Hon H. A. Olson: Briefly, honourable senators, I just spoke to the honourable senator. He says he is not a farmer but he knows a lot about farming in western Canada. We need that kind of support here.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

FREE TRADE

RELATION TO EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have just returned from a trip to Europe where I saw several news articles —

Senator Di Nino: Again?

Senator Gigantès: At my expense, not the public's — that suggest that your religion of free trade is being put under the microscope and examined in serious papers and by people who are Conservatives. They are questioning whether free trade can function in conditions of unemployment. Of course, the first apostle of free trade, David Ricardo, the great economist, said it was not possible, that it was only possible in conditions of full employment.

Let me give a simple example. Suppose you abolish 10,000 automotive jobs in Canada each earning $14 an hour. The 10,000 people you put out in the street will no longer be able to afford a car and 10,000 cars fewer will be sold in Canada. You move those jobs to Mexico and give them to workers who are paid $1.40 an hour instead of $14. They will produce the cars, but at $1.40 they will not be able to afford the cars either. The net result will be that we will have impoverished 10,000 Canadians. We will have somewhat improved the lot of 10,000 Mexicans, but before the slight improvement of the Mexican's lot will multiply sufficiently to create a market for Canadian products, 15 or 20 years will have passed. So we will grow poorer faster than they will grow richer.

Senator Simard: Wrong again.

Senator Gigantès: It has been said that consumers will benefit if things are produced more cheaply. Well, we have the recent example of the Vogue Bras Company.

They shifted their production to Mexico. They were paying their workers $8 an hour here, and they started producing the same garment in Mexico, paying workers 40 cents a hour. Guess what? The price of the garment in Zellers dropped from $20.95 to $19.95. Where did the remaining profit go? Why, into the pocket of the entrepreneur, of course. However, it did not benefit the Canadian consumers a sufficient amount to compensate for the loss.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. I ask leave to do that now, so long as the time taken to deal with the two bills does not encroach on the time usually allotted to Routine Proceedings.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think it would be suitable to deal with the two bills together. I do not know if honourable senators wish to make speeches or not, although I am sure that, if they do, they will be brief.

NUNAVUT BILL

NUNAVUT LAND CLAIMS AGREEMENT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(b), moved the third reading of Bill C-132, to establish a territory to be known as Nunavut and provide for its government and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof; and the third reading of Bill C-133, respecting an Agreement between the Inuit of the Nunavut Settlement Area and Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, first, I wish to thank all honourable senators for agreeing to this procedure and for dealing with these two important bills in such a rapid manner. It has been a great honour for me to have participated in these landmark bills.

Committee hearings were held yesterday at which we heard from the minister, who described the process which the bill has gone through over quite a long period of time. It was an excellent presentation. We also heard from Paul Quassa of the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut, along with others, such as John Amagoalik, and other representatives of the Inuit people.

It is a record that many people should read. It was a tremendous exercise in nation building, to put it in its simplest terms. As people will see from the record, these two bills and this agreement will make Canada a much stronger place. As John Amagoalik said, this is really our entry into Confederation. These two bills and the agreement should be the blueprint for a meaningful and happy future for the Inuit people and for Canada. The agreement confirms this area as the homeland of those people, the place in which they can maintain their culture and live the kind of life that they want to live as Canadians within Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, since we will be moving right to third reading without an opportunity to read the transcript, I would like the chairman of the committee to reassure me on one aspect that I had raised with him, and which had been partly answered by one of the witnesses to whom he referred in his statement.

Am I correct in saying that this bill crowns some 20 years of negotiation during which persons who were, in their view, adversely affected were dealt with, and that concerns which were expressed over that period were dealt with and, according to the letter I received, settled?

Can the chairman assure us that, after all that work, there was no significant opposition, and that this process received virtually the unanimous support of the community and everyone affected by the legislation?

Senator Marchand: Honourable senators, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that there was no opposition to the bill during the committee hearings. When you read the record, you will see the process through which the Inuit people and the minister went. It was not an easy process. It was a long and difficult process in which the Inuit people and the Indians of northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan raised questions. These were all dealt with before the bill came to us in Parliament.

We are satisfied that a lot of goodwill goes along with these two bills. The agreement that was made has the backing of a large segment of the Inuit people of that new territory and, indeed, of all Canadians. We were told in the committee that a poll showed that 70 to 80 per cent of the people of Canada are in agreement with the terms of the settlement.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thank the chairman for that answer, and congratulate him and his colleagues on many years of excellent work. I am glad to share the justified celebration of the crowning of that work in this legislation.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have previously asked questions about the bill. I want to join in the congratulations to the aboriginal members on both sides of this chamber for the work they have done to accomplish this goal. It is, as Senator Marchand has indicated, a very significant exercise in Canadian nation building. It was very interesting to hear at the committee that, throughout all the discussions, the feeling of the Inuit people was always that they were a part of Canada, and that this legislation was making them even more a part of Canada.

I compliment those members. I particularly compliment the Inuit people from Nunavut. It is pleasant to see some of them present in the gallery this afternoon to witness this crowning achievement. May they take back to their people the good wishes of every member of this chamber.

• (1430)

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Paul Quassa and his wife and his colleagues, who are present today with us. As Inuit, it is a day not only for joy for the Inuit, but also for being proud of what has been accomplished.

I am proud to stand here today to speak about Nunavut and the Nunavut Land Claims Agreement. I am proud both as a senator and as an Inuk leader. This is because, in my mind, Nunavut represents something that brings about a closer harmonization of Inuit and Canadian values. As I mentioned yesterday, what you see on a map realigning Canada does not mean that you want to begin a process to secede from Canada. That is not what it means. It means that it is now realized that a big piece of territory was left out of the process when the process was first put in place. It puts more strength into Canada. The Inuit have never shown any reluctance in terms of being part of Canada. This is one area that has been a milestone for the Inuit in enabling us to advance and move ahead.

It is true that this text is a negotiated text. It has been under negotiation for a long time — 17 years. I must congratulate the people who have had the patience to see this matter through to the end result that is taking place today.

Nunavut will be established as a territory within the Canadian system. It will be put in place in a manner that is in keeping with Canadian democratic tradition. It will make use of structures and institutions that are well established within Canada's constitutional framework. Yet, since Inuit constitute close to 80 per cent of the population in Nunavut, the new territory will very much reflect and accommodate Inuit culture, values and aspirations.

At times, people wonder what self-government is all about. At times, you have also heard that Inuit basically want to remain in Canada. But at the same time they want to have an opportunity — the same as everyone else does — to utilize the tools that are available to everyone, but not in a racist sense. This is where the differences have always been shown every time we have dealt with the Constitution. The Inuit always choose to go through the public democratic route rather than the racist line. Once again, this has been demonstrated by the Nunavut people, of whom I am proud to be a part.

This harmonization between the Inuit and Canadian systems has always been important to me personally. It has always been my objective to bring together my role as a senator and as a Inuit political leader. I see Nunavut bringing about greater harmonization between Inuit and Canadian values. This is important for Canada and for the future of all Inuit in this country.

I should like to take this occasion to describe Nunavut from the point of view of an Inuk who does not live in or come from the territory in question. I want everyone to understand that the creation of Nunavut has been the dream of Canadian Inuit for almost 20 years — probably it goes even beyond that, but I will limit it to 20 years because that is the time when we started to have close understanding and close relations with the people from the south.

I can remember back to the 1960s. Some of us who first met then are still here. Senator Austin was one of the persons whom I clearly remember I confronted when I was still a young man. At that time he was talking about the idea of transferring the Government of Canada's responsibility to the provincial government. My question was: "Why? The Government of Canada is the central government." It used to be viewed as a big government by the Inuit. The federal government was the big government, and the little government was the provincial government. Those two concepts were invented by Senator Austin in order to make the Inuit understand the difference between the federal government and the provincial government. That story tells where we are today.

This dream has been around for as long as the current generation of Inuit leadership. For us — including myself — the creation of Nunavut is what we have been attempting to accomplish for the past 20 years. In many ways it will be the realization of our effort to ensure that the Inuit have the opportunity to become full partners in Confederation. Let me assure honourable senators that this objective is shared by all Inuit. The creation of Nunavut will be celebrated by Inuit both inside and outside the new territory.

The Quebec Inuit have strong ties with the Inuit in the Northwest Territories. I, for one, have a large number of relatives up there. The people we see up in the visitor's gallery today also have a lot of relatives on the Quebec side. As you can see, the appropriateness of what has been accomplished is shared not only by the Northwest Territories' Inuit but by all the Inuit in Canada.

This is probably a landmark decision. The accomplishment of reaching an agreement of this magnitude has never been equalled since I can remember. As one of the first persons who entertained the new modern land claims settlement and signed the land claims settlement, and is very much proud of accomplishing that as a Quebec Inuit, I have 20 years experience in implementing something like this, and going through the hardships. You can be assured that the work does not end today; it is only beginning today with the passage of those two bills.

There are other reasons why all Inuit are happy to see the country move towards the creation of Nunavut. In northern Quebec, we realized the nature of land claims in the mid-seventies when we signed the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement that I spoke of. In the Western Arctic, both groups have been working hard to implement their respective agreements and develop their northern economy. However, we have been held back in realizing the full potential of our agreements and in developing our regional economies by lack of a land claim settlement in Nunavut.

As you can see, we can move ahead now. We can move ahead, being proud of what we are and who we are. Now we have the tools that we can work with. Now we can make some difference in our lives. Now we can begin to start focusing on the economy, which in turn will, we hope, answer some of our social problems.

At times in the past, we have focused on the social area. Maybe that was a mistake on our part. Today, we have come to realize that in the modern world, if we want to be part of it, we have to focus on the economy and use that economy to strengthen our social values. We thank you for giving us that opportunity.

The implementation of the Nunavut agreement will finally allow us to bridge the gap between the Inuit in the Eastern and Western Arctic in our efforts to develop a strong and lasting economy throughout the Inuit homeland in Canada. Probably this will also give us the opportunity to take part in the international initiatives that our brothers have been able to enjoy in Alaska, for one example, and in Greenland, for another. Now we can proudly be part of and take part in such initiatives.

The opportunity to link up our efforts to develop our northern economies is exciting for all Inuit. I think Canadians will be surprised to see what we will be able to accomplish. In other words, we are saying to you, senators, that you will see us again. You see us today and you will see us again, probably more advanced, in the very near future, being effective and contributing to Canadian society, not only socially but economically.

We do not want to be looked at as a group that is draining the system. We want to join with you as part of the system, helping Canada to survive, and I think we can accomplish that.

I also want to stress that the creation of Nunavut is the logical evolution of a Canadian federation. I think it will serve as a timely reminder of Canada's ability to accommodate its many different peoples and regions under one Confederation.

I am not sure whether I expressed that in the proper English terms. I am trying to say that, under one Confederation, we can all live together. We can accomplish things. I think the world will be very different if we can all agree on the various issues we have to deal with. What makes us different as Canadians — and I am proud to be a Canadian and part of Canada — is that we have different values, different elements, which we can put through one system and make it succeed. I hope this will continue on, whether by this present government or the next government. What is established today should be looked at as a cornerstone and as a movement in the right direction.

I would also like to point out that the creation of Nunavut will mark the first time aboriginal people have changed the map of Canada since the Métis brought Manitoba into Confederation. The importance of this fact should not be lost in this International Year of Indigenous Peoples. It is also important because of expectation among Canadians that aboriginal self-government rights will be entrenched in the Constitution.

Nunavut will not be a constitutionally protected form of aboriginal self-government. This is an issue we may have to visit somewhere down the line. That is not the issue today. It will also not be a model applicable to many other aboriginal groups. As I mentioned earlier, some groups would prefer to adopt restrictive lines, while others would rather adopt a broader perspective. I, for one, am not a believer in hiding from the bigger society, not if my way of life, my culture, is to survive. I believe in using the bigger society, being supported and protected by the bigger society. Then my culture can survive. Not the other way around. I think that hope is shared by the Inuit across Canada.

Nevertheless, Nunavut will serve as a graphic symbol that change is occurring in this country and that aboriginal peoples are starting to take their rightful place in Confederation. Again, I thank you, senators.

I congratulate both the government and the Inuit of Nunavut for concluding a truly outstanding agreement and for moving ahead with the creation of Nunavut.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we go to the vote, I want to highlight the main features of these two bills which are really of an historic nature.

Bill C-132 is an act of nation-building. It provides for the creation of the new territory of Nunavut in the traditional Inuit homeland of the Central and Eastern Arctic. As honourable senators are aware, the new territory of Nunavut will be created in what is now the central and eastern parts of the Northwest Territories. It will take a form of public government similar to that of the Northwest Territories.

This will not be aboriginal self-government. However, the Inuit will effectively have their own government, given that they account for more than 80 per cent of the population in the Nunavut region. Nevertheless, the government of Nunavut will be elected by and responsible to all residents of the new territory, aboriginal and non-aboriginal alike.

The new government of Nunavut will have all the powers currently granted to the government of the Northwest Territories.

Bill C-132 lays a foundation for a new partnership between Inuit and Canada, a partnership that will help Inuit achieve their cultural, economic and political goals within a strengthened Canada. The bill will redraw the map of northern Canada and lead to a more prosperous economic future for the residents of the Eastern Arctic.

Inuit of the Nunavut region truly have cause to celebrate. In fact, all Canadians have cause to celebrate, because, with the passing of this bill, we will take a huge step toward fulfilling our obligations to the aboriginal people and ensuring them a special place in Confederation.

Some two and a half years ago, the Prime Minister outlined the government's native agenda, a four-point plan of action to correct past wrongs, fulfil contemporary obligations and build a better future for aboriginal people.

Today, with Bill C-133, we are asked to address a key element of the native agenda, the settlement of land claims. We are being given the opportunity to forge a modern treaty with Inuit of the Eastern Arctic and to ensure for them a strengthened political future within Canada.

Bill C-133 is an act to give effect to the Tungavik Federation of Nunavut Land Claims Agreement, which will settle the largest land claim agreement in Canada. This agreement acknowledges thousands of years of Inuit occupancy and use of the Central and Eastern Arctic. It will allow Inuit to reclaim their past, but, more important, it will allow them to look to the future with optimism, confidence and hope.

Settlement of the land claim will bring to a successful conclusion more than 15 years of negotiations. Among other things, it will provide certainty of rights to lands and resources in a vast area, fully one-fifth of the Canadian land mass. The Nunavut Land Claims Agreement, which was negotiated in a remarkable spirit of goodwill by all parties, will end that uncertainty. It will allow resource development projects to proceed in a way that brings benefits to both Inuit and non-aboriginal residents of the settlement region, benefits that will include greatly enhanced employment and business opportunities, new transportation and communications infrastructures, and an improved standard of living.

In their ratification vote last November, the Inuit voted to exchange uncertainty of aboriginal title for the clearly defined and constitutionally protected rights set out in the agreement. In return for aboriginal title, the 17,500 Inuit of Nunavut will have fee simple ownership of approximately 350,000 square kilometres of land, placing them amongst the largest land owners in North America. On more than 36,000 square kilometres, the Inuit will own the mineral as well as the surface rights.

This is an important indication that the Inuit anticipate and welcome resource developments in the settlement region. In fact, they are depending on development projects to supplement the financial compensation they will receive under the final agreement.

As a constitutionally recognized land claim agreement, the TFN settlement will provide the Inuit with lasting protection for their land-based interests.

Ownership of land and the financial means to pursue socio-economic development are not the only tools the Inuit will need to build a better future. They must also acquire the skills to manage their lands and finances, to deliver social and economic programs, to take advantage of employment and business opportunities, and to participate fully in government.

Towards this end, a training trust fund will be established under the final agreement. As well, mechanisms will be put in place to increase Inuit employment in government and to help firms owned by or employing Inuit to compete for government contracts.

It is with great pleasure, honourable senators, that I urge unanimous support for Bills C-132 and C-133.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bills read third time and passed.

QUESTION PERIOD

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

CITIZENS' PROGRAM—MONITORING OF FOREIGN INVESTMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government regarding the program for foreign investments. Recently, the province of Manitoba has run into some serious problems with a number of these investments under the Citizens' Program. According to the information I have, back in March of 1991, Manitoba had approached the federal government to find out who was responsible. There were conflicting opinions at that time as to who should be monitoring such programs. Manitoba has now decided to withdraw from the program. Perhaps the minister could tell us exactly who is responsible for such programs. Is it the province or the federal government, and what steps is the federal government taking to ensure proper monitoring?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in the circumstances, I am extremely reluctant to extemporise on this matter. I will obtain a report from my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration and bring it in in due course.

Senator Molgat: While the honourable senator is obtaining that information, could he also ascertain whether the government proposes to continue this program, or is it planning to cease its participation in such programs in view of difficulties that have arisen?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall do that also.

CONSERVATIVE PARTY LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

ATTENDANCE FEES LEVIED ON AMBASSADORS TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate could advise us as to whether or not it is true that the Conservative Party is charging the ambassadors of foreign countries something like $690 to attend the Conservative leadership convention this weekend? If that is so, are the only countries involved the ones to which this government has given money in aid, and will they use that same money to pay their dues at the Conservative convention?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is not a matter that falls within the administrative responsibility of the government.

Senator Bonnell: As to the responsibility of the government, perhaps the government should intercede in a matter of this kind where these foreign countries — European countries, African countries — need all of their resources to finance their own economies without having to pay that kind of money for their ambassadors to attend a convention of this nature, which should be open to the public in a country like Canada.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): There is a matter that does fall under government responsibilities, however. If they are charged a fee, will they also be charged GST?

ORDERS OF THE DAY

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1993-94

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lynch-Staunton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Comeau, for the second reading of Bill C-134, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1994.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this matter is standing in my name because I wanted to read again the comments made by my colleagues Senator Olson, Chairman of the Committee, and Senator Bolduc, who also spoke on the work of the National Finance committee regarding appropriation.

I also took the time to check Hansard of the House of Commons to see what comments were made over there, and it was a singularly interesting process. Nobody said anything except, "I move, I move" and the bill went through in one afternoon with absolutely no consideration, which I found rather surprising.

In any event, honourable senators, I am prepared to let the bill go forward at this time. I have reread the material provided to us, including the statement by Senator Olson that the committee has agreed to provide interim supply only, and that the matter will be coming back to us. In view of the fact that we will have Royal Assent later this afternoon, the practice that we normally follow is that we give leave to proceed in those cases.

Senator Perrault: That is cooperation.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare moved the second reading of Bill C-101, to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

She said: I rise today on second reading of Bill C-101, to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act. This bill consists of federal labour legislation amendments designed to reduce administrative and cost burdens for employers, increase efficiency and competitiveness, and enhance labour-management cooperation. These amendments are a balanced package to benefit employers, employees and taxpayers. They allow us to maximize our investment in workers and so preserve our competitive position in the world market.

Most of the amendments relate to labour standards set down by the Canada Labour Code. They are the product of a two-year consultation and development process with federally regulated employers, employees and their representatives, what we tend to term "stakeholder" groups these days. In this case, the stakeholders are 700,000 working Canadians who will benefit from these amendments.

To summarize these amendments, they will streamline procedures for modifying standards; clarify the relationship between collective agreements and minimum labour standards; allow more effective collection of unpaid wages; provide wage and employment protection for workers who are injured on the job; give greater flexibility to the timing of parental leave; and strengthen provisions for maternity-related assignments.

These proposals will modernize federal labour law, and their agreement in partnership with employers and workers reflects a common commitment to a more efficient workplace able to meet the challenges of the world. Unions and management are to be commended for the spirit of cooperation that led to these changes.

This bill will also make the Canada Labour Code and provincial labour standards more compatible, which will allow for equal treatment of federally regulated workers across the nation.

Finally, Bill C-101 also includes amendments to the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act to provide an additional mechanism, the directed vote, to assist in the settlement of labour disputes. No doubt there will be some discussion of these provisions, and I shall be adding my comments a little later. First, however, I want to inform honourable senators of the rationale behind and the substance of the improvements in the labour standards.

At the present time, for example, employers and employees who wish to substitute some other day for a general holiday under the Canada Labour Code are forced to use a cumbersome and time-consuming procedure. Up to five months may elapse before ministerial and departmental approval is granted. I am not speaking now of situations in which the employer and worker disagree, but of a delay in government approval of an agreed-upon substitute holiday. Such an agreement is a clear example of where government should step aside and facilitate, rather than hinder the will of the parties. Accordingly, we are removing the present complex procedures of ministerial and departmental approvals in favour of a system which allows agreements to be finalized in the workplace quickly and without complication.

To give another example, our present legislation has created an unnecessary duplication in redress procedures such that complainants may now choose one or both of the grievance procedures provided by their collective agreement and by Labour Canada, with resulting headaches for all involved. These amendments will prevent such problems and ensure the primacy of the third-party grievance process contained in the collective agreement. Provided that the collective agreements meet or exceed the standards set by the legislation for annual vacation, general holidays, minimum wages, and bereavement leave, they will be exempted from the redundant duplication of Labour Canada procedures.

This bill also provides for an administrative wage recovery procedure, modeled after the most successful of the provincial systems. This will improve Labour Canada's ability to assist employees to collect the wages they are owed. This is a great improvement over the present system, which often requires a costly and time-consuming criminal prosecution before unpaid wages are collected.

These amendments will clarify an employer's obligation to return employees to work after an absence due to work-related illness or injury.

Bill C-101 will also ensure replacement wages and continuation of benefits, and it will protect injured workers from dismissal or other disciplinary action related to such absences. This bill will also clarify federal authority and remove the need for employers to conduct costly legal challenges of provincial jurisdiction.

Honourable senators, I think you will be especially pleased with the provisions in Bill C-101 which give parents greater flexibility in leave. Our proposal will allow one continuous period of leave at any time within the 52 weeks following a child's birth or its coming into the parents' care and custody. This will make the Canada Labour Code consistent with parental leave provisions in the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In addition, Bill C-101 strengthens provisions for maternity-related reassignment and leave. Approximately 6,700 federally regulated employees take maternity leave each year. Presently, the Canada Labour Code allows an employer to unilaterally require a pregnant employee to leave work if she is unable to perform part of her job. We propose to redress this inequity between the rights of the employer and employee. Under Bill C-101, the employer will now be required to make every reasonable effort to modify the job or reassign the pregnant or nursing employee if her physician believes that her temporary health needs so require.

For example, if a woman's regular job involves occasional lifting which her doctor has recommended against, her duties may be modified by having another employee do the lifting. If, however, the job requires repeated heavy lifting, it may be more appropriate to reassign the woman temporarily to another position if there is one available.

I should add that where reassignment is not practical or where the woman is unable to work at all, she would have the right of an unpaid leave of absence. Wage replacement during such a leave will continue to be available through existing programs such as UI or employer-sponsored benefit plans.

Overall, honourable senators, these amendments will support a woman's right to remain at work during pregnancy and will help keep experienced employees in the workplace.

Finally, I want to draw the chamber's attention to the proposed changes in the industrial relations provisions of the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act. These amendments would allow the Minister of Labour to direct that a vote be conducted among employees in a bargaining unit on an employer's last offer. In the case of a dispute involving the public service, a minister other than a member of the Treasury Board, as designated by the Governor in Council, could direct such a vote.

These changes are designed to serve the public interest by providing an additional mechanism to assist in the settlement of a collective bargaining dispute. It is fair to say that they are not supported by the union leaders who would prefer to have total control of when an offer is presented to the membership for a vote. However, I think it is also fair to say that this amendment would in no way take any power away from the workers, who both would and should have the final say on when an offer is acceptable to them.

Some union leaders have suggested that C-101 implies that they do not speak for their membership. I do not agree with that characterization. If indeed the leadership has the confidence of its members, I have no doubt that it will be able to convince them to reject the offer on which the minister has directed a vote. If not, however, I hope honourable senators would agree with me that it should be the rank-and-file membership as a whole which has the final say. Certainly I think such an option should be more acceptable to union leaders than back-to-work legislation. I hope that by allowing this less confrontational option, we will help to guide the course of labour relations to smoother waters.

Certainly we can expect to be reminded that these amendments leave power in the hands of the government and that power can always be abused. To this, I only remind the chamber that Parliament quite properly always retains the ultimate power of back-to-work legislation when it is needed to serve the public interest. To the extent that such discretion is exercised improperly, the government which does so must face the ultimate judgment of the electorate at the polls, so we should not find objectionable that the same standard of democratic rule should be applied to the employees' decision on an offer.

To conclude, honourable senators, I hope that my outline has made clear that Bill C-101 will bring real improvements to efficiency and cooperation in the workplace. The more equitable work environment they will help create will pay dividends to the nation's economy. I hope that all senators will see fit to give the bill their support.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I thank Senator DeWare for her very intellectual lecture, but I advise you that she has only one side of the argument, and she told us the good side. There is another side.

I rise to speak on Bill C-101, which is an act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act. This bill, introduced in the other place by the Minister of Labour, the Honourable Marcel Danis, on December 9, 1992, contained proposals which, for the most part, were developed over a two-year period through consultation between the employer and employee representatives. The Labour Standards Client Consultation Committee was initiated by Labour Canada and included such organizations as the Canadian Labour Congress and affiliated unions representing federally regulated workers, employers from the federal jurisdiction, and the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

From all accounts, there appears to be broad-based support for most of the amendments contained in this bill, because of what both sides describe as a very successful consultation process. However, the government, without the knowledge of the employee representatives, included a controversial and questionable amendment with respect to clauses 2 and 42: the proposal for a directed vote on the employer's last offer.

I find this situation best described in an article in the Globe and Mail of December 10, 1992, entitled "Labour amendments get mixed review". It states:

> The federal government has introduced progressive changes in the Canada Labour Code to protect pregnant workers, but "set the clock back" with another proposal that would allow Ottawa to order union membership votes on contract offers, the Canadian Labour Congress said yesterday. Under proposed labour code amendments, which would apply to 700,000 workers in federally regulated industries, employers would be required to "make every reasonable effort to modify a job or reassign a pregnant employee when her temporary health needs so require," Labour Minister Marcel Danis said. ...Labour representatives have applauded that initiative. However, another proposal that would allow the government to order membership votes on contract offers, "regardless of what the union leadership says," is unwarranted interference in labour-management relations, said Mike Sheridan, a CLC representative specializing in social economic policy.

As Canada approaches the twenty-first century, it is extremely important that we recognize the importance of maintaining a stable work environment, one where Canadians are able to attain the necessary skills to meet the global challenges of the future. I find little rationale and logic for putting clauses 2 and 42 in this bill. Unfortunately, this amendment has once again created an atmosphere of confrontation between the government and the labour sector.

Before discussing the controversial nature of clauses 2 and 42 of the bill, I should like to take a few moments to review other parts of the legislation that are probably a little better.

The amendments contained in this bill relate mostly to Part III of the Canada Labour Code: Standard Hours, Wages, Vacations and Holidays; Part I: Industrial Relations, and Part II: Occupational Safety and Health, are also affected. An amendment is also proposed to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Proposed changes in this bill include clarification with respect to the relationship between collective agreements and Part III of the Canada Labour Code. Certain divisions of the code would not apply to parties that provide employees with rights and benefits at least as favourable as those conferred by those respective divisions in regard to the length of leave, rates of pay and qualifying period for benefits, and settlement of disagreements.

The bill also includes a provision to ensure that an employee is protected with respect to maximum hours of work and the ability of an employer to substitute a general holiday.

Of particular interest, honourable senators, the government has substituted provisions with respect to maternity-related reassignment and leave, maternity leave, and parental leave. I should like take a few moments to comment on those provisions.

A pregnant or nursing employee would be able to request a modification to her job functions, or a reassignment, if it was deemed her current job function might pose a risk to herself, the child or the foetus during the period from the beginning of the pregnancy to the end of the twenty-fourth week following the birth. Moreover, the onus is placed on the employer to show that a modification of job functions or a reassignment that would avoid the activities or conditions indicated in the medical certificate is not reasonably practicable.

