "which is now supplied by his department". The Department of National Defence does not supply any electrical power to the town of Churchill, nor has it facilities for so doing.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REPORTED FAILURE OF SUPPLIES TO REACH MISSIONARIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

According to a news item in the newspaper Le Devoir this morning, seven missionaries are in distress in the Arctic because the supplies that were shipped to them did not reach them at their stations at Repulse Bay, Pelly Bay and Igloolik. What action does the minister intend to take, if any, to see that supplies do reach them for the winter?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice. This is the first time it has come to my attention.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO ENGINEERING REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I have another question to direct to the minister of northern affairs, of which I gave him notice. Has he now received the final report of the British Columbia Engineering Company regarding the possibility of a diversion of the waters of the Columbia to the Fraser river? Also, has he now received the final report of the Montreal Engineering Company Limited regarding the possibilities of developing the water resources of the Columbia basin by integrating the program with that of the United States?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to thank the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet for having given me notice of this question. The answer to the first question is yes, on January 9, 1957.

The answer to the second question is as follows. A report by Montreal Engineering entitled "The Development of Canada's Water Power Resources in the Columbia River Basin", which examines several alternative developments, was received by the department yesterday, December 2, 1957.

Mr. Lesage: Is it the intention of the minister to table these two reports?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we would like to examine them first and decide then.

Mr. Lesage: If the report in the first case was received on January 9, 1957, I am sure the report has now been examined. Is it the intention of the minister to table the British Columbia Engineering Company report.

Mr. Harkness: Why didn't you table it?

Mr. Lesage: I was not asked for it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that we get the answer of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on the record. I suggest the hon. member knows there are very good reasons why we are unable to table reports of such a nature dealing with such a matter until such time as things have progressed to a greater extent than they have today.

Mr. Lesage: I am sorry that I have to ask another question, but I should like to know what the minister means when he says "until things have progressed more than they have up to now". What has the minister done to see that they do progress?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I have made it very clear that when we have information to report to this house it will be given.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources related to the question asked him earlier by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. Could the minister tell the house whether the government of British Columbia also has copies of the engineering report to which he referred, and if so is his refusal to table this document at this time based on some understanding with the government of that province?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before that question is dealt with I think I should give my view that it is not the sort of question that should be asked in this house, because it relates to something that could only be answered by the government of British Columbia. I would therefore suggest to the hon. member that the question is not in order.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder, with deference, if I might make reference to my reason for presenting this question to the minister. My understanding is that in relation to this matter connected with the Columbia river there is in effect an agreement between the governments of Canada and British Columbia, and in that connection I understand there has been in the past some arrangement for the exchange of these documents. I was going on the assumption that this document might come within the purview of the agreement, and it was for clarification of that point that I had in mind in presenting this question.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that alters my view. The question has been asked of the minister as to whether his government has received a copy, and he has dealt with that. Now we are asking if the British Columbia government has received a copy, and it seems to me that is not a question which should be asked.

Mr. Lesage: May I, with deference, speak to this point? I believe what the hon. member asked was this: "Has the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources forwarded copies of these reports to the government of British Columbia?"

Mr. Speaker: If that had been the question I would have allowed it, because it would have been a question as to this government's action. The question was whether the hon. member could be informed whether the British Columbia government had received it. The hon. member may want to modify his question, but as it is it is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have had a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I would now like to direct to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. My question is a result of his reply to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, who asked a question concerning the development of the Columbia river. There is a feeling in British Columbia that the government has reached a state of inertia with regard to the Columbia.

Would the minister please answer this question. Have there been any negotiations undertaken between representatives of Canada and the United States, or are negotiations now being undertaken between the representatives of Canada and the United States, with respect to the development of the Columbia, the settlement of downstream benefits, and things of that sort?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions in this house I have tried to get this question on a plane where we could handle this matter in our own way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I know how anxious the house and all Canadians are to receive information on this matter, because this is one thing that is of very great importance to all the people of Canada. I can assure this house that we have moved as quickly and with as much urgency as we know how; and the way we are going at it will, I am sure, in the final analysis be measured in the results we have achieved; just as in the case of the results we have achieved in the maritimes and, I hope, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lesage: This was done before you came in.

An hon. Member: Just sitting down doing nothing.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think the Columbia will be judged in the same way.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask a supplementary question. Since the meetings in Washington on May 20, have the documents which were supposed to be prepared both in Washington and in Ottawa been exchanged between the two governments with respect to the Columbia development and downstream benefits generally?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is, to my knowledge, no.

Mr. Lesage: Has the Canadian government prepared the documents it was supposed to prepare and to exchange with the United States authorities? If not, what is the reason for the delay?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. McLeod) some days ago asked the Prime Minister the following question:

> Is the present Canadian ambassador to the United States continuing the efforts of his predecessor to have the question of downstream benefits on international rivers considered a top priority problem for settlement with the United States? Could we have an up to date report on the progress, if any, that has been made?

I have an answer here which I was prepared to make today for the Prime Minister in the following words. I am sure my hon. friend will understand that in such matters it is inappropriate to endeavour to state publicly just what the current degree of progress is. However, I may say that the government has given the matter of the Columbia river a high priority, and a good deal of time is being devoted to the examination of all facets of this complex problem. In particular, recent developments in British Columbia and further information on the engineering aspects of the question have introduced new elements for consideration.

The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet will remember that earlier this afternoon the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources pointed out that the final report from Montreal Engineering had been received only yesterday. Now there are many different factors to be considered, and these are all being dealt with as quickly as possible by the government. But I suggest to him, and I am sure he will agree, that it would be very unwise to have an interim statement made in the house where there is the necessity for the completion of negotiations with another country.

Mr. Lesage: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but the Minister of Public Works himself when he was on this side of the house—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lesage: —was the one to press the other side on that subject—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lesage: —and to insist on obtaining answers to his questions. My question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was a very simple one, and I have not been answered.

[Later:]

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is a very simple one, which was originally asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). Are negotiations proceeding between Canada and the United States regarding the Columbia river basin? That is all.

Mr. Green: I can answer that question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Green: I have already dealt with the question in the statement which I read for the Prime Minister. Negotiations have not been suspended at all.

Mr. Lesage: But nothing has been done.

Mr. Coldwell: But I understand there has been no exchange of documents.

Mr. Green: No which?

Mr. Coldwell: It takes three ministers to answer a simple question?

Mr. Green: These negotiations with respect to this question have not yet been completed, but they will be completed at the earliest possible time.

Mr. Lesage: They have not been continued, you mean.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ANDERSON—NEWS REPORT OF SPEECH BY MEMBER FOR BONAVISTA-TWILLINGATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Anderson (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. As a new member in this house I have not made my maiden speech as yet, but I have been a regular attendant and very interested in following the procedure. After 16 years of municipal experience, including four years as mayor of the city of Galt, I felt I did not want to waste the time of this house simply to get my name in Hansard until I had something very definite to contribute.

I want to point out that in all my public service I have been very active and regular in my attendance. Now I am coming to the point. It was, therefore, a big surprise when I read in my local paper that while on a speaking engagement in Waterloo South on Thursday, November 28, addressing a Liberal association in the riding of Waterloo South, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) made a statement to this public meeting at Galt that so far in the session he had not noticed me in this house, and that he did not think anyone else had noticed me either.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Fleming: A contemptible personal remark.

Mr. Anderson: He also stated that in former years they had always known when a contemporary of his was in the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is perfectly true.

Mr. Anderson: Had this order been reversed the statement would be more correct. Coming from a former cabinet minister a statement of that kind is of the lowest order, and would imply that I had not been in attendance. I simply want to make this short statement to bring to the attention of my constituents the fact that I have been a regular attendant at all the sittings here.

An hon. Member: Is this your maiden speech?

Mr. Anderson: Although the hon. gentleman opposite has not noticed me as yet I feel that he may very well do so in the future, as I intend to get my feet under the table before I sound off; and it is my intention to serve all the citizens in my riding to the best of my ability.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for not having noticed him. I will not make the same mistake again.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are on the record now. You are all right.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED DELAY IN ISSUING SUMMER UNIFORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's previous insistence on the practice of exactitude, rectitude and promptitude by the Post Office Department, I want to address a question to the Postmaster General. Does the minister know that it has recently been the practice of the haberdashery branch of his department to issue the postmen summer clothing just prior to the coming of winter? Can the minister assure the house that he will take action to correct this Rip Van Winkle approach to life and the seasons on the part of the branch concerned?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of all except the first sentence of his question, and dealing with that first sentence I want to say that I am all in favour of exactitude, rectitude and pulchritude as well.

Mr. Sinclair: We know that.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Both my officials and I are aware of this situation, which is a serious one—which was a serious one—across Canada throughout the past summer. It arose because the previous government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —awarded the contract for this clothing to a contractor who had already demonstrated unsatisfactory performance but who apparently had a special attraction for them, before this government took office.

Mr. Marler: What does the hon. gentleman mean by that?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): In view of discussions I have had with my very able officials, Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate that this situation will arise again, particularly—

Mr. Sinclair: Not until next Christmas.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): —because there are no Rip Van Winkle characteristics about the new government.

FINANCE

REPORTED CABINET LEAK RESPECTING EXCISE TAX CHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is the government aware of the statement that was made over the C.B.C. this morning by Mr. John Maclean of the Financial Post that it looks as though there has been a cabinet leak. He also said this always gives the Prime Minister the twitches. Can the Acting Prime Minister say whether the government has run down this and other reports to the effect that there has been a cabinet leak concerning an excise tax change?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will answer that question.

An hon. Member: Who is the Acting Prime Minister?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I received at my office just a short time ago a telephone message from Mr. Maclean, and I gather that the substance of his telephone call relates to the matter referred to by my hon. friend. Apparently Mr. Maclean made something of a broadcast this morning in which he made reference to a statement appearing in an address I delivered yesterday relating to the October figures for the consumer price index in Canada—

Mr. Sinclair: When does parliament get those figures?

Mr. Fleming: —and suggested these might have been advance figures. The message from Mr. Maclean indicated that on looking into the matter he found and now fully realized that these figures had been made public several weeks ago, that I had referred to them in the house already on several earlier occasions, and that his remarks suggesting that there had been some leak in this respect were entirely without foundation.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question, either of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance, arising from the fact that the Minister of Finance must have misunderstood my previous question. I asked about what Mr. John Maclean said over the C.B.C. this morning. My reference was not to the premature release of D.B.S. statistics, but to Mr. Maclean's reference to the fact that it appeared as though there had been a cabinet leak regarding excise tax changes. My question was, has the government run down this and other reports concerning a cabinet leak in that field?

Mr. Fleming: I thank my hon. friend for his clarification. He will understand that I did not hear the broadcast in question and I did not have a copy of the script, but simply went by a message that reached my office. If he is referring to an alleged leak in relation to the matter of excise tax, let me assure him and the house that there was no such thing as a leak from any cabinet source, from the Department of Finance or any government official. What he refers to is pure and simple newspaper speculation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has the government ascertained where the newspapers got the basis for that speculation?

Mr. Speaker: I think that clearly goes too far. How can the government be expected to know where the newspapers get their information?

BRIDGES

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSION WITH PREMIERS OF QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister may I direct a question to the leader of the house. Last week the mayors of Hull and Ottawa sent telegrams to the Prime Minister and the premiers of Ontario and Quebec relating to the construction of a badly needed bridge over the Ottawa river east of the present Alexandra bridge. Can the minister tell us if the question has been discussed with the premiers of Quebec and Ontario?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly the Prime Minister dealt with this question some days ago. It is my understanding that a new bridge could only be built by agreement among the different parties concerned.

Mr. Caron: Is it the intention of the government to take up the matter of the building of such a bridge with the premiers of Ontario and Quebec in the near future?

Mr. Green: This would be an interprovincial bridge and, as I pointed out a moment ago, if a new bridge is to be built it would have to be by the three governments co-operating, namely the federal government and the two provincial governments. I think the federal government throughout has taken the position that it is willing to co-operate.

Mr. Caron: That does not answer my question. I want to know if it is the intention of the government to discuss the matter with the premiers of Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has had an answer to his question. He has had two attempts to clarify it, and it seems to me that is sufficient.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR INTERVIEW WITH PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister, but in his absence perhaps his parliamentary assistant could take it as notice. Has the Prime Minister received a letter from the city clerk of Windsor, acting on behalf of the metropolitan committee composed of mayors and reeves of Windsor, Riverside, Tecumseh, Lasalle, Sandwich East township, Sandwich West township, Sandwich South township, St. Clair Beach and Ojibway, dated November 22, requesting an appointment to meet with him and the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Public Works?

Since the Prime Minister is not present perhaps I might be permitted to ask an additional question. Was the Prime Minister advised of my telephone request of November 28 to his secretary attempting to arrange such an interview? Also—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): —has the Prime Minister had drawn to his attention my letter to him dated November 28, requesting such an interview by the committee? If so, would he kindly indicate when he may meet with this committee?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am supposed to answer that question as parliamentary assistant to the Prime Minister, as Minister of Public Works or in what capacity, but I understand that the answer has gone out and it has been suggested that the delegation should meet the Prime Minister next Wednesday.

AIRPORTS

LAKEHEAD—EMERGENCY SERVICE FOLLOWING FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What steps has your department taken to provide emergency facilities at the lakehead airport following the disastrous fire of last Friday?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I would like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question and I would also like to thank the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) for having advised me of his intention to ask a similar question.

This fire destroyed power and communications facilities, and interrupted the operation of the control tower. Immediately after the fire an emergency team from the departmental district headquarters in Winnipeg proceeded over the week end to the lakehead and have since, I believe, been successful in restoring communications and power on a temporary basis. They are also exploring the possibility of restoration of control tower services on a temporary basis. Permanent reconstruction of the necessary facilities will, of course, be proceeded with as soon as possible.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Whereas the airfield outside Fort William is the first government baby which the former minister of trade and commerce planted in Fort William, and whereas it is our duty to see it is properly protected and nourished, I ask the minister if he has received any request from any source that the field be removed further west of Fort William. I thank him for his courtesy.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have had no such request.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—PRESSURE APPLIED DURING TEST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Mr. Lewry) asked if I could obtain the pressure rate being applied during a test of the Trans-Canada pipe line prior to the break which occurred near Mortlach on November 3, in view of the statement that the pipe was designed for a working pressure of 826 pounds.

The board of transport commissioners advise me that the answer is 852 pounds per square inch. I might add that this portion of the Trans-Canada pipe line, which is designed for a working pressure of 826 pounds, must be tested at a pressure of 910 pounds per square inch before the company is authorized by the board to operate the pipe line.

The board state that the pressure had been raised to 910 pounds in the section of pipe between valve 9 and valve 12, and it was when the pressure was being equalized in the sections between valves 9 and 12 and valves 12 and 13 that the break occurred when the pressure in the portion between valves 12 and 13 reached 852 pounds.

POSTAL SERVICE

COST OF SENDING PARCELS TO ENGLAND AND GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he is aware that it costs more to send a 20-pound parcel direct to England than it would cost to send a similar parcel direct to Germany; and, if so, what steps has he taken to rectify this unjust discrepancy?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to look into the matter and give an answer to the hon. member, perhaps by correspondence, as this question might very well have been put on the order paper. However, I might point out to him that this is a matter which would, I should think, come within the purview of the international postal union and not within the purview of any individual government.

PUBLIC WORKS

NEW BRUNSWICK-PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO CAUSEWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of a news report in the Charlottetown Guardian of November 30 that the minister had stated he was particularly interested in making the Prince Edward Island causeway a toll road, will he tell the house what progress is being made on this project?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I am very glad to advise the hon. member and the house that I have never made any such statement.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD TO BE PURSUED IN MAKING TAX CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the statement regarding the business of the house which was made yesterday by the Prime Minister. I refer in particular to the statement of the Prime Minister when he said that in so far as changes in income tax are concerned, those changes could be made by notice. Does this statement of the Prime Minister, coupled with the statement that there will not be a formal budget at this session, mean that any tax changes to be made by the government will be made merely by means of government notice, without any moving of the motion or any debate this session.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): If I accurately apprehend the hon. member's question, I would say that he has not grasped the purport of the Prime Minister's remarks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then would the Minister of Finance explain what the Prime Minister meant by his statement yesterday?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I think it will be simpler if I told the hon. member and the house that I hope the estimates of the Department of Finance will be before the house before the end of this week, and at that time I will be glad to deal fully with all these matters.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the Minister of Finance not say what the Prime Minister meant yesterday; whether at this session there will be notices of motions regarding tax changes, and if so will those motions be moved at this session?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have a full and complete answer to his question if he will just wait a day or two until the estimates of the Department of Finance are before the house, because at that time I propose to deal with all subjects relating to the government's financial policy so far as they arise this session.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Finance whether, when he speaks to his estimates, he will be giving us what will amount to a balance sheet or a budget statement indicating the state of the finances of the country at the present time.

Mr. Fleming: It is a question of degree, I should think. I do not think that at the stage we have reached of this short session it would be expected that I should enter upon a detailed review of the whole economy of the country, as is normally done by a minister of finance during a budget speech, when he points up the highlights of the lengthy white paper it is customary to table.

However, I would assure the house that I have expected at all times—and I shall be happy to do this, since the house will expect it of me—to give a statement of the balance of ways and means to indicate precisely where we stand financially, as the hon. member is asking.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REPORTED PRESENCE IN CANADA OF RUSSIAN TRADE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a news item to the effect that there is a Russian trade delegation presently in Canada and that they are interested in many Canadian products. It is also mentioned that they are interested in wheat. Can the minister state whether or not this trade delegation has been met by officials of the government, and whether or not there is any hope that we might have a sale of some of our Canadian wheat to Russia?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that there is a Russian trade delegation in Canada, just as there was a Russian hockey team here a little while ago.

Some hon. Members: They are still here.

Mr. Churchill: Russia has been buying wheat from us, and some of that wheat is still being shipped to Russia. Whether or not they are in the market for more wheat at the present time, I do not know.

Some hon. Members: Why not?

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINDSOR—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Minister of Public Works. On November 22 the minister stated that he would be glad to look into the situation respecting demolition of the buildings preparatory to the erection of a new post office in Windsor. May I ask if he is now prepared to give an answer?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the hon. member asking me this question. I explained to him a few days after the opening of this session in October that one of the big difficulties in going ahead with this demolition work is that his own government did not provide anything in the estimates which we could use to do the work, and that is still the position. However, I will say this. We are trying very hard to devise some way to get around that difficulty, so we can get authority from the treasury board to go ahead with the work. All our problem in this regard has been caused by the former government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nonsense. You brought in supplementary estimates.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION AND PURCHASE OF BRANCH LINES IN MANITOBA

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction by Canadian National Railway Company of a line of railway from Optic lake to Chisel lake in the province of Manitoba, being approximately fifty-two miles, at a total estimated expenditure of $8,840,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent; and also to authorize the purchase from The International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, by the said railway company, of a line of railway from a point on the Hudson Bay Railway line at or near Sipiwesk to a point on the Burntwood river at or near Mystery lake in the province of Manitoba, a distance of thirty miles, more or less, at a price not exceeding $5,400,000; to authorize the issue by the said railway company of securities that may be guaranteed by Her Majesty in right of Canada to finance the construction and purchase of the said lines; and, in order that the said railway company may forthwith proceed with construction and the purchase of the said lines of railway, to authorize temporary loans to the said railway company out of the consolidated revenue fund upon terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council and secured by securities of the said railway company.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I intend to make a short statement at the opening of this debate. First I would ask to have distributed among hon. members some eight copies of a map showing the area in which the railway lines are being built. I have always found it a lot easier to follow what is going on if I could see on a map where the particular projects were being constructed, and I would ask that the maps be distributed amongst hon. members.

This resolution seeks to authorize the Canadian National Railways, first, to construct a line of railway from Optic lake to Chisel lake, in the province of Manitoba, a distance of 52 miles, at an estimated cost of $8,840,000; and second, to purchase and operate as part of the Canadian National Railways system a line of railway being constructed by the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, between a point on the Hudson Bay Railway near Sipiwesk and a point on the Burntwood river near Mystery lake, also in the province of Manitoba, a distance of 30 miles, at a price not exceeding $5,400,000.

The main purpose of the proposed railway lines is to provide outlets for the mines which are being developed both at Chisel lake and in the vicinity of Moak and Mystery lakes. In addition, the lines would aid in the development of a substantial area which shows evidence of possessing considerable mineral wealth.

Chisel lake lies about 80 miles northeast of The Pas and 52 miles east of Optic lake, which is a point on the Lynn lake line of the Canadian National Railways. Substantial ore reserves, consisting mainly of zinc and copper, are being developed in the Chisel lake area on the property of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, Limited, and rail service to move this ore to the mining company's mill at Flin Flon will be required by 1960.

The Mystery lake branch line would serve principally to move large nickel deposits owned by the International Nickel Company in the vicinity of the townsite of Thompson, and also in the Mystery-Moak lakes area, a short distance to the north. It would also serve the International Nickel processing plant at Thompson, consisting of a mill, a smelter and a refinery, in addition to the townsite itself with a population of 8,000 people. The deposits in the Mystery-Moak lakes area will be linked to Thompson by a private railway owned and operated by the International Nickel Company. The 30-mile railway which the Canadian National proposes to purchase would therefore connect the townsite itself with the Hudson Bay Railway.

The construction of this line has been financed by the International Nickel Company because it was desirous of obtaining railway service at the earliest possible date and the Canadian National Railways did not have the necessary parliamentary authority to make the required capital expenditures. In the circumstances, the management of Canadian National agreed to let the nickel company build the line with the company's own funds and subject to the authorization of parliament, to purchase the line upon its completion, provided construction was to the entire satisfaction of the railways chief engineer and in accordance with standards of construction approved by the board of transport commissioners.

To guard against excessive costs which might result from the desire of the nickel company to construct the line in a short period of time, it was agreed that the purchase price would be the costs which Canadian National would have incurred if the line had been built by it in the normal course of events and under a normal construction schedule. Limited operations by the Canadian National under a temporary lease arrangement have already begun over this line in order to meet the urgent needs of industry.

I am advised that in both cases the mining developments to which I have referred are of such magnitude that the construction, in one instance, and the purchase, in the other instance, of the proposed branch lines would constitute good business ventures. Nevertheless, the Canadian National has secured from both of the industries concerned guarantees of a minimum volume of traffic or minimum revenues for a period of ten years with adequate penalties should traffic or revenues in any year fall short of the guarantee.

I trust that the resolution will commend itself to the house as an important step towards the development of a substantial area of northern Canada and the opening up of new frontiers. Perhaps the house will permit me to add that when the bill that will follow the resolution has been given second reading I propose to move that it be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before the committee is preliminary, as the minister has indicated, to the introduction of a measure to authorize Canadian National Railways to do two things; first, to construct a line of railway from Optic lake to Chisel lake in the province of Manitoba, a distance of approximately 52 miles, at a total estimated cost of $8,840,000 and, second, to purchase from the International Nickel Company of Canada a line of railway from a point at or near Sipiwesk on the Hudson Bay Railway to a point on the Burntwood river at or near Mystery lake in the province of Manitoba, a distance of 30 miles, at a price not exceeding $5,400,000.

I should like to mention to the committee that as favourable consideration was given to both of these projects by the former government of which I was a member I may assure the committee that it is not our intention to delay the passing of the resolution or the measure which will follow the adoption of the resolution. I think, however, that the presentation of this resolution does afford an appropriate occasion to emphasize the importance of railroad development to the economy of Canada.

I do not want to spend much time in dealing with this aspect of the question but I do think it is fair to point out that railroad building in Canada came to a virtual halt many years ago. We had some 42,047 miles of railway in operation in 1930, 42,248 miles in 1948 and 42,953 in 1952. The difference between the last two figures which I have just given is explained by the inclusion in the statistics for the first time of the 705 miles of railway in Newfoundland which were taken over in 1949. But I should like to emphasize that since 1952 a number of important projects have been carried out, a large part by the Canadian National Railways and some by other railway companies.

I may mention by way of illustration the 144 miles of line from Sherridon to Lynn lake in Manitoba which, of course, makes possible now the construction of the proposed branch line from Optic lake to Chisel lake. I might mention also the 300 mile line partially completed between Beattyville-Chibougamau and St. Felicien in the lake St. John area in Quebec, and also the shorter lines from Terrace to Kitimat in British Columbia, from Hillsport to lake Manitouwadge in northern Ontario and more recently the line fom Bartibog to the Tomogonops river in New Brunswick. In addition to these, there are two other important projects, first, that of the Quebec, North Shore and Labrador Railway, a line about 300 miles in length from Seven Islands to Knob lake, and the more recent project of the Pacific Great Eastern 256 miles in length from Prince George, British Columbia, to Dawson Creek.

What is particularly gratifying, I think, to all Canadians in considering the railroad development that has taken place in relatively recent times is that the purpose has been to promote the further development of our natural resources. In some instances it has been the development of iron ore; in other cases, the development of deposits of base metals; in other cases it has been the development of timber resources and, as many hon. members know, in the case of the line between Terrace and Kitimat it has been the development of hydroelectric power for the production of aluminum from imported bauxite.

It is rather significant, Mr. Chairman, that this same pattern is being followed in the case of the two branch lines which are covered by this resolution. I am not familiar with the development expenditures which the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company proposes to make in connection with the zinc and copper deposits to which the minister referred in his explanation a moment ago, but it is a matter of public knowledge that the International Nickel Company last year, before the actual commencement of the Sipiwesk-Mystery lake branch line had been undertaken, announced its intention to spend $175 million for the development of these mineral deposits.

So that, Mr. Chairman, the matter of satisfaction to Canadians is, it seems to me, that railroad development marches forward hand in hand with the development of our natural resources and not only makes possible the development of those resources but also makes it reasonable and good business for the owners or operators of these mineral deposits to lay out very substantial sums for development purposes.

Another matter that I think is of importance and also a source of satisfaction to those who have been interested in transportation in Canada is that in all of the cases of branch lines to which I have referred—there may be other examples which might be cited also—except the Beattyville-Chibougamau-St. Felicien branch line, the traffic in prospect has been sufficient to make the project self-supporting either immediately or in the short-term future and it has not been necessary for the government to provide substantial subsidies to make possible the building of these various branch lines. The exception, of course, is the Beattyville-Chibougamau-St. Felicien branch line for which a subsidy of $25,000 per mile was granted by the government because it believed that the construction of that line, which was self-liquidating in part, would open to development a large area of mining territory which ultimately would prove advantageous to the Canadian people. The other exception which I perhaps should mention is the offer of a subsidy which was made in connection with part of the P.G.E. in British Columbia but that is not, of course, connected with the resolution now under consideration.

From what the minister has said in introducing the resolution it is quite clear that this same characteristic, that is to say, of there being adequate traffic to support the project, applies to the two branch lines which are provided for in the resolution now before the committee. In other words, the Canadian National Railways are to lay out rather substantial sums to provide for the capital cost but the revenues, or perhaps I should say additions to the operating profit, which will be in prospect will be sufficient to meet the annual cost of operation and to provide a reasonable return on the company's investment.

As the minister has pointed out, arrangements have been made with regard to future traffic over the branch lines which have been completed by Canadian National Railways with the mining interests that are to be served by these lines. I take it, Mr. Chairman, since the minister has said the bill will be referred, after second reading, to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, that we shall have an opportunity then of going more fully into the traffic arrangements that have been concluded between these two mining companies and the management of Canadian National Railways. Consequently I do not think any useful purpose would be served by my making now any more extensive remarks with regard to those traffic arrangements.

There is only one point which I should like to draw to the attention of the minister particularly, and that is the purchase price of the line to be acquired from the International Nickel Company. During the course of his remarks, he gave the impression that one reason why this particular branch line had not been completed by Canadian National Railways was that the company did not have the necessary parliamentary authority to make the expenditures that would have been needed for that purpose. This is not my own recollection of the circumstances, Mr. Chairman. As I understood the circumstances earlier this year they were that the International Nickel desired to have this branch line completed at a much earlier date than would have been possible had Canadian National proceeded to build it with railway forces or by contractors in the usual manner and by saying "in the usual manner" I mean that no additional expense would have been incurred by the railway in order to hurry the completion of the line before what might be described as a normal date.

When the matter was discussed with me earlier this year, it was represented to me that this was, in the view of the nickel company, a crash program that had to be undertaken, and as I understood the arrangement between the Canadian National and the company it was to the effect that the railway company would pay the nickel company the cost that would have been incurred by Canadian National if the construction of the branch line had been carried out at a normal pace and in the fashion in which such branch lines are usually constructed. I have a record of the cost figure which was considered at the time to be the maximum amount which the railway would be called upon to pay to the nickel company. As I would say to the minister, and he will have the necessary information available in his files, that the cost as set forth in the resolution substantially exceeds the figure which was mentioned at the time the matter came under consideration under the former government.

I do not raise that point as an objection, Mr. Chairman, because I realize fully that the figure we had in mind earlier this year was an estimate, and an estimate made at a time when the work had not been completed and when all the physical difficulties, the delays and the costs had not been definitely established. I should like to suggest to the minister that when the bill is considered in the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, arrangements be made to explain why there has been, over this relatively short period, such a substantial increase in the estimated cost of this branch line. I have no doubt, because of my own experience and association with the management of Canadian National Railways, that the management will be able to give convincing reasons why there is a difference between the two figures. But I do think I should emphasize the matter as it does seem to me that an explanation would be desirable, and I am sure it will be freely given.

I conclude by saying I do not wish for a moment to delay the passage of this resolution, and that it is our intention, for the reasons I have already given, to support not only the resolution but the legislation which is based on it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We in this group are pleased to give our general support to this resolution, and we welcome the statement of the minister that the bill, after second reading, will be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I should say that I am happy, not only to indicate the general support of this group for this legislation, but since I am the first member from Manitoba to speak since the matter has been raised I may say that in Manitoba we welcome whole-heartedly these developments that are taking place in the northern part of our province.

We in this group, of course, are anxious that the benefits from these developments might accrue to the people of this country. We are anxious also that, in view of the important part played by the railways in making these developments possible, the workers who run the railways might get the best possible wages and working conditions as a result of their employment on the railway lines of this country. With these general comments, as I say, we are pleased to give our support to this legislation and to learn that the bill will be referred to the standing committee.

With regard to the last point that was raised by the former minister of transport, the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, it seems to me that the discrepancy between the original estimate of what the Canadian National Railways would have to pay for the Mystery lake-Sipiwesk line and the amount of $5,400,000 which is set out in this legislation should be explained today rather than waiting until this legislation is before the standing committee. The Minister of Transport can speak as often as he likes now that we are in committee on this resolution, and I would hope that he would tell us what he knows with reference to the matter that has been raised by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount. I noted that the last speaker did not give the amount of the estimate made earlier this year. Certainly if the difference between that estimate and this figure of $5,400,000 is of any size, I would say we are entitled to an explanation today rather than having to wait until a later time.

The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount will not mind if I take a moment to correct him on his geography. After all, coming from the city of Montreal as he does, he may not be acquainted with the wilds of northern Manitoba. I did note that he referred to the construction not long ago of the branch line from Sherridon to Lynn lake. I heard him say that it was the construction of that line that now made it possible to build the branch line from Chisel lake to Optic lake. Perhaps if the hon. member will look at the map, he will realize that Optic lake is on the part of the line between Cranberry Portage and Sherridon, which has been there for many years.

Mr. Marler: I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sure the hon. member would like to have that correction made in so far as the geography of northern Manitoba is concerned. As we have indicated, Mr. Chairman, we welcome the fact that this legislation will be referred to the standing committee and on that basis we are happy to give it our general support.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to say that we in this group will go along with the second reading on the understanding which the minister gave that the bill will be referred to the committee where we can have a more thorough study of it. From just looking over the map here it seems to me that the price may be rather high per mile of construction. Of course, that is information that we cannot get at the moment. I hope we shall be able to get that information when the bill is before the committee.

Then there is the question of the other smaller line of 33 miles, I think from Mystery lake to Sipiwesk and whether or not the price that the Canadian National Railway Company is going to pay for it would include the rolling stock. Those are all questions that have a bearing on the judgment we shall be able to use when we come into the committee to decide whether or not we shall go along with the proposition as outlined here in the resolution.

Generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, we in this group do not want to delay anything that would lend progress to the development of any part of Canada. It seems to me that the construction of these two lines could add to the development in those areas. If that is so and if the cost is reasonable, I am sure that, all other things considered, we would have no objection to giving our consent to this bill provided, of course, that the information we get in the committee leads us to believe that this is an essential service and that the price is in accordance with ordinary business standards.

Having said that, I think I will leave any further remarks I have to make until we come to the committee stage. Through experience I have found that to be the proper place in which to get the information you desire; and in most cases, when a proposition like this is explained to the committee, I have found that the committee has always been reasonable in granting permission and allowing the construction of such things to proceed.

Mr. Simpson: In rising to speak on this bill that is now before us, I would point out that it is one which includes two distinct measures. It provides for the construction of a rail line between a point called Optic lake on the Cranberry Portage—Lynn lake line on the C.N.R. to Chisel lake in the province of Manitoba and for the purchase from the International Nickel Company of Canada of a line from Sipiwesk on the Hudson bay line to a point near Mystery lake, the new townsite of Thompson. From experience in that area I should like to say that those are two measures that should receive the hearty support of this house.

Hon. members from all parts of this house have shown of late great concern, and rightly so, as to what government action should be taken with regard to making possible the continuation of various developments closely related to the base metal mining industry in various parts of Canada. It has been quite evident that their concern has been in relation to the employment or unemployment situation, and in this regard I heartily concur. I might say that in both of the cases we are presently considering we have before us a concrete example as to how we can not only assure continued employment for a great number of people over an expected long period of time but can also open the way for untold hundreds to join the ranks of the permanently employed.

The construction of this one line will give immediate employment to many construction workers and at its completion it could easily be a life-saver for a mining town near its extreme end, a town which could quite conceivably soon turn into a ghost town if further development in this area is not continued at the present time. I am referring to the town of Snow Lake at the extreme end of this Chisel lake line. It is a gold mining town and unfortunately has fairly well come to the end of its resources. In that section there are roughly 900 to 1,000 people who have been there for many years. Through hard work and their own labour they have built their homes. Having their homes there now, they consider it to be home. Very fortunately the mines that are going to be served by this Chisel lake branch line are within a very few miles of the town of Snow Lake. The furthest shaft from Snow Lake town would be only eight miles, I would say; and at the present time there is a good highway from this shaft to the town of Snow Lake. Hence the completion of that rail line to Chisel lake is going to mean a great deal to the people in Snow Lake who at the present time are just wondering what is going to happen to the homes into which they have put their entire life savings.

Authorization of the other line is also going to mean a great deal. At the present time at the townsite of Thompson there are approximately 500 construction workers from all parts of Canada. The amazing and gratifying thing about this development is that quite conceivably by 1960 we can expect to have in that area a population of anywhere from 8,000 to 10,000 people. The benefits to all of Canada and to Manitoba in particular are inestimable. It is going to be a great boon to the economy of the entire country. I might say that anybody from that area will heartily endorse this measure which is currently before us.

I might say that I was quite interested in the point brought out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the statement by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount. I was not quite sure whether or not I had heard correctly but judging from the answer, apparently I did hear correctly. I might point out that that portion of the line on which Optic lake is a station has been in operation for approximately 25 years. The start of the Chisel lake line at this time will tie in very conveniently with the development work which is going on in that area. At the present time there are two shafts, as I mentioned, in the process of being sunk and the program is to bring them into production at a time between now and 1960. Hence any delay we might have in starting work on the Chisel lake line could seriously affect these people about whom I am concerned at the town of Snow Lake. I would heartily recommend to all hon. members of this house that they endorse this proposition whole-heartedly.

Mr. Mitchell: May I be permitted to say a few words on this resolution, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as one part of it concerns a company which has its operations in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. International Nickel, or as it is more commonly known in our area, INCO, as you know have their general offices and most of their smelting and mining operations in my constituency. It is common knowledge in our area that considerable activity has been taking place in the Moak lake and Mystery lake areas and a great many of our men have been transferred to those places, particularly those in the higher level salaried positions. We have known for some time that considerable money—which has already been referred to by the member for St. Antoine-Westmount—to the extent of $175 million is expected to be spent by this company in this area.

With this fact in view, it has been intended to try and get out their ore to a smelter as quickly as possible, and as has been suggested here this afternoon, speed was of the essence in this regard. I understand that this line is now in operation and the smelting processes which will soon take place will be able to guarantee operation at a faster pace than would have been the case if they had waited for the building of this line by Canadian National Railways. There is no doubt that this is going to add to the economy of northern Manitoba and, at the same time it is not going to hurt us a great deal in the area from which I come. Considerable after-smelting operations will have to be carried out in our area, particularly the refining of the matt. There will be further opportunities for the transport companies in the transportation of this matt or unprocessed ore to our area for further development.

The company over these years has felt this is a desirable development and the building of the line, and now the authorization of this committee to be set up following second reading, will repay them for the moneys which they have expended to construct this line. For this reason I certainly have no hesitation in supporting this bill and I feel that I can recommend it to all members of the house.

Mr. McCullough: I shall only take a moment or two in saying that I would like to agree with the members who have already spoken. I am sure every member of this house will agree that we would like to see the promotion of these projects which will bring into exploitation our natural resources. I use the word exploitation rather than just straight development because I think it should be remembered that these resources are non-renewable. When we go into the bowels of the earth and we exploit our mineral resources or our oil resources then, of course, they are not renewable. I would just like to point out that we in this party certainly want to see our resources exploited but exploited for the greatest good to the greatest number of our Canadian people.

Some parts of Canada have ghost towns where the resources have been exploited and I think it has not always been the fact that the return from the exploitation of these resources has gone to our people but rather that it has gone into the profits of the company exploiting them.

I would like to make one further point and that is that if it is true, as the former minister of transport has indicated to the committee this afternoon, that the figures in the resolution today are higher and do not correspond with the former figures for the cost of construction of these two rail lines, then I think it is important that the committee should find out definitely the former assessment of costs for such construction. I want to say that I believe the cost to the Canadian people will be a straight subsidy to the company. I am not of course trying to suggest that we do not want this development for the people of Canada and particularly for the people of Manitoba, but I would like to point out that this is a subsidy to the company, in my opinion, which will mean that they will be able to exploit these resources—

Mr. Marler: A subsidy to which company?

Mr. McCullough: —and the charge for the traffic carried and the use of the railway will, to some extent at least, pay back the expenditure of the Canadian taxpayer. However, as I say, I do support it and I hope we will receive an early report back from the committee and that it will pass the house and there will be exploitation of these great resources in northern Manitoba.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, there has been some concern regarding the difference between the estimate made before the railway line was started and the actual cost now that it has been completed. I was quite surprised to hear the hon. member for Moose Mountain refer to it as some sort of subsidy and I am not quite sure just what he means—

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I was referring to the whole amount. I considered it as a subsidy for the company, not just as a general increase.

Mr. Hees: Well do I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member means that the $5,400,000 is a subsidy to the company?

Mr. McCullough: In effect, yes.

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is the kind of investment which I think railways have always made and have found to be profitable. It is the kind of thing which has been gone into thoroughly by the management of the railway company and, at a cost of $5,400,000, they estimate it is going to be a money-making proposition for the railway and for the country. I fail therefore to follow the hon. member's reasoning that the building of the railway to develop our natural resources is in some way a subsidy to a particular company.

I believe it is participating in the development of this country and I think most of the hon. members of this house believe that this country should be developed. Furthermore, in a country the size of Canada transportation, in my view, must precede development because our distances are so great. Unless you have transportation facilities you simply cannot develop the country.

With respect to what the hon. member for St. Antoine-Wesmount said about the difference between the estimate made early last year and the actual all-in cost, I am afraid I do not have the answer to that at the moment. I have asked my parliamentary assistant to find out from the management of the railway company the reason for this difference. I assume it is the sort of thing which so often happens when an all-in cost turns out to be considerably higher than what the estimate has been, but , as I say, I have asked for the information from the railway company and hope to have it very soon. If it is not available today it will certainly be available for the committee when it meets in the next day or so. I refer, of course, to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. The officials of the railway companies will be available to answer questions and I hope they will have the explanation for the committee in a very short space of time.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, in view of what the minister has said, could he tell the committee how long it would take after these railways are in operation for the cost to be returnable on the operations?

Mr. Hees: The estimate is within 10 years, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is another point which I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, which arises out of the statement made by the hon. member for Sudbury when he reminded us that the head offices of the International Nickel Company are in his constituency.

I realize it is a little out of the field of the Minister of Transport, but there is a suggestion I should like to make to the government, that is that the government should be reminded of what is now being done; that there are a number of instances such as this where natural resources are developed or exploited where wealth is produced in some parts of the country, such as Manitoba, and the head offices are in another province. Perhaps the government will bear this in mind when making federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hees thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 196, respecting the construction of a line of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from Optic lake to Chisel lake, and the purchase by Canadian National Railway Company from the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, of a line of railway from Sipiwesk to a point on Burntwood river near Mystery lake, all in the province of Manitoba.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): When shall this bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave.

Mr. Hees moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Marler: I understood that the minister was going to say a word on the bill.

[Mr. Hees.]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this bill is to authorize the Canadian National, first to construct a 52-mile line of railway, referred to in the bill as branch line No. 1, from Optic lake easterly to Chisel lake at a cost not exceeding $8,840,000 and second, to purchase from the International Nickel Company of Canada a 30-mile line of railway, referred to as branch line No. 2, between Sipiwesk, on the Hudson Bay railway, and a point on the Burntwood river, in the Mystery and Moak lakes area, at a price not to exceed $5,400,000.

With regard to branch line No. 1, substantial ore reserves consisting mainly of zinc and copper, are being developed by the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company in the Chisel lake area. Rail service to move this ore to the mining company's mill at Flin Flon will be required by July 1, 1960. The bill provides for the completion of the line by November 1, 1959, or such later date as the governor in council may approve.

Chisel lake lies about 30 miles north of the Hudson Bay railway and is therefore closer thereto than to the Lynn lake line. However, if a branch line were built from the Hudson Bay railway the distance to be covered to Flin Flon, to which point the ore will be moving, would be 195 miles, whereas, under the present plan, the distance from Chisel lake to Flin Flon will be about 100 miles. The line is to serve primarily the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, but it will also aid in the development of a substantial area which shows evidence of possessing considerable mineral wealth.

The Canadian National has secured a guarantee of a minimum volume of traffic, under which the mining company has undertaken to ship not less than 350,000 tons of raw ore or in the alternative 70,000 tons of concentrates per annum for a period of ten years. The mining company will pay a penalty on a tonnage basis if shipments in any year fall short of the guaranteed annual tonnage. Any surplus over the guaranteed tonnage accruing in succeeding years would lead to an appropriate refund of penalty by the railway. If, at the end of the ten-year period, an accumulated shortage exists below a total figure of 3,500,000 tons of ore, or 700,000 tons of concentrates, a further period of five years will afford an opportunity for the mining company to recoup the penalties paid. If in any year of this five-year period the mining company ships ore or concentrates in excess of the annual guaranteed tonnage, the railway company will make refunds to the mining company on a tonnage basis to the extent of such excess, but the total of such refunds is not to exceed the total amount of penalties paid by the mining company.

Branch line No. 2 has been constructed and is being completed as a private project of the nickel company. This was done because of the desire of the nickel company to have rail service available as quickly as possible and, therefore, in advance of the time when parliamentary approval for the construction of the line by the Canadian National could be secured. The nickel company indicated that it would likely take special measures to expedite construction, which would add to the cost of the line. In agreeing to purchase the line, the management of Canadian National made such agreement subject to the condition that the price to be paid to the nickel company would be the costs which the Canadian National would have incurred if the line had been constructed by it in the normal course of events and under a normal construction schedule.

The line will serve principally the new mining developments of the nickel company in the vicinity of the townsite of Thompson and the Mystery-Moak lakes area. These consist of large nickel deposits. The line would also serve the International Nickel processing plant at Thompson, consisting of a mill, a smelter and a refinery, in addition to the townsite itself with a population of 8,000 people. The site of the deposits in the Mystery-Moak lakes area will be linked to Thompson by a private railway owned and operated by the nickel company.

It is expected that the traffic that will result from the establishment of these mines will give the Canadian National earnings sufficient to warrant its purchasing line. There has nevertheless been included in the agreement between the railway and the nickel company a traffic guarantee clause. Under this traffic guarantee, the nickel company has undertaken that the gross tolls received from the traffic to, from and over the branch line will equal in annual value one-tenth of the purchase price of the line in each year for a period of ten years. The agreement provides that if the gross tolls do not meet this guarantee, the nickel company will provide 20 per cent of the difference to the railway company. If, at the end of the ten-year period, the nickel company has paid to the railway company any money under the traffic guarantee clause, the nickel company has a period of five years to recoup the money so paid. During this period of five years, the nickel company will not be under any obligation to the railway company respecting a traffic guarantee, but if in any year for a period of five years the gross tolls received by the railway company exceed in amount one-tenth of the cost of the line the railway company will make refunds to the nickel company to the extent of 20 per cent on each such excess. Refunds to be made by the nickel company to the railway company, if any, during the five-year period are not to exceed the amount of any deficiencies paid to the railway company by the nickel company during the ten-year period to which reference has been made.

The line was sufficiently constructed in October, 1957, to be ready for operation and the nickel company requested that the railway inaugurate service immediately. A temporary lease arrangement was therefore made between the Canadian National and the nickel company under which the Canadian National undertook to operate the line at a rental equivalent to 4¼ per cent interest on the capital sum invested by the nickel company in the construction of the line under a normal construction schedule. This arrangement was approved by the order in council P.C.1957-1356, dated October 9, 1957, and was subject to the issue of an order of the board of transport commissioners under section 279 of the Railway Act for opening the railway for traffic. Such an order was issued on October 17, 1957, and a spike-driving ceremony took place on Sunday, October 20. The line has since been operated by Canadian National under the lease arrangement just referred to.

As I indicated when the resolution was before the house, it is my intention when the bill has been given second reading to move that it be referred for consideration to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before the minister sits down I wonder if he would answer a couple of questions? He has referred to these agreements between the railway company on one hand and the International Nickel Company and the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company on the other hand. I noticed no reference to those agreements in the bill. Can he tell us the status of those agreements? Will copies of them be tabled for the records of parliament and brought before the committee? What comment has he to make on that aspect of the matter?

Mr. Hees: I am not too familiar with these things, Mr. Speaker, but as I understand the agreements they are pretty straightforward and I think there will be no difficulty in bringing them before the committee if the hon. member so wishes. They appeared to me to be very straightforward agreements with no complications in them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I did not raise any question as to their straightforwardness but it seems to me since parliament is being asked to pass the legislation with a knowledge of these agreements that copies of them should be included in the records of parliament in some way. Perhaps the minister could look into the matter of having them tabled.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker I will not take more than a minute to say what I have to say about the bill. I do not think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is quite correct in suggesting that the practice has been to table these traffic guarantees when bills of this kind have been discussed in parliament though I think the substance of those agreements has generally been communicated to the committee when it looked into the possibility of making the investment which is in effect authorized by the bill.

I have had the opportunity of looking at this bill and I have found no very significant departure from the form in which these bills customarily are drafted. I can see no objection to the bill and I am quite prepared to support the adoption of second reading still with the reservations I made earlier with regard to the costs. I would not wish to create or leave on the record the impression that I believe the difference in cost between the purchase price as represented earlier this year and that provided for in the bill is not susceptible to justification. I am sure there is an explanation for it and I feel quite satisfied the management will give us that explanation when the matter is considered in committee.

So far as the bill itself is concerned the standard clauses are embodied which provide for competitive bids and for the issuing of bonds in the usual terms. I would like to point out to hon. members of the house that there is not in any sense of the word a subsidy by the government for the construction of these two branch lines. In effect the purpose of the bill is to authorize the Canadian National Railways to use capital funds of its own for the purpose of developing these two branch lines and there is no question of subsidy which implies that part of the cost would not be subject to reimbursement by the Canadian National Railways if the company felt obliged to borrow from the government in order to obtain the funds necessary for these two developments. I consider that the matter is a purely routine question of building two branch lines and I think we should not hestitate to adopt the bill.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Speaker, could the minister say if these branch lines are strictly for the development of the ore deposits and do not represent an opening up for any other type of development road?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, there is believed to be considerable additional mineral wealth in these areas and of course these branch lines will be available for transporting any additional ores that are discovered. Both companies hope and expect to develop considerably more mineral wealth than has already been discovered and of course these lines will profit by transporting those ores in the future if such ores are in fact discovered.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Legare (Rimouski). Mr. Speaker, having read the resolution and the bill now before us, I was struck by the similarity between the measure now introduced and the previous request for the construction of a railway line on the north shore of the Gaspe peninsula.

The bill would authorize the Canadian National Railways to construct a 52-mile branch line in Manitoba, whereas the proposed Gaspe line would be 55 miles long, extending from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts.

Also provided for in the bill is the purchase of a 30-mile branch line, whereas, in Gaspé, the railway would have to buy the line operated by the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway less than 35-miles long, extending from Mont Joli to Matane.

This particular line begins at Mont Joli, in my constituency. It will be realized that the extension of this line in the Gaspe peninsula would be of great benefit to everybody in the district and would materially bolster the economy of the whole eastern Quebec area. Mont Joli has already been adversely affected by lay-offs of railway workers, and the extension of this line would be especially beneficial to the people in this area.

I feel I must say a word here of the efforts which have been made on behalf of the construction of a Gaspe railway line by the former member for Gaspe, Mr. Leopold Langlois and his colleagues from that part of the country.

I have no doubt that the government will bring to this matter the attention it deserves, and because conditions in the peninsula have changed, I trust the government will favourably consider the request, which has again been made to it, for an extension of the line from Ste. Anne des Monts, to serve the north shore of the Gaspe peninsula.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 27, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.—Mr. Rea.

ALASKA-YUKON PIPELINES LTD.

Mr. Gordon Chown (Winnipeg South) moved the second reading of Bill No. 102, respecting Alaska-Yukon Pipelines Ltd.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill in its original form was passed by the Senate and the House of Commons during the first session of 1957. If hon. members will look at the bill I can point to the amendment which was recommended by the board of transport commissioners in order to provide the company with the capacity to operate in Alaska as well as in the Yukon. The explanatory note about halfway through the first paragraph in the first bill contains these words:

> Provided that the main pipe line or lines for the transmission and transportation of gas and oil shall be located entirely within Canada.

If hon. members will look at the amending paragraph in the body of the bill they will see that the only words that have been added to provide for the operation of this company in Alaska as well as in the Yukon appear early in the paragraph and are "north of the fifty-eighth parallel." When the original bill was first considered by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) asked a question with respect to whether or not the people of the Yukon supported the idea of this company and received the reply from Mr. Simmons, the general counsel who appeared on behalf of the company at that time, that the people were very much in favour of the company commencing operations in their area because it meant that they would be provided with cheaper fuel. The matter then proceeded to the board of transport commissioners from the committee in January, 1957, with the result that the board recommended that the amendment I have described to the house should be made before the company was allowed to commence operations. That was the sum and substance of their ruling. In their conclusions I find the following:

> We are of the opinion and so find that the proposed line from Haines to Haines Junction is not two lines but one line, and that it is in reality to be a main line of the applicant although the portion of it in Alaska is proposed to be constructed and owned and possibly also operated by the applicant's wholly-owned Alaskan subsidiary.
> The proviso in section 6 of the applicant's special act has already been set forth and for convenience is repeated here as follows:
> "Provided that the main pipe line or lines for the transmission and transportation of gas and oil shall be located entirely within Canada."
> It may be that the proviso is not appropriate for a company one of whose principal objects is to have a pipe line for transportation of oil products into Canada from the Alaskan seacoast. It may also be that the effect of the proviso is not what the sponsors of the applicant intended. However, we must have regard to the proviso, and give effect to the intention of parliament as disclosed by the language selected for the expression of that intention.
> Having regard to the proviso we do not consider that we should grant leave to the applicant to construct the line described in the application when, as we view it, that line is to be a portion of a main line of the applicant from Haines to Haines Junction and the construction of such main line, which is not to be entirely within Canada, is not within the applicant's powers.