With respect to entitlement to leave, the bill provides that an employee who is pregnant or nursing is entitled to, and shall be granted, a leave of absence during the period from the beginning of the pregnancy to the end of the twenty-fourth week following the birth, if the employee provides the employer with a certificate from a qualified medical practitioner indicating that she is unable to work by reason of her pregnancy or nursing, and indicating the duration of that inability.

With regard to maternity leave, every employee who has completed six consecutive months of continuous employment with an employer, and provides her employer with a certificate of a qualified medical practitioner, is entitled to and should be granted a leave of absence from her employment of up to 17 weeks beginning no later than 11 weeks prior to the estimated delivery date and ending no later than 17 weeks following the actual date of the birth.

While the amendments with respect to parental leave will not result in an increase in the leave now provided, they will provide for greater flexibility in scheduling that leave. The leave of absence could not exceed 24 weeks in the 52 week period beginning on the day of the child's birth or the day in which the child came into the employee's care.

I support these amendments with respect to maternity reassignment and maternity and parental leave. We should all recognize the importance of ensuring that the first few years of a child's life are guarded and secure.

This bill also provides security for workers who are injured or become ill on the job. No employer shall dismiss, suspend, lay off, demote or discipline an employee because of absence from work due to work-related illness or injury. Each employer shall subscribe to a plan that provides an employee absent from work due to work-related illness with wage replacement, payable at an equivalent rate to that provided for under the applicable workers' compensation legislation and in the employee's province of permanent residence.

Finally, honourable senators, this bill also contains amendments in regard to wage recovery and deductions from an employee's wage.

The above amendments cited will, I believe, help workers in a fair and respectable manner. I fully support the above provisions contained in this bill although I feel that in some cases the benefits could be extended. It is high time this government recognized the importance of maintaining a healthy balance between personal, family and work responsibilities.

While the bill does contain many good provisions, I wish now to direct my comments to clause 2 and clause 42 of the bill, the proposal for a directed vote on the employer's last offer. Clause 2 amends the Canada Labour Code by adding the heading and section titled "Vote on Employer's Offer." In summary, when the notice to bargain collectively has been given and it is deemed that the public interest will be served by such a vote, this section will allow the Minister of Labour to order a vote on the employer's last offer. Employees would vote to accept or reject the employer's last offer on all matters remaining in dispute. Furthermore, all parties would be bound by that decision.

Clause 42 amends the Public Service Staff Relations Act in a similar fashion. Clause 42 provides that, before or after the commencement of a legal strike, if it was felt that the public interest would be served, a minister designated by the Governor in Council, other than a member of the Treasury Board, could order a vote similar to that which the Minister of Labour could order. The vote would be held without delay and would be conducted by the Public Service Staff Relations Board. If the offer was accepted, any legal strike would cease at once and, unlike the proposal for Part I of the code, the employees would be required to return to work as soon thereafter as the employer deemed practicable. As in clause 2, parties would be bound by this decision.

The Minister of Labour, the Honourable Marcel Danis, described the bill as "federal labour legislation which will reduce administrative and cost burdens, increase efficiency and competitiveness and enhance labour-management cooperation." I find it most interesting that the minister believes that clauses 2 and 42 will "enhance labour-management cooperation." This infringement on the collective bargaining rights of workers is appalling. The government has placed itself in a very difficult position by bringing forward this amendment without the consultation of the organized labour unions and groups.

Furthermore, it is argued by the government that this bill will "protect" the public's interest by "offering another mechanism to facilitate the settlement of collective bargaining conflicts in federal jurisdiction." We must remember, honourable senators, that as the employer, the government has the power at any time to override collective bargaining, to legislate a return to work, and to legislate the terms and conditions of a contract. We have witnessed this government take such action three times, most recently with the passage of Bill C-113, which continues the suspension of collective bargaining and the wage freeze for a further two years.

The amendment makes reference to "the public interest". However, honourable senators, there appears to be no definition of "public interest," and under what type of circumstance the minister may act. I am sure my definition of "public interest" and that of the government of the day would differ significantly. I therefore would like to know the government's definition of "public interest".

This government has a poor record when it comes to labour relations. We should remember, honourable senators, that in 1991 the Public Service Staff Relations Board declared that this government was guilty of negotiating in bad faith. Furthermore, the International Labour Organization, a United Nations agency, criticized this government for ceasing to negotiate with its employees.

Honourable senators, what is this government's hidden agenda with respect to the workers of this country? Why did the government choose to include such a severe amendment in what I would consider to be a fair and just bill? Will this government continue to chip away at the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively? I find it sad that this government decided it was in its best interests to abandon its consultative process in favour of such high-handed games.

Anyone who has been involved in collective bargaining knows that that process involves trust. A collective agreement is reached by following rules established before the negotiations start. By introducing this amendment, the government has decided that it desires the ability to intervene at any time, or when it feels the negotiations are not proceeding to their satisfaction. By including such an amendment, the government now has little reason to sit down, negotiate and work on a mutually acceptable agreement. The government enjoys a terrible amount of power with respect to legislating employees back to work, imposing a freeze on wages, et cetera. It appears that this amendment is adding to that power by destroying our system of collective bargaining.

I believe many of the amendments contained in this bill are worthy of our support. However, because of the severity of clauses 2 and 42, I cannot support the entire bill. These clauses are not in the public's best interest. I hope the government understands the error of its ways and allows us to make the necessary amendments to this bill which will accord the workers of this country the respect and consideration that they deserve.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It has been moved by the Honourable Senator DeWare, seconded by the Honourable Senator Oliver, that this bill be read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: All those honourable senators in favour of the motion, please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: All those honourable senators opposed to the motion, please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator DeWare, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Donald H. Oliver moved the second reading of Bill C-122, to amend the Customs Tariff (textile tariff reduction).

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise to speak on second reading of Bill C-122. Bill C-122 is important legislation that contains the long-awaited textile tariff reductions. The bill will have the effect of amending the Customs Tariff so as to implement, as of January 1, 1993, the textile tariff reductions that were announced by the government's December 2 economic and fiscal statement.

Bill C-122 will simplify the structure of the Customs Tariff by reducing tariffs on all fibres, yarns and fabrics to maximum rates of 5 per cent, 10 per cent and 16 per cent respectively. Current tariff rates are an average of 8 per cent, 13 per cent and 18 per cent to 25 per cent respectively.

For years, Canadian textile tariffs have been significantly higher than those of other industrialized countries and this has negatively affected both the international and domestic competitiveness of textile-using industries in Canada, particularly the apparel and the furniture industries. It has also resulted in increased costs to Canadian consumers. As a result, the government announced in March of 1988 that it would be reducing Canadian textile tariffs to bring them more in line with those of Canada's industrialized trading partners, particularly the United States.

The thrust of this initiative is to ensure that Canadian producers who use substantial quantities of textiles in their operations are able to compete on an equal footing with other companies in the North American market and elsewhere. By doing so, these companies will be able to offer their products at more attractive prices to consumers.

In February of 1989 the government decided to get some assistance in determining how to deal with these tariffs. It asked the Canadian International Trade Tribunal to provide advice on how to reduce Canada's textile tariffs to levels comparable to those of other industrialized nations. The tribunal's study took over a year to complete and included a series of extensive public hearings with evidence presented by all interested parties.

In its 1990 report the tribunal recommended that Canada's textile tariffs be reduced by moving to a simplified tariff structure with maximum rates of 5 per cent for fibres, 10 per cent for yarns and 16 per cent for fabrics. It also recommended that tariffs on certain specially constructed textiles be reduced by one-third.

The Canadian International Trade Tribunal proposed that the textile tariff reductions be phased in at a rate of 1 per cent per year over nine years, once the result of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations is known. However, the tribunal indicated that, in the event the conclusion of the round was delayed, the textile tariff reduction should be implemented no later than 1991.

The tariff reductions proposed by the tribunal would reduce Canadian textile tariff rates by just over one-quarter. This would leave most products with slightly more tariff protection than their U.S. counterparts and significantly more than the European Economic Community or Japan. The Canadian International Trade Tribunal concluded that its recommendations would provide overall net benefits to the Canadian economy. At the same time, the tribunal stated that its proposed textile tariff reductions would have a relatively minor impact on the textile industry.

The primary textile industry has, over the past 20 years, invested heavily in modernization and rationalization, recording very impressive productivity gains. As evidence of the gains made by the textile industry, exports to the U.S. by textile producers have increased by about 44 per cent since the implementation of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

It should be noted that the health of the Canadian textile industry depends to a certain extent upon the strength of its customers, notably the Canadian apparel industry, which uses about 35 to 40 per cent of its production. On balance, the tribunal concluded that the textile industry could successfully adjust to these tariff reductions.

The government has carefully examined all aspects of the tribunal's report, including the effect that it would have on the textile industry and its customers. In 1990, the government expressed its support for the general direction of the tribunal's advice and announced that it would act on it in the context of decisions to be taken in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations. At that point in time, Canadian textile and apparel producers began to bear in mind these potential textile tariff reductions when making business decisions.

Honourable senators, you will appreciate from my earlier remarks that this is not a new initiative. Industry has been well aware of the government's intention to reduce textile tariffs for over five years. Bill C-122 contains legislative amendments to implement the Canadian International Trade Tribunal's recommendations effective January 1, 1993, with the following modifications:

One, the textile tariff reductions are being phased in at a rate of 1.5 percentage points per year rather than the 1 percentage point recommended by the tribunal. This will result in the reductions being fully phased in at about the same time as they would have been under the tribunal's proposal.

Two, the tariffs on all textile fibres, yarns and fabrics, including specially constructed textiles, are being reduced to maximum rates of 5 per cent, 10 per cent and 16 per cent respectively to further simplify the tariff structure.

Three, margins of tariff preference are being maintained for certain items of significant trade interest to Australia and New Zealand in keeping with our international obligations.

In conclusion, Bill C-122 is an important initiative. It represents a fair and reasonable approach to reducing Canadian textile tariffs to the levels of our major industrialized trading partners. The tariff reductions in the bill are constructive policy initiatives. They will not only enhance the competitiveness of the Canadian apparel industry and other textile industries, but will directly benefit many textile producers by reducing costs on their textile inputs. At the same time, the reductions will have a minimal adverse effect on the textile industry.

It is time to introduce these long-awaited tariff changes and remove the uncertainties that have resulted from the past delays in implementing them. I respectfully ask honourable senators to support the speedy passage of this bill.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to rule 136(8), I must interrupt the proceedings. The Senate will now adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of the Honourable Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk moved the second reading of Bill C-121, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend another act in consequence thereof.

She said: Honourable senators, as I rise for the first time in this chamber, I wish to express my appreciation to all those senators who have helped and assisted me so greatly in integrating into this chamber. My appreciation extends to the Clerk and all the staff of the Senate.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to present for second reading the government's latest initiative under the Green Plan, Bill C-121, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend another act in consequence thereof. This legislation will oblige the private sector to fund further improvements to marine spills response capability, increase the maximum fine for polluters to $1 million from $250,000, and authorize the adoption by Canada of two international covenants on marine pollution and clean-up.

This legislation will place the onus of responsibility for spill clean-up on the polluter. It will introduce a new regime under which ships and designated oil handling facilities will be required to pre-plan for spill response and enter into arrangements with private-sector funded response organizations for response to any spills which occur.

This legislation will also allow for greater public input to the spill clean-up process. Advisory councils will be established in each geographic region of Canada to provide guidance and advice to the Coast Guard and to the minister on ways in which spill response operations can be improved. This bill will also provide for Parliamentary oversight of the new regime to ensure that the private-sector funded system continues to operate at peak capacity.

However, in addition to putting the responsibility for spill preparedness on potential polluters and providing for greater public input and accountability, this bill strengthens the government's ability to ensure swift and effective response to spills. If a shipowner or a response organization proves incapable of mounting a response, the minister, through the Coast Guard, can and will assume control of the response and take any action necessary to prevent, repair, remedy or minimize oil pollution damage.

In the future, private citizens will have access to the Ship-Source Oil Pollution Fund for reasonable costs incurred in cleaning up an oil spill. Those affected by pollution will be able to undertake clean-up knowing their legitimate damage claim will be dealt with quickly. We will also quadruple the maximum fine for pollutant discharge offences to $1 million and provide for the gaoling of marine polluters. This change will bring the CSA into line with other legislation dealing with pollution, including the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the Fisheries Act, the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, and the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act.

We will also increase flexibility in sentencing polluters by introducing a set of guidelines which may be used in imposing a sentence and providing for a variety of sentencing options beyond fines or prison. For example, convicted polluters could be required to publish information relating to the conviction or contributing to research. In fact, this legislation will empower the courts to direct convicted polluters to take any action the court considers likely to prevent the offender from committing the offence again.

This legislation will also permit Canadian accession to the International Convention on Oil Pollution Preparedness, Response and Cooperation, 1990. This convention, which Canada helped develop and is committed to implementing, will help ensure greater international cooperation for response to major marine spills.

Finally, we will implement the Salvage Convention, 1989. This convention effectively changes the centuries-old principle of "no cure, no pay" under which salvors are only entitled to a reward if their efforts to salvage a vessel are successful by providing for special compensation for salvors whose efforts succeed in preventing or minimizing pollution damage.

I am particularly pleased that we are in a position to come forward at this time to accede to these conventions as, in my past life, I was involved on the international side of attempting to get these conventions in place.

Honourable senators, as you know, the Public Review Panel on Tanker Safety and Marine Spills Response Capability, in its November 1990 final report, made 107 recommendations concerning Canada's ability to prevent and respond to marine spills. Not all the panel's recommendations have required new legislation, and indeed the government has taken action to address the majority of the panel's concerns.

I would stress, however, that this legislation is but one piece of a much larger puzzle—the piece which focuses on response to spills. I will leave it to one of my colleagues to speak in the future on all the other initiatives the government has undertaken in areas such as spill prevention.

Honourable senators, in closing, it may be appropriate to refer to the comments, both formal and informal, of witnesses who appeared recently before a parliamentary committee examining this legislation. It is a rare pleasure to be able to report that, with respect to this bill, government, industry and environmental interests have spoken with one voice saying, "Pass this legislation. Put in place the new regime for spill response. Continue the work of protecting our waters."

These are wise words, indeed, and words which I would urge honourable senators to consider carefully.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, this is the first formal opportunity that I have had to welcome to the chamber Senator Andreychuk. I thank her for her remarks in support of this bill. I agree with most of the sentiments expressed in Senator Andreychuk's speech. Our concern on this side is that the bill has had an unduly long gestation period. It really constitutes the first cautious and timorous steps toward providing the kind of protection that Canadian waters must have.

We often talk about Canada being a nation from sea to sea to sea. Why, then, are we not in the forefront of the world in advancing those measures which will protect international waters, and our waters and all waters through which ships must pass? We have not been in the lead. We have been dragging behind many other jurisdictions. I find it alarming that we have been left behind on so many of these major initiatives.

For example, over 90 per cent of all foreign oil tankers in American waters are inspected by the U.S. government. The figure in Canada is something like 25 per cent. Why is that? Is it a matter of the government adopting the view that we should cut back on non-essentials? Surely it is essential that we have tanker safety in our waters. We do not find any mandatory provisions in this bill before us to ensure that those are safe tankers which ply our waters.

Just after New Year's Day this year, Canadians were horrified to watch CTV and Newsworld as they portrayed the destruction of the ship Braer off the coast of the Shetland Islands. Huge quantities of oil spilled on an ecologically sensitive area of the world. We saw on television the scenes of devastation to the environment and the wildlife, the pitiful plight of birds and fish and other products of nature entrapped in the oil slick that followed the destruction of that ship.

I am sure many Canadians relaxed and said, "It is awful and terrible, but thank the Lord it did not happen in Canadian waters." But it is a sobering fact, honourable senators, that at the same time the Braer was being broken up on the shores of Scotland, its sister ship was in Canadian waters suffering a mechanical breakdown, and the Braer itself was destined for Canadian waters on that particular, fatal voyage.

The destruction occurred as a result of mechanical failure on the ship, followed by its being tossed against the rocks by high seas, an experience that could easily have happened a short few hours or days later off the coast of Canada instead of Scotland. That is the worry. It was exactly the kind of disaster that led to the establishment of the Public Review Panel on Tanker Safety and Marine Spills Response Capability.

I remember a visit we had to the Woods Hole Institute under the leadership of Senator Marshall about three years ago. People at the Woods Hole Institute in Massachusetts said they were seriously concerned about what was happening to the Atlantic Ocean. Our most valuable species of fish were disappearing in vast numbers. We were shown graphic evidence of the decline in productive Atlantic species from a high on a graph, down, down, down, a small blip up, and then continuing down. Many people theorize that the decline is due to pollution in the Atlantic Ocean. This is a view, of course, as honourable senators know, held by Jacques Cousteau.

We must reflect on the nature of this problem. It is not a partisan issue at all. I agree with most of the measures contained in this bill. I am prepared to support them, but the serious situation in the oceans of the world today indicate that we must go far beyond the bill before us.

We remember the Exxon Valdez disaster. It produced an unbelievable situation in Alaska. We have had oil spills along the West Coast of Canada, my home province of British Columbia. One of the recommendations of that Brander-Smith review panel report was that we do much more to improve the double-hulling of the world's tanker fleets.

This legislation focuses on the very worthy matter of what we do in the event of a spill, described eloquently by Senator Andreychuk. How do we build a response capability? How do we pay for it? These are all important questions.

The bill contains provision for the creation of response capability in Canadian waters funded by private commitments by those who transport goods in our waters, especially oil. The result should be the creation of a genuine response capability in Canadian waters. So far, so good, but the issue that is not dealt with directly in this legislation, and which is raised to such a great extent in the Brander-Smith report, is the more important — in many ways — objective of prevention of actions occurring in the first place.

A proposal has been advanced in the other chamber that we proceed to provide financing for the double-hulling of many ships. The comments of the review panel with respect to inspection of tankers and other vessels in Canadian waters are very instructive. I want to refer to the Brander-Smith report beginning at page 22. This is what the panel writes:

> Given the inherent risks of transporting oil and chemicals in Canadian waters, it is imperative that all tankers, both Canadian and foreign, be seaworthy at all times.

To this we should say "Amen".

> With cost-cutting in the shipping industry, planned preventive maintenance and inspections risk become less of a priority to tanker owners. Tankers with aging and deteriorating structures and equipment are an unwelcome invitation to disaster.

This is the result of the panel's report.

> This can only be averted by aggressive vessel inspections and prompt detention of tankers in port for repairs when they do not meet Canadian or international standards for seaworthiness and pollution prevention.

Why was it not possible for the government to introduce a bill incorporating this recommendation of that highly respected Brander-Smith review panel? Why was not it regarded as a priority measure by this government to pass this bill before we get into a fall election or a leadership contest?

The report went on to say:

> In 1988, the Coast Guard inspected only 8 per cent of the foreign vessels entering Canadian ports. According to the Coast Guard, most of its inspection resources (up to 90 per cent in some regions) are presently committed to conducting compulsory inspections. Under the Memorandum of Understanding on Port State Control to which Canada is a co-operating party, Canada is now committed to inspecting 25 per cent of all foreign tankers visiting Canadian ports. (The results of these inspections will be stored in an international database and shared with European nations, who will also inspect 25 per cent of foreign tankers visiting their ports.)

[Senator Perrault]

The percentage should be very much higher, as I said earlier.

The report also recommends:

> 3.3 That the Canadian Coast Guard inspect every foreign tanker on its first visit to a Canadian port and immediately increase inspection levels to 25 per cent of foreign tankers in accordance with the port-state agreement...

But, as I say, the Americans are pushing that percentage up to a very much higher degree.

In the other place, it was suggested by some opposition members that the government establish a fund with a $2 per tonne levy. In 10 years, they would have some $800 million, a fund that would be a good start toward the renewal of tanker fleets, with the result that more tankers would be equipped with double hulls.

In addition to double-hulling, revenues from source could be used for many other good purposes relating to our environmental concerns. It has been suggested that the Coast Guard, for example, requires improved equipment, and that more money be allocated toward improving research and development in related fields. It has been suggested that moneys are required for the development of an electronic chart that would enhance the degree of safety in waters used by oil tankers.

Other recommendations were produced by Brander-Smith and other bodies concerned about the pollution of our waters; proposals, again, which are not part of the bill before us. Why have we no companion legislation before us which would meet these other recommendations and needs?

I mentioned the fact about the desirability of extending the inspection of fleets of non-Canadian known tankers. I believe this measure would enjoy support from coast to coast in Canada. It would not be controversial at all.

While the bill advances some proposals which merit support, surely it represents only the first steps toward a satisfactory policy of prevention and cure. In the next Parliament, we must work together to produce measures that will strengthen and address specifically every possible preventive initiative. It is absolutely essential. If we had a major oil spill tomorrow afternoon off the East Coast of Canada, all sorts of recriminations would be flying around this country. People would say that measures such as these should have been implemented two years ago. Let us avoid the tragedies and the very costly disasters which have plagued so many countries in the world.

I wish to see this bill move to committee quickly where we can hear further evidence. I would then be prepared to make a more complete statement at third reading.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Andreychuk, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Ron Ghitter, moved the second reading of Bill C-89, to amend the Investment Canada Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise for the first time in this honourable chamber to propose second reading of a bill that will be of great benefit to the community in which I live.

Before I make my brief comments with respect to this bill, may I extend to all members of this chamber my sincere appreciation for their friendliness and the many courtesies extended to me as a new member.

I very much look forward to working with all members in our common endeavour to make the work of this chamber better understood and recognized by Canadians, and to enhance the prestige and integrity of this institution.

For those of us who have either been directly or indirectly involved in the oil and gas sector over the past 20 years, we are all aware of the sensitivities and the roller coaster-like atmosphere in which this business community has endeavoured to survive. The oil and gas sector is fundamental to the economic prosperity of my province in this country. In Alberta, it represents 20 per cent of the GDP.

During the past number of years, we have been buffeted by OPEC price wars, National Energy Programs, confiscatory federal budgets, high interest rates, an overvalued Canadian dollar, the FIRA, the PGRT and low oil and gas prices. For a number of years it was the thinking of the Government of Canada that the natural resources of the West, particularly oil and gas, should not be sold at world prices but should be marketed at a discount to the rest of Canada. I vividly recall being in government from 1971 to 1979 in Alberta when these issues were very much on our minds, and when relationships between the East and West of this country were at an all-time low.

It is to the credit of this government that all these narrow discriminatory and confiscatory programs of the old regime are no more. Gone is the hated NEP, gone is the PGRT, gone are budgets that single out our oil and gas industry for special tax treatment, gone is Petro-Canada as a totally government-controlled agency of policy, gone is FIRA and gone are high interest rates.

Senator Corbin: Gone is Mulroney.

Senator Ghitter: To be replaced again, Mr. Speaker, by a wonderful leader who I am sure will lead us one more time to victory.

Today we welcome a reasonably valued Canadian dollar. We welcome stable oil and gas prices, we welcome lower interest rates, we welcome the National Energy Board headquarters to the west where it should be and, above all, we welcome the return of a viable oil and gas industry and the revised positive economic climate it has created in regions of western Canada. The recovery has not occurred by fluke or inaction. The recovery has occurred because the Mulroney government has the vision and the understanding of the oil and gas industry to undo all the wrongs levied upon this industry by past governments.

Today, in Calgary, the oil and gas industry is surging. Many new junior oil and gas companies dot the TSE. Drilling activity creating thousands of jobs has surged and the service sector is prospering again. Bill C-89 is but one more example of the desire of this government to assist the oil and gas industry in every way possible.

There are basically four aspects of the bill, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to bring to members' attention. The first and most significant aspect was announced in March 1992 by the government —

Senator Frith: Senator Ghitter, we use "honourable senators" and not "Mr. Speaker" here.

Senator Ghitter: Thank you, senator. I appreciate your mentioning that.

One of the changes that was announced at the time, honourable senators, involved the raising of the review threshold for acquisitions reviewed under the Investment Canada Act. As a result, in the legislation before us today, changes are shown whereby the current review threshold for direct acquisitions in up-stream oil and gas of $5 million and for indirect acquisitions of $50 million have now been changed.

The proposed amendments to the Investment Canada Act will extend to U.S. investors acquiring oil and gas businesses in Canada the same FTA-established review thresholds that apply to other sectors. As a result, the review thresholds for U.S. investors and sellers in other sectors will become $152 million, which was $150 million in constant 1992 dollars, for direct acquisitions with no review for indirect acquisitions. The threshold is being raised to encourage even greater investments to explore and develop Canada's oil and gas reserves and to allow Canadian oil and gas companies to grow and prosper with the assistance of external capital.

The rationale behind the legislation is the view that the current regulations place an unfair burden in the form of uncertainty and unnecessary costs on foreign controlled companies that want to be involved in the oil and gas business in Canada. In addition, Canadian companies may be restricted from realizing the full value of their investments by not being permitted to sell an oil and gas business to the highest bidder. For investments beyond $152 million, Investment Canada will still apply the net-benefit-to-Canada test for transactions that are reviewable. The result is oil and gas companies will now be treated no differently from businesses in the manufacturing sector. There is therefore no reason to maintain review thresholds different from those applied to the manufacturing industry. It is estimated by the Financial Post in their March 30, 1992 edition that an additional $300 million to $400 million a year in investment will result by virtue of the lifting of ownership restrictions and raising the threshold levels.

There are two other important aspects to this bill that I would bring to the attention of honourable senators. This amendment will permit the minister responsible for Investment Canada to enter into agreements with entities other than provincial governments and other agencies. The amendment will modify the act, which currently allows the agency to enter into agreements with any province, by adding the words "or with any other entity or person". This will allow the minister to enter into agreements with corporations and individuals. Approval by the Governor in Council is needed to enter into an agreement with a province and this approval will be required before an agreement is reached with the private sector. Agreements among federal departments and agencies do not require Governor-in-Council approval. The minister responsible for Investment Canada will use this power to enter into agreements primarily designed to share the monetary costs of an investment promotion project but also related to research activities of the agency.

The amendment will allow Investment Canada's program division the flexibility to undertake jointly funded programs with non-government entities. For example, the research division may collaborate with the C.D. Howe Institute or the Conference Board of Canada to study investment issues and, similarly, the development division may work with the Canadian Advanced Technology Association or the Information Technology Association of Canada to promote investment in a specific sector.

The amendment will bring the Investment Canada Act into line with the authority governing other federal departments and agencies that have comparable missions.

Third, this bill amends the act to give the minister new powers to determine whether or not a business entity in the cultural sector is or is not Canadian controlled. The proposed amendment gives the minister the authority to look beyond the current sections of the act that define a Canadian-controlled business to determine control "in fact". This will ensure that the proposed investment in the cultural sector which is controlled in fact by non-Canadians has not been structured in such a way as to avoid review under the act. In essence, this is an anti-avoidance amendment section.

Specifically, this section of the bill proposes three substantive new clauses. The first gives the minister the authority to override the current definition of control and base its determination on control in fact. The minister will also be given additional power to determine whether control has been acquired, and if the acquirer is a non-Canadian. The second gives the minister the authority to request relevant information from an investor, and to reach a decision on the information that is available to him.

The rationale behind these changes is to encourage the development of a strong cultural sector in Canada as a priority of this government. A healthy Canadian-owned book-publishing sector makes a strong contribution to Canada's culture because it can be relied upon to publish Canadian authors. Similarly, Canadian filmmakers and recording artists bring out Canadian values in their work, and Canadian companies often play an important role in the production and distribution of their work. Government policy is to encourage foreign-controlled firms to also contribute by promoting Canadian artists in their work.

In conclusion Mr. Speaker, members —

Senator Frith: Honourable senators.

Senator Ghitter: — honourable senators, I believe that these amendments to the Investment Canada Act, as proposed in Bill C-89, will be beneficial to the oil industry, the business community and the cultural community. The response to the proposed bill has been very positive in the business and cultural communities, and I recommend this bill for the consideration and approval of all honourable members.