I should also like to take the liberty of quoting finally from the second to last paragraph of the findings of the board of transport commissioners as follows:

> We are not finding, and it should not be inferred that we are finding, that the existence of the White Pass Railway or the pipe line from Skagway to White Horse will, regardless of their transportation charges, be a bar to the granting of leave to the applicant or any other applicant to construct a pipe line to serve the Yukon, although, of course, the presence of an existing railway or pipe line or other transportation facility may affect the throughput that an additional pipe line may be able to attract. The public interest of the people in the Yukon will be a major consideration, and transportation charges will be a factor that we will consider in determining any application for leave to construct a pipe line to serve the Yukon.

This pipe line, Mr. Speaker, starts at Haines, runs to Haines Junction and of necessity must pass through a portion of Alaska and the Yukon. Although the bill was prepared to conform with the requisitions recommended at the time it was drafted, it was actually after consideration by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines that it was reviewed by the board of transport commissioners and the recommendation for the amendment I have described to the house was made by them.

If the bill is given second reading today it will, of course, be referred to the same standing committee where questions can be asked of the general counsel who will appear before the committee. There will be a second check as to whether or not the application should be granted at all and perhaps an even more thorough check will be made when the measure is sent on to the board of transport commissioners for consideration. In view of the fact that these checks will be made, that the bill was already passed once by the Senate and the House of Commons and that the amendment is only to correct a technicality, I believe the bill should be given second reading by the house today.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member, who is a new member, upon what I think is his first experience in this house with a private bill. I believe I am right in that. I am in the embarrassing position of having to draw his attention, and the attention of the house, to what I consider to be one or two inadvertences he committed in his statement. I feel they are only inadvertences, but I think they should be corrected for the purpose of the record.

I might say that I am familiar with this bill for the reason that when the company concerned, Alaska-Yukon Pipelines Limited, made their application to the board of transport commissioners for leave to construct a pipe line from Haines to Haines Junction, I appeared as counsel opposing that application. I therefore acquired at least some knowledge of what the application was about. It leaves me also in the position where I was interested in the bill, and for that reason I will refrain from voting in the house or making any motions in the house concerning the bill.

I feel I should draw to the attention of hon. members one or two matters. In moving the bill the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) I believe referred to Mr. Simmons as general counsel for the applicant company. The Mr. Simmons referred to was the hon. member for Yukon and was one of our colleagues in the house at that time. He was not, so far as I know, at any time ever counsel for the company, and certainly he was not at that time when the bill passed.

Mr. Chown: I am sorry, I meant Mr. Porteous.

Mr. McIlraith: Application was made to the board of transport commissioners, not having to do with the bill itself or whether or not the bill should become law, but under the Pipe Line Act for leave to construct a pipe line from Haines to Haines Junction, some 159 miles, part of that distance being in Alaska and part in the Yukon. The board of transport commissioners delivered a quite lengthy judgment containing some 14 pages. Part of that judgment has been referred to here.

I feel that hon. members would do well to read that judgment because the quotation of part of it, as always happens when you quote only part of any document, left an incomplete picture of what the application was about. The proviso in the original act is not a mere technicality. It is a proviso put in because the parliament of Canada, rightly or wrongly, believed it should be put in. It went to the very root of the power of the company and to its capacity to act outside of the country. It is not correct, by any means, to refer to it as a technicality. It is something that is basic in the act of incorporation. Whether or not that should be changed now is, of course, another matter and is for the judgment of parliament.

In the judgment itself the board of transport commissioners dealt with the merits of the application and after dealing with the part referred to by the hon. member went on to say:

> In case we have erred in the foregoing conclusion we will also deal with the application as if the Alaskan portion of the proposed line should not be treated as part of the applicant's main line.

Then follow several paragraphs dealing with the application on its merits and dealing point by point with the usual criteria considered by the board in such cases. I can only suggest, then, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members would do well to acquaint themselves with the judgment of the board of transport commissioners for Canada, and with the evidence given at that hearing, before finally passing on whether or not this application should be granted.

Mr. Fisher: I just wanted to ask the hon. member who introduced the bill whether or not the judgment would be available to us in the committee so we can examine it?

Mr. Speaker: If this procedure of asking the hon. member who introduced the bill to speak again is followed, he will close the debate. Is that agreeable?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): When this bill goes to the committee, I would appreciate it, since I am not a member of the committee, if the following question were examined. There is on the order paper, standing in my name, a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) as to the disposition of the 2-inch, 3-inch and 4-inch pipe lines now existing in the Yukon and which might be affected by this bill. I think that properly this question should be dealt with by officers of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would now like to answer the question which was asked as there appears to be no one else who desires to speak.

Mr. Chown: I shall be happy to see, to the best of my ability, that the evidence for which the hon. gentleman asked is before the members of the committee to whom this bill will be referred. I am sure that the general counsel of the company will welcome any questions that have been raised as a result of the judgment delivered by the board of transport commissioners, and which have been raised by the other hon. member who spoke.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Speaker: I note that items 37 to 124 on the order paper are divorce bills, Nos. 103 to 168 inclusive and Nos. 172 to 193 inclusive. Is the house in unanimous agreement that these bills may be read a second time all together?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Under protest.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ST. MARY'S RIVER BRIDGE COMPANY

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West) moved the second reading of Bill No. 195, respecting St. Mary's River Bridge Company.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the St. Mary's River Bridge Company was incorporated by an act of the parliament of Canada passed on May 4, 1955. The act authorized the company to construct, maintain and operate a bridge or tunnel across or under the St. Mary's river at or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. Section 18 of the act provided that if approval of the governor in council to the bridge or tunnel had not been obtained within three years of the passing of the act, the powers granted for the construction would cease and be null and void. The purpose of the bill now before the house is to amend that section to grant an extension by a further three years to obtain such approval.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Before the hon. gentleman sits down, would he tell the house whether legislation has already been passed in the state of Michigan and has been concurred in by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Nixon: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that they are working on it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 9, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall only briefly set out the reasons why Bill No. 9 should be introduced for second reading. This bill requires that all cheques and other negotiable instruments issued by the federal government be printed in the two official languages of this country. It will be noted that my proposal is strictly limited to the federal government and such bodies as are dependent upon it, and has nothing to do with provincial governments or private concerns or individuals.

Since this is the third time that I introduce this bill I would ask, with all due respect, that the house be given the time necessary and the opportunity to vote.

I do wish to point out that very few people in Canada at this time would care to deny the French language equal status with the English language. In this house even, there are a large number of English speaking members who find pleasure in expressing themselves in French occasionally,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Très bien.

Mr. Poulin:—in a rather halting fashion sometimes, just as I do myself when I speak English.

An hon. Member: Your English is excellent.

Mr. Poulin: From this we must conclude that there exists a feeling of good will, sympathy and generosity which I prize highly and which deserves, I feel, congratulations and thanks. It is in fact to this spirit of good will that I appeal at this time. I should like a further step to be taken in the right direction, in the direction of understanding, fellowship and unity between the races. I would ask the English speaking majority in this country to realize that in the province of Quebec we act with generosity towards the English speaking element in that province. We go far beyond the limits ascribed by the constitution; in fact we go much beyond its very spirit. Not for a moment would I believe that our English speaking fellow citizens would refuse to grant to 30 per cent of the Canadian people what is so readily granted by French Canadians to 15 per cent or 16 per cent of the people of Quebec.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who is more particularly concerned with this matter will certainly not oppose this measure. How could he? He has shown the greatest sympathy for the French speaking people in Canada and has received in return unmistakable evidence of the esteem in which he is held by the latter. He speaks French very well and has even been honoured with a decoration given by the "Société du bon parler français".

The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is making creditable efforts to broaden his already good knowledge of French, something for which I commend him. He will no doubt be the last in this house to refuse the French element of this country the recognition of one of its rights. Besides, he must realize that he is the political leader of a bilingual country comprising the two racial elements with equal rights. Was it not one of the members of his cabinet, namely the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer) who, on August 16 last, stated in Edmonton—and I am quoting from the newspaper Le Devoir of August 17, 1957—as follows:

> We are not just a minority but, in reality, English speaking and French speaking Canadians are here as partners.

In my opinion, it is reasonable that partners be treated with equality and I have no doubt that the Solicitor General will endeavour to bring all his colleagues from the ten provinces to support my bill.

Need I add that there are precedents justifying the adoption of this bill? There are bilingual currency and postal stamps. I do not think that these two first steps to foster good understanding between the two great races of this country have caused any disturbance in Canada or any wrong to a single Canadian citizen. Why would it be otherwise with the measure I am proposing today?

Mr. Speaker, it was intentionally that in the course of my remarks I left aside any argument of a judicial or authoritative nature in order to confine myself to an appeal to reason. As a matter of fact, I am convinced that if, in principle, the judicial statute of our country guarantees the respect of the rights of each of the two racial groups, in practice it is in consideration of good judgment on the part of people of good will that both these racial groups will permit to all the full enjoyment of those rights.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I thought I should make my remarks in English, at this time when the house is considering the bill I have just introduced, so as to show a modicum of sincerity by personally practising what I have been preaching.

Mr. Benoit Chabot (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, having seconded my good friend from Beauce (Mr. Poulin), I am pleased to say a few words in support of this proposed legislation.

This is the third time that the bill on bilingual cheques, introduced by my hon. friend from Beauce has been submitted to the approval of the house. While the adoption of such a measure would prejudice no one in this country, it would be an act of justice towards one third of its people, whose language is French, it would help strengthen national unity, and would favour better understanding between the two great races in Canada.

By reason of our geographic situation, we are forced to absorb, willy-nilly, the American way of life as pictured to us by TV, the radio, newspapers, tourists, and by business carried on in the language of two thirds of the people of Canada.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the traditions, the religion and the language of the French-Canadian people of this country constitute obstacles to American assimilation which, by the very nature of things, would otherwise be quite unavoidable.

The adoption of my hon. friend's bill would be a further step towards unity between two great races that make Canada a great and unique country, and, at the same time, it would be a guarantee of survival.

The recognized equality of the two great races would seem to demand the adoption of such a measure, and I hope that all hon. members from both sides of the house will make it a point of honour to see that, from now on, all cheques issued by the government, anywhere in Canada, be printed in the two official languages.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, in considering this resolution, two points strike my attention. First, what is its objective and how can it be reached?

The first and main objective, in the minds of the hon. members of the house, is and should be complete national unity. Now I honestly believe that the best way to reach that goal is to follow the dictates of plain common sense.

All racial or religious differences which I have observed in this country, or anywhere in the world, are due to two causes. First, they are often prompted and exploited by unscrupulous politicians, or other scoundrels, for their personal benefit or gain; secondly, they may be the by-products of ignorance, lack of understanding or intolerance.

It is so easy, after all, for people to believe the slanders and calumnies about others whom they do not know. That is why, unfortunately, some people take advantage of that human failing to spread suspicions which, in some cases, have proved ineradicable.

I remember that, as a youth, when I was living in the county of Compton, province of Quebec, just two miles from our English village of Gold, there was a French village by the name of Sainte-Marguerite de Linwick. At that time there was no kind of social contact or fraternization between us. The Blains, the Lapointes or the Rousseaus gathered around the wood-stove in the general store of Sainte-Marguerite and talked about the Scotch, while the MacCaskills, the MacKays, or the Morrisons were doing likewise at Gould, about the Frenchies. But let some disaster happen, as when fire destroyed Joseph Blain's barn together with all his crops and livestock, or when a cyclone flattened the house of Murdo McLeod, then everybody, French or English, turned up at the bee and pitched in not only in rebuilding destroyed property but in donating a cow, a pig, a load of hay, or furniture. When the bee was finished,—always climaxed by a dance—not only were the buildings up again but they were well furnished.

How amazing it was to sense that surge of friendship spreading from village to village for a few months, everyone realizing that people he had looked down upon until then were, after all, no worse than himself, nor different!

But, alas, in less than six months, the old situation emerged again, until some new disaster again revived the fellow-feeling.

Was that not in itself a tragedy, this situation where fundamentally kind-hearted and generous people failed to appreciate one another or to get together except when visited by some calamity.

It strikingly shows the magnitude and importance of the task facing us if we really want to promote understanding and mutual respect among all the Canadians scattered throughout our great and wonderful country.

Another example which comes to my mind happened in 1942 when I had the privilege of serving in a French-Canadian regiment, the St. Lawrence Fusiliers. Only six of us in the whole unit could speak English and yet never, in all my five years in the army, was I made to feel so welcome, nor was I so well treated, as during those three months I passed with French-speaking comrades.

As I said at the outset, it is easy to accept as the truth the gossip we hear about people we do not know, but once we have learned to know one another, we realize that those seeds of discord are sown in the mind of Canadians for the sole purpose of creating disunity, by greedy opportunists who have no other concern but their own advantage and profit.

In fact, Canada is made up not only of two but of many nationalities, each of which contributes to our national culture and heritage. However, Canada recognizes two official languages, those of the two main groups which make up its population. This must be understood if we wish to work together toward national unity, remembering that privileges granted to one group can in no way detract from the prerogatives enjoyed by the others.

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) in a matter as serious and significant as that of bilingual cheques in this country. I commend him for the persistence he has shown in the past years when submitting this bill, for without his well-known tenacity, he would certainly have dropped the matter and it would have been automatically shelved.

As a French Canadian, I fully agree with the hon. member for Beauce, and I am happy to ask all hon. representatives to give this matter all the attention it deserves. To my mind, a gesture such as this would be tangible proof of every member's wish to see the highest degree of national unity established in this country, and we should therefore vote in favour of the legislation moved by the hon. member for Beauce.

I take this opportunity to remind the house that the first French bank-note in Canada was printed under a Conservative government—

Mr. Habel: But is wasn't a bilingual one!

Mr. Lesage: No, a unilingual one.

Mr. Ricard: I was not talking about bilingual bank-notes; I said that the first bank-note printed in French had been issued under a Conservative government.

Mr. Lesage: Bilingual currency was instituted by the Liberal party.

Mr. Ricard: That may be so, but it does not change the fact that the first French words to appear on Canadian bank-notes did appear under a Conservative government, and I am pleased to recall that fact. Indeed, it would not surprise me at all if the first Canadian government cheques labelled in French and in English were issued under a Conservative government.

Mr. Poulin: You have an excellent opportunity to do it today.

Mr. Neree Arsenault (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to add a few remarks about this bill. I wish to congratulate my friend, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin), for his steadfastness and his patriotism in again submitting this bill.

French-Canadians must always do what is humanly possible to deserve the respect to which they are entitled from English-speaking Canadians. If we obtain bilingual cheques, it will be another step towards the achievement of Canadian unity.

In such a field, I can mention the example of the association of forestry engineers of the province of Quebec which requires that foreign forestry engineers wishing to practise their profession in our province, write a thesis in a language other than their own; the purpose of this is to establish better relations between workers or employees and those who are called upon to direct them.

It is only by struggling for the rights of French or of English, either by insisting on their use in charters or, as in this case, by requesting that cheques issued by the Canadian government be bilingual, that we will succeed in obtaining respect for the two official languages of this country and national unity.

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) on his tenacity in again introducing his bill concerning the issuing in Canada of travellers' cheques, postal money orders, cheques, drafts and other negotiable effects in the two official languages of this country.

Mr. Speaker, since we already have bilingual bank notes, why could our cheques not be bilingual too, as well as our postal notes and all other negotiable effects mentioned by the hon. member for Beauce in his bill?

The other day, on the occasion of my first speech in this house, I spoke of the value of bilingualism to this country. As a French Canadian from the west, this matter is as close to my heart as to that of the members of the province of Quebec.

I might say at this point that it would be well to remember the words spoken by the Solicitor General, as quoted by the member for Beauce. I happened to be present at this banquet of the ACELF at Edmonton, last August. I must say that the words spoken by the Solicitor General were extremely well received.

In any event, I am of the opinion that we should recommend to the house that all negotiable effects concerned in the proposed legislation be printed both in French and in English, as soon as possible.

(Text):

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel we have not heard much in English about the purport of this bill which has been before the house on a number of occasions and, frankly, I must, as I have done in French a few moments ago, compliment the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) on his determination in bringing forward this measure.

I see no objection to it. It is merely an administrative procedure. Representations have been made latterly with respect to it by a number of people from the province of Quebec who have spoken on the subject with great sincerity. A number of speeches have been made here this session by English and French speaking members about the value of the unity of both Canadian cultures, yet though we have our money printed both in English and in French, as issued by the Bank of Canada, it has not yet been possible, apparently, to have our cheques, bills of exchange, postal notes and other documents as referred to in the bill printed in English and in French.

It is quite a simple procedure and certainly it is not against the spirit or the letter of the Bills of Exchange Act. I would say we should give it most serious consideration. However, there is one thing I would like to point out. I have not heard anybody on the other side of the house speak to this bill.

Mr. Dumas: We want to vote on it.

Mr. Lesage: You are killing the bill.

Mr. Cardiff: You stirred up something over there.

Mr. Lambert: I would like to hear hon. members opposite say something about this bill.

Some hon. Members: Vote.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps they would like to express themselves the way I have expressed myself.

Mr. Lesage: Go ahead and kill it.

Mr. Hees: You did not want to vote in the old days.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hees: You always talked them out. We always wanted to vote in the old days.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us about the Eskimos.

Mr. Hees: You fellows used to kill the bills every time. We always wanted to vote in the old days.

Mr. Lesage: We did not kill the bills, you did.

Mr. Hees: We are very democratic; we like to hear everybody speak.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I meant my remarks in all sincerity. I would like to hear from some hon. members opposite.

Mr. Dumas: Just sit down and you will see how we vote.

Mr. Lambert: I would like to hear from an hon. member who has not previously spoken in this house and learn what he thinks about the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know the opinion held on this matter by the new members of the province of Quebec and the other provinces who sit on the far side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Sit down and you will be told.

Other hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, those few remarks of mine were meant to indicate my support of the principle of this bill.

(Text):

Mr. Raymond O'Hurley (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: We have a lot of great speakers over here. We all like to talk.

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, I hear a lot of noise from the other side of the house but I know they are my good friends. As I have already said in this house I do not want any of my remarks to be taken as an injury by any hon. member from Quebec or elsewhere who might not share the same political opinion I hold.

I read with great pleasure the bill presented here by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin) asking for bilingual cheques all across Canada. The bill and the remarks he made in presenting it were timely as they were in the two previous years. If the information that has been given me is correct the hon. gentleman presented a similar resolution during the winter session of 1957 and also in 1956.

In a cosmopolitan country like Canada bilingualism is fully recognized today. On the other hand, there is a certain schooling, if I might use that word, which must be undergone by people throughout the country to ensure that even a 100 per cent English speaking community does not neglect and forget that bilingualism exists in this nation. I take pleasure in announcing in the house that although I am of English speaking origin probably 99 per cent of my constituents are of French speaking origin. They have admirably demonstrated to people in Canada the fact that they do not hold against any person the language he speaks and have proven that it is possible in a free country for two great racial groups to live side by side in harmonious co-operation. They are completely bilingual in their thinking.

Mr. Dumas: Question.

Mr. O'Hurley: A bill of this kind could be enacted only with the unanimity of the house.

Mr. Lesage: Question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried unanimously.

Mr. O'Hurley: I know that if all hon. members were present in the house today there would not be unanimity on this question.

An hon. Member: Let us vote and find out.

Mr. Lambert: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it might create a greater division than presently exists as we have seen today in the introduction of this measure.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. O'Hurley: I think the remarks made by hon. members who have spoken today point up the need for a greater education on the part of our people in appreciating that this is a bilingual country with two official languages and that the question is something which must be studied. It is a matter which we must bring to the attention not only of members of this house but of our constituents in order that they may understand its implications.

Mr. Lesage: You did not do it in the last election.

Mr. O'Hurley: I spoke in both English and French when the occasion presented itself. In my constituency I have three municipalities wherein I have to speak English and I am always proud to do so and in the other I take pride in speaking French.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Lesage: It is not.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS

LEGISLATION TO AUTHORIZE LOANS FOR ADDITIONAL FACILITIES

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a bill to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans to the Hamilton harbour commissioners, out of the consolidated revenue fund, not exceeding in the aggregate $4 million for the purpose of constructing additional dockage and other facilities in the harbour.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, this resolution seeks to authorize a loan of $4 million to the Hamilton harbour commissioners to permit them to participate in an $8 million harbour development program to be completed in 1960. The trade to Hamilton harbour, both foreign and domestic, has been steadily increasing in recent years. The established industries have definite plans for expansion; other industries are moving to Hamilton and the recent announcement of the Ontario hydro of the construction of a system of a steam generating plant all add materially to the rate of increase of waterborne traffic. The completion of the St. Lawrence seaway will, I am sure, greatly contribute towards this rate of increase.

The Hamilton harbour commissioners propose to construct a new transit shed on the Wellington street terminal, now being extended by the Department of Public Works. They propose to create by 1959 a new terminal slip at Ship street and to construct for 1960 a new slip at Strathearne street. The Wellington street transit shed will cost the commissioners $1 million and the new slips at Ship street and Strathearne street are estimated to cost $3 million each, the commissioners to pay one-half of this cost and the remainder to be borne by the Department of Public Works. In addition, the Department of Public Works would carry out a large dredging program costing $1 million in connection with the Strathearne street slip.

A loan at the rate of 4⅛ per cent for a term of 40 years is proposed, and on this basis the annual financing for the Wellington street transit shed would be $50,000 and for the Ship street and Strathearne street terminals $75,000 each, making a total of $200,000 annually. An examination of the harbour commissioners financial position indicates that the expected revenues above expenditures would be well in excess of $200,000 per annum and that under normal circumstances the commissioners would have no difficulty in meeting their commitments.

These projects were examined by the departments of public works and finance and my department on the spot some months ago, and after further discussion in Ottawa it was agreed that this expansion program in Hamilton merits support. I trust that the resolution will commend itself to the house as an important step to facilitate the development of Hamilton harbour and to permit the Hamilton harbour commissioners to keep in step with the demands of waterborne traffic being made upon them. I might say that when the bill is before the house I intend to move that it be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, as the minister has pointed out, this resolution is a necessary prerequisite to the introduction of a bill which will enable the government to lend to the Hamilton harbour commissioners an amount not exceeding $4 million for the purpose of constructing additional dockage and other facilities in Hamilton harbour. I think that in considering the resolution it must be remembered that the Hamilton harbour commissioners are a separate and autonomous corporate body and that this is not one of the national harbours which falls under the jurisdiction of the national harbours board. Consequently, in considering the terms of the resolution it must be borne in mind that there is a distinction to be made between these autonomous harbour commissions and the national harbours board itself which is an agency of the crown and at the same time a national institution.

Of course, I am fully aware that in the past the federal government has followed the practice of advancing the capital sums required for harbour dredging in the harbours which, having harbour commissioners, still do not fall under the jurisdiction of the national harbours board. But I think that this is the first case which has come to my notice in which the rather extensive program referred to somewhat briefly by the minister is to be carried out as a joint operation by the public works department of this government and by the local harbour commission itself. Perhaps I might come back to that point in a moment.

I should like to say, considering the matter more in a general way, that it was my experience when I was minister of transport that a decision had been pretty well reached that advances made to autonomous harbour commissioners for harbour improvements from time to time would be made on the basis that the investment would be self-liquidating. I think that was a sensible policy to follow because naturally when the government came to consider the propriety of making an advance or of the making of an expenditure which it would itself support, all of the pertinent facts would be taken into account so that, so far as it is possible in advance to predict what the future development of a harbour will be, consideration would be given to all the pertinent factors in order that an estimate might be reached of the additions to the revenues of the harbour and at the same time the additions to operating expenses and particularly, when advances of this kind were considered, the addition of the burden of interest and amortization of principal.

I think that such a policy has much to commend it because otherwise harbour commissioners who are inspired by a natural and understandable wish to possess more attractive and perhaps more modern facilities might very easily be tempted to borrow substantial sums from the government in the expectation that by the expenditure of the moneys in question business would be attracted to their harbours and that, in their estimation at least, revenues in sufficient amount would be developed to enable the harbour commission to repay the moneys so borrowed. But clearly if this were done widely and without the element of—I would not like to use the word "supervision"—the economics of the projects being given careful attention, developments of this kind would give rise to a state of affairs which I think in the long run could only be disadvantageous to local harbour commissioners and of course to the government itself if the government were financing such improvements. Consequently, when I was associated with the Department of Transport it was felt it would be desirable to have the fullest economic study made of projects of this kind in order to determine to what extent the proposed capital expenditures were justified.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we have quite an unusual situation here. It is common knowledge, I think, that the Department of Public Works has, for example in the case of the Toronto harbour commission, carried out extensive dredging projects at the expense of the federal government so as to provide deep water navigation up to the facilities which have been constructed by the Toronto harbour commission itself. I can, however, recall no instance in which the government has used public funds, obviously through the budget of the Department of Public Works, and either alone or jointly with any harbour commission undertaken the construction of facilities which by their very nature are revenue producing.

The facts as given by the minister should, I think, remove any particular disquiet as to the security of the $4 million which is to be advanced by the government, and which it is necessary that the committee should consider when adopting this particular resolution. But I think the government should perhaps consider what will be the effect of the policy which it seems now to be inaugurating in placing under the control of separate and autonomous harbour commissions valuable facilities producing revenue, when the revenues from those facilities will be used exclusively for the purposes of the harbour commission.

Of course, I have no knowledge whatever of the cost of these facilities other than the information which the minister has just given. It is not possible for me, with the rather limited information at my disposal, to know how useful the facilities which the minister has described will be; what are likely to be the revenues which they will produce when fully developed and, let us say, fully used. I do believe the government owes it to the committee to explain the reasons which have led them to depart from past policies in this connection, and to say whether in other places in Canada where additional harbour facilities are going to be required they will follow the precedent which appears now to be established of bearing jointly with the harbour commission the cost of the improvement it may be thought suitable to make to the local harbour. I think there is a very real and obvious distinction to be made between expenditures made in the national harbours and those made in the case of autonomous bodies such as Hamilton, Toronto, New Westminster and a few others. I think the minister should explain what are the reasons which have led the government to depart from the more or less established policies.

Coming back to the national harbours, I would say that it is quite obvious where improvements are made by the national harbours board it is quite proper that they should be financed by the government. If the facilities produce more revenue than is needed, in other words more revenue than is required to repay the interest and amortization of the investment, the excess will accrue to the national harbours board and will find its way into the accounts of the government at the end of each year. But in this particular case the revenue which will accrue from the improvements to which the minister has referred will accrue to the commission itself. I do not reject the idea, I am just questioning the advisability of embarking on a policy in which the cost of revenue producing improvements is borne jointly by the federal government and the commission itself.

At all events the minister will perhaps deal with that question before the resolution is adopted. He has referred, of course, to the question of the traffic in Hamilton harbour. I think it is gratifying to note that there has been, as the minister has said, an increase both in foreign and domestic traffic. As I recall, about a year or so ago when I had occasion to examine the volume of overseas traffic which was then passing through the canal system I observed that of the not very large proportion which originated from or was destined to Canadian ports on the great lakes, the portion going to Hamilton represented a fairly substantial percentage. I do not recall the exact figure but my impression is that more than two-thirds of the total overseas traffic was destined to or originated from the two ports of Toronto and Hamilton.

The minister has referred also to the probable building at Hamilton of a thermal plant by the hydro electric commission of Ontario. Quite obviously, that should provide additional traffic for Hamilton harbour. So far as the St. Lawrence seaway is concerned, I think we all believe there is going to be an expansion in overseas traffic, although while I was minister of transport no one in the department seemed anxious to put down on paper any very positive estimate as to the exact amount of that traffic. In any event, as I understand what the minister has said, it is the belief of his department that the increase in foreign and domestic traffic, the traffic that is likely to be generated by the establishment of a thermal plant at Hamilton, and the additional traffic which may be expected to develop when the seaway is finished will, all in all, justify the new facilities and provide revenues adequate to meet at least the interest and amortization of the $4 million covered by this resolution.

I should like, Mr. Chairman, to hear what the minister has to say with regard to the broader question of these facilities being provided at the joint expense of the local harbour commission and the Department of Public Works. I realize, of course, that is not the principal issue in this resolution. The principal issue in this resolution, on which I think there can be no possible disagreement, is that the resolution is a prerequisite to a bill which will authorize the Minister of Finance to lend $4 million to the Hamilton harbour commissioners for the carrying out of this program. From what the minister has said, and bearing in mind the very well-established reputation of the harbour commission itself, its long record of successful and good administration of the harbour, I do not think any of us would have any qualms about approving the resolution. However, I do hope the minister will tell us something about the subsidiary question of the financing of these harbour facilities jointly by the federal government and by the local commission.

Mr. Barnett: During the first year in which I was a member of this house I had the pleasure one week-end of visiting Hamilton as a member of a party of members of the house. While I realize that a brief visit does not qualify me to discuss in any detail the merits of this project, certainly during that visit I gathered enough knowledge of the interest in the affairs of the city taken by Hamiltonians to understand the interest of the Hamilton harbour commission in this particular project.

I was interested in listening to the brief statement made to the house by the Minister of Transport and also in listening to the statement made by the former minister of transport. Perhaps I might be permitted to observe that the statement of the former minister of transport was perhaps a little bit more discursive than were some of the statements he used to make when he was sitting across on the other side of the house on occasions similar to this.

Mr. Marler: I am not now so hampered by responsibility.

Mr. Barnett: I feel that the introduction of the resolution raises one or two questions which I certainly should like to have the Minister of Transport answer for us before the resolution passes. If I understood correctly the remarks of the former minister, he suggested to the house that in this resolution there has been some departure from what has been the former policy of the department. I can believe that perhaps the former minister may have more knowledge of some of the details of this project than he has indicated to us in the house. I do not imagine this project has reached the present stage overnight. The question which occurs to me, of course, is whether this is the first time an advance of this kind is being made to one of the autonomous harbour commissions and how similar this resolution is to any previous arrangement for financing works by the independent harbour commissions as distinct from works under the national harbours board. I think the Minister of Transport should make it clear to the house whether this is a particular project or a particular policy in respect of the Hamilton harbour commission or whether other autonomous harbour commissions, if they had similar needs and were under similar circumstances, would be able to receive similar consideration.

I have some interest in this matter in view of the fact that one of the autonomous harbour commissions lies within the boundaries of my own constituency. While I have no present indication that they may be approaching the government with any proposals for extension of harbour facilities, nevertheless I think it should be clear to us as members of the house from various parts of the country and with interests in various ports of the country just what the government is doing in bringing forward this proposal. I have no reason to doubt that my colleagues on the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee will be able to give full support to the measure as it reaches further stages, but I feel that one or two of these points which have been mentioned by the former minister of transport as well as the question which I have raised should be answered by the minister while we are discussing this measure at the resolution stage.

Mr. Irwin: I do not intend to occupy too much time of the committee because there is no reason why this motion should be held up. After all, I believe it is expedient that the Hamilton harbour commission should extend its facilities in the light of the fact that the St. Lawrence seaway is certainly going to make upon it demands that at the present moment do not exist and are not likely to come into being as a result of ordinary traffic.

I noticed that the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount—maybe I misunderstood him—was trying to bring the city of Hamilton into this question of financing this project. Frankly I do not think that is good business. The city of Hamilton or for that matter any other municipality has plenty on its hands under existing economic conditions without entering into the question of extending harbour facilities, particularly when those extensions arise out of the fact that what is going to occur is not because of anything that Hamilton does but because of something for the general benefit of Canada itself. I believe that this is a matter solely for the Hamilton harbour commissioners and for the board of harbour commissioners here in Ottawa. I think this is an excellent opportunity for the government to show its willingness to assist municipalities or districts, as far as that is concerned, to a reasonable extent to extend their facilities in order to help out national causes.

I am a little bit worried, of course, because I come from Burnaby and we are faced with the fact that we have harbours on the Fraser river. I hope this will be a step in the direction of the federal government showing its willingness to enter into this question broadly across the country and to help out the harbour commissions on the Fraser river. If I could suggest it to the Minister of Transport, one of the first steps they could take in the matter is to try to correlate the activities of the two harbour commissions at present on the Fraser river.

As to this loan to the Hamilton harbour commission, I notice that our friend the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was a little bit worried that it was going to set a precedent. I am not the least little bit worried about their setting a precedent because, as far as I am concerned, they could not set a better precedent in this world than the one they are setting now, if that is what it is going to be, in helping harbour commissions to help Canada into a better position than that in which it is at the present time.

Mr. McIvor: I should like to ask the minister a question. Is not 40 years a long time over which to spread $4 million? A harbour board is not likely to see 1997 and most of us do not expect to see it. Could it not be 20 years at four per cent, leaving out future generations?

Mr. Hees: The answer to that question is that if you try to pay off that loan in 20 years at four per cent, you just do not pay off the loan.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

Mr. Marler: I hope the minister is going to outline the question of policy.

Mr. Hees: Yes. The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount asked with regard to our being willing to advance a loan for half of the total cost of the Hamilton harbour commission while the Department of Public Works is making a considerable investment. In reply I might say to him that we believe that is fair and reasonable assistance to an important harbour in Canada which we believe is growing in order to assist it to develop and grow. The hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount perhaps feels that this is too generous a bill for the Hamilton harbour commission. I do not know whether or not that is his view but this is what we consider to be a fair proposal and we have submitted it in that spirit. We are satisfied with this proposition and feel it is a good and satisfactory way in which to help a growing city help itself. Now I wonder if the hon. member for Comox-Alberni would repeat his question.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the question I asked of the Minister of Transport was whether this was the first time an arrangement of this kind has been entered into by the federal government with one of the autonomous harbour boards and, if it was not, whether he could give us some indication as to what departures, if any, from previous arrangements were being made in this instance? I may say for the benefit of the member for Burnaby-Richmond that I was not expressing any concern over the setting of a precedent but I would like to know the facts.

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not really an expert on harbour assistance. I do know however that through the Department of Public Works the government is assisting the Toronto harbour commission in respect of considerable dredging operations in helping the harbour to become prepared for the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. I also know that at the present time this government is considering what help it might give to both the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport in an examination of possible assistance to the harbour at the lakehead. I believe it is the duty of government, where it can do so, to assist people to help themselves but I do not think there is any hard and fast rule as to exactly what a government should do in any particular set of circumstances. I believe it is the role of government to assist the communities in respect of development projects which will help their own economy and the economy of the country to grow and, with respect to this plan of action, I feel this government is acting correctly in moving towards the helping of people to develop this growing country of ours.

Mr. Barnett: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the minister has not really answered my question. I am quite aware of the fact, of course, that through the Department of Public Works quite a large number of harbour development projects are undertaken and money is spent for that purpose in many parts of the country, but the real point of my question was whether or not there had been previous occasions on which an arrangement such as is described in this resolution had been entered into. That is to say where, out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada money is advanced to one of the autonomous harbour commissions for the undertaking of their capital works projects. Now if the answer is not at the minister's fingertips—and I understand of course that he has not a long background of experience with the detailed activities of the Department of Transport—perhaps arrangements could be made to have the answer given in the committee stage of the bill.

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, I know for instance that in the hon. member's own province the Department of Public Works assists an autonomous harbour commission, namely that in New Westminster, and has assisted them considerably in the past with respect to dredging operations. The government has assisted various harbour commissions in various ways, but I do not feel there is any set pattern in which we say we will or will not carry out any particular set of operations. Whenever something appears to be necessary to be done, as I understand it, my department and the Department of Public Works look into the matter to see if it is justified and to see if there is some way in which the government can help the harbour commission to do the job which it wants to do.

Now it seems strange to me that while members usually urge the government to do more, we find tonight that members are urging the government to do less. The government, I think, is doing a reasonable job of assistance to the Hamilton harbour commission in helping itself and in expanding and it seems to me from the remarks made by members of the opposite side of the house there is a certain criticism implied. There seems to be an idea abroad that we are doing a little too much; that perhaps we should be thinking about this a little bit more carefully; that perhaps we should not lend so much; perhaps we should have the loan paid back in 20 years instead of 40 years and perhaps the Department of Public Works should not be participating in the way it is.

Now, if the hon. members opposite feel that way it is certainly different from what usually takes place when measures of this kind come before the house. I am speaking for the government in this matter and I feel that the government is adopting a good, sensible and progressive policy to help the harbour commissions help themselves. If members on the opposite side of the house now feel we are being too generous—and of course they are entitled to their own view—then I am surprised to hear it. If that is the feeling, as I say, it is quite different from what usually takes place, but of course now we have a new government which looks at things a little differently and perhaps we are going to get a brand new type of criticism.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder if perhaps the hon. member for Trinity-Conception who has just risen to his feet would mind if I pursued this a little further because I think the Minister of Transport has, in his last remarks, entirely misrepresented my reason for rising to ask him questions. I cannot see how he could possibly have read into anything I have said any desire to oppose the proposal which has been put forward. Surely if we rise simply for the purpose of obtaining a little more information from the minister than he saw fit to give us at the opening of the discussion we cannot be considered as opposing the proposal which the government is bringing forward.

Now I thought my question was perfectly simple and straightforward; I did not say one word as to whether I was for this measure or against it except that I did say at the start that I understood and appreciated the desire of the Hamilton harbour commission and the people of that city to have their harbour facilities extended and I fully expected that we would be able to go along with this proposal. Now I said that quite definitely. What I wanted to know was simply whether this was the first time the government had chosen to adopt this particular pattern of providing assistance by the mechanism of a loan which I understood is to be repayable under certain terms and conditions to the consolidated revenue fund.

In my initial remarks I did raise a further question as to whether or not we can understand from the minister that, under the same terms and conditions, if other autonomous harbour boards approached the government with a proposal which stood on its merits in the way the minister indicates this one does, they could expect the same kind of arrangement might be worked out. That is all I wanted to know from the minister. I had no desire to create in his mind that I was in any way opposed to his proposal when I asked these questions.

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I mentioned earlier, will go before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines where full questioning will be possible and at whose meetings the officials of my department will be present to answer all questions that can be put. As I explained earlier, I have held this portfolio for only a limited time and I am not an expert on the past history of these things. I am doing the job at the present time and trying to look to the future.

Regarding looking to the future, I am glad to be able to assure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that if other harbour commissioners put forward propositions which appear to be as economically sound as this one does, we will be pleased to receive them and to consider them and to look on them very favourably. I feel that this is really what the hon. member wants to know.

Mr. Stick: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me from what the minister is saying that he is initiating a new policy. I am not against that policy and I am certainly not against spending money for harbour commissions or public works. We find it mighty hard to get from the Minister of Public Works what we require to assist our people in improving their living standards.

But we have a harbour in Newfoundland, St. John's. The minister has seen it himself and I think he will realize that it is an important and growing port. I am given to understand that they need improvements down there, and I am hoping—and the minister has partly answered my question when replying to the last speaker—that if the people in St. John's apply to him under the same conditions as Hamilton has done he will grant the same facilities as he is granting Hamilton. The minister has already said he will consider these schemes on their merits. That leaves an escape. But I think that if he grants this to Hamilton he cannot deny it to anyone else who asks for the same concessions under the same conditions, and I should like an assurance that if the harbour commission in St. John's puts the case up to him, and if they need the improvement, they will get the same terms as Hamilton is getting.

Mr. Hees: As I said to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, I am very glad to assure the hon. member that, if the harbour commission of St. John's brings forward to us a proposition which on examination appears to be as economically sound as this one does and gives an equal good assurance of payment at an economic rate of interest over a reasonable period of time we will be very glad to look at it as favourably as we are looking on this application.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of innocents in the house who are always seeking educational opportunities, and I think as one of the innocents it is disappointing to find we have had more educational inspiration on this occasion from the former minister than from the present minister.

I think the present minister has missed the point of the queries. He drew into the discussion a mention of the lakehead. As he knows, we have no harbour commission there, but I feel the member for Comox-Alberni and myself both have the same reason for wanting to know more. In the area from which I come we hope to have a harbour commission at the lakehead. We would like to know how this whole arrangement was made and how it was developed; what steps the government took in examining the Hamilton facilities; how the recommendations were made; and whether this whole principle is one which we can look forward to being followed when a good case is made.

I had looked forward to having a more general answer which would have enabled us to approach the question with more background when it is discussed in committee, and I do not think the ingenuous counterplay made by the minister is good enough.

Mr. Hees: I do not know what the hon. member for Port Arthur is complaining about, because as soon as the matter of the harbour facilities at the lakehead was brought to my attention and to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, the officials of our departments went immediately to the lakehead, studied the situation there, and have since been giving it a very great deal of attention. I do not think the hon. member or the people he represents will be disappointed when our plans are finally disclosed.

The hon. member has asked what transpired between the Hamilton harbour commissioners and ourselves. They put forward the proposition that in their estimation certain facilities should now be provided. Officials of my department and officials of the Department of Public Works looked over the situation, examined the records of the past very carefully, decided what in their estimation would be the potential of the harbour as the St. Lawrence seaway developed, what percentage of traffic could be expected in view of what has taken place, and agreed on the basis of that study that the assistance which is being given was justified and that the loan which is being made available is justified. There is nothing very complicated about it. We are perfectly willing for harbour commissioners to come to us and bring forward propositions to examine, and when this is done we are happy to examine the economic potentialities, the potentialities of growth, the cost of what has to be done and so on, and decide what development we believe to be justified.

I hope that answers the hon. member's question. We have tried to deal fairly with the situation at the lakehead. I do not know how we could have worked more quickly or done any better than we have done, and I am sure the lakehead will get a fair deal and I hope I have explained the rather simple procedure we follow.

Mr. Fisher: The minister is perhaps a bit too sensitive. I am not complaining at all about the situation at the lakehead. I just wanted to know more about the situation so that I would know the pressure points when the time came at the lakehead. I hope the minister will answer the question raised by the former minister, which was, as I recall his words, whether this is likely to create a situation in which a harbour commission will spend more than it can afford because it can draw on funds such as these.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I will intervene in this discussion very briefly to assure the house that the Hamilton harbour commission is a very competent commission. They have shown the soundness of their judgment as to the future by putting before this government the present proposal, which is a very businesslike proposal with an arrangement for payment of an appropriate interest rate over a certain period of time.

Studies of Hamilton harbour have been made over the past year, and since this is the third largest port in the country and since there are 542 industries in Hamilton, some of these the largest in Canada, I feel it is a very good proposition for the people of Hamilton and one which will greatly help the development of the St. Lawrence seaway. I must congratulate the Minister of Transport on his speedy action in dealing with this loan arrangement, and I must also congratulate the harbour commissioners of Hamilton who have created something of a precedent by making this application. I think it shows that Hamilton wants to help itself. It is not asking for anything for nothing, but it is going ahead and making an effort to ensure its future welfare. I think this is another example of this Conservative government co-operating with the municipalities in this type of endeavour and I would like to give it my full support.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I would first like to correct the impression the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond seemed to form from what I said when speaking on this resolution. He seemed to think that the purpose I had in mind in raising the question of this change of policy with regard to the financing of harbour improvements was to throw on to the back of the municipality a responsibility which clearly does not belong to it. I am sure that if the hon. gentleman will read in Hansard tomorrow what I said earlier he will find that no words of mine should have given him that impression.

The reason I raised the question of what seems to me to be a change of policy is that up to, let us say, the time when the government changed in June it had been the constant practice of the Department of Public Works to do the original dredging that was required in order to enable ships to approach the facilities provided by harbour commissions and to undertake that dredging at the expense of the national budget and not to charge the costs of that original dredging to the harbour commission which benefited from it.

In the case of the Fraser river I know the question was discussed as to whether or not the cost of annual dredging, which as the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond no doubt knows is somewhat extensive, should continue to be borne by the Department of Public Works. I do not know what decision has been reached by the present government in that connection but I must say that personally, having the interests of the harbour commissioners at heart and having had some responsibility in representing them in the House of Commons, I am quite sympathetic to the view that all dredging both original and annual should be done by the Department of Public Works because it seems to me that was the way in which the needs of navigation were taken care of so far as the movement of vessels is concerned. It never occurred to me that the Department of Public Works had any responsibility to provide the facilities in the harbours where a harbour commission had been established.

We know, of course, that the Department of Public Works provides harbour facilities of a kind all across Canada but we also know that the revenues from those facilities are paid into the national treasury and the federal government, in a word, takes the good with the bad. Broadly speaking I think it is probably doubtful if on a general basis the revenues from harbour facilities provided by the Department of Public Works are self-supporting. I do not think anybody would quarrel with that fact because we know that those harbours for which improvements are made by the department are small harbours and are not capable of bearing the total cost and producing the revenues which would make the capital expenditures which have been made self-liquidating.

With regard to the Hamilton harbour commission, as I understand the situation there is a program of works to cost $8 million of which one-half is to be paid by the Department of Public Works and the other half is to be paid by the Hamilton harbour commission by means of money furnished by the Minister of Finance and repaid over a period of years. As I said earlier, so far as the official opposition is concerned we believe there is no question whatever that this loan should be well within the financial capabilities of the Hamilton harbour commission and I do not think there is any doubt that it will be able to pay interest and amortization on principal in the 40 years which the minister has mentioned.

The point I do want to bring to the attention of the minister is this. There are, of course, other autonomous harbour commissions and I would like to mention two in particular. There is the harbour commission of New Westminster and, as hon. members from British Columbia well know, this commission not very many years ago borrowed from the federal government the moneys that were required to build what I believe is called the new ocean terminal and there was no question in that connection of the federal government paying half the cost of those facilities. But then nearer at hand to Hamilton, and I take it competing with it for business, is the harbour of Toronto and, as the Minister of Transport who is one of the Toronto members well recalls, within the last two or three years, I think, a new terminal was put up at not inconsiderable expense by the Toronto harbour commission. In that particular case it obtained its own funds without government help and the government did nothing towards contributing to the costs of those facilities which were entirely paid for by the commission itself, as I said.

The situation that seems to me to be developing is that Toronto provided facilities at its own expense and, as I see it, must necessarily levy the tolls and tariffs for the use of its facilities that it requires to pay the interest and amortization on the investment which it has made in those facilities, whereas under the proposal which we are now considering Hamilton is to receive $8 million for facilities to which the Department of Public Works is to contribute $4 million so the interest on the expenditure represented by those facilities is only on $4 million and not on $8 million. If Toronto had built them it would have cost them $8 million.

Under the plan we are now discussing Hamilton will have $8 million worth of facilities but a debt of only $4 million. My only reason for raising the question of this change of policy was not, as the minister seemed to think, to urge the government to do less—I am sure he will find nothing in what I said earlier that urged him to take any particular course of action with regard to Hamilton—but what I did ask him was to give the committee the benefit of the consideration which he and his department must have given to this proposal because it seems to me that it creates—if you like, let us call it a precedent. There is nothing wrong with creating a precedent but I think there must be some reason for departing from a policy which had been followed uniformly with all of the harbour commissions across Canada.

The hon. member for Hamilton South in his remarks a moment ago spoke about the need of these facilities and the useful purpose they would serve and while I am not suggesting that he went into the matter at all fully the impression which I received from what he said was that the facilities were of such a character that they would provide the revenues needed to pay the interest on the whole cost. Consequently I am just asking the Minister of Transport if he could not give us a more complete explanation of why there is this change of policy and why we seem to be providing in this particular case at a cost to be borne to the extent of 50 per cent by the federal treasury—I may be quite wrong in this assumption—facilities which would seem to be of themselves self-liquidating.

No one is suggesting for a moment that the facilities should not be built. I think the minister has made it quite clear that in the judgment of himself and his officials the facilities are needed but the one point he has not clearly disposed of in my view is why half the cost should be paid by the federal government when the facilities seem to be self-liquidating and self-supporting. Perhaps the minister could give us a fuller explanation on that point.

I should like to reiterate that I have no wish whatever to interfere with or to hinder the development of facilities in Hamilton harbour. I think we probably all agree that they are necessary. While we do not have the more special knowledge the minister would have as to whether $8 million is the exact cost or the details of the facilities themselves, in a broad general way I think he has made out a case for the carrying out of the work. But I would suggest to him that he has not yet made out a case which is very convincing as to why Hamilton is not able itself to service the cost of the facilities which seem to be necessary.

Mr. Hees: I wonder whether the member for St. Antoine-Westmount would tell me this. Were these arrangements and this proposition not discussed quite clearly between himself as the former minister and the Hamilton harbour commission? Was there not a discussion with him?

Mr. Marler: I can assure the minister that this is the first time I have had any personal knowledge of this particular project.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): I do not wish in any way to say anything against the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, but after the election I made a routine check of the facilities of the harbour and in discussion with one of the harbour commissioners appointed by the former Liberal regime he asked me if our government would give consideration to the $4 million proposal about which he had talked to the Department of Transport before the last election. I told him that I would take up the matter with the officials of the Department of Transport when they came to Hamilton and that I was sure that they would extend the co-operation that this government always gives.

Mr. Martini: Mr. Chairman, I support the resolution and I have some figures here which prove that Hamilton harbour is growing fast. As the hon. member for Hamilton South said, we have industries there that are situated on the harbour. I just want to give these figures. Thirty-five years ago only 60,000 tons of cargo were handled in and out of Hamilton harbour. In 1956 the figure was 7,834,593 tons and I am told that the increase this year so far is over a million and a half tons. The hydro thermal plant to be built in Hamilton will mean the bringing in of about 4 million tons of coal a year, more than Hamilton uses at the present time. Therefore I am in favour of the resolution.

Mr. Lavigne: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the resolution. I want to tell the minister that I am very happy to see it on the order paper and I wish to compliment him on it. I know the problems of the municipalities along the St. Lawrence seaway. Their financial problems have become very serious. They have been experiencing growing pains and are having difficulty in selling their debentures. They have a much graver problem facing them in the need to develop harbours and promote harbour commissions and are having a very difficult time. I am happy to see the resolution on the order paper because I may have a similar one with respect to the Cornwall harbour commission before too long.

Mr. Marler: Is the minister not going to deal with the question I asked?

Mr. Hees: I think all I can say to the hon. member is that this is a new government and we are taking a new look at a number of problems. Perhaps that is the reason we are here today. This proposition appears to us to be a fair and sensible one in order to help harbour commissions and municipalities to help themselves. We have studied the matter. We feel that it is not giving away the government's money. We feel that the government should assist the development of commerce and industry by helping harbour commissions provide the needed facilities. That is the way we as a government look at this proposition.

The former government may condemn it. The former government may consider we are giving away government money. The former government may consider we are doing things that are spendthrift and foolish. We do not. We believe that this is a way to help people to help themselves, to invest in Canada's future. This matter has been considered thoroughly by the government. We have considered every aspect of it. We consider the proposition is fair and sound. All I can say to members on the opposite side is that if they do not feel this is the right way to spend government money then let them be sure to vote against it. We feel that it is. We believe that this is a sound, sensible way to help Canada to help herself.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I suppose this is probably the fiftieth invitation that the government has extended since the beginning of the session for us to defeat them on some measure or other. I must say I am somewhat surprised that my hon. friend is following the example of some of his colleagues because in my own parliamentary experience, which now extends over some fifteen years, his is the first government I have met so far which has seemed more anxious to have its proposals defeated than accepted.

Mr. Hees: Just tested before parliament and before the people.

Mr. Marler: Regardless of what the minister says concerning the desirability of the federal government lending a helping hand to the Hamilton harbour commission, the fact remains that the two members from Hamilton—I am not, of course, including the Secretary of State—the hon. member for Hamilton South and the hon. member for Hamilton East, have both spoken in rather moderate terms, I thought, with regard to the large volume of traffic that Hamilton is already taking care of. The hon. member for Hamilton East, who spoke a moment ago indicated that the already substantial volume of traffic, which, I suppose, is now in the neighbourhood of 8 million tons annually, is going to be increased by another 4 million tons when the hydro thermal plant is built in Hamilton. I cannot help thinking from what they have said and from what the minister himself has said that the revenues of the Hamilton harbour commission would seem to be more than sufficient to take care of the principal and interest on the whole cost of these facilities.

Therefore what would really seem to be the case is that the government is making a gift of approximately half the cost of these facilities to a body which, I think we should all agree, is probably fully capable of meeting its own responsibilities and standing on its own feet. One fact that perhaps should not escape us is that that really is not the question before the committee at this time. The question before the committee at this time is the resolution which is in these words:

> That it is expedient to introduce a bill to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans to the Hamilton harbour commissioners, out of the consolidated revenue fund, not exceeding in the aggregate $4 million for the purpose of constructing additional dockage and other facilities in the harbour.

I come back to what I said when I first spoke, Mr. Chairman, that we intend to facilitate the passing of the resolution and the bill to be based on the resolution, but I do not want the minister to think from that, when we are asked to consider more specifically the question of providing through the budget of the Department of Public Works an additional $4 million either by a single payment or otherwise, that we will not go into the matter. We reserve the right to go into the matter more fully at that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may well be that this is a rather rosy view that perhaps we have developed during the evening as to the ability of Hamilton to pay the principal and interest on an $8 million program, provided the moneys were lent. During the discussion before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines it may develop that the commission is not able to pay interest on the whole of the $8 million, either now or ultimately, and that the tariffs that could reasonably be expected to be levied on the traffic passing over these facilities will not be sufficient to take care of and support a debt burden of $8 million. In those circumstances, I would be quite prepared to adopt a different view in the matter. For that reason I think I should reserve the position of the party to which I belong, so that when the question of providing these additional funds comes before us we shall have an opportunity of expressing our opinions in the light of the pertinent facts. As I say, Mr. Chairman, the question at the moment is whether or not we should adopt this resolution, and despite the invitation of my successor that we should defeat the government on this proposal I am not ready to accept that invitation and I think we should pass the resolution.

Mr. Hahn: Before the resolution carries, I may say I have listened with a good deal of interest to what the minister had to say and what other spokesmen have said in respect thereto. The minister is fully aware that there is a harbour commission, similar to that of the Hamilton harbour commission, in my own area. I am interested in this change in policy. I would ask the minister if this is a new policy, and if so, have harbour commissions been made aware of it so that they can take advantage of it in other areas of Canada?

Mr. Hees: There is no new policy. As I tried to tell the house tonight, we examine each application as it comes before us and try to make a sensible, accurate and fair summation of the application and deal as fairly as we possibly can under the circumstances which are presented to us. There is no new policy, other than perhaps a different look that a new government takes of national affairs. There is no laid down new policy. We believe that the attitude that we have taken in this matter is quite a sensible and fair one. It may not be, but we think it is. It is not a new policy, as I said; it is simply perhaps a willingness to look at each and every problem that is presented to us on its merits, and an attempt to decide what should be done in the light of the presentation that is made.

Mr. Hahn: I am very appreciative of what the minister has just said because in it I recognize that while he is not prepared to indicate that it is a new policy, at the same time the fact is established that the government is taking a different look, or let us say looking at this matter through different glasses. I am prepared to accept that. I am very happy to ascertain that we have this new look. I would be the last person in this house to oppose this suggested move. I am more particularly interested, however, in establishing whether or not the government is prepared to accept other applications along similar lines by other harbour commissions?

Mr. Hees: As I said earlier, Mr. Chairman, this government is very glad, as the last five and a half months have indicated, to look at any proposition that is put before them, to examine it to the best of our ability. I am not saying, by any manner of means, that we accept each proposition that is put before us. However, we will look at them, examine them, and to the best of our ability decide whether they are good propositions or otherwise.

Mr. Hahn: I should like—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hamilton Harbour Commissioners

Mr. Hahn: I am delighted at the reception I am receiving from my Conservative friends. I am concerned with ascertaining if this is a new policy with respect to harbour development. If so, I think the people in Canada, and particularly those in my own riding, have a right to know whether or not they can expect the same treatment as the Hamilton harbour commission has received. I am satisfied with what the minister says, that each application must stand on its own merits; that seems to be the case. In other words, what we have in effect is a new policy which says that every harbour is going to be considered on the basis of the case the commissioners make for it. The reception of the application may, of course, depend to a large degree on the personnel or other attributes which the commission has in presenting its case. I do not think that would be too satisfactory in some instances.

Mr. Hees: As a last word, I will say that the personnel of the harbour commission in question has nothing to do with the acceptance or otherwise by this government of an application. I think it might be of interest to hon. members to know that I believe most of the members of the Hamilton harbour commission, so far as I know, are not sympathetic to the party which I represent. This had nothing to do with our examination of the case. Our examination of any particular case will have nothing to do with the political affiliation of the members of the board concerned.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Hahn: An hon. member suggests that I sit down, but I do not think it would be fair to the minister if I left the impression that I thought he had made a suggestion about political affiliations. The only thing I am suggesting is that in the event a harbour commission has a particular problem in respect to their harbour I feel they should be entitled to expect the same treatment as the harbour commission of Hamilton received.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hees thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 197, respecting the Hamilton harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave.

[Mr. Hahn.]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 197, respecting the Hamilton harbour commissioners.

Mr. Marler: Is the minister going to make a statement on the bill?

Mr. Hees: I do not think there is anything I can add to what I said at the resolution stage.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): The only comment I wish to make on the bill is that it seems to be in the form which is usual in cases where the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is to be authorized to make loans to harbour commissions. I, personally, have no further comments to make on the bill itself.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

CANADIAN VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEDUCTIONS, REASSESSMENTS, DEPOSITS, ETC.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 72, to amend the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Mr. Marler: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of this bill is to extend the benefits provided by the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act in order to give further encouragement to the construction and conversion of vessels in Canada.

The bill is a rather technical one involving income tax law. As the house leader has already said, when it has had second reading I propose to move that it be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Before going into the provisions of the bill itself I might summarize the existing provisions of the act by stating that the benefits granted are twofold. The first is the provision of a higher rate of depreciation, not exceeding 33⅓ per cent on a straight line basis, as opposed to the normal rate of 15 per cent on the reducing balance allowed under the Income Tax Act. This special rate of depreciation applies only, of course, to vessels built, converted or altered in Canada. The second benefit is the freedom from recapture of depreciation where the proceeds of sale of a ship are used for replacement in Canada.

The amending bill enlarges and extends the conditions under which the benefits of the act can be obtained. These extensions are necessary because of the fact that shipbuilding in Canada is a more expensive undertaking than it is in European or Japanese yards. In comparison with United Kingdom yards, Canadian shipbuilding costs are about 50 per cent higher. This means that the cost of a ship in Canada is one and a half times that of a similar ship built in the United Kingdom. At the same time we must bear in mind that during the war our shipyards made an immense contribution to the allied cause. There was built up during this period a group of skills the dispersal of which must be prevented. For reasons of national security, these skills would be necessary to us and to our allies in the event of another conflict. For reasons of our national economy as a great trading nation it is also necessary for us to maintain the necessary shipbuilding and ship repairing facilities to meet the needs of the many ships of all nations that come to carry away our exports. The Canadian shipbuilding industry is also an important source of employment for Canadian workmen.

Under the act as it now stands a taxpayer for whom a ship was built in Canada can duly obtain the benefits of a higher depreciation rate while he retains the ship on Canadian registry. In order to assist Canadian shipowners to operate their vessels competitively in the international ocean-going trades we have an arrangement with the United Kingdom whereby Canadian-owned ships may be operated on United Kingdom registry, subject to recall to Canadian registry. These ships will be considered as a Canadian contribution to any allied pool in time of war, and by the nature of the arrangements are subject to Canadian requisition in time of war.

The first amendment extends the benefits of the higher rate of depreciation to the Canadian owner of a ship built or converted in Canada and transferred to a commonwealth registry under conditions satisfactory to the Canadian maritime commission.

This involves a transfer under the special arrangements to which I have referred. Accelerated depreciation is, of course, a form of tax relief. Obviously any form of tax relief is valueless unless the taxpayer is earning sufficient taxable income to take advantage of the relief afforded. The owner cannot earn sufficient income under Canadian registry, but he can do so under United Kingdom registry. Indeed it is a recognized fact that the operation of a 10,000 ton dry cargo vessel on Canadian registry costs $100,000 more per year than it does on United Kingdom registry.

The purpose of this amendment therefore, is to encourage owners building for operation under the transfer arrangements, to build their ships in Canada instead of abroad.

Furthermore, as the act now stands, a taxpayer can obtain the benefit of the higher depreciation rate only if the newly constructed ship is built "by or for" him.

The second amendment involves the deletion of these words "by or for". This will allow Canadian shipyards to build ships, barges or vessels, for later sale to a purchaser not yet identified at the commencement of construction. In other words, it will allow speculative building. As a result, yards will be able to keep their employment cycle more level by undertaking such a venture when there is a slack period. To prevent any undue extension of this benefit, it is restricted to vessels in respect of which no depreciation had been previously allowed to any other taxpayer, either under this act or under the Income Tax Act. Consequently, in practice, the benefit will be available only to the taxpayer who has incurred the additional cost of Canadian building, and it will allow a shipyard to do speculative building with the prospect of being able to attract a purchaser.

The third amendment deals with that part of the act which gives freedom from recapture of depreciation under the Income Tax Act when the vessel is sold, provided the proceeds of sale are used for replacement under conditions satisfactory to the Canadian maritime commission. At present this benefit is available only to the ships sold by the crown in the immediate post-war years or those built since 1949 with the benefits of the act. This amendment makes the benefit of freedom from recapture applicable to the proceeds of sale of any ship regardless of whether or not it was allowed special depreciation or capital cost allowances in the past. This is designed to encourage owners of all classes of vessels to dispose of older equipment and to use the proceeds to build replacements in Canada.

The fourth amendment will allow the Canadian maritime commission to certify that it holds on deposit a sum of money or a guarantee at least equal to the tax payable if satisfactory replacement is not effected, thus allowing the benefits of freedom from recapture of depreciation to be realized during the period between disposition of the old vessel and completion of the new one.

Without this amendment the taxpayer, unless the entire undertaking is completed in one taxation year, is compelled to pay the tax in the year of sale and then to seek reimbursement of the tax in the year when the proceeds of disposition are actually spent for replacement. This obviously makes his financing problems more complicated and more onerous.

The fifth amendment modifies certain income tax practices to ensure that the seller of a ship may enjoy the freedom from recapture at the time the sale is made.

The final amendment provides for the conditions under which any deposit or guarantee may be paid out by the Canadian maritime commission.

As with the other bills I have introduced this evening, Mr. Speaker, when second reading is passed I intend to move that this bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if one were to read this bill I think one would have the impression that it is probably the most complex piece of legislation which the house will be asked to consider at this session. But the language is misleading because it contains many technical terms. In fact, however, the objects which it proposes to carry out are fundamentally simple.

I should like to say to members of the house that this Bill No. 72 is drawn in very much the same terms as those of a bill for the same purposes which was introduced at the last session of parliament earlier this year but which, because of time running out, was not disposed of and did not go beyond first reading. In consequence it will be our intention to support the bill now before the house. However, I hope that if critical comments are expressed, the Minister of Transport will not again ask us to vote against the government or to throw it out of office.

Hon. members who had the opportunity of examining the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act will see from its terms that it was adopted obviously in order to encourage the construction of vessels in Canadian shipyards and likewise the carrying out in Canadian shipyards of the work of conversion and major alterations. As hon. members may have gathered from what the hon. minister said in his explanatory remarks, encouragement was given in the form of depreciation at an unusually high rate and of freedom from recapture of depreciation where the proceeds from the sale of a vessel were used for its replacement under conditions satisfactory to the Canadian maritime commission. The provisions concerning depreciation which cover both the case of construction of a vessel in Canada and the case where a vessel has undergone conversion or major alteration in Canada will be found in subsections (1) and (2) of section 3, and the provisions providing freedom from recapture of depreciation will be found in section 4, from which it will be seen that the recapture provisions of the Income Tax Act do not apply where the proceeds are used or the replacement of the vessel is made, as I said a moment ago, under conditions satisfactory to the Canadian maritime commission.

The bill which is before us in effect makes several changes. The first one is to do away with the requirement that the benefits of the act shall accrue only to a taxpayer while a vessel remains on Canadian registry and it will be readily seen from an examination of the bill that one of its purposes is to do away with this requirement as a condition of being entitled to benefits and thereafter to depreciation after the vessel is replaced.

The second provision which it is proposed to change is that it is no longer to be a condition that the vessel in respect of which benefits are allowed shall be built by or for the taxpayer and, as the minister himself pointed out, this has to be done by extending the benefits of the act to vessels built by a shipyard for sale to any purchaser. There is, however, a restriction which has been added in regard to this benefit which did not appear in the bill which I presented at the earlier session this year, and I would hope that when the bill is considered in the standing committee we might have the opportunity of going into this restriction to see whether or not a useful purpose will be served by leaving it in or whether it might be more advantageous to make some other provision with a somewhat similar object in mind.

Quite obviously the taxpayer should not be entitled to depreciate the same vessel twice, but I am not sure that the proviso to which I am referring does not prevent the taxpayer from obtaining full depreciation at the accelerated rate and I am not perfectly certain with respect to the benefits which would otherwise accrue to a taxpayer owning a vessel of the kind qualifying for these benefits, whether that taxpayer should be precluded from passing on the same advantages to someone to whom he might sell that vessel. However, that is rather a technical question and perhaps not at all appropriate to discuss on the second reading of this bill, when of course we are concerned with its principle.

The third change is to extend the operation of subsection (1) of section 4 in the present act, as the minister said, so as to include any vessel whatsoever, instead of limiting its operation to those vessels in respect of which some form of special depreciation or capital cost allowance had been granted in the past.

In that connection I would like to recall what I think was a fairly simple explanation which I gave to the house when the estimates of the Department of Transport were under consideration on August 10, 1956. I would like to quote from what I said on page 7406 of Hansard as follows:

> Further modifications will also be brought about in the realm of capital cost allowances. At present, for income tax purposes, it is compulsory to pool vessels that have an exemption from recapture of depreciation, under section 4 of the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act, with other vessels that do not benefit from this exemption. Consequently, when the owner disposes of some or all of the vessels so pooled, his exemption can readily become dependent upon the order in which they are sold. Broadly speaking, if the qualified ships are sold earlier and the unqualified ships later, the sale of the qualified ships may serve to wipe out the undepreciated value of the class. This situation could be remedied by permitting an owner, if he so elects, to treat as a separate prescribed class any vessel or vessels that qualify under section 4 of the act; that is, a vessel the proceeds of sale of which had been used for replacement under conditions satisfactory to the commission.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, in referring to the commission there I was referring to the Canadian maritime commission. I am sure hon. members will agree that the question of whether or not the benefits of the act should or should not accrue, ought not to be dependent upon the order in which the taxpayer disposes of his vessels, and if this is the law it would seem to be an anomaly which ought to be corrected, and that, of course, is the purpose of the third change to which I referred a moment ago.

The fourth change is to allow the Canadian maritime commission, where the replacement of a vessel has not been undertaken but is foreseen, to certify that it holds on deposit or by way of guarantee an amount at least equal to the tax that is paid. This will allow the benefits of the act to be recovered during an interim period instead of requiring payment of the tax and the subsequent reimbursement of it. I think the minister's explanation on this point was perfectly clear that when an owner disposes of his ship the question arises as to whether or not there is to be recapture of the depreciation which he has set up during the time he has owned and operated the vessel, and I think it is desirable that this question could be disposed of finally at that time and the determination not held over until perhaps some much later date when the funds in question are used for the replacement of the vessel, that is to say at the time of the completion of the operation by which the old vessel is replaced by a modern replacement.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, this is legislation which we in this party might well have dealt with earlier this year had the time available been long enough and I do not think, despite the complexity of the language of the bill, it is controversial. Therefore, so far as we are concerned, it is our intention to support the second reading.

Mr. H. E. Smith (Simcoe North): Some hon. members may wonder why a member from a central Ontario riding is speaking in support of a bill dealing with the construction of ocean going vessels. In Collingwood on Georgian bay is one of the finest and most efficient shipyards in all Canada. There are presently employed in those yards between seven and nine hundred highly skilled shipbuilders. That these yards have been able to keep busy with the little governmental aid they have received is indeed a tribute to both the workers and management. In anticipation of the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway, ships are now being built there which will sail both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada. The passage of this bill means that Canadian shipbuilding will be able to compete with regard to all the shipbuilding needs of Canadian owners wherever ships may be used.

It has not been the policy of the Canadian government to subsidize the building of Canadian merchant shipping, yet in times of need the shipbuilding industry and the shipbuilders are absolutely vital to the security of our country. In Canada we have seen since the end of the second world war many of our great lakes yards virtually disappear. Certainly their work forces are scattered forever. If this bill brings only one ship to the great lakes yards it will be worth while, but I am sure it will mean many new ships for all Canadian shipyards. Without it there is no incentive for Canadian ship owners to build their ships in Canada when the prime cost of ships in foreign yards is as much as 50 per cent less than in Canadian yards.

This act is not a subsidy. It merely permits the owner to write off the cost against earnings at an accelerated rate. As soon as the cost is written off in a minimum of three years the ship will still have many years of earning taxable income for the owners.

This bill ought to commend itself to all hon. members who consider the shipbuilding industry important to our national maturity and to our national security.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I can take part in this debate not only as a member for a constituency in which there are large shipyards, but also as one who represents a riches to rags story as far as shipbuilding is concerned, for my great, great grandfather built 75 vessels in the balmy days of sailing ships while I could not even patch a canoe.

I think there is no more vulnerable point in our national life than foreign competition in the shipping and allied industries. An outstanding example of this is with us today, namely the problem of Canadian National Steamships. I am happy to see this act come before parliament at this time, for revision. I think it is a hopeful sign that with all the emergency legislation we have to consider before we get out of here at Christmas, New Year's Day or St. Valentine's Day—

Mr. Stick: Why not make it Easter while you are at it?

Mr. McCleave: —the government should be able to find time for this measure, and I hope the hon. minister who heads the Department of Transport will continually keep a vigilant eye upon this act to see that it accomplishes what it sets out to do.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Coming from a province that is surrounded by water we are naturally interested in anything which is done to encourage shipbuilding in Canada. The very life of our province depends, of course, on what is brought in by sea.

The purpose of this legislation, as stated by the minister, is to retain the pool of skills which we have built up, and which we might need in an emergency. We want, also, to encourage shipbuilding in Canada. I have some doubt whether this bill in its present form is going to be of very much use in that respect as far as the province of Newfoundland is concerned. The bill does not specify to what size ships this legislation will apply, or whether it will apply only to coastal vessels, or whether it will apply equally to fishing vessels. I should like the minister to clear this matter up.

My own opinion is that if we are going to encourage shipbuilding in Canada we have to meet two problems. The first is the exorbitant capital cost of construction. As the minister said, a ship built in Canada costs 50 per cent more than the same ship built in the United Kingdom. I think he could have gone on to say that it would cost twice as much as a similar one built in Japan or in another part of the world.

If we are going to meet that competition and encourage shipbuilding in Canada, the best way of doing that is to increase our bounty system and extend the bounty system we have for fishing ships. I think this legislation would be best applied to operating costs, which are our second problem inasmuch as operating costs are geared to our standard of living, which makes it impossible for us to compete with ships of foreign registry. I should like to see more attention paid to the bounty system, and this legislation restricted to operating costs. I think we could do something more by way of amending some other legislation under the Canada Shipping Act which would permit us to lower capital costs by bringing in secondhand ships at very reasonable cost for use in our fishing industry and coastal trade.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to add a few words to the remarks of my colleagues.

As the representative of a riding whose chief industry is the building and repair of ships, I am keenly interested in any legislation affecting this particular industry. I had the opportunity to sit in this house during the last war, and I did note how much it cost the government to organize its navy and merchant marine.

I believe legislation such as this should command the approval of every hon. member in this house, because I think it is designed to help an industry which is of primary importance for the country's defence and economy. I hope the minister will continue to assist this industry, in the same manner as it was helped by the former government, as it is essential to our national economy and, more particularly to those ridings depending on it for their existence.

I also hope that before long we will hear the government announce the creation of that famous merchant navy advocated by the Conservatives when they were sitting on the opposition benches.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I will support this or any other legislation tending to assist shipbuilding and repair in our country.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR CONVERSION OF CAPITAL STOCK COMPANIES INTO MUTUAL COMPANIES, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 169, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, although this bill appears to have some formidable provisions in it, its intent is quite simple and it is proposed, if the house is pleased to give the bill a second reading, to have the measure then referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce where a thorough review can be made of the clauses of the bill and where the superintendent of insurance and any other officials whose presence is desired will be available to discuss the terms in detail.

The policies and practices of Canadian life insurance companies cut deeply across the Canadian economic structure and the welfare of a great multitude of people in Canada. The contracts of life companies are generally made for long terms, involving the future welfare of both policyholders and their dependants. Moreover, most companies have grown enormously during the last decade. Consequently the question of their ownership and control is of serious concern and importance to almost every Canadian.

Life insurance companies are organized either on the mutual basis, without share capital, or on the joint stock basis. Mutual companies are, of course, owned entirely by their policyholders. The great majority of Canadian life companies are joint stock companies but practically all of them issue policies on the participating plan as well as on the non-participating plan. A participating policyholder pays relatively higher premiums but is entitled to participate in the profits of the company from its participating business. As a consequence, the holders of participating policies have a very real interest in the management of the company, an interest going substantially beyond the security of their policies alone. This is recognized in the insurance act by giving participating policyholders the right to attend and vote, either in person or by proxy, at all general meetings of the company and by giving them representation on the board of directors to the extent of at least one-third of the board.

Over the years participating insurance has proved to be the more popular plan in Canada, with the result that most of the life business is transacted on this plan. From this point of view, therefore, it may be said that a well-established life insurance company having a large volume of participating insurance in force, even though organized on the joint stock basis, is to some extent already a mutual company.

The capital stock of a relatively mature life insurance company is usually quite small in comparison with the total funds of the company and its total liabilities. The capital serves a most important purpose in launching a company and in providing protection to the policyholders during the early years. However, as a company grows, the capital becomes less and less important so far as protection to the policyholders is concerned. This is not to say, of course, that the shareholders are not entitled to the profits resulting from the development of a successful enterprise, or to minimize the value of a proprietary interest in most businesses. In the field of life insurance, both mutual companies and stock companies have their advantages and their disadvantages. Nevertheless, the diminishing role of the capital must be mentioned to point up the fact that the principal strength of a well-established life insurance company lies in the funds accumulated from the premiums paid by its policyholders, especially the participating policyholders, rather than in the capital stock.

From what I have said I think that it can readily be seen that the policyholders' interests in every Canadian life insurance company, whether it be a mutual company or a stock company, are very substantial, and that it may properly be stated that as the companies grow they all tend to become policyholder organizations to an increasing extent.

In recent years a high degree of interest has been displayed in the shares of Canadian stock life insurance companies, and in the case of some companies the price of the shares has risen to levels that scarcely seem justifiable in the light of the dividends being paid and the earnings of the companies. For the most part, our Canadian companies have been built by Canadians with Canadian capital, and the good management and public responsibility shown by the shareholders have been a credit to the industry. Policyholders have been treated fairly and the profits withdrawn by shareholders have not in any case been so large as to suggest that the interests of the policyholders have been affected to their detriment. The companies have at the same time gained an enviable record for reliability. With a new body of shareholders, however, coming into ownership of shares at the very high prices that have been in evidence in recent years it is less certain that past management practices will be continued in every instance.

There has also been great interest manifested in recent years in obtaining control of Canadian life insurance companies, particularly among foreign investors. Prior to 1930, all Canadian life insurance companies were controlled in Canada. About 1930, control of the Montreal Life Insurance Company, head office, Montreal, was acquired by an English insurance company. No other change occurred until 1955 but, since then, control of six Canadian life companies has been acquired by interests outside of Canada. In 1955 control of the Continental Life Insurance Company, head office, Toronto, was acquired by a Swiss insurance company. In the same year, the Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company, head office, Winnipeg, was incorporated by parliament to take over an existing fraternal benefit society, the Dominion General Benefit Association, and the new company was capitalized entirely by another Swiss insurance company. Early in 1956, control of the Western Life Assurance Company, head office, Hamilton, was acquired by certain United States investors; and later that year, control of the Commercial Life Assurance Company, head office, Toronto, was acquired by Dutch insurance interests. Although most of these companies were quite old, they were relatively small companies.

Early in 1957, control of a much larger company, the Dominion Life Assurance Company, head office, Waterloo, was acquired by a large United States insurance company. More recently still, in June last, control of the Fidelity Life Assurance Company, head office, Regina, was acquired by British insurance interests. I am sure the house is aware of the fact that in at least one other conspicuous case control of the stock of the company nearly passed out of Canadian hands not very long ago.

By reason of the small capital in relation to the aggregate funds of many companies, control of a very large organization may sometimes be obtained through comparatively small outlays in the purchase of shares. These surrounding circumstances, which have been the subject of comments from time to time in the reports of the superintendent of insurance, have led some companies to feel that the best course for their future, including the welfare of their policyholders, would be to purchase their own shares, eventually retiring their entire capital stock and so becoming mutual companies. This course has been followed with outstanding success by some of the largest companies in the United States, notably the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and the Prudential Insurance Company of America.

Mr. Speaker, if it meets with the approval of the house I think I could finish this statement in two or three minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming: Whatever the means may be, it seems desirable that control of Canadian life insurance companies should remain in good hands, and preferably Canadian hands. I am sure that this view is shared by all members of the house. After all, the life insurance business in Canada as represented by the Canadian life insurance companies is peculiarly a Canadian institution.

The main purpose of this bill is to authorize a procedure whereby a stock life insurance company incorporated by parliament may be converted into a mutual company, if the shareholders and participating policyholders of the company wish to follow this course and if the company is in a financial position to do so. The insurance laws of several of the states of the United States of America include provisions of this kind but our own act has not contained such a provision hitherto.

Under the procedure set forth in the bill, mutualization would be effected through the purchase of its own shares by the company and the cancellation of the shares when all of them have been acquired. Appropriate safeguards have been included to ensure that no company will start on this path unless it has the financial resources to carry the plan through to completion within a reasonable period and to ensure that the shareholders will be treated fairly and the interests of the policyholders will be protected.

Some companies may not wish to mutualize but may, nevertheless, wish to retain their Canadian character in so far as they can. In order to assist them to do so the bill would empower the board of directors of a life insurance company incorporated by parliament to refuse to allow the transfer of shares from Canadian hands to non-Canadian hands. This would be a discretionary power resting with the directors to use or not as they might see fit. However, this power would not apply to enable the directors to prohibit transfers from one non-Canadian shareholder to another. In that respect we are taking nothing away from the rights of any existing shareholder residing outside Canada. In some respects this power is similar to the power already conferred upon the directors by the Insurance Act whereby they may refuse to allow the transfer of any shares that are not fully paid.

The bill would also require that the majority of the entire board of directors of every company incorporated by parliament, whether a mutual company or a stock company, and whether a life insurance company or any other kind of insurance company, must at all times be Canadian citizens resident in Canada. The insurance act now requires that a majority of the directors representing shareholders must be Canadian citizens resident in Canada but no provision is made for mutual companies or as respects the entire boards of companies having policyholders' directors as well as shareholders' directors.

The other point dealt with in the bill relates to fraternal benefit societies. At the present time, a fraternal benefit society insuring the dependent children of members is required to account for this insurance in a completely separate fund. This requirement was established many years ago at a time when societies were smaller than they are now and generally less experienced in insurance matters, particularly in the insurance of children. Under existing circumstances, there is no longer a need for this requirement and societies have been pressing to have the requirement removed so that they may simplify their accounting methods and also reduce their expenses.

Accordingly, the bill would remove the mandatory requirement that juvenile insurance must be accounted for in a separate fund and would enable fraternal societies to merge the juvenile insurance with similar kinds of adult insurance if they wish to do so. However, societies would still be empowered to maintain a separate fund for juvenile insurance if they so desire.

May I remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that if the house is pleased to give the bill second reading it is the intention to propose that it be then referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

On motion of Mr. Benidickson the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Marler: What business will we be taking up tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall commence with interim supply and then go on with the bill to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, debate on which has just been adjourned by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. Then we will take the resolution to introduce a measure to amend the Exports Credits Insurance Act, then the resolution to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act. The hon. member for Assiniboia will be glad to hear that we will then take the resolution providing for guaranteed prices for agricultural commodities, then the resolution preceding a bill to provide for a loan to the province of New Brunswick. After that we will take the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Could the minister give us a little more information about the remainder of the week? I ask this question particularly in view of the statement made earlier today by the Minister of Finance that he hoped his estimates would be considered before the end of the week. Can the minister say what estimates will be dealt with on Thursday, Friday and Saturday?

Mr. Green: I do not want to be held down to the information I give this evening because I am not certain. I think that on Thursday we will take the estimates of the Department of National Defence and on Friday those of the Department of Finance. I am not sure what we will take on Saturday.

Mr. Marler: The all-star game.

It being six minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

UNEMPLOYMENT, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 247—Mr. MacEachen:

1. How many were registered as unemployed in (a) the province of Nova Scotia; (b) the Atlantic provinces, on or about November 7, 1957?
2. What were the figures for the same period one year ago?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. The number of persons registered for employment at local offices of the unemployment insurance commission in the province of Nova Scotia on November 7, 1957, was 13,132; in the Atlantic provinces the figure was 37,128.

2. The number of persons registered for employment at local offices of the unemployment insurance commission in the province of Nova Scotia on November 8, 1956, was 8,554; in the Atlantic provinces the figure was 22,488.

OPENING OF FEDERAL BUILDING, CHETICAMP, N.S.

Question No. 249—Mr. MacEachen:

When is it proposed to have the official opening of the new federal building at Cheticamp, Nova Scotia?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

The date has not yet been decided upon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 4, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROWN (ESSEX WEST)—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday, December 3, at page 1775 of Hansard there is recorded a question which I addressed to the Prime Minister. I asked that the parliamentary assistant take it as notice. I will not bore the house with the full question, but I shall refer to the pertinent parts. They are as follows:

> Has the Prime Minister received a letter from the city clerk of Windsor, acting on behalf of the metropolitan committee . . . requesting an appointment to meet with him and the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Public Works? . . . Was the Prime Minister advised of my telephone request of November 28 to his secretary attempting to arrange such an interview? . . . has the Prime Minister had drawn to his attention my letter to him dated November 28, requesting such an interview by the committee? If so, would he kindly indicate when he may meet with this committee?

On the same page there is a reply by the Minister of Public Works, who said:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am supposed to answer that question as parliamentary assistant to the Prime Minister, as Minister of Public Works or in what capacity, but I understand that the answer has gone out and it has been suggested that the delegation should meet the Prime Minister next Wednesday.

This morning I was in receipt of a letter from the Minister of National Health and Welfare stating that he had arranged a meeting for 4 p.m. Wednesday next, December 11, at which his colleague the Minister of Public Works had agreed to be in attendance.

This morning I also received a telephone call from someone purporting to be from the Prime Minister's office, stating there was a doubt that the Prime Minister would receive the delegation requested.

Is it, therefore, not the intention of the Prime Minister to receive the delegation dealing with a matter of vital national importance to all municipalities in Ontario, namely the unemployment situation and the assistance to municipalities in taking care of unemployed employables; and is it not the intention of the Prime Minister to respond to my letter of November 28?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has not raised any question of privilege, in my opinion. He might more properly have brought the matter up in a question before the orders of the day are called. Does the hon. member consider there is a question of privilege in the facts he has suggested?

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Yes, Mr. Speaker; there is definitely a question of privilege because I was told by the Minister of Public Works that the Prime Minister would meet with us next Wednesday, and I have received a letter from the Minister of National Health and Welfare stating that that is not so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just returned a moment ago and I had no advance notice of this matter. But let me tell my hon. friend that any message he may have received from somebody purporting to be somebody saying that it was not my intention to meet with the delegation, as I understand it, on December 11 is incorrect. What the question of privilege is I am sure I do not know, but certainly I am available at any time, and the date has been fixed.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think this discussion should be continued. It was not, in my opinion, a question of privilege and should not have been raised at this time.

STARRED QUESTION

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—FEDERAL ACTION ON PRICES

Question No. 22—Mr. Benidickson:

> What steps, beyond the setting up of the Borden royal commission, is the government taking to assure, on an interim basis, that consumers will not be required to pay an inequitable price for natural gas from the trans-Canada pipe line in areas where gas is already or is soon to be made available?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stand.

Mr. Benidickson: This question has been on the order paper for some time. I would appreciate it if the Prime Minister could soon deal with it, unless I am to take it that the lack of reference to this subject on Monday when the Prime Minister outlined forthcoming legislation during this session is the answer to this question.

Motions for Papers

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CAMPBELLTON, N.B.-CROSS POINT, QUE. BRIDGE

Motion No. 40—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec, since January 1, 1953 to date, in connection with the proposed construction of a bridge across the Restigouche river from Campbellton, New Brunswick, to the village of Cross Point, Quebec.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): This is perfectly all right, Mr. Speaker, subject to the usual reservation that the government of the province of Quebec has no objections.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservation stated by the Minister of Public Works?

Motion agreed to.

HARRIS BUSH—DISMISSAL

Motion No. 41—Mr. Kirk:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents received or sent since June 21, 1957, by the Minister of Public Works or any other minister, or any official of the Department of Public Works or other government departments concerning the release or dismissal of Harris Bush from the position of foreman of repairs on Middle Island wharf, LaHave islands, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is satisfactory, subject to the reservation that documents passing within the department or from one department to another are not to be produced.

Motion agreed to.

JOHN MACDONALD—DISMISSAL

Motion No. 42—Mr. MacEachen:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents received or sent, since June 21, 1957, by the Minister of Public Works or any other minister or any official of the Department of Public Works or other government departments, concerning the dismissal of John MacDonald, inspector of repairs to the wharf at Cribbin's point, Antigonish county, Nova Scotia.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, here again there will be the same reservation in regard to documents passing within the department or between one department and another.

Motion agreed to.

UNION STEAMSHIPS LIMITED

Motion No. 43—Mr. Hahn:

For a copy of contract or agreement between the Union Steamships Limited and the government relating to the application for and receipt of a subvention as included in the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1957, item No. 496.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): There is no objection to making available the terms of the contract under which a subsidy is paid to Union Steamships Limited for the provision of certain coastal shipping services in British Columbia, but the hon. member will appreciate that the general practice of making copies of all departmental contracts available for circulation would involve a very heavy stenographic burden in view of the many hundreds of contracts and agreements entered into by the department over the year.

In the circumstances, I wonder if the hon. member would be willing to review the copy of the contract which is available on the departmental files of the maritime commission rather than have it copied and tabled. If so, I should be glad to make arrangements accordingly.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take advantage of the offer.

Mr. Sinclair: Bring your tape recorder along, too.

Mr. Speaker: With the consent of the house I take it this motion may be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER AND EGGS—QUANTITIES STORED BY AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Agriculture, of which I have given him notice. If he has not had time to obtain the information he may, however, take this question as notice. How many pounds of butter had the agricultural prices support board in store on December 1, 1955, 1956 and 1957? How many cases of eggs had the agricultural prices support board in store on December 1, 1955, 1956 and 1957?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I received the right hon. gentleman's notice just before coming into the house. I have not had time to get these figures. I would suggest to him, however, that this is a question which really might more properly be put on the order paper, though I will be delighted to get the figures for him and give them to him tomorrow if he wishes.

Mr. Gardiner: Thank you.

TRADE

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—REPORTED REFUSAL OF CANADIAN OFFERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on a story in this morning's Gazette with a Glasgow dateline, to the effect that business offered by the Canadian trade commission has been refused by the British shipbuilders because of a five-year backlog of business. My question is this. Have other British manufacturers refused offers from his trade commission because of the high level of employment now fortunately enjoyed in Great Britain?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about any refusal of orders which might have been suggested by members of the trade mission now in England and Scotland. I am quite aware of the fact that in some British industries there are very substantial orders waiting to be filled, but whether or not that has affected any of the plans of our Canadians I do not know.

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The answer given by him on December 2 in reply to a question shows Mr. G. W. Hunter, assistant deputy minister, Department of Defence Production, listed with a buying classification comprising engineering, lumbering, fishing, textile manufacture, flour milling and consulting.

The list supplied by the minister then shows another heading, "Civil servants", setting out the names of various gentlemen who are apparently members of the delegation, people listed as civil servants but who are not in a buying classification. Is there any reason for listing the assistant deputy minister, Department of Defence Production, as a member of the mission rather than as a civil servant?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Where does this information appear?

Mr. Tucker: At page 1759 of Hansard of December 2.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any particular significance attached to that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Tucker: May I ask a supplementary question. Mr. Hunter is listed as having a buying classification. Does he have instructions to buy? For what reason is he in the delegation?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hunter is one of the two assistant deputy ministers of the Department of Defence Production. I do not know how he came to be shown in this return as a buyer. He is with the mission in his capacity as a civil servant.

Mr. McIlraith: He heads the biggest buying department in the government.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I was not clear in regard to the answer I received from the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the leader of the house to my question in regard to the trade mission. The question was:

> What are the names, business addresses and classifications of representatives chosen to form the Canadian trade delegation now in Great Britain?

The answer gives as a member of the trade commission the assistant deputy minister, Department of Defence Production, Ottawa. Ottawa is given as his business address, and his classification is listed as engineering, including lumbering, fishing, textile manufacture, flour milling and consulting. This is the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The assistant deputy minister of defence production was an actual member of this trade mission whose purpose, we understand, is to buy or place orders in the United Kingdom. I wish to know what orders he was instructed to place in the United Kingdom under the heading of engineering, lumbering, fishing, textile manufacture and flour milling?

Mr. Churchill: I think it is an error in printing.

Mr. Tucker: Page 1759 of Hansard. His is the fifth name on that page.

Mr. Green: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the assistant deputy minister of defence production has no authority whatever to place buying orders. He is simply a member of the mission. I do not know how he came to be put down here as a buyer.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): On the same subject, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask this question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It has to do with the same list of members of the delegation and their buying classifications. I have noticed that 15 members of the delegation are interested in purchasing textile goods in Great Britain. Following up the question put by the hon.

member for Coast-Capilano, I should like to know whether it is not a fact that there is full employment in the textile mills in Great Britain, in sharp contrast with what is happening here in Canada?

Mr. Sinclair: What are they buying?

Mr. Churchill: I have just now been looking at the buying classification of the people on the mission, and I think—

Mr. Lesage: It is your list.

Mr. Churchill: This is the first time I have seen it.

Mr. Sinclair: It is your answer. It was given under your name.

Mr. Churchill: It was given under my name, and I regret that I did not examine more closely the answer that has been produced here. This is the first time I have seen it, and the buying classification seems to me to be in error because there is certain duplication in the mention of textile manufactures, flour milling and consulting, which I am sure does not apply to some of the gentlemen mentioned. I will have the record checked and a more accurate answer produced.

Mr. Lesage: Have any textile mills been visited by the delegation?

Mr. Churchill: There may have been some, Mr. Speaker; I am not sure. The mission is free to visit any industry in the British isles. There is no limitation upon what visits they may make.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I noticed that the representative of New Brunswick on the trade delegation is a candy manufacturer. Is it the intention to import more candy into this country?

Mr. Churchill: No restrictions are placed on the members of this commission. They are a very distinguished group of businessmen, quite competent to carry on the business of their particular firms. No government restriction at all has been placed upon what they may do, what they may see or what importations may be made.

Mr. Yves Leduc (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but before I do so I wish to thank him for having chosen a cousin of mine as a member of his delegation.

An hon. Member: He did not know that beforehand.

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): The gentleman in question, Mr. J. Rene Ouimet, among other products manufactures cheese. Would the minister tell us if cheese is the cause of his big smile upon his return from Glasgow? Would he also tell us if one of the purposes of sending the delegation was to buy cheese from the United Kingdom?

An hon. Member: Ask your cousin.

Mr. Churchill: I would like to say to the hon. member that his cousin is a first class member of the mission and a good representative of Canada. I have had several conversations with him, and I hope he has now recovered from the sore throat that was bothering him two days ago. I do not think I can answer the second part of the question.

MISSION TO UNITED KINGDOM—POSITIONS HELD BY SIR WILLIAM ROOTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Yesterday, December 3, I directed a question to the minister about the intention of the Canadian trade mission to take orders for British-made motor cars while on its visit to the United Kingdom. I must say that I, with all members of the house, was very pleased to find that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, heading the delegation, had been so courteously and enthusiastically received by the manufacturers in the United Kingdom, and had been guided so expertly on the tour by Sir William Rootes as host.

Since the United Kingdom derives a great part of its dollar reserves from the sale of automobiles in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know how much time is needed to lay the foundation for a question, but it seems to me the hon. member should come to the point.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I thought I was paying a compliment to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If I am permitted I will now ask my question. Is the minister aware that Sir William Edward Rootes, G.B.E., is a British motor car manufacturer, also chairman of Rootes Motors Limited, and associated companies; chairman of Singer Motors Limited; director of Humber Limited—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question seems to me not to be of the order which are usually entertained here in accordance with the rules of practice. It is a question of general information and knowledge not within the particular responsibility or knowledge of the minister to whom the question is directed, and I must rule the question out of order.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I merely asked if the Minister of Trade and Commerce was aware that this man is the chairman of the various motor car companies I have named.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the question. I hope the hon. member will observe my ruling.

[Later:]

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us if the trade mission included representatives of the automobile industry in Canada? If so, who were the representatives?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Look over the list.

Mr. McIlraith: The list is not correct. The minister has repudiated his parliamentary assistant's list.

Mr. Churchill: The only incorrectness in the list, as I see it now, may be in the buying classification.

Mr. Sinclair: That is the most important part.

Mr. Churchill: There may be some misprints after some of these names. I should like to take this opportunity of thanking the hon. member for Essex West for his very complimentary remarks, which were unfortunately interrupted by some of my friends on this side. His question was declared out of order, but in any event I thank him for his kindness.

An invitation was extended to the members of the automobile industry in Canada earlier, but for various reasons the gentlemen approached were not able to join the mission.

Mr. Sinclair: We want Canadian workers to work, not British workers.

Mr. Nowlan: That is your philosophy, is it?

Mr. Sinclair: Unemployment in Canada.

Mr. Fleming: You have repudiated your leader's statement, have you?

Mr. Sinclair: I have done no such thing.

CANADIAN SURPLUS DISPOSAL PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On Friday last in his absence I asked the acting minister of trade and commerce a question with regard to consideration of establishing a surplus disposal program for agricultural products in order that our surplus might more rapidly move forward to the people in the underdeveloped countries of the world, where there is urgent need for them. I wonder whether the minister would care to answer that question today.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to thank the hon. member for drawing my attention to this question. I think it might have been stated with greater particularity.

The hon. member refers to a surplus disposal program. We are constantly selling surplus produce from this country in the markets of the world. If the hon. member has in mind a program such as that adopted in the United States, we have nothing quite similar to that; but we are taking every measure possible to dispose of our surplus produce and, in fact, negotiations are under way right now with regard to the food requirements of the needy peoples of the world.

UNITED STATES—REPORTED ADDITIONAL AMOUNT FOR SURPLUS DISPOSAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Finance has an answer to the question I asked yesterday as to the announcement that the United States cabinet was asking for an additional $1½ billion for surplus disposal.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question more properly pertains to the Department of Trade and Commerce than to the Department of Finance, and I therefore turned over my friend's written inquiry to my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, feeling he was not having enough questions to answer.

Mr. Argue: Is there any answer to the question, then? I might repeat my question, which I asked yesterday. Has a news report been brought to the attention of the minister that the United States cabinet is proposing that congress supply another $1½ billion for disposal of surplus agricultural products in the coming year?

Can the minister comment on this disturbing report, and what is the answer in the light of the consultations held between members of the Canadian government and the United States government some time ago?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): This came to me only yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and without further information I do not see that it will necessarily interfere with any assurances given to us by the cabinet in Washington. A large part of the surplus disposal program of the United States has been to assist needy people in the world who are not normally consumers of flour and do not use our wheat. Therefore I do not think that would interfere with any of our wheat export business.

Mr. Argue: Then may I ask a supplementary question. Is the Canadian government considering any extensive program to help the needy people of the world in the same way as the United States government has done?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we are just as concerned with the needs of such people in the world and perhaps just as well informed as are the United States government or my hon. friend, and we are now considering a program to assist them.

Mr. Argue: Has the government considered a program in addition to the 2 per cent increase under the provisions of the Colombo plan?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ADMISSION OF NEEDY EX-SERVICEMEN TO DEPARTMENTAL HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this is a painful business for me, putting a friend on the spot. However, duty demands I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

My question is based on a letter I received yesterday. Has the minister received letters from veterans, including one named Brooks, complaining of the fact that while immigrants and in some cases United States personnel are admitted to Shaughnessy hospital, certain veterans are denied admission?

Can the minister assure the house that no needy veterans requiring treatment will be denied admission to departmental hospitals?

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I received the hon. member's question just as I was entering the house. I can assure him there is nothing painful about it at all. I should like to take it as notice, and I will give the hon. member a reply tomorrow.

WATER POLLUTION

RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION RESPECTING BOUNDARY WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether the recommendations of the international joint commission concerning the pollution of boundary waters upstream from the international boundary line under various terms of reference have been carried out, and whether the government will consider extending these terms to cover the St. Lawrence river downstream to Montreal, particularly in lake St. Louis, where the discharge of sewage and industrial waste is rendering that lake a danger to the health of persons residing on its shores?

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that while I directed the question to the Prime Minister it falls under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I accept the question as Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I appreciate the courtesy of the hon. member in sending to me a copy of this question this morning.

My answer is that the recommendations of the international joint commission concerning the pollution of boundary waters under the various terms of reference have been accepted by the governments of both the United States and Canada. A good deal of progress has been made toward the implementing of the necessary corrective measures. As my hon. friend no doubt appreciates, the control of water pollution is a continuing process.

With respect to the second part of the question, the terms of reference of the international joint commission could not be extended to cover the St. Lawrence downstream to Montreal including lake St. Louis, as it lies entirely within Canadian territory.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question and say that the international joint commission has already referred to the St. Lawrence river joint board of engineers a question concerning pollution, turbidity and water levels in that part of the St. Lawrence which is purely in Canadian territory. I now ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he will not request the international joint commission to refer the pollution of waters in lake St. Louis to the commission in the same manner as the complaint concerning lake St. Francis was referred to the commission?

[Later:]

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can get an answer from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the supplementary question I asked him.

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): I will take it as notice, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REPOSSESSION OF GOODS AND PROPERTY PURCHASED ON INSTALMENT PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, notice of which I sent him this morning. For this reason he has not had it for too long. When I sent notice of the question it was my intention to enclose the newspaper report which contained the basis of my query, but I discovered later that this was not done. I have now sent to the Prime Minister the newspaper article to which I referred, and if he is not prepared to answer the question at this time he might take it as notice.

My question is based on a newspaper report relating to unemployment. The international union of mine, mill and smelter workers has apparently become very concerned over its position in regard to purchases which the unemployed may have made on the instalment plan. My question is based on that report, and it is this. As a result of the growing unemployment in Canada, and particularly in Calgary and vicinity, according to a press report, will the federal government take such steps as are appropriate to prevent foreclosures and repossessions of homes, farms and other possessions that have been purchased on the instalment plan?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman sent me the press reference in question, which appears in the Alberta Country Life. As a matter of fact it contains the answer to the question. It reads:

> Alberta has not had a moratorium order since the late 1930's and early 1940's, when the Aberhart administration ordered credit hold-offs to protect farms and homes.

There is no authority in the federal government under the British North America Act to bring into effect a moratorium or anything of the nature suggested in the question. This is a matter of property and civil rights and, as in the 1930's and early 1940's when the Aberhart administration acted, the responsibility still rests with provincial governments under the constitution.

NON-OPERATING RAILWAY UNIONS—REQUEST FOR CONCILIATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the government received a request to appoint a conciliation board in connection with the dispute between the non-operating employees and the major railways of this country? If so, is this request being met?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, the government has received a request to appoint a conciliation board. The regular procedure for the establishment of this board is being followed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. gentleman yet in a position to indicate who will compose the board?

Mr. Starr: No. This necessitates the appointment of a representative of the employees, a representative of the employers, and a chairman to be appointed by the government. That has not as yet been settled.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has yet received the report from the royal commission on the dispute between the C.P.R. and the diesel firemen, which he suggested on October 15 he expected would be available toward the end of November?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, I have not received that report.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister inquire and find out when the report might be forthcoming?

Mr. Starr: I am continually inquiring about this matter, but as yet the report has not been submitted.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED CLOSING DOWN OF HOWE SOUND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has any firm agreement been arrived at with the directors of the Howe Sound Copper Company to keep the Britannia mine in operation? If so, would the Prime Minister explain the terms of the agreement? I regret that I did not send him notice of the question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have not that information. I think the Minister of Justice is the appropriate minister to whom to direct the question.

Mr. Hahn: Then I direct the question to the Minister of Justice.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I regret that my attention was directed elsewhere while the hon. gentleman was asking his question. I apologize. If he would repeat the question I will try to answer it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hahn: Has any firm agreement been arrived at with the directors of the Howe Sound Copper Company to keep the Britannia mine in operation? If so, would the minister explain the terms of the agreement?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Speaker; no agreement has yet been arrived at. My last conversation with them was yesterday afternoon. As yet I have not had the opportunity to report to my colleagues, but I will be doing so as soon as possible.

HEALTH INSURANCE

TREATMENT OF MENTAL AND TUBERCULAR PATIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As a result of representations made by the provinces at the recent conference, can the Prime Minister say what further consideration has been given to bringing t.b. sanatoria and mental hospitals under the provisions of the hospital insurance scheme? Can he say whether or not the provisions of the act will be made to apply at an early date? Can he assure the house that despite the fact such amendments were not listed in the statement of legislation still to be presented to the house, this does not close the door to these worth-while amendments being introduced this year?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I made a reference in the house earlier to the national hospital insurance act. There will be amendments brought before the house. With regard to the particular question as to their nature, that will be revealed when the bill is introduced.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a supplementary question. Do I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that amendments will be brought before this session of the house?