Senator Frith: Senators.

Senator Ghitter: Senators.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I had no intention of harassing the senator, because many of us have had the experience of having some notes prepared for us by the department. They tend to prepare them in a form for delivery in the House of Commons. I understand the predicament. I have had it happen myself. I thought I might as well raise it on the spot, and then it might —

Senator Ghitter: Honourable members, I prepared my own notes and made the mistake. I cannot blame it on another party.

Senator Gigantès: You are very generous, sir.

Senator Frith: In that case, the explanation is that you have been watching C-SPAN or something of that kind.

SEIZED PROPERTY MANAGEMENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jean-Claude Rivest moved the second reading of Bill C-123, respecting the management of certain property seized or restrained in connection with certain offences, the disposition of certain property on forfeiture thereof and the sharing of the proceeds of disposition therefrom in certain circumstances.

Honourable senators, I imagine all senators have understood this is a technical bill that will give the Government of Canada additional means to deal with crime, and especially with drug trafficking and the proceeds of these activities.

In 1991, Parliament passed legislation dealing with the proceeds of crime. The Canadian anti-drug strategy, launched in 1987 and renewed in March 1992 for another five-year period, admits that one of the best ways to deter drug traffickers is to make their business unprofitable. The proceeds of crime legislation is part and parcel of this strategy. Its purpose is to confiscate the profits of drug-related offences, which, as I said before, is an effective way to counter such activities. Attacking the potential profits of drug-trafficking acts as a deterrent to potential drug traffickers and is at the same time a well-deserved penalty for those who take part in this activity.

Honourable senators, these provisions, which were adopted by Parliament, have been used very little so far and need improvements. That is the purpose of the bill before us today, and there are two main reasons for this.

First of all, there has been an absence of an effective asset management regime pending the forfeiture of the seized assets. There is no administrative apparatus to supervise the management of these assets.

Second, there is a lack of co-operation by provincial and local police forces in investigating offences subject to the provisions of proceeds of crime legislation.

This particular bill would fill these two gaps in our current legislation. It would create a bureau within the Department of Supply and Services to manage seized, restrained and forfeited property.

Once the bureau has possession or control over the property seized or restrained in federally initiated prosecutions, it will have the power to manage it until the time the property is disposed of. This includes the advancing of money and any payments that may be necessary to maintain the ongoing operation of the property. It will also advise law enforcement agencies on the seizure or restraining of proceeds of crime.

Finally, the bureau to be created within the Department of Supply and Services would dispose of the confiscated property and administer the asset sharing program. The operations of this bureau would not generate any costs for the federal Treasury, since it would be part of the Department of Supply and Services and would be doing what the government does now with its not altogether adequate resources.

The second main component of this bill is the sharing of forfeited proceeds. This is, in fact, becoming an increasingly pressing issue, both in Canada and at the international level. In fact, provincial and local police forces are becoming increasingly reluctant to spend time and money on investigations connected with the proceeds of crime in support of federal prosecutions. Such investigations are generally very long and very costly.

Honourable senators, under present Canadian legislation, reciprocity is impossible and the purpose of the bill is to deal with this situation.

The proposed law would provide for a fair system to share the net proceeds from the disposal of confiscated goods with the governments responsible for the organizations that participated in the investigation which led to the confiscation. In the same way, proceeds could be shared with foreign governments whose legislation provides for a similar sharing program.

Finally, the bill makes changes to existing laws whereby provincial governments could dispose of the confiscated goods as they see fit. As we know, the provincial attorneys general take legal action for drugs seized as a result of investigations conducted by provincial or local police forces. It is a matter of applying to all provincial governments in Canada the system which already exists under administrative agreements between Quebec and the federal government and between New Brunswick and the federal government. This would be extended to all of Canada.

Honourable senators, that summarizes the main points of this bill. Thank you, and of course I urge you to adopt it.

On motion of Senator Lewis, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FORTY-FIFTH REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Forty-Fifth Report of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Budget—Transport and Communications Committee), presented in the Senate on June 3, 1993.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report concerning the committee on Transport and Communications.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, and report adopted.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Fifth Report of the Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders (privilege—Senator Carney, P.C.), presented in the Senate on May 6, 1993. — (Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Corbin, who in my absence, moved the adjournment of this debate for me. I wanted the chance to read what Senator Carney had to say following our report. I had an opportunity to read her comments and those of Senator Grimard. I participated in the work of the committee, which I think did a very good job. I do not propose continuing the discussion any longer. I think that we should adopt the report.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Grimard, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, and report adopted.

THE GOVERNMENT

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the disastrous record of the Mulroney administration from 1984, when it first broke faith with the Canadian people, to 1993, when the Prime Minister announced his resignation. — (Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Today, Part 10: How Michael (GST) Wilson wrestled with the deficit, which, as we saw, was not a very important matter for the Mulroney team during the general election campaign.

Our examination of Mr. Wilson's performance is not just an exercise in nostalgia. No longer Minister of Finance, Mr. Wilson continues to sit as a key member of Mr. Mulroney's inner cabinet, with Kim Campbell and Jean Charest. He is now in charge of our NAFTA negotiations with the United States and Mexico, where he can again spark another disaster for Canada.

His legacy as Finance Minister continues its importance beyond the misery it has left throughout the country; it is a legacy that the two 1993 frontrunners in the Conservative leadership race have adopted as their own.

The Scene: Kim Campbell presents on April 29, 1993, her economic policy proposals. She begins by praising Mr. Mazankowski's most recent budget and then says: "I am totally supportive of the government's economic direction first laid out by Michael Wilson and consistently followed since then." As far as the government's economic and fiscal record, she says, "I am proud of that record," and then boasts that she "sat on the Expenditure Review Committee of Cabinet."

She was proud of Mr. Wilson's record, and Michael Wilson is equally proud of her. Less than two weeks later, he announced he was supporting Ms Campbell's leadership bid. Why? Because, "I think she is very much committed to the [economic] policies that I have been very much a part of in recent years." That is from the Toronto Star of May 11, 1993.

It is clearly time to ask about those policies. What are they, the ones that they are all talking about and which Ms Campbell is committed to, and what have they accomplished for Canada, because she obviously means to continue them if she is successful this weekend. Let's start with the big picture.

Mulroneyites, under the guidance of Finance Minister Michael Wilson, and later Don Mazankowski, accomplished in eight years what all previous prime ministers and finance ministers combined could not accomplish in 117 years. Wilson and Mazankowski managed to earn that doubtful prize by spending more than $1 trillion. Seventeen prime ministers from Macdonald to Turner, governing since Confederation, spent $900 billion over 117 years. Along come these Mulroneyites: Wilson, Mazankowski, Campbell, Charest and other luminaries and they manage to spend more than $1 trillion in eight years. It is hard to believe that a government trying to pass itself off as frugal and fiscally responsible and conservative could spend so much, but it did. It spent $1 trillion in eight years, more than everyone had spent in 117 years.

The amount is so fantastic, particularly when put in the context of how the Mulroneyites were elected in September of 1984. Finance Minister Michael Wilson presented his economic statement in November of that year, but let us pretend that the Mulroneyites had not spent a single penny until the new year, January 1, 1985 — that is, giving Mr. Wilson the best of it, and a four-month period of grace since the September 1984 election. Between January 1 and March 31, 1985, which was the final quarter of the 1984-85 fiscal year, the government spent approximately $27 billion. In the 1985-86 fiscal year it spent $111 billion; in 1986-87, $116 billion; in 1987-88, $125 billion; in 1988-89, $132 billion; in 1989-90, $143 billion; in 1990-91, $151 billion; in 1991-92, $155 billion and in 1992-93, $158 billion. And for the first quarter of the 1993-94 fiscal year, which takes to us the end of June 1993, it will have spent another $40 billion for a grand total of $1.158 trillion. One trillion dollars, let alone $1.158 trillion, is a staggering figure and can only be appreciated when put into some smaller or more graspable perspective. It is not enough to say that it is a one, followed by 12 zeros. If you spent $1 million every day, it would take 2,739 years to spend $1 trillion dollars. Spending $1 million a day, not interest, it would take 2,739 years to spend that amount and this government spent it in eight years, not 2,739 years.

One trillion dollars would build new $100,000 homes for 10 million Canadian families. You could give every man, woman and child living in Canada almost $40,000. I do not want to be too uncharitable about a government which is in its last months in office, but I think if you were to ask Canadians whether they would prefer to have eight and a half years of Tory government or a cheque for $40,000, they would take the $40,000.

What did Canadians get for the $1.158 trillion of their money that the Mulroneyites spent? Not much. Certainly not very much which was good. They got record numbers of unemployed, the dismantling of their social programs and a colossal national debt for their children.

But in 1984 it was not supposed to turn out like this. In his November 1984 economic statement, Mr. Wilson explained how terrible things were and then warned:

> That is bad enough but that is not the worst of it. Current projections show the deficit...remaining between $34 and $38 billion in every year for the rest of this decade.

What was Mr. Mazankowski's deficit last year? It was $35.5 billion. In order to defend their own dismal performance, Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Mazankowski, now claim that Mr. Wilson did not know what he was talking about in 1984.

In a speech Mr. Mazankowski gave to the Vancouver Board of Trade on September 1, 1991, he said:

> ...if we had not taken action to bring down the rate of spending from its pace prior to 1984-85, the deficit today would be over $100 billion...

Mr. Mulroney himself joins in, not caring that it demonstrates how his former finance minister, Mr. Wilson, must have been incompetent. Remember, former finance minister Mr. Wilson also warned in his 1984 economic statement, that if nothing were done, "...by 1990 it," and he is referring to the net federal debt, "could approach $410 billion".

Today, the net federal debt is approximately $460 billion. By his own words, we must assume Mr. Wilson admits that less than nothing was done.

Canadians will not forget. They will not forget how Mr. Wilson said that if nothing were done, "unemployment would remain unacceptably high — 11 per cent through 1985 and then declining gradually to about 7 per cent by 1990." That is from page 4 of his economic statement.

That is what Mr. Wilson said would await us if he did nothing. Whatever he thinks he did, the result, according to him, was worse than nothing, because by the end of 1990, the unemployment rate was not seven per cent, but 9.5 per cent and, today, it is 11 per cent, which he described as unacceptable.

After nine years of Tory administration, is this all the fault of the Liberals, or of Mr. Trudeau? I suppose he would say yes.

It is tempting to go on with the examination of Mr. Wilson's economic statement for some time because it graphically illustrates how the Tory train went off the tracks even before it had cleared the station. However, it is time to move on.

Let us move directly to Mr. Wilson's first budget, presented on May 23, 1985. Eight months after the election, one would have hoped that the Mulroneyites finally had a handle on what they were doing. Mr. Wilson, however, would prove otherwise.

In his 1985 budget he declared:

> I am implementing a clear and realistic medium-term plan to control our debt.

That declaration is found at page 5 of his speech. What was the result of that "clear and realistic" plan? The result is a debt that has more than doubled since the Mulroney team bought into the plan. Furthermore, that spectacular failure occurred concurrently with spectacular tax increases — some 29 or 30 over the period — and determined assaults on Canada's social programs.

We all remember Mr. Wilson's declaration in the House of Commons on March 6, 1984, when he said, "We would not raise taxes." We all remember the 1984 Progressive Conservative campaign handbook, which said, at page 97, "We can reduce the deficit without increasing taxes or reducing the level of social services."

Clearly, Mr. Wilson had not been listening to what he himself had been saying, or reading what his party had been writing, because on May 23, 1985, he did both. He increased taxes and launched his first of many assaults on our social services, after having said that it was not necessary, that we could maintain services and did not need to raise taxes.

Let me start with taxes. First, there was "a temporary 18-month surtax" on personal incomes. Eight years later, Canadians are still waiting for the end of that 18-month temporary period. The temporary surtax was to apply to "high-income earners". By "high income", the Mulroney team meant a family of four with an income of $40,000. That is where the surtax would kick in.

The second tax increase introduced by Mr. Wilson was not, strictly speaking, a tax increase, but it would raise even more money than the surtax. Personal tax exemptions, such as the married exemption, would no longer increase with the cost of living. They would be de-indexed, increasing only by the amount that inflation exceeded three per cent.

Therefore, if inflation were four per cent, the personal exemptions would increase by only one per cent. This would take place year after year, and the value of the exemptions would become smaller year after year. In 1986, this change alone would raise $635 million in extra taxes; and in years following it would raise billions. I think what they are calling that these days is a "tax grab".

Page 74 of the budget papers shows that this de-indexation of personal exemptions would cost a family of four making $15,000 an extra $62 in taxes. These lower income families also lost the benefit of the federal tax reduction provision. This meant another $100 in taxes for our family of four, with an annual income of $15,000.

Next, there was an increase in the Federal Sales Tax rate. Immediately upon taking office the Mulroneyites increased the tax from nine to 10 per cent, effective October 1, 1984. In his budget, Mr. Wilson increased it again to 11 per cent. This was the same tax that he was later to characterize as the "silent killer of jobs". That was when he was trying to convince Canadians that the GST was good for them.

The scope of this "silent-killer-of-jobs" sales tax was also expanded. It would now apply to confectioneries, soft drinks, pet foods, health products such as medicated creams and bandages, surgical and dental instruments, as well as energy conservation products.

Moving along, the excise tax on tobacco was increased. The excise tax on alcohol was increased. The excise taxes on transportation fuels were increased and there were special new taxes on corporations and financial institutions. That is not bad for someone who said, "We would not raise taxes." We should keep our ears cocked for some of his team members and proteges saying that this weekend, or in the next election.

But he was not finished. The Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, which assisted young families to save money for their first homes, was abolished.

Turning to social programs, Mr. Wilson proposed to de-index old age security payments, so that there would be no annual increases unless inflation exceeded three per cent. The Mulroneyites abandoned that proposal when seniors across the country rightly charged that they had been betrayed. An identical proposal to de-index family allowances, however, became law.

The children of Canada were a softer touch for the Mulroney team. They were a safer target. They were much less likely to demonstrate on Parliament Hill, so Mr. Wilson also announced that starting in 1987 income tax exemptions for children, which stood at $710 per child, would not merely be de-indexed, but would be reduced, first to $560, and then to $470. As we all know, for the 1993 taxation year, they have been eliminated.

As if that were not enough, the income threshold for the child tax credit would be reduced by $3,000, and the exemption for dependent children over the age of 18 would be reduced.

Was this all to reduce the deficit? That is what they said, but we know they congenitally do the opposite of what they say. One would have thought they could get a firm handle on the deficit, but no, because all the savings and all the new taxes paid even by the very poorest of Canadians, did not go to fighting the deficit. A large part of it was redirected for the benefit of Canadians who least needed the government's help. I am thinking in particular about changes, for example, to capital gains and RRSPs.

I will deal with capital gains first. In his 1985 budget, Mr. Wilson announced that individuals would be granted a lifetime capital gains exemption of half a million dollars. All capital property would qualify for the exemption, whether it was a villa in Bermuda or a vacant lot in downtown Toronto. Mr. Wilson, at page 6 of his budget speech, declared:

> This is a measure designed to unleash the full entrepreneurial dynamism of individual Canadians.

Who, exactly, were these individual Canadians whose "entrepreneurial dynamism" was going to be unleashed by the Mulroneyites? They certainly were not members of those families of four making $15,000 who would see their taxes increase following the de-indexation of personal exemptions and the elimination of the Federal Tax Reduction program. These families would be hard pressed to make ends meet now that they had been harnessed to the tax wheel in order to provide the money needed to unleash the dynamism of others.

Who were these others? The answer is provided in the Revenue Canada publication "Taxation Statistics", at page 287. For the 1990 taxation year, total capital gains deductions totalled more than $6 billion. Who claimed these deductions? The Revenue Canada publication shows that individuals with an annual income of $80,000 or higher claimed more than $4 billion of those capital gains deductions. That is where the money went. The money that was taken from the lower middle class and poor through the front door was shovelled out the back door to rich people, at least to people who look rich to those from whom it was taken. Those are the ones who they were determined to help.

As we have seen, this gift to the few, paid for by the many, was going to cost real money, not just peanuts. In the very beginning that much was clear. On page 45 of the 1985 Fiscal Plan, there is a chart showing that in the 1985-86 fiscal year, the capital gains exemption was projected to cost the treasury $300 million. This was $80 million more than the government was going to receive through de-indexation, the surtax and the elimination of the federal tax reduction, all combined.

In 1985, Mr. Wilson, despite his tough talk — the Mr. Wilson whom Ms Campbell has welcomed as a mentor — was not increasing taxes on the lower and middle classes to fight the deficit. He was increasing their taxes because he needed the money in order to provide a capital gains windfall for the wealthiest of Canadians.

As I have said, it would cost $300 million in the 1985-86 fiscal year, and the following year it would cost $600 million while it was still being phased in. How many billions of dollars has this cost the federal treasury since then? In 1990 alone it cost more than $6 billion, according to Revenue Canada.

The other gift to the wealthy that Mr. Wilson unveiled in 1985, was increased contribution limits for RRSPs. Before the Mulroney team came into power, Canadians could put up to $5,500 into a RRSP. These contributions are tax deductible and they may grow within the RRSP, tax free.

In his budget, Mr. Wilson announced that contribution limits would be raised, in phases, to $15,500, or 18 per cent of earnings, whichever was greater.

What individuals did Mr. Wilson think could afford to plunk $15,500 into an RRSP every year? He could not have been thinking about that family of four with an annual income of only $15,000. For those families, Mr. Wilson de-indexed personal exemptions, eliminated the Federal Tax Reduction, increased excise taxes, increased sales taxes, and slapped the sales tax onto previously exempt products such as snack foods and bandages. He was not thinking of them.

To contribute $15,000, keeping in mind the overall limit of 18 per cent of total income, you would need an annual salary of more than $85,000. That is who Mr. Wilson and Mr. Mulroney were worried about; individuals making more than $85,000 a year. They needed help. Their welfare was more important than the deficit or the welfare of middle- class families struggling to raise their children. The priority was allowing these high-income individuals to hide an extra $10,000 from the tax man, while asking all other Canadians to empty their pockets.

Though this change was phased in more slowly than Mr. Wilson originally wanted, how many billions of dollars has it cost the treasury since 1985?

That was Mr. Wilson's first budget. There were new taxes for all Canadians, allegedly to fight the deficit, but in fact not used to reduce the deficit. Those new revenues were transformed into scrumptious bonbons for the wealthiest of Canadians so that they would be well nourished when it came time to unleash their dynamism.

What was the net effect? Did it do any good? Page 19 of Michael Wilson's 1985 Fiscal Plan shows for the 1986-87 fiscal year sales and excise tax increases of $1.380 million; personal income tax increases of $1.650 million; a $600 million capital gains present to the wealthy; a $40 million RRSP present to the wealthy; and a reduction in corporate taxes of $540 million.

What was the final result? For the 1985-86 fiscal year it was a $34.4 billion deficit. In 1986-87, Wilson did somewhat better, bringing the deficit down to $30.6 billion; but at what a cost to all but the most privileged Canadians?

That is the story of how the Mulroney team launched Mr. Wilson's "clear and realistic medium-term plan". It was certainly a fulfilment of government's classic role of redistributing the wealth of the nation — redistributing it by taking it away from the poor and giving it to the rich. It is reverse Robin Hood; take it from the poor and give it to the rich. It was a plan that kept their Bay Street friends happy, while failing utterly to deal with the deficit, no mean feat, and all in the name of doing something about the deficit. But now those well-nourished friends say that the deficit is proof that all other Canadians are eating too much and demand that the Mulroney team work even harder to dismantle what is left of Canada's social programs.

The Mulronyites — Mr. Wilson, Mr. Mazankowski, and Mr. Mulroney — will not be around much longer, but no matter, because Campbell and Charest have both made it clear they are more than prepared to listen and carry on these programs. They would even have a go at the, up until now, untouchable national health care system.

But that is for next time.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE HONOURABLE KIM CAMPBELL, P.C.

PRIME MINISTER DESIGNATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I congratulate the Conservative Party on the acquisition of its new leader and, therefore, temporarily, the Prime Minister, Kim Campbell. We, along with many Canadians, look forward to her quickly presenting herself to the voters of Canada for a mandate, which she now has from only some 1,800 out of some 13,800,000 eligible voters.

We should also congratulate Senator Murray on the success of his chosen candidate. I am sure she was relieved, if she looked at him when her percentage of 52.7 was announced, that he did not repeat his response to Mr. Clark at an earlier time that "it's not enough."

PATENTED MEDICINE PRICES REVIEW BOARD

COMPENSATION RULING

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board for having taken such a strong stand against one drug company, in ruling that the company pay $1.75 million in compensation. The board reduced the price of one medicine for heart attack victims that had been targeted by pricing agencies of Canadian drug companies.

This is the first time that compensation has been collected from a drug company by the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board since its power was expanded under the controversial new drug patent legislation approved earlier this year.

Congratulations to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board for doing one thing in support of lower drug prices.

SECOND READING

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rivest, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, for the second reading of Bill C-123, respecting the management of certain property seized or restrained in connection with certain offences, the disposition of certain property on the forfeiture thereof and the sharing of the proceeds of disposition therefrom in certain circumstances.

Hon. P. Derek Lewis: Honourable senators, I am happy to speak on second reading of Bill C-123, and to say that, in principle, we support the bill.

As the Honourable Senator Rivest said on introducing this bill, this is an effort to overcome various shortcomings in present legislation aimed at combating organized crime, particularly drug trafficking and money laundering. That legislation, which might be described as "the proceeds of crime legislation", focused on the seizure and forfeiture of property used in, or earned, as a result of criminal activity. It was aimed at reducing the profit potential of crime and thereby to reduce the motivation for organized crime to finance further elicit efforts. In this it has had some success in that, in the period from 1989 to 1992, something in the order of $60 million has been realized from forfeited property. These moneys have, in the past, reverted to the federal government where the forfeited assets have resulted from criminal cases prosecuted by the Attorney General of Canada.

The present legislation did not provide explicit provision for the management and maintenance of seized property from the time of its seizure to realization, or to its return to owners where that was the ultimate outcome of the seizure. Neither did it provide for division with other jurisdictions of the proceeds of the forfeited property. In this respect, the proposed legislation is long overdue and is welcome.

The bill's object is to lessen the disincentive to various authorities to undertake cooperative investigations. It must be remembered that, in the investigation of crime, prosecution of the offenders and the seizure of property arising therefrom, several authorities are quite often involved. You may have municipal police forces, provincial police and justice officials and courts, as well as the RCMP and the federal justice department, all involved in such proceedings. However, other than the federal government, none of these authorities receive any benefit or share from the proceeds of forfeited property, even though they may have provided the cost of such services in varied amounts.

We are here, of course, dealing with cases prosecuted by the Attorney General of Canada. This can understandably be a cause of disincentive to cooperation between the various authorities who might otherwise be involved in these efforts.

As Senator Rivest has said, the aim of the present bill is to provide authority to the government, through the relevant minister, to make provision for the sharing of the proceeds of forfeited property with the various authorities which may have been involved in the proceedings. This will apply to both domestic and foreign governments. If this is arranged in a satisfactory manner, it should lead to an equitable division of the proceeds.

The bill also provides for the establishment of an office in the Department of Supply and Services which will be empowered to have custody and management of any property within the scope of the legislation. Under this provision, property management services may be engaged for both maintenance and operation of property until it is either disposed of by sale or returned to the proper owner.

There is provision in the bill to cover the cost of such maintenance and operation. I understand that services from outside the department will be engaged for such management services.

Honourable senators, while we feel that we can support the bill, there are a few points we believe must be made, which I hope can be addressed more fully when the bill goes to committee.

First, as I have said, this bill provides authority for the sharing of the proceeds of forfeited property. In fact, clause 10 of the bill provides that the minister shall — and I emphasize "shall" — share the proceeds of disposition of forfeited property in accordance with regulations.

Clause 19 of the bill authorizes the making of regulations respecting the sharing of such proceeds. In other words, although the bill provides that the proceeds shall be shared, there are as yet no provisions for what amounts are to be shared, how those amounts are to be determined, or the times or manner of the sharing.

We are not told how, when, in what amounts or proportions, or with whom the proceeds are to be shared. It is all left to regulations to be made after the bill is passed. We are left in the dark. While we may agree in principle with the bill, surely we should know what the principles of such a division will be.

It is almost like signing a blank cheque, except that in this case there will be no cheque at all, even though the minister is directed to share the proceeds. We are asked to agree to blank regulations.

As well, when this bill was introduced in the other place by the Solicitor General, it was suggested that the sharing of the proceeds would be on the basis of the proportion of input provided by the authority involved in the investigation and successful prosecution. It was further suggested that such share would go to the taxing authority in charge of the body doing the actual work on the investigation.

In other words, if a provincial police force were cooperating in the investigation, its share of the proceeds would go to the provincial government rather than directly to the provincial police force, and might then become part of the provincial general revenues and be used as such. In such a case, the share of the proceeds would not go to augment the provincial police budget, where the money could have been used to further police work in areas such as crime prevention. This might well reduce the incentive for police forces to involve themselves deeply in investigations that would not likely result in monetary benefit to them.

On the other hand, if a police force were to receive directly the share of such proceeds, it is possible that the taxing authority in charge of such a force would be tempted to reduce the police budget by the amount received from the share of the proceeds. This would appear to defeat the incentive to the police force to press such investigations. Then again, we might find that, if a police force did directly receive a share of the proceeds in proportion to the effort put into an investigation, there might be a tendency for it to keep such investigation in its own hands as long as possible in order to enhance its own portion of the proceeds. It seems to me that vying for the work would be a disincentive to cooperation among the various law enforcement agencies.

These are points which, I believe, need discussion and clarification.

Finally, honourable senators, there are questions with respect to the new office to be established to administer the provisions of this bill. Is it to evolve into another bureaucratic nightmare that will frustrate various governments' attempts to gain access to the proceeds of seized property or to obtain information as to their management?

How will the operation of the office be financed? Will the costs of operation be taken out of the proceeds realized from the forfeited property? In this respect, I note from what Senator Rivest said — if I understood him correctly — that there would be no cost to government from the office's operations. That is something we should look into, honourable senators.

What will be the actual function of the office? How much involvement will it have with the private sector in its operations? These are all problems upon which we should have clarification.

Honourable senators, while supporting the bill in principle, I feel there are many questions, particularly with respect to the matter of the sharing of proceeds, that require some clarification in committee.

Honourable senators, I hope the bill will go to committee for study shortly.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

INVESTMENT CANADA ACT

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 7:

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Ghitter, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stratton, for the second reading of Bill C-89, to amend the Investment Canada Act.

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few comments on the second reading of Bill C-89 prior to its being sent to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for consideration.

I wish to begin by pointing out some of the history of Bill C-89. Bill C-89 amends the Investment Canada Act, which many of you will recall was the act that replaced the Foreign Investment Review Act in 1985.

The history of foreign investment legislation in Canada goes back to the Gray Report of 1972, which was a report to the government of the day on foreign direct investment in Canada. The outgrowth of that report lead to the establishment of the Foreign Investment Review Act (FIRA) of April 1974. That act was the first piece of legislation in this country to deal with foreign investment and how government could maximize the benefit of foreign investment in the country.

In the 1980s, changing public attitudes toward foreign investment led the government to relax restrictions on foreign investment in order to create jobs. There was also a change in government in the fall of 1984. That change led to the 1985 Investment Canada Act, which was the replacement or the successor to the Foreign Investment Review Act.

The biggest single change that occurred when the FIRA legislation was abolished and replaced by the Investment Canada Act was that the criteria by which foreign investment in Canada would be evaluated were substantially altered. To put it another way, the conditions for rejecting a potential foreign investment in Canada were substantially narrowed.