FISHERIES

PROTECTION OF FISH IN FRASER RIVER AFTER WATER DIVERSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. My question is this. Has the minister studied the report of the British Columbia Engineering Company regarding the possible diversion of the waters of the Columbia river into the Fraser river, and if so can he assure the house that no action is contemplated by the government which would adversely affect Fraser river fishing?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I want to say that I have not studied this particular report to which the hon. member refers, but I am reasonably familiar with the question. I can assure him that as Minister of Fisheries I will do my best to carry out my responsibilities as imposed on the Minister of Fisheries by the legislation to the effect that he shall protect the fisheries of this country.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL ENGINEERING REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Yesterday I asked if the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources had received the final report of the British Columbia Engineering Company regarding the possibility of the diversion just mentioned by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. The minister replied that the final report had been received on January 9, 1957. I had doubts about the accuracy of that reply, and yesterday I checked my notes. They confirm that what was received by the government on January 9, 1957, was the initial draft of a preliminary report. My question dealt with the final report. Has a final report been received?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall look into this matter and be prepared to give the hon. gentleman an answer in the near future.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

STATEMENT ON DELAY IN ISSUING SUMMER UNIFORMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was asked a question by the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount, which I did not hear but which appears at page 1774 of Hansard. Since I am anxious to give the hon. gentleman as much information as possible, and co-operate with him, I feel I should answer that question now. The hon. gentleman's question was asked at the conclusion of my statement that the previous government awarded a certain contract to a contractor who had already demonstrated unsatisfactory performance and who apparently had an especial attraction for them, the previous government. At that point the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount asked:

What does the hon. gentleman mean by that?

Had I heard the question I would have answered it at that moment. I meant by my remark that the officials of the Post Office Department, who had had previous experience with the contractor in question, recommended in writing to the minister on April 25, 1957, that his tender not be accepted. This recommendation resulted from their previous experience with the company, all set out in writing to the minister at that time, which indicated that deliveries of uniforms would not meet the required schedule; that concessions and alterations in specifications would be asked for after the letting of the contract; that the Post Office Department would be requested to buy overproduced uniforms when the contract was completed.

Thus, since the post office officials did not wish to do business with the company but the government did, and signified so by treasury board minute No. 517269 of May 9, 1957, which awarded the contract to the obviously unsatisfactory firm in question, I can only assume that it had a particular appeal to the government to persuade them to override the recommendation of these officials in such a technical matter. The house will recall it was this same contractor who was subsequently so late in his deliveries that summer uniforms for our postmen are still being delivered.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to give this detailed information to the house, but since the hon. member for St. Antoine-Westmount asked for it, I felt he should get it.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the comment which was made yesterday and which was made today by the Postmaster General is the kind of statement we are accustomed to getting from him.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Marler: I would ask this further question. Was the contract in question not submitted to the treasury board, and was the contractor not the lowest bidder in relation to all the bids that were received?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Yes, there was a difference of several thousands of dollars between this and the next lowest bidder. But from time to time there have been cases where you had obviously unsatisfactory contractors. The usual practice of treasury board is to refuse contractors who have previously demonstrated their unsuitability.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA—INQUIRY AS TO JOINT AIR DEFENCE COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice with respect to the United States-Canada joint air defence command. Is there any further order in council dealing with this matter other than the order in council dated July 31, 1957, and the statement of the secretary of defence of the United States and the Minister of National Defence of Canada filed as sessional paper No. 183?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer is in the negative.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASES FOR FORMER GOVERNMENT RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister reconsider the business of the house to allow for legislation to increase the pensions of former government railway employees, which he himself has termed totally inadequate?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): If my hon. friend did not ask so many questions of little or no importance from time to time we would get on with the business here faster.

Mr. Sinclair: Of no importance?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister aware that this group of men are pensioners of the old Intercolonial Railway, are small in number and a very elderly group now, and that this is a matter of urgency?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is. May I say that I notice that my hon. friend during the four years of office of the last government never raised that matter by a question.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Has the Prime Minister read the Hansards of the last four years?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

Mr. McIlraith: He does not like questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that over the past number of years the Prime Minister has raised this matter a number of times, do I take it from what he said this morning that the plight of retired C.N.R. pensioners is not now an important question?

Mr. Sinclair: "Of no importance" is what he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer is that it is important.

Mr. Sinclair: Oh, you are changing it now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And it always was important. But we have a legislative program that requires immediate attention, and it is before the house. I can tell my hon. friend this. These various matters that require attention are going to receive attention from this government with the same dispatch that we are carrying out our programs.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—PREVENTION OF FORECLOSURES ON HOMES OF UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the government do anything to prevent foreclosures on mortgages guaranteed under the National Housing Act in those cases where the debtors have become unemployed?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, these are mortgages which are subject to the provincial law. As the Prime Minister pointed out earlier today, the federal government has no jurisdiction in cases of that kind.

GRAIN

DECREASE IN MARKETING—REQUEST FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I addressed a question to the acting minister of trade and commerce. I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be prepared to give an answer. My question as reported at page 1661 of Hansard was asking for an explanation from the minister as to why the farmers' marketings of grain in the prairie provinces up to November 13 were at the very low figure of 129 million bushels, which is slightly more than half the ten-year average. I asked further whether the minister was prepared to give consideration to the immediate announcement of a deficiency payment in the form of a participation payment from the treasury on last year's crop to compensate for this drastic decline in income.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member who asked the question knows the answer to the first part of it. The elevator capacity of this country was filled prior to the taking off of the present year's crop. We recognized that fact and through cash advances made provision so that farm income would reach the producers this fall.

As to the second question about consideration of the immediate announcement of a deficiency payment in the form of a participation payment from the treasury on last year's crop, I have no answer to give at this moment. The matter has been brought to my attention on several occasions, but no decision has been reached as yet.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder whether I might ask a supplementary question on this point. Was the report in the Regina Leader-Post, when the minister was there at the time he was addressing the wheat pool convention, to the effect that in his opinion the wheat producers did not need a subsidy, an answer to the question that was asked this morning?

Mr. Churchill: My hon. friend appears to be referring to a newspaper report—

Mr. Argue: That is right.

Mr. Churchill: —which I have not seen. If he will draw it to my attention I shall be glad to deal with the question.

Mr. Argue: My question is this. Has the minister at any time, in Regina or elsewhere, made the statement that the wheat producers of this country do not require a subsidy from the national treasury?

Mr. Churchill: I have no recollection of making any such statement. I am surprised that this should appear in print and be reported as having been said by me. I was asked a series of questions at the Regina meeting, but I do not recall any question along that line at all.

Mr. Argue: I might further inform the minister that, if my memory serves me correctly, it was made to a reporter in an interview in the Saskatchewan hotel.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the statement he made a moment ago in answer to a question directed to him by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Johnson).

The statement he made was to the effect that the cash advance legislation had been introduced by the government in an effort to alleviate the storage problem and the question I would like to ask the minister is as follows. Is he aware that because of certain regulations, countless farmers are unable to qualify for cash advances on the acreage which they own?

Mr. Churchill: I have received no reports yet to that effect.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ELECTRICAL ENERGY DEVELOPMENT, N.B.-N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and, in his absence, to the acting minister. Shall I be obliged to place another motion on the order paper in order to obtain the documents and correspondence I asked for in motion No. 17, which was approved and passed by this house on November 8 last, almost a month ago?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think I need not say that I know absolutely nothing about this matter and therefore cannot give any reply at this time. I will have the matter looked into and find out why there was delay, if there has been any delay, in connection with making the return.

PIPE LINES

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE—WINTER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister comment on the carrying out of his statement made in this house on November 19 last to the effect that contracts let for the Trans-Canada pipe line provided that clearing of the right of way must be commenced within two weeks of a contract award?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): That was the information I received, Mr. Speaker. I have not the page of Hansard in front of me, but I indicated that the clearing had to be completed before the spring opening, which meant winter work on all that stretch of the pipe line.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the question put by the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). Due to the situation in northern Ontario, where a great number of bush workers are unemployed, would the minister use his offices to see that this slashing of the right of way is started immediately so it will alleviate that problem?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING NEGOTIATION OF LABOUR DISPUTES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question put on Friday last by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Thompson) regarding the policy of the government in the negotiation of labour disputes in so far as it refers to Canadian citizens and other than Canadian citizens, I would like to say this. The government has not found it necessary to formulate any specific policy on this question, as labour bodies choose their own representatives and negotiations must be carried on with those representatives.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED FAILURE TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister aware of a report in the recent issue of the Calgary Albertan to the effect that a church in the city of Calgary has had to discontinue its assistance to refugees in distress because certain money promised to that church by the immigration branch has not been forthcoming? Will the minister look into this matter and see to it that if any commitments were made they will be kept?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has just sent me a copy of the press report referred to, which is the first time this matter has come to my attention. I will most certainly look into it at once, and if the facts are as reported I will straighten them out right away.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Fleming moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $260,679,899.09, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, except items 52, 57, 116, 117, 131, 132, 153, 156, 158, 248, 252, 281, 322, 324, 328, 333, 334, 335, 336, 355, 397, 399 and 460, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $50,000 being one-sixth of the amount of item 367 of the said estimates; and a sum not exceeding $1,787,853.42, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of items 318, 373 and 389 of the said estimates; in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $1,497,738.25, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, except items 626, 635 and 654, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $2,138,888.89, being one-ninth of the total of the amounts of items 669 and 670 set forth in the further supplementary estimates (1) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and a sum not exceeding $125,000, being one-twelfth of the amount of item 668 of the said estimates;

in addition thereto a sum not exceeding $13,474,054.84, being one-sixth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the further supplementary estimates (2) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958 except items 754 and 759, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition a sum not exceeding $1,853,666.67, being one-third of the total of the amounts of items 729, 732 and 737 of the said estimates, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958.

He said: Mr. Chairman, the present motion asks the house to approve a vote of interim supply in the total sum of $281,607,101.16 to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to December 31 excluding, of course, those for which full supply has already been granted, namely those described by the votes in the main and supplementary estimates for the Post Office Department and those votes for which eleven-twelfths have already been granted.

In no instance is the total amount of any item being released by the bill which is to be founded upon the present resolution, which is the fourth vote of interim supply. Mr. Chairman, I am sure I do not need to go back and repeat the explanations which were given to the house when the last motion of interim supply was made and debated on October 16.

I give to the house the usual undertaking that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item of the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply; the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and not curtailed in any manner as a result of the passing of this measure.

Broadly speaking, of the four groups of estimates already tabled in the house, three of them last spring and one further group by myself in October, the following is the way in which the present bill deals with the fractions of those votes required. With the exception of seven items of which I will make special mention, the pattern is as follows, making an exception of the main estimates of the Post Office Department and those of its supplementaries which have already been voted.

What is asked of the house by this motion is a vote of one-twelfth of all items which were set up on the basis of the full fiscal year. As to those supplementary items which were brought into effect on July 1, and which therefore apply to only nine months of the fiscal year, the request is for a grant of one-ninth of those items. As to those items which were put into effect on October 1 and which, accordingly, run for only six months of the fiscal year, the request is for a vote of one-sixth.

I mentioned seven items of a special character, four of which are in the main estimates and three in the further supplementary estimates. Six of these pertain to the Department of Public Works and one to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, in the latter case in respect of work that is being done for that department by the Department of Public Works. In all seven cases these represent construction items where the work of construction has to be expedited during the construction period of the year, and accordingly the amounts are accelerated in keeping with the fact that distribution of the expenditure is not spread evenly over the full 12-month period. But, I repeat, in no case is the house by this vote being asked to vote the entire amount of any item. The amounts which will be involved in any item, even these accelerated items, will not exceed eleven-twelfths of an item; and the full rights of the house in the matter of discussion or criticism of any of these items are accordingly preserved.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman, the members of the official opposition do not intend to impede the passage of this interim supply bill in any way. As far as the main estimates are concerned only one department, the Post Office Department, has, of course, had its estimates approved and included in an appropriation bill, and of course it is necessary for the government to have money to meet the obligations in all departments which will accrue at the end of this month.

We are, naturally, aware of the fact that there are some items for which interim supply motions have already provided a fraction of eleven-twelfths. They are spelled out here, and we are not considering them today. Some other items will also reach the fraction of eleven-twelfths, so when we have the interim supply bill in January, if the session lasts that long, we will of course expect these, too, to be reserved unless the estimates are through by that time.

There is another point I should like to mention, the same point I made when the Minister of Finance first tabled the estimates at the beginning of the session and which the Leader of the Opposition made at the time of the first interim supply bill, a point which other members of other parties have also raised, and which I myself again refer to. That is the fact that when the Minister of Finance tabled the main estimates at the beginning of the session he took the unusual course of saying that he did not necessarily stand behind all the items. He pointed out that the main estimates had been prepared by the previous government and submitted to the house, and that the estimates of only one department had gone through before the election.

We were naturally rather surprised at that position, because the traditional position taken is that when a government submits estimates to the house it stands behind every one of the items. If later it is shown that the original estimate is not fully required, it has been the custom for the government itself to inform the house that it intends to amend that estimate. That course was not followed by the minister, on the ground that to reprint the estimates and delete the items he was not supporting would cost a considerable sum of money; I think $20,000 was the figure he mentioned.

Mr. Fleming: And there was not time.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, and he said there was not time. I pointed out to him that we did not expect him to go to that expense and trouble. We were sure there were very few items he would change either by deleting or reducing them, and it would have been very helpful to members of the opposition especially to have had a mimeographed table which could easily have been prepared showing the items which we could not expect the government to fully support, those it intended to reduce or remove. There have been repeated requests for that sort of information. It is obvious that the Minister of Finance must have this information, because he could not have made the statement he did unless he had carefully perused every item. We did not ask for specific details of reductions, simply a list of the item numbers so we could be aware in advance whether to expect a change from the estimates we had submitted to the house.

The minister failed to give us that information, so we have had to try other ways of securing it. As each department has come before the committee the first question asked of the minister concerned was what items did he not support and whether he found the waste and extravagance about which the Minister of Finance trumpeted so loudly when he was in opposition, during the course of the election campaign and also since he assumed the ministry of finance.

Last September the first public declaration made by the Minister of Transport in his usual frank way was a statement to the effect that he had found no evidence of waste or extravagance in his well-run department. Since that time we have had the charming lady, the Secretary of State, come before us with her estimates, and she reported that she had found no waste and extravagance and that there were no reductions in her estimates. She was followed by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, who repeated that statement. Then we had the very affable Minister of Veterans Affairs, who went even further. Not only did he say he found no evidence of waste and extravagance, but he added that in his opinion he did not expect to find waste and extravagance; and I commend him for that.

Mr. Brooks: If the hon. member will recall my remarks he will find that I said I did not consider money spent on veterans pensions and war veterans allowances wasted money.

Mr. Sinclair: I am sure we are all in agreement with that, but the actual statement was that the minister had found no waste and extravagance in his department. Of course not all the money in his department goes directly to disabled veterans or in the form of pensions and war veterans allowances. Some is for administration and construction. We were confident the minister would find no evidence of waste and extravagance, because those responsible for the administration of these funds are very efficient.

Mr. Brooks: I might say that the money for construction is handled by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes. The estimates of that department will soon be before us. Following the Minister of Veterans Affairs our newcomer, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, brought his estimates before the external affairs committee, and he of course was asked the same question. He did report that with one exception there were no reductions in the estimates which had been prepared by the previous government. The one exception he mentioned was the sum of $336,000 for capital construction on our embassies abroad. He felt this was the time to reduce that expenditure and I may say that members of the official opposition would heartily agree that in a time when there is so much need here in Canada of work to be provided by capital construction we should cut down on that type of work abroad at this particular moment. I can assure the Minister of Public Works that when he brings forward his estimates we will expect a greatly accelerated program of public works to help ease the slack in employment which is lamentably present at this time.

With regard to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance concerning the second class of items of public works, where because of the nature of the construction year there has to be a greater proportion of money available so this work can go ahead, I would suggest to the minister that he would have been very helpful in providing for intelligent discussion of these estimates if he had acceded to our extremely reasonable request to provide this list. We are beginning to realize what a short list it would have been. Here are four departments in which there has been not one item reduced or removed. It would have been very helpful if the minister had given the house the information it is entitled to receive.

It may be that because of his failure to supply this information we will have to spend a longer time on our own estimates than we would perhaps have found necessary if we had been told in advance what items were likely to be changed. Those remarks apply to the official opposition but are not applicable to the other two opposition parties, since they had no part in preparing the main estimates, so to them all estimates are strange and they naturally would require as much information as they could obtain concerning them.

It is not my intention to prolong the debate, and I shall close by saying that we recognize the need to get interim supply through so the government's bills for November can be met.

Mr. Fleming: December.

Mr. Sinclair: Pardon me; December. For this reason we do not intend to obstruct this resolution in any way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, we recognize that this is an interim supply bill to provide the necessary cash for the month of December and although it is not our intention to prolong the debate nevertheless there are one or two matters of some urgency. Two or three of my colleagues will have something to say about those matters, since they are covered by some of the estimates a portion of which will be included in the bill to be based on this resolution. I shall not deal with those issues because they will be raised by some of my colleagues, but there are one or two comments I should like to make.

First of all I wish to support once again the plea made just now by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano that the Minister of Finance implement the statement he made when he brought down the estimates by giving us a list showing any items in the main estimates which the government does not intend to support when they are reached on the floor of the house. Thus far in the departments we have had before us there have been no reductions and no removals, and one begins to wonder what the Minister of Finance meant by the statement he made when he presented the estimates at the start of the session.

The other comment I wish to make relates to the usual undertaking the Minister of Finance gave this morning, to the effect that the passing of this interim supply bill would not interfere in any way with the rights of members to discuss the items in the main estimates when they come before us in the usual way. We appreciate the undertaking which was given in the proper way, the same undertaking that ministers of finance in the former government gave time after time. Indeed, such undertakings many times were given because they were asked for by the present Minister of Finance, by the hon. member for Greenwood or others who at that time were sitting on the opposition side of the house. My plea to the Minister of Finance is that he carry out that undertaking in spirit as well as to the letter.

The minister said these rights would not be curtailed in any way. I suggest there are various ways of imposing closure. It can be done by use of the closure rule that is in the book, and I gather that the new government will not do that. I gather, as a matter of fact, that it wants to put temptation out of the way and take the rule out of the book. However, there are other ways of imposing closure. Indeed, every time a spokesman for the government stands up and tells us that we should co-operate, that we should get the estimates through so we can deal with certain legislation; every time the business of the house is arranged in such a way that we are put in the position of having to reduce the time we devote to the estimates because there is something else we want to reach, those are ways of curtailing discussion on the main estimates.

I repeat in just a sentence or so the point I made the other day, namely that so far as the main estimates for 1957-58 are concerned, during the whole of last session we spent on them only one hour and ten minutes. That of course excludes the estimates of the Post Office Department, which were passed and are not before us. So far as the rest of the estimates were concerned there was no consideration except for that one hour and ten minutes, and we in this group feel it is parliament's job to deal with the estimates properly.

I refer again to the remarks on this point made by the Prime Minister the last time there was an interim supply bill when the Conservatives were in opposition, which was on April 11 of this year. The Prime Minister's speech begins at page 3405 of Hansard. Although that was an interim supply bill to make provision for the election period, and although the Prime Minister, the then leader of the opposition, indicated his party's willingness to co-operate, he still complained that the former government was not giving an opportunity for the critical examination of the estimates that parliament should give to them. Everyone who knows the Prime Minister will recognize that these words are his. I am reading from page 3405 of Hansard of April 11, 1957:

> As I look back over the records of parliament when parliament was discharging its responsibility and maintaining its prestige, when estimates were carefully examined and critically condemned if improperly included among those presented, and compare that situation with the situation today, I can only say that this method of placing so many hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditure before parliament is a further insult and humiliation to this institution and to its prestige.

That was the opinion of the present Prime Minister when we had an interim supply bill before us—we have one now for many hundreds of millions of dollars, $281 million indeed—and he went on to say that merely to provide for discussion in a general way was not good enough; there had to be ample opportunity for critical examination of those estimates. Therefore I say to the Minister of Finance that he should expect from us an insistence on the keeping of his undertaking, not only so far as the letter of it is concerned but the spirit, that parliament should be given full opportunity to discuss the main estimates to the tune of $5 billion without any limitation or curtailment of any kind.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, it is not our intention to attempt to hold up passage of the items involved in the interim supply bill. We realize that the government has to have the money to meet its bills during the month of December, and it will be our intention to help them get them through as quickly as possible.

We realize that quite a number of issues might be raised under the items that are mentioned in the resolution, but we do believe that if we were to attempt to debate those items now it probably would result in a repetition of debate when we have the regular estimates before us. We feel that the time to enter into a full debate is when the full departmental estimates are brought before us. For that reason it is not our intention to raise the issues now. As has already been suggested, some of them may be urgent but I do not believe they are that urgent. Consequently we look forward to a more critical examination of all the departmental estimates when they are brought before us.

The minister has given an undertaking that all our rights will be protected in full, and we believe he will see that this undertaking is properly filled. There is one point, of course, that I have to draw to my hon. friend's attention. I doubt very much whether we are going to have the fullest possible opportunity for critical examination of the departmental estimates if we continue with the present long hours of sitting after Christmas. That was the reason I moved the amendment the other day to try to limit these long hours when we are to sit in the morning, in the afternoon and in the evening six days a week for the period up to Christmas.

It is all very well for us to try to finish the business in that time, if we can, but I do not believe anybody is fooling himself for one second if he thinks we are going to be able to get through 26 items of legislation and give a critical and thorough examination to all the estimates of 16 departments before the house, and still have time for committee meetings and all the other things that have to be done in the work of the house. We are going to need far more time than the 17 days that remain before us; and certainly, Mr. Chairman, it would seem foolish, if we are to come back after Christmas to complete the work, to go on sitting those long hours to consider the very important business of the house.

Therefore I would certainly ask the government and the minister himself to give some sympathetic consideration to the possibility of limiting these long sitting hours to the period between now and Christmas. If we come back after Christmas with unfinished business let us take more time for careful and critical examination of all the estimates because, if we do, we might possibly be able to help the minister find some of those items in the estimates where he can save some money where there is evidence of waste and extravagance.

Mr. Sinclair: He is looking hard for them.

Mr. Low: The important thing is that we want to be able to look very hard, which we cannot do if we are rushed in our work and gloss over rather than get right down with our teeth in the estimates.

I simply suggest that so far as we are concerned at the moment we are going to help the government get these things through, because we realize they have to pay their bills. If we do not enter into a discussion of what might be considered urgent issues at the moment it is not that we do not appreciate their importance, but we do believe it is neither necessary nor wise at this time to have a repetition of debate such as will happen if we should raise those issues now and debate them and then raise them again when the departmental estimates are brought before us.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I want without taking too much of the time of the committee, to raise a very urgent matter. Last Friday night a large meeting was held in Vancouver under the auspices of the Vancouver labour council. There were about a thousand people or a little more in the audience, and representatives of all parties were present.

Now, I think it must be said that the member of the Conservative party there present, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, received a very bad reception. It had nothing to do with that member personally, I am quite sure, because he is liked and respected in Vancouver. I think undoubtedly the bad reaction to the remarks of the hon. member was due solely to the inadequacy of the government's employment program.

That hon. member, according to the radio, has now written a letter to the Prime Minister and released it publicly, setting out some points, and he finished that letter by saying that his experience at the meeting was the first time he was ever booed. He said later it was a new and demoralizing experience for him. But I repeat, Mr. Chairman, it is not really something that has anything to do with the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, but it has a lot to do with the fact that the government's program for meeting the unemployment situation in Canada has been unimaginative, dilatory, negative and completely uninspired.

The meeting appreciated what the government has done in the way of alleviating hardship, the extension of seasonal unemployment benefits and the extension which is going to be made by way of federal contribution to relief as such; but all members in the house know that while people may be able to survive on unemployment insurance or relief payments, they certainly cannot live and give a decent life to their families on those payments. That meeting undoubtedly felt that jobs were the first essential, and that relief was never a substitute for jobs.

What are some of the practical suggestions that came out of that meeting to which the government should pay attention? I am not thinking of the long-term necessity of social planning in this country by which we can plan to utilize our productive resources, not in accordance with the profit expectations of a few large companies but in accordance with what the Canadian people need. However, this meeting did lay down an immediate program of crash steps that the government could and should take.

I should like to refer to these steps without taking much time, notwithstanding the importance of the matter. First, they said there should be an accelerated over-all program of public works in Canada now, at all three levels of government. At page 1360 of Hansard for November 21, 1957, the Minister of Public Works said it was not the intention of the government to launch a special program of public works across Canada.

At that time the minister did say that was the fault of the previous administration in not leaving any works on the shelf. We cannot accept this bandying about of responsibility between the two old parties, such as we have seen to date. Whether or not the Conservatives are right in saying the Liberals are to blame and it is a legacy they have inherited, or whether the Liberals are right in saying it is the fault of the Conservatives that unemployment has increased is not the question. Actually they are both right in blaming each other.

Second, the National Housing Act must be completely reconstituted. At the moment, Mr. Chairman, according to the information I have received, the average down payment of a home owner under that act is $3,800, and the average income of the average borrower who takes out an N.H.A. loan is $5,700. In other words we have a housing program that helps those who least need help and completely passes over the heads of the vast majority of the Canadian people.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes.

Mr. Lambert: Is he aware that in the city of Edmonton there has been a vast program of house building and that the down payments are as low as $1,595, with some at $1,900 and $2,400?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have given the average across Canada, and that would undoubtedly mean there were some below and some above. If the hon. member would reflect on what I just said he will see that I said the average income of those across Canada who are taking advantage of the N.H.A. is $5,700 a year for 1957. He will see, therefore, that we have no low cost housing program; we have no program that helps the wage and salary earner or the farm people who make up the bulk of the people of Canada.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask my hon. friend if he is aware of the terms of a resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Public Works which contemplates an amendment to the National Housing Act, and having as one of its purposes a reduction in the amount of the down payment?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, I am aware of it, and I hope the remarks I am now making will influence the extent to which the down payments are slashed.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member not to discuss the National Housing Act at the present time.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): I was just answering a question that was asked of me. As a matter of fact, I would hope that the down payment might be eliminated altogether and that the interest rate will be slashed, as was done for the veterans in the United States. I hope for this, notwithstanding the statement made the other day by the Minister of Public Works that the interest rate under the N.H.A. was not going to be reduced below 6 per cent. I regret that.

The third step that could immediately be taken to alleviate unemployment would be to invoke and activate the provisions of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, whereby the federal government would make credit available to the municipalities at a low interest rate. At that time it was 2 per cent. This act is still upon the statute books of the country and could be readily and easily invoked.

Fourth, the national development program in British Columbia should be proceeded with. I believe this meeting expressed concern about the development of Columbia power and the fact that the plan is still lagging so badly. We still have not started upon our hydro project in British Columbia. Unfortunately there are few signs that negotiation with the United States are proceeding, or that negotiations with British Columbia are proceeding on that question.

Mr. Hahn: What about the Rocky Mountain trench?

Mr. Sinclair: You mean Wenner-Gren, that ex-nazi?

Mr. Hahn: Does that not help in the development of British Columbia?

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): That was not referred to at the meeting, so I am not referring to it.

The fifth matter which is of importance is the need for trade with the Asian countries and that would include, of course, trade with China. Again we must see that the first step toward expanded trade with China is diplomatic recognition. In spite of what the Prime Minister has said in this house, it is clear that since Great Britain did accord diplomatic recognition to China her trade has increased. Recognition was felt to be important, and they expect still further growth in exports to China.

The sixth point that came before the meeting was the necessity for large scale capital assistance from Canada to the undeveloped countries of the world to help in providing employment here and to promote the interests of peace, as well as help in closing the gap between the hungry and the well-fed nations of the world. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that Canada should, as part of an employment program as well as in the interests of peace, subscribe at least 1 per cent of our national wealth through some such program as SUNFED under the auspices of the United Nations.

I should like to close by asking the government to reply before interim supply is voted, and state what they plan. In view of the response their speaker received in Vancouver, have they new proposals in addition to the humdrum and routine proposals made by the Minister of Labour? Do they plan anything of an imaginative and bold nature to take care of unemployment in Canada this winter? It is now estimated that Canada loses $150 million a month by the enforced idleness of many of our best and most capable workers. The homes that are not built, the goods that are not produced, the farm machinery that is not available and so on now runs to about $150 million a month. In addition to that can we afford the moral obloquy of many of our people suffering hardship and even hunger in the midst of the potential abundance which modern science has made available?

(Translation):

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, while the house is considering these estimates I should like to take the opportunity to raise the question of unemployment in the Canadian textile industry.

Conditions there are at this time certainly deplorable. For instance, at this very moment, the large textile plant of Montmagny has closed down and several hundred workers are jobless. I can remember that during the last election campaign, the Conservative candidates, at least in the province of Quebec, or the so-called Independent Conservative candidates, promised to help stabilize the textile industry in Canada.

When the session started in October, I expected to hear in the speech from the throne about some bills, or special legislation to help stabilize this industry. But, as in many other fields where serious problems have cropped up, the government had no program to offer. The matter was referred to a committee, as other most significant matters were referred to royal commissions or to conferences preliminary to more conferences.

The position of the textile industry is deplorable. The government is doing nothing. The December 2 issue of Hansard gave the official list of members of the trade delegation, or I could perhaps say, the purchasing mission, to the United Kingdom. On going over this list it will be seen that 15 members were particularly interested in going to the United Kingdom to buy textiles, whereas 7 others were out to buy consumer goods. If you single out the names of those seven others, you will find, for instance, the name of a representative of Eaton's and representatives of other large firms obviously interested in buying textiles.

This mission is going out to buy in Great Britain products that are being manufactured right here in Canada; while the textile industry and other industries over there are enjoying full employment, here in Canada our textile workers are out of work. Moreover, the government itself selected the members of the delegation and is paying their expenses, to allow those business men and importers to buy, in the United Kingdom, products manufactured by workers who are fully employed, thus depriving our own textile workers of the jobs they need to support their families.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, I am in favour of expanded international trade. There is no doubt whatsoever about that. It is a recognized fact that Canada must increase its international trade to balance its economy. On the other hand, I think it is going a bit too far,—merely to fulfil the unconsidered promise made by a prime minister,—yes, yes, I repeat, to fulfil the unconsidered promise made by a prime minister—of switching 15 per cent of our external trade,—to send a mission into another country to buy products that can be manufactured in Canada, while our own workers in factories turning out the same type of product are without jobs.

I ask the government what they intend to do to remedy the situation, and especially if, in sending this trade mission, they are willing to take the risk involved for an important sector of our economy.

(Text):

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I want to come back to this subject which was introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East. I refer to the most urgent matter facing the nation today, namely that of unemployment. It has been said, and I think with some accuracy, that by the time spring comes around there will be as many as 700,000 to 800,000 men in this country unemployed.

Many of us have a rather glib habit of talking about the unemployed as though they were an impersonal mass, but having in my younger days been unemployed myself and knowing what it means, I say that between 700,000 and 800,000 unemployed mean between 700,000 and 800,000 personal tragedies. If there is that measure of unemployment in this country the fault must lie squarely with the fiscal policies of this government.

It is in the interests of Canada that the opposition keep this government in office as long as they can if only for the purpose of showing up its complete and utter bankruptcy. The government has no solution whatsoever to the problems which are going to face us in this field. Perhaps that is one of the reasons the government is trying to hurry through as rapidly as possible the legislation which is in front of us. They want to get the estimates through by Christmas. They want the opposition out of the road so that publicity cannot be given to what is happening in the country today. On the other hand, while we are prepared to facilitate in every reasonable way the business of the house, we are also going to insist that these problems which are manifest in our economy must be brought forward, and we have a right to expect answers from the government.

We have been told that there is no shelf of public works inherited from the Liberal party, nor has the government any ideas at all about public works. Yet surely today is one time when public works are required in this country. We know of areas where schools are desperately needed and where the federal government, through the provincial government, could give assistance with regard to the capital cost of the building of those schools. We know that hospitals are desperately needed. Again, assistance could be given for that capital cost. We know that roads are desperately needed. All across this country there are a great many things to do which ought to be done and which stare one in the face. Yet there is no word whatsoever from this party which sits opposite me.

I think of one case in my own constituency. Part of it is a new city of over 20,000 people. It has banks, industries, stores and, as I said, over 20,000 people living in it. Yet there is no post office there. I refer to the city of East Kildonan. Surely one of the things that could be done now as part of a public works program would be to build a badly needed post office in that area. I am sure that if one went over every municipality in this country one would find things which could be done profitably and which would be socially useful.

But if these things could be socially useful we must consider the kind of social catastrophe which results from unemployment. I do not think we shall ever go back to the conditions of the thirties, because the people of this country would not tolerate such conditions today. If there were to be unemployment on the massive scale we had then for any lengthy period, there would be revolution in this country. The ordinary people know, if this government does not, that if there is money for war there can be money for peace as well.

One of the things this government must be prepared to do is to spend money. The Minister of Finance may be in a bit of a quandary right now as to how he is going to balance his budget. I am, of course, quite convinced that there will be no budget brought down in this parliament. There will be an election first, because the government dare not face the country or this parliament with a budget and the financial mess which it will show. But I for one would be quite prepared to see an unbalanced budget if it meant that some of the unemployed were taken off the unemployed lists and given productive work. There are many things to be done in this country, and it is high time the government informed this house and Canada what their plans are to alleviate the growing menace of unemployment which faces us today.

Mr. Tucker: I do not intend to detain the committee for more than two or three minutes, but I wish to make a suggestion to the Minister of Finance and ask that he and the government give some consideration to it. It is something along the lines of that brought forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He has pointed out the position in which the government finds itself by saying to the house that legislation is going to be delayed unless the estimates are put through. Of course they, with all members of the house, realize that the estimates have to be reasonably examined. So we are apparently in the dilemma that legislation which the country wants and which the members presumably all want is held up because of the necessity of putting the estimates through in a reasonable and proper way after careful examination.

When we ask the government to proceed with such an important measure as that to provide for improvement in the position of agricultural producers, we are continually told, "Those other measures and estimates must be proceeded with, and if you put them through we will reach that measure". We were told last night that we would reach this important measure with regard to agriculture today, provided we put through ahead of it this interim supply bill, the amendment to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the resolution with regard to the Export Credits Insurance Act, and the resolution in respect of the National Housing Act. We are told that if we put all these things through we will then reach this important measure on agriculture.

I think the hon. members of this house must realize that to say by the time we get interim supply through and deal with these very important measures such as housing, the insurance act and so on, we are going to then take up this most important act on agriculture but only providing we deal with all these other matters first, is practically the same as saying we are not going to get this agricultural matter dealt with this week, because we will run into finance estimates on Friday and the defence estimates tomorrow, and probably other estimates on Saturday.

What I am getting at is this. While I am thoroughly and wholeheartedly in support of the attitude of the leader of our party when he says it is our desire to co-operate with the government in enabling it to have a fair chance to implement the promises upon which it was elected, I also agree with another suggestion of my leader which I think a lot of us would accept without hesitation. I would point out that the Minister of Finance and other prominent members of the government of which he is a member served on the estimates committee when in opposition, and they all testified to the value of that committee. Now our leader has suggested repeatedly to the government that we have this great program of legislation to consider and with which the house wishes to proceed, in addition to the estimates, which obviously are all going to be spent by the end of March. So if there is going to be any reality in considering them they should therefore be considered and put through not later than January next. So he has said we should submit some of these estimates to the estimates committee for consideration by the members who will be on that committee. In that way the estimates could get a thorough examination and the government could go ahead with its legislative program, a part of which is this important matter to agriculture.

The house has now been in session for approximately seven weeks and here is this matter which in my opinion is at the root of a lot of our growing unemployment troubles in this country, namely the falling off in the purchasing power of those in primary industry, particularly those engaged in agriculture. The government has promised to do something about this, and the longer it delays the more these problems are piling up. The economists realize that it is much easier to arrest a downward trend, economically speaking, than to right it if it is allowed to go a certain distance. I would think the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and other members of the government would have accepted with alacrity the suggested co-operation of the official opposition as outlined by our leader, in order to help deal with this situation which we know is not an easy one.

I cannot understand why the government does not accept the suggestion, even at this date, and have some of these estimates referred to a committee where some members can look into them, because we are being put into the position where, if we do our duty and examine these estimates in the way we should examine them, we will be accused of holding up the program of the government. The government must be desirous of putting us in that position, otherwise they would meet the suggestion that has been made in order that they might go ahead with their legislative program. Why do not they do it?

I dropped into the external affairs committee yesterday, where I saw the estimates of that department being examined by the members of that committtee who were very much interested in that department. When these estimates come before us the house itself will know that they have been thoroughly examined in that external affairs committee and it is going to be able to pass them in much less time.

We could take, for example, the Department of National Defence, which is the department that occupies the minds of many of the people today. Much thought has been given to all the many aspects of the duties of this department, and I know we are all conscious of that fact. This is one area in particular where this parliament, if it is going to do its duty to the people, should be examining the estimates very carefully, but if we want to examine them then we hold up the legislation.

Why does not the government agree to appoint an estimates committee, which would be set up by the government itself in order to consider the estimates of the Department of National Defence? This procedure would double the efficiency of the members of this house, and I do ask the government to reconsider the suggestion to set up an estimates committee so this house can do a better job, not only of putting through the estimates and examining them, but also of ensuring the government a chance to implement the promises upon which they won the support they received in the election.

Mr. Hansell: May I call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we do not wish to unduly prolong the discussion of this resolution. We have promised and agreed to co-operate as far as possible with the government in getting through this legislation and passing the estimates in the limited time which appears to be at our disposal.

However, there is one thing I should like to say, and in this connection I should like to ask the minister a question which perhaps he may be able to answer after I am through. I should like to know whether or not there are any estimates which are to be withdrawn, or whether there are any which are going to be curtailed. I am interested in this because if any estimates are to be withdrawn then an opportunity will not be given to members of parliament to air any problem they may have in mind coming under those particular estimates.

I rather fancy that members may find themselves in the position of expecting to be able to speak on certain matters but finding that the estimates do not come before the committee, so they are not able to speak as they expected. I do not know what will happen to the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. I had something to say on that matter the other day, but we did not reach the particular item I wished to use in connection with my speech, and it would now appear that perhaps we will not have an opportunity to discuss those estimates this session.

Mr. Chairman, there is one point in this connection that I wish to bring to the attention of the committee and of the Minister of Finance in particular, because I am quite certain that any policy he may pursue will have an effect on the problem I am going to place before him. Several hon. members have risen today and spoken concerning unemployment. Whether or not the government want to recognize that there is an increase taking place in unemployment is their business. Some of us cannot help seeing by figures and facts that there is an increase in the number of unemployed.

The government may say this started before they came into office, but I am not too much concerned about when it started or who is responsible. I am going to present to the minister an unemployment problem which has existed for some considerable time, and that particular unemployment problem is in my own constituency where we had at one time a rather extensive coal mining industry.

For some time now, since the dieselization of the railways and the increasing use of other fuels, the coal mining industry of the Crowsnest pass area has been in a very deplorable condition, and I think my remarks regarding the industry in this particular area will be true practically throughout the entire country. I am bringing this matter to the attention of the government because it affects a vast community, and in this connection I should like to put a few figures and facts on the record.

I have a letter here from a local coal mining union, signed by the secretary, which gives an example of how often the coal miners have been able to work over the past couple of years. I will read one paragraph, which says that from January 1 of this year to the end of September, eight months, the mine at Bellevue, which is one of the communities within this Crowsnest pass area, will have worked no more than 60 days. Think of that, no more than 60 days in eight months.

The letter continues, and says that from October 1, 1956, to September 30, 1957, that is for an entire year, the mine has worked approximately 90 days. That is a deplorable situation. It is accentuated, too, by reason of the fact that the coal mines in this particular area work on shifts, and because they work on shifts the unemployment insurance payments made to the men are affected. The men work perhaps one shift a week and by reason of that fact they are not totally unemployed. If they work one shift a week they do not appear to be as eligible for unemployment insurance benefits as if they were continually unemployed for a further length of time.

I want to put on the record here a small table. I will read it if I do not have unanimous consent. This table was enclosed in the letter I have just read, and it says that unemployment insurance for a married man who had a full week off one year ago amounted to between $26 and $30, but today by reason of this shift work he receives $19 to $21. A single man in respect of a full week off one year ago received $19 to $23; today he receives between $13 and $15.

Here is another part of the schedule which says that a married man working one shift one year ago received by way of unemployment insurance between $21 and $29; today he receives between $6 and $8.

Now, when we say "worked one shift", that means one shift in a week. A single man who worked one shift a year ago received between $14 and $22. Today he receives $5. According to another part of the schedule, for two shifts a married man received between $7 and $15 one year ago. Today he receives nothing. When a single man worked two shifts a year ago he received $6 to $8, but today he receives nothing. All this is in respect to unemployment insurance.

In the letter dated September 25, to which I have just referred, this local union secretary said that some of its officers were coming to Ottawa to interview the Minister of Labour, and I understand they did meet with him. Some amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act were passed in this house the other day. These will benefit some unemployed by reason of the further extension of time for the payment of benefits and so forth, but they will not help these particular miners who are working only one or two shifts a week. This was the subject of the interview with the minister, as I understand it, but no remedy for this situation has been brought in. I will not take any more of the time of the committee on this point. Instead I will save the committee's time and personally speak about it to the minister.

I wish to deal now with the coal mining industry in general and in the Crowsnest pass area in particular. I know the government extends a somewhat sympathetic feeling to those people who are unfortunate in their employment, or to an industry which finds itself in unfortunate circumstances; but what we need is something more than a mere expression of sympathy.

I recall that just a few years ago, when Mr. Drew was out in Alberta, he visited a certain area in the southern part of the province and delivered a speech relating to the coal mining industry. In that speech he declared that something had to be done for the industry, and suggested that if he ever got in power something would definitely be done. It was significant that he did not find himself in power after that election, and when we returned to Ottawa we found him still sitting on the opposition side of the house. I waited to hear him come forward with some concrete suggestions as to how we were going to solve the problem which existed in the coal mining industry, but from that day on we did not hear a word from him on the subject. The election was over and his party was defeated. But the situation has changed now, and the same party which Mr. Drew led just a few years ago is now led by another gentleman, and the same party is now in office instead of being on the opposition side of the house.

We want to know whether or not this government is going to take up the cudgels of battle for the coal mining industry of Canada, particularly in the depressed area of the Crowsnest pass, and devise a policy that will keep that industry going and thereby give reasonable employment to those in the industry who are presently unemployed. Surely it is the duty and responsibility of government to devise some sort of a national coal policy.

I am not suggesting for a moment that it will be easy. The government will really have its hands full if this problem is to be properly tackled, but I believe it can be done. There is no use saying, "Well, we have set up a royal commission on energy that will look into all these problems." Some of us have been in this house long enough to have seen commissions come and go, and I personally have not yet discovered too much that has actually been accomplished as a result of the establishment of a royal commission. They have made recommendations, their work has been complete and thorough, and frequently their recommendations have been good; but in the final analysis it is up to the government to implement the recommendations. Many of the recommendations of royal commissions have been laudable, but governments do not seem to act upon them.

We owe it to the people in the depressed coal mining areas to tell them whether or not we believe the industry should continue to exist in Canada, because they have a right to know and the government in office has a responsibility to tell them. If the government's answer is yes, then it should be made known soon. There is no use saying an attempt will be made to put the industry on its feet a year from now, because that does not put any food on the breakfast table of the coal miner tomorrow morning. Something must be done soon.

On the other hand, if the government reaches the conclusion that the Canadian coal mining industry is about to fold up and it is unable to do anything about it, this information should be made known so the industry will know exactly where it stands and the coal miners will know their position. If it is to fold up then I believe it is the government's responsibility to rehabilitate the people in the coal mining districts of Canada.

There are ways in which this could be done if rehabilitation should prove necessary. One is to see that new industries are encouraged to go into the depressed areas and sustain them. This would be feasible in some of these areas. In the Crowsnest pass district, for instance, there is plenty of industrial potential. There is a good deal of lumbering and there could be a good deal of mining—not coal mining, perhaps, if that is to go by the boards, but other types of mining. It is the government's responsibility to see that something is done along that line.

We have been talking for quite some time about the possibility of thermal power being established in the Crowsnest pass area. In the last election my Liberal opponent declared that there was to be a thermal power plant situated in the Crowsnest pass district, and he mentioned Blairmore as the location. Oh, yes, he went so far as to say he had been able to achieve this for the people in that area. That was his election cry. I know that politicians can sometimes stretch the truth and give their statements a good deal of colour, and I am not going to plead innocent of doing that myself on occasion; but I must say that when politicians go out and state positive lies in respect of things of this sort, that is going too far.

I had this in mind, so I asked a question on the order paper just recently. I inquired about the establishment of a thermal power plant in the Crowsnest pass area. My question was passed as an order for return. I do not quite know why, because there was not much research involved in providing the answer. However, when questions are passed as orders for returns the answers do not appear in Hansard, and in order to learn what the answer is people must travel to Ottawa or request someone to look up the sessional paper. I am going to state what the answer was in order that it may appear in Hansard. My question was in two parts, as follows:

1. Has the government of Canada negotiated with any person, firm or corporation, during the past year for the installation of a thermal power plant at Blairmore, Alberta or any other community in the Alberta section of the Crowsnest pass?

2. If so, with whom were negotiations carried on and with what results in each case?

This is the answer that was given in sessional paper No. 200, filed on Thursday, November 28:

1. The Dominion coal board have no knowledge of any negotiation with any person during the past year on the installation of a thermal power plant at Blairmore, Alberta or in any other location in the Crowsnest pass.

2. See answer to No. 1.

Then there are added the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and the Department of Trade and Commerce. Then we find the following:

So far as these departments are concerned: No answer.

In spite of election talk and election promises, Mr. Chairman, nothing has been done. I am projecting this matter into the debate today because this is one small industry that perhaps can be established in the Crowsnest pass area to take up some of the slack in respect of unemployment. The other thing that can be done, of course, if it is necessary to rehabilitate coal miners, is to move them to some other area and find employment for them there; but the situation is such today that almost every area in the country is experiencing the same problem in respect of unemployment.

I am aware of the fact, of course, that provincial governments have some responsibility in this matter. A few years ago, when the coal mining industry of Alberta reached the low ebb that it did, the Social Credit government of that province appropriated $100,000 for the rehabilitation of coal miners. Many of them left the area and became absorbed in other types of work.

Of course there is another solution to this problem, and that is to get markets for our coal. I am not saying that solution is an easy one, because we have been working on it for a good many years now. I will give this government credit for what I am about to say. What the result will be I do not know. Whether or not it will have a good result I do not know, but since coming into office this government has increased the subvention on coal for export to Japan. That is an admirable thing; but an increase in the subvention on exports of coal to Japan, while it is an admirable thing in itself, does not necessarily get the market for us. On the basis of the increased subvention I believe it is up to the government to go out and get markets in Japan for this coal.

There is a market in Japan for coal, and I want to emphasize that. I am told by the Dominion coal board—which is doing good work so far as their responsibilities are concerned and are at our disposal and will help us in any way—that the Japanese steel industry is in need of coal. They cannot produce enough coal themselves, and they must import coal from other countries. I am told that 20 per cent of the coal which they import now for their steel industry is imported from the eastern seaboard of the United States of America. About 2,880,000 tons are imported from the eastern seaboard of the United States. It is Pocahontas coal. I am told that the prospects for the sale of coal in Japan over the next few years amount to 12 million tons. They will need that much coal, but they cannot increase their own production, and they will have to import nearly 7 million tons.

I ask whether this business involving 7 million tons of coal is to go to United States coal mines on the eastern seaboard, or whether we have a chance to get that market. It is up to the government and the Department of Trade and Commerce to go after that market, because if we do not get it someone from some other country will go after it. I am inclined to think that if we can get that market for our coal it will help the coal mining industry of Canada to keep its head above water so it will not sink.

There is another industry in Japan that needs coal, namely the gas industry. They have imported a lot of coal from French Indo-China. French Indo-China is now in the communist orbit. We should be able to get some of that business now. The business that did go to French Indo-China perhaps should now go somewhere else. We have the opportunity to get that business.

The Japanese market for coal is highly competitive. They must have the proper quality of coal. In this respect I wish to say to the coal mining operators in the Crowsnest pass, or in any other place in Canada, that it is up to them to produce the quality of coal that will give the Japanese market the proper mix. In addition, the price must be competitive. When we are talking of a competitive price, might I suggest to the government of the day that they give every possible assistance to the establishment of bulk-loading facilities on the Vancouver docks. At the present time any bulk loading of coal or any other such material for export cannot be done at Vancouver.

This seems to me a strange state of affairs. Vancouver harbour is considered to be one of the best harbours in the world. Vancouver is, of course, a large city. If we want to ship anything by the process of bulk loading the material has to be taken by train to Seattle or Portland to be loaded for export. That should not be. A company has been organized which would like to establish a bulk-loading dock in the harbour of Vancouver so the coal mining industry, and any other industry desiring to facilitate itself in this manner, will not have to bear the expense of shipping the material to Seattle or Portland in order to export it. I hope they will be successful in this and I believe they will, but I do not know.

I could say a good deal more, Mr. Chairman, in respect of the coal mining industry, but I know we want to get along with this business. I appeal to the government now to look at this problem objectively and try to do the very best they can for this industry, which has been a big industry in Canada but in the last few years has been dying out. Do we want to have vast areas composed of ghost towns, or do we want to revive the industry to the point where it will employ a reasonable number of coal miners and keep those communities economically sound?

This is my plea to the government. I ask them to look into this matter and do all they can and do it quickly. I am not asking them to do it two or three years from now. Who knows whether they will be here two or three years from now? I am asking them to do it right away. Let us leave no stone unturned. Let us do all we can quickly to save the coal mining industry of Canada.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Chairman, I was shocked this morning at the reference the Prime Minister made to the pensioned employees of the government railways in this country. This problem is one which I have brought to the attention of the house on other occasions. In Westmorland county there are thousands of pensioned employees of the Intercolonial Railway. Of course this railway has been out of existence for some time, since it was taken over by the Canadian National. This group is small, and in a few years the problem will solve itself because there will be no pensioners living.

When I was on the other side of the house I brought this matter to the attention of the government, as a reference to Hansard will indicate. Of course the Prime Minister may not have had time to read the speeches I made when I was on the government side of the house.

Mr. Cardiff: Never knew you were here.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Probably you did not; you do not notice too much.

[Mr. Hansell.]

In addition to the plight of these men, there is also the plight of the people who were working for Canadian National Railways in Moncton and other centres and who have become unemployed. The capital projects that are proposed in that area, of one kind or another, are aimed at alleviating the conditions there. The Atlantic resolutions, which were signed by the Conservative candidates of the maritime provinces said:

> We favour the immediate institution of an Atlantic capital projects program which will provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area.

This resolution is in line with the thinking of many organizations throughout the years. One of these projects that is of great interest today is the causeway that would be built from Westmorland county to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Would he ask the unanimous consent of the committee to put all the Atlantic resolutions on the Hansard record? He will have no difficulty in obtaining the agreement of this side of the house. He has been reading them piecemeal throughout the session, and we would be delighted to see them all in Hansard.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): The hon. member has said that I have taken them up piecemeal. I have brought them to the attention of the house whenever it was possible, and I would remind him that the Atlantic resolutions were not signed by me. They were signed by the 33 Conservative candidates in the Atlantic provinces. It is the duty of those members to bring these resolutions to the attention of this house. As I stated on another occasion, there is one Conservative member in this house who has had the courage to put some of them on the order paper by way of resolution. I believe there are three contained in a resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Pictou.

Referring once again to the Prince Edward Island causeway, I may say that Prince Edward Island is one of the beauty spots of Canada. It is also one of the finest farming sections of the country. This causeway would be of great benefit to the people of Prince Edward Island in the movement of their products to the mainland. It would assist also in the development of industries on Prince Edward Island, because much of the transportation is done by truck.

We have within Westmorland county many stone quarries. In fact quite a number of the public buildings in Boston were built from stone quarried in Westmorland county.