With respect to FIRA, historically, potential foreign investments had to have generous benefits for Canada in order to be approved. The phrase "significant benefits" was replaced by the phrase "net benefits" in the Investment Canada Act of 1985. This led to the rather interesting situation in which the Investment Canada Act, over the eight years it has been in existence, has been such that virtually no proposed foreign investments that have been reviewed by Investment Canada have been denied.

What, then was the net effect of the change in language in 1985, if not to formally and legally do away with restrictions on foreign investment? That change had the net effect of doing away with foreign investment constraints of any kind. What has happened is that the vast majority of transactions reviewed by Investment Canada in its history have passed and been approved. What we have in Canada, in effect, is no significant constraint on foreign investment, with the exception of constraints that exist within cultural industries. Therefore, some of the changes proposed in Bill C-89 will have very little effect, because they will be changing an act whose actual application, in practice, has not had any significant impact.

Nevertheless, as much for "optical" political reasons as for substantive reasons, the government decided to proceed with Bill C-89 and, in particular, with clause 3 in Bill C-89. This clause extends to U.S. investors in the Canadian oil and gas industry the same review thresholds as apply in other sectors of the economy under the free trade agreement.

As some of you will recall, when we were considering the FTA in this place in 1988-89, one of the issues discussed was the impact of the FTA on the Canadian oil and gas sector and the energy sector in general. Under the FTA, some sectors of the Canadian economy were more open to potential foreign investment than the oil and gas industry — more open in the sense that the FTA prevents high thresholds for the review of U.S. investments and therefore effectively allows more to slip under the net than was required for the oil and gas industry.

I point out, however, that this is a fictitious net, because those foreign investments are rarely caught in the net. One should therefore understand that the real impact of this legislation on the oil and gas industry is partly "political optics" and not substantive policy change.

The government's defence of clause 3 in the act is to say that they are bringing the oil and gas industry into line with other sectors of the economy. In policy terms, this means that the review threshold for investments in the oil and gas industry, which is $5 million in direct investment under the current legislation, moves to $150 million. I point out that, even with $5 million, few investments have actually been stopped. You can understand, therefore, that such a change in legislation has very little impact. I would point out, however, that I have no doubt that, in Western Canada during the next election campaign, we will hear the government trumpeting what a significant change it made to the oil and gas industry. However, the reality is that Bill C-89 had absolutely no impact at all.

Another factor in Bill C-89 that is worth noting is the way in which it changes the provisions of the Investment Canada Act with respect to cultural industries — that is, "cultural industries" being defined as film, video, music and book publishing. Because cultural industries have been a hot political issue in Canada for a long time, ministers and Investment Canada have historically looked closely at potential foreign takeovers in the cultural industry. On the surface, this particular change in Bill C-89 would appear to subject cultural industries to greater scrutiny than under the current legislation. I say 'appear to do so' because it gives the minister power to make a significant intervention to control foreign investment in the cultural sector. This is the perceived "political optical" impact of the change. Given the philosophy of this government to date, giving any minister of the Crown the authority to exercise his or her judgment with respect to potential foreign investment is a farcical notion. With this government, we know in advance that the minister, whoever it happens to be, will be the one who winds up approving investment, not reviewing it.

Nevertheless, honourable senators, the bill does strengthen the hand of the minister in terms of reviewing potential foreign investments in the cultural sector. One would suspect — and hope — that in the hands of a minister of another governing party — which will happen before the end of the year — this particular change in the legislation will be more substantial than "optical".

Finally, honourable senators, I should like to make one observation about the remarks made in this chamber last week by Senator Ghitter, one of the new senators from Alberta and a former member of the Lougheed cabinet back in the 1970s. In speaking on Bill C-89, somehow or other he decided to devote a large portion of his comments to a history of foreign investment policy back in the late 1970s, and to some of the policies of the Liberal government of the day. In fact, he proceeded to attack a series of policies that I thought had been eliminated at least a decade ago, if not 15 years ago.

Nevertheless, he decided to devote nearly half of his speech on Bill C-89 to a trial run for stump speeches to be given in Alberta in the upcoming federal election campaign; that is, how this government has fostered growth in the oil and gas industry. In fact, the act has never been used to improve investment in the energy sector.

I found Senator Ghitter's comments on the introduction to second reading of this bill somewhat bizarre and out of touch with history. Perhaps since he left active politics he has not followed the political debate. However, I want to congratulate Senator Ghitter on something that he did say in his comments. On page 3464 of Debates of the Senate Senator Ghitter said the following — and this was his maiden speech in the Senate, and is a comment that some of us will want to come back to in the months and years ahead:

> A healthy Canadian-owned book-publishing sector makes a strong contribution to Canada's culture because it can be relied upon to publish Canadian authors.

I only wish those of us on this side had had Senator Ghitter in this chamber when we introduced the amendment on the GST to protect book publishers by taking the GST off books. One only needs to read the observations and statements by people in the book publishing and retailing industries to understand that the GST on books has had a devastating effect. Indeed, some are concerned about the effects of the GST on literacy.

Senator Murray: Come on!

Senator Kirby: Perhaps that is why Senator Ghitter is sitting on this side of the house on the days when he is here. I am absolutely delighted that Senator Ghitter —

An Hon. Senator: He is over on the other side.

Senator Kirby: I am sorry. I thought you were originally sitting down in this corner.

Senator Murray: The GST is causing political illiteracy.

Senator Kirby: One member of the government has been sufficiently—-

Senator Ghitter: Point of order, if I may.

Senator Kirby: — enlightened to understand the impact of the GST and the need to protect the Canadian book-publishing industry.

In short, honourable senators, those of us on this side of the house are, to put it mildly, not very enamoured with this piece of legislation, largely because we think it is political window dressing and will accomplish very little. Nevertheless, we are prepared to recommend that it go to committee. It is my understanding, having talked to the chairman of the committee, that, with the approval of this house, we would proceed to have witnesses appear before the committee at our meeting at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Senator Kirby]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Ghitter, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS BILL

Hon. John Sylvain moved the second reading of Bill C-62, respecting telecommunications.

He said: Honourable senators, at the outset I should like to take this opportunity to express my particular appreciation for the spirit of cooperation and collegiality demonstrated by all members of both the House of Commons and the Senate who have contributed to the making of this bill.

I must commend the Minister of Communications for his remarkable determination to establish a legislative framework that will allow Canadians to face important challenges in telecommunications. He has demonstrated constantly that the government was, in fact, listening carefully to the concerns expressed by Canadians. Honourable senators, this final product is living proof of that fact, and will benefit every Canadian. It will meet the needs of the twenty-first century.

I was also much impressed with the non-partisan nature of the Senate committee's pre-study report and the commitment of that committee to improving a bill dealing with a very complex industry.

Honourable senators, such spirit clearly demonstrates — and I cannot emphasize this point too much — the importance for Canadians of an efficient telecommunications system in a country as large and diverse as ours. Canadians and the Canadian telecommunications industry have waited a long time for modern and forward-looking legislation to govern this rapidly evolving and increasingly important sector of our economy.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, telecommunications are a major challenge to our competitiveness and economic growth. Rapid technological change has made this sector the key to market development and Canada's future prosperity.

Canada has a choice: It either takes an active part in the dynamic and profound changes taking place in the global economy or it becomes a second class player. Progress in telecommunications and informatics has helped turn our economy into a knowledge and information based economy. Never have our prosperity and future well-being been so dependent on our ability to take full advantage of the potential of telecommunications and information technologies.

The telecommunications bill provides a regulatory and legislative framework that will make it possible to meet these challenges.

[English]

Public hearings were held both by the subcommittee and by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications during its pre-study of Bill C-62. Virtually all witnesses representing the regulator, as well as industry players including carriers, resellers, cable companies, the provinces, the Canadian business community, and public interest groups representing a wide range of Canadians who depend more and more on telecommunications, were of the view that this bill should be proclaimed as soon as possible.

These public hearings have revealed a broad consensus that Canada needs a new telecommunications act now, and that Bill C-62 provides a responsive, and responsible, legislative framework well adapted to the many challenges and rapidly changing environment facing this key sector of our economy.

I was very pleased to note that the government has incorporated in the bill key recommendations made by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, and these include: to improve the wording of the definitions in order to more clearly exclude the resellers from the scope of this bill; to better reflect regional interests in the policy objectives; to transfer from the Governor in Council to the CRTC the power to exempt classes of carriers from the legislation; to eliminate the Governor in Council's power to issue directives on matters of national security; to strengthen the provisions on federal-provincial consultation; to eliminate a proposed licensing regime, while preserving Canadian ownership requirements; to create a presumption in favour of regulatory forbearance where effective competition exists, while requiring the CRTC to bear in mind the sometimes fragile nature of competition; to impose a time limit on CRTC decision-making, while allowing the commission to extend this limit where, in its opinion, more detailed analysis of the matter at hand is required; to strengthen powers provided to the CRTC to deal with infringement of individual privacy caused by unsolicited telecommunications.

Second reading of Bill C-62 will take Canadians one step closer to the modern legislative framework we need if this industry is to fulfil its promise as a key catalyst for economic growth, employment opportunities and prosperity.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the Railway Act, which dates back to 1908, was designed for steam engines and Morse code and is not well suited to a world of satellites and microchips. Canadians need a telecommunications system that is on the cutting edge of modern technology. A modern legislative framework is crucial to Canada's ability to compete in telecommunications.

[English]

Telecommunications networks made up of wires, coaxial cables, fibre optics, microwaves and satellites have long since replaced "bands of steel" as the foremost transcontinental highway binding this country together.

Canada has traditionally been a world leader in telecommunications technology and services. Northern Telecom, for instance, has a global reputation, and is clearly among the world's best. Furthermore, telecommunications technology is virtually the only high-tech industry that is primarily Canadian-owned and has produced state-of-the-art technology.

The Supreme Court decision of August 14, 1989, has clarified the jurisdictional issue. More compelling than the matter of jurisdiction, however, is the emerging globalization of telecommunications and the pressure to compete in the international marketplace. The technology of this industry is what separates advanced nations from underdeveloped ones.

Honourable senators, I cannot stress strongly enough that Canada cannot continue to compete while encumbered by a complex regulatory system, interprovincial barriers and different levels of service in different regions of the country. A competitive nation must have a simpler, more open system. If Canada intends to maintain its position as a leader in telecommunications and to remain internationally competitive, it must adopt a coherent policy for the country as a whole, and a more flexible regulatory system conducive to innovation and accelerated development of our principal high-technology industry.

As I noted earlier, telecommunications is an area in which Canadians are known world-wide for their excellence. However, it is also an economic sector in which major resources are being committed by other developed countries which want to secure dominance for themselves in one of the fastest-changing and most important markets in the world. The United States of America, Japan and the European Community all have addressed the issue of streamlining their telecommunications systems in order to be more competitive. The European Community itself intends to standardize its telecommunications system as quickly as possible. We cannot afford to ignore the potential resources of an even wider European Common Market. Today's challenges must be met with tomorrow's solutions, not by the rules of the past.

[Translation]

Perhaps I may point out that the management and transfer of information, which combines telecommunications and data processing, represents a global market worth over $500 billion. Canada must be capable of capturing a substantial share of that market.

[English]

This industry, which already employs more than 100,000 persons, generates $23 billion in annual revenues in Canada and will be a key element of Canada's future prosperity.

Bill C-62 is the result of a most exhaustive consultation with all interested parties, including the provinces. This new telecommunications bill will bring Canada from the days of the telegraph key to the era of portable telephones and satellite terminals. Three fundamental principles underlie the legislation: first, to ensure that all Canadians have access to affordable and reliable telecommunications service; second, to increase the competitiveness of the Canadian telecommunications industry; and, third, to promote Canadian ownership and control of Canadian telecommunications infrastructure. The last of those three principles is fundamental to the achievement of the first two.

Telecommunications serve to link this country together through a whole range of activities from personal conversations to data and information transfers, to business transactions and, increasingly, to the enjoyment of cultural products and service.

I want to emphasize that the principles underlying this important legislation were endorsed by the Senate committee's pre-study, by the House of Commons at second reading, by the subcommittee of the House of Commons charged with reviewing Bill C-62, and by the majority of witnesses who made submissions on the legislation.

Throughout this thorough, public process, the government has remained open to concerns expressed about the bill and to proposed improvements, provided that none of the basic principles behind the legislation were compromised. The amendments put forward or accepted by the government respond to key recommendations of the Senate committee which I listed previously, and to major concerns voiced by many interested parties.

Our primary duty is to work for Canadians, and in this instance we must ensure that they have access to the very best technology and services at the very best price. This new legislation defines the federal powers and the regulatory framework required to implement Canada's telecommunications policy for the twenty-first century.

[Senator Sylvain]

The new legislation will eliminate the barriers which fragment our internal market. It will establish a coherent policy for the entire country that will be co-ordinated by one regulatory agency, the CRTC. Finally, it will provide a more flexible regulatory framework.

[English]

The new legislation updates the existing legislative and regulatory framework by consolidating and modernizing existing legislation governing telecommunications, that being the Railway Act, the National Telecommunications Power and Procedures Act, and the Telegraph Act, and thus making a single regulatory agency responsible for telecommunications while clearly recognizing the importance of provincial and regional roles in telecommunication. It also ensures uniform conditions with respect to network interconnection, access to facilities, establishment of local and long-distance rates, and introduction of competition for the provision of telecommunications services all across Canada.

This legislation will result in the establishment of a more open domestic market that will allow all Canadians to have access to comparable high quality services, regardless of the region in which they live. It contains measures to protect consumers against possible abuse, including the sending of unsolicited information by telephone or facsimile machine. It promotes Canadian ownership and control of Canada's telecommunications infrastructure. It contains specific provisions under which the provinces will be consulted whenever the government intends to exercise its major powers.

Canadians will benefit by having guaranteed base levels of service. Provinces will win by having more productive businesses and more input in setting policy than ever before.

Our main industrial regions will greatly benefit from the resulting research and development, new services and manufacturing activity. Quebec, for instance, will benefit since one-third of the telecommunications industry is located in that province. In fact, all Canadian consumers stand to gain from modern legislation.

[English]

Industry will win by having a strong national market, as well as national standards throughout the country. The provinces will win by simply having more productive businesses and more input than ever before in setting national telecommunication policy. Canadians will clearly be the winners because this legislation will allow us to build on the strengths of our one great achievement, our high-tech industry, and we should be very proud of it.

All Canadians will benefit by having access to affordable services across the country, no matter in which region they live. This bill means benefits for hospitals, banks, airlines, the transport and retail industries, and for many other businesses. It means jobs. Indeed, it will support Canada's premier high-tech industry in being more competitive than ever. New and innovative services will be introduced in the market much more quickly because this bill reduces the burden of excessive regulation and encourages Canadians to undertake more research and development.

In conclusion, Canada cannot be left behind. We must update our telecommunication legislation in order to bring it into line with the new economic and social challenges, including world development. Bill C-62 establishes a legislative and regulatory framework that will put Canada at the forefront of these very challenging times.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, it is high time to act and to proceed quickly with the passage of this new legislation.

[English]

This bill is crucial to our country's competitiveness in telecommunications, and I urge this chamber to rapidly pass this central piece of legislation for the future of our children and all Canadians.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the point I am about to make does not depend on my interjection at second reading of this bill, because I intend to make that interjection tomorrow. In fact, I am about halfway through making some notes on it.

I found it objectionable this morning to receive a memorandum from the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communication addressed to all members of that committee regarding a meeting tomorrow on this bill. This memo was received before second reading debate had even started here in this chamber.

It is true that the notice speaks in terms of a tentative meeting on Tuesday —

Senator Murray: That is different.

Senator Frith: That makes you feel better, does it? Let me tell you a little more.

Senator Murray: There is nothing quite like a tentative meeting.

Senator Frith: Nothing quite like tentative meetings, as the Leader of the Government says. However, as I understand it, they also have witnesses lined up.

Senator Murray: Tentative witnesses.

Senator Frith: The witnesses were not so described. It does not indicate "tentative witnesses." They have, in fact, summoned the witnesses, and they are apparently travelling to Ottawa in order to attend.

It may be that some senators do not find this practice objectionable, but I do. It indicates an arrogant assumption with regard to the Senate that the debate on second reading of a bill in the Senate is just some sort of nuisance hurdle that has to be overcome in order to clear the way for the committee to get at the legislation.

I would ask the chairmen of committees not to schedule meetings of committees that include witnesses, in such a fashion that senators are receiving notice of the committee meeting before second reading debate has even started. As I say, I was starting to work on my notes on the bill when I became aware of the assumption that the bill would be passed in time for a committee meeting tomorrow.

I register my objection, and I hope committee chairmen, whether they be Liberal or Conservative, will not presume a schedule of debate and adoption at second reading in the Senate until such debate and second reading passage have taken place.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 6:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Oliver, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bolduc, for the second reading of Bill C-122, to amend the Customs Tariff (textile tariff reduction).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take part in second reading debate on Bill C-122. However, I wish to register some concerns that we on this side have about this bill.

Bill C-122, to amend the Customs tariff (textile tariff reduction) would reduce the duties on certain textiles from countries accorded the most favoured nation tariff treatment. Also affected are duties on types of textiles from New Zealand and Australia in which there is significant trade.

According to the government's press release, the reduction of Canadian textile tariffs reflects recommendations made by the Canadian International Trade Tribunal in February, 1990. What did the tribunal recommend in its 1990 report? It recommended that Canadian textile tariffs should be reduced by an average of 26 per cent by moving to a simpler rate structure, with maximum duties of 5 per cent for fibres, 10 per cent for yarns, and 16 per cent for fabrics.

The tribunal also recommended that the average tariff on specialty textiles should be reduced by 33 per cent, and that a complex, annually calculated rate on certain wool fabrics should be fixed at 11.8 per cent.

Under these proposals, average Canadian textile tariffs would remain higher than those of Japan or the EEC.

An important element of these recommendations by the tribunal was that the tariff reductions be phased in at the rate of one percentage point per year. Thus, the tariff cuts would have been implemented over four years for most fibres, over three years for most yarns, and stretched over a nine-year period for most fabrics, including specialty fabrics.

What is the government proposing under Bill C-122? With some modifications, the government is proposing to implement the same tariff reductions recommended by the tribunal. One important difference is that the government proposes to cut tariffs by 1.5 percentage points per year rather than the one percentage point annual cut recommended by the tribunal. This would reduce the maximum phase-in period to six years compared with the tribunal's plan, which would be implemented over a period of up to nine years.

What is the hurry? Notwithstanding Senator Oliver's eloquent presentation, the government has not fully explained the necessity for a speedy phase-in of these textile tariff cuts. It may be that the Bill C-122 tariff cuts are made in anticipation of the introduction of the North American Free Trade Agreement. However, as recent comments by U.S. President Clinton made clear, the NAFTA is in serious danger of not being ratified by the U.S. Congress.

Furthermore, such rapid tariff cuts may violate the very instructions that the Minister of Finance provided to the Canadian International Trade Tribunal when it was undertaking its tariff study. The minister's letter of reference directed the tribunal to make recommendations on the level and pace of tariff reductions that would maximize the economic gains to Canada without causing undue hardship to domestic suppliers of textile products and, in this regard, indicate whether there were specific textiles on which the tariff should not be reduced.

We can only assume that the tribunal recommended the longer phase-in period for these duty reductions in order to avoid causing undue hardship to domestic suppliers of textile products. If so, why has the government shortened the phase-in period for these tariff cuts?

What about the effect of these tariff cuts on those people directly affected, the Canadian textile industry? The Canadian Textile Institute, which represents the interests of Canadian textile manufacturers, does not oppose textile tariff reductions negotiated with our trading partners under the GATT Uruguay Round, the FTA or even the NAFTA. The Canadian Textile Institute believes, however, that unilateral tariff cuts at this time are "inappropriate and potentially damaging" to the Canadian textile industry. Furthermore, textile makers argue that the height of Canadian textile tariffs relative to those of the U.S. have been overstated. Let me explain why.

First, under the general preferential tariff, Canada reduces the duties on some textile imports from a number of less developed countries. The U.S. does not apply its generalized system of preferences to textile imports.

Second, Canada provides lower tariff rates or duty-free treatment for certain textile imports under Schedule II of the Customs Tariff. The U.S. does not have a similar system.

Third, Canada has duty remission programs for certain important fabrics used in clothing manufacture while the U.S. does not have such programs.

Fourth, FTA tariff reductions have had a greater impact on Canadian trade-weighted tariffs, because more than half of Canadian textile imports are purchased from the U.S. while just 8 per cent of U.S. textiles imports are from Canada.

Finally, the U.S. has a more extensive quota system on textiles than does Canada. This type of import protection is not captured when simply comparing tariff rates in the U.S. and Canada. For example, it has been estimated that the U.S. average trade-weighted tariff on imports from all countries is about 11.5 per cent on textiles and 22 per cent on clothing. Once the restrictive effect of U.S. quotas is taken into account, however, the tariff equivalent of U.S. protection rises to an estimated 28 per cent for textiles and about 56 per cent for apparel. Thus, on a tariff-equivalent basis, Canadian and U.S. textile tariffs may not be far apart.

The Canadian Textile Institute argues that the tariff cuts proposed by the 1990 Canadian International Trade Tribunal study would reduce the Canadian most favoured nation tariff below the U.S. MFN tariff on certain products.

Furthermore, because these tariff cuts would be taken unilaterally, Canadian exporters would not gain reciprocal access to foreign markets as a result. Canadian textile manufacturers think that this is a mistake. It is true that until recently the Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations have been hung up over the difficult issue of agricultural subsidies. However, with agreement between the U.S. and the European Community over farm subsidies and a new Director General of GATT elected just last week, it is looking more and more likely that the Uruguay Round will be completed this year.

Bilateral or multilateral tariff reductions typically have a "carrot-and-stick" quality which both encourages and rewards adjustments by Canadian producers. The "stick" is the heightened competition in the domestic market resulting from tariff reductions. The "carrot" for Canadian producers is the improved access to foreign markets when our trading partners reduce their own protection.

The unilateral tariff reductions in Bill C-122 certainly contain the "stick" component, but they lack the "carrot" which would encourage Canadian textile makers to expand production into new markets. As a result, adjustment to the tariff cuts proposed under this bill is likely to be much more onerous for Canadian producers. On the one hand, increased competition domestically will force the discontinuation of uncompetitive product lines. On the other hand, the maintenance of foreign trade barriers will not permit an expansion into types of textiles in which Canada does hold an international competitive advantage.

What do Canadian clothing manufacturers, the users of textiles, think of the Bill C-122 tariff cuts? Not surprisingly, the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute, CAMI, generally approves of the proposed tariff cuts under Bill C-122. CAMI believes that high Canadian textile tariffs have posed a greater challenge for apparel manufacturers in adjusting to the FTA. A reduction in textile tariffs would assist the Canadian industry to remain competitive, according to CAMI.

However, even the clothing manufacturers are not entirely satisfied with the proposed tariff cuts in Bill C-122. CAMI believes that the provisions of the bill fall short of apparel makers' requirements, because they do not cut textile tariffs far enough. For example, apparel makers wanted deeper cuts on fabrics such as broad weave cotton fabrics. According to CAMI, these fabrics, with the exception of denim, are no longer manufactured in Canada. Despite the lack of Canadian production, tariffs on most broad weave cotton fabrics will be cut by only 1.5 per cent from 17.5 per cent to 16 per cent.

What about the reaction of our trading partners to these proposed tariff cuts? Certainly, most of Canada's trading partners would not object if we chose unilaterally to lower our trade protection. After all, this bill will provide greater access to the Canadian market without opening new markets for Canadian-made textiles.

On the other hand, the U.S. is unlikely to view these unilateral textile tariff cuts favourably. The reason is that these duty reductions will encourage more sourcing of textile inputs outside North America. The U.S. Industry Sector Advisory Committee for Trade in Textiles has recommended that, if Canada were to go ahead with the proposed textile tariff cuts, the United States should negotiate the NAFTA textile provisions with Canada, because this country would have shifted the balance of concessions in this textile sector decidedly against U.S. textile producers.

In summary, we have serious reservations about the passage of this bill for the following reasons: first, these textile tariff reductions are being introduced too rapidly — faster, in fact, than recommended by the government's own study carried out by the Canadian International Trade Tribunal. Second, these tariff cuts have excited opposition by textile manufacturers without totally satisfying the industry they are intended to benefit, the Canadian apparel manufacturers. Third, unilateral tariff cuts are not the way to go. These cuts would unleash foreign competition on Canadian producers without simultaneously opening foreign markets for them.

While we have reservations about this bill, we are prepared to give second reading on division to enable it to proceed to committee, where, I understand, representatives of the industry will have an opportunity to present their views on the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Oliver, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Terrance R. Stratton moved the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise today to speak on third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

I should first like to thank those senators who have been so kind and gracious to me in my initial days in the Senate. I have received two impressions of the individuals within the Senate: first, the fine quality of the people in this place, and, second, how very, very hard some of you work. I think it would be a surprise to some Canadians to realize just how hard you do work.

Honourable senators, the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which creates the world's largest free trade zone, will make Canada more competitive and will help secure our prosperity. The NAFTA creates a dynamic market of 360 million people producing $7 trillion in goods and services.

The NAFTA goes to the heart of Canada's fundamental interests as a nation that depends on trade. If Canadians did not sell the goods and services they produced at home to buyers in other countries, one out of every four Canadian jobs would disappear. Canada got involved in the NAFTA to protect these interests and to take advantage of opportunities that will strengthen Canada's global trading position. I cannot stress enough the importance of NAFTA to Canada's prosperity.

If Canada did not participate in NAFTA, the United States and Mexico would proceed with their own bilateral trade deal. Without Canada's participation in the agreement, the U.S. would have a free trade agreement with Canada and a separate free trade agreement with Mexico. However, Canada would have no agreement with Mexico. In this scenario, only the U.S. would have tariff-free access to the entire North American market. Trade would be diverted to the U.S., and investors looking to open new plants would favour the U.S. because only production facilities in that country would have guaranteed market access to the entire continent.

In this scenario, the U.S. would become the hub and Canada and Mexico the spokes. A bilateral deal between the U.S. and Mexico would undermine Canada's ability to attract investment, and investment from abroad has underpinned this country's prosperity.

With Canada's participation in NAFTA, we will be able to compete on an equal basis in the North American market. Canada will not be shut out of an agreement favouring the United States. Instead of a hub and two spokes, we have an integrated market with trade rules that apply equally to all three countries.

I had the good fortune to attend the Second Annual Conference on the Environment in Mexico City in early March of this year. All of the countries participating in the NAFTA were represented. I want to tell you that I was impressed with Mexico's participation and contribution at the conference and struck by the progress they have made in their country. After decades of running a closed economy, the Mexican administration with President Salinas is transforming the country into a modern, prosperous and globally competitive player.

Trade liberalization is very important to their progress. A first key step towards trade liberalization was the decision taken by the Mexican government in 1986 to join the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The NAFTA is a continuation of Mexico's progress on trade liberalization and furthering the process of improving Mexico's competitiveness. Canada has a great deal to gain from assisting Mexico with trade liberalization, as this will lead to a more prosperous Mexico with greater demand for Canadian products.

The NAFTA will benefit all three participating countries by increasing trade and prosperity. In particular, the NAFTA will help the Mexican economy to develop. It will allow Mexico to attract investment and it will provide new opportunities for the Mexican people. The NAFTA ensures that Canadian knowledge and expertise will help Mexicans achieve a higher standard of living while increasing Canada's own export trade.

Canada has resolved to further develop its relations with Latin American countries. Canada is not an inward-looking nation. We play an important role in the global community and are respected for our leadership and our statesmanship. Establishing closer relations with Mexico is part of that role. This is a role of which all Canadians can be proud.

The NAFTA provides the framework for further trade liberalization and assures Canadian participation in future free trade agreements. The NAFTA allows for other countries to join, subject to negotiation, by accepting the same obligations as Canada, Mexico and the United States. Columbia, Chile and Argentina have already indicated their interest in becoming part of NAFTA.

Canada would benefit greatly from an expansion of NAFTA. The possibility of creating one huge hemispheric common market would open up tremendous opportunities for Canadian companies. Canadian businesses would be able to export Canadian products and expertise into more countries. Expansion of trade would lead to economic growth for all participating countries. Improvements in the economies of participating Latin America and Caribbean countries would provide the basis necessary for sociopolitical progress in these countries.

I want to share with you what the North American free trade agreement will mean for Canadians living in my home province of Manitoba. Manitoba relies heavily on international trade for its prosperity. The Canadian domestic market is too small for Manitoba's agricultural natural resources output. As a result, new access to trade agreements like the NAFTA is key to the province. The NAFTA offers solid benefits for Manitoba's exporters to Mexico and the United States.

Manitoba's grain and cereal farmers stand to reap the benefits of new opportunities from NAFTA. The NAFTA agreement on agriculture and food reduces Mexican tariffs on wheat, canola, peas, beans and other crops, creating more opportunities for Manitoba exporters. Some Manitoba companies, such as Northern Sales Company and XCAN Grain, are already exporting products to Mexico. The NAFTA helps them and other companies boost trade with Mexico.

Manitoba's forest products industry will see new opportunities as a result of NAFTA. During the next ten years, Mexican demand for pulp will grow by about 50 per cent. Manitoba's pulp and paper industry will be able to benefit from that increase by taking advantage of those new markets in Mexico.

The NAFTA will also create possibilities for Manitoba's transportation and agricultural equipment makers by phasing out Mexican import tariffs and other obstacles to trade. As Mexico's economy grows, so will the opportunities for Manitoba producers of diesel powered buses, tractors, machinery and automotive parts.

By eliminating tariffs, import licences and other barriers to the free trade of goods and services, the NAFTA gives Canadian exporters guaranteed access to Mexico's growing market of 85 million consumers. At the same time, the NAFTA strengthens and preserves Canada's access to the United States obtained under the Canada-U. S. Free Trade Agreement. The NAFTA ensures that Canada's exporters continue to build on their success in the U.S. market.

NAFTA clarifies and strengthens the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement as it has clear rules of origin that will smooth customs operations. The NAFTA also builds on the FTA's dispute settlement mechanisms, safeguarding them against abuse by U.S. or Mexican laws. With these objectives in place, Canadian companies can enjoy not only freer trade, but fairer trade.

Honourable senators, my position is quite clear: I will be voting in support of Bill C-115, to implement the North American free trade agreement. The NAFTA is good for Canada's prosperity and economic growth and will facilitate jobs and growth in Canada. The NAFTA will improve Canada's ability to attract new investment and will lay the foundation for a more competitive and dynamic economy that will ensure the prosperity of all Canadians into the next century and beyond.

The NAFTA is important for all Canadians, but particularly for Canada's youth. The NAFTA will create opportunities for Canada's youth to pursue careers in international trade that would not otherwise have been possible.

For these reasons, I urge all senators to endorse the North American free trade agreement by supporting Bill C-115.

Hon. Ron Ghitter: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few comments with respect to this bill, which will speak more to what is not in the bill than to what is.

I rise as a strong supporter of this bill and of the prior free trade agreement with the United States. Trade is Canada's bread and butter, and I strongly support the government's programs to secure and enhance access to external markets as a prime objective of its policy to strengthen our economy. We must export, we must secure our markets and, above all, we must secure our markets with our most important trading partner, the United States.

I congratulate my friend, Senator Stratton, for the comments he made. I very much agree with his comments on the importance and significant of our free trade agreement with the United States and the pending NAFTA agreement with the United States and Mexico. The success of the free trade agreement with the United States is unmistakable. We have lowered barriers between Canada and the United States, which receives 75 per cent of our exports; we have liberalized trade and we have established a mechanism to settle disputes and to put our trade on a more secure footing.

Since the implementation of the free trade agreement, we have seen its immediate impact on our economy, even during a recessionary period. In 16 out of 22 manufacturing sectors in Canada, our trade has increased. Direct investment into Canada has increased beyond our expectation. Clearly, the advantages of the free trade agreement, and the advantages that will be forthcoming in the long run out of NAFTA, are indisputable.

There is, however, one aspect of the negotiations and the bill before us that is significant from the point of view that it was not considered in any of the negotiations leading up to this bill, resulting in its being totally ignored in this legislation. I refer, of course, to the lack of any mention of the necessity for the signatories to the agreement to rectify human rights violations in their respective jurisdictions. I find this surprising and unfortunate.

Canada has enjoyed an enviable reputation in its encouragement of the betterment of human rights of all citizens of the world. Our Prime Minister stated in mid-October of 1991, at the meeting of Commonwealth heads of government in Zimbabwe, that human rights form a very important component of foreign policy for Canada. For these statements our Prime Minister was rightfully lauded by Canadian churches, NGOs and governments around the world. This country took a very difficult but important stance in encouraging the imposition of sanctions upon South Africa due to its apartheid policy, again a stance that was lauded by many throughout the world.

The Honourable Barbara McDougall, in a Montreal speech in March 1992, set out, I thought, the policy of the Canadian government at length when she declared that we must bear the full force of Canadian diplomacy on the interrelated issues of human rights, democracy and good governance. Unless, she stated, countries meet a basic standard of respect for human rights or show a clear resolve to improve conditions and address problems, they cannot expect outside assistance or support for the course they are following.

On the basis of Canada's superb record in the human rights field, one would expect some aspect of the NAFTA negotiations to include the consideration of Mexico's human rights record, and a declaration from Mexico to deal in a concrete manner with its sorry record in that regard. When I inquired of representatives of the government at the committee hearings as to whether they had been instructed by the government to bring human rights into the negotiations, they advised me that they had received no such instructions. As a result, there were no negotiations or discussions relative to human rights within the NAFTA discussions.

Therefore, we have Canada entering into direct trading arrangements with Mexico, which will bring us into a close alliance with a population of 85 million people whose government's record on human rights is one of inhumanity and neglect. This is a disappointment. This is a wonderful opportunity that has been lost. This is something that should be remedied.

I know that to many of my fellow senators the question arises as to whether or not it is acceptable or achievable that one country should invoke universal principles on human rights as conditions and factors in economic, political and trade policies. Since the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the two related covenants which govern the family of rights, namely, political, civil, economic, social and cultural, it has become readily accepted that the wellbeing of humankind shall no longer be left to the charitable concerns of individuals or the intermittent maternalistic indulgences of governments. Governments can no longer retreat behind the wall of state sovereignty and remain silent when human rights issues cry out for attention elsewhere in the world. There is a persuasive case to be made for the linkage between economic change and power, on the one hand, and human rights on the other.

Senator Frith: Slow down, senator; this is very good.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You are always interrupting the honourable senator. You did so the first time he spoke in this chamber.

Senator Ghitter: This kind of reasoning has meant growing governmental acceptance of the linkage between trade and human rights. Increasingly, economic policy is seen as a positive instrument to influence human rights practices. The European Economic Community has led the way. Eleven of its twelve members have adopted a community charter of the fundamental social rights of workers. It delayed the entry of Spain and Portugal until they established acceptable human rights standards, and Turkey's poor human rights record is still an obstacle to its membership. The Charter of the recently established European Bank of Reconstruction and Development makes explicit links between its lending policies and human rights.

Some of the Third and Fourth World nations will argue, as they are undoubtedly doing this day at the Human Rights Conference in Vienna, that it is unfair and, for that matter, unacceptable for the developed countries to impose their human rights standards upon the undeveloped countries and to link those standards with economic aid and assistance. They argue that there is no linkage, and that they must improve the economic conditions of their country before they are able to deal with the state of human rights in their country.

Personally, I find such arguments to be a cop-out, and unreasonable. There are universal standards as to the treatment of individuals within the global community. If we are to provide aid to assist these countries, or if we intend to enter into trade arrangements with them, we should, at the very least, demand to see some progress in the manner in which they deal with their citizens.

Mexico is a case in point. The situation in Mexico has been recently examined by Amnesty International, Americas Watch, a Canadian committee to protect journalists, and the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America, which filed a 1991 Annual Report. Amnesty International, in a publication written in May of 1991 and entitled Mexico Torture with Impunity — a sad documentary that I have in my hand and would be happy to share with honourable senators, documented in horrifying detail the widespread use of torture in Mexico, and the effect of immmunity from prosecution extended to law enforcement agencies who commit the crime of torture. Hundreds of cases of torture by law enforcement agencies and principal members of the federal and state police forces have been reported to official bodies, independent human rights groups and to Amnesty International. Many of the cases are well documented with testimonial, medical and forensic evidence, but those responsible are seldom investigated and, even more rarely, prosecuted for their crimes.

The continuing and widespread use of torture must call into question the political will behind the government's public commitment to end torture. Although Amnesty International welcomes the steps the Mexican government is taking to address the issue, these measures have failed to stop the practice of torture and ill treatment in Mexico. Those responsible apparently continue to benefit from immunity.

Americas Watch, while crediting the Mexican government for its human rights reforms, particularly the creation of its National Human Rights Commission (CNDH), is an agency that acts as an ombudsman body but lacks prosecutorial powers. However, it has been an effective advocate for human rights in Mexico. Up to February of 1993, this agency has issued 300 hard-hitting recommendations, a large percentage of which involve torture, homicide, death threats, and the illegal deprivation of liberty and inhumane prison conditions.

Unfortunately, however, recent constitutional amendments have reduced the scope of that body's mandate to investigate violations. It no longer has the power to investigate cases involving labour rights, election irregularities, and cases under the jurisdiction of the courts. In addition, where states in Mexico now set up their own Human Rights Commissions, the national body loses primary jurisdiction in the investigation of abuse in that state. The Americas Watch report concluded that, while the Mexican government has worked hard to create the impression that it has the human rights situation in hand and that improvements have been implemented, it has made it difficult for outside observers to independently verify as to whether or not these changes have, in fact, taken place. One indicator that the government is not as serious about eliminating human abuses as its rhetoric suggests is its treatment of those responsible for past abuses.

Numerous examples suggesting the lack of government commitment can be found in the lack of enforcement against public servants who have committed cruel acts. Another hint can be found in the indication that the government does not conduct itself appropriately when under pressure to identify the culprit in a crime. The government also engages in or allows other types of abuse to persist. Workers and passive activists continue to risk physical violence when they attempt to exercise the rights of freedom of association and expression during labour and land disputes. Moreover, little has been done to alleviate the partisan violence that has plagued Mexican elections. Election monitors have been the targets of abuse. Journalists and even human rights monitors are subject to assault and intimidation.

A series of recent articles in the Toronto Star in March 1993 were extremely critical of the situation in Mexico. The investigative reports commented that rural violence, particularly unannounced forced evictions of peasants from their homes by working and local rural bosses was going unchecked. In recent years, more than 15,000 Mayan Indians have been thrown off their land and forced down into shantytowns that ring central cities.

Canadian human rights activists suggest that even though the North American Free Trade Agreement has been signed, it still has not been sealed. Their questions are these: When is a free trade agreement not just a free trade agreement? Should the NAFTA linking Canada, the U.S. and Mexico be treated as a self-contained economic treaty without more significant implications? Do we care, they ask, that Mexico, by witness of every credible monetary agency in the world, is a democracy in name only and that human rights are abused in Mexico as a matter of course? Last week, in an article in the Globe and Mail, the President of Mexico's National Human Rights Commission criticized uncooperative judges and local governments who continue to block efforts to root out human rights violators.

What, then, is the responsibility of the Canadian government when it enters into an agreement such as NAFTA? Do we bear any responsibility? Will the governments of Canada and the United States continue to pretend that Mexico is a democracy and give them a blank cheque when we know, from all of the evidence we perceive, that what is occurring in Mexico is inappropriate and unacceptable by any international standard? A Canadian activist and Co-Chair of the Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America said that the window of opportunity is still there. It is disappointing that the government has not taken advantage of it.

It is in our national interest to have standards; otherwise, the precedent is bad. The lack of standards itself becomes a benchmark as other countries join the NAFTA. Human rights must be a very important part of any new world order. The Inter-Church Committee on Human Rights in Latin America in its 1991 Annual Report states that NAFTA sets an extremely important precedent, since it marks the first time that a developing country has entered into a free trade agreement with two industrialized countries.

The report of the Inter-Church Committee highlights, as have others, that the human rights reforms put into place in Mexico are ineffective. The committee found that political violence and electoral fraud continue; that attacks against human rights activists, intellectuals and journalists continue — even after the Human Rights Commission discovered that two microphones and a transmitter were utilized to bug their office.

Fellow senators, I believe that the Canadian government has an opportunity. It is not an opportunity by way of enforcement; it is not an opportunity to bring forward trade sanctions to stop Mexico from what it is doing. It is a matter of doing two things by way of a start.

First, there could be recognition of human rights in the preamble of the agreement. The preamble of the agreement discloses matters relating to the environment, matters which are important to all of us. However, the preamble of the agreement is silent as to human rights matters. Surely it is not asking too much that the minimum intention, in the long run, for the signatories to that agreement should be to endeavour to respect human rights and to encourage the overcoming of human rights deprivations and violations by any of the signatories, including Canada and the United States.

Second, surely it is not asking too much, by way of side agreement or otherwise, for the signatories to this agreement to come together and at least institute a monitoring system whereby independent representatives of the three countries could examine situations relating to human rights. This system would allow us to report, disclose and expose any problem so that, over the long run — it will not happen overnight — we can proudly stand and say that we are a party to an agreement between three major countries in this world, all of whom respect the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, all of whom respect the importance and the dignity of man, and all of whom are coming closer, not only in the matter of trade linkages, but also in matters which are just as important — matters of the soul, matters of kindness to others, and matters of respect for human rights and dignity.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

• (2150)

Hon. John B. Stewart: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Ghitter: Yes.

Senator Stewart: As a preamble to my question, I wish to say how much I enjoyed the honourable senator's address.

Senator Molgat: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: It seemed to me that it was an extraordinarily good presentation, and one that we should all read and reread as we consider this important bill.

The honourable senator has suggested yet another side agreement. In view of the position that the Government of Canada has taken in relation to the two side agreements now on the table, namely, the side agreement on labour and the side agreement on the environment, there is not much that we can realistically expect from a proposal for a side agreement on human rights.

I want to ask the honourable senator a question concerning the proposed change to the preamble of the North American Free Trade Agreement. What we have before us here in Bill C-115 is a bill to implement the agreement as it now stands. I believe that clause 10 of the bill says that "we approve the agreement." In view of what the honourable senator has said, I wonder if he does approve the agreement or, when he votes in favour of approving the agreement, will he vote with at least an unspoken qualification in his mind that his approval would have been more enthusiastic if the preamble contained the provision to which he has made reference?

Senator Ghitter: Thank you for your inquiry. First, I think that the bill and the agreement is very important for Canada. I do not think that we can stand apart from the agreement and let the United States, for example, enter into the agreement only with Mexico and be left on the outside for the reasons the honourable Senator Stratton mentioned in his remarks. From the point of view of support for the agreement, I give it my unqualified support.

I have been around the human rights field long enough to know that it happens over a period of time and that you cannot pound human rights into peoples' heads and force them to love their neighbours, and the like. But the more that people stand up to be heard and express their points of view to remind people of these elements, eventually changes start to occur. If we cannot achieve the change at this point in time, I am patient. Over time, as more people in this house speak up, those changes can occur.

I will support the bill. I support the agreement, but it does not go as far as I should like, and I would like more people to speak on it and express their views in that regard. Hopefully, as Mexico does become better off and becomes more developed, they will spend more time on human rights. The experience seems to be that when countries become better off, they do spend more time on human rights. However, I am more impatient than that, and I should like to see a stronger expression by the Canadian government. Maybe over time, this house and the other place can encourage that to happen.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: I should like to submit a question to Senator Ghitter on the same topic. I share the sentiment expressed by the previous senator. It was an excellent presentation. It is important that we underscore the human rights dimension of NAFTA. I was glad you drew our attention particularly to those paragraphs contained in the preamble of the bill. The one that is on page two of the bill speaks to a purpose. It states:

> protect, enhance and enforce basic workers' rights;

That is the explicit preambular statement as to what is resolved. Do you see this as being at all analogous to the ILO types of conventions that serve as the cornerstone for the whole array of fairly explicit international human rights standards?

Senator Ghitter: Honourable senators, my answer to that is "Yes". I am of the view that any time a respected international agency or government expresses a point of view in support of human rights, it is significant. When we have bills of rights, individual rights, protection acts and charters of rights and freedoms, governments and agencies are saying and setting forth what they feel are acceptable standards, and standards that we must all aspire to. That is significant, recognizing that they may not have enforcement remedies, or that there may not be an actual way of ensuring that those things will happen. But the declaration of intention is very important because it sends out a message to everyone of what is acceptable and what is not. I very much agree with what you have said.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Before I recognize the honourable senator, I am required by the rules to point out that his permitted period of 15 minutes, including questions and comments, has expired. Is there leave to proceed?

Hon. Senators: Yes.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, first I should like to associate myself with the comments and strong expressions of my colleague, Senator Ghitter. I feel strongly the same way. I have spoken not on NAFTA but on other issues similar to the problems that are faced by Mexico. I am delighted to have a colleague with whom I can share some of my thoughts.

In looking at NAFTA, one of the concerns that I had is precisely in the area of human rights and the violations that have been reported. However, I have come to the conclusion that I, too, will support the bill notwithstanding those concerns. One of the factors that led me to that decision is that I believe that we can have some influence and impact on the human rights issues in countries like Mexico by being there at the table with them, and by doing business with them. If we were not present and if this agreement were to be rejected for that purpose, it would actually be worse for those who are fighting for the same cause for which you seem to be fighting with respect to human rights. Would the honourable senator share his thoughts on that with me?

Senator Ghitter: That is very important. The Canadian government, by setting up its International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development, in a direct way is assisting this fight. I know from my experience with them that they have now targeted Mexico as a priority area for their activities and are doing so because of NAFTA. Because we are now entering into this arrangement, they have now focused their activities as of a couple of weekends ago, and are saying that they will direct more of their funding to show the human rights side of Mexico. They are doing that because we have entered into this arrangement with Mexico, and they felt that the Canadian presence must be better felt.

I very much agree that as we become closer aligned with this nation, we will have a greater impact on them. The very existence of NAFTA will assist, over time, to overcome many of those things. We are now watching Mexico more closely. If it were not for NAFTA, I would not have picked up this book to read about Mexico and to find out, much to my horror, what is occurring there. The more we do of that, the more Mexico will be looking at us and we will be looking at them. The reason that is happening is that we are entering into this agreement. I very much support what the honourable senator is suggesting.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION—SUSPENDED IN RELATION TO BILL S-20 APPLICATION OF RULE 116

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motion:

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(a), I move:

> THAT the application of rule 116 of the Rules of the Senate be suspended in relation to Bill S-20, an Act to change the name of The Canadian Medical Association.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): An explanation, please.

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, as we know, Bill S-20 is neither complex nor controversial. It has to do with changing the name of The Canadian Medical Association to Canadian Medical Association, and to give it a name in French.

Mr. Ronald Whelan, President of the Canadian Medical Association, wrote me a letter dated Friday, June 11. I have sent a copy of this letter to the Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Royce Frith. This letter explains the situation and confirms that there is no opposition whatsoever to this bill.

Allow me to read only the last two paragraphs of the letter written by Mr. Whelan, the President of The Canadian Medical Association.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): You can read the whole letter, because I think it contains everything there is to say.

Senator Beaudoin: Honourable senators, I shall read this letter for the record.

> Dear Senator Beaudoin:
> In 1990, the Canadian Medical Association (CMA) created a committee chaired by Dr. Marcien Fournier, then-president of the CMA. The Association mandated the committee to examine how the Association was meeting the needs of its French-speaking members.
> The committee had first to present recommendations for making the national organization more accessible to French-speaking physicians.
> In its deliberations, Dr. Fournier's committee discovered in particular that the Association had no official French name. The CMA had obtained its legal status under a special act of incorporation passed by Parliament on May 19, 1909. The Act was amended on March 20, 1959 by The Canadian Medical Association Act, which says that the Association shall be called "Canadian Medical Association" in French, the name which appears in all the French versions of the Act of incorporation of 1909 and the amending Act of 1959. Furthermore, the Act of incorporation of 1909 gives the English name as "The Canadian Medical Association". The Association wishes to shorten its English name very slightly and to acquire a French name.
> Through our private bill, we are asking Parliament to authorize us to use the name "Association médicale canadienne" in French and to drop the article "The" from the English name.
> This reform proposal was presented to the annual meeting of the General Council of the Association in August 1992 and examined and approved by the Executive Committee and the Board of Directors of the Association at meetings held in October 1992. Moreover, we have consulted various medical groups on this subject and I assure you that no objection was raised.

He concludes the letter with the customary salutation.

We have precedents for this, one established by the Leader of the Opposition and by the Deputy Leader of the Government, Senator Lynch-Staunton.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I support the principle of the motion but I did not fully understand the provisions of the motion when Senator Beaudoin mentioned them.

The motion says:

[English]

> That Rule 116 be suspended in relation to Bill S-20, an Act to change the name of the Canadian Medical Association.

I did not mean to support the suspension of the whole rule, but only stipulations on delays. If my understanding is correct, our mutual objective is not to bypass consideration in committee but only to shorten the delay stipulated in Rule 116.

I think the rationale behind this delay is to give concerned citizens the opportunity to state their objections to this bill, but it does not apply in the context of the letter Senator Beaudoin just read, a copy of which has been provided to me.

For that reason, the honourable senator may be willing to accept an amendment that would simply say:

[English]

> That the provisions of Rule 116, requiring delay in consideration for one week, shall be suspended.

[Translation]

I am prepared to support such a motion. The committee could meet tomorrow to consider the bill and report back to the Senate tomorrow or Wednesday.

Senator Beaudoin: Honororable senators, this bill went through second reading last Wednesday. Basically, we are trying to save one day, seeing that there is no objection to the principle of the bill.

Of course, we are asking permission to convene the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs at 11 a.m. tomorrow. Senator Stanbury will chair it in my absence because I will be introducing the bill in the Senate. As the session is coming to a close, it will allow us to save a day. Thus, the principle set in our rules is safe, except that we are asking to reduce the period by a day.

Senator Frith: You are not asking for the rules to be suspended, just the time allotted in the rules. Is that it?

Senator Beaudoin: That is right.

[Senator Beaudoin]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I do not know if there is an amendment. Should I just read the motion as it stands?

Senator Frith: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: As it stands.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sylvain, that Rule 116 be suspended in relation to Bill S-20, an Act to change the name of The Canadian Medical Association.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

[English]

Senator Frith: On second thought, honourable senators, perhaps it would be better just to insert those words into it and have it moved. If it is acceptable with Senator Sylvain, we could save the amendment, have it moved by Senator Beaudoin, seconded by me, to provide that... — — the provisions with respect to the delay specified in the Rules be suspended.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourables Senators, it is moved by Honourable Senator Beaudoin, seconded by Honourable Senator Frith, with leave of the Senate, and pursuant to Rule 31:

> THAT the application of Rule 116, a one-week delay before consideration by a committee, be suspended with regard to Bill S-20, an Act to change the name of The Canadian Medical Association.

Is it your pleasure, honorables senators, to adopt the motion as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

SEVENTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Seventeenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications (budget), presented in the Senate on June 10, 1993.

Hon. Donald H. Oliver moved the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of Honourable Senator Grimard, seconded by Honourable Senator Beaulieu, that the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders (amendment to Rule 4 of the Rules of the Senate) presented in the Senate on March 4, 1993, be adopted. — (Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I will be brief. I have no objection or reservation to the content of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders.

However, I would like to take this opportunity, as others have done before me, to indicate that this reform of the Rules of the Senate was carried out in a manner and in a context quite distateful and offensive and not at all in keeping with the rules, practices and traditions of the Senate. The present rules, implemented in September 1991, are, to all intents and purposes, an exact replica of "his master's voice", to borrow from the old RCA Victor ad with which we were all quite familiar when we were very young. The label on the 78 RPM records was always the same: A dog listening to his master's voice coming out of a loudspeaker!

To all intents and purposes, the current Rules of the Senate are based upon the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. I find that troubling and totally unjustified because of the special part the Upper House must play in considering legislation and all other issues placed before us from time to time. We all know in what context and with what haste this "mini-reform" of the Rules of the Senate was done, but what is somewhat offensive is the fact that the length of speeches has been reduced to 15 minutes. Of course, that 15-minute period also includes the questions and answers period following a senator's speech on a particular matter.

First of all, that is unfair in principle because some senators talk very fast! We have had a good example tonight when a new senator gave a very interesting speech, which was, however, hard to follow and to which the interpreters could not do justice because it was delivered at such record speed. That is unfortunate.

On the other hand, there are senators, like myself — I will not hesitate to use myself as an example — who speak rather slowly. Others are handicapped and speak even more slowly. This has resulted in a situation where the Speaker of the Senate has to intervene constantly to ask if there is unanimous consent to allow the senator to continue his remarks. Or, the Speaker has to rise to remind senators that the time provided for a particular speech, including questions and answers, has expired.

There are questions that deserve careful examination. There are questions that cannot be debated in 15 minutes. We have senators here who are experts in their field and who can enlighten us on the fundamental impact of some bills, particularly senators who oppose government bills or proposals.

This may not be a problem for the senators who sit on the government side. Their speeches are prepared by officials, with a few exceptions, so the time limits now imposed by the Rules of the Senate are taken into account.

But senators who want to do their job well should not be limited by this 15-minute rule. That is one reason why I objected to this rule in particular, not only to the basic reform but also to the way in which it was done. I hope that after the election the Senate will have an opportunity to reflect on the limitation which this particular rule imposes on senators.

Senator Grimard — he was very friendly to me because I had given him the floor since he had not exercised this prerogative when the report was presented — shamelessly took the liberty to make threats! I call the attention of honourables senators to the first column of page 3421, where Senator Grimard said:

> Since all these amendments are minor or a matter of concordance between both versions, and they were approved in principle by all senators on the committee, it should come as no surprise that considering the report was tabled on March 23, 1993, and that since then there had been no debate on the subject, we should insist that some action will be necessary before the Senate adjourns.

This is a clearly-worded, blatant threat. I take it as such.

The longest-serving senators, especially those who were on the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, will remember that in the past practically all reforms of the Rules were made without pressure. We took the time to debate each proposal thoughtfully. I believe that Senator Molgat chaired the committee in 1984 and the following years; when we could not agree, on either side of the house, on the meaning to give some words, or on what to do with a proposal, we put the matter on hold. The committee in its wisdom decided to take more time to reflect. The committee did not report until a consensus had developed.

My word, the exact opposite has happened with the way the changes to the Rules now before us have been drawn up and presented and adopted.

Honourable senators, Senator Molgat said it in his remarks when considering the third and fourth reports of the committee. We probably overreacted. We overreacted in that we went to the other extreme. In fact, we more or less adopted the procedures adopted in recent years by the House of Commons, where this was certainly not an improvement.

The experts deplore the cavalier fashion in which members are pushed around by the majority. Closure has been invoked more often than ever, not only here but especially in the House of Commons. Members no longer have time to think. They have to depend on their assistants, the research services of the Library of Parliament, the opinions of pseudo-experts and, occasionally, experts. However, members no longer have time to think. Piles of legislation are steamrollered and bulldozed our way from the other place, legislation that is often ill-prepared and poorly designed on the advice of so-called informed advisers. Under these new rules, they want us to proceed the same way.

To suggest that the Senate should behave like the House of Commons is an insult, because that is not our role. The Senate has not unduly held up legislation. When it did hold up legislation, it was for a very good reason, because public opinion did not want the legislation that was before the House of Commons or the Senate.

We did not do it for the sake of our party but because public pressure was such that the Senate felt it could not take the political and moral responsibility to proceed so quickly with consideration and passage of certain bills. I will continue to object, as long as I have a breath left in my body, to the way this so-called reform was done, in a climate of fear and revenge.