I feel that these quarries could be reactivated and the stone used for the construction of an island causeway. I am not an engineer, but I have talked to some who are familiar with the shore line of Westmorland county and Prince Edward Island. They tell me that if this causeway were built it would soon be protected by sand dunes. We know this to be true, because one of the problems connected with wharves and breakwaters in the Northumberland strait area is that the drifting sands of Northumberland strait soon tend to gather around the breakwaters and the first thing we know we have a breakwater that appears to be on dry land. A great amount of dredging is necessary. I think this same condition would prevail if the island causeway were built.

We know the Prime Minister has taken a great interest in Prince Edward Island. In Charlottetown on April 29, as reported in the Ottawa Journal, the Prime Minister said when speaking of the money owed the federal government by Prince Edward Island:

> Prince Edward Island will realize what $1,400,000 is. That amount will imprison this province. It will intensify financial difficulties. It will render a mockery of the concept of united Canada.

Farther on he said:

> Prince Edward Island will become the poorest of the poor relations in Canada, unless you take action now.

The people of Prince Edward Island believed in the sincerity of the Prime Minister and sent four Conservative members, the entire number of members allotted to Prince Edward Island, to this parliament.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Next time New Brunswick will do the same.

Mr. Habel: Will those four come back?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): We will have to wait and see. Since there are four Conservative members from Prince Edward Island, we do not have that problem. The Minister of Public Works often makes reference in this house to the Liberal sea walls, and with this number of Conservative members from Prince Edward Island this causeway from New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island could be a Conservative sea wall. I cannot hear all the interjections, but if hon. members wish to ask questions they should rise and I will give them the floor. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert has his own problems.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have not made any interjection during the member's speech. However, I reserve the right to do so when he starts his inaccuracies.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): This is the first time the hon. member has not made an interjection.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): The hon. gentleman will not have much time for that. When the Prime Minister was speaking at Woodstock, Ontario, on June 6 he was referring to the Liberal party. He went on to say they said they did not have money to increase old age pensions to the point to which he thought they should be increased. He went on to say that the Liberal party had money for culture. They had money for other programs, and then he laughed and said they even had money to build a road across the ocean.

I am wondering what the people of Prince Edward Island, who sent the four Conservative members here, would think if they knew that after being so sympathetic in Charlottetown the Prime Minister laughed at the causeway or road across the ocean, as he called it in Woodstock, Ontario.

An hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): No, but if you wish to check the accuracy of that statement I suggest that you get in touch with the hon. member for Oxford, who was on the stage at that time.

There is another project that would assist in relieving the unemployment situation in our district. I refer to the elimination of grade crossings in the city of Moncton. I will not say it is the fault of the railway that the rails go through the centre of town. The rails were put there some time ago when Moncton was a very small place called The Bend, and the town has grown around the railway line. I understand there are plans now for the lowering of the railway tracks so that overhead passage for other vehicles can be built with greater ease. If this were done the trade and commerce section of Moncton would not be cut in two by the railway line, and the crossings would no longer be a menace to the lives of the people in the area.

Another suggestion has been made that the tracks be diverted, and that rather than go through the city they should pass through the west end so there would be no interference with the main streets of the city of Moncton. I think either of these programs would be acceptable to the people of that area. I know a great amount of work would be created for the unemployed. This is the type of work that has a high labour content and requires a lot of men. I believe such a project would be of great assistance now.

Early this morning we received in our mail a newspaper supplement from Saint John,

New Brunswick, about the Chignecto canal. If hon. members read it they will find what the Chignecto canal is. Briefly, it is a canal to be built on the border between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to allow vessels to pass from Northumberland strait to the bay of Fundy. A ship going from Montreal to Boston would save approximately 400 miles. The canal would also be a water lane from Prince Edward Island and the north shore of Nova Scotia to the industrial cities of New England.

The Prime Minister has said, and I agree with him, that this is part and parcel of the St. Lawrence seaway. I would ask hon. members to look at the newspaper supplement on the Chignecto canal. I do not wish to be inaccurate in what I say about it. In that paper hon. members will find a statement by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. They can read exactly what he has to say, and they will see from what he says how strongly he is behind the project.

This project is one that was held out as an inducement to the maritime provinces to enter confederation. Hon. members will find that after confederation, when the parliament of Canada met, members and senators from the maritime provinces brought up the matter. One senator, Amos E. Botsford of New Brunswick, said the Chignecto canal had been held out by the conference at Quebec as an inducement to New Brunswick to enter confederation. Senator Dickey declared that at the conference it was distinctly understood that the canal should be constructed. John Burpee, then member of parliament for Sunbury, now York-Sunbury, declared that if the people of New Brunswick had not been satisfied that the canal would be built they never would have consented to the union.

In the newspaper supplement it will be found that many others who were at the conference brought the matter to the attention of the house. The 100th anniversay of confederation will be about 10 years from now, and even if the promise is 100 years old it would be nice to see it fulfilled by that time. This project has twice been in the estimates of the House of Commons.

Having dealt with capital projects, I turn again to the question of the pensioners of the government railway who live in Moncton. I wish to say that I disagree thoroughly with the Prime Minister when he says that this is not an important matter.

Mr. Churchill: He did not say that at all.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I asked him a question concerning legislation to assist these people, and he said this matter was of little or no importance.

[Mr. Murphy (Westmorland).]

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend ought to be fair about this. The Prime Minister was asked a question by the hon. member this morning about placing this particular matter on the order paper, and the Prime Minister directed his answer not to the merits of the matter or its intrinsic importance but to the question of relating it to an already heavily laden order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that a matter of no importance?

Mr. Fleming: The matter of the order paper is a matter of very high importance, as I think all hon. members will recognize, but I think it will also be recognized by hon. members that the question of bringing new matters in now is something that cannot just be tossed about each day, regardless of how important the particular matter under consideration may be. We must take account of the realities of the present order paper, with requests on every hand to advance matters one before another or to put more matters on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Surely the minister does not think he can get the Prime Minister off that spot. He referred to the question this morning as being one of no importance.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Chairman, I have the floor and that is the impression I, as well as many other members, got from what the Prime Minister said. It is nice to have the Minister of Finance tell us what the Prime Minister meant when he said it was of little or no importance. We are used to taking their words in the ordinary meaning, and if they mean something else to other people I think the people who are drawing these pensions will understand what I have just said about the meaning of "little or no importance". The Prime Minister was in the city of Moncton on May 4 and made an address at the Paramount theatre, as reported in the Moncton Transcript of May 6, in which he said these pensions were totally inadequate.

I have pointed out to the house that there are only a few thousand very old pensioners involved and that the problem will cure itself in a few years because they will all be dead. I have urged the house to consider this an urgent and important matter so these persons may be treated in the same way as the beneficiaries of other social legislation we have already passed this session, which was regarded as emergency legislation.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I want to correct a second inaccuracy we have noticed in the hon. member's remarks. It has to do with the statement I made about the Chignecto canal. I should like to read an important paragraph from the article, because the hon. member has misconstrued some of the words I used with respect to the canal. I quote from the article which he held in his hand, and this is what I said before the last election:

Many organizations and groups of influence have pledged their support—

Of the Chignecto canal.

—but so far the Liberal government has not shown the vision and leadership necessary to conduct even an up to date survey. John G. Diefenbaker, Q.C., the national leader of the Progressive Conservative party, on May 3, here in Saint John, discussed the merits of the canal and joined the long list of its promoters. I am pleased to associate myself with his remarks on that occasion.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): If this is a correction, Mr. Chairman, I certainly would accept it as such. I note that this is the first time I have heard the hon. member for Saint John-Albert raise his voice in this house on this matter.

Mr. Pallett: You have not spent very much time in the house, in that case.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this opportunity go by without referring to the hon. member for Westmorland, who has just spoken and has twice complimented me on the resolution which I placed on the order paper of this house. It is very fine of him to do so, and in this regard I would say that as far as this and other Atlantic resolutions are concerned, I am sure I can speak for the other members from that area and say that we will certainly go ahead, put them on the order paper and see that they are carried out to the best of our ability. Furthermore, at a meeting of the Atlantic candidates in Moncton we certainly enjoyed the great hospitality of that city, although I do not think my hon. friend had anything to do with that.

However, I would just like to refer to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Macleod with respect to the coal mining industry. I would point out that in the area which I represent, the constituency of Pictou, a great deal of the economy is bound up in the coal mining industry. I will just briefly describe the history of that industry, which began with the old companies such as the General Mining Company, Acadia Coal Company and the Intercolonial Coal Company. It is easy to appreciate from what has happened in recent years that the coal mining industry has certainly been going down in that area. We have seen the closing down of mines in the town of Stellarton, the closing of the Alla shaft, Albion, MacGregor and also No. 79. There has also been a considerable reduction in the working force of the Intercolonial Coal Mining Company in Westville. Many delegations were sent to Halifax, to the provincial government of the time, and to the federal government in Ottawa without any help whatsoever being received.

As far as the town of Westville is concerned, which is an heroic town of some 4,200 people and which might be compared with Springhill in the neighbouring Cumberland county, it has for some years now faced a very bleak existence. The finances of the town are poor, as they have been for the last six or eight years, and this also applies to the town of Stellarton. In Westville there is what is known as the black diamond seam, a seam of coal which contains approximately 15 million tons of the best coal available. In this connection I would suggest that the subventions on coal which have been announced by this government will indeed have the effect desired in helping these mines, and I will certainly press for such a mine to be opened up before too long in order to assist that town.

These subventions announced by the government should, as I say, be of great assistance to the area, but my hon. friend from Macleod has stated that one way this government could help the coal mining industry throughout the country would, of course, be to encourage new industries. In this regard I would point out that these subventions will also help in the expansion of power plants in the province of Nova Scotia. There are, as many hon. members will know, some very active organizations in the maritime provinces, including one known as the Atlantic provinces economic council. This is made up of members from all over the Atlantic provinces under a very energetic president. The last place this organization met was, I believe, in the city of Charlottetown. APEC, as this organization is known, is not limited by political partisanship at all, but includes representatives from business, labour, educational authorities, and the various governments within these provinces. Certainly this organization is establishing a solid front in the maritimes.

I would just like to refer to an article in the Financial Post of September 28th last, as follows:

Maritimers are finding out through their Atlantic provinces economic council or APEC how much they can do by their own efforts to expand business and raise living standards. At a meeting just held in Charlottetown APEC studied trade promotion. Numerous constructive ideas were brought forward.

For example, the four provinces in APEC plan to establish an Atlantic House in London, England, very soon. Through this agency, as the experience of other parts of Canada shows, they might expect to attract immigrants, capital and orders for their goods.

The Financial Post goes on to say:

In these current APEC reports there is a strong emphasis on local markets which may reflect the maritime sense of isolation. For instance, the Atlantic makers of footwear and apparel held a very successful show of their goods this year—but they held it in Halifax. They plan another for 1958—in Moncton or Saint John.

Why not Montreal or Toronto? It's by selling an exportable surplus outside their own borders, by competing in the Canadian market as a whole, and on overseas and foreign markets that the maritimes will ultimately share to the full a national prosperity.

An "operation bootstrap" of this kind is far better than wringing of hands, appeals to Ottawa or nostalgic longing for good old days.

What has been going on in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is what we might call "operation coaldust" or "operation kilowatt", or whatever you wish, but now the maritime provinces, through APEC, are showing that they are going ahead. I would like to refer briefly to a company which has been set up by the government of Nova Scotia known as Industrial Estates Limited. The purpose of this company is to attract new industry to the province of Nova Scotia, and I was happy to note from the issue of the Halifax Chronicle Herald yesterday that the first estate will be set up between the two towns I have mentioned, namely Stellarton and Westville, comprising 150 acres which have already been purchased. An option has been taken on a further 600 acres; and I believe that Industrial Estates Limited, which has many good and energetic men on its board of directors, will help to ensure a bright future for the province of Nova Scotia and the maritimes generally. I certainly hope that industry will be attracted to my own area.

Finally, I would like to refer the remarks of the hon. member for Macleod this morning to the effect that this government would not be here long if it did not do something. In my opinion this government has done more during this short period for my area and for the maritimes in general than has been done for many, many years. I might say that in the proud constituency which I have the honour to represent the future looks good, and I believe the whole of the maritimes are now looking forward to a prosperity which they have not known heretofore.

Mr. Herridge (Kootenay West): I would like to say a few words Mr. Chairman, in support of the remarks made this morning by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I must take advantage of this opportunity to bring to the attention of the government and this house the situation with respect to unemployment in my constituency, a constituency which is known for one of the highest rates of income per capita in Canada. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I am very suited to deal with this question as I am with a number of other questions. As a suffering employer in the lumber industry, as a member of a miner's union and as a peasant farmer I can take a fully objective view of all these questions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the government has passed some legislation of value, legislation which will be of great assistance to numbers of persons including senior citizens, disabled and blind persons and war veterans. We were glad to see this legislation brought in and we supported it wholeheartedly. However, all this means, Mr. Chairman, is a minor redistribution of the diminishing production of this country. That is all this legislation means at the present time. The government of the day has not yet had to face head on, the major problems which have to be solved. I am not blaming the government for the situation which exists in the country at the present time, or for the situation which may continue to exist for some time to come unless some fundamentally different approach is made to this question.

Mr. Chairman, we believe that this question of unemployment and its related problems will not be solved properly until we have a different approach to our trade policies, some over-all planning, a different type of federal-provincial co-operation and different fiscal policies. We must also have a really national development policy which is the result of co-operation between the federal government and the provinces, and we must have a fiscal policy which permits the use of the national credit to give effect to the national development policy.

We in this group believe that these are some of the things which are necessary before we are going to solve, in the long run, these unemployment problems and the difficulties associated with them. However, we recognize that these things cannot be undertaken overnight and that they are unlikely to be undertaken by the Conservative government with its present philosophy, its present program and its current outlook, composed as it is of some hon. members who are so antiquated in their point of view that they would have made good parish councillors in the reign of George IV.

I want to bring to the attention of the committee and the government the situation in my own constituency, one which is unparalleled in recent years. I have in my hand a copy of the Trail Daily Times of November 23 in which is included the report of the manager of the employment offices for the latest monthly period. This is what he has to say:

Unemployment conditions in Trail and district are comparatively worse now compared to the same period in 1956, J. T. Wilkinson, local manager of the unemployment insurance commission said today in his monthly review.

"There are now 505 males and 123 females unemployed", said Mr. Wilkinson, "a rise of 70 per cent over last month and a 125 per cent increase over last year. Thirty-eight per cent of the applications for aid were from Castlegar and Grand Forks area with the remaining 62 per cent from Trail.

Now the report goes on to refer to the various industries. I am very well acquainted with my constituency; I have seen it develop from pioneer days. Mr. Wilkinson has this to say with regard to the future:

The next largest industry reporting layoffs is logging and sawmill. This has increased considerably for this reporting period and is at least two months earlier than usual. Many sawmills and logging operations are closing down throughout the entire area with some remaining closed and others working at a reduced rate.

I may mention that the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company has had to lay off a number of men.

This condition, as reported by some, is brought about by lack of sales.

Something about which I have very close personal experience. Then the report goes on:

Wholesale and retail trades are reporting business slow with few hirings. We expect some increase with the coming of Christmas but it is anticipated the demand for sales clerks will not be as great this year.

Dealing with forestry, the report says:

Little activity has occurred for this reporting period. The extra crews hired during the summer season have now been laid off.

Of mining, the report says:

No hirings have occurred for this reporting period with little hope of an early recovery expected. We are well supplied with workers for this industry, and an increase of transient miners requesting work has passed through our office.

Of manufacturing:

To date approximately 150 workers have been laid off from Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company Limited. This has caused a sharp rise in our unemployed figures for the present.

Of construction:

A sharp increase of skilled and semi-skilled workers registering for employment has occurred throughout the period, with contracts in our previous reports being completed or nearing completion. No new contracts have been let and it is expected the situation will become worse as present contracts are completed.

Then the report goes on to deal with veterans.

Our special placements files have increased over the month, due to those working at seasonal employment. The majority of applicants registered are of the age group class and employment is limited.

These are the people who suffer the most, those who are unable to work in the mines, woods and mills. Then Mr. Wilkinson says:

Veteran files for October showed a slight increase over the previous month with the percentage of veterans against the total unemployed applicants being favourable with last year.

The women's division also reports increased unemployment, as does the executive and professional division.

Mr. Chairman, this represents a serious state of affairs in a constituency such as the one I have the honour to represent which produces such great wealth. It is one which presents increasing difficulties. The number of transients is increasing rapidly in both Nelson and in Trail, for the same conditions prevail in Nelson as I have mentioned. The city of Trail got all the agencies together and representatives from the organizations met, as a result of which the city has established a central agency for transients to be located in the city hall adjacent to the clothing centre and to be operated jointly by the Trail relief organization and the Trail welfare society. The decision to set up a central agency was taken at a meeting of representatives of interested organizations. Under the chairmanship of the city council's welfare chairman, Alderman F. E. DeVito, as reported in the Trail Daily Times, the talks were one in a series held to discuss the problem of growing numbers of unemployed transients passing through Trail.

Men out of work in other parts of British Columbia and, possibly, a good number of farmers who have ceased their farming operations on the prairies, come to Trail because it is known as a place where one can usually obtain employment. In discussing this question at the Trail town meeting Alderman Alex Brokenshire had this to say:

Things are rough and may get even rougher.

The whole tenor of this meeting was that the city was facing a situation with regard to transients which was only a reflection of the growing unemployment in other areas.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, we believe we have to take a more fundamental approach if we are to correct this situation. Like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and others in this group I believe that something more could be done at this time to assist people to obtain employment. It is very easy to sit in this house, living a reasonably comfortable life, and fail to realize what unemployment means to the average head of a family and to the average mother of a family if it continues for any length of time, and I think we in this house should do everything possible regardless of party to promote a continual flow of ideas—and I am very glad to see the Minister of Labour nodding agreement—and proposals which will relieve the situation.

First, we believe that there should be in these circumstances not the formal and long distance projects that, perhaps, we have come to expect from provincial conferences. We believe the federal government should say to the provinces: "Come to Ottawa; here is an immediate situation and we want your co-operation. Let us sit round the table and do something to meet it, at least during the winter months, or the few months ahead."

There are things which can be done if we use our intelligence. It is not enough to sit back and assume that large numbers of people must go on unemployment insurance or unemployment assistance and that others must wander along the streets with no source of income except a handout at a soup kitchen. That is not good enough, Mr. Chairman, in Canada at this time, bearing in mind the production of which Canada is capable. There are things that can be done. As I have said, I have had a most interesting life experience including the time I have spent in this house in the last 12 years. I have had something to do with the construction of highways and bridges and piers and I am trying to do something today toward the production of the Conservative party, though how successful I will be in that work I do not know.

I think this government could ensure that there is a certain amount of work continued on the trans-Canada highway as a result of co-operation with the provinces, particularly a province such as British Columbia where you can carry on heavy rock cuts all winter long and construct certain types of rock fills and high level bridges and things of that sort under winter conditions. In addition to that there is a lot of material required for this construction which normally will be continued in the spring, in the way of lumber, steel and things of that nature. A little planning and co-operation would make it possible to keep some of the sawmills going and would assist the steel industry in operating, if only we would look ahead and place some of these orders for the future. In addition to that I believe there is an opportunity to promote the necessary building on the prairies.

If in the period of the hungry thirties when the former Conservative government was in power—I will admit it was not then called the Progressive Conservative party—we had used our national credit to build highways, houses, public utilities and things of that sort we could have given the people employment at reasonable wages and at the same time accomplished the building of the necessary projects at at least one-quarter of the price. If we had had sufficient faith in our country this could have been done.

I suggest some co-operation is necessary between the governments on a very sound basis. I am all for getting people to work in order to earn their money rather than having them get it without work and I am sure a great majority of Canadians share that view. We could do something to improve the situation in the lumber industry by using the national credit to provide for the necessary buildings, home improvements and long-term loans for that purpose, and the construction of the granaries that are required to house the millions of bushels of grain which in some cases have to remain on the ground outdoors. These are things we can do and I have mentioned only a few but instead we sit around and mope and fail to take action.

In the first place this is not a party question. We should all be willing to co-operate for the sake of the people we are here to represent. In the second place we should use our intelligence and explore every avenue for the development of programs to create this necessary employment. That is something that could be done immediately. It has little to do with the political philosophy of any party in this house. Rather it is simply a reflection of ordinary Canadian common sense.

There is one thing we could do that would be of great assistance to British Columbia and it was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway; that is, to stop being stupid and recognize the government of China. We sent a trade mission in by way of the back door and although we do not recognize it we say we would like to do business with it. Let us recognize the government of China but do not recognize the form of government. Let us do something for the lumber, fish, mining and fruit industries in British Columbia and other parts of Canada.

Mr. Christian: Mr. Chairman, I would like first to agree with the hon. member for Kootenay West in relation to his attitude in respect of the matter of unemployment. I, too, feel that this is a problem which should be solved by all of us on a non-party basis. The hon. member for Kootenay West and I hail from the province of British Columbia which consists largely of mountains and valleys. As a result of this in many places in that province we suffer considerably from the problem of river erosion particularly during the heavy runoff of river waters in the spring of each year when a large amount of farmers' land disappears into the rivers causing the farmers a considerable loss. In my particular area there are two rivers, the Similkameen and the Kettle, which carry large quantities of water and do considerable damage especially in the spring of the year.

The farmers are extremely worried about losing so much of their fertile land.

I have in my hand a letter in the form of a resolution from the British Columbia farmers' institutes of Grand Forks, British Columbia, which reads as follows:

> Whereas erosion by rivers and streams continues to take a heavy toll each year of our best agricultural land, and whereas this loss is irreparable and is a net loss to the entire country, and whereas the British Columbia government has instituted a policy of investigation, survey and corrective measures whereby they would pay a maximum of 50 per cent of the cost of the required work, and whereas farmers and land owners whose land is being damaged cannot afford to pay more than a small fraction of the expense involved, therefore be it resolved that pressure be brought to bear immediately on the dominion government to work with the provincial authorities and assume up to 50 per cent of the cost involved in preventing further damage through erosion by said rivers and streams.

A number of months ago I personally obtained two petitions from farmers in the area who are of the opinion that the dominion and provincial governments should work out some equitable scheme for sharing the costs in order to prevent further damage by rivers.

One hon. gentleman who preceded the hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned that more was done in his constituency by the Conservative government than had been done by any other government but as far as my own constituency of Okanagan Boundary is concerned I am not in a position to say that because to my knowledge at the present time there is no works program or any substantial benefit that has been extended to that area.

Mr. MacInnis: I think you will find that he made reference to the maritimes and not to his own constituency.

Mr. Christian: Well, thank you very much; that may be the case. In any event I do not feel that preference should be shown to any particular constituency whatsoever. After all, we live in Canada and the work should be proportioned throughout the whole country as equitably as possible.

I wish to bring to the attention of the committee the matter of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I personally feel the act was not properly named and that it should be called the Canadian farm rehabilitation act and its provisions applied and extended throughout the entire nation. I recently examined section 4 of the act which reads:

> The advisory committees shall consider and advise the minister as to the best methods to be adopted to secure the rehabilitation of the drought and soil drifting areas in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and to develop and promote within these areas systems of farm practice, tree culture, water supply, land utilization and land settlement that will afford greater economic security, and to make such representations thereon to the minister as the advisory committees may deem expedient.

I fail to see why an act of such great importance should be limited in its application to three provinces. I observed not so long ago that the federal government intends to endeavour to assist the British Columbia fruit lands irrigation projects to the extent of some $200,000. As I understand it, this amount has already been earmarked by the federal government to assist this project which is located near the city of Kamloops in the province of British Columbia. The entire cost of the project will be $600,000. The provincial government is to assume one-third of the cost, or $200,000, and the balance is to be assumed by the local residents and I believe there has been a bond issue in that area. Veterans are affected by this project and the money contributed by the federal government is authorized pursuant to the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act. I am all in favour of helping the veterans in so far as this project is concerned.

I should also like to mention certain other projects throughout my own province of British Columbia. There are a number of irrigation districts in the province of British Columbia which are having a difficult time with their financing. Quite a number of them have barely enough money to meet the current expenses of the irrigation district, and when it comes to a question of various capital renewals, in so far as irrigation systems are concerned, they just have not the money to do it and they are in a very serious state. In some of these particular irrigation districts there are veterans who are actually on those properties. I personally do not think you can justify the expenditure of $200,000 by the federal government to help veterans—I am in favour of helping them—and yet not extend the same relief and benefit to other irrigation districts throughout the country. I personally know of a number of them in British Columbia. No doubt there is a large number of others throughout the Dominion of Canada, but I believe we should treat all those irrigation districts in the same way for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend's speech but the practice has not been in the past for speeches, which would normally be made on estimates, to be made on motions for interim supply. These motions in times past, as hon. members opposite will recall, have been dispatched very quickly. The whole purpose of any minister of finance in giving to the house the assurance that all rights of members of the house to discuss any item on the estimates will be preserved is just to assure to hon. members that they will have an opportunity later in the session, when the estimates of the departments are before the committee of supply, to make whatever speeches are relevant and pertinent to the estimates of the department. But, Mr. Chairman, what we are having here today is a discussion of estimates or the equivalent of a debate on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. This is a far departure from the practice of the house on motions for interim supply. It is utterly profitless for a minister of finance to give hon. members assurances that their rights to discuss any matter that is pertinent to any items of the estimates shall be preserved if we are to have a debate on these matters today and then a debate on the same matters when the estimates are before the house in committee of supply.

Now, we have had complaints today, a good many of them, about delay of items on the order paper. Mr. Chairman, with all respect, we are just going to be that much more delayed in reaching those items on the order paper, many important items, many pressing items, if we are to have two debates, one on the motion for interim supply and then again the same thing on the estimates of the various departments. I would urge, Mr. Chairman, that the time-honoured practice of the house should be observed on motions for interim supply.

I think I can recall only one occasion prior to this session where there was anything like a discussion on a motion for interim supply. Ministers of finance who have preceded me in every case have pressed and insisted, because of the preservation of the rights of members to bring their matters up on the estimates of the various departments, that there should not be extended debate on a motion for interim supply; nor should a wide variety of matters be introduced under the heading of grievance, or anything of that kind. Such a debate as is now proceeding, it seems to me with great respect, is not at all proper on a motion for interim supply.

Mr. Quelch: On the point of order, when the leader of this group spoke he pointed out that we were quite prepared to co-operate and let this motion go through with very little debate. But what has happened? Speaker after speaker from different parties has risen in his place and discussed the question of unemployment. If the minister considered it necessary to object, why did he not object when one member from his own party was speaking at some length on this particular question? This is only our second speaker. When the question of unemployment is discussed by member after member have we to sit in this corner and say nothing? If the minister wants to object, let him object at the proper time and not wait until a member from this group rises for the first time in the debate. He should have raised the objection right at the very start when the debate on unemployment started and when a member from his own party spoke on it at some length.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is quite obvious to most hon. members that when in a situation like that arising this morning, when we were told by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that several of his members wished to speak but briefly, any minister who is offering a motion for interim supply sits back and says, it may be they will be brief but, as happened this afternoon, we have just gone on with the speeches growing longer and longer. It is quite apparent, I am sure, to the hon. member for Acadia, being the reasonable man that he is, that we are now hearing a speech on irrigation. We have been everywhere today. We have had speeches on the recognition of the Chinese communist government and we have had some speeches on unemployment. We have departed far from the simple indication that we had from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he spoke very briefly this morning.

What is the situation? I have given to the hon. member who has been speaking the assurance that he will have full opportunity to make his speech on irrigation on the proper item in the estimates of the department that is concerned; but, Mr. Chairman, we are just going to have duplication of debate and hon. members will just be faced with the situation of which they are complaining, namely that they cannot reach some later item on the order paper. We will not be able to begin the discussion of the later item unless we have some regard for the practice and the true purpose of discussion in regard to motions for interim supply.

Mr. Christian: I will be glad to co-operate in this respect, as I always wish to do. However, I would say this. As I sat here I could see that some members were speaking about coal and others were speaking about unemployment, and I followed the practice of the day. I think I have a reasonable attitude, Mr. Chairman. However, I will cut my remarks as short as possible. The only point I was trying to make was that I felt that as between irrigation projects in Canada there should be no such thing as discrimination. There is a great need for the dominion and provincial governments to co-operate and help some of the unfortunate irrigation districts, particularly in the province of British Columbia. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, since the estimates of the Postmaster General will not be discussed I have a burning question. I will take only about three minutes. We have had a daily mail—

Mr. Fleming: May I tell my hon. friend that there are a couple of items of further supplementary estimates of the Post Office Department that have yet to come before the committee of supply.

Mr. McIvor: I could have been through by this time.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, mindful of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has said I will try to be as brief as possible. However I do wish to offer some remarks on the situation of the textile industry in this country, more particularly in my constituency, which includes the town of Drummondville where about 80 per cent of the people depend upon that particular industry for their living.

The government is well aware of the importance of this industry in the nation's economy. According to a report of the Primary Textile Institute 80,000 people are employed in this industry which ranks ahead of the iron and steel industry which employs 29,000 people and the pulp and paper industry which employs 62,000.

Besides the fact that its capital is 84 per cent Canadian, the textile industry also pays the highest wages in this country, averaging $1.20 an hour whereas in 1954, in Great Britain, the average hourly wage was 44 cents, as against 15 cents in Japan and 12 cents in India. The industry is further handicapped by competition resulting from British preferential tariffs.

At the present time, the Canadian textile industry supplies approximately 46 percent of the needs of the domestic market whereas last year the corresponding figure was 56 per cent. This 10 per cent decrease represents work which could have been carried out by our Canadian workers and, consequently, explains the present unemployment.

Comparing the present figures to last year's we find that the textile industry now employs 3,000 fewer people than it did then, which means 3,000 more unemployed. If we look at the situation in the Dominion Textile plant in Drummondville, we find that on November 2, 1957 there were 210 employees less than on November 3, 1956, a figure which must be considered in the light of the fact that that industry employs 1,000 people. There is unemployment therefore in Drummondville, as in every other community with a textile industry. That is why I felt that I should call the government's attention, this afternoon, to what, in my estimation, is a rather serious situation.

Two suggestions have been made in this connection by the Canadian association of textile manufacturers. To begin with there should obviously be a change in the definition of the word "dumping" which favours export of American products to Canada below cost price.

The Templon Spinning Mills Company, of Drummondville, sent a letter recently to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). Here is one paragraph from that letter:

(Text):

We suggest that an investigation of the declared price of American yarns being imported into this country be started. Templon Spinning Mills (Canada) Limited are prepared to provide your department with American orlon prices now in force in the United States, and we are sure that the rest of the Canadian synthetic spinners will be glad to supply similar information from their sources.

(Translation):

This clearly shows that the government must take action to correct the situation. If I felt justified in taking part in the debate this afternoon it is because I feel the matter to be urgent. I would have liked to speak at greater length but I will close now by asking the government to act as soon as possible.

(Text):

Mr. Barnett: Had it not been for the recent remarks of the Minister of Finance I might have been disposed to remain silent and not utter the thoughts that crossed my mind this morning when he was giving us this usual solemn assurance about reserving the right to the committee to full discussion of the estimates.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, on the estimates.

Mr. Barnett: However, having listened to his recent remarks I must remind him that at least two of his colleagues, namely the Prime Minister and the house leader, have been making very strong suggestions to us that they expected us to have completely dealt with the estimates prior to the Christmas recess. They have also been taking some steps to foreshorten the normal opportunities in this house to discuss some of the problems of the Canadian people under motions for supply. I feel, therefore, that perhaps it is not inappropriate that we should seize this occasion to raise such matters as have been raised by hon. members like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Having said that, I assure the Minister of Finance I am going to express what I have to say as briefly as possible.

My colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West, attempted to offer some constructive suggestion as to how the immediate unemployment situation that has developed in some areas of the country be handled. I have a matter which I might normally have raised as a matter of departmental policy on the estimates of the Department of Fisheries, but in view of the urgency of the unemployment situation as described by my colleague the member for Vancouver-Kingsway I feel it can very appropriately be related to the remarks that were made by him, by the hon. member for Kootenay West and others. On two recent occasions I have made some mention in the house of the fact that on Vancouver island and in other parts of British Columbia there are more than the usual number of unemployed loggers as well as a large number of qualified construction workers who are now without jobs and seeking work. For that reason I should like to mention this as part of the national development policy about which the party to which the Minister of Finance belongs have been having quite a bit to say.

The Minister of Finance may or may not know that along the coastal area of British Columbia we have several hundred streams which are used by our Pacific salmon for spawning purposes. Some of these streams are in the more rugged and undeveloped parts of the Pacific coast. One of the facts that has often been brought out in reports by the federal Department of Fisheries is that, as a result of these streams being in undeveloped areas, nature continues to take its course so far as the facilities of the salmon for spawning are concerned. I have discussed on former estimates of the Department of Fisheries the reports that have been made that flash floods cause a loss of a good deal of the potential future salmon runs. In view of the unemployment situation amongst loggers and construction workers, now would be a very good time to undertake on a much larger scale than has heretofore been undertaken the development and improvement of our salmon spawning streams along the Pacific coast. This is the type of work for which the unemployed loggers and unemployed construction workers would be particularly suited. Much of this work could be done at low levels where there would not be any great difficulty in carrying on work during the winter, even though it might not be the most pleasant time of the year to do it.

The whole question of carrying on a development program which would have the effect of decreasing the damage caused salmon streams as a result of logging activity when it is going at full blast is something that could be considered in a program of this kind.

As I said to the minister, Mr. Chairman, I intend to be as brief as I can in stating this point. But I do feel, in view of the unemployment situation which has been brought to the attention of the government and which probably will be brought to their attention to an increasing extent as the days go by unless something is done, that this is a practical sort of suggestion which could very well be carried out at this time. It is not the sort of thing which, as the hon. member for Kootenay West said, need divide us on partisan political lines but something which, as far as I can see, is a genuine suggestion to meet the immediate situation and provide employment opportunities to some of the people of British Columbia who at the present time have not got those opportunities.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I notified the Minister of Finance that I wanted to discuss the earlier vesting of pension rights. It would take me about ten minutes to do so but I am willing to co-operate with his request in order that the work of the house may progress. I think I can deal with the matter later under his estimates.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate the attitude of the Minister of Finance. Being here under the conditions I am and having regard to the position I occupied previous to coming here I suppose I should be one of the last to break either the rules of the house or its precedents. I do not intend to do that. So far as interim supply is concerned, I am quite willing to let the minister go ahead. Let us get on with the job, but there is one thing I should like to point out to him. I must protest the action he takes when he brings an interim supply motion before the house and does not give all members a list of what he proposes to do. He may say, of course, that he has not had time to prepare a list but I noted that he provided one for the leaders of each group and I suppose for each member of the cabinet. If that is possible, I suggest to him it is equally possible to mimeograph it and let all members have it.

After all we are not mind readers and when it comes to relating one-twelfth of an item that is in the blue book, plus the supplementary estimates, I put it to him that it requires quite a feat of mental acrobatics in order to be able to relate the one to the other. When he gets down into cents and tells us that one amount is one-twelfth of another amount of money it would be helpful if we could compare the two and make sure he is correct because, after all, we are policemen so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned and we want to carry out our duties. I suggest to him that when he brings interim supply before the house in the future, as he probably will do, that he take steps to have all members provided with a list of the things that he proposes to do so that we will at least know what we are talking about.

(Translation):

Mr. Begin: Mr. Chairman, I feel I should take this opportunity provided by the motion for interim supply, representing one-twelfth of the total estimates of those departments which have not as yet been adopted, to bring to the attention of the house the acute unemployment situation in the city of Quebec and, more particularly, in the constituency of Quebec West.

If unemployment is now on the increase, it is due primarily to the Canadian people's lack of confidence in the present government. Another cause is the fact that the government has no definite policy but prefers to drift along and to attempt to take advantage of opportunities most likely to strike the voters' fancy.

(Text):

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, again I must rise and appeal to my hon. friend and to the house. My hon. friend has indicated he is going to make a speech relating to a matter that can properly be raised on the estimates. Again I respectfully remind him that I have given to the house the assurance that these estimates will be open for discussion. The ministers of the various departments will be before the committee of supply with their estimates throughout the session and any speech that is relevant to any item of the estimates can be made. But, Mr. Speaker, we are just going to have duplication of debate if we are going to go on as we are today—just duplication.

(Translation):

Mr. Begin: Mr. Chairman, I have listened fairly regularly to the speeches which have been made since the beginning of this debate on interim supply. As members have spoken on just about everything, I do not see why I would be discriminated against and prevented from making a few remarks on the subject of unemployment.

At one time the western farmers could not sell their wheat so the house voted an amount of $150 million for cash advances. But what does the government propose to do about our unemployed? Is it planning to set up 20 cents a day camps again, as under the Bennett administration? What amount is the government planning to spend during the next four or five months? The government should not concentrate all its attention on the next election, but should be providing for women and children who will suffer from cold and hunger this winter.

The people in my constituency have done their share; when our country was threatened, they agreed to all the sacrifices called for by the authorities. Today the workers' families are facing the threat of unemployment, and it is our duty to help them in their hour of need. When our country was threatened, all our resources and all our wealth were drawn upon. Well, for goodness sake, let us do something for the worker's family!

In Quebec city, there are considerable and urgent works to be done, but unfortunately, the municipality cannot afford to undertake them. However, since there is very serious unemployment there, the federal government not only can but must carry them out as soon as possible.

There is first the cleaning up of the Lairet river and the dredging of the St. Charles river, two projects which were mentioned more than once in this house. The shores of the St. Charles river could be finished with ornamental stone in some attractive way, as was done in many other cities. This river runs through Quebec city and such works would greatly help beautify the city and would also help solve the unemployment problem.

May I also point out that the building of a post office would provide jobs for large numbers of workers. The government should urge the Canadian National authorities to settle this problem once and for all and then call for tenders at once.

It might be advisable to take again under consideration the proposal that old age pensions be payable at age 65 instead of 70. Workers forced to retire at 65, as happens in most cases, would thus have some means of support even if they were unable to lay anything aside while they held jobs. We all know that at the present time it is just about impossible for this class of people to find jobs. The old age pension should therefore be made universally payable at 65.

Also located in my constituency is the Savory Park hospital, in the municipality of Quebec West. Well, that institution even lacks an auditorium where patients could be entertained. There again, the works could be carried out during the winter. Among the patients are Hungarians and Eskimos, and it seems to me that we should provide them with recreational facilities which could not fail to relieve some of the bitterness they certainly feel in their heart not only as patients but as expatriates. Moreover, the northeastern side of the hospital is only a few feet away from houses which the department of national health and welfare should expropriate so as to give the patients something better to look at, namely the city of Quebec.

In closing, I make a very special invitation to members of parliament to visit Quebec city during the winter carnival. This would be another way of helping solve the unemployment problem in Quebec. I should first mention that Quebec city is the centre of a magnificent winter carnival. So, it would be a great pleasure for me if all members of the house made it a point to visit our beautiful city and take part in the merry-making of the winter carnival.

(Text):

Mr. Castleden: I only wish to take a few moments of the time of the house to discuss a matter of urgency in the particular area of Canada from which I come, namely the prairie provinces. This really is a matter of urgency. We have heard a considerable amount of reference this afternoon to the subject of unemployment from members from all parts of Canada. It is a good thing for Canada, I think, that we are hearing these stories. It seems that the procedure of parliament is a little better than it was a year ago when we did not hear so much about conditions in the maritimes, particularly on the coast.

Of course we have been hearing stories of the emergency situation in the prairie provinces for a good many years. I cannot say that people in the prairie region are unemployed; they are busy and they have been busy. They have produced some tremendous crops; the only trouble with us is that while the men have been working, they have received no pay. Perhaps one of the causes has been the heavy crops and that Canada is not delivering its grain and has not been able to sell sufficient of its farm produce. The government is not getting rid of the grain, and as a result there is a backlog in the storage of grain in Canada today which is the greatest in the history of this country. The records will show that there is overstorage in the elevators, at the terminals and in the interior of the country; in almost every place in the prairies we have storage elevators filled to capacity.

The farmer in the past few years has not been able to deliver sufficient grain to pay his operating expenses; I would say not even 60 per cent of his operating expenses. Over the past four years we have been urging the government to undertake a job of building storage facilities in Canada which will take care of the grain left on the farm, grain which under the present conditions is spoiling, but the government has not seen fit to undertake such a program.

I would suggest to the government this afternoon that they could well undertake such a program of grain storage which would benefit a large number of people. However, first of all it would benefit the farmers who are unable to deliver their grain. At the present time the farmer is forced to try and make storage available, but in many cases he is unable to afford to do so. As anyone who has travelled across the prairies during the fall in the past few years will have noticed, there are piles of grain stacked in millions of bushels because there is not sufficient storage space for it. Grain piled in the open on the prairies or put into open bins because the farmer is already loaded to capacity cannot be left in such a way without a certain percentage of spoilage. The farmers' own bins are inadequate and there is a lot of spoilage due to the moisture leaking in at the sides.

This is a criminal waste in the first place, especially in a world where there are two billion people going hungry and it is a waste which should not be allowed to occur. Under the present circumstances the farmer has to take the loss in the form of spoiled grain which he cannot use and which is probably thrown away. He may be able to use a certain portion of it for feed but I am sure I am safe in saying there are millions of bushels each year wasted on the western prairies because of the lack of storage.

The providing of these facilities would do a lot of good; it would provide work for the unemployed and it would provide a use for our lumber. It would be a good thing for Canada generally because the figures show that as a result of improved efficiency more and more grain could be produced. Our average production over the years is increasing but there is a decline in the quantity which the country is able to sell.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce in reply to questions this afternoon indicated that the government has no program for disposal of surplus agricultural products to undeveloped countries where the people need it most. This is because these countries have no dollars with which to buy this food. Well I suggest to this government that the country should have a surplus agricultural disposal policy which makes it possible to get rid of our surplus agricultural products.

If we in the democracies wish to show that we have something better than guns to offer to the world it would be a good thing for this country to formulate such a policy and undertake a program of such disposal to these countries. Give it to them. Today the farmer is losing it anyway; a lot of it is just wasted. It would be much better to give it away than to leave it where it is.

The government could undertake a program of giving to these countries which have no Canadian dollars the food they need to prevent them from suffering the starvation which faces them every day. We would, after all, be giving to those who need it a commodity of which Canada has so much. Aside from the humanitarian aspects of the situation, at least it would be better than letting it spoil.

On the other hand, if we had at least another 200 billion bushels' storage space in this country it could be used to capacity, and this would certainly relieve the situation as far as the farmer is concerned. The farmer is now forced to bear the brunt. As I say, he is employed all right but he gets no pay for his trouble. If he can sell another 300 million bushels this fall that would also relieve the situation considerably.

These farmers are in desperate straits with about 80 per cent of them hanging on the ropes and about 10 per cent having given up and left the farm. I urge this government to look deeply into this matter and they may find they can solve a number of problems. First of all they could provide some employment; secondly they could ease an industry which today is in desperate circumstances. I could tell stories of farmers who are trying to operate their farms, but because they have not been allowed to deliver their grain they have no money with which to pay their taxes. This has meant that the farmer has left the farm in the winter, leaving his wife and probably a couple of little children and the wife has had to feed the cattle and take care of the home while he goes to the bush or out to Kitimat to try to earn some money to keep the family going. He comes back in the spring and again puts in his crop in the hope that he will be able to hang on and deliver his grain and make a living out of the agricultural industry.

Surely it is not wrong that a farmer should be growing grain when the world is hungry. Surely Canada can play its part in seeing that these grain crops go to the hungry people of the world. The government knows that the present program of the Colombo plan is not enough. Other countries can get their surplus agricultural products out to the world; Canada should adopt a policy whereby she could take at least a portion of these surpluses and feed these people. Surely the government should be willing to undertake part of such an expenditure. I maintain it would be good defence for Canada to earn friends among the underprivileged nations of the world. We can waste billions of dollars on defence, upon armaments which are obsolete when delivered. Surely a portion of that money could be directed into the agricultural field to introduce a disposal program of our agricultural surplus products, and help to do away with the injustice which exists today in agricultural policies, and provide Canada with a food bank which may be useful in the years to come.

The former government made the mistake of constantly telling the house that everything was all right, that this was merely a temporary condition. I pointed out to the then minister of trade and commerce on more than one occasion that because of the conditions existing in the world today and because of the difficulties of our foreign markets the farmer was in a position where he was less and less able to deliver the grain he grows; and today grain deliveries are gradually resolving themselves into a mere trickle. I can show the committee farmers in the west who have to store grain grown three years ago. Today the grade is down because of the long period of storage. Who is taking that loss? Feed companies go around and offer farmers 60 cents a bushel for No. 3 wheat so they can make feed out of it within the province where the transaction does not come under the wheat board act. Again, the farmer is taking the loss. I do not know any other industry in which the cost-price squeeze has closed out the little fellow to the extent it has done in agriculture. What I have been suggesting is one way of making it possible for these people to carry on in the great work we are doing, the constructive and necessary work of growing food for a hungry world.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I think we have something like 20 items of legislation already slated to be passed during the current session, and I believe a suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Rosthern which the government should consider very carefully, that is, referring the estimates of some of the departments to various committees for consideration. One obvious example which comes to my mind is the setting up of an estimates committee to which the estimates of certain departments might be referred. I think the estimates of the Department of Agriculture could be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. I firmly believe that if the government were prepared to adopt this suggestion it would first of all enable a more thorough scrutiny by the members of this house and, secondly, it would facilitate the dispatch of business in this house.

I think I can say for the members of this group who have taken an interest in agriculture over the years that if our members on the agricultural committee had an opportunity of going over the estimates of the Department of Agriculture that would very materially shorten the length of time taken in this house in discussing the estimates of that department. I think the members of this house in the opposition parties are prepared to facilitate the business of the house.

It would seem to me that the attitude of the government is to pile more and more legislation upon us without giving us an opportunity to deal with the legislation. It is doing that by listing the estimates as a major part of the work in any week. This would seem to me to be the manoeuvre which the government itself is adopting; one which is making it very difficult, if not impossible, for members to deal adequately with all the measures and with all the estimates that are being placed before this house. I suggest to the government that if they are sincere in wanting the legislation which they have now placed on the order paper passed at an early date they should refer the estimates of some of the departments to various committees of the house. By so doing they would facilitate the business of the house, the passage of the estimates and the passage of the important legislation that has been placed before us.

Mr. Churchill: How do we get interim supply through?

Mr. Argue: I am going to deal with the hon. minister later on. He might save his interjections until then.

Mr. Churchill: I will have some more then. How do we get interim supply?

Mr. Argue: I think the attitude of the government is confirming, as the days go on, some of the things one hears around this building from members of the press and hon. members in all parties, namely that the government does not intend to bring in a budget before the next election, and that it is following a very deliberate policy of making certain that it shall not present a balance sheet to the people of this country. We know that the government is committed to heavy additional expenditure. We hear it suggested that there may be certain reductions in taxation, and the government has, in fact, promised that these reductions will be made. So there is a growing feeling that the government, if it did present the budget, could do nothing but come up with a very substantial deficit. But rather than face the need to bring a strict accounting of government expenditures before this house and the people of Canada by way of presenting a balance sheet, this government is taking a roundabout method of piling legislation before us and listing departmental estimates as the order of business for a large part of the time with the possibility in mind that when we get some weeks further on and, perhaps, the national convention of the Liberal party is out of the way, by their own manoeuvre they will be able to say: there is a lot of legislation which is not passed, legislation we have not been able to get passed; there are a lot of estimates which are not through, estimates we have been wanting to get through; we are being obstructed; now is the time to call an election, a winter election.

As far as I am concerned the people of this country feel it is the duty of the government and of parliament to deal with the legislation and to pass it, and I believe it is the government, and not anybody in the opposition which is attempting to delay the passage of legislation and the passage of the estimates.

Mr. Churchill: We have some legislation before you right now. Sit down, and let us get on with it.

Mr. Argue: I suggest it would be better if the government adopted some of the things they suggested while in opposition with regard to sending these matters to committees for full discussion. It would expedite the business of the house and allay this growing belief that the government is jockeying itself into a position where it can, by way of a phony excuse, pull the plug and have an early election. It seems to me that the government, the members of the cabinet and the government supporters who go out and make speeches in the country have one common theme, and that is the imminence of a general election.

Mr. Churchill: Would you like one?

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has been interrupting and he seems much more anxious to place comments on the record when someone else has the floor than when he is questioned in the house. I think the government would gain support among agricultural producers in this country if it brought in its own legislation to provide price supports.

Mr. Lambert: Well, let us get to it.

Mr. Argue: We have been campaigning since the government announced its legislation on October 31 to have this particular legislation called early so it could be dealt with by the house. I am informed now that in the interim period an emergency meeting has been called by the board of the Canadian Confederation of Agriculture which will be held on Thursday and Friday of this week. It is my belief that the government had no intention whatever of showing this bill to the people of this country at this time whether or not we had dealt with the resolution.

I directed a question to the Minister of Finance yesterday as to news reports to the effect that the cabinet in the United States had asked that a further $1½ billion vote be given by congress to carry on and extend the United States surplus disposal program and the Minister of Finance referred that question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce for an answer. We received from the latter gentleman what I thought was a very off the cuff answer, one that had not been particularly well thought out, when he said he did not see any danger in this further appropriation because he did not feel it was interfering with Canadian markets.

Mr. Churchill: I did not say that.

Mr. Argue: You can check the record and confirm it.

Mr. Churchill: I said it constituted no danger with regard to the assurances they gave us concerning it.

Mr. Argue: All right, it constitutes no danger in the light of the assurances they gave you. I think from recent events that the chance remark by a high official in the United States that hit the press, "We fixed them", is becoming more and more significant because these news reports—the minister can correct them if they are wrong—say that this money will be appropriated for the purpose of selling, bartering or giving away additional produce. I therefore raise the question, has the government an assurance that this proposal that is being placed before congress does not provide money for a continuation of the United States barter program? The news item to which I referred appeared in the Globe and Mail on November 18. I have another one saying much the same thing taken from the Manitoba Co-operator of November 28. That report reads:

> Mr. Benson also said he would ask that at least an additional $1 billion of surplus farm commodities be shipped abroad to be sold, bartered or given away.

The United States proposal to congress is definitely for an expansion in the United States surplus disposal program and that program will mean an increase in the shipments of United States agricultural products to many countries in the world. I ask this government what its policy is for Canada to ensure that Canadian producers will enjoy their fair share of the world market in food. In many of its policies the United States is doing laudable things. Unlike this government the government of that country has adopted the position that surplus food in the United States should be made available to feed the people of the world but this government apparently is content to allow the grain to continue piling up. It has not announced any new policy that will mean a larger expansion in the sale of Canadian agricultural products. The government has turned its back on the many suggestions that have already been made to expand the sale of Canadian agricultural products and improve the income of agricultural producers. As a matter of fact, the record of this government to date as far as the Canadian agricultural producer is concerned is a tragic one. Until this time in this session the agricultural producer has been forgotten and despite the fact that members of this government were loud in their statements that they had policies to deal with falling farm income we have not yet heard what those policies are.

Mr. Dupuis: Promises for the next election.

Mr. Argue: As the days go on the farm organizations in this country are expressing more frequently their concern that the government is in fact floundering and has not a policy to deal with this situation. I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce this morning whether he had made the statement reported in the Regina Leader-Post which I quoted from memory to the effect that the government did not believe that the wheat producers of this country should be subsidized.

Mr. Churchill: I never said that. You can keep on quoting it but that will not prove I said it. You can quote it all over the country if you wish.

Mr. Argue: I have not quoted it yet so just contain yourself until I get around to quoting.

Mr. Churchill: I tell you I did not say that.

Mr. Argue: The minister says he did not say that.

Mr. Churchill: No, I did not say it but I know you will keep repeating it and attempt to make people believe I did.

Mr. Argue: Very well, I will quote it.

Mr. Churchill: All right, quote it right across the country; yes.

Mr. Argue: There have been many comments made by the minister which he would like to withdraw. During this session we have already seen the minister rise on more than one occasion to amend things which he said. In fact, I think he did so today in reference to the list of the personnel who were in his own trade delegation. Interestingly enough, he corrected it only after it had been brought to his attention; he did not discover it himself. The minister made an extremely ridiculous statement in a speech in the month of September and I am not going to attempt to quote it to him at this time.

Mr. Churchill: Why not? Keep on with your unfair statements.

Mr. Argue: The minister made a ridiculous statement in suggesting that the acreage in wheat should be reduced in the long-term policy and livestock production increased—

Mr. Churchill: Nonsense.

Mr. Argue: —and I do not think that any member of the cabinet since the government was elected has burnt his fingers on any statement like the Minister of Trade and Commerce did with regard to that statement because it is something that has been quoted and referred to in editorial comment in the main farm papers of the nation. There is not a farm organization of which I am aware that agrees with the statement the Minister of Trade and Commerce made.

Mr. Churchill: Except that there are resolutions passed by the interprovincial farm union council along the same lines.

Mr. Argue: I do not think so. I do not think any farm organization suggests there should be a further reduction in the acreage of wheat. There has been a substantial reduction in wheat acreage in the last three years and the Minister of Trade and Commerce has suggested that there should be an increased production of livestock, looking to the future.

Mr. Churchill: You bet. There will be a population of 40 million in Canada some day.

Mr. Argue: The minister says he did not make the statement that is reported in the Leader-Post but I will quote it anyway.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, quote it.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: Yes, I will put it on the record. This statement was taken from the Regina Leader-Post of November 15, 1957 at page 3. The headline reads:

No Need for Wheat Subsidies to Growers

The body of the article reads:

Government subsidies for Canadian wheat growers are not needed at present is the opinion of trade and commerce minister Gordon Churchill.

Interviewed Friday by the Leader-Post in Hotel Saskatchewan where he later spoke to delegates to the Saskatchewan wheat pool annual meeting he said:—

The following is in quotation marks:

"We haven't yet reached the stage where we have to subsidize the wheat grower."

And further on:

Subsidizing Canadian wheat growers at present would only, in the long run, aggravate world trade conditions.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Assiniboia has made the statement in this committee to the effect that I said something which he has read from a newspaper. I have already said that I did not make that statement. The normal custom of this house, I submit, is to accept the statement of a member; in fact, the rules bear it out but my hon. friend apparently is not acquainted with that fact.

Mr. Argue: I will accept any statement or any correction.

Mr. Benidickson:. On the point of order, in this debate I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce can speak for 30 minutes as often as he wishes in reply to the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Fleming: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Argue: I think the minister should contain himself until I have completed quoting from this statement. If he wishes to rise afterwards and say that the Regina Leader-Post reporter who took this statement, apparently in an interview, so it says, in the Hotel Saskatchewan some time before the minister addressed the annual wheat pool convention, misquoted him, of course it is his right so to do and I shall accept any further interpretation or any change or any denial he makes with respect to this statement; but I would like the right—which I think is my privilege—to go on and finish quoting from this article.

Mr. Churchill: I am glad you are accepting the explanation, though.

Mr. Argue: I quote:

He believes Canada has a good chance to recover the proportion of sales of wheat on world markets which she lost recently, that sales will remain at the average over the past and that prices will be maintained.

Subsidizing Canadian wheat growers at present would only, in the long run, aggravate world trade conditions.

If the minister does not think that subsidizing wheat at this time would further aggravate world trade conditions, according to the report of the interview he gave, he should say so. If the minister has not said that the farmers should not be subsidized, then he should stand up and say that the farmers should be subsidized, that it is the policy of the government to provide deficiency payments, because he cannot have it both ways. But I can tell him that the annual wheat pool convention to which he spoke was anything but satisfied with the presentation given to them by the minister, and they are anything but satisfied with the record of his own department and the record of the government in this field. I say that because I am informed, and I believe reliably informed, that not too long after the minister had made his speech and had left the annual meeting a very important resolution was passed. Again I am informed from what I believe are reliable quarters that the resolution passed without a dissenting voice and without a dissenting vote. The resolution said that the Saskatchewan wheat pool organization should organize, unless there is an immediate change in government policy a mass delegation of people from Saskatchewan to Ottawa to interview the government and try to get it to change the disastrous course it is now following. The minister can rise in his place and he can contradict this statement and he can defend his position, if he can, but the fact is that in the present crop year as compared with the period in the crop year one year ago, about which his party complained so much, combined exports of all grains are down; prices are softening and the farmer's cost of production is going up.

The point is that the Saskatchewan wheat pool, a responsible organization, and one of the most important farm organizations in Canada and a very important part of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, was so displeased with the government's record in this field that they are considering the organization of a mass delegation to come to Ottawa. I believe the last time the Saskatchewan wheat pool organized a mass delegation was in 1942, when a delegation of some 400 farmers and businessmen came from the prairies to interview the government of the day to protest conditions at that time. The cycle is now apparently about complete. Unless this government changes its policy which today threatens the very existence of the agricultural industry in all parts of Canada, unless it does something to stabilize prices, as far as the agricultural industry is concerned, farmers are so dissatisfied that they are prepared to take the kind of action to which I have referred.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, may I correct one of the inaccuracies in the hon. member's speech which was filled with inaccuracies. I hold in my hand the dominion bureau of statistics report, dated November 6, 1957, which shows Canada's exports of wheat for the month of September, compared with the month of September last year. The figures show that for the month of September this year the export of wheat exceeded the export of wheat last year and the hon. member would find that the same thing is true for the month of August.

Mr. Argue: To show that I was not inaccurate, Mr. Chairman, and the minister was not correcting any inaccuracies, I did not mention any two months. I said that in the current crop year to date the exports of all grains from this country is less than it was in the same period a year ago, about which the members of the opposition at that time complained so bitterly. I repeat that statement, and it is true. I have the last figures here to prove it. They are taken from the board of grain commissioners for Canada statistics, annual Canadian grain position, close of business, Wednesday, November 20, 1957. Let us take wheat. To date, from August 1 to November 20, exports were 78½ million bushels. A year ago exports were 85.9 million bushels. There is a drop of some 7 million bushels. Therefore, wheat exports have worsened by 7 million bushels.

We now come to oats. This is the commodity that the government is proud of. It says the exports are increasing. It is a great record, so the minister said to me on a previous occasion. A year ago the exports in that period were .2 million bushels. This year they were 1.2 million bushels. Therefore, there is a marvellous increase of 1 million bushels.

Mr. Benidickson: Not dollarwise.

Mr. Argue: No; oats, of course, is a cheap commodity so far as grain is concerned. In barley the exports a year ago were 22 million bushels in that period, and under the aggressive sales policy of the minister, under the policy that the government is now following to correct the position of the agricultural producers of this country, exports of barley have fallen from 22 million bushels to 7 million bushels. I could go on and give the exact figures for rye and flaxseed but the total for all grains from August 1 to November 20 a year ago were 112 million bushels. The exports of all of these grains for the same period this year have fallen to 90½ million bushels, or a drop of almost 22 million bushels in that period. Thus the government's export record is a dismal failure. Agricultural producers are finding that their income is falling.

The hon. member for Kindersley has also placed on the record figures to show that marketings in this year to date are just over half of farm marketings on the average for a 10-year period. I suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, rather than claiming inaccuracies in the statements that do not exist, would be making far better use of his time if he gave his talents to bringing forward a policy in his department which would expand Canadian exports and increase the income of agricultural producers and, above all, correct the very serious price-cost squeeze that today is bankrupting tens of thousands of farmers.

Mr. Churchill: Canada's exports of wheat are increasing, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Fleming: We have witnessed today, I think, an extraordinary exhibition. A motion for interim supply, as hon. members who have sat in previous parliaments well know, has almost invariably been dispatched in a matter of about 15 minutes. In the 12½ years I have been in this house I recall only one occasion where any discussion arose on a motion for interim supply, that is until this new parliament was elected and met in October. The position taken by my predecessors, three of them, who sat here in that time, has always been that the purpose of a motion for interim supply was simply to give the government the means necessary for carrying on for a limited period, usually one month. So far as discussion is concerned, the rights of all hon. members to say whatever may be pertinent or relevant under the rules of the house about any item are carefully preserved in the undertaking that the Minister of Finance always gives to the house. This is the assurance the house has that there will be no trespassing upon or diminution of the rights of the house to discussion.

It is for this reason also, Mr. Chairman, that ministers of finance have said that matters such as would be in order on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply or would be in order in the consideration of the items of the estimates in committee of supply ought not to be discussed on a motion for interim supply. What did we witness today? The hon. member for Coast-Capilano, the financial critic of the official opposition, spoke and indicated that the official opposition would support the motion and would not extend the discussion. Then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, speaking as it appeared for the C.C.F. group in the house, said that his group was supporting the motion because they realized the government must have something with which to meet expenses. He was extraordinarily brief and said, as he sat down, that there were three members of his group who would speak very briefly on individual matters.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): He said no number at all; I was here.

Mr. Fleming: I heard him say something which sounded in my ear like a number.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): He said a number of members.

Mr. Fleming: My right hon. friend opposite says he said four. I thought he said three. However, we shall have an opportunity of comparing that with the number who actually spoke later. In any event, the hon. member said they were going to speak very briefly on individual matters. Then, the hon. member for Peace River, speaking for his group, indicated that they would support the motion for interim supply. He spoke very briefly. From that time forward, Mr. Chairman, I believe we have now listened to debate for four hours. We have run the whole gamut of items of discussion from irrigation to the recognition of the communist government of China.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are all proper matters of discussion in the Canadian parliament, but there is a time and there is a place. Hon. members have chosen, in the face of an appeal to them, because of the business that is waiting to be done today, to ignore my appeal and to continue. For the last hour, Mr. Chairman, we have heard two members of the C.C.F., who happened to be the seventh and eighth C.C.F. members to speak today, making speeches which, however relevant to proper items of estimates when we go into committee of supply, in my respectful submission were a complete violation of the practices of this house in relation to a motion for interim supply. If my hon. friends of the C.C.F. wish to debate at length a motion for interim supply, it just makes meaningless the assurance the minister of finance always gives that their rights are reserved in this respect for the proper occasion.

But, sir, it does not end there. If hon. members choose, nevertheless, to go on and to make the same speeches on the motion for interim supply that we have heard them make times without number and that we know they will make on the estimates of agriculture; that we know they will make on the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce; and that we know they are going to make on any motion to resolve the house into committee of supply, then we might as well face up to the fact that this house is going to be compelled to remain in session for a long time and give up any thought at all of moving forward with the dispatch of urgent business.

We heard from the hon. member for Assiniboia this afternoon a long harangue about proceeding with a measure on the order paper standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture concerning guaranteed prices for farm products. We heard others today pleading for a chance to get on with that measure. The hon. member for Assiniboia was not satisfied to make a statement of that kind. He went so far as to say, without the slightest justification and while creating a mere figment of his own imagination, that the government did not want this measure to come forward. Who is it who is holding back that measure? I ask you that on the strength of what we have witnessed here today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: Since October 31.

Mr. Fleming: The government measures that the government wished to bring before the house today and yesterday were announced. It was the hope of the government that we would dispatch these other items in the customary way and we would deal with the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture long before this. The Minister of Agriculture has been in and out of the house all day trying to ascertain how we were getting on with the business and when he would get on with his resolution.

Mr. Harkness: My notes are getting dog-eared from carrying them around.

Mr. Fleming: Then, we had these C.C.F. members standing up and making a completely empty and fictional assertion that the government does not want to bring this measure forward. We are doing everything in our power to bring it on, and to bring it on today. These same members, by going on abusing the rights of the house and trespassing on the rights of other members, are doing everything that they can to delay the house in approaching that measure and dealing with it today.

It is time that the facts in this regard were stated.

Mr. Lesage: Just wait for a few moments and I will give you a few examples of your speeches on interim supply.

Mr. Fleming: I did recall one occasion—

Mr. Lesage: I have the references here, two this year.

Mr. Fleming: This year?

Mr. Lesage: This year, two occasions.

Mr. Fleming: My hon. friend will find nothing to compare with what has occurred here today—

Mr. Lesage: I will give you the number of pages in Hansard immediately.

Mr. Fleming:—or what happened on the occasion of the last motion for interim supply about five weeks ago. There has been nothing like it.

There has to be a choice made in this matter, Mr. Chairman. If the house wishes to go on with this kind of debate on interim supply and later on, on the estimates as well, then the leader of the house in planning the business of the house will have to take account of that fact and be guided accordingly. There is no use in hon. members complaining that they are not getting on with later matters on the order paper today if they are going to spend endless time in talking the way they have talked here today. All of these matters on the order paper are urgent. The hon. member for Rosthern today complained about some items being taken before others. I appeal to the house in the name of the sound dispatch of public business to get on with all these measures. They are urgent in the eyes of everyone. I am sure no one can deny the urgency of any of these matters on the order paper today.

There are a couple of things, sir, that have been said here today about which I wish to say a word by way of answer, and answer only. First of all, we heard the hon. member for Westmorland asserting that the Prime Minister had this morning, in reply to a question, treated the claim for increase of pensions of former government railway employees as a matter of no importance. The Prime Minister, Mr. Chairman, said no such thing today and it is not his opinion and any who have followed the discussions in the house in times past and recall what the Prime Minister has said on this subject will well know that there was no truth in that assertion.

What the Prime Minister said today was that unless less time is taken on the orders of the day with questions of little or no importance there just is not going to be time at a session like this to deal with matters that are of serious moment. He did not make any comment on that particular subject or its intrinsic merits. In speaking about important questions or unimportant questions, he was drawing attention to the fact that unless members are going to be prepared to exercise some forbearance we are not going to be able to proceed with the dispatch of the urgent business on the order paper as the government is asking the house to do.

I was asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, why it was that copies of the present resolution had not been circulated to hon. members. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that this session something has been done which has not been done before, that is to say, a précis of the amounts, items and fractions which are involved in the resolution has been placed in the hands of all parties in the house. There is nothing secret about any of this. The only question is as to the items and the fractions. The amounts are simply worked out on that fractional calculation and it never has been the practice to circulate copies of a resolution on interim supply in this house. Members are being given more information this session in this respect than they have ever been given before. In the time-honoured practice of the house on matters of interim supply, as long as the leaders of the parties are satisfied the vote has gone through without interminable discussion.

I was asked today about the intentions of the government with respect to the items that are to appear before the house in committee of supply in due course. Reference was made to what has happened already on the estimates of the two departments that have been before the house in committee of supply. Here let me very briefly draw attention to precisely what happened. On November 20, when the estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State were before the house the Secretary of State, when asked whether the house was to be asked to vote in full the amounts of the estimates of her department, said, as found at page 1340 of Hansard:

> —having regard to the commitments which have already been undertaken by the department, I think that in so far as my own department is concerned it would be advisable to ask for the votes as they stand and then effect what economies we can rather than try to cut regardless of the requirements of the department and then be forced to ask for some of that cut-back in supplementary estimates at a later date.

Let it be remembered that all the items involving salaries in that department have been increased by reason of the general increase in salaries in the civil service and even with that the Secretary of State is pointing out that she is managing to finance on the estimates without making special provision for additional supplementaries.

When my colleague, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, brought his estimates before the house on November 21 he prefaced his statement on that occasion by referring directly to the matter of reductions in the items in his department, and he said, as recorded at page 1380 of Hansard:

> Since the date of my appointment as minister of this department I have carefully examined these estimates, together with my officers, and as a result it has been found possible to divert approximately $500,000 to other requirements which were not foreseen at the time these estimates were prepared. Specifically, about $250,000 was used to help defray the cost of the general salaries revision of May 1, 1957, and a smaller amount was used to assist in settling accounts resulting from the grounding of the C.G.S. Baffin in July, 1957. Hon. members will appreciate that had this action not been taken it would have been necessary to request additional funds by way of supplementary estimates in order to cover these items.

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the ministers have been dealing with this matter of effecting reductions in the estimates of their departments where that can be done without sacrificing any essential service and the house has been acquainted with the results. That practice will be followed as the estimates of succeeding departments are considered by the house in committee of supply.

There is one matter that was raised by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet today and was also touched on by two other members. It was the position of the textile industry. I am not going to say anything more than is strictly required in reply to what was said by these hon. members. The textile industry has been faced with difficult conditions in recent years. This matter is raised by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet today as though he had made a new discovery.

Mr. Lesage: It is the first time that the mill at Montmagny has closed down for lack of work.

Mr. Fleming: I can tell my hon. friend—

Mr. Lesage: Under a Tory regime.

Mr. Fleming: —that the matter has been a subject of very keen concern to those of us who are now sitting on this side of the house for a long time, and while one will have the greatest concern about the closing of any mill I am glad to see that some hon. members opposite have now discovered for the first time that there is this problem in the textile industry. I can well remember when I was on the other side of the house raising this question time after time after time and pointing to the difficulties of the textile industry. Did we receive any support from the hon. members who now form the official opposition and who spoke today? Never a word, Mr. Chairman; never a word did we hear from them, never an indication of concern.

But now they are beginning to discover the problem. This is a problem that is giving the government concern as it gave members now sitting on this side of the house great concern when they sat in the opposition and when it gave the former government no evident concern.

Mr. Chevrier: It did very much.

Mr. Fleming: The government of that day made a reference to the tariff board of the woollen items in the tariff. That was done three years ago, and what did they do? It was a truncated inquiry that they directed the tariff board to make. They told the tariff board not to make any recommendations. So the tariff board simply made a review of conditions in the industry so far as woollen textiles were concerned and made no recommendations, and to this day we have had no recommendations.

What the new government did in the face of the problem was to direct the tariff board to proceed with an inquiry into the whole textile industry embracing all the textile items in the tariff. The tariff board has proceeded with the inquiry with respect to the woollen items. They have completed their hearings and they are working on their report now. I shall be very interested indeed to see what kind of reception the recommendations of the tariff board in this respect, whatever they may be, receive from hon. members opposite when they come.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that must be mentioned here in the light of statements that have been made today, principally by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet and the hon. member for Essex West. Apparently they are seeking to create the impression that the government trade mission now in the United Kingdom is seeking to make purchases which are going to have the effect of depriving Canadian workmen of jobs. Let us scotch that ugly apparition right now. It has been made clear by the government from the outset that the policy of seeking to divert purchases to Britain applies purely and exclusively to purchases of goods now made elsewhere outside Canada.

Let it not be pretended by hon. members opposite that in this trade mission or in its purpose there is any threat to the jobs of Canadians. That fact appears to have been realized by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition when, on the eve of departure of the trade mission for the United Kingdom three weeks ago, that hon. gentleman wished them well and spoke—as we thought—for all members of the official opposition in applauding their efforts and wishing them success.

Mr. Lesage: Nobody thought they would buy textiles.

Mr. Fleming: There were also some statements from the two other groups in the house wishing the mission well, applauding their efforts and wishing them success. What has happened now? The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet says that the presence of several Canadian textile manufacturers in the trade mission—

Mr. Lesage: Oh, no.

Mr. Fleming: —seems to give rise to the suspicion that the mission is going to be engaged in the purchase of textiles over there which could be purchased in Canada. Mr. Chairman, did you ever hear anything quite so far-fetched? I would have thought that the best guarantee that there is going to be no injury done to the jobs of any Canadian textile worker or to the interests of any Canadian textile mill lies in the fact that there are Canadian textile manufacturers in the trade mission.

Mr. Lesage: No there are not. They are importers not manufacturers.

Mr. Fleming: We were told—

Mr. Lesage: Look at the list.

Mr. Fleming: We were told this morning that there were representatives of the textile industry in the group.

Mr. Benidickson: Garments manufacturers.

Mr. Fleming: I should think that by looking at the composition of the trade mission and if the hon. members will only hearken back to what their own leader has said, they will have ample assurance that there is nothing in the activities of this trade mission which need give concern to Canadian industry or Canadian workmen. It has been made clear by the government from the very outset —and the facts should not be misrepresented now—that the policy of diversion applies purely and simply to goods now being purchased in other markets abroad.

Mr. McMillan: Would the hon. minister permit a question? In view of what he has said, what about the purchase of generators and other electrical apparatus announced by Mr. Duncan, the leader of the mission?

Mr. Fleming: I am sorry I did not hear all of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. McMillan: How about the announcement of the purchase of electrical apparatus made by Mr. Duncan, the leader of the mission? There was to be $10 million worth bought in Britain.

Mr. Benidickson: $10 million worth of generators purchased in Britain by the Ontario hydro.

Mr. Fleming: I do not know the details of the particular purchase referred to, but I do know that the Ontario hydro electric power commission has previously made purchases in the United Kingdom of heavy electrical equipment not manufactured in this country, and I expect that Mr. Duncan has proceeded on that basis. I put it to the hon. members opposite that if the words of their leader uttered in this house on the occasion of the departure of this mission represent the feeling of the hon. members opposite, then these statements which have been made today obviously are hollow and have no place in the language of the official opposition. On the other hand, if the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was not speaking for them when he wished the mission well three weeks ago then, in fairness to him and in frankness to the house I urge them now to declare it.

I did not intend to review these matters; I have spoken as I have simply to put the facts straight in the light of a number of statements made here today. I deplore the fact that these matters have been raised at all on a motion for interim supply and I appeal to the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: Appeal!

Mr. Fleming: —to address our efforts to the purpose of the matter in hand. There will be plenty of opportunity to discuss these matters when other business is before the house. The undertaking has been given that the rights of hon. members to discuss these matters and any others relative to any items in the estimates will be preserved and surely the matter can rest there.

Mr. Zaplitny: I would like to address a question to the minister as to whether he is stating government policy or whether that policy was stated this morning by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I ask this because the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated repeatedly this morning that there were no restrictions whatsoever upon this particular mission as to what they should purchase so far as the government was concerned. The Minister of Finance is saying the very opposite at this time. Who is speaking for the government?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance is not saying the opposite to what was said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce but is saying something which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said before and which is government policy shared by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself, as it is by all other members of the government. I think my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. Benidickson: I would like to ask further to the question raised by the hon. member for Dauphin, are the members of this mission honour bound to discuss while they are overseas on a trip at the expense of Canada only the purchase over there of commodities that would be in the diversion field rather than those which are of domestic availability.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, surely there will be a proper opportunity to go into this whole question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: The estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Chevrier: You invited this.

Mr. Fleming: —will probably be before the house at the end of this week because the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be returning, as he indicated in his statement on Tuesday, to the United Kingdom to complete the work of the trade mission. His estimates will be before the house and surely that is the proper place to raise these questions and go into them as fully as any hon. member may wish.

An hon. Member: You raised it.

Mr. Fleming: No, I did not raise it. I was setting the facts right as I made clear to the hon. members in view of the statements which have been made here and which were at variance with the facts. Conclusions have been reached and inferences drawn which the facts do not warrant. These were all contrary to the position taken by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and I was speaking in an effort simply to put the record straight. As I have said, I deplore the fact that a discussion of this kind had been obtruded into a debate on interim supply.

An hon. Member: You are delaying interim supply.

Mr. Benidickson: I was sure the hon. minister had suggested that the occupation of the delegation was simply that of trade which had the purpose of diversion from the United States. Discrimination against the United States.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I would like to put the record straight too, Mr. Chairman, in one particular. No minister of the crown can sit over there and threaten us in any way whatsoever but if there are to be threats we can threaten just as well.

Mr. Fleming: There is no question of any threats.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): If so, he is guilty of acting with calculated insolence. If he is querying our rights to speak here whenever we want to do so, he had better have a change of mind because I recall when the hon. member sat on this side of the house he spoke talkatively, loquaciously, verbosely, wordily and with much repetition, boring us all to death with his long speeches. Now he has the impertinence to ask us to simmer down, to calm down. He wants us to exercise forbearance with respect to his party's policy. Not likely. We are not prepared to exercise forbearance with growing unemployment as it exists in this country and with the situation as it now exists, where thousands of farmers are being dispossessed of their farms and their homes because of a lack of policy on the part of this government. Furthermore, I did not like this other threat that if we did not cooperate—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Might I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Certainly, ask any questions you like.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): How are you assisting the passing of the legislation to help farmers or to help unemployment problems to be solved by continuing this unnecessary discussion?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): We assisted in passing unemployment legislation by putting it through in less than one day. When we talk about assisting in legislation, if this farm legislation is as important as the government thinks it is, why, then, did the order of business include the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act? Why the Export Credits Insurance Act, if the farm legislation is so urgent? Why the Hamilton harbour commission measure if the farm legislation is so important? Why the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act if the farm legislation is so important?

Mr. Fleming: There is employment involved in very one of these measures.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Why has the government been stalling for over a month on this matter, and why does the Minister of Finance then tell us that if we do not cooperate the leader of the house will be guided accordingly? I do not like these threats, nor do my colleagues and we are not prepared to take them from anyone. We are here today to do a job as we see it, though perhaps we do not see eye to eye with the government, and when any of my colleagues want to speak in this house they will do so.

Mr. Fleming: Then let us have no talk about delaying matters.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): When the Prime Minister was on this side of the house we used to hear how interested he was in freedom of speech, but now he is Prime Minister he wants to act the part of R. B. Bennett and clamp down upon discussion, and we are not prepared to take it. The Minister of Finance said that the house was going to be in session for a long time. Well, we are paid to be here, and the hon. minister is paid to be here; we are going to be here as long as he will be, and in all probability longer. May I give this advice to the hon. gentleman: if he wishes to facilitate the business of this house, let him stop making these threats and speak more courteously and with greater regard for the rights of hon. members of parliament.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, the minister spoke for some considerable time, and the last part of his speech, in which he was answering questions, was, I think, quite acceptable, though he did enter into debate on those things which he claimed were taking a lot of the time of the committee.

But in answering these questions he did not answer the question I asked him and which, I thought, dealt with an important matter. I asked him what estimates he thought might be withdrawn, because that is pertinent to debate. One reason I spoke on the coal mining industry during this debate was because I anticipated that the estimates in respect of the dominion coal board would not come before this parliament, and I had to take the opportunity to speak on that subject when it was presented to me. I asked the Minister of Finance to tell us what estimates would be withdrawn or curtailed; and while he is on his feet, would he care to answer me with respect to my speech? He has referred at some length to speeches which were made in respect of the trade mission. But to me and to my people the coal mining industry is more important than that, and I should like the minister to tell me what the government proposes to do to assist the coal mining industry in its present difficulties. The other question I asked was whether the minister will tell us what estimates may be withdrawn or curtailed.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I dealt with that subject in the course of my remarks and I referred to the practice which had been followed already by the two ministers whose estimates have been before the committee of supply and passed, and I said that this would be the practice followed by each minister as he places his estimates before the committee of supply, namely that he would indicate what particular revisions he thinks could be made in his estimates. I can assure the hon. member that he will have ample opportunity to discuss the important subject he has raised on the estimates which are still to come before the house.

Mr. Lesage: I have just one word to say. A few moments ago the Minister of Finance, when he began replying to the various speeches which had been made, introduced his remarks by saying that a discussion of more than 15 minutes on interim supply was something quite out of the ordinary; that in the 12 years he had been in the house, only once according to his memory had a debate gone longer than about 15 minutes.

I can assure him that the debates on interim supply have been longer than his memory. His memory is very bad, and I am really concerned for the finances of the country if his recollection cannot do any better than that, because not later than last spring there were two instances when there were protracted debates on interim supply. On April 11, 1957, the then minister of finance moved interim supply. The present Prime Minister spoke at considerable length—as a matter of fact his speech covers a number of pages of Hansard—and it was only on the following day at six o'clock that the interim supply motion was adopted. In that same session, on March 29, 1957, interim supply was moved by the former minister of finance on a Friday morning at 11 o'clock and it was only around five o'clock that the motion was approved. On that occasion the present Minister of Finance in his capacity as the hon. member for Eglinton made a long speech, of the character which was described by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, on the subject of the C.B.C. For 40 minutes the hon. member spoke on the C.B.C. and his speech covered seven pages of Hansard.

Mr. Hahn: What page was that?

Mr. Lesage: Page 2022 of Hansard for the first session of 1957.

Mr. Macdonnell: Did it happen in any other year?

Mr. Lesage: I did not have time to check, because it is only a few moments ago that the Minister of Finance said it had happened only once—

Mr. Macdonnell: Once in 12 years.

Mr. Benidickson: He said it had never happened.

Mr. Macdonnell: Once in 12 years.

Mr. Lesage: I did not have to go any further back than the spring session to find that the Minister of Finance had participated in a protracted debate on interim supply.

Mr. Macdonnell: Once in 12 years.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the Minister of Finance that the lecture he delivered to the house a few moments ago has not intimidated me in the least with regard to saying the few words I have to say at this time.

I feel I am not abusing my rights and privileges if I speak at this time, and while I certainly appreciate the suggestion of the hon. minister that we will have an opportunity during the discussion of the estimates at a later date to bring up our several grievances which have been mentioned here this afternoon, the minister did not say when the estimates are going to be brought up and as I have something to say relevant to the problem of storage I feel I am perfectly within my rights at this time in airing that grievance. On the other hand, if the minister will assure me now that he will bring before this house the support price legislation tomorrow or the next day I will resume my place immediately and say nothing at this time.

An hon. Member: Now who is threatening.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member is well aware of the order of business which was announced by the leader of the house last night, and he is well aware that this agricultural price guarantee legislation is among the items announced last night for today. It was our expectation on this side of the house that we should have been about that business by this time.

The house met at eleven o'clock this morning and now having had all the morning and all the afternoon we are still on the first item. Let it be clearly understood by all hon. members that it is the wish, the desire and the hope of the government that we get on with this and get to the matter of the resolution on support for agricultural prices.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Now you are reneging on the problem.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to belabour the point except to say that on a number of occasions hon. members in this corner of the house have pleaded with the government to dispense with relatively unimportant legislation in order to facilitate the bringing forward of important legislation including the price support legislation. Neither this morning nor this afternoon did the minister suggest that members of the government should not participate in the debate.

Mr. Fleming: Only one member on the government side of the house spoke, only one.

Mr. Benidickson: You made a long speech.

Mr. Fleming: When?

Mr. Benidickson: Now.

Mr. Fleming: I spoke only five minutes this morning.

Mr. Bryson: I would like to say a few words concerning the serious problem that was raised by the hon. member for Yorkton. I am not going to abuse the privileges extended to me by quoting figures concerning storage because they are as well known to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to anyone else but I would like to deal with one aspect of the problem which heretofore has not been brought to the attention of the house. I am sure the minister is as anxious as anyone else to do everything possible for the agricultural industry of Canada.

Mr. Churchill: Thank you very much.

Mr. Bryson: The minister has made many statements to that effect although I must admit that we have not seen too much action to date. On one occasion I recall he said in effect he did not believe producers should be asked to carry the entire burden of the surplus grain problem and on another occasion in this house, as I recall it, he said in effect that the government was prepared to consider any reasonable plan that would help alleviate many of the present problems of the agricultural industry. And so, believing that, I would like to bring to his attention one such problem, namely storage, which could be assisted somewhat by using one piece of legislation that is presently in force in this country.

I would point out to the minister that there already exists a policy which if it were extended would go a long way in at least attempting to solve the grave problem of grain storage. I understand that there has been no off-site storage approved since approximately June 25 of this year but since that date on-site or on-track storage has been approved, which of course is something entirely different.

On November 18 I asked the minister a question to the effect that if a group of farmers or an individual farmer constructed approved on-site storage at an elevator point would he be eligible to have that storage approved in effect by the Canadian wheat board which operates under the jurisdiction of the federal government. The minister's answer to me as reported at page 1231 of Hansard of that date is as follows:

> The board of grain commissioners will only accept applications for on-site storage from licencees of the board.

Later he added:

> In other words, such on-site storage is regarded as an annex to the elevator licensed to receive grain at that delivery point.

It is evident from those statements that the question I asked the minister on that occasion was answered in the affirmative. The only result of that policy that I can observe from having investigated the situation quite carefully is that in certain areas businessmen who are constructing approved or already have approved existing storage make a deal with an elevator company and in turn are paid storage charges on that grain. I am not at all critical of any businessman who provides storage for housing grain because I think it is most admirable, nor am I critical of the wheat board or this government for approving that type of storage but I do condemn the government for not publicizing as widely as possible the existence of this scheme and the fact that farmers can take advantage of the plan.

How does this plan work? I will give a concrete example concerning a situation that is well known to me. A businessman has storage capable of housing 100,000 bushels. He goes to an elevator company and makes a deal which is perfectly legitimate under which he will store grain on their behalf and in return he is paid something in the neighborhood of three-quarters of a cent per bushel. It is understandable of course that he could not qualify for the full cost of storage because the elevator company must deduct handling charges which amount to about one-quarter of a cent per bushel. That is all very well and it means that at this point farmers have an extra 100,000 bushels of storage capacity but it would be much better if the government would publicize this scheme in order that farmers could take advantage of this scheme.

I have it on the best authority that there are elevator companies who would be very happy to enter into such an arrangement. Farmers could undertake to arrange on-track storage and build their own storage to store their own grain as the quota became available. In this case they would be paid storage just as the businessman is paid storage today.

What would be accomplished by this? It would accomplish three things, all of them desirable. First of all, because there would be greater storage at that point, the quota could be raised which in turn would mean that the farmer would be able to market more grain at that point. He would be able to haul his grain and put it in his granary without fear of the elevator being plugged. You must remember that simply because a quota is opened at any point it does not mean that every farmer will have an opportunity of getting his grain into the elevator. In many cases there is difficulty because of weather conditions and so on and the elevator space is plugged before the farmer can make his delivery. This would eliminate the second problem.

The third thing it would accomplish would be to give the farmer an opportunity to deliver grain to the elevator of his choice. For example, if he hauls it to a pool elevator he eventually gets the benefit of the dividends that are invariably paid which would be of great assistance. I suggest it would be much better for ten farmers to have 1,000 bushels apiece in their own bins on-track than to give that amount of storage to one man thereby putting him in the position of being able to collect the storage on all the grain.

Possibly the government feels that if this policy were widespread and expanded it would not be able to carry all the charges that would have to be borne. Of course the government has agreed to pay all the storage charges on what it considers to be over a normal carryover, 178 million bushels, but it is understandable that if this policy I am outlining now became widespread that it could conceivably amount to a vast quantity of grain on which the government would have to pay storage. In spite of that I think the plan is valid because the farmer is already carrying storage on the grain that is stored on his own farm but he is never sure he is going to be able to deliver when the quota does open up. Therefore I feel this policy should be expanded and the plan made widely known through the grain growing portion of western Canada. I know the government is not going to build permanent storage, I would suggest that as an alternative, and in the meantime they should give very serious consideration to allowing farmers the opportunity to build on-site storage wherever it is possible to do so.

Mr. McCullough: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that hon. members are very anxious to get these interim estimates through.

Mr. Churchill: We were, but not now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCullough: I hear a lot of laughter from across the way, but I want to assure you, sir, that neither I nor my colleagues will be intimidated by any laughter. I listened to the prolonged and verbose circumlocution of the Minister of Finance. I have a problem to bring to the attention of the government and I intend to do so in the remaining few minutes. If I do not get too many interjections from hon. members opposite, I think I can do it.

[Mr. Bryson.]

This problem, Mr. Chairman, applies perhaps more particularly to my own constituency. It has to do with the administration of two acts, the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I bring this to the attention of the government because I believe it involves interdepartmental arrangements for carrying out the regulations of the two acts.

As hon. members know, under the Unemployment Insurance Act, unless a person is an industrial worker and within the two years prior to application for unemployment insurance benefits has paid a total of 30 weeks into the insurance fund he is not eligible for benefits. I bring this to the attention of the government because in my constituency we have a large group of people who are engaged in the oil industry because that area of the province of Saskatchewan is perhaps the largest oil field in Canada at the present time. Whether or not this is due to the new policy and the failure to take proper steps to give assurance to the industry and the oil companies that the future holds something for them in the way of further investment I am not sure, but the committee will recall that I asked the Prime Minister to give information to the house on the outcome of the visit of Premier Manning to the Prime Minister in respect of the oil situation in Alberta.

In addition to this, sir, we have the cost-price squeeze facing our farmers. Owing to the cost-price squeeze, and the lower return to farmers, many of them have gone into the oil fields and some of them are also working in the coal mines. For the information of the committee I might say that approximately half the coal of Canada is produced in my constituency. The problem is this. People who are employed part-time in the coal mines and in the oil industry and who have not completed 30 weeks of employment in either of those industries in the last two years are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. At the same time we have the anomaly of people who are part-time farmers and who pay into the Prairie Farm Assistance Act through deductions on the sale of their grain. Such people are not eligible under the regulations of these two acts for compensation under either one of the acts. I should like to bring this to the attention of the government. Owing to the peculiar circumstances these people are not eligible under the regulations of the two acts. I hope the minister will bring it to the attention of the proper authorities that we have people who are paying into both the unemployment insurance fund and the Prairie

Farm Assistance Act but, owing to the regulations, they cannot qualify as industrial workers and are not eligible for payments under the Unemployment Insurance Act. They do not receive any compensation and they cannot qualify under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act because they are not classified as bona fide farmers. They are not eligible for awards under this act.

I would suggest to the government that a great deal of leniency be shown in the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act so that people who are trying to supplement their incomes and find it very difficult to carry on, but are doing what I think all of us want them to do, namely try to find work to provide for their families, shall be eligible for payments and awards made under one or the other of those acts.

I think it is a real problem. I appreciate that the administrators of the Unemployment Insurance Act are trying to do the best they can. I think those who are carrying out the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act are very sympathetic, and I do hope that my plea this afternoon will be given serious consideration and that people in this category will receive the proper consideration because in most instances it is a real problem in my constituency.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Fleming moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1958, the sum of $281,607,101.16, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this date in the committee of supply.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 198, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1958.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR CONVERSION OF CAPITAL STOCK COMPANIES INTO MUTUAL COMPANIES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming for the second reading of Bill No. 169, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of yesterday's sittings the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) had finished his explanation of the reasons for this bill. With the background for the bill as he outlined it I have little dispute. I think the minister himself would probably be quite willing to acknowledge that much of the investigation and preparation for the bill had been done and was ready for him when he assumed office because I know from my personal experience, having been parliamentary assistant to the former minister of finance, that this matter had been given study by the previous minister and a draft bill had even been prepared.

However, the last session, as we all know, was brought to a conclusion sooner than some other sessions by reason of dissolution. My remarks will be brief not only on that account but also because the minister has assured the house that the bill will be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce. I should like, however, to join with him in acknowledgment that the bill is of considerable importance.

The insurance industry is an important one and, as the minister himself stated, the welfare of a great number of Canadians in a very important way is dependent upon our insurance industry. My understanding is that there are some 28 insurance companies operating in Canada which have jurisdiction by reason of incorporation by parliament and those companies, for whom we are legislating in this bill, write some two-thirds of the insurance that is written in Canada for Canadians. That totals some $26 billion or $27 billion and that, of course, underlines and emphasizes the security element that was referred to by me and by the minister last night.

Of the 28 companies I believe that 22 are companies with capital stock and these are the companies to which the element of mutualization in this bill has particular reference. I also believe that these companies with capital stock underwrite about 85 per cent of the business in this country.

Another factor that I think will be kept very much in mind by members of the house is the fact that it is not easy today to enter afresh into the business of insurance. I think only one company has entered this field of business in the last 25 years. The minister also indicated very properly last night that the funds of shareholders are relatively small in relation to the funds that are available to these insurance companies from the premiums that are provided by policyholders. The last time I have a recollection of looking at these figures I believe that the assets available to these companies were in the neighbourhood of $6 billion and this in turn can be related to paid up capital stock approximating $14 million.

I think the chief item in the bill of particular interest is the opportunity to facilitate mutualization. In that respect the bill is not proposing something that is particularly unique because in the United States they have developed something along the lines proposed in the bill. The two largest United States companies in the insurance field, the Metropolitan Life and the Prudential Life, were originally stock companies but they too, as is provided in this bill, became mutual companies by reason of an opportunity provided to purchase the capital stock of their companies. In addition, other United States companies formerly stock companies have been mutualized, including the New York Life and the Equitable Life. A similar trend has also been noted in the United Kingdom.

I think the bill provides a share of supervision on behalf of the public by reason of the reference in the bill to the jurisdiction of the treasury board. I think this will commend itself to most members of the house. There is another important element in the bill, the direction that the majority of directors must be residents of Canada. Up to now the direction has simply been that the shareholders' representatives on the boards of directors where there is participation, shall be residents of Canada, but this will apply now to all classes of directors. This again is not unique in legislative action because it is similar to the direction that is made with respect to the directors of our Canadian banks.

The third item that I think is of interest is the provision affording the opportunity for the boards of directors of our insurance companies to refuse share transfers to non-Canadian residents under certain circumstances. This, I think, is a matter that has given considerable concern to a number of Canadians in the past. I know the superintendent of insurance has directed the attention of the house to this problem. In his 1955 report he had this to say:

> One may, perhaps, feel less concern in contemplating these two transactions—

He was referring to certain transactions respecting sales of shares in insurance stock companies to non-residents.

> —than would be the case were there to be a transfer of ownership of one of the major Canadian companies.

The Minister of Finance referred to certain control that has already passed from this country. The superintendent of insurance went on to say:

> The transactions serve to emphasize the continued interest of foreign investors in Canadian life insurance companies and the desirability of seeking some legislative procedure that will enable the ownership of Canadian life insurance companies to be retained in Canada.

This problem also received the attention of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, and in paragraph 20 of the preliminary report of the Gordon commission the following was stated:

> Foreign ownership of the stocks of the Canadian chartered banks and of life insurance companies, which are incorporated under Canadian law, is not particularly large at the present time. It is desirable that Canadian control of these institutions be maintained. The commission suggests, therefore, that appropriate action be taken to prevent any substantial measure of control of the chartered banks and of the life insurance companies from coming into the possession of non-residents. One way in which this might be accomplished would be to provide by statute that any shares in such institutions which were acquired by non-residents of Canada in the future would be ineligible to vote.

That of course is not the actual procedure adopted by this bill. I think it is not generally understood, however, that the provisions of the bill simply provide discretionary power on the part of the board of directors of an insurance company to refuse the transfer of shares to a non-Canadian resident. In addition, it is probably not understood that the bill does not provide that shares, once in the hands of a non-resident, can be transferred to another non-resident; not only at the present time but that this will be also possible in the future.

The fourth element of the bill referred to last night by the minister relates to the fraternal societies which effect insurance and I think there will be no quarrel with respect to that because it is generally recognized today that the unusual mortality rates which applied years ago to juveniles are not now prevalent. I think this bill should commend itself generally to the members of this committee; it seems to have general acceptance, so far as I know, by the members of the official opposition. Certainly such small differences as do exist can be discussed and the bill itself will be given very careful examination by the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, subject to further inquiry on our part in the committee on banking and commerce, we accept the principle behind this bill. Therefore there is no need for extended debate on the part of any members of our group. We are only too prepared at any time to facilitate government legislation of this kind so long as we can get to this agricultural legislation which has been promised us.

Mr. A. B. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go a little further than the member for Winnipeg North and say that this is good legislation and legislation pointing in a good direction in that, on the one hand, it seeks to help bring Canadian companies under Canadian control and, on the other hand, it enables Canadian life insurance companies to convert themselves into mutuals. This of course means that they would be owned and controlled by their own customers and that is a good direction in which to move. That is a socialist step and I congratulate the Conservative party for taking it. Of course, these are slow, halting steps even though they are in the right direction, but I hope the Conservative party will persevere and see to it that these principles in which a company should be in the hands of and controlled by those it serves, will have general application among other Canadian companies; not only those under United States control at the present time but also some companies under Canadian control.

An hon. Member: The pipe line too.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver - Kingsway): And the pipe line as my hon. friend has suggested, but I suggest the Conservative party's direction is good in this case.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE TOTAL OUTSTANDING LIABILITY

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act to increase from one hundred million dollars to two hundred million dollars the total liability that the corporation may have outstanding at any time under contracts of insurance which it is empowered to enter into under section 21 of this said act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Benidickson: Has the minister not a statement to make?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have a statement but I was not sure whether the house wanted to hear it.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It is so interesting.

Mr. Stick: You were trying to sneak out of it but you did not get away with it.

Mr. Churchill: No, I was not trying to sneak out of it. I will face up to anything that happens in this house or anywhere else.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is an improvement.

Mr. Churchill: The purpose of this amendment, is to increase the effectiveness of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation by giving it the necessary authority to take on liabilities of an additional $100 million, under section 21 of the Export Credits Insurance Act. Contracts of insurance issued under section 21 of the act are those which are considered to be in the national interest but which, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, would impose upon the corporation a liability for a term or in an amount in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake in relation to any one contract, exporter, commodity or country. All moneys required by the corporation to discharge its liabilities arising under any contract of insurance entered into under this section are to be paid to the corporation by the Minister of Finance out of unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund.

Section 21 of the act as it now stands limits the corporation's liability to $100 million. At the present time, liabilities under policies of insurance actually written plus commitments currently outstanding total $98 million in the aggregate. It is obvious that in order to have this section of the act continue its effectiveness, and to allow the corporation to insure additional business, it must be authorized to assume further liabilities, and I am therefore proposing that the amount of such liabilities be established at $200 million.

Through the operations of section 21 of the Export Credits Insurance Act an increasing amount of export trade has been insured and a considerable portion of it would not have materialized had it not been possible to have it insured. One hundred and six policies of insurance have been issued under this section covering exports amounting to $206 million. Insured export shipments which have been concluded and paid in full amount to $97 million. Insurance premiums paid on this business have totalled $1,659,191 of which $1,245,488 has been turned over to the receiver general and the balance of $413,703 retained by the corporation to meet its expenses and overhead arising out of the contracts of insurance issued under section 21 of the act. I am pleased to report that as yet there have been no losses.

Shipments insured under section 21 have consisted of electrical goods valued at $4½ million; milk powder valued at $4 million; aircraft and parts, $80 million, and wheat, $118 million.

In connection with the insurance of aircraft and parts amounting to $80 million, the corporation has assumed a liability of only $22 million. This has been brought about through the very favourable payment terms established in the contract of sale whereby it has been calculated that the maximum possible loss could not exceed the $22 million established as the liability. With respect to payment terms for other commodities insured under section 21, it is usual procedure for the exporter to receive some cash with the order, or at the time of shipment, with the balance payable over some months or years after shipment. Terms of payment for wheat sales insured have called for a cash payment of from 10 per cent to 25 per cent at the time of shipment with the balance payable from one to three years after the date of shipment.

Ordinarily wheat is sold for cash in international trade and, as the house is well aware, the Canadian wheat board requires payment in cash so that it can distribute the proceeds of sale to producers. Until 1952—and this act has been in operation since 1944—there were no requests for credit terms on the sale of Canadian wheat. In that year, Yugoslavia faced a serious shortage of food and foreign exchange and applied to Canada for wheat on short term credit. The private exporters financed themselves at commercial rates of interest through the banking system, using the export credits insurance policy as security, in order to pay cash to the wheat board.

With changes from time to time in credit terms this pattern of export insurance, worked out for this first transaction with Yugoslavia, has been applied in subsequent years to several other countries—Brazil, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Israel and Poland. Policies have been issued covering the export of 1½ million tons, or about 55 million bushels of wheat.

As a result of recent intensive efforts to enlarge wheat markets, a number of countries have expressed interest in buying Canadian wheat on credit. At this stage it would not, of course, be in the public interest to disclose the names of the countries but it is vitally important that authority should be available to insure such credit sales if and when formal requests are made. That is the principal reason for seeking this amendment.

The Export Credits Insurance Corporation provides a service that cannot be obtained from private insurance firms. Similar insurance protection is provided by government of the majority of exporting countries. Export credits insurance gives protection to Canadian exporters against those unexpected and unpreventable losses that occur in spite of every precaution of the policyholder. Some of the risks covered include insolvency of the foreign buyer, cancellation of an import licence in the country of destination, or the risk of adverse changes in foreign exchange regulations. While the corporation will insure against delays in collection that are not the fault of the exporter, it does not cover trade disputes as to quantity of goods.

The exporter is insured against blockage of funds in a foreign country or transfer difficulties which prevent him from receiving payment for his goods. Such calamities as war or revolution in the country of the buyer are also covered. This insurance protection in no way subsidizes the Canadian exporter, as the corporation operates on a self-supporting basis and charges an insurance premium that is assessed according to the risk assumed. The Canadian exporter still has to compete on the basis of quality, price, credit terms, and service rendered. However, the policy of insurance provides protection for his foreign accounts receivable and also provides him with the benefit of the advice and assistance of the corporation in recovering any losses which may arise. In addition, the insurance provides him with facilities to obtain financial assistance enabling him to expand his export business and so help in building up Canada's foreign trade.

Policies of insurance issued under section 21 of the act cover contracts of sale much larger than those normally undertaken by the corporation on its own behalf, and the exporters are not prepared to take on such contracts of sale without insurance protection. Furthermore, the fact that payments are generally spread over a period of years makes it very difficult for exporters to obtain the additional financing required without the support of an export credits insurance policy.

These sales are essential to Canada's well-being and materially add to the development of her foreign trade. The practical question of payment often depends more on the over-all balance of payments situation in the country of the buyer, and is more often affected by political considerations in that country than by the normal practices of commercial trade. Where the risk involves political factors that increase the element of uncertainty in foreign trading and where a contract will prove beneficial to our nation as a whole, it is felt that the people of Canada, through its government, should bear some share of that risk, and by so doing place our exporters in the same position as their competitors in the world market.

Mr. Benidickson: May I ask the minister first just one question? Is there any change in the act proposed beyond the extension of the over-all liability under section 21 from $100 million to $200 million?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman, this is the only change, this change from $100 to $200 million. As I mentioned a minute ago, the act has been in operation for 12 or 13 years with considerable success and all we wish to do now is to extend it a bit.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, particularly in consequence of the hon. minister's reply to that question, my remarks will be fairly brief. In the first place, this act was before the house for amendment in the earlier session of 1957. I just want to point out that when this act was up for two minor amendments earlier this year some 41 columns of Hansard were utilized by members of the then opposition to discuss certain items of amendment, and naturally I wondered whether or not those who were so critical at that time on the question of whether this corporation should be liable for income tax on its transfers to the underwriting reserve against losses had changed their minds, or whether their proposals then would form part of the amending bill, now that the then critics compose the administration. At that time the Minister of Finance, the present Minister of Health and Welfare, the former member for Simcoe North, and the gentleman, who I believe, has been the acting minister of trade and commerce in the minister's absence, and who has probably been supervising the bill —the hon. member for Greenwood, Minister without Portfolio—were all among those who were so bitter in their denunciation of the amendments made earlier this session.

The other reason for brevity is one that the minister himself has indicated. This bill was introduced in 1944. It was just one of the many wise and farsighted statutes which were prepared by the administration of Mr. Mackenzie King in his desire for the stimulation of postwar trade, for the stabilization of the economy of this country and for the welfare of its people for the post war period. I am very pleased that the minister has paid tribute to the good results of this legislation.

While he did not say so, I am informed that export sales under the ordinary terms of the legislation have assisted by insurance provisions the export of more than $400 million worth of Canadian exports. The minister said that also under section 21 alone export sales beyond $200 million have been assisted. This proposal provides confirmation in my mind of the proof of a statement which appeared in the Time magazine of October 9 when it reproduced a short statement from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix which said this:

> The dominant fact in the political life of the country is the Conservatives' close adherence to the Liberals' main lines.