Measures were proposed to committee members by people with no experience of parliamentary tradition, a tradition that comes to us from the Mother of Parliaments — Westminster. This tradition was developed over more than 600 years, and with one stroke of the pen, they set aside procedures enshrined in British parliamentary tradition.

I don't think we helped the cause of democracy in Canada by adopting the rules imposed on us in the Senate today. I suggest that at the end of this session, and as soon as the next one begins, we all meet and look at everything that has been done so far and keep only those elements that have made the British parliamentary system the best in the world.

In fact, even when our nationalist friends with separatist leanings were in power in Quebec they decided to maintain the British parliamentary tradition. Of course they adapted it to the requirements of the provincial government, but I fail to see why we decided to set aside this noble British parliamentary tradition.

Honourable senators, I took advantage of the committee's fourth report to say what I had to say. I have not finished my scrutiny of the third report. In fact, it contains items that may well be more controversial. However, I do not want anyone to think that the fact I have no objection to the fourth report means that I support the rules in their present form. I refuse to be associated with those rules. In fact, what the fourth report does is to put the definitions into some kind of logical order. I have said what I had to say this evening, and at another sitting I will share with you my views on the third report of the committee. Thank you, honourable senators.

[English]

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not wish to get into a discussion on Senator Corbin's explanation of how these rules came about. The fact is that we have them, whether he likes them or not.

I would suggest to him and his colleagues that, rather than deploring the rules or the part thereof with which they disagree, they should come before the Rules committee with their suggestions. They have been boycotting this committee for quite some time now. Both Senator Robertson at the time and Senator Grimard as acting chairman have repeatedly asked members opposite to come before the committee and to bring suggestions.

My colleagues and I have no fixed feelings about whether 15 minutes is too long or too short. We are open, after a year and a half of using these rules, to looking at suggestions for improvement. However, we cannot do that by deploring the existing rules in this chamber, nor by appealing to each other in this chamber to do something about them. We have to do it before the Rules committee. Why wait until next fall? Why not agree that we have suggestions to bring to each other to improve the rules?

I say to honourable senators opposite: forget the past. Whether or not the rules were passed in a way which is deplored by Senator Corbin and his colleagues, the fact is that we have them. They are here. Rather than abolishing them and returning to the old rules, we should build on them to make them even better. Come to the committee and let us do it together.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I, for one, am not interested in participating in so-called reform of the existing rules, in view of the way in which you decided to proceed. I thought it very offensive. I know very well the spirit behind that reform. It is still sticking in my throat.

Perhaps it would do us all good to let this Parliament die. When we come back, we may then be able to say that we are in a different mood. I hope so. I am not anxious to keep on proceeding in the way in which we have in the last two years or so. Nevertheless, having been offended, I remain offended. Given time, the wound may heal, but it is not totally healed yet. That is why I say, given a new Parliament and a new session, perhaps there would develop a spirit of cooperation.

However, I think it is incumbent upon the government to initiate reforms that it feels ought to be made to the rules as they brought them in and imposed them on this house. Some of them are not working. By the way, there are so many loopholes that a number of them would never work on any ordinary working day. They were improperly thought out. They were improperly drafted. They are highly offensive to the role of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this house. They are not conducive to the proper public debate and review of legislation to which this house is entitled.

I will only repeat what I said earlier. Time may heal everything, but I am still reeling from the audacity that those people over there had to come in with this package, which is not at all in keeping with the best of Parliamentary tradition.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

RULES OF THE SENATE

MOTION TO AMEND RULE 98(3)—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rivest, that the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding, immediately after Rule 98(3), the following:

98.(3)(a) That within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing committee or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto. — (Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, regarding motion No. 56, I am prepared to speak, but I would rather do so when Senator Marshall, who moved the motion, is in the house. I ask that this order stand.

Order stands.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MEET OUTSIDE THE PRECINCTS OF PARLIAMENT—ORDER WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Poitras, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall:

THAT, notwithstanding the usual practices of Senate Committees, the Senate authorize the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to meet outside the precincts of Parliament for the purpose of hearing a witness through the technology of teleconference calls pursuant to its special study on the draft regulations ensuing from the new legislation on Canadian financial institutions. — (Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think this matter was settled. The committee decided not to go ahead with this plan.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, during the debate on the committee's budget, the budget item for telecommunications was reduced by the requisite amount for this activity. We have settled the budget question, and so this item can be dropped from the Orders of the Day.

Senator Molgat: As far as we are concerned, the case is closed.

Order withdrawn.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin, pursuant to notice of June 9, 1993, moved:

THAT the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have the power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon Tuesday, June 15, 1993, even though the Senate may be sitting, and that Rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Could Senator Beaudoin explain the reasons for this motion?

Hon. Gérald-A. Beaudoin: We had a request from the opposition members on the committee who felt we should hear the Minister of Justice on Bill C-109 and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Minister of Justice has agreed to appear before the committee tomorrow, at 4 p.m.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I still have the same reservations about these requests, but in the circumstances I accept the explanation.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt this motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following person has been summoned to the Senate:

W. David Angus

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and was seated:

Hon. W. David Angus, of Montreal, Quebec, introduced between Honourable Lowell Murray and Honourable John Lynch-Staunton.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, our newest colleague, Senator David Angus, is a friend of long standing of many of us here. He is a specialist in maritime law and a senior partner in the law firm of Stikeman, Elliott, which has contributed its share, or more than its share, of people to the public life of Canada, and in particular to the Parliament of Canada.

Senator Angus is a company director, has been extremely active in charitable and community affairs, and of course has been of considerable assistance to the political party of his choice. In that respect, he has plenty of company in this chamber.

With such a background, honourable senators, I am confident that he will find his membership in this chamber satisfying and challenging in every way and that we will find him a valued and esteemed colleague.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

FREE TRADE

EFFECTS OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to return to what the Tory party has done to this country by negotiating the free trade agreement. I would like to read excerpts from an article written by William Pfaff which was published in the International Herald Tribune on June 7, 1993, which stated:

> The recent meeting of the economic ministers of the 24 OECD countries came at a time when free trade theory confronts a powerful challenge from those who say that unregulated international trade has proved in recent years to impoverish the rich without doing much for the poor.
> The program for still more tariff cuts, which will be put before the summit of seven leading industrial powers next month in Tokyo, is meeting stronger opposition than had been expected. An intellectual challenge reinforces the practical resistance that has caused a two-year delay in final negotiations on a new round of tariff reductions under GATT. While prospects for GATT agreement reportedly are better than in recent months, the obstacles still are large, and the theoretical counteroffensive is gathering force.
> The argument for removing tariff barriers is that expanding trade generates increased prosperity for all. Poor-country producers are supposed to be enriched by access to wealthy markets, and as a result the standard of living and social protection of their workers is expected to go up. The rich countries are supposed to specialize in high-value-added goods that they alone can produce, and thus to earn more while benefiting from lower-cost consumer imports. Everyone's condition improves. Or so the argument goes.

> In practice the opposite has happened, at least during the 1980s, when the doctrines of deregulation that swept over the Western world from the United States and Britain were added to the free trade mix.

He is talking about you people.

> The rich became poorer because of stiffer competition from the poor. The rich countries' companies may have done better, operating in deregulated markets with little constraint on where they produced or on the standards they met (sanctions by consumers being real, but the last to take effect). Yet society in the richer countries was impoverished.

> Theory said that industries in the rich countries would increase their productivity through investment —

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I must inform the honourable senator that the time permitted by the rules has expired.

Senator Gigantès: As I gather Senator Simard does not wish to hear the truth, I shall continue tomorrow.

THE HONOURABLE W. DAVID ANGUS

WELCOME TO NEW SENATOR

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I am a senator from Quebec in Ottawa. Today we welcome Honourable W. David Angus. I know him to be a very distinguished man and an eminent lawyer. He is a welcome addition to the Senate. Senator Angus, I want to work in very close cooperation with you. Until Canadians in their wisdom decide democratically on a different role for the Senate, I offer my support to make this Senate a dignified chamber which can work closely on major projects for our Canadian society and go throughout our country to see people facing despair. I am thinking of Canadian youth. That was one reason and motivation for me to join the Senate and to accept the invitation extended to me. I think that must be said.

I take this opportunity, since this Parliament is drawing to a close, to tell Senator Angus that we are new senators. I say to my friends and colleagues, I look at them regardless of what may have happened in previous years, we must return to what the Senate can represent. I reach out to honourable senators on both sides of the house so that we can — I understand that it may displease —

[English]

I am willing to believe — and it may not be well received, but I am hopeful — that we will soon be able to work together on new projects, because Canadians will decide what to do in the Senate. In the meantime, as I said to the press, "Would you mind if we in the Senate do something concrete for this great country I call Canada?"

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING BILL

TIME FOR SOBER SECOND THOUGHT

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, the founder of my party and the father of my country described the Senate of Canada as the chamber of sober second thought. Today, as Bill C-110 moves, under pressure, through the lower house, we in this chamber have a magnificent opportunity to take the kind of second thought to which Sir John A. Macdonald referred.

In this, the dying days of a session, possibly the last weeks of a government, a bill profoundly affecting my native province is being rushed through in a last minute clear-up of legislation. I think that my fellow Islanders, anti-bridge and pro-bridge, will be unhappy about this vital and costly measure being put through under forced draught.

Despite the ruling of the Federal Court of Canada, there has been no environmental study of the bridge now being projected. The people of Prince Edward Island have not had a plebiscite on this structure. Apart from the grave environmental issues, there is now a great deal of concern about the economic realities of this megaproject. The Globe and Mail and the Financial Post, papers with strong business sections, have raised very pertinent questions recently.

In light of all the circumstances, it is the opportunity of this chamber to hold off on the measure and thereby allow an impartial environmental and financial study of this great project. Surely we do not wish to put into place anything that will injure the environment for future generations of the residents of our beloved little island which has the honour to be the cradle of Confederation.

Is it not the time to hold off on this project to allow these proper studies? In that event, all of the necessary studies could be completed in time for the assembly of the next Parliament.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

THE HONOURABLE W. DAVID ANGUS

WELCOME TO NEW SENATOR

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I certainly could not let the arrival in the Senate of Senator Angus pass without saying a few words of welcome on this occasion.

As the most senior senator from Quebec, I welcome him in that capacity, but also because of the personal contacts we maintain, which are common knowledge.

I know the senator very well. He certainly has the requisite dynamic and energetic approach to make an outstanding contribution to this house. I am glad to see that after bringing to the Senate an impressive number of provincial Liberals, Prime Minister Mulroney found a Conservative to sit with us, a genuine Tory like Senators Grimard and Roberge, whom we know very well and for whom we have the greatest respect.

I have every respect for the provincial Liberals, although they make me uneasy, on occasion. I think they deviated from their principles at one time, but according to them, they did so in the public interest, and in any case, God forgives a repentant sinner! Especially since they all have exceptional qualifications.

This does not apply to Senator Angus. As long as I have known him, he has been what we call a true blue Tory. I want to congratulate him on his appointment, and I know he will do a good job.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

This was not calculated on my part, but I have the impression that opposition to the GST has been particularly strong in British Columbia, and especially in Vancouver.

QUESTION PERIOD

NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INCLUSION OF CHAPTER 19 CONCERNING BINATIONAL PANELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, we were told again and again, as recently as last month, that one of the major achievements in the free trade agreement with the United States was the inclusion of Chapter 19 concerning the binational panels for the settlement of disputes.

The Senate has before it Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement. In that bill, there is again a Chapter 19. Certain clauses will implement Chapter 19 of the NAFTA.

Just last week, honourable senators, a binational panel brought forth a decision on a topic with which honourable senators who have been following the history of the binational panels will be familiar, namely swine. Sometimes it is pork; sometimes it is swine; sometimes it is even hogs.

In view of the fact that Bill C-115 is now before the house, and that this matter is of great importance to the free trade agreement and to the NAFTA, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate give us any information as to the position of the government on the finding of this binational panel?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall have to consult with colleagues on that matter, and I will produce a prepared reply.

Senator Stewart: Can we assume that the prepared reply will be available to the Senate in a timely fashion? By that I mean will we have that reply so that senators may use it as they determine whether or not to vote in favour of the third reading motion on Bill C-115?

• (1430)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the fact is that it may even be in the notes that I have in front of me, but I have not read them.

Senator Perrault: He has been busy.

Senator Murray: Yes, I have been busy, as Senator Perrault points out. I will undertake to have a statement brought in tomorrow or the next day.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TELECOMMUNICATIONS ACT

SECOND READING

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sylvain, seconded by the Honourable Senator Grimard, for the second reading of Bill C-62, respecting telecommunications.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, although Bill C-62 was introduced here only a few days ago, many hear the familiar sounds of a distant bell. The subject matter of the bill was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications shortly after the bill was introduced in the other place. That committee reported almost one year ago.

One of my objections to the pre-study and its distortion of Parliament's constitutional process is the government's irresistible propensity to use pre-study as a lash to accelerate passage when the bill comes before the Senate by proper constitutional process.

Senator Murray: No, no, no.

Senator Frith: Nevertheless, my intervention on this bill shall not be a lengthy one because, quite apart from pre-study, my office's research found that it is widely agreed that the bill should go forward — at least to committee.

The many changes made to the bill in committee in the other place resulted in a bill that is generally supported by the telecommunications industry.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: And our pre-study helped.

Senator Frith: Bill C-62, the Telecommunications Act, proposes a new legislative framework for telecommunications. To call it a "new" framework is somewhat of an understatement, considering that the current framework within which the industry works dates back to the 1908 Railway Act.

What is the framework that Bill C-62 establishes? While it is very extensive, I will deal only with a few major points and leave the detail to the committee, because I believe that the committee is eager to dig into the bill and its detail. Witness the fact that it arranged for a meeting of the committee before the bill had even reached the commencement of second reading debate here in the Senate.

First, the bill states that the act is binding on all provinces. Telecommunications is viewed as a national industry and, thus, should be subject to national regulation. Supreme Court of Canada decisions make the national government's responsibilities and jurisdiction in the field quite clear. To provide direction for these national regulations, the bill sets out policy objectives. These objectives include that telecommunications services should be reliable, affordable and accessible in both urban and rural areas of Canada. They also include as an objective to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the social and economic fabric of Canada.

Initially, the bill included the strengthening of culture as well — an area to which I hope the committee will give special attention in its study. It seems to be one of the main areas of controversy in this bill. In that regard, I received a communication from Mr. Crawley, the Executive Director of ACTRA, the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists. As he points out in that letter, which was sent to me by fax:

> ACTRA represents 10,000 performers, writers and broadcast journalists working in the English-language electronic media.

As he points out, as a result they have understandably "taken a keen interest in the legislative process relating to Bill C-62" and in its text. In that letter in the third paragraph, he says:

> At one point during clause-by-clause discussion, the Communications Minister suggested that, "The onus is on those arguing that culture has to be included, specifically by reference, to demonstrate what couldn't be done within the bill if it were not included."

As I understand it, the concept of culture as an objective and as part of our telecommunications policy was removed by the Senate committee in its pre-study. On its study of the bill at committee stage, I hope the committee will be open-minded enough to listen to arguments against the decision it then made. Mr. Crawley continues:

> Since culture was included in telecommunications system objectives in Bill C-43 of 1977 and Bill C-16 of 1978, we believe that the onus for justification is on those calling for its deletion after some twenty years of its place of recognition in the development of this long-awaited piece of legislation.

In the next paragraph, he points out an important reality — I suppose that is the word, although I think it was Vladimir Nabokov who said that one word in the English language that should always be put in quotation marks is the word "reality". Mr. Crawley states:

> The historical line of separation between and carriage and content is increasingly blurred.

He goes on in the next paragraph to state:

> The view that culture and communications are increasingly interrelated has been expressed both forcefully and eloquently in Communications Canada's own policy paper, The Information Society: New Media...New Choices. In that paper the department has argued that Canada must develop and pursue policies affecting the whole communications sector which will, though evolving new structures and forms of content, "provide Canadians with the freedom to choose from a wide range of Canadian cultural products and information services" and "allow Canadians from one end of the country to the other to exchange their ideas and knowledge".

He then gives another example of the "vulnerability of Canadian cultural products" by setting out in some detail the STENTOR phenomenon, which members of the committee — experts that they are — are familiar with. He then points out on page three:

> In any case, the inclusion of culture in clause 7 would act as a clear reminder to those corporations and individuals involved in undertakings which fall within the rubric of the telecommunications sector that such oversights are intolerable and, more to the point, impractical.

There are then a few other paragraphs in that letter. I have merely selected some of its highlights. I hope and expect that the committee will ask Mr. Crawley to attend the committee hearings to elaborate on the concerns that this important Canadian organization has about Bill C-62.

I refer to one other communication sent to me at my request by an enthusiastic supporter of the legislation, Mr. Joseph Schmitt of the Canadian Business Telecommunications Alliance. I asked him if he was aware of any opposition to the bill. He said he would send me anything he could find on that subject. In fact, in addition to a two-page memorandum detailing his own support of the bill, he sent me a document and news release from the Public Interest Advocacy Centre on Nicholas Street here in Ottawa. The signatories to this press release were Michael Janigan and Phillipa Lawson.

The Public Interest Advocacy Centre is generally supportive of the legislation. They make five points: They support the procedural fairness and openness with respect to appeals to cabinet, and think this is a big step forward. They are supportive of the protection of personal privacy as an explicit policy goal. They have concerns about the reliance on market forces as simply a way of achieving goals such as efficiency and equity. They have concerns about the presumption in favour of deregulation where the service in question will be subject to competition sufficient to protect the interests of users. They also have a concern about removing the power of the CRTC to order a telephone company to provide or discontinue certain services in appropriate circumstances. No doubt this committee, in its search for viewpoints and information on this bill, will want to invite either Mr. Janigan or Ms Lawson, or both, to appear before the committee and elaborate on those views.

The bill gives the Governor in Council, meaning the cabinet, or the executive, a greater hand in the workings of the CRTC and the ability to issue directions to the CRTC in matters which would have a bearing on broad policy matters. These directions could be made in respect of a matter still pending before the CRTC, not just on appeal. The CRTC would be authorized to exempt any class of Canadian carrier from the act. That authority initially lay with the minister, but changes were made to provide the CRTC with the authority.

However, the Governor in Council, the cabinet, the executive — the administration, as it is called in the United States — would be able to vary or rescind a decision of the CRTC. That, it seems to me, can be dangerous.

Alan Bloom referred to the fact that we live in an administrative democracy or an administrative society. We might call it an administrative democracy in Canada rather than a parliamentary democracy, because the administration has so much power over all the workings of the society in its federal aspect. They regularly appear to hold Parliament possibly in contempt, but certainly as a nuisance in holding up their decisions.

Another aspect of this wide power is that anyone can ask the cabinet to rescind a decision. That, of course, creates a larger role for lobbyists to have unfavourable CRTC decisions changed. There is one balancing element on that point: Before making a recommendation to cabinet regarding directions to vary or rescind a CRTC decision, the minister must provide the provinces with an opportunity to consult on his or her recommendations.

Also included in the first version of the bill, but not this one, was a licensing regime. It would have required that a Canadian carrier only operate in accordance with the licence issued by the minister. Many people were opposed to that part of the bill, and it was removed in committee.

Any Canadian carrier can operate as a telecommunications common carrier if it is Canadian controlled. What is "Canadian controlled"? Not less than 80 per cent of the members of the board of directors must be Canadians, and Canadians must own at least 80 per cent of the corporation.

The bill requires that rates charged by a carrier for telecommunication services be just and reasonable. No carrier may unjustly discriminate in its provision of services.

Finally, the CRTC will have authority — this was a point referred to by Mr. Janigan — to refrain from regulating in an area it believes to have a sufficient degree of competition to protect consumers' interests. They call that "forbearance." This is an important principle of all competition policy, of course, dating back to the original Combines Investigation Act, provisions in the Criminal Code and the Competition Act. The basic principle is that where control of the market exists with a monopoly or oligopoly, the interests of the consumers can be helpless against abuse, so regulation can be imposed only where competition is not doing the protective regulating.

Those are only some of the important parts of the bill. There are many others I have not talked about which I hope will be discussed in committee. For instance, I hope the concept of including culture in the objectives will be examined in the committee. I also ask the committee to examine the inclusion of a five-year review of the act since the legislation effects such wide-ranging changes.

As I indicated at the beginning, we will be supporting the bill at this stage. Many positive changes were made in the committee on the other side, and I suggest that these changes make the bill more acceptable to the industry and to our party. Since we recognize the need to update the existing structure which emanates from 1908 legislation, we will therefore support it at second reading. However, I hope the questions raised at second reading will be given serious thought and time by the committee, and not just lip service.

On a bill before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs the other day, Senator Beaudoin, the chairman of the committee and I were pointing out that frequently at second reading, senators will make reference to questions that they hope the committee will deal with. Because of the pressure to speed legislation through the Senate, the committee is usually ready to receive the legislation and has witnesses lined up. The witnesses appear and express opinions that they probably formed months ago. The debate at second reading is totally ignored. None of the witnesses have been asked to read what senators have raised as issues for the committee. Senators who have asked the committee to look into certain aspects, to do a thorough job and to satisfy itself on certain questions often find that the next day the bill has been bounced back, that third reading is being proposed and that the questions raised at second reading have not been dealt with at all.

Senator Beaudoin and I have agreed that a practice that should be encouraged by committees is to ask witnesses these questions, to ask members of the committee to highlight or circle the questions or perhaps to ask staff of the committee to read through second reading debate and circle the questions raised so that members can ask the witnesses to deal with them.

I invite all chairmen to proceed in this manner, and I am encouraged to see Senator Kinsella, who is a committee chairman, nodding agreement. I can see that practice as being beneficial to both sides. Senator Beaudoin appeared to agree with me the other day. That is two committees for a start. I hope other committee chairmen will do the same. It seems to me that it would not be that difficult to ask staff to read second reading debate and to make sure the committee deals with the questions raised therein.

Against that background, the committee, I hope, having attended to the caveat I made yesterday about arranging meetings before second reading, will receive this bill promptly and therefore be able to launch a thorough investigation and to canvass witnesses as soon as possible.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, as one who participated at great length in the pre-study of this legislation last spring, I should like to offer a few comments. I need not tell you that our telecommunications system has become an important strategic industry for the entire economy. The spinoff is clear. Telecommunications is a knowledge-based industry that employs more than 100,000 Canadians, generates over $20 billion in revenue and invests heavily in Canadian research and development. It is an industry that will ensure that Canada has a ticket to the twenty-first century, a ticket to the high-technology arena of the future.

I am sensitive as well to the fact that the area of telecommunications is really Canada's electronic highway of the 1990s. As an Atlantic Canadian, I want to ensure that the highway runs from coast to coast, that telecommunications will not only help Canada create knowledge-intensive high-technology jobs of the future but will assist us in locating them on as equitable a basis as possible in our regions.

Some people have said that our system of telecommunications serves to solidify the ideal of a common house here in Canada. I believe that is axiomatic. I believe we all understand that Canada must develop a coherent national strategic plan for the future of the telecommunications system if it is to adapt quickly to industrial advances and, as well, to allow Canadians to maximize their involvement in the world-wide information revolution.

Bill C-62 is therefore critical to the present strength and futuristic adaptability of our common house. It seems now very long indeed since the spring of 1992, when the bill was before us for pre-study and, as I said earlier, many of us spent many days and weeks examining the various issues raised in this important and complicated legislation. I believed then that Bill C-62 was flawed in many ways. In fact the minister was forced to make dozens of amendments, revealing the singular lack of national strategic planning.

Like Lazarus emerging from the tomb, the bill appears resurrected. Now, a year and a half later, the bill has crept back onto the parliamentary agenda — very late in the day I might add. At any rate, behold the resurrection, for the new bill is vastly amended and requires some new discussion to comprehend the metamorphosis, as indicated by Senator Frith just a few moments ago.

Allow me to summarize briefly the views some members on this side raised in the pre-study. Along with industry we found it deficient, wanting, lacking in many ways. Licensing of carriers by the minister had to go. According to the witnesses at the pre-study, the power to make exemptions from the entire act should go to the CRTC, not to the minister. It was suggested that the process of petitions to cabinet on CRTC decisions be made more transparent and fairer for everyone, and it was further recommended that consideration should be given to a time limit for CRTC decisions. These were among the Senate's recommendations.

Much of this has been responded to in the other place, but only after, as I indicated earlier, a year has gone by, after the industry built up and sharpened its arguments and after the minister was forced to table dozens and dozens of amendments, day after day, in the house committee.

The Senate committee heard a great deal about cleaning up the definition clause, clause 2. Although the minister has left in place a complicated method of excluding resellers from the bill, some changes were made to the objectives clause, clause 7, which again was something that was urged to be done as a result of the pre-study in this place. The vary-or-rescind power was improved. People on this side were quite happy to see Canadian ownership of this sector addressed so that the 80 per cent domestic ownership requirement for Canadian carriers remains.

Let me turn briefly to some of the amendments proposed but not accepted by the minister. An automatic five-year review of this act was rejected by the minister within the legislation itself. Reference has already been made to that point by Senator Frith. That amendment seemed to me to make a lot of sense so that another 100 years does not pass before the legislation is revisited. An explicit opportunity for all interested parties to be heard, before cabinet used its powers to refer back, vary, and rescind CRTC decisions, was proposed in the other place, but again it was not accepted by the minister. This would have assured people a chance to be heard whenever cabinet was planning to issue an order affecting a CRTC decision. Again, the minister did not agree.

Apart from the fact that we did not achieve all our amendments, I must acknowledge that tremendous progress has been made. The process has taken far too long and, as a consequence, Canada's progress in this area has obviously suffered. However, it is to be hoped that a lot of that is behind us. In the future, we must be constantly vigilant in areas where improvements can be made, and the public interest better served.

I thank Senator Sylvain for his introduction last night of the legislation on second reading. He, among others, has devoted a great deal of time and good work to this legislation. I thank Senator Frith for his observations this afternoon. As deputy chairman of the committee, I look forward to further discussions on the important matters that have been raised.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable Senator Oliver.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, perhaps I could correct the record on one point before Senator Oliver proceeds, because it does concern him. In my intervention I referred to the communication I received from Mr. Crawley of ACTRA, sent to me by fax. However, I ought to have made it clear that it was a copy of a letter that was sent to Senator Oliver. I did not mean to imply that Senator Oliver was not aware of that letter. It was addressed to him, and I assume he received it. However, I did not make that clear in my intervention.

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I should like to add a few words about this important piece of legislation. My remarks will deal largely with the question of pre-study, in view of the fact that the committee which I was chairing at the time did do an extensive pre-study of this bill.

When this bill came before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications for pre-study, the committee concluded that the government should proceed with the bill, taking into account a series of 24 recommended amendments. I am delighted to report to the Senate today that this advice given by the Senate committee was followed. In his address to the House of Commons at third reading of this bill, the Minister of Communications praised the work of the Senate committee in the following terms:

> With determination and with open minds the senators listened to many hours of testimony from the best and brightest figures in Canada's telecommunications industry. The greatest tribute to the senators can be found in the simple fact that many of their recommendations are now reflected in the amended Bill C-62.

Bill C-62, as it now appears before the Senate, is, in my view, a much improved piece of legislation as a result of our Senate pre-study. The government has clearly accepted the thrust of the Senate committee's majority report in eliminating a proposed licensing regime and, over all, in achieving a better balance between the powers attributed to the Governor in Council and those attributed to the regulator, the CRTC.

Bill C-62 is a well-crafted piece of legislation, developed after extensive consultations and fine-tuned through the parliamentary process. It is forward-looking legislation which will provide the CRTC with the policy framework and regulatory authority it needs to oversee the rapid evolution of this key sector of our economy well into the next century. For the first time, a telecommunications policy for Canada will be enshrined in law. For the first time, and subject to negotiated transition periods with certain provinces, all of the major telephone and telecommunications companies in Canada will come under the same law and the same regulator, creating a unified Canadian market.