I think that is very true. The minister did give us figures with respect to the amount of export sales that have been assisted by insurance under section 21. He also outlined the provisions of section 21 indicating that this is a special risk that is not solely the responsibility of the board or the corporation but is a risk approved specially by the governor in council. While we are in the committee would he add to the information that is available from the last annual report and tell us what is the latest figure of export sales that have been assisted by the ordinary provisions of the act since December 31, 1956. I believe the annual report indicated that the sales on an ordinary basis were then $376 million.

Recently with respect to this statute I placed some questions on the order paper. I am grateful for certain information that was provided as a result. It was indicated that under section 21, which I take it is our main interest tonight, $104 million in export sales have been insured from January 1, 1957 to October 31, 1957, in other words ten months of this year. I wonder if the minister would tell the committee what proportion of this related to wheat sales and would he indicate with respect to non-wheat sales what the large items of exports were.

I was very interested to read shortly after the introduction of this resolution that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who comes from Saskatchewan visited his home province shortly afterward and made what I thought were rather extravagant statements to the wheat producers respecting the advantages of this particular extension of the total amount of liability that is possible under section 21. The strange thing is that the reports of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in Regina occurred just one day after the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in Regina. One got the impression that the total value of the extension of the liability that is possible under this statute by reason of this amending bill would be to the advantage of the wheat producers.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce in Regina on November 15, as I understand it, suggested that we could reasonably anticipate exports of some 300 million bushels of wheat in this crop year. The following day by reason of this particular item of legislation his colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, as reported in the Regina Leader-Post of November 16, indicated that this figure could be upped by 50 million bushels for the same term.

I understand the good reasons when negotiations are taking place why the minister, as he suggested, must be cautious about indicating the countries with which he is now negotiating with respect to possible sales of Canadan wheat. I know this is a competitive thing and I would not want in any way to embarrass these negotiations which are to the benefit of this country but I do think in view of this conflict of estimates within 24 hours in the same city by two members of the government as to the possible sales of wheat for export within the current crop year that this committee is entitled to some explanation.

In particular I would like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to inform the committee—I do not wish to put him on the spot as to the countries with which he is negotiating—whether some 50 million bushels of wheat beyond the 300 million bushels he discussed in Regina are likely to be sold simply because of the insurance provisions that are being provided in this legislation. The reason I ask that is that while the total amount of export sales related to this insurance under section 21 have increased very substantially in the ten months of 1957, according to the returns given to me to which I have previously referred, it actually happens that the amount of wheat insured in the ten months of 1957 is considerably less relatively than wheat sales insured in 1956.

The figures are as follows: Section 21 was utilized in 1956 for sales of wheat to the extent of 24 million bushels. In 1957 the figure is ten million bushels for ten months. I would simply ask the question, is the Minister of Trade and Commerce going to tell this committee that people have been standing by at the threshold waiting for credit for wheat in such substantial measure that his colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was justified in suggesting to Saskatchewan audiences that this $100 million would be utilized more or less exclusively and totally for the sale of wheat. I have indicated that in the current year it does not appear to have been a lack of available credit insurance that reduced the quantity of wheat which was sold under insurance provisions. I take it that it was probably the market conditions and the competition conditions to which my hon. friend has frequently referred.

In connection with this amendment I feel I am justified in chastising the Minister of Trade and Commerce a little bit for some remarks he made yesterday. I believe—I think other hon. members will agree with me—he was somewhat flippant when he referred to a possible customer for Canadian wheat, namely Russia. As a matter of fact we have trade agreements with Russia which I think are of considerable advantage to the grain producers of western Canada.

The hon. member for Moose Mountain asked the minister yesterday about the Russian trade delegation presently in Canada. I admit that the minister has been out of Canada recently. I think he returned only yesterday but there was no suggestion that this question might be referred to the acting minister of trade and commerce, the able Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood. On the contrary, in a rather flippant manner he simply associated this trade delegation visit with a visit by a Russian hockey team.

The Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood, made a statement some years ago with respect to trade that could be generally approved in regard to this type of legislation. On February 24, 1954, at page 2398 of Hansard, when speaking to an amendment to this very statute, the hon. member for Greenwood had this to say:

> It does not seem to me there is much hope for peace and a quiet life as long as our chief joint occupations with people beyond the iron curtain are to make faces at each other and listen while they call us names.

I got the impression that the attitude of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce in his rather flippant reply yesterday to the possibility of sales of wheat and the attention paid to this Russian trade delegation was quite contrary to the spirit of the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Greenwood, which I have quoted.

Generally, as I say, this proposed amendment will be supported by members of the official opposition. In so far as our party is concerned it is simply an extension in liability terms without change, of the principle of good Liberal legislation.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I do not think too many comments are necessary at the resolution stage of this bill because I think the purpose of the resolution is a laudable one. There are, however, one or two comments that I think should be made, since one of the commodities that are most worrisome on the Canadian market at the present time is wheat and one of the purposes of the Export Credits Insurance Act is to facilitate the importation of Canadian wheat on credit terms.

Hon. members are familiar with the circumstances last year when one of the iron curtain countries was negotiating with Canada for the importation of a significant quantity of Canadian wheat and required a long-term credit for it, a longer-term credit than the then minister of trade and commerce was prepared to grant under the present legislation. It was found at that time that the delegation went to the United States where they filled their orders. I just wonder whether the present amendment, which increases the amount from $100 million to $200 million, will still put us in a position to compete with the United States give-away programs in this respect.

The minister pointed out that they required from a 10 per cent to a 25 per cent down payment on the purchase of wheat, with a one to three year period of repayment. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we as a government should be able to do much better than that. I know of many individual farmers in my constituency who would be only too prepared to sell 1,000, yes, up to 5,000 bushels of wheat at the present time, to get it off their farms, with the understanding that they would be paid for it in five or even 10 years time. Now, surely if individual farmers have presented that suggestion to me in their readiness to move their wheat off the farm, then this legislation should be geared to the same purpose.

I am hopeful that the comments which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources made in Saskatchewan, and which were referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River can be fulfilled because, in reporting to his constituents, he painted a very rosy picture indeed as to the results of this amendment. It is to be hoped indeed that the amendment which is being introduced will be of value in allowing the exporters of Canadian grain to put themselves in a position of partial equality with the United States exporters and that we shall be able to move our burdensome surplus of grain to other countries which may not have the immediate funds with which to purchase it.

I think this is all I shall say at the present time, Mr. Chairman. I shall make any other comments that may be required at a later time.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, we in this group welcome this measure to increase the effectiveness of the act by allowing it to have additional liabilities in the amount of $100 million. It is rather strange that today we should be speaking of a measure which was so heavily criticized by the Conservative party at the last session of parliament. I recall many of the members who were critical of certain features of it. I notice the hon. member for Greenwood looking rather astonished. I remind him that at that time the point that the Conservatives were so critical about was the question of the exempting of the corporations from a certain amount of taxation up to a certain level.

Now, as I understand it, the main purpose of the Export Credits Insurance Act is to provide exporters with insurance which cannot be obtained from private insurance companies. We are quite in favour of that because we think it is very important that insurance of this type be made available, and if private insurance companies will not write it, then it is essential that this corporation carry on the business. For that reason we are glad that the government has seen fit to make it possible for a greater amount of business to be carried on.

I understand that the only insurance of this type that can be written today by private insurance companies is done with the United States, and consequently I understand this corporation does not insure exports to the United States of America. Therefore, I say we agree with the objective of the act because we think it is very important at this time that we do everything possible to expand our exports so as to make it possible to reduce our adverse balance of trade and also to dispose of our surplus products.

Today we are facing very strong competition from the United States of America in their farm disposal plan. They are expanding markets in many directions and, owing to the easy terms on which they sell, it makes it quite hard for Canada to compete.

In the January issue of the Western Producer we find a quotation from Mr. Butz, the assistant secretary of agriculture. He has this to say in regard to the United States disposal policy:

> We are learning to use these surpluses as a positive factor in our foreign policy. These donations to other countries for relief of famine, flood and other disasters, plus the sales for foreign currency, are making friends for us in many countries that we are trying to keep from slipping under Russian domination.
> And the fact that our dollar sales not only are holding up but increasing shows that these donations and foreign-currency sales are not just taking the place of deals that could be made for dollars.

I hope the minister will take note of the last paragraph because time and again it has been stated that if we were to adopt similar disposal policies our dollar sales would be reduced by the amount of the donations and foreign-currency sales. Well, in the United States they are accepting in their disposal policy foreign currency and barter deals. Nevertheless, their sales for dollars are also increasing.

The Western Producer has this comment:

> The mood of agriculture department officials and of congress indicates that the government surplus policy is to continue. The demand for U.S. surpluses indicates, too, that there is a vast overseas market to be tapped as long as United States taxpayers continue to foot the bill and make the price right.

Mr. Churchill: That last sentence is important.

Mr. Quelch: Yes, that last sentence is important; that is quite true. In the losses under our policy it will be the taxpayer who foots the bill. So far we have had very small losses.

Mr. Benidickson: No losses under section 21.

Mr. Quelch: The purpose of this measure is to try to push our sales of wheat. According to Mr. Butz there are vast untapped markets yet which we may be able to gain. No doubt there will be a good deal of risk involved in trying to sell our wheat to some of these nations.

The question I should like to ask the minister, and a point I have never been quite able to understand, is that under this insurance adverse changes in foreign exchange regulations are covered, but I understand that you cannot insure the rate of exchange. This seems to be very strange, because surely when we are making sales to many of these foreign countries change in the rate of exchange is an important factor. I recall that some years ago when we changed the rate of our exchange from 90 cents to $1 some members complained that certain businesses had lost money. At that time, I think it was Mr. Abbott who stated that there was nothing to prevent our industries from insuring against a change in the rate of exchange. Does that mean that these businesses could be insured by other companies or does it mean that under certain conditions it is possible to insure against a change in the rate of exchange under this legislation? I understand that under this bill that is not possible. However, I believe the minister will agree that there should be a provision for exporters to insure against a change in the rate of exchange by some countries.

Mr. Tucker: Before the resolution carries, I understand that the amount that may be insured in respect of various commodities is limited. For example, I am particularly interested in the total amount of insurance that will be allocated to wheat under this bill. The minister referred also to a limitation in regard to the countries, and would he explain that a little further?

Mr. Churchill: In answer to the first question, the $200 million has been the limit on the amount of insurance. The answer to the second question is that we would like to spread these risks over a large number of countries rather than too much with any one.

Mr. Tucker: I understood the minister to say that there was a limitation in fact placed against the various commodities; in other words, the whole of this $200 million could not be applied to the purchase of wheat, as I understand it?

Mr. Churchill: It may be, Mr. Chairman, that we are getting ourselves mixed up with the Export Credits Insurance Act. At this time we are dealing with section 21. There is $200 million available under the normal operations of the act, and that $200 million is a grand total. It is that for which we are asking.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the minister make any comment now on my question concerning the difference in 24 hours between his estimate of our likely wheat sales in the current year and that of his colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs when this legislation to his knowledge and under his sponsorship had already been introduced?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to answer this question as well as the questions put forward by the hon. member for Acadia. I should like to thank the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River for his lucid and constructive discussion of this problem.

Before I deal with his last question, he did ask about the $104 million of loans from January, 1957 to October, 1957, and how that was distributed. The distribution is, for wheat, $24 million, and on non-wheat sales $80 million dealing with aircraft sent to Germany. The forecast of the exports of wheat for this year—I was not clear whether the hon. member was indicating that I had tied that in with the Export Credits Insurance Act—

Mr. Benidickson: No, your colleague, I understand, did a day after you made an estimate. In other words, was the suggestion valid that almost the entire $100 million would be utilized for extra sales of wheat? The minister has just given us figures indicating that in the current year only $24 million out of $104 million of insurance on 1957 export sales under this act was actually utilized for the sale of wheat.

Mr. Churchill: I am very happy to learn that I am not implicated in that particular forecast. My forecast of 300 million bushels was based on very careful consideration of the world need and our share of the world trade in so far as one could estimate it at this time. The estimate put forward by me—

Mr. Benidickson: May I just ask a question at this time? Was not your estimate made in the knowledge that you proposed to introduce this amendment to the act to enlarge the total amount of credit insurance liability that could be incurred under section 21?

Mr. Churchill: I had some hope that this would be introduced and would be accepted by the house, but at the same time I was not pinning too much hope on a very large increase in our wheat sales by virtue of this measure. This is rather complicated, and at no time have I said that this would necessarily ensure the sale of more wheat. We hope that it will. It gives us room for manoeuvring, room to negotiate. The impression I have received over the last several months is that a great many countries in the world are looking towards credit arrangements for the purpose of buying wheat. When talking to men who have been in the grain trade for many years have indicated to me that this is substantially a new departure that seems now to have been rather widely accepted in various countries throughout the world. It may be that some substantial increase will result from this. On the other hand, my estimate of 300 million bushels was not based to any great extent on this particular measure. With regard to the statement made by my colleague, I may say I am having plenty of trouble looking after my own statements. I think we will let him answer that when he is in the house.

While I am on my feet may I answer the question of the hon. member for Acadia. This bill does not provide for any insurance on the rate of exchange. I do not know that that is done anywhere in the world. It is rather a banking procedure to guard against that fluctuation. At any rate, we have not considered it and this bill does not provide for it. We have not introduced it into this amendment.

Mr. Benidickson: I was very glad to receive that answer from the responsible minister. I think it just indicates his colleague was a little extra exuberant when he was speaking to a Saskatchewan audience shortly after it was announced that this legislation would be forthcoming.

Not necessarily tonight but before second reading would the minister be able to provide the house with a little additional information? Would it be possible for him to tell us whether or not, since the annual report was published at the end of 1956, the capital stock which this house in 1954 authorized the government to pay for has been paid for or is it simply in the status of subscription only? The other question is, would he indicate on second reading what changes, if any, there have been during 1957 in the personnel of the advisory council? It has been a very strong council, as I think is recognized by the house. As a matter of fact it is composed of such a galaxy of names that I recall the hon. member for Greenwood said in 1954 that the former minister of trade and commerce (Mr. Howe) in outlining the personnel of the advisory council, was trying to dazzle the house. I should like to know if there have been any changes in the advisory council.

Mr. Churchill: I will answer both questions right now rather than wait for second reading. As to the first question, the answer is that there is no change at all. As to the second question regarding the personnel, one has resigned by reason of ill health.

Mr. Benidickson: Who was that?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Koerner of Vancouver.

Mr. Benidickson: Has there been a replacement?

Mr. Churchill: Not yet.

Mr. Benidickson: I notice that at the end of 1956 there were fewer representatives from the prairie provinces, I think one instead of two, compared with former years. In view of the emphasis on the sale of wheat I was wondering whether the minister had in contemplation enlarging the representation of the prairies on the advisory council.

Mr. Churchill: I thank the hon. member for his suggestion.

Mr. Tucker: What proportion of the additional $100 million asked for in this measure does the minister envisage being used to promote the sale of wheat?

Mr. Churchill: It is impossible to estimate that. It depends on the negotiations, on the requests from various countries for our wheat. It might well be that the whole $100 million would be used for that. If so, I think that would be quite all right.

Mr. Quelch: The minister stated that there would no doubt be credit sales. Will the wheat board itself make the credit sales or will they be demanding payment in dollars?

Mr. Churchill: These credit sales are consummated through the trade. The various grain dealers conduct the negotiations, make the sale and apply to the corporation for the necessary insurance.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, we in this group certainly welcome the fact that the government has seen fit to add another $100 million to the funds available under the Export Credits Insurance Act. I do so particularly because I see a hope that possibly through this measure we will be able to appeal to countries that wish to import our agricultural products to take advantage of this legislation. I hope that the minister—I am confident he will—will invite countries that wish to buy agricultural products from Canada to take advantage of the additional incentive that he has placed in this legislation.

I have particular reference to the question of buying Canadian rape seed. In the past we have sold great amounts of Canadian rape seed. As a matter of fact, it might be of interest to hon. members to know that today Canada is the largest producer of rape seed in the world. I believe it was in 1955 or 1956 that we sold our entire production to Japan, something in the neighbourhood of 40,000 tons. We have not sold any to that country since that time for the simple reason that Japan has not felt that she was in a position to buy because of the shortage of dollars.

Since that time we have had as our major market the United Kingdom and central Europe. Our sales to the United Kingdom have fallen off quite drastically. As I recall, they were in the neighbourhood of 7 thousand tons and I believe that in the past year they fell to approximately 4 thousand or 4½ thousand tons. But we are maintaining our sales to the Scandinavian countries. I am not prepared to say how much those sales amount to but they are considerable. Central Europe is not as interested in buying Canadian rape seed as they were previously, and again I presume it is because of the shortage of United States dollars.

Therefore I hope the minister will invite these countries to take advantage of the opportunities provided under the Export Credits Insurance Act. I also think we have to do something else. If we are going to interest these countries in buying Canadian rape seed products these products must be competitive with the products of the United States. That applies particularly to oil seeds. I am not going to pursue this matter too far. I hope on another occasion to expand the proposition I am going to mention briefly now. I think it falls in line with the wishes and desires of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in that he has said in effect that he thinks it would be a good thing if we could divert some of the acreage now planted to wheat to some alternative crop or to the raising of livestock, and I entirely agree with him.

I am not sure about the production of rape seed in the whole of Canada but I do know that in Saskatchewan last year we grew in the neighbourhood of half a million acres and it is estimated by Mr. A. D. Miller, the manager of the oil seed processing plant in Saskatoon, that this coming year we could expand that acreage to 1½ million acres. That would be very desirable if we could market the product and we will only market the product if it is competitive with other oil seeds being offered on the world markets.

Therefore we have to see if we can do something to make the product competitive. The first thing I think we must do, and I believe the minister will agree, is to lower the freight rate on the movement of rape seed from the prairie provinces to the lakehead and to Vancouver. At the present time it is 70 cents a hundred as against 23½ cents for flax. It is very unfair, it is discriminatory and causes great hardship for the producers of rape seed. That is only one thing to which we should give consideration if we really want to divert acreage now planted to wheat to some alternative crop.

There is something else I should like to mention to which we must give serious consideration. I refer to the tariff problem existing in this country with relation to oil seeds. We have a potentially great market in this country. Rape seed oil has been under some suspicion because scientists and other people interested in the welfare of the Canadian people have suspected that rape seed contains cholesterol which aggravates heart conditions. But just recently, as a matter of fact in the last month I believe, the national research council issued a report and in that report it is stated quite emphatically as far as they are concerned oil made from rape seed is just as acceptable as any other vegetable oil product. We have a potentially tremendous market in this country and in other countries provided those other countries have the money to buy the product.

I am going to sit down in a moment because I am not going to expand this proposition at this time. There is no tariff on oil seeds or oil processed from such seeds coming into Canada from the United States but there is a substantial tariff on oil seeds and the oil product going into the United States and this situation is causing severe hardship. The people who grow soy beans in Canada must be confronted with the same problem as producers of rape seed.

Here is what is happening. The people in Minnesota and the corn belt of the middle western states who grow soy beans are shipping them into Canada and they are being processed into oil. They can take the oil back to that country if they like but in many cases prior to 1954 they were mixing the United States product with 25 per cent Canadian oil, whether sunflower, soy bean or rape seed oil, and shipping that oil to the United Kingdom thus getting the benefit of the British preferential tariff.

Now that is a pretty deplorable situation. Since, 1954, of course the tariff board has ruled that the mixture must contain not less than 50 per cent Canadian oil, but if that United States product is mixed with 50 per cent Canadian oil it can still be exported to the United Kingdom and be eligible for the British preferential tariff. This is working a real hardship on the producers of this country who are trying to produce an alternative crop in order to receive ready cash.

Now what is the other side of the picture? If we ship rape seed to the United States there is a one cent per pound tariff; if we process rape seed in this country and attempt to ship the oil down there, what do we find? We find on every gallon of oil there is a 5½ cents a gallon tariff plus 2¼ cents per pound tariff on that product and yet we allow the U.S. to export their products into this country, mix it with a percentage of our product, and ship it to the United Kingdom, thereby giving them the opportunity to take advantage of the British preferential tariff. A pretty deplorable state affairs.

This simply means we cannot compete with the United States product. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we are losing our markets in the United Kingdom and central Europe and I am fairly confident that we are losing them because of the situation I have pointed out. I therefore want to suggest to the minister that here we have an opportunity of growing an alternative crop and taking acreage out of wheat production, which is most desirable. First of all however we have to see that our crop is competitive with other crops in other countries. I suggest to the minister that he give some consideration to what I have said in this respect and finally that he invite other countries to take advantage of the act which is now before us in order that we may dispose of some of our surplus agricultural products.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say a word or two in comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort who has twice today made a very constructive speech in the House of Commons. I appreciate his suggestions and will most certainly give consideration to the items about which we have spoken tonight.

The members of the Canadian wheat board are very active in the promotion of sales of our wheat and other grains. I have become well acquainted with them; I had the opportunity of travelling with them in the United Kingdom and other parts of Europe in September when we were discussing the methods of promoting the sale of our wheat. They told me that an increase in the amount of money available under this particular act would be very helpful and when they visit the various countries in Europe, in the future or when they deal with representatives of those countries in Canada, providing parliament passes this amendment they will then be in a position to negotiate with much greater freedom. They have pointed out to me that several suggestions have been made to them with respect to the desire of the various countries to buy Canadian wheat, although they did not have the ready cash available. These countries would like to have credit arrangements made. Now the purpose of this amendment is to give the Canadian wheat board that room for manoeuvre.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort also dealt with the question of rape seed and the disadvantages of making the Canadian product competitive in the world markets because of freight rates, etc. He also drew my attention to what amounts to almost a special privilege to United States rape seed growers in enabling them to take advantage of the British preferential tariff by shipping to Canada, having the rape seed mixed with the Canadian product and thereafter shipping to Great Britain. The first of these two points had previously been drawn to my attention; the second one had not, or if it had it had escaped my notice, and I am very grateful to the hon. member for having mentioned those subjects tonight. We have every hope that this amendment which we have proposed will be of some assistance. We are not pinning all our hopes on just this one measure, however, but, on the contrary, we are prepared to consider any reasonable method for the disposal of our surplus products.

Members of this house have been asking questions of me from time to time and have attempted to get some positive answers which could not be forthcoming because some of these plans have not yet been brought to fruition, but I can assure the house that we are not overlooking any method of disposing of Canada's surplus products. In the course of time we will have proposals to bring before the house leading to this end. We recognize that we cannot match the United States surplus disposal program because, as a country, we have not the financial capacity to do things on the grand scale upon which they do them. However, we have the same desire to assist the under-privileged nations of this world and I think there is the same generous feeling in the minds of Canadians as there is in the minds of the people of the United States. We have every intention, as a government, of doing what can be done along that line. I would just complete my remarks by saying that this particular measure is only one of the various steps which I hope we will be able to take towards disposing more rapidly of our surplus products.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, several times during this session we have had discussions about the possibility of trade with China and I think we have been intrigued with the potential in that regard. I wonder if the minister would care to say whether or not he would at this particular time regard trade with China as worthy of his recommendation under section 21, for the purpose of credit insurance.

Mr. Churchill: Well, trade with China is a matter of very considerable concern to many countries in the world. Representatives from many nations have been visiting China recently in order to stimulate their respective trade. Our trade commissioner in Hong Kong has recently visited China and I hope before the end of this week to be able to report to the house with regard to his observations in that country. Until, however, I have received a report from him I am not in a position to state whether or not anything might be done, but the position I have taken when I have previously been asked this question is that we are not opposed to trading with any country in the world. It is a question of whether proper arrangements can be made and if China can purchase our wheat, and needs it, I do not see why we are not quite ready to sell. If our trade commissioner reports that there is an opportunity, or a desire on the part of China to purchase wheat from Canada, I think that would be very seriously considered by the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Marler: I should like to ask the minister a question. He referred to the report from the trade commissioner at Hong Kong. Am I to understand that the report has not been received by the minister?

Mr. Churchill: The report has reached Ottawa. I have not had a chance to read it, because I returned only yesterday, but I think that between now and tomorrow I will have a chance to peruse it.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Schulz: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word on this subject. I will make it very short because we have already received a lecture today on co-operation, and believing in co-operation I will abide by the decision which has been made. The reason I am so patient is because I am trying to facilitate the business of this house so that we can get to this farm bill, because that will be the biggest thing on the agenda this session as far as I am concerned.

But I must admit it would be a wonderful opportunity to talk about wheat marketing and exporting, especially after we have heard today that our exports went down by 22 million bushels in the new crop year compared with last year. It would be such a wonderful opportunity to get at the Minister of Trade and Commerce, after we have missed him for two weeks.

Mr. Churchill: Go ahead. I am here, I can take it.

Mr. Schulz: I should just like to say that so far as farm organizations are concerned we have always asked that consideration should be given to selling our wheat by more diversified methods such as the acceptance of foreign currency, trade credit arrangements and even relief programs if necessary and I would say that credit arrangements is one of those things. Of course, it has already been instituted by the previous government and I am very happy that this government should see fit to increase the amount available for these credit arrangements with other countries.

That is a step forward, but I am rather disappointed to have to say that it is perhaps the first forward step taken by this government and, also, I must admit that it is a very small step, especially compared with what has been done in the United States. I admit that the United States is a rich country, and perhaps we cannot go quite as far as they have, but $100 million compared with $1,500 million which is available in the United States right now does seem a difference which is a little too great in my opinion, and I think Canada could do much better than this. But my disappointment goes deeper. Surely the minister will admit that if it is necessary to increase the amount available for credit it should be just as important to extend the terms of the credit, and as I understand it our creditors are given only two or three years at the present time. I do not think that is even half good enough. Surely we can do much better than this. The United States is extending credit terms as far as 20, 30 or 40 years.

This is what I have to be critical about: we are lagging behind, and in spite of the fact that I appreciate this proposal I still say that there is a lot of room, especially when our wheat marketing problem in this country is a much greater problem than it is in the United States for a more urgent approach to the situation. I hope that before this bill goes through the minister will consider the proposal that we should at the same time increase the terms of the credit at least up to five or ten years. If the minister will accept that, I would even forgive him for being so complacent yesterday when he answered a question about this possible wheat deal with Australia; when he just pushed it off and said: well, if they want the wheat we are willing to sell it.

I do not think we can take this thing so lightly today. We are in a buyers' market. Regarding this Australian possibility, I should like to read the committee a quotation from the Winnipeg Free Press of December 2.

> Broomhall's Corn Trade News, published in England, recently reported that, as a result of drought, the Australian wheat board is prepared to recommend to the Australian government that it buy 22 million bushels of wheat from Canada.

I think that if I were the Minister of Trade and Commerce I would be out there seeing that these people buy the wheat from us; I would not wait until they came and asked us; I would go out and ask them. In conclusion, I say to the minister that he should not only increase the amount of credit available, though this is appreciated, but that he should consider taking one more step and extending the terms of credit available, too.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the co-operative mood of the house tonight after the stormy scenes this afternoon. I should like to say to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat that I am not a bit complacent about the wheat situation. When the question was put to me about the sale of wheat to Australia I had not seen that article in the paper and I had not been informed about the proposal from Australia. I did not have the facts before me. But we are quite prepared to sell to any country which wants to buy from us, and we are certainly quite prepared to sell to Australia. We have not been at all slack in attempting to push the sales of our wheat.

With regard to the extension of the credit terms, that has also been under consideration. I have raised the question myself on several occasions and the judgment of the wheat board, who are very experienced people in this business, is that the present arrangements are the better type of arrangement. We considered the long-term arrangements in the United States—10 or 20 years, or whatever it is—but with regard to the sale of wheat it is the opinion of the Canadian wheat board that these long-term arrangements are not as suitable as the present ones which they advocate.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Churchill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 199, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AGGREGATE AMOUNT AVAILABLE, DOWN PAYMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954 to increase from two hundred and fifty million dollars to four hundred million dollars the aggregate amount that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund under subsection 1 of section 22 of the act; and also to provide for the reduction of down payments.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, hon. members will notice that this resolution deals with two proposed changes in the National Housing Act; one to increase the amount that is available under section 22 of the act from $250 million to $400 million, and the other to provide for a reduction of down payments. This measure is not designed to be an over-all revision of the National Housing Act. It was not the intention of the government to open the act at all at this session and I gave an answer to that effect to one of the members on orders of the day some weeks ago but the plan which we adopted in August to help in the provision of low-cost homes has been so successful that we now find it necessary to ask for further funds. While doing so we are also asking for a change to lower the down payments because we think that would also be a great help in the provision of housing in Canada at the present time.

I should like to sketch in a bit of background and my first comment would be this. There has been a decline in housing starts from the maximum of 1955. In that year there were 138,000 new housing units started. During 1956 construction was started on a smaller number, namely 127,000 units. It became evident early in 1957 that there would be a further decline in the quantity of new housing started and in the first six months of this calendar year there were only 48,500 starts as compared with 60,200 in the same period in 1956.

When the new government took over we very soon found that a fear was developing in the homebuilding industry of Canada. Builders were very much concerned. They knew, of course, of this falling away of starts and they thought there would be unemployment in their industry. That fear was spreading back into the lines of activity in Canada which supply the materials for homes including, of course, furniture and other essentials; and certainly there was more depression mindedness, if I may call it that, in the homebuilding industry than possibly any other industry in Canada.

We also found that there was a shortage of low cost homes. There was a real demand for cheaper homes but the trend under the National Housing Act and in the ordinary loan business had been in the direction of more and more expensive homes. I was very much surprised to find that the qualifying income for the average National Housing Act loan made by approved lenders in the month of September of this year was $5,350. The average income for borrowers under the National Housing Act was $5,829. There is some reason for this trend because it is a good deal easier to handle a large loan than it is to handle a small one and I think some preference has been given by the different institutions to the larger loans.

Mr. Marler: I do not want to interrupt the minister but does he refer to the average income of applicants or was that the minimum income that an applicant could have?

Mr. Green: The figure I gave represented the average income of borrowers. Faced with that situation we decided to act and a decision was taken to extend the direct lending of the government. It was our view that money should be found without delay to keep the housebuilding industry in active employment and to maintain the supply of housing for an expanding population. We were especially concerned at the difficulties faced by families of ordinary means in raising mortgage money and, as I said, we decided to extend the direct lending activities of the government.

This is where section 22 of the National Housing Act comes into the picture. It provides the authority for moneys to be advanced to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation out of the consolidated revenue fund to an amount not exceeding $250 million. Such funds have been available to the corporation for making loans. By government policy for some years the corporation has made direct loans for certain specified categories of housing. These were principally in the cases of prospective home owners in communities of less than 55,000 population where National Housing Act loans were not available from private lenders approved under the act.

Another type was in the form of loans to limited dividend companies under section 16 of the act for low rental housing. In addition there are other special types of direct loans such as those to primary industries under section 17 and those made to defence workers.

Hon. members will observe that direct loans were not made for ordinary home ownership purposes in the larger urban centres and were not available to house builders producing housing for sale nor, in recent years, for rental. This government source of funds, in fact, had not been used to supplement private National Housing Act investment in the larger cities where the principal supply of new housing is required.

By August of this year about $100 million of the total of $250 million had been used for direct loans, for the purposes which I have mentioned. The government decided at that time that the balance of these moneys—that was roughly $150 million—should immediately be made available in a way that would have the most beneficial effect upon employment in the housing industry and in areas where the need for accommodation was most acute.

We placed certain restrictions on these loans because we felt it was vitally important that they should be used to help people build smaller homes. We were deliberately not trying to give this kind of help for building of the more expensive homes. Restrictions were primarily in the nature of limitation on the floor area. For example, for a three-bedroom bungalow, the floor area allowed was 1,050 square feet. Then, there were other restrictions in the way of not allowing certain features in the home which, while they were very desirable, were not considered as entirely necessary.

As the plan has worked out, the average floor area of bungalows under this agency loan plan is 1,014 square feet which compares with an average of 1,137 square feet for bungalows financed by National Housing Act loans through approved lenders during the year 1957.

Mr. Marler: Did the minister say 1957?

Mr. Green: Yes, during the year 1957. These restrictions have, I think, worked out very well. They are comparatively simple and they have helped bring down the cost of the homes. For example, in September the cost of homes being built under this small home loan program averaged about $2,000 per home less than the cost of single family dwellings financed by approved lenders during the same period.

Hon. members may wonder why the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation did not make those loans directly itself through its own branches. That, we felt, would have resulted in a good deal of delay and it seemed far more practical to work through the regular lending institutions. We believed it would be advisable to utilize the services of the banks and other approved lenders who have developed business relationships with house builders and house purchasers through the National Housing Act. We were aware that since we wanted to get immediate action before winter closed in upon housing construction it might be difficult to effect the necessary arrangements for the private lenders to act as agents of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in this new operation. I would like to take this opportunity to express my admiration for the speed and the efficiency with which those arrangements were made by the banks and the insurance companies and the other approved lenders. We have had first-class co-operation from them and the results have been very gratifying, Mr. Chairman.

I have a report here up to the end of last week, and the loans approved up to November 29 amounted to $132,594,438. In addition to that, there were potential loans in the process of going through the offices estimated at $25,840,000. That makes a total of $158,434,438, so that the scheme is already over the top; we are already over the $150 million.

It has not gone so well in the Atlantic region. There, as of the end of last week, the aggregate volume of loans approved was only $2.1 million for 249 units. It dragged considerably also in the province of British Columbia which should normally take about one-tenth of the total loans across the country. The figure for the west coast province, as of last week, was $8.8 million for 980 units. I do not have the starts under this plan to date. We do not normally get them until the end of the month, but I gave the house figures some days ago and at that time the total starts were 5,992. They will be considerably higher than that at the present time.

From these figures it will be clearly seen that we now require further funds and that is why in these amendments we are asking the house for a further $150 million. I point out that all of that amount will not be available for this low-cost housing plan because, while these activities have been going on, there have also been very extensive activities in the other fields which were covered by section 22, particularly in buildings under the limited dividend corporation plan and also in the direct loans in the smaller centres of the country.

I have here the figures for those types of loans as well. For example, under section 16 there have been approvals since the act was first brought in, in 1954,—and that is when the figure of $250 million was set—of $61,368,987, and there are advances under that section being processed of $4,235,948. Under section 17 there have been approvals amounting to $7,020,451, and under section 40—these are direct loans to the smaller centres —amounting to $56,454,565. The additional $150 million, therefore, will have to be used for the purpose of these other types of advances as well as for the small homes. I estimate, however, that there should be from $75 million to $100 million of this additional amount we are asking available for the smaller homes.

So much for that part of this amendment which will provide additional funds. May I now refer to the other part of the amendment which will reduce the down payment under the act. I have several speeches here prepared for me, and it is becoming rather confusing.

Mr. Marler: Do not give us the same one twice.

Mr. Green: That is the dangerous part of ad libbing in the middle of these written speeches; I am trying to make my remarks more interesting. The second amendment in the bill is to reduce the down payment which borrowers have to make if they are buying or building a new home under the National Housing Act. In this way it is hoped to make it easier for families of modest means to obtain mortgage money under the act. At present the act provides that a borrower may obtain a loan amounting to 90 per cent of the first $8,000 of lending value and 70 per cent of the lending value in excess of $8,000. The amendment will enable a borrower to obtain a loan amounting to 90 per cent of the first $12,000 of lending value, together with 70 per cent of the lending value in excess of that amount. These larger loans will be available to home owner applicants, to builders and to co-operative housing associations constructing either single family houses or two-family housing units.

These new maximum loan ratios would apply to loans made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under section 40 of the act under either the agency or the other lending programs. They would also permit approved lenders to make higher ratio insured loans out of their own funds. I have here a table which perhaps hon. members will allow me to have printed in Hansard which will explain clearly just what these changes would mean. We are not raising the maximum of $12,800. Under the present act where the home has a lending value of $10,000, the loan would be $8,600 and the down payment would be $1,400. Under the proposed amendments the loan would go up from $8,600 to $9,000 and the down payment would go down from $1,400 to $1,000. Where the lending value is now $11,000, the loan would be $9,300 and the down payment $1,700; that is under the law as it is now. Under the proposed change, the loan in such a case would be $9,900 and the down payment $1,100. Where the lending value is $12,000 under the present law, the loan would be $10,000 and the down payment $2,000; under the amendment the loan would be $10,800 and the down payment would be only $1,200. There are other figures in the table which hon. members will see, running up to $16,000 at which figure the down payment would be the same in both cases.

I see it is practically ten o'clock but I am very nearly finished. If hon. members do not object, I will continue.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Green: One thing I should like to make very clear is that we have had excellent co-operation from builders across the country under the small homes plan. It would be very unfair if they were to be caught now with unsold houses on their hands after we have made this change in the amount of down payment. We propose to see that they do not suffer for that reason. It is planned, therefore, that home owners and builders who are already building under the agency loan program will be permitted to renegotiate their loans so that they can take advantage of the higher loan ratios, provided the loan moneys have not been fully advanced. Similarly, any home owner who has obtained a non-agency loan from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under section 40 and to whom only a portion of the loan so far has been advanced will be eligible to claim a higher loan ratio. In both cases the borrower will have to bear any legal charges associated with the renegotiation of the loan.

Then, as I pointed out, we are not making any increase in the ceiling on loans above the figure of $12,800. There is one other change which will be made by regulation, and that is to raise the proportion of an applicant's income that he can spend for the servicing of his loan. When you lower the down payment, you increase the size of the loan accordingly and there is just that much more to be paid. In order to give the maximum help to Canadians with smaller incomes we are raising this ratio.

Coupled with this increase in loans it is proposed that there should also be a change in the regulation affecting the relationship between a borrower's income and the loan he may obtain. Up to now an approved lender has been required to obtain approval of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for loans to applicants proposing to assume debt service over 23 per cent of his income. The amended regulation will authorize approved lenders to proceed without special approval up to 27 per cent of income.

Once again, this will help fulfil the government's aim of making housing loans more readily available to families of moderate means. The government believes that there are many borrowers who would be prepared to put a larger proportion of their income into houses if they were able to obtain a home of their own. The direct effect of raising the ratio of debt service to 27 per cent will be to enable more families to qualify for National Housing Act loans.

For example, to qualify without special approval—there is now a provision for special approval by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for higher ratios—at present for a $9,000 loan a borrower has to have an income of about $4,050. I should say that the actual income required will depend upon the size of municipal taxes, but I am taking $240 as a representative municipal tax figure for the purpose of this example.

Under the 27 per cent rule it will only be necessary to have an income of $3,450 to qualify for a loan of this size. In other words, the income requirement would come down from $4,050 to $3,450.

Similarly, under the new down payment arrangement a borrower can obtain a $12,200 loan on a $14,000 house but with existing regulations regarding the size of debt service he would require an income of nearly $5,200 a year to qualify for a $12,200 loan. When the 27 per cent rule takes effect an income of $4,360 a year will be sufficient.

This change will be made by changing the regulations, not by amending the act. Quite frankly, I should like to be able to help an income group even lower than those who will be helped by this legislation.

Finally, the objectives of these amendments and of the change in regulations are to provide homes for the lower income groups and to raise the morale of the home building industry and all the associate industries. In that regard I think hon. members will agree that our existing plan has already gone quite far in the direction of achieving that objective. The objective is also to furnish employment because the building of all these homes at this time means a great many thousands of additional jobs in Canada. Above all, the objective is to build a better Canada.

As I said in opening my remarks, many other plans are under study by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We would be very glad to have the co-operation of private members of the house. Some of the private members on the government side were very interested in housing and they asked to be given the opportunity to study the whole housing question. They have been doing that with the co-operation of the corporation's officials. Private members of the official opposition have made the same request and they have been given exactly the same facilities. We would be glad to extend those facilities to the members of the other two parties who might be interested in carrying out such a study because these are complicated questions. I do not pretend to know half the answers myself and we want all the help we can get.

I should like to close with a word of commendation for the splendid work done in the field of housing by my predecessor, the Hon. Robert Winters. He and I were friends from the time he first came into the house. I always admired him greatly even though criticizing him pretty severely at times. I realized how much effort he was putting into this job and when I took over the department I was not a bit surprised to find that he had really done a first class job in the housing field. I doubt whether he always got the support from the government that he would have liked. However, sometimes we all have these troubles, I suppose.

Mr. Marler: Who can speak with better authority?

Mr. Green: I should also like to pay credit to the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think they are doing a splendid job for Canada. They have many new and trying problems to face and I am sure we all agree that they merit words of encouragement. I should also like to thank the committee, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me this extra time to finish my statement.

Mr. Barnett: Is it understood that the table to which the minister referred earlier is to be included in Hansard?

Mr. Green: Yes and I will do so. The table follows:

Effect of Changes in Loan Ratio on Down Payments—Maximum by Regulation, $12,800

	Present Act 90 per cent on $8,000 70 per cent on balance		Proposed Amendment 90 per cent on $12,000 70 per cent on balance
Lending Value	Loan	Down Payment	Loan	Down Payment
$10,000	$ 8,600	$1,400	$ 9,000	$1,000

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: What is the business for Thursday?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall take the estimates of the Department of National Defence and, if we finish those estimates, the estimates of trade and commerce.

Mr. Chevrier: You suggested finance for Friday. Is that still the intention?

Mr. Green: I am not sure whether finance would be on Friday or Saturday. My plan is to have finance one day and trade and commerce the other but I cannot say tonight on which day we will take which estimates.

Mr. Chevrier: Can we take it for granted that we will have estimates on Saturday as well?

Mr. Green: So far as I know at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

POSTAL THEFTS

Question No. 151—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did any thefts of postal stamps, money orders, postal notes, cash or otherwise, occur in the different post offices of Canada from June 21, 1957 to date? If so, how many?

2. What was the total sum involved and what new measures if any have been taken by the Post Office Department to prevent such incidents?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes; there were 143 cases where post offices were broken into and in 63 of these cases no cash or postal supplies were stolen.

2. The amount of cash stolen was $10,742. In addition, postage stamps, unemployment insurance stamps, postal scrip and money order forms were stolen. The postage stamps and unemployment insurance stamps do not represent a loss unless they are used. Money order forms do not represent a loss unless they are cashed at post offices.

Security measures now being taken:

(a) Continuation of the program for gradual replacement of all safes in post offices occupying premises provided by the Department of Public Works with new type safes designed in co-operation with the R.C.M.P.

(b) In the planning of new post office buildings, provision is made for a built-in "strong room" containing a burglar-resistant money chest for the cash.

(c) In April of this year, agreement was reached with the Department of Public Works for the installation of glass "ports" in mail lobby doors for new post office buildings. This is to enable our employees to identify callers before opening the mail lobby doors. On doors already installed without ports, provision has been made for the installation of security chains and this program is being carried out at district level.

(d) On June 20 as a result of an agreement with the Department of Public Works, field officers were instructed to arrange with local district architects for the removal of casters on post office safes and where considered practicable have these safes bolted to the floor to increase the difficulty of their illegal removal.

(e) The use of night depository service at banks is being continually extended to reduce the amount of cash held overnight.

(f) Security transfer services are used where necessary to transfer larger amounts.

ASSISTANCE TO LUMBERING INDUSTRY, B.C.

Question No. 168—Mr. Christian:

What steps have been taken by the government since June 10, 1957, to help the lumbering industry in the province of British Columbia, and especially the small loggers who face adverse market conditions?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. The government has already made available for housing loan purposes $150,000,000 and has placed a resolution before the House of Commons which would provide a further $150,000,000 for these purposes. These steps are of substantial indirect assistance to the building industry as with an increase in housing construction will come an increased demand for timber and timber products.

2. An agreement was entered into with the government of the province of British Columbia whereby the government of Canada will pay one-third of the cost of spraying forests in the northern part of Vancouver island to combat an outbreak of the black-headed budworm. Present indications are that the federal contribution will exceed $83,000.

3. An agreement was entered into with the government of the province of British Columbia whereby the government of Canada will contribute, mainly on a 50 per cent basis, toward the cost of capital expenditures made by the province for equipment, roads, etc., required for forest fire protection. It is expected that the federal contribution for 1957-58 will be over $74,000.

4. Indirect assistance is being given through the program of forest research carried on by the federal government in British Columbia including the work of the forest products laboratory at Vancouver. Expenditures in 1957-58 will likely exceed $250,000.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT—RESIGNATIONS

Question No. 234—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Have any civil servants, apart from stenographers and clerks, employed at headquarters of the Department of Public Works resigned since June 21, 1957? If so, how many?

2. What is the name and former duty of each?

3. What reason was given in each case for the resignation?

Answer by: Mr. Hodgson, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. Yes, four.

2. (a) S. Ferizi, technical officer 3; (b) R. M. Bullock, technical officer 7; (c) S. H. Osaka, architect 1; (d) R. G. Gauthier, technical officer 3.

3. (a) No reason given; (b) resigned as an alternative to carrying out departmental instructions; (c) returned to university; (d) returned to university.

STAMP ISSUE—THE QUEEN AND PRINCE PHILIP

Question No. 240—Mr. L'Heureux:

What is the total number of stamps comprised in the issue bearing the picture of Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness Prince Philip?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

51,260,000.

COAL SUBVENTION PAYMENTS, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 250—Mr. MacEachen:

Will the subventions on coal to be used in connection with thermal plants in the maritimes be paid to privately owned companies now operating in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the same manner as to the provincial power commissions?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

The regulations governing the payment of subventions on coal used in thermal plants in the maritime provinces form part of the agreements under negotiation with the authorities in the provinces concerned. Until the agreements are finally concluded, no statement can be made as to the payments.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS, TERREBONNE COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 255—Mr. Raymond:

1. Were any payments made by the federal government to the city of St. Jerome, the town of Ste. Therese and the town of Ste. Agathe des Monts, in the county of Terrebonne, since June 10, 1957?

2. If so, what amounts and under what authority?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. Ste. Therese $1,108.00 pursuant to the Municipal Grants Act.

WHEAT BOARD FLOUR EXPORTS

Question No. 257—Mr. Hansell:

1. Does the wheat board sell for export any flour milled in Canada?

2. If so, (a) how much flour has been sold in 1956, and 1957 respectively; (b) to what countries; (c) how much to each country; (d) what total dollar value to each country?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. No.

2. See answer to question No. 1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 5, 1957

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. VILLENEUVE (ROBERVAL)—PROTEST AGAINST TELEVISION DESIGNATION OF LAKE ST. JOHN

Mr. Georges Villeneuve (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to protest against the T.V. program "Pays et Merveilles" carried last night over the C.B.C. network and which had as its guest the president of the Saguenay historical society.

In the course of that program, a certain controversial theory was brought up with regard to a so-called kingdom of the Saguenay. The guest in question held the view that this area and the Saguenay district are one and the same. I wish to go on record as protesting against this statement since it tends to describe as a single area several different areas including the Lake St. John district, where I live, which has never gone under any other name but that of Lake St. John.

On behalf of my fellow citizens in the area, which comprises the present constituencies of Lake St. John and Roberval, I wish to protest to the C.B.C. authorities against this sabotaging of a name for which I have the greatest regard, a feeling which I share with my electors and with all those who live in this fine Lake St. John area. We wish to defend the true meaning of a designation which has been consecrated by over one hundred years of history and which is widely known even beyond the borders of Canada. We refuse to let the area be called otherwise than by the name which it has always had ever since there have been people living there, that is the Lake St. John area.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—REPORTED LINE-UP OF UNEMPLOYED AT BREWERY MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In this morning's Gazette there is a picture of a line-up of men before the old brewery mission in Montreal, which undoubtedly he has seen; and according to the superintendent of the mission this is due to the present unemployment situation. However, in all fairness to the minister and to the superintendent I should add that he says the situation is not entirely due to unemployment but that there are other reasons for it.

I ask the minister in view of the picture, which I am informed is one of the first of its kind with respect to this mission in Montreal for a long, long time, what is being done by his department to put into effect the winter speed-up against unemployment in the city of Montreal.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I say first of all that I have not seen the Montreal Gazette this morning, and second that I have nothing further to add to what has already been said in this house with respect to the actions of this government in trying to help create employment for more people, and also our actions as expressed in the legislation which has now gone through this house to help alleviate the situation by the amendment of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Chevrier: Then may I ask a supplementary question. The superintendent of the mission says that in order to carry on he must have another $40,000. Will the minister consider making that contribution from his department?

Mr. Starr: The government has received no request from anyone for this aid, but if a request is received I can assure the hon. member that it will be given consideration.

[Later:]

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED CLOSING DOWN OF HOWE SOUND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister aware that last night the management of Britannia mine notified the workers that the mine would close down in two weeks unless assistance was forthcoming and, if so, can he make any announcement on government plans to give this required assistance?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did receive word last night of a statement made by the mine manager in Vancouver to the effect to which the hon. gentleman has just referred.

I am not of course in a position nor would I care to comment in any way on the statement made in Vancouver. I can say, however, that I checked with the officials of the company in New York this morning, and can inform the house that this conversation confirmed the telephone conversation which took place I think on Tuesday, and to which I referred yesterday. The effect of these talks is that there is still some possibility that an arrangement might be reached which would enable the mine to continue operations, but on a reduced scale. The decision with regard to the reduced scale of operations is one which has been communicated to me by the company; it is not one which we have suggested.

Therefore the situation with which we are confronted is to see whether arrangements can be arrived at which would enable operations to be carried on on a reduced scale, and what can be done with respect to those men who would not be taken care of by such reduced scale of operations. That was the situation reported to me by the company last Tuesday as a result of their review of the report from the expert consultant whom they sent in to the mine.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF LETTER FROM MEMBER FOR VANCOUVER-BURRARD TO PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct two questions to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Taylor) has made public a five-page letter addressed to the Prime Minister outlining the very serious unemployment situation in British Columbia and suggesting remedies? If so, will the Prime Minister consent to make his answer also public, so the people of British Columbia will know what action his government proposes to take on the recommendations of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I have not received the letter and have not received a copy of it. When it is received and when I see it naturally it will be considered, because above everything else this government wants to consider every matter that ought to be brought to its attention, and particularly one affecting the welfare of the people as a whole.

Mr. Sinclair: The Prime Minister may have forgotten my second question. It was, will the Prime Minister make his reply to that letter also public?

Mr. Speaker: The second question has become hypothetical. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister says he has not received the letter I do not think a reply to the second question is necessary.

FISHERIES

ELIGIBILITY OF SCALLOP AND LOBSTER FISHERMEN FOR BOUNTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I would like to ask the Minister of Fisheries a question. Will the minister advise the house if it is possible to add the names of fishermen engaged in the catching of scallops and lobsters to the list of deep sea fishermen receiving the fishing bounty?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to the question is no, but perhaps I might be permitted to give some explanation as to the reason for that answer. The bounty paid to fishermen in the four provinces—Quebec and the three maritime provinces—arose as the result of a treaty made in Washington in 1871 between the government of Britain on the one hand and the government of the United States on the other, under which each nation granted to the other certain rights for its fishermen to fish in each other's territorial waters—in the case of Canada in the territorial waters on the east coast, and in the case of the United States the territorial waters as far south as the 39th parallel.

It was considered that the concessions made on behalf of Canada were greater than those made by the United States, so the terms of the treaty provided that a commission should be set up to arrive at the difference in value. This was done. The commission sat in Halifax and made an award known as the Halifax award, under which the United States paid to Britain the sum of $5,500,000. This was handed over by Britain to Canada and Newfoundland. Of this sum I believe just over $1 million was paid to Newfoundland and almost $4,500,000 to Canada.

This amount was considered by the Canadian government to be owned by all Canadians, and it was placed in the consolidated fund; but as the result of objections from the Atlantic provinces a bill was passed—an act now known as the Deep Sea Fisheries Act—under which a bounty was paid to fishermen. But since the treaty has from the very beginning specifically excluded shad, salmon, shellfish, and fish caught in rivers or the estuaries of rivers, the whole basis on which the award is made specifically excludes that type of fishery, so it is considered impossible to pay any bounty now with respect to shellfish or lobster fishing of any kind.

WEST COAST—REQUEST FOR BOUNTY OR FLOOR PRICE ON DOGFISH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like also to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister in a position to make a statement to the house on what the government intends to do about the request of west coast fishermen for a bounty on dogfish, or for a floor price to be established on dogfish livers and carcasses, in order to assist them during the coming winter season?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not at the moment in a position to do this, but the matter is under consideration. I will take the question as notice and answer when it is possible to do so.

NOVA SCOTIA—ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN FOLLOWING STORM LOSS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the severe southwesterly storms which have done a great deal of damage to the lobster traps in the southwestern end of Nova Scotia, is his department taking any specific action to assist the fishermen who have suffered this severe loss?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I might say this matter is under consideration in the department. I am not in a position to make a reply at the present time.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Last night the minister stated he had received a report from the trade commissioner in Hong Kong. Could he now tell this house what officials our trade commission visited in China, and what was the result of that tour?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The report has been received. It is 50 pages in length, and I have not yet finished reading it. I am sorry I have not made more progress. I hope to finish it today, and perhaps if the hon. member would repeat his question tomorrow I will have the answer for him.

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When I raised a question along the same lines some days ago I asked the minister to tell the house what officials of the communist government were visited by this trade mission. Is he now in a position to give this information?

Mr. Churchill: If that is in the report, I have not reached it yet.

HAY—INSPECTION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA IMPORTS

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, notice of which has been given. What notification, if any, is given by the federal government to the province of British Columbia to advise it when hay is to be imported, to make it possible for the British Columbia government to establish whether such hay is free from the presence of obnoxious weeds?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no statement of intention is required with respect to intended imports of hay. Therefore no information on this point can be conveyed by this government to the government of British Columbia.

The Department of Agriculture maintains a hay grading service which is available to buyer or seller on application and the payment of the established fee. Inspection is not compulsory, and individuals are free to buy and sell either imported or home grown hay according to their own arrangements. Most provinces have weed control legislation and their own means of enforcement, which apply equally to imported and home produced material which may be regarded as likely to spread serious weed infestations.

FLOUR—REPORTED INCREASE IN EXPORTS TO CARIBBEAN AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of a news report appearing in the Western Producer commenting on a report from the Canadian trade commissioner in the Caribbean with respect to Canadian flour exports to that area. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house whether the serious trend involving a drop in our exports of Canadian flour to that area has changed, as reported in this article? If so, has the trend changed because of the lowering of the export price of flour to that area, and must the Canadian producer stand the price reduction? Can the minister inform the house if the government will take into consideration the making of deficiency payments to the producers, so the farmers will not have to carry this additional load?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to determine whether a question is being asked or a speech made. If the hon. member will let me see these various newspaper reports and if I have an opportunity to read his speech in full, perhaps I will be able to give him a reply.

Mr. McCullough: Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house whether exports of Canadian flour to the Caribbean area have dropped quite seriously?

Mr. Churchill: We have lost some of our export market for flour in the Caribbean area during the course of this year, largely due to increased shipments of United States flour into that area under a very substantial subsidy. Our exports of flour have declined.

Mr. McCullough: Can the minister inform the house what action has been taken by the Canadian government to correct this situation?

Mr. Churchill: We drew the situation to the attention of the United States authorities. Unless we are prepared to subsidize Canadian flour to the same extent that United States flour is subsidized, I am not sure what other action can be taken at the moment. The matter is under consideration. We hope we will be able to retain our long-established market for Canadian flour in that area. This may be only a temporary condition.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): How does this conform to the understanding we believed was arrived at when the minister returned from Washington, that the program of the United States would not interfere with our established markets?

Mr. Churchill: This had been going on for a considerable time before we visited Washington. I do not know whether any action was taken by the former administration with regard to the matter. The assurances given us at Washington had to do with barter deals for wheat in exchange for strategic materials involving our cash customers, the United Kingdom and various countries of Europe.

Mr. McCullough: Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce state to the house that any policy the government finds it necessary to adopt to meet this competition will not mean that the burden will have to be carried by the western producers?

Mr. Churchill: I think not, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

BUTTER AND EGGS—QUANTITIES STORED BY AGRICULTURAL PRICES SUPPORT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Melville asked me two questions in regard to the amount of butter and the number of cases of eggs held by the agricultural prices support board. The answers are as follows.

The first question was: How much butter was held in store on December 1 in the years 1955, 1956 and 1957. Figures are not available for that precise date, but the figures I am giving are correct within one or two days in each case. On December 2, 1955, there was in store 92,333,442 pounds. On November 30, 1956, there was in store 81,072,016 pounds. On November 29, 1957, there was in store 34,052,254 pounds.

The other question was: How many cases of eggs had the agricultural prices support board in store on December 1, 1955, 1956 and 1957. In all cases the answer is nil. None were in store on those dates. I might add that I can quite appreciate the hon. gentleman's interest and curiosity about the number of eggs in store on the last date, because he left me a legacy of about 360,000 cases of eggs, 30 dozen in a case. I am very pleased to be able to tell him that as a result of using the most energetic selling means possible we have managed to dispose of all those eggs.

PUBLICATION "CANADA—PRICES OF SELECTED AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister now made inquiries to ascertain whether in fact in this house some days ago he referred to a document which was a secret document, and as a result of his inquiries can he say whether this secret document will now be made available to all members of this house?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the document referred to, which is entitled "Prices of Selected Agricultural Products", was put out by the economic division of the Department of Agriculture and is not a secret document. I must, however, apologize to the hon. member and to the house for having been under the misapprehension that it was a document which was put into general circulation in the same way as numerous other documents concerning price information, which are given general circulation by the Department of Agriculture.

I find that this document was circulated only within the department, due to the fact that there are six or seven statistics in it secured from the bureau of statistics which the bureau of statistics itself did not publish. It was therefore considered inappropriate by the officials of the Department of Agriculture for them to publish figures which the bureau of statistics had not published, and it has not been made a public document.

However, having now discovered what is the situation in regard to this matter, I have given instructions that any figures of this sort—and there are only six or seven of them all told—shall be left out of this particular document, and the document from now on will be available to all members and anyone else interested in it, because I am only too anxious to make all the price information which we have and can secure available to members and other interested people.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—STATEMENT AS TO ENGINEERING REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on December 3 in response to a question by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources informed this house that the final report of the British Columbia Engineering Company Limited regarding the possibility of a diversion of the waters of the Columbia river to the Fraser river was received on January 9, 1957.

On December 4 the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet inquired whether the answer given related to a preliminary report of British Columbia Engineering. I undertook, as Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, to look into the matter and provide my hon. friend with a reply. I can now confirm the statement made by my colleague on December 3, namely that the final report of the British Columbia Engineering Company on a possible diversion from the Columbia to the Fraser river was received on January 9, 1957.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask the minister if it is not a fact that the report that was received at that time from the British Columbia Engineering Company Limited was in its true sense a preliminary report and an initial draft? It may have since become final, but at that time it was a preliminary report, and I would like to ask when it was decided that this report was the final report.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's memory of this matter has perhaps grown a little blunt.

Mr. Lesage: Oh, no.

Mr. Harkness: I think the hon. gentleman is somewhat confused, judging from the information I have been able to secure from the department in regard to the various reports which were submitted. As a matter of fact I find that the preliminary report of the British Columbia Engineering Company Limited was submitted some time previous to this date and then their final report was submitted, as indicated by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, on January 9.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, I will send a copy of the preliminary report to the minister.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He has a better memory than you have.

[Later:]

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, I have just sent the Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a copy of the report we were discussing a few moments ago. It is dated January, 1957. Is he satisfied with my memory now? Is he satisfied that this is the initial draft of a preliminary report that was received in January, 1957?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not at all satisfied.

Mr. Lesage: Well, you cannot read.

Mr. Harkness: This is a different report altogether. Apparently there have been two reports. The report to which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources referred and the one to which I referred in the statement I made a little while ago was the final report made to the hon. member, who was then minister of northern affairs and national resources, on January 9, 1957. This initial draft, as it is called, apparently was transmitted to him on January 8, 1957.

Mr. Lesage: And received on the 9th.

Mr. Harkness: —and is a different report altogether. In other words he has been confused about the two reports, as he ordinarily is. Apparently he has both reports in his mind combined into one.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. members had better settle this matter outside the house.

Mr. Lesage: No, Mr. Speaker. If I may be allowed just one word, I do not want to discuss the matter any more—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lesage: What I asked for was the report on the diversion of the waters of the Columbia river to the Fraser river. This is the preliminary report on that matter.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harkness: So there will be no doubt in anyone's mind that what I have said is correct and the hon. minister is confused—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: You are more confused.

An hon. Member: You are on the wrong side of the house.

Mr. Harkness: This report, Mr. Speaker, does not mention diversion at all. It is a preliminary report entitled "Proposals for the hydroelectric development of the Columbia river system in Canada".

Mr. Lesage: In Canada, by diversion.

Mr. Harkness: The other report, and the report on which he asked a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, was a report on the diversion of the waters of the Columbia to the Fraser, and that was the report with regard to which he received an answer.

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question of the Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who kindly sent this report across to me. I wonder whether he has read page 2 which starts off as follows: "Proposed diversion of the Columbia, into the Thompson and Fraser rivers".

Mr. Lesage: There is nothing else but diversion mentioned in that report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED BREAKING OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC CODE BY VENEZUELA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is based on press reports in the Toronto Globe and Mail and also in the New York Times to the effect that there is a report from Chile that the security police of Venezuela have broken the Canadian diplomatic code. Can the minister say whether that code has in fact been broken? If so, what has been done about it?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all we know in the department at the moment is what we have gleaned from the press reports. On Friday we requested our ambassadors in Chile and Venezuela to report on the matter. We have not as yet received their reports. In order to get to the bottom of this matter we have taken other steps which I prefer not to disclose. We have taken other steps to ascertain what are the facts of the case.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

RETURN OF VESSELS TRANSFERRED TO FOREIGN REGISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. May I ask him whether the government is giving consideration at the present time to the return of the flag of Canadian National Steamships from Trinidad to Canada?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had no indication of any such intention by the management of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister not make a statement on the present position, in view of the fact that when he made his last statement in the house on November 11 he indicated that the purpose of the transfer from Canada to Trinidad was to enable a settlement of the strike to be reached? Since that has not been obtained within the last three and one half to four weeks, can the minister bring us up to date on what is happening in that respect?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, when I made my statement on that day the hon. member for Laurier will remember I said that the transfer of the flag was made in order to have the service restored, and I think I can add nothing more to what I said then about this case. When I answered the suggestion that the railways and shipping committee should be convened for the purpose of examining into the circumstances resulting in the transfer of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships vessels to Trinidad registry I said, as reported at page 1563 of Hansard:

> The management of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships advise me that they are engaged at the present time in a thorough examination into all the implications of the restoration of the service.

Hon. George C. Marler (St. Antoine-Westmount): May I ask a supplementary question. When the transfer of the vessels to Trinidad registry was effected was there an understanding between the government of Canada and the authorities in Trinidad that at the request of the Canadian government these ships would be returned to Canadian registry, in the same way that is provided for under what is generally referred to as the transfer plan with the United Kingdom?

Mr. Hees: Yes, that is my understanding.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. Can he give birth to any further information on this question?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Marler: May I ask a further supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. In reply to my question with regard to the transfer of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships vessels to Trinidad registry he indicated that an understanding had been reached by which these vessels could be recalled to Canadian registry. Would the minister be good enough to tell us with whom those arrangements were made, whether it was by means of an exchange of notes or in what other manner?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the maritime commission spoke to me about this matter, and I have advised the management of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships of what the chairman of the maritime commission told me.

Mr. Marler: Will the minister perhaps make a more comprehensive statement giving us the facts, rather than merely reporting his conversation with the chairman of the maritime commission?

Mr. Hees: I will check into this matter, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

MONTREAL—SPOT ADVERTISING RATES CHARGED BY LOCAL STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I sent him a copy of the news clipping upon which the question is based. Has the minister received representations, by letter or otherwise, protesting that the rate charged for one minute spot advertisements by radio station CBM, a C.B.C. Montreal station, is far below that charged by competing private stations? If so, what does his department intend to do about it?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): To the best of my knowledge I have received no such letter. It may have come in yesterday, when I was not down at the other office. If I receive such a letter I will, as always, refer it to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which will take such action on the matter as it sees fit.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT ON REPORTED FAILURE TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me a question reported at page 1825 of Hansard, with regard to a press story about non-payment of accounts for rental accommodation of refugees in Calgary. I now have available a preliminary report on the situation.

I am advised by our Calgary office that they do not have any outstanding rental accounts in which the church named in the article is involved, nor has this church approached the Calgary office for payment.

With regard to the family which was mentioned in the article as having suffered, I am advised that this family have made numerous requests for assistance. The head of the family is presently employed, earning $45 a week. Because of the numerous requests a member of the Catholic counselling service was asked to investigate. He reported, in effect, that the financial difficulties of this family are somewhat of their own making. They have been purchasing items such as a television set and a record player, and they also own a second hand Austin car. It was recommended by the investigator that they be given no further assistance from our department.

There was only one rental account for this family in March of this year, and it was brought about because they were living with another family and broke up their living quarters because of family problems. When this family sought new quarters we were asked to pay for their rental. However, no bill for this has ever been received. I think the hon. member will probably agree that under the circumstances reported there is not any very urgent necessity for us to intervene in connection with that particular family.

With regard to the other 20 accounts outstanding which are mentioned in the article, a full report is expected from the assistant district superintendent in Winnipeg.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—EFFECT OF LONGER SEASON ON MARITIME PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the longer season for shipping on the St. Lawrence river, which is supported by the minister, be harmful or otherwise to the ports of Saint John and Halifax?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I would think the hon. member, being a maritime member, would perhaps be in a better position to answer that question than I am.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not intend to answer the question myself, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to have an answer from the Minister of Transport if possible.

Mr. Hees: I cannot see that it would.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

WINDSOR—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Since the filing of additional supplementary estimates by this government was made in October of this year, which is a matter of record, will the minister now tell us why an item for construction of the new post office in Windsor as contemplated by the previous government was not included?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I think the supplementary estimates were filed before this question arose. Perhaps it would be more to the point if the hon. member for Essex West could tell us why his own government did not do something about it earlier.

Mr. Sinclair: Do you want help?

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Since I have been invited to make a statement on this matter—

Mr. Speaker: I must rule the question out of order. I invite the hon. member to resume his seat. This is not a matter which is his responsibility, and it is irregular to ask questions of the members of the house unless it is a matter of their own responsibility.

Mr. Sinclair: It is evasion of responsibility.

Mr. Brown (Essex West): Then may I ask the minister to withdraw his invitation?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON ADMISSION OF NEEDY EX-SERVICEMEN TO DEPARTMENTAL HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. Brooks (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I should like to reply to a question which was asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). His question was:

> Has the minister received letters from veterans, including one named Brooks, complaining of the fact that while immigrants and in some cases United States personnel are admitted to Shaughnessy hospital, certain veterans are denied admission?
> Can the minister assure the house that no needy veterans requiring treatment will be denied admission to departmental hospitals?

The answer to the first part of the question is that I have received a letter from Mr. David Brooks requesting that the means test be removed from the operation of section 13 of the veterans treatment regulations. I have not received letters from veterans complaining about being denied admission to Shaughnessy hospital.

The answer to the second part of the question is that I can assure the house that no veteran who is eligible under any section of the veterans treatment regulations and who does require treatment is ever denied admission to departmental hospitals.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the house why it is that those who are not eligible for admission are referred by his own officials to the provincial authorities to be taken care of?

Mr. Brooks: I do not know of any such cases. The hon. member has spoken about those who had not the means. I might say that under the veterans treatment regulations as they are at present, any eligible veteran whose income is below $960—and that is an adjusted income; exemptions are made for wife and children which are taken off the true income and he is admitted under the adjusted income—he can have free hospitalization. For adjusted annual incomes from $960 to $1,000 the maximum charge is $20 for twelve months; he does not have to pay any more. From $1,000 to $1,100 it is $33.

I am not going to read the complete list. I point this out to show that the charge is adjusted according to the income of the veteran, and our information is that these veterans with low incomes are not denied hospitalization. We have received no complaints in this connection except from the hon. member.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES—APPLICATION TO FLY MONTREAL-VANCOUVER ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport if he has anything to report in regard to the application of Canadian Pacific Airlines for an air service from here to the west coast?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAHN—ALLEGED DENIAL OF OPPORTUNITY TO SEE REPORT ON WATER DIVERSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I rise on a question of privilege, arising out of discussions between the Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Harkness) and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Lesage).

As I understand it, there seems to be some difficulty in determining the nature of a particular report referred to, and the Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has denied this house the privilege of seeing such report, while the hon. member has been relying upon his memory, as I follow the situation. However, someone else has a copy of that report. My question of privilege is this. Should not this house, if there is such a copy in the hands of another member other than a member of the government, be privileged to have the report tabled at this time?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think perhaps I should say something in regard to the matter. The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet received this report in his capacity as a minister of the crown.

Mr. Lesage: It is a copy.

Mr. Harkness: The report belongs to the government of Canada, and I think there is a grave question as to whether or not he should have retained possession of this report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harkness: I do not know how many other reports, received by him as a minister of the crown, have been retained in his possession.

Mr. Lesage: It is a copy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. minister in his last remarks is going beyond what would be permitted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: If he has a motion to make based on the retention of the report I would entertain it now, but otherwise—

Hon. James Sinclair (Coast-Capilano): At this point, Mr. Speaker, I think I should say a word or two. The minister just sent across to me that copy; therefore the report can no longer be secret, since he has made it available to another member of this house.

Mr. Fleming: That is not the point.

Mr. Harkness: That is absolutely incorrect, Mr. Speaker. This report was sent over to me by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet; I looked at it and identified what particular report it was, and then called a messenger. I gave it to the messenger and said, "Take this back to Mr. Lesage".

Mr. Sinclair: Take it back again, then.

Mr. Hahn: To pursue further my question of privilege, which seems to have got lost in the shuffle some place, there appear to be two documents in this place at the present time and I think the house has the right to see at least one of them, namely the one which the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet has placed in the possession of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Speaker: I do not consider that a question of privilege. The hon. member will appreciate that it is not the right of the house to see these documents which have been the subject of discussion in this house. It seems to me to be a case of identity or of mistaken identity. I have asked the house not to pursue the matter further, and I think hon. members, if there are still any differences between them, might confer outside and then bring the matter back if they see fit.

Mr. Hahn: Possibly my question of privilege has been misunderstood. As it is, there is a document in this house which is being bandied back and forth between the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet and the Minister of Agriculture. Other hon. members in the house, including myself, would like to see this document, which is apparently one which the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has on file. I ask that it be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: That is quite a different matter. If it were tabled it would be a matter of privilege for the house to see it. But it has not been tabled, and I am sure there is no such right as the hon. member is endeavouring to assert. He is asking the question now whether the document will be tabled, though he has not directed it to any minister—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hahn: I would ask the Minister of Agriculture, who has seen the document, whether, if the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has this document, he would see to it that it is tabled.

Mr. Coldwell: Is it not a fact that when a minister refers to a document in the house he must table it?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is mistaken about that. I think he might be asked to table it, and perhaps the minister would have no ground for refusing to table it unless it were a document involving security or something of a confidential nature. But the question has now been asked of the Minister of Agriculture whether he will table this document.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources dealt with this question when it came up on December 3, and he stated at that time that the final report, of which this particular document was only the initial or preliminary draft, had been received only on December 2; that it required considerable study before any decision was made with regard to tabling it or doing anything else along that line and, naturally, as the final report concerning this particular matter has just come in, there would be no good purpose served by tabling this document. I do not think it would be in the public interest to table a document which was a preliminary report and incomplete.

I will only say further, in connection with this particular document, that I did not introduce it into the house. It was introduced by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. I did not quote from it and, therefore, I do not think the point made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has anything to do with the matter.

As a matter of fact, now that this document has been sent over to me, I think before I return it to the hon. member I will have to have the matter considered by my colleagues, because I consider that this is the property of the government of Canada and should never have been in the hon. member's hands at all.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, this is a copy of a report which I received in my capacity as minister of northern affairs and national resources.

Mr. Churchill: You should have left it there.

Mr. Lesage: This is a copy of a report on which I had to take action, and I did. Therefore I kept a copy, and it seems to me that as a former member of the cabinet I am entitled to keep a copy of a document which would justify the action I had to take in my capacity as minister.

Mr. Churchill: You are on the spot.

An hon. Member: The government is on the spot.

Mr. Hahn: Apparently the document is one which should be in the hands of the government. In the circumstances I would ask that it be tabled, in view of the fact that some hon. members have had access to it and we have been denied that privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has already asked that the document be tabled, and he has had his answer. I consider that matter closed.

PUBLIC WORKS

OTTAWA AND GATINEAU RIVERS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION WALLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister taken advantage of the federal-provincial conference to discuss with the premier of Quebec as to which government is responsible for protection walls along the Ottawa and Gatineau rivers?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I was not representing the federal government at the dominion-provincial conference, and I had no conversation with the premier of Quebec at all.

Mr. Caron: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the minister to discuss the matter with the Quebec authorities who claim it is a federal responsibility?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I explained the situation to the hon. member the other day. I told him that the federal government was willing to co-operate but that it would have to be a three-way transaction between the provinces, essentially, and the federal government.

Mr. Caron: Then may I ask a further supplementary question. The answer was given about the bridge, but this is the protection walls along the Ottawa river and the Gatineau river. Would you like me to repeat my question? Is it the intention of the minister to discuss with the Quebec authorities the matter of the protection walls, because the Quebec authorities claim it is a federal responsibility?

Mr. Green: The federal government accepts responsibility for walls or other protection work where damage is caused by navigation. I have also explained that to the hon. member on several occasions. It is not our responsibility to discuss with the government of the province of Quebec or with any other government work which is not our responsibility.

Mr. Caron: Then may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Would the minister submit the question to the supreme court to have a ruling as to which government has the responsibility for destruction caused by navigable waters, even not very much navigated?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSTAL UNION—EMPLOYMENT OF TRANSLATORS FOR SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yves Leduc (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, on November 25, as reported in Hansard at page 1473, I asked the following question:

When the international postal convention took place in this house last summer, did the authorities responsible for the organization of the simultaneous translation system hire translators from Canada only, or also from elsewhere for translation from French to English and from English to French? How much did the temporary system cost the government?

Would the minister tell me when it will be possible to answer my question and, when he is ready to do so, will he also tell me how many Canadian translators were hired and how many translators other than Canadians were used?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): In the first instance, hon. members looking up the reference will find that the question was raised in the course of a debate on a simultaneous translation system, a debate in the course of which I had already made a statement before the question was asked, and in which therefore I could not speak again. If the government adopted the attitude that it was going to answer on the orders of the day all questions raised in debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say that if that is the quotation which the hon. member put to the minister it is out of order to resume now the discussion of a matter which has been disposed of by this house. Was the hon. member reading from the debate on this matter as reported in Hansard?

Mr. Leduc (Verdun): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Then I would ask the hon. member to drop it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

GUARD PATROL AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not having sent him notice, but I am sure he will not require time to prepare an answer. Is it true that guards have been detailed to patrol the gates leading to the Prime Minister's residence in Ottawa and, if so, is this part of the Prime Minister's solution to the current rise in unemployment?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative, and the second part, being facetious, requires no answer. There has, however, been a change to this extent, that instead of having one organization looking after the home, as was the case during the days of the present Leader of the Opposition, there are today two police officers made available for duty throughout the day and at appropriate hours. It is simply a matter of a change of arrangement to suit convenience.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Are you scared?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member is the last person who should ask that question.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask the Prime Minister if they are city police or Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Royal Canadian Mounted Police. They have been available at all times at Government House, across the way. As a matter of fact, the change was made for convenience.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ELECTRICAL ENERGY DEVELOPMENT, N.B.-N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Gloucester made an inquiry as to when he might expect a certain return to be made. I regret the delay in tabling the correspondence and other documents called for by address No. 17 which was passed by the house as an order for return on November 8.

This return requested by the hon. member covers correspondence between federal departments and agencies and the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and their respective power commissions. A good deal of material is involved in the return, and it has been necessary to check the files of a number of federal departments and agencies. This process is almost finished, and it is expected that within two or three days the Secretary of State will have on hand a complete set of material for tabling. It will then be necessary, however, for the Secretary of State to obtain clearance from the two provincial governments concerned before tabling can take place. Everything possible will be done to bring forward the return at the earliest date.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY REGARDING DEDUCTIBILITY OF MEDICAL EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Have we reached that particular time in the session, to which the minister referred on October 22, when we might expect an announcement from the Minister of Finance regarding the deductibility of all medical expenses for income tax purposes, along the lines supported by the Minister of Finance in the more halcyon days when he was on the opposition side of the house?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I must refer my hon. friend to what I said in the house on Tuesday last.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does that answer mean we may expect a statement on this matter tomorrow?

Mr. Fleming: That answer means that what the Minister of Finance said in the house on Tuesday still stands, and what he said about taking up matters pertaining to the financial policies of the government will be open for consideration when the estimates of the Department of Finance are submitted to the committee of supply.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is tomorrow?

Mr. Fleming: No, that is not tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister's tone be the same then as now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but isn't this Thursday? May I ask a supplementary question. I was flying during the night and I had forgotten what day it is. Is it not true that the house leader indicated that the estimates of the Department of Finance would be before us on Friday?

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Fleming: I shall take the liberty of directing the attention of my hon. friend to what the leader of the house said last night at ten o'clock, which appears in Hansard.

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POLICY RESPECTING SATELLITE STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I have not given him notice, and he may wish to defer the answer until the next sitting. Is the minister now in a position to make a statement as to what policy, if any, has been decided upon with regard to the establishment of satellite television stations in areas which are not now reached by the national network?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I am not in a position to make a statement about the policy with respect to that matter, Mr. Speaker, but the matter will be dealt with when the supplementary estimates of the department are before the house.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence services—

240. To provide for the Canadian forces, the defence research board and other expenditures relating to defence, including costs incurred in the participation of the Canadian forces in the United Nations emergency force and contributions toward the military costs of the North Atlantic treaty organization; to authorize expenditures in the current year out of the amount hereby provided, not exceeding $130,000,000, under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and to provide that, notwithstanding subsection (3) of that section, where equipment or supplies are transferred, the estimated present value thereof shall be credited to this vote instead of being paid into the special account mentioned in the said subsection (3), and when so credited may be expended for the purposes of the Canadian forces; and notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act to authorize total commitments for the foregoing purposes of $3,338,164,131 regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,521,731,982 will come due for payment in future years), $1,669,450,149.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, the last time hon. members had an opportunity to discuss defence matters in detail was in June and July of 1956, when the estimates of the Department of National Defence were before the house and approved. Since that time there have been a number of important changes of a military and strategic nature. As this is a new house in which there are a number of new members it might be helpful if I say something about our defence commitments as they presently exist in the light of these changes.

Before I do so, however, I would like to make reference to my predecessor in this office, the former hon. member for Vancouver Centre. The brief period during which I have been Minister of National Defence has given me an understanding of the problems he had to face. Despite the onerous duties which were his lot Mr. Campney never failed to treat inquiries from me with courtesy, a practice I shall hope to follow. While we were not always satisfied with the replies, he did endeavour to obtain answers to those inquiries as quickly as possible. In the house we may have had differences over the shape of Canada's defence policy, but we were in full agreement as to the need of such a policy. I understand that Mr. Campney has now returned to his law practice in Vancouver, and I am sure all of us here wish him well in his profession.

I would also like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the senior service officers and the civilian heads of branches in the department. Since assuming office I have received the utmost co-operation and assistance from them all, and I know that without their help and support my job as minister would have been a great deal more difficult to carry out.

Our defence policy is, of course, to provide for the security of Canada. We believe the best way to achieve this aim is through membership in a collective defence organization such as NATO. While our contributions to this organization at present constitute our main defence commitments, we are fully aware of the importance of the United Nations and we will continue to assist the United Nations to attain its objectives in every possible way.

A large number of Canadian servicemen, over 900 in fact, form part of the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East, and we have supplied some 130 personnel of our armed services for the truce commission in Indo-China, the United Nations truce supervisory organization in Palestine and the truce team in Kashmir. Our membership in this NATO regional alliance is in no way contrary to the spirit of the United Nations organization. Article 51 of the charter reads in part:

> Nothing in the present charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self defence.

By forming this unique organization the NATO countries have assisted the United Nations in realizing its aim of preventing any further encroachments by aggressive nations. In an alliance such as NATO collective defence can be achieved along the most economical lines by the partners contributing the kind of forces they can best produce and equip. In this way each partner is not required to have in existence all types and varieties of forces. We can do our share in the alliance by raising, equipping and training the type of force to which we are best suited and which can be supplied in the main from our own Canadian industry.

The primary military aim of NATO is to prevent war. The best way to achieve this aim is to make it clear to any potential enemy that war would be so disastrous that it must not be contemplated. In a future major conflict there will be neither victim nor vanquished, only death and destruction of such magnitude that civilization may well be ended. The essence of the NATO concept is, therefore, the idea of a deterrent. It is important that other countries know that we in NATO have the ability to retaliate immediately following any aggressive act.

The widely dispersed aircraft of the United States strategic air command, together with the V-bombers of the United Kingdom, on account of their great flexibility form a formidable retaliatory force. As General Norstad said recently, it is beyond practical limits to eliminate all our bases simultaneously notwithstanding the advent of the ballistic and other missiles.

In Canada our main contribution to this deterrent is to provide protection both for these retaliatory forces and for the industrial power of the North American continent. To this end we have established the early warning lines and air defence command.

I might say a word about Canada's commitments to NATO in terms of men and material. We have 12 squadrons of interceptor aircraft in Europe, eight of which are equipped with Sabres and four with CF-100's. These squadrons are formed into four wings and are located at Zweibrucken and Soellingen in Germany and Marville and Grostenquin in France with divisional headquarters at Metz. Some 5,800 airmen are employed in flying and servicing these aircraft and in the performance of other duties necessary for the maintenance of the efficiency of the division. These young airmen are on duty every hour of every day 365 days in the year.

Also stationed in Germany at Soest, Hemer and Werl is the Canadian infantry brigade group made up of over 5,000 men, supported by an armoured regiment equipped with Centurion tanks. The role of this group is to assist in the protection of western Europe by delaying any advance that might be made by enemy ground forces. By having these defensive forces in the field we compel a would-be aggressor to concentrate sufficient forces to overcome our shield, and by building up such a concentration to reveal his aggressive intentions.

Our naval contribution to NATO is not inconsiderable. Forty fighting ships and 50 maritime aircraft are earmarked for the maritime forces of the supreme allied commander, Atlantic. Hon. members will know that since 1951 we have also made available to our allies equipment valued at over $1 billion through the mutual aid program and have undertaken the training of over 5,000 pilots and navigators from member nations of the organization. Only last week ceremonies took place at Sydney, Nova Scotia, at which five Bangor-type coastal escorts were handed over to our NATO ally, Turkey. These will be followed early next year by a further five Bangors and by four bay-class minesweepers. These, then, are some of our direct commitments to NATO.

The North American continent is an integral part of the NATO area, and we are assisting very considerably in its defence. The early warning system, built up over the years, is operated to enable our interceptor aircraft to take the necessary action against the intrusion of manned bomber aircraft. Such bomber aircraft are in operation now, and we believe that such manned aircraft will be in operation for several more years. It is felt that even when the ballistic and other guided missiles come into operation they will complement rather than replace manned bombers and interceptors for some time to come.

I might say that intensive studies are being undertaken by Canadian scientists, working in close collaboration with our allies, to develop defences against such future missiles. At the same time, however, we must be prepared to deal with offensive weapons now in operation, and it is against such weapons that our defences on the North American continent have been built up. Of the three radar lines which work as a unit, Canada operates the "Pinetree" line jointly with the United States. The mid-Canada line was built and is operated wholly by Canada. The D.E.W. line was constructed and is operated by the United States. Backing up these radar lines are nine squadrons of CF-100 aircraft which are on the alert 24 hours every day.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

The air defence systems of this continent have recently been completely integrated by the establishment of a joint headquarters at Colorado Springs, with a United States commander and a Canadian deputy. Of course the effectiveness of such integration has already been demonstrated in Europe, where our forces are under the operational control of General Norstad, the supreme allied commander in Europe; and in the Atlantic where in war our ships and maritime aircraft, earmarked for the NATO naval force, would come under the supreme allied commander, Atlantic, who also has fully integrated headquarters in which Canadian officers are serving. In order to improve the capabilities of the air defence forces of Canada and the United States to support the collective security of NATO and thereby provide a greater deterrent to war, the air defence of North America is now considered as a single problem.

The importance to the NATO alliance of the United States strategic air command, nuclear retaliatory forces, and the industrial capacity of Canada and the United States makes it imperative that the most effective and efficient defence system be provided. Prior to the formation of the North American air defence command there was the closest possible co-operation and liaison between the air defence forces of Canada and the United States. The various agreements reached between the services and approved by the two governments provide for cross-border intercepts whereby the forces of one country can intercept the enemy in the territory of the other. The conditions under which intercepts could take place were clearly defined by the governments of both countries, and consequently United States aircraft operating over Canadian territory are governed by Canadian rules of engagement.

In planning their air defence systems our two countries attempted to achieve the closest possible degree of uniformity. This, however, was not always possible and often unilateral decisions, particularly in long-range planning, resulted in less effective air defence forces and equipment. The realization that duplication in planning and harmful unilateral decisions were sometimes taking place led to a study of ways and means to improve the air defence system.

The Canadian and United States chiefs of staff directed that a study of the problem be undertaken by the joint military study group, comprising senior officials of the three services and scientific agencies of both countries. This group recommended that a more effective air defence system would be achieved by integrating operational control of all air defence forces under one joint headquarters. Subsequently the governments of Canada and the United States approved this recommendation in principle, and an integrated headquarters called North American air defence command was formed. This joint Canada-United States headquarters, known as NORAD, has been organized on principles that were devised and which operated satisfactorily during world war II for joint and combined commands.

Its responsibilities are as follows. First, in peacetime, it is developing plans and procedures that would be used in war. These plans and procedures are to be agreed to in peacetime and will be ready for immediate use in an emergency. They will be reviewed, amended or improved by the chiefs of staff of both countries, and government approval will be sought before any plans are implemented. It will be responsible for the general pattern of training and the general supervision of practice exercises in order to ensure the readiness of the forces and facilities in time of emergency.

Second, in time of war it will be responsible for the direction of the air defence operations in accordance with the plans and procedures which have been agreed upon in peacetime. As the agreed plans and procedures have been worked out in peacetime, there will be little that the NORAD commanders will be able to do in the first few hours of war except to reinforce the most threatened areas with whatever additional fighter aircraft and missiles become available after the battle is opened. These in the main will be United States forces, as Canada does not maintain immediately ready reserves.

The officer appointed to fill the position of commander in chief, North American air defence, was made responsible to the governments of both countries for the air defence of North America, and to report directly to the United States joint chiefs of staff and the Canadian chiefs of staff committee. All plans for the deployment and employment of air defence forces must be approved by the chiefs of staff and, when necessary, by the governments of both countries.

The terms of reference which outline the responsibilities of the commander in chief of NORAD and the organization required to exercise operational control are under study at the present time and will be approved before a formal agreement between the two governments is finalized. Until the agreement is formalized, NORAD is operating on an interim arrangement whereby a small staff of R.C.A.F. officers headed by Air Marshal Slemon are working on the preparation of the terms of reference and the organization required for NORAD. The air officer commanding the R.C.A.F. air defence command at St. Hubert will continue to control all air defence operations over Canada.

The control of air defence over Canada depends in the first place on a requirement that all aircraft flying in Canadian air space must file a flight plan. The air defence authorities keep track of these flight plans, and by this method they are able to plot the movements of all aircraft flights in and out of and over Canada.

If the flight of an aircraft which does not coincide with a filed flight plan is picked up by any of the radar systems an investigation is immediately undertaken. If there are several aircraft this would, of course, be a serious matter and checks are immediately made with the United States strategic air force and other agencies operating large numbers of aircraft. The air defence system would automatically increase its state of readiness.

As soon as an unknown aircraft came within the range of our interceptor aircraft, investigation would be made in the air by these interceptors to ascertain the nature of the unknown aircraft. While this was going on Canadian and United States military authorities would be in contact so that the appropriate joint action could be taken if necessary. The air defence commanders would seek confirmation that these aircraft were in fact unscheduled flights. Other authorities would be giving consideration to the type of action to be taken by other forces and agencies. This would include, among other things, alerting the civil defence organization and ordering ships to sea.

I would point out to hon. members that the whole of this procedure is carried out in a matter of minutes. While these decisions are being taken the previously approved course of action by the air defence forces is under way. This is based on the rules of engagement which were approved by the government in December, 1951, and which define the powers and responsibilities of the air defence commander.

His powers are as follows. First, he may authorize the interception of aircraft in order to establish identification if other methods of obtaining identification have failed. Second, if the aircraft is identified as hostile by its appearance or because it perpetrates a hostile act or if its patent behaviour is sufficiently suspicious to justify a belief that it has hostile intentions, the air defence commander may authorize its engagement by fighters or other means. Third, if the aircraft cannot be identified by any means whatever the air defence commander may, if circumstances warrant, authorize action to force the aircraft to land or engage it with fighters or other means.

These are the rules under which the R.C.A.F. air defence command has been operating since 1951, and it is these rules which will govern the activities of the air defence forces controlled by the commander in chief, North American air defence command. These rules are Canadian government policy; therefore the North American air defence command will be operating within approved government policy. Every country has established conditions and regulations similar to our rules of engagement under which aircraft can enter their air space. Such rules deal with aircraft which do not adhere to conditions of entry.

If military aircraft which are manifestly hostile in intent do enter Canadian territory without permission, an act of aggression has been committed against Canada and the use of force to deny these aircraft further passage over this country is an exercise of Canadian sovereignty and is not in itself an act which commits this country to war. Only the Canadian government can commit this country to war. Every precaution has been taken and will continue to be taken to ensure that the Canadian government is consulted before any act is undertaken which would commit this country to war.

The interception and destruction of enemy bombers over Canadian territory could not be construed as the initiation of aggression, because the presence of enemy bombers is in itself an act of aggression and consequently the air defence command is taking only protective measures. The interception and forcing down of aircraft which are invading our air space without permission, or destroying them when hostile intent is shown, is a national responsibility in the exercise of our sovereignty. Consequently the exercise of this authority under government approved procedures can safely be delegated to NORAD without fear that any defensive action taken would in itself initiate war. When the terms of reference and operating procedures for NORAD have been approved by both governments, the resulting exchange of notes will be tabled in this house.

I wish to consider now some other aspects of our defence planning and point out the part our regular and reserve forces are presently playing and will play in the future. To be effective the deterrent philosophy cannot depend on our retaliatory forces alone. It is as important that we should indicate to any would be aggressor that if necessary we are prepared to fight on land, sea and in the air. If we do not indicate that we are prepared to fight should the deterrent fail, then this philosophy of the deterrent will also fail.

What kind of war must we be prepared to fight? With the introduction of nuclear weapons and the anticipated production of long-range ballistic missiles, it is obvious that the methods of waging any future war have clearly changed from those of world war II. Looking into the future is at best a risky business, but our military advisers must plan ahead, and it is their present opinion that a third world war would commence with a sudden ferocious thermonuclear attack of great intensity from several directions, by various means. Little or no warning could be expected; but this initial period, when the fight for survival would be paramount, is likely to decide the eventual outcome of the struggle. Therefore it is important at this stage that the forces required are trained, equipped and in position. There will be no time for mobilization or reinforcement because of the conditions expected to prevail in the first few days of a nuclear war.

It is considered that shipping and port facilities will not be available to dispatch large bodies of men and equipment to Europe in time to participate in the first phase of a war. Our dependence on forces in being therefore must be adhered to, and that is why we must continue to give top priority to our regular navy, army and air force. Only if we survive that initial stage of hostilities will it be possible to carry out additional military activities and, if necessary, raise and train additional forces.

With this in mind we must continually review our defence commitments and examine the means we have available to meet them within the limits of our economy. Defence costs now account for about one-third of the total federal budget, and there are those who may consider that reductions should be made. I will refer to those reductions later. By the elimination of overhead and duplication some money can be saved, but the fact remains that if we are to continue to play our part in the defence alliance we must see to it that our forces are equipped with modern weapons. These weapons, on account of their increasing complexity, are becoming more and more costly. I feel that in the world as it is today it would be folly to follow any other course than that we are now pursuing.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McPhillips): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Coldwell: Could he go on?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McPhillips): Has the minister the consent of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearkes: The knowledge that the Russians have a considerable number of long-range submarines perhaps capable of launching missiles far from our shores at targets well inland emphasizes the importance of the anti-submarine role of our navy, and presents new and serious problems. Fixed wing aircraft, helicopters and ships all have a part to play in detecting and destroying these submarines. Squadrons of the Tracker—a naval anti-submarine aircraft—are based on our new aircraft carrier Bonaventure. Seven of our new destroyer escorts are in commission, and another seven of the improved Restigouche class are nearing completion. Authority has also recently been given for the construction of two more of these outstanding ships.

Because the initiative will always rest with the enemy, it will be necessary for the navy to be operationally ready before any war begins, and to be in a position to deal with any submarine which might attempt to get within range of our Canadian ports. In this anti-submarine role our navy receives and works in close collaboration with the R.C.A.F. maritime command. As the Canadian built Argus aircraft comes into operation in this command the effectiveness of our seaboard defences will increase, and we are looking to the day when our naval and air force authorities will be able to keep track of and deal with all sea traffic above and below water in the same way that the air force keeps track of every aircraft in the sky over North America now.

If the R.C.A.F. is to continue to carry out its task efficiently it will have to improve its equipment constantly to cope with new aircraft flying at higher altitudes and at ever increasing speeds. That is why we are continuing the development of the CF-105, and that is why steps are being taken to evolve improved methods of processing information obtained through our warning systems, a complicated and very expensive proposition.

It is obvious—and this is indicated by changes taking place in the composition of the armies of the United Kingdom and the United States—that in an atomic age the Canadian regular army must strive for increased mobility and additional firepower. The strength of the regular army today is just under 49,000. We have in Europe the 4th Canadian infantry brigade group, to which I have already referred. In Canada we have sufficient units to form three additional brigade groups, and it is our intention during the coming year to group these units so there will be a balanced brigade in western Canada, another brigade in central Canada, and a third in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

Each of these brigade groups will be commanded by a brigadier with an operational brigade staff. Each group will concentrate for summer training in Wainwright camp, in Petawawa or the Camp Borden-Meaford area, and at Gagetown. One battalion of each of these three brigade groups will have a parachute element and will be air-portable. The development of the Cariboo cargo aircraft by the deHavilland Company is proceeding satisfactorily, and steps are being taken to increase further our air transport capabilities.

The divisional headquarters as now organized will be reduced to nil strength during the next few months. Some divisional units will be retained, and the equipment for the headquarters will be kept available. The technique of command and administration will continue to be practised by general officers and their staffs so that if, at any future time, two or more of the brigade groups are operating together, personnel and equipment will be available to organize and operate a tactical divisional headquarters.

The launching of earth satellites and the reported successful firing of an intercontinental ballistic missile emphasize the need for the nations of the free world to collaborate in matters of defence, and point up the urgency of the pooling of scientific knowledge. Officials of the defence research board have for many years maintained close liaison with their opposite numbers in the United Kingdom and the United States. These fruitful discussions are now being intensified.

A major research contribution in support of the defence against the ICBM can be made by Canada in the field of radio propagation, particularly with reference to the auroral zone. This is being undertaken jointly with the United States air force at the Prince Albert radar site which is now in the course of construction.

Other programs now being undertaken by the defence research board are aimed at problems in the missile field, particularly with respect to ballistic detection; at means for countering submarines; at many phases of electronics in defence and at operational research studies designed to indicate the most economical means for obtaining maximum effectiveness from present and proposed weapons systems.

The submarine threat is considered to be a grave one, and work in conjunction with the United States navy and the royal navy on improved anti-submarine detection devices is in progress. Projects are being undertaken with the objective of extending detection ranges and increasing the speed at which searches for submarines can be carried out. Studies of nuclear propulsion for ships are to be undertaken in conjunction with the royal navy, and a Canadian team of scientists and naval officers will proceed to the United Kingdom for this purpose early next year.

Our reliance on forces in being, to which I have already referred, will of necessity require some changes in the role of our reserve forces. The role of the naval reserve will remain the reinforcement of the fleet in being in time of emergency. Reserve personnel will also replace regular personnel ashore and will also be required to bring our ships up to war complement. Steps are being taken to ensure that the members of the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve will be immediately available and adequately trained for these duties. This rationalization will result in some reduction in present strength, because we are placing emphasis on quality rather than quantity.

Over the years the R.C.A.F. auxiliary squadrons have been an important element in our defence establishment. The first R.C.A.F. squadron to serve overseas in the second world war was an auxiliary squadron. The first fighter squadron was made up of 110 squadron from Toronto and 112 squadron from Winnipeg. These squadrons are celebrating their 25th anniversary this year. Apart from the squadrons which saw service overseas, the auxiliary air force provided a large number of the trained personnel required to supervise and direct the activities of our expanding wartime air force. Since the war the auxiliary has continued to play an important role in the defence organization, and has assumed new tasks as and when required.

The changing tempo and technology of war have dictated an alteration in the role and employment of flying squadrons of our auxiliary air force. A careful reassessment of their role when viewed in the light of long-term requirements leads to an adjustment of effort which will enable the squadrons to contribute to the relief of civil emergency requirements in peace or war.

It has already been announced that certain squadrons are being equipped with light transport aircraft, and thus the first move was made toward the ultimate requirements for squadrons to be employed in an emergency and rescue role. There will continue to be a gradual change in other flying squadrons in the direction of this ultimate aim. As a step toward this goal, early next year the light bomber squadrons at Saskatoon and Edmonton will convert to this new role.

Also constituting a large portion of the R.C.A.F. auxiliary activities are the aircraft control and warning units. These units continue to play an important part and represent a readily available reserve of trained personnel for the support of the radar control stations in Canada. In this they are making a significant contribution to the air defence of this country.

Finally, the auxiliary technical training units which train technical personnel in support of the flying squadrons and the aircraft control and warning units will be adjusted in size in response to the gradual change proposed for the operational units which they support.

In so far as the militia are concerned, they have a long and brilliant record of achievement. Originally organized for the protection of the homes and lives of the very earliest settlers in this country, the members of the militia during the 18th and 19th centuries on many occasions, alone or in conjunction with British regulars, would indeed drive out the invader and give security to this country.

In 1914 and again in 1939, when our regular forces were very few in number, it was upon the units of the militia that we built our divisions for service overseas. Those who went overseas were in fact defending their homes and families, just as their forebears had done a century or more before; the same duties done and the same tasks performed, but some thousands of miles away.

Almost 20 years have passed since the outbreak of the second world war. Since then we have adopted a policy of having a large and efficient regular army of some 49,000 officers and men compared with approximately 4,000 in 1939. For the first time in history a potential aggressor, armed with new and modern weapons, including long-range air carriers, can make this continent a target for direct attack.

If, in spite of all our efforts, we are drawn into a major conflict, one of the first and vital battles may well be for survival within our own boundaries. The situation will be quite different from that which existed in 1914 and in 1939, when we had many months to mobilize and complete the training of tens of thousands of militiamen.

We anticipate two types of battle in which ground forces will be engaged. One battle will be the direct contact with enemy ground forces in Europe, and will be fought by forces in being and in position. The other battle will be in this country, to assist in restoring order out of the terrible chaos that may result from enemy attacks with long range nuclear weapons. It is in this latter important battle that the militia as well as the regular and the civil defence organization will be needed.

The members of the militia must continue, however, to receive military training and retain a military organization, because it is this training and organization that make the militia so valuable in aiding the civil authorities. Many military skills are just the skills that are needed in all great disasters; for example, medical assistance and first aid, communications, engineering and repairs, traffic control and other such services.

War does not always follow the pattern one expects. It is quite conceivable that a situation may exist in which it will be of great value to have a reserve of at least partially trained personnel in all arms, who would be available as reinforcements. To meet our primary task in the battle for survival, the units of the militia will be grouped together into some 45 or 50 mobile columns. These columns will be trained to take their place in this battle, and will carry out exercises with local authorities and civil defence organizations.

I am well aware of the importance of our militia forces, and I am personally acquainted with the service our militia has performed in the past. They are a great body of public spirited citizens, and I have no doubt that they will carry out the vital role that is expected of them in the future. I am pleased to state that enlistment into the militia and the strength of the militia are higher today than at any time previously this year.

I should like to make a few brief remarks regarding the 1957-58 estimates which are being presented to the committee. Since these estimates, amounting to $1,722,844,000, were prepared, increases in the rates of civil salaries and military pay and allowances have been authorized and took effect from May 1, 1957. The increases in military pay and allowances are estimated to amount to $27,574,892 for the 11 months of the fiscal year 1957-58 to which they apply, and the increases in civil salaries to $6,600,000 during the same period. There has, therefore, on this account been an extra amount of approximately $34,000,000. In addition, the cost of the mid-Canada line construction is expected to exceed the original estimate by some $7 million. A supplementary estimate to cover these additions is not being requested, because a thorough review has been undertaken to make savings in other areas at least equal to this increase.

As a result of this review a number of decisions have been taken which will reduce expenditures. Savings are being made in the operating costs of all three services. A decision has been taken to discontinue the bureau of current affairs. Immediately on my taking office a review of advertising expenditures for recruiting purposes was made, and a reduction of these expenditures by one third was ordered. The curtailment of travelling expenses has also been directed; and while savings in the current year will not be large, in due course a helpful reduction may be expected in this field.

A detailed review of the construction program has been made and it has been possible to defer a number of lower priority items. The equipment programs have also been re-examined and some savings have been possible, notably the cancellation of the mark VI version of the CF-100 aircraft. A review is also continuing of those responsibilities of the defence department which might, with economy, be assumed by civilian departments of the government. One concrete result of these studies has been the decision to transfer the ice-breaker Labrador from the R.C.N. to the Department of Transport. Hon. members will recall the excellent work which this vessel did during the exploration of the Arctic this year.

It is now clear that these various savings will adequately take care of the additions caused by the salary increases. It is hoped that continued efforts will accomplish further savings before the close of the fiscal year. This will be done without affecting in any way the operational efficiency of our forces in being. It will be achieved by a reappraisal of planned projects and a readjustment of their priority in the light of the changing concept of military warfare.

In closing, I would point out to hon. members that the present fiscal year is now two-thirds over, and that a large percentage of the 1957-58 estimates are already spent. This, of course, in no way curtails the right of hon. members to raise any point they wish to make on this important subject of defence. I would suggest, however, that any general remarks should be included in the general debate, and that when we reach the estimates in detail we should discuss the items as set forth in the blue book.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Supply—National Defence

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on the estimates of the Department of National Defence this afternoon I would first like to make a few comments on the statement delivered by the minister before the recess at noon. The courtesy which he extended to his predecessor, Hon. Ralph Campney—and I am sure he would extend the same courtesy to Hon. Brooke Claxton—was truly in keeping with the remarks I made on November 14, 1957, as reported at page 1151 of Hansard, with respect to the attitude of the minister in carrying out his responsibilities. He has today made only kind references to his predecessors.