For the first time, the CRTC will have full authority to weigh the relative merits and benefits of monopoly and competitive services and, where competition is appropriate, to forbear from regulating, letting market forces come into full play. For the first time, the CRTC will be able to select the form of regulation most appropriate to the different circumstances in which companies of vastly different size and revenue bases operate.

For the first time, the Governor in Council will have clear authority to establish broad policy directions for the CRTC to implement through its regulation of the telecommunications system. And, for the first time, Canadian ownership of the telecommunications infrastructure of this country will be required by law.

The CRTC has been, and remains under this bill, one of the most powerful and independent regulatory authorities established in Canadian law. Indeed, in several areas the bill gives the CRTC greater flexibility.

This afternoon, I received a letter from Mr. Louis R. (Bud) Sherman, the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. In that letter dated June 14, 1993, Mr. Sherman states, in part:

> You will recall that the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) was a participant during the Standing Senate committee's pre-study of Bill C-62. The CRTC has also assisted the Sub-Committee of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in its recent examination of the Bill prior to third reading.
> While the CRTC has some concerns remaining with Bill C-62, on balance, we consider the Bill as passed by the House of Commons to be vastly improved from the version referred to your committee for pre-study in March 1992. Accordingly, we support its passage as quickly as possible.

At the same time, however, the bill recognizes the appropriate role of the government in setting broad policy directions to guide regulatory decision-making in this key sector of our economy.

The Canadian economy is undergoing a period of transition. Increasingly, economic growth and job and wealth creation will depend on information-based and knowledge-based activities. The telecommunications sector is at the heart of this transformation, providing the electronic infrastructure — the electronic highway, which is the American term — upon which the new economy will increasingly rely.

Bill C-62 is therefore about opportunities. In particular, it is about the opportunity to take full advantage of telecommunications as the catalyst which will drive so much of our future economic growth. It is about opportunities to build on the dynamic growth of our telecommunications sector, thereby enabling growth in other sectors, as well as creating jobs and wealth in its own right. Around the world, but particularly in our key trading partners, the United States, Europe and Japan, governments are realizing the strategic importance of telecommunications for economic growth. If we do not take decisive action now to ensure the competitive position of our telecommunications industry in the global marketplace, then we put at risk the ability of Canadians to enjoy continued economic growth, improved competitiveness and sustained employment in high-paying, high-value jobs.

Bill C-62 provides the policy and legislative framework, and the flexibility, that the regulator needs to achieve the right balance between monopoly and competitive services during this period of transition and rapid evolution. The bill has earned the support of the telecommunications industry, of Canadian businesses that have come to rely more and more on telecommunications services to conduct their day-to-day affairs, and of Canadian consumer groups. In accepting a wide range of amendments to the bill, including the outright removal of certain provisions, the government has demonstrated its responsiveness to the parliamentary process and, in particular, the Senate's pre-study of the bill and to the democratic principles underlying thorough public consultation.

In my view, honourable senators, this legislation has withstood the test of public scrutiny and has been found to be a responsible and responsive piece of work which will serve Canadians well. It is time to proceed with its passage into law.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, for Senator Sylvain, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. James F. Kelleher: Honourable senators, I welcome this opportunity to speak to you today on the North American Free Trade Agreement, a topic that I know has generated a great deal of interest, not only in Canada, the United States and Mexico, but around the world.

As you know, leaders from Canada, the United States and Mexico have signed the legal text. This agreement, involving two developed nations and a major developing country, represents a significant step forward in the global trading system. It strikes another blow against protectionism and will strengthen the concept of open regionalism.

The media in some countries, including Canada, the United States and Mexico, have displayed some misunderstanding of the fundamental distinctions between common markets and a free trade area. This has often led to a misrepresentation of the NAFTA, which effectively reduces barriers to trade within North America, but with each of the three members maintaining their existing trade regimes with their other trade partners. This is in contrast to the EEC, for example, where the 12 states have eliminated intraregional trade barriers and established a common tariff for the community.

I know that certain media reports have interpreted the NAFTA as a move toward a fortress North America. Building a trade bloc was not Canada's intent, nor, I believe, the intent of our NAFTA partners, and it has not been the result of these negotiations.

Frankly, with a relatively small open economy, dependent upon trade for growth, we Canadians simply cannot, and could not, afford to be part of an inward looking trading arrangement. We have learned, often the hard way, that inward looking thinking and policies do not work. Barriers to trade and other forms of economic interaction, like all protectionist policies, stifle economic opportunities for all concerned, particularly for those who adopt them.

As you know, NAFTA is based on the FTA. Therefore, it was necessary for Canada to take a look at how the FTA was performing to make sure that the foundation was secure before proceeding with the NAFTA. I believe that after four years the FTA has already proven its worth. It has increased Canada's trade potential, created a positive climate for our exporters and established enormous opportunities for foreign investors in Canada.

In fact, despite the recession affecting both countries Canadian exports to the United States in 1992 rose a remarkable 13.6 per cent to $122.3 billion, up $14.7 billion from 1991. Our merchandise trade surplus with the United States was a record $17.7 billion in 1992, $3.8 billion or 27.3 per cent higher than in the previous year.

All this is having a positive effect on job creation. A net total of 118,000 jobs were created in 1992. In Canada, every $1 billion in exports creates or maintains 15,000 jobs.

According to the U.S. Department of Commerce, average monthly imports into the U.S. and Canada are up 25.9 per cent since the FTA compared to the four-year period prior to the FTA.

According to Statistics Canada, since free trade came into effect, 16 of 22 Canadian manufacturing industries increased their market share in the United States.

Transportation, pharmaceuticals, electronics and electrical equipment have made gains of more than 70 per cent. Our exports of high-tech products have gone from $6.6 billion to $10.7 billion, a 63 per cent increase. Our telecommunications, office equipment and precision instruments exports have gone up by 74 per cent. The electronic parts sector has shot up by $2 billion, an increase of 225 per cent.

We have also achieved significant progress in traditional sectors such as textiles, dairy products and crude products generally.

Opponents of free trade warned Canadians of many things, among which was a dramatic drop in investments in Canada. All the money was supposed to start flowing to the United States. Well, since four years direct foreign investment has increased by $17.8 billion, and that, honourable senators, in a recession.

All these figures speak for themselves. They show that Canadians have been able to take advantage of the opportunities that free trade offers them. Blaming the FTA for every sparrow that falls has become a cottage industry in our country, but the arguments do not stand up.

Listen to what the C.D. Howe Institute, Canada's leading independent think-tank, concluded in its October 1992 study:

> It seems clear that the recession has not been due to factors directly related to the FTA. Indeed, the facts so far are more consistent with the optimistic scenario of free trade supporters than with the view of detractors...Free trade with the U.S. has helped the development of the higher value-added industries that are crucial to Canada's economic growth...In particular, many of Canada's manufacturing sectors seem to have performed remarkably well in the U.S. market under the FTA.

But, in Canada, the critics' arguments went beyond economics and into the dark regions of conspiracy and loss of sovereignty. Clearly, the critics were wrong, in both their economic fears and their cultural fears.

The fact is the free trade agreement has made Canada stronger, more able to compete and prosper and more able to hang onto the social safety nets that we consider to be some of the finer aspects of Canadian life.

It was for those very reasons that we entered into negotiations with the United States and Mexico, and the benefits of the North American Free Trade Agreement are just as clear.

We will gain equal access with the United States to the Mexican market of 85 million people, which will grow to 100 million by the end of this decade. We will preserve and improve the original free trade agreement with the United States. I find that hard to believe, colleagues, in view of the fact that I was involved in that agreement. However, I suppose anything is possible.

We will ensure that Canada remains an attractive location for investment in North America. When NAFTA goes into effect on January 1, 1994, we will be part of the largest and richest free trade area in the world: 360 million people with a combined wealth of $7 trillion.

What are the implications of NAFTA for Canada? We feel they are very positive because we feel our key objectives were met. First, we will have barrier-free access to Mexico. Phase-out of tariffs for virtually all Canadian exports to Mexico over ten years will end what is effectively one-way free trade in Mexico's favour. Right now, 80 per cent of Mexican goods, for example, auto parts, enter Canada duty-free, while most Canadian goods and services that enter Mexico presently face barriers.

Second is the elimination of Mexican import licensing requirements for goods. The third implication involves opportunities to bid for major Mexican government procurement contracts. Canadian financial service companies will be able to open subsidiaries, invest in and acquire financial institutions in Mexico, such as banking, securities and insurance. There will be major liberalization of restrictive Mexican investment regimes, liberalization of Mexican services markets, including land transport, specialty air services, professional services, and enhanced telecommunications, for example, advanced data processing services, and agreement between Canada and Mexico to maintain their relatively open international maritime shipping services.

We retain the free trade agreement plus improvements. The Auto Pact remains. Protection of Canada's cultural industries remains intact. Social services and health services are protected. High health, safety and environmental standards are preserved and can be strengthened.

Canada's supply management import quotas for egg, dairy and poultry products are not affected. Unlike in the free trade agreement, transportation services, including land and specialty air services, and intellectual property rights are included. There will be clearer North American content rules, including, for autos, reducing the risk of unilateral interpretations by customs officials. We all saw what happened in the Honda case.

The impact of new rules of origin for textiles and apparel is offset by increases in the quotas, giving preferential access to the U.S. market for Canadian goods which do not meet the rules of origin. For example, our export quota to the U.S. doubles for non-wool apparel, nearly triples for fabrics and is four times the 1991 export level for yarns.

There will be an extension for two years of duty-drawback beyond the FTA expiry in 1994. This will be replaced in 1996 by a permanent duty refund system which will reduce input costs for Canadian manufacturers who still pay duties on goods into other NAFTA countries. There will be clearer disciplines on energy regulators to avoid discriminatory actions against contractual arrangements benefiting Canadian gas exports. More stringent discipline will be applied to the U.S. for imposing border restrictions against imports from Canada, and improved dispute settlement procedures will be in place. The FTA's dispute settlement mechanism has given Canada a form of recourse against American trade protectionism that did not exist before; one which gives Canada an advantage over other American trading partners.

Finally, honourable colleagues, Canada remains an attractive place to invest. Canada will be on an equal footing in competing for investment in North America because the NAFTA ensures secure access for our exports both to the United States and Mexico. Had we not entered into NAFTA, the United States would have become the hub, much to the detriment of Canada.

However, I should remind honourable senators that trade agreements such as NAFTA and the FTA only provide a framework. They do not create trade in and of themselves. It is up to Canadians, Americans and Mexicans to take the initiative and seek out ways to make new sales of goods and service and to make new investments. What this means, in short, for our three countries is that, while trade-liberalizing policies ensure that we have the means to become part of the global economy, it is up to individuals to go through the doors which these agreements open.

Our traditional markets are no longer a sure thing. The competition is no longer the company across the street or across town. The competition could be any single company around the world. We are not competitive. We stand to lose our traditional customers to a competitor in another part of the world.

All this is to say that business people and, indeed, all of us must work within the new realities of the global marketplace an outward-looking culture that transcends boundaries. We must all begin to understand how the world has changed, and to use those changes to our advantage.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, listening to the honourable senator tell me about this bill makes me want to vote quickly in favour of it, and rush out and sign the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Senator Kelleher: Will you move second reading, then?

Senator Corbin: Listen to the rest.

Senator Lawson: We heard the same kind of glowing presentation by the President of Mexico when he told us he had 85 million people willing and anxious to buy North American manufactured goods, and that there was no reason to worry about Mexican labour laws or safety laws or environment laws; that they have good laws on the books. This is true. However, when you look behind the scene, you find the real truth. First there are 20 million unemployed Mexicans, a huge pool of unemployed exploitable by multinational corporations that owe no loyalty to any flag or country.

We all had a moment of sympathy for our friends at General Motors when they announced a year or so ago that they had to lay off 70,000 workers in North America, and close down plants, and that 30 cities would be devastated. Everyone worried and wondered about it. I was quite surprised about this wave of sympathy for General Motors. Jobs lost: 70,000, paying from $16 to $30 per hour plus fringe benefits. But not one reporter, investigative or otherwise, asked General Motors this question: "While you are laying off thousands of workers in North America, how many jobs are you creating in Mexico?" Had they asked, they would have found out that General Motors has 55,000 workers in Mexico. The top wage — $1.40 per hour.

At the committee meeting, we asked about the competition in the cost of an automobile. I congratulate Senator Stewart on his chairmanship through the difficulty we had in dealing with this matter. The negotiators replied that the labour cost of manufacturing an automobile is really very small: 10 per cent in Canada, 10 per cent in the U.S. I asked the deputy official who was there about the cost in Mexico. They did not know. It was not that important. They thought they could find out.

How can you go to negotiations for that kind of deal and not know what the competition is doing? It was easy to find out, to check the record. The evidence of Bob White of the autoworkers' union was there. The cost is 10 per cent in Mexico as well, but a different 10 per cent. It is 10 per cent of our 10 per cent, or a net cost of 1 per cent. No safety standards, no environmental standards, no fringe benefits. That is the kind of competition we will face.

Senator Perrault: Some deal!

Senator Lawson: That is only part of the story. If we could say, and if the government was saying, that, as a nation, we would go in and help the Mexicans and raise their standards, perhaps that would be a redeeming feature. However, the truth of the matter is that in the last decade real wages in Mexico have gone down by 67 per cent.

• (1530)

I was involved with a trade union in the U.S. when they were dealing with Maquiladora plants. The arrangement was that there would be an equal number of jobs on the Mexican side and the American side and they would live happily ever after. Now there are 5,000 jobs on the U.S. side which are paying good wages and have good working conditions, and there are 450,000 on the Mexican side, under the worst possible conditions.

I have a video which I was perhaps a little derelict in not getting to the committee sooner, but I think every member of the Senate should view it before voting. The video was made by the University of Califomia. The Jolly Green Giant plant from California shut down, fired 1,000 workers and went to Mexico, where they pay the workers 50 cents an hour.

We asked the representative from Mexico at the committee about child labour. He said that it does not exist, although there may be the odd shoe-shine child or something like that. The video includes interviews of 13-, 14-, and 15-year-old children who have been working in assembly lines for Jolly Green Giant for three years. Some of the children have only grade three education because their families did not have enough money. Other children did not go to school at all. They are paid 25 or 26 cents an hour.

This will not happen in Canada, but it troubles me that a major industrialist in British Columbia, who is planning to open a plant in Mexico and was asked whether he would use child labour answered very guardedly. He said, "When you set up a new plant in another country, you obey the laws of that country." Simply translated, that means that, if they allow child labour, he will use child labour.

In the video we also see that they are irrigating the fields with contaminated water. The interviewer asked someone what the red in the stream is. It is blood from the slaughter house a block away, from which the fields are irrigated.

When you are buying lettuce, tomatoes, cauliflower and strawberries, just remember the conditions under which they are being grown. DDT and other chemicals, which have been banned in the U.S. and Canada for the last decade, are used daily in Mexico.

Word is leaking out that this is happening. Does Jolly Green Giant clean it up, like a responsible corporation? No, instead it changes its advertising. On the front of its packages it prints, "San Francisco Choice" or "California Choice", names meant to deceive the consuming public into believing that the product is grown in the United States under decent conditions. In small print on the back they say, "Grown in Mexico".

Petitions of protest were filed and, to the credit of the U.S. customs, they put an end to that practice. Now the company must have "Grown in Mexico" in print equal in size to that of the deceiving words, "San Francisco Choice" and "California Choice". Those are some of the things that are going on.

They have labour laws and safety laws, but what enforcement is directly related to your ability to pay. They call it la mordida, "a little bite". In English it is a small pay off. Safety regulations and environmental regulations will go unenforced if you are prepared to pay the enforcement officers not to enforce them.

The new police commissioner of Mexico was given plaudits lately. Corruption is rampant in the police department, but he has found a solution and he is getting rave reviews. Those policemen who have not taken payoffs from the ordinary citizens in each month get a cash payoff from the state. It is a wonderful solution on the issue of law enforcement and corruption.

Some of you may recall that Congressman Richard Gephardt, the Democratic Majority Leader in the House, voted in favour of fast tracking the NAFTA when George Bush presented it. He was taken down to meet the workers and to see the plants and the contaminated conditions. He went several times and he took a handful of congressmen with him. It was then reported:

> Congress should dump the North American Free Trade Agreement as drafted by the Bush administration, a group of U.S. House members agreed after a tour of Tijuana's thriving maquiladora complex.
> The six-member congressional delegation, headed by...Richard Gephardt...made those remarks after a gruelling tour of the festering toxic dumps and poverty-ridden worker villages south of the border.
> Gephardt said NAFTA is "a bad treaty" that sorely needs to be repaired through a series of supplemental agreements.
> Unless side agreements proposed by the Clinton administration resolve the deep concerns of workers and their communities in the United States, Canada and Mexico, NAFTA likely would go down the drain, Gephardt suggested.
> "A good treaty is good for all three countries; a bad treaty is bad for all three countries," he stressed.

After viewing these, the U.S. wants assistance for U.S. workers displaced by the movement of plants to Mexico, including compensation, training, job search, and placement services. I have not heard of any such proposal by our government in relation to NAFTA.

They want protection for Mexican workers through enforcement of the country's labour laws, particularly those fired for attempting to unionize Maquiladoras, which is very common.

The representative from the Mexican government told us at the committee that the largest trade union in Mexico, which represents 3 million workers, supports the treaty. As I said to him then, that is not a trade union as we know it in Canada and the United States. That is a government-controlled company union that does exactly what it is told.

The representatives of the Mexican government told us that they had perhaps overreacted on a couple of strikes. They did overreact a little. They killed the union leaders. As a former union representative, I consider that an overreaction and a human rights violation. There are no trade unions operating successfully in Mexico as we know them in Canada and the United States.

They want to correct the sources of pollution and environmental degradation through the establishment of a trilateral commission with effective enforcement authority. In support of that they have a nice picture of a very modern plant and a lake. The caption reads:

> A serene pastoral scene this is not. Across this toxic waste holding pond outside Tijuana, Mexico, is a lead smelter and battery recycling plant that the U.S.-owned Alco Pacifico de Mexico abandoned in 1991. The site is contaminated with 15,000 tons of poisonous slag and the pond contains hazardous heavy metals. The polluted water seeps across a road to a dairy farm stocked with a large herd of milk cows.

They set up the plants, exploited the workers at 40 and 50 cents an hour, and raped the resources. When they found that they might be held accountable for the contamination they were leaving behind, they abandoned the plant and left it for the citizens of Mexico to clean up.

They are also asking for repair of deteriorated infrastructure on both sides of the U.S. -Mexican border, to be financed by a cross-border transaction tax. That could very well happen to us.

Congressman Wyden from Oregon said:

> I call myself a free-trader, but I can't vote for this pact.

Several tours of the Maquiladora have been conducted over the past 18 months for a score of House and Senate members, including Senator Howard Metzenbaum and Paul Wellstone, a Democrat from Minnesota. I would suggest that Canadian senators should go and have a firsthand look at what is taking place there. If they had an ounce of human concern, I think they would be depressed to see what is actually taking place.

On the tour, they went to an automated Sanyo plant that produces some 1,000 chassis a day with parts shipped in from Japan. The completed TV components are transported to a Sanyo facility in Forest City, Arkansas, where the final assembly is done.

After four years in operation at Tijuana's Ciudad Industrial, productivity at the Sanyo facility, which is fitted with state-of-the-art robotics, now exceeds that of its plant in Japan, according to the plant manager.

We were again told in the committee that our edge as Canadians, even though Mexico had low wages, was productivity. Not true. But low wages are a primary factor in the productivity edge for the plant's workforce of more than 800, who are mainly young women under 25.

The average pay for the Sanyo production workers is about $60 for a 48-hour week. That is with bonuses. They actually receive about $1 an hour. This is well above the rate at other Tijuana maquiladoras, which pay around $5 a day, or vary from $3 to $5 a day.

Tijuana's industrial complex is a key base for other Japanese and Korean corporations, including Mitsushito, Hitachi and Hyundai. Under the maquiladora setup, these Pacific Rim corporations have invested heavily in the Tijuana facilities to establish a launching pad for exports into the United States and, with the adoption of this treaty, into Canada.

About 30 of the 115 facilities in the complex are U.S. furniture manufacturers that have moved from California. Why? To avoid federal and state regulations against air and water pollution.

Ciudad Industrial is located on a hill above a workers' community, Colonia Chilpanzingo. Community leaders described how discharged industrial waste flows down from the maquiladoras, often flooding the dirt roads.

Expressing concerns over the health problems stemming from community exposure to toxic waste, the Colonia leaders displayed death certificates of babies born missing parts of their brains. 20/20 or 60 Minutes did a feature on these health problems. I am not making this up.

Workers said the Mexican government has failed to endorse labour laws in favour of providing easier access to the influx of maquiladora plants.

Nearly 2,000 maquiladoras employ 450,000 workers just south of the U.S. border, where they do not have to conform to more stringent U.S. labour, safety and environmental standards. Most of the operations were moved from the U.S. to take advantage of poverty level wage scales.

The Americans say that a number of studies document the loss of 500,000 U.S. jobs to the maquiladoras during the eighties. Another half-million jobs would be wiped out in the nineties under the flawed North American Free Trade Agreement.

Ron Carey, the International President of the Teamsters, says that companies they have under contract "are already forming partnerships with Mexican firms or setting up Mexican subsidiaries to take advantage" of a provision allowing Mexican truckers to drive from Mexico to their destinations in the United States and Canada under Mexican wages and labour laws.

Drivers who are making $18 or $20 an hour in Canada and the U.S., plus fringe benefits, pensions, and health care, will be replaced by workers earning $1 an hour.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I must point out that the honourable senator's time has expired. Does the honourable senator have leave to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lawson: While lowering transportation costs for those operations, this provision will result in the loss of as many as 250,000 trucking jobs in the United States. The Americans are talking about a loss of 500,000 manufacturing jobs. The head of the Teamsters estimates the loss of 250,000 trucking jobs in the U.S. If you take the difference in population between Canada and the U.S. — we are roughly 10 per cent — you can expect the loss of 15,000 to 20,000 trucking jobs in Canada, as well as thousands of manufacturing jobs.

While the government paints a glowing picture of what is available to Canada under the NAFTA, what we are faced with is a good agreement, if you are a multinational corporation that has no qualms about exploiting a huge pool of unemployed Mexican workers; that has no qualms about driving down wage rates; that has no qualms about using child labour; that has no qualms about destroying the streams, lakes, and rivers by poisoning them with pollutants, that has no qualms about using unsafe chemicals on products shipped back to unsuspecting Americans and Canadians. If you have no qualms, this is a good agreement for multinational corporations.

In testimony before the U.S. committee, a statement was made that, while the agreement is concerned for property rights and intellectual rights, there is not one word about human rights. I asked one of our negotiators if that was true, and he said, yes, it was true. There is not one word in the agreement about human rights.

As Canadians, we do not have the ability, without those side agreements, to protect Canadian workers or prevent that kind of damage to our country. We do not have the legal right or the moral right to do that kind of damage. That being said, this agreement should be opposed.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: With leave of the Senate, and not withstanding rule 59(1)(a), moved:

> THAT the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, Tuesday, June 15, 1993, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 96(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is very short notice for a committee meeting, but I understand that there have been preparatory discussions. On our behalf, Senator Frith expressed reservations yesterday about committee meetings being called before a bill is passed.

Nevertheless, the minister is available this afternoon. We understand he has major responsibilities right now. The deputy chairman of the committee, Senator Graham, has recommended that we accept the proposal made by Senator Oliver. On that basis, we are prepared to give leave.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I wish to say a word about this practice. It is being used more and more frequently. I am not debating the appropriateness of proceeding with the examination of legislation at a faster pace, but this practice creates a difficulty for other members, regardless of what the chairman and deputy chairman of the committee think.

I am not a member of this committee, but these short notices create a great deal of stress. Senators must organize their schedules. They want proper and sufficient notice. This type of practice is, in my opinion, almost unfair.

I understand we are nearing the end of a session and a Parliament. Everyone is looking forward to the break, but this practice does not do justice to the proper examination of legislation. It creates hardship on your run-of-the-mill senators, those hard-working backbenchers who are expected to show up at committee meetings with practically no notice.

Honourable senators, I wish to place on the record that I do not intend to suffer this kind of practice much longer.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO CANADA INTERNATIONAL—COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY IMPLICATIONS OF REDUCTION IN FUNDING

Leave having been given to proceed to Motion No. 63:

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, June 9, 1993, moved:

> THAT the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the mandate and funding of Radio Canada International; and
> THAT the Committee present its Report no later than September 30, 1993

He said: Honourable senators, the subject of Radio Canada International has been raised by senators on both sides of the chamber. In discussing the best way to proceed with an examination of RCI, I have had the excellent cooperation of Senator Oliver, Chairman of the Transport and Communications committee, Senator MacDonald, and many others. We have worked in a collegial fashion.

The way in which Canada is communicating with the world via Radio Canada International has been the subject of interest and concern to several members in the chamber. A consensus has developed that this subject of international broadcasting should be examined by members of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. If honourable senators support this motion, our deliberations should seek to assess Canada's international communications needs in the future, rather than attempt merely to find ways in which the budgetary status of Radio Canada International may be restored to 1989 or 1990 levels. Our committee deliberations, in my view, should not be a safari into re-establishing the status quo. Perhaps the previous status quo is not good enough, or is not adequate for the needs of Canada today, in this time of the communications revolution in which we now live.

The fact is that many nations in the world are engaged in extensive use of international shortwave, frequency modulation, medium wave, long wave and satellites to communicate with the world. There has been an explosion in the communications revolution. A number of nations are engaging in transmission and retransmission of radio signals via satellites, and a number of nations are involved actively in telecasting to the world via satellite transponders.

Over the weekend, while I was primarily occupied in watching a fascinating political program on the Canadian networks, I accessed the SCOLA satellite, which I have mentioned before, honourable senators. In this instance, I was able to access the nightly television newscast from Radio Beijing. It was on a satellite, accessible to Canadians, available here in North America. That was followed by extensive coverage of news from Portugal in the Portuguese language, again using satellite communication.

The fact is that there is a virtual revolution under way. Some time ago, the German Bundestag and Bundesrat discussed the idea of having a 24-hour German satellite put aloft. They now have it up there and it is broadcasting 24-hours a day in English, German and other languages. It can be received very well in Canada. The programming is quite interesting and very useful.

The British had a debate in Parliament four years ago and the British parliamentarians — on all sides — agreed to put a 24-hour BBC satellite up there, which now brings British television programming to Canada and to various other areas of the world. Some of the BBC news programming on that satellite, which was first proposed in the Parliament of Great Britain, is being used by our CBC news service. To a lesser extent, similar communications developments are occuring in other countries, as I mentioned before; for example, Spain and Portugal.

This committee could review what is being done by other countries with respect to their international television and radio services, because it is quite remarkable how other nations have determined to tell the world about themselves, their culture and their economic and investment potentials.

While, as I have mentioned, the Parliament of Great Britain has moved into that area in a prominent way, other nations are very active. The SCOLA satellite telecasts programs from a number of nations. An Arab language satellite has begun operating 24-hours a day, offering Arabic language, cartoons for the children and discussion about the economic potential of the Arab-speaking nations, and other subjects.

Honourable senators, it seems to some of us that the Senate could provide a most valuable and objective study of not only Radio Canada International but also ways in which the new technology can be adapted to Canada's international communication needs, whether by AM, FM, shortwave, long wave, television, satellite, or whatever the method. In relation to our size as a nation — and I have discussed with Radio Canada International officials our relative position in this communications race — we are several notches below countries with a smaller GNP and a smaller population.

There certainly is an abundance of expertise in this chamber. A number of senators on both sides have had expenence in the broadcast industry and are knowledgeable about international affairs. There are skilled communicators on both sides — including people like Senator Chaput-Rolland, Senator MacDonald, Senator Graham, and several others who have had distinguished careers in the communications industry. I feel sure that, together with others through the proposed committee process, we will be able to suggest many ways in which the Canadian message can be delivered even more effectively to the world communitv of nations.

[Translation]

I am sure that together with others, through the proposed committee process, they will be able to suggest many ways in which the Canadian message can be delivered even more effectively to the world community of nations.

[English]

There is an opportunity to do something good for the nation here by working jointly in committee. I urge support of this resolution.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I totally agree with the suggestion of Senator Perrault. As he said at the outset, it would be quixotic to expect that this committee could find $13 or $20 million to try to restore RCI to its original position. Heaven only knows, when you compare it to the other nations, it is a small enough amount of money, if we had it.

As Senator Perrault says, one of these days we will be out of this fiscal mess. We have to decide whether or not we want Canada's voice known to other parts of the world. After the cut was originally made, one nation said, "The voice of Canada has been silenced." It is important, particularly in the area of foreign relations, to have people know exactly where Canada stands in any number of developing situations.

There are 16 nations now that are teaching Canadian studies. They have relied heavily upon the broadcasts of Radio Canada International, which is unique in that it should not be confused with radio broadcasting and conventional broadcasting as we know it. To the other parts of the world, it is a well-balanced view of Canada.

So that honourable senators understand exactly the situation in which we find ourselves, I should like to read a short chronology of what has happened. In December of 1990, the CBC announced cuts of more than $100 billion, with lay-offs of several hundred employees. The CBC said that it could no longer afford to fund Radio Canada International. The then Minister of External Affairs, Joe Clark, said that Canada should maintain Radio Canada International, "This important voice of Canada in the world."

In January and March of 1991, the CBC and the Department of External Affairs, plus other departments including Extemal Affairs, were unwilling to fund even a part of Radio Canada International. On March 15, the Prime Minister, in an interview broadcast on radio and television and quoted in all of the newspapers, said that "he guarantees the survival of RCI because of its important international role." Then in March of 1991, the cabinet committee on Priorities and Planning authorized five-year funding totalling $81 million from the priorities reserved specifically for Radio Canada International. This comes from the Treasury Board and is added to External Affairs reference levels. External Affairs has consistently indicated that it cannot fund all or any part of RCI out of its own estimates.

Then Joe Clark announced cabinet approval of five-year funding for RCI to operate on a reduced scale, and to replace aging transmitters. If we lose our frequencies, the ball game is all over unless we go to satellites, as Senator Perrault suggested.

The RCI budget was cut from $22 million to $13 million; the staff was cut in half from 210 to 117, and seven broadcast languages — Portuguese, Japanese, Hungarian, Polish, Czech, Slovak and German were dropped. On June 4, 1991, Bill C-40 on the Broadcasting Act was passed and proclaimed into law. That bill has a clause 46(2), which says that the CBC shall "provide an international service". Finally, Treasury Board authorized the five-year funding chargeable to the Department of External Affairs' Canadian Interest Programs Abroad.

The Department of External Affairs initially is not interested in administering the RCI file. The contribution agreement was entered into by RCI and the Department of External Affairs for 1991-92 and then for 1992-93.

The most important thing that can be established by referring this matter to committee, as Senator Perrault has said, is to first of all find out exactly what went into the decision. Clearly, it was to save money. It was to cut $13 million out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. However, who was there? How many departments were involved? There were many. Was the department in charge of tourism involved? When you walk around any place in Canada today, particularly the city of Toronto and outside here, and you see the bus tours, you cannot help but wonder where all the Japanese are coming from. How did they hear about us? There is no more programming into Japan.

It would be interesting to find out exactly who was at that meeting; how the decision was made; how, once we are back on our feet, this can be restored, although not necessarily in the same way it was before. Maybe there is a better way. We need to know, so that we do not go into it with the idea that suddenly there will be $13 million, and we can at least put it back to where it was, but to show our interest in projecting a vision of Canada to the rest of the world. This is the only way it can be done. Eventually, it has to be done and put back again. Those people who are responsible for the initial decisions should be made to realize that some of us are particularly interested in how that decision was arrived at, so that we will be in a position at some future time to put this service back together again.

I totally support the honourable senator's motion. I know the Transport and Communications committee is already heavily overburdened, but where else can we send it?

Motion agreed to.

FORTY-SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the forty-sixth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented in the Senate on June 10, 1993.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Stewart: Explain.

Senator Lavoie-Roux: I will try my best. I apologize for my voice, which has not been good for some ten days now.

At the request of senators, the Human Resources Directorate, in concert with the Office of the Law Clerk and the Chief of Protective Services, prepared a policy authorizing the Senate administration to conduct reliability checks of applicants for employment, and of employees and certain other persons who are to have access to the precincts or to informational assets of the Senate and senators and, based on an assessment of the information obtained, grant a reliability status to these persons.

[Translation]

First of all, I would like to say that all honourable senators have received a copy of this policy, but I would be glad to repeat it, if you are interested.

The current policy applies to all future and current employees of the Senate, to any future or current member of senators' staff, but only if a reliability check is requested, and to all independent contractors or their employees, if the senator or the director who retained their services feels this is useful.

Two levels of reliability checks have been approved. The first level is a cursory check in which the following information is evaluated: personal history, academic certificates, professional qualifications and certificates, and so forth.

There is also a more thorough reliability check.

In this case, in addition to checking and evaluating as for a cursory reliability check, the Senate's administration will investigate the existence of a police record, evaluate the results, and if a record exists, it will proceed with a fingerprint check.

That is the second level of this policy.

[English]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I want to say a brief word, not so much on this report as on the matter of security generally. I am beginning to find it ridiculous that, besides the Canada Post stamp, which has been properly obliterated, most of our mail comes in now marked with another stamp in red, or whatever, which reads "Checked by Senate Security" or something to that effect in English and French. Private, personal invitations for functions are being stamped as having been checked by Senate Security. If you get calendars, they have been checked by Senate Security for security purposes. Books have been checked for security. The whole thing is "Kafkaesque". It is bureaucracy at its worst.

There have been no particular incidents in the Senate that warrant that kind of examination or scrutiny of our mail by x-ray machines or personnel. How much is it all costing? Some of those things are frankly annoying. Someone in this establishment is becoming paranoid. Pretty soon, senators and visitors will have to take off their shoes and have them checked. They now go through electronic magnetic machines that buzz, scream, ring bells or whatever.

Parliament is the house of democracy. People should have access. I appreciate that senators and members of the House of Commons, particularly members of cabinet, have to be protected from whatever scourge is out there that could possibly want to do them harm. However, it has come to the point where every month we pile additional security considerations on top of previous security considerations. When will it all stop? Is this done for the sake of having something on the books to look good to give a sense of security? I question it?

Apparently every morning when we walk into this building our names are taken by security guards. Yet, if I happen to come in from the West Block or the East Block through a tunnel, no one knows that I am in this place. I could die in my office and be there for three days before someone finds out. Security and security considerations are being carried to excess. I wish that we would put a stop to this nonsense.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If Senator Lavoie-Roux speaks, now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, this is just in response to the comments by Senator Corbin. In fact, he said earlier that he realized this reliability check policy had been drawn up at the request of senators some time ago.

I am inclined to agree with Senator Corbin's comments on some of our security measures. If he wishes, I could report his concerns, but they have no connection with our report, which really deals with reliability checks on employees, not on current employees but on future employees, and will take the form of either a cursory or a more thorough check.

Meanwhile, there is certainly some basis for your comments, Senator Corbin.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FORTY- SEVENTH REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the forty-seventh report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy Budgets and Administration (scales of entitlement), presented in the Senate on June 10, 1993.

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I move that the forty-seventh report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration be adopted.

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: I would like to ask the honourable senator if she intends to say anything. I am not urging her to do so; however, I would like to ask her a question or two.

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Please go ahead with your question.

Senator Stewart: On what basis does the honourable senator, on behalf of the committee, decide what decisions made in the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration are reported to the Senate? I would like to know what decisions are made and are not reported to the Senate and what decisions are made and are reported to the Senate. What is the distinction between the two types of decisions?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: That is a good question. Every decision that entails a policy that has to be adopted by the Senate, or has already been adopted by the Senate but has been modified, or a new policy coming in, is brought to the floor of the Senate. On the whole, it is general in nature. It would also apply to the adoption of new policies that would have some inlluence on the functioning of the Senate.

Senator Stewart: Would this include decisions which involved additional public expenditure?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Definitely. All of the budgets of the Senate, including extra budgets that are approved by the internal economy committee, are reported to the Senate. That is the manner in which we adopt the budget once a year, as well as the various expenses for committee work.

Senator Stewart: I thank the honourable senator for being so candid.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the disastrous record of the Mulroney administration from 1984, when it first broke faith with the Canadian people, to 1993, when the Prime Minister announced his resignation.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we proceed with new matters, there is a one item left over from Michael Wilson's 1985 budget that needs to be tied off, namely, the fate of the heavy water plants of Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury in Cape Breton.

We remember from Part 4 of our story; how Mr. Mulroney went on a promise-making binge during the Central Nova by-election campaign. One of those promises, according to the Globe and Mail of August 17, 1983 was:

> I wouldn't cut back on DEVCO or Cape Breton's two heavy water plants until I could attract new industry into the region. High-tech might be the answer.

That is what he told the people of Nova Scotia.

Immediately following the general election of 1984, the Mulroneyites travelled to Nova Scotia with similar assurances. On May 23, 1985, however, Mr. Wilson buried those promises when he announced in his budget speech: "We will move immediately to close the plants." Therefore, contrary to what had been promised, and notwithstanding that there were no new industries in the area, let alone high-tech industries, the plants were closed and abandoned. Within days of Mr. Wilson's announcement, workers began dismantling them.

No one should be surprised that the people of Nova Scotia were very angry at the news and felt betrayed. The Ottawa Citizen of June 8, 1985, reported what Bernie MacDonald, a mechanic in the Glace Bay plant, said of then energy minister Pat Carney:

> "She came here and promised the plant would not be shut down until there were other jobs for us and we met with her yesterday and now all these promised jobs have been whittled down and gone to nothing."
> Clarence Rutledge, a Glace Bay councillor, said he could not understand how the government could "kick us when we're down."

By then, the people of Atlantic Canada began to appreciate what Mr. Mulroney really meant when he promised to burden them with prosperity and how he kept his promises.

The manner in which the Mulroney team dealt with Atlantic Canada deserves entire chapters of examination. There are few better examples of the chasm separating promise and performance. But, sorry, Michael Wilson's 1986 budget is growing impatient, so let's move to that.

On the economic front, we have seen that during the 1984 election campaign the deficit was not a major preoccupation with the Mulroney team. The members of the team promised that the deficit could be addressed without raising taxes or cutting social programs.

We then saw that in 1985, with Michael Wllson's very first budget, the deficit became the priority. Notwithstanding election promises, taxes were increased, social programs were cut, and the very wealthy were given generous bonbons so they would have sufficient energy when it came time to unleash their dynamism, as it was called by Mr. Wilson.

In 1986, with Mr. Wilson's second budget, that priority of deficit reduction became a veritable call to arms. When he rose in the House of Commons on February 26, 1986, to present his budget, he began thus:

> I want to speak frankly to this House, and to the people of Canada.
> My message today is a serious one, and in many ways not pleasant. But it must be said. And it must be understood.
> We have made tremendous progress together in the past 18 months. Growth has been strong. Jobs are being created in record numbers. The deficit is coming down.
> But the mounting burden of public debt continues to threaten our future. It is growing faster than our ability to pay. It must be controlled.

Senator Molgat: What year was that?

Senator Frith: The date of that speech was February 26, 1986.

Mr. Wilson then went on to prescribe some strong medicine — it certainly wouldn't taste very good going down. But in return, he promised a speedy recovery for the patient.

First, I will deal with the medicine. More Crown corporations were to be placed on the auction block. The Mulroney team's promise to increase foreign aid spending to 0.6 per cent of GDP by 1990 was shelved. The new promise was to reach that percentage by the mid-1990s.

The Mulroney team's promise to significantly increase defence spending was the next promise to go out the window. Real annual increases in defence spending would be curtailed to below 1984 levels. Total public service employment was to be cut by 15,000 by the year 1990-91.

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

Pursuant to rule 9(1), there seems not to be a quorum.

Senator Frith: Read the rule.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, rule 9(1) states:

> A quorum, consisting of fifteen Senators, including the Speaker, shall be required for the Senate to transact business.

Rule 9(2)(a) and (b) states:

> During any sitting of the Senate, when a Senator draws the attention of the Senate to the possible lack of a quorum, the Speaker:
> (a) shall order the bells to call in the Senators to be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes;
> (b) summon the Senators who may be in the adjoining rooms.

Honourable senators, if the Speaker were to send a message to the back rooms, we might have our quorum.

Senator Stewart: Who is leading the government? Perhaps there is no leader.

Senator Frith: Ring the bells.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I see a quorum now, honourable senators. Is it your wish to proceed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Mr. Wilson also proudly announced how programs such as the Canadian Home Insulation Program had been terminated. Spending on economic and regional development was to be cut by 11.1 per cent. This followed a 15.4 per cent cut the previous year. Those cuts to economic and regional development are found at page 31 of his fiscal plan. That is how the promise to inflict prosperity on the regions was being kept.

Mr. Wilson, at page 28 of his fiscal plan, described how, beginning in the 1986-87 fiscal year, the indexation factor for Established Programs Financing was being reduced by two percentage points per year. This fairly innocuous entry in the fiscal plan was, in fact, a time bomb threatening the future of our most important social programs. Established Programs Financing, otherwise known as EPF, is the vehicle which the federal government uses to help the provinces fund post-secondary education and health care. We saw how candidate Mulroney promised — no, not merely promised, but vowed — to increase federal funding for health care to 50 per cent of total costs and beyond. But now, with Mr. Wilson's 1986 budget, the exact opposite was being done.

Here are a few paragraphs from a report of the National Council of Welfare, a federal government agency, entitled "Funding Health and Higher Education: Danger Looming" which was released in the spring of 1991:

> Originally, federal support for health and higher education was to keep pace each year with overall growth in the economy. Since 1986, however, the support has been cut back as a result of a series of unilateral decisions by the federal government aimed at reducing the deficit.
> One of the unavoidable consequences of the cutbacks is that the cash portion of basic federal support has begun to decline. If the current trend continues, every last penny of federal cash for health and higher education under the 1977 fiscal arrangements will disappear within few years.
> The consequences would be particularly severe for medicare. Instead of a national system of public health insurance that is more or less the same everywhere, we could wind up with 12 vastly different provincial and territorial medicare systems. Extra billing by doctors and hospital user fees — practices all but wiped out by the Canada Health Act of 1984 — would almost certainly reappear in some jurisdictions.

When and how did this problem first arise? The answer is on page 17 of the report, which states:

> The first change in the overall EPF fommula came in the 1986 budget as part of the federal government's efforts to reduce the size of the deficit. Ottawa announced unilaterally that EPF entitlements would no longer grow with the economy as a whole, but would be held to economic growth minus two percentage points.

This was the first step down the slippery slope. It was taken by Mr. Wilson in his 1986 budget, with the Prime Minister's full support, even though Mr. Mulroney knew that it broke the solemn promise he made to the people of Nova Scotia and all Canadians about increasing the federal government's support for health care. This first cutback was followed by others in subsequent budgets.

In his 1989 budget, Mr. Wilson announced another one per cent decrease in the growth of EPF transfers, effective January 1, 1990. Increases would now be held to economic growth minus three percentage points. In his 1990 budget, Mr. Wilson announced a complete freeze on per capita EPF transfers for two years. In his 1991 budget, Mr. Wilson announced that the two-year freeze was being extended for another three years. These changes removed billions of dollars in funding to the provinces for health and post-secondary education.

In the March 1993 issue of the C.D. Howe Institute Commentary magazine, an institute referred to approvingly by Senator Kelleher earlier this very day, there appeared an article entitled, "Stealing the Emperor's Clothes: Deficit Offloading and National Standards in Health Care." The authors, Paul Booth and Barbara Johnston, wanted to find out how much the federal government has offloaded or cut back on health care funding. They calculated that for the 1991-92 fiscal year alone, federal government offloading of $1.7 billion "can be attributed specifically to health care." They found that "the federal contribution to provincial social programs is declining as a share of the total cost of these programs."

Remember how candidate Mulroney promised to increase the federal government's share of the health care program. At page 6 of the article we read that the federal government's share of total health care spending "declined from about 21 per cent in fiscal year 1987-88 to about 15 per cent in 1991-92".

Has the federal government been cutting back on health care expenditures only in the same proportion that it is cutting other expenditures? According to Boothe and Johnson, the answer is no.

> Over the four-year period (1989-1992), other federal programs grew by 25.5 per cent while transfers for health grew by only 0.6 per cent. Clearly, federal transfers for health have borne a disproportionate share of the burden of federal deficit reduction.
> ...despite the rhetoric from Ottawa, the health care system has been targeted as one of the main areas to bear the burden of federal deficit reduction.

Health care, the most sacred of sacred trusts for Brian Mulroney, has been hammered the hardest by his team, according to this article.

The Mulroneyites, of course, argue that they transfer tax points as well as cash to the provinces. Boothe and Johnson mince no words in showing the specious nature of this argument.

> The tax points in question are included in the calculation of provincial tax payable on personal income tax returns. They are not included by the federal government in its own expenditure or revenue calculations. Nor have past transfers of tax points between federal and provincial governments been treated as anything other than provincial revenue. The federal government's rhetoric claiming that it is "giving" the provinces this tax revenue anew each year strains credulity — particularly since the actual collection is left to the provinces themselves.

The government normally gives all critics a contemptuous back of the hand, but this is a critical group which it usually lauds. These quotes are contained in a publication of the C.D. Howe Institute, an institution Mulroneyites normally describe with adoring adjectives.

The effect of these cutbacks is a national health care system under severe strain and it all started in 1986 when the members of Mr. Mulroney's team decided to offload their deficit problem onto the provinces by cutting back on health care funding. It is as simple as that.

What about the campaign promises Mr. Mulroney made about the sanctity of our health care system? Remember that Ottawa Citizen article of August 24, 1983.

> A Conservative government would restore the original 50-50 split in medicare costs between the federal and provincial governments if elected to office, says Tory leader Brian Mulroney.

We will soon be getting more promises like these from the Tories.

> In some cases — such as in northern British Columbia, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia — the federal share would likely be even higher, said Mulroney...
> "National health care is not a political issue," he said. "You're entitled to the same kind of quality services irrespective of place of residence.
> That may mean in certain cases a higher percentage than 50 per cent."

That is what he said in 1983. We now know what he did between 1984 and 1993, but what does Mr. Mulroney allege happened?

In his farewell speech to Tory delegates in Ottawa on Friday he declared, "We kept our word". Those four words, outlandish and utterly false, so stunned the Toronto Star that they made the paper's front page headline on Saturday. Those words recall the Mulroneyites' consistent loyalty to the Goebbels technique, that is, if you are going to lie, make it such a whopper, so breathtakingly false, that you hope to stun your audience out of the known truth.

The truth, as everyone knows, is that Mr. Mulroney did not keep his word. He made promises for one purpose, to win elections, and he did win elections, but after each one he dragged behind him a long train of broken promises. These broken promises became so heavy and so obvious to all Canadians, they finally dragged him under and forced him to resign. If he had kept his word, he might now be seeking a third mandate from Canadians, instead of attaching his cement boots to a new leader.

On Sunday, Ms Campbell, in her acceptance speech, thanked him for showing the Conservative Party "how to win." She was so impressed by how he had won in 1984, and how he dealt with all the promises he had made, I suppose, that she ran as a member of his team in 1988. She was taken under his wing and, no doubt, taught the craft of not worrying about any connection between the making of promises and their keeping.

Finding herself mercilessly bolted to her predecessor's policies and record, how will Ms Campbell deal with the problems now facing our health care system? Let us look at the Globe and Mail of April 30 of this year.

> Conservative leadership candidate Kim Campbell says she is ready to preside over a new era in medicare, in which Canadians could be required to pay for medical services they use.
> That fundamental change to the health care system is just one measure of where Ms Campbell believes a future prime minister could be forced to take the country.
> ... Asked whether she would consider user fees for medicare — a challenge to the whole system of universality in Canadian social services — Ms Campbell said she would. "If it was the consensus of working with the provinces on how to rejig our social programs, then yes."

She later said that though she did not believe user fees would help control medicare costs, she thought that perhaps one province could be allowed to impose them as an experiment. "Perhaps it might make sense to let one province experiment with them to demonstrate the fact they don't work". That musing is found in the Gazette of May 4, 1993.

The citizens of which province will be the lucky guinea pigs upon which Ms Campbell will experiment in order to show that user fees do not work? Senator Stewart says, "Surely it would be British Columbia, her own province."

Ms Campbell is an inner member of the Mulroney team that has been withholding from the provinces billions of dollars which should have been going to health care. Yes, she was and is a member of that team. She was in the cabinet and supported the decision of Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Wilson to reduce the federal government's share of health care costs.

There was, of course, more to the team's 1986 budget than expenditure reductions and downloading. There were also more tax increases from the minister who had vowed "we would not raise taxes".

First there was another increase to the federal sales tax effective April 1, 1986. It would increase from 11 to 12 per cent. Remember that, when the Mulroney team came to office, the tax stood at 9 per cent. In 18 months it was increased three times to 12 per cent. During those 18 months Mr. Wilson was not complaining that this tax was "a silent killer of jobs". That was to come later when he was trying to persuade people to swallow the GST.

Remember the "temporary" high income surtax? It was to stay and be joined by a new 3 per cent surtax for everyone. There were, of course, tax increases for tobacco and alcohol, along with a surtax for corporations, but corporations got something that individuals did not get when saddled with their surtax. Corporations would see their basic tax rate reduced from 36 to 33 per cent by 1989.

That was the medicine Mr. Wilson prescribed to deal with the deficit. Would the patient get better as a result? It would, Dr. Wilson assured Canadians. For the 1990-91 fiscal year, the deficit would be slashed to $22 billion, he promised. Is that what happened? No, it isn't. He was not even close. In 1990-91 the deficit was $30.5 billion, $8.5 billion more than he projected.

In an April 29, 1993 press release, we heard how Kim Campbell said:

> I am totally supportive of the government's economic direction first laid out by Michael Wilson and consistently followed since then.

She should look again. The only consistent aspect of Mr. Wilson's policies is that they, like his deficit projections, were consistent failures.

In 1986, Mr. Wilson also said that the government's financial requirements — what it actually had to borrow — would be $11 billion for the 1990-91 fiscal year. When that year came, were they $11 billion? No. $12 billion? No. $15 billion? No. $18 billion? No. $22 billion? No. When that year came, they were actually $23.8 billion, not $11 billion. That is the truth of what Mr. Wilson described as his "realistic" medium term plan. The government had to borrow a little over twice as much as Mr. Wilson had originally predicted. Is that any kind of performance for anyone to support or, as Ms Campbell said, totally support? That is the course to which Mr. Wilson wants Ms Campbell to hold, and that she, apparently, willingly accepts as the course to which to adhere.

In his budget of last month, Mr. Mazankowski claimed that the Mulroney-Campbell team, if given another chance, would get the deficit down to $21 billion by 1995-96. He was speaking of the same deficit that has increased every year since the 1987-88 fiscal year under the same Mulroney team. That gang, including Ms Campbell, unlike the majority of Canadians, thinks that Mr. Mazankowski presented a "realistic" budget. If it is realistic in the same way that Mr. Wilson's 1986 budget was realistic, we are looking at a $40 billion-plus deficit two years from now under any such Tory "same story" team. Let us hope not.

Let us briefly turn to Mr. Wilson's budget of February 18, 1987. That was his third budget. In 1987, the tone was much moderated. Mr. Wilson said the deficit battle was proceeding splendidly, requiring only a few adjustments. These adjustments were more tax increases. He had previously said they would not raise taxes. The air transportation tax was increased. The excise tax on gasoline was increased. The excise tax on cigarettes was increased. The federal sales tax was expanded once again. While expanding the scope of the sales tax, Mr. Wilson complained, at page 13 of his speech, that it needed reform because "...it is a silent killer of jobs."

It was only in this budget that Mr. Wilson reached anything that could remotely be called success. He projected a deficit of $29.3 billion for the 1987-88 fiscal year, and actually brought it in at $28.1 billion. But then it would climb in every subsequent year, reaching $35.5 billion in the 1992-93 fiscal year. The reason for this reversal was the general election of 1988. The deficit, which was no big problem during the 1984 campaign, a priority in 1985, and a virtual crisis in 1986, was put on the backburner in 1987 and declared tamed and caged in 1988 for election purposes.

But Mr. Wilson's 1988 budget, which properly belongs in our examination of the 1988 general election campaign, will have to take a temporary back seat.

Next, we will look at some of the other boasted "achievements" of the Mulroney team's first term.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

IMMIGRATION

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of April 28, 1993:

> THAT he will call the attention of the Senate to some aspects of immigration with particular emphasis on his own personal experience, which today marks the 45th anniversary of his arriving in Toronto on April 28, 1948.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take this opportunity to speak on the subject of immigration. In the course of my remarks, I will make reference to some aspects of Canada's immigration policy. I will recite some statistics relating to immigrants who came to Canada after the Second World War. I will also share with honourable senators some of my own personal experiences as an immigrant in this country.

Canada's expansionist immigration policy of the late 1920s ended abruptly with the onset of the Great Depression. Immigration fell from an average of about 150,000 per year, and 165,000 in 1929, to just over 11,000 in 1935 during the depths of the depression. The outbreak of World War II led to a further decline to levels that were low, even by World War I standards, and had not been experienced since the pre-Confederation period of 1859-1860.

Even before the war had ended, many were seeking a liberalization of immigration policy. These were Canadians who believed immigration was essential to populate and develop the country, or who wished to rescue relatives and compatriots from the economic and political chaos of occupied Europe, and foreign countries anxious to settle the millions of Europeans uprooted by the war, or anxious about future employment once the war was over. In May of 1947, Prime Minister Mackenzie King made a major statement on proposed post-war immigration policy. He announced that, once again, the government would encourage immigration.

The Canadian population was small, and natural increase would only allow it to expand to 14.6 million by 1971. A larger population would help to develop Canadian resources and help reduce dependence on the export of primary products. Responding to fears that immigration would lead to a reduction in the standard of living, King stressed that it was "of the utmost importance to relate immigration to absorptive capacity." Thus, immigration would be adjusted in accordance with the requirements of the economy.

King vigorously defended the right of Canada to be very selective in its choice of immigrants:

> I wish to make it quite clear that Canada is perfectly within her rights in selecting the persons whom we regard as desirable future citizens. It is not a "fundamental human right" of any alien to enter Canada. It is a privilege. It is a matter of domestic policy.

For the first time, Canada was attempting to select immigrants, not only to bring the prairie farmlands under the plough and provide cultural labourers, but also to fuel industrial expansion.

Under the impact of Mackenzie King's new policy and the post-war economic prosperity, immigration to Canada skyrocketed from the historic low of 7,576 in 1942 to 17,719 in 1946, and to 282,162 in 1957. In fact, throughout the years 1946-1973, immigration fell below 100,000 only in 1961, 1962 and 1963. The average was over 137,000. A grand total of 3,842,963 immigrants were welcomed to Canada during those 28 years.

All but some 600,000 of these immigrants came from the countries of Western Europe and from the United States. Over the years, however, the patterns of immigration from the various countries of Western Europe changed. The British Isles was the largest single source of new immigrants for most of these years. Those from the war-devastated countries like Poland, the Netherlands, Italy and West Germany dominated the early post-war years. Overall, however, the 1950s and 1960s were dominated by immigration from Italy. Indeed, for the whole period of 1946 to 1973, total immigration from Italy amounted to almost 464,000, less than the 790,000 who came from England, but more than those who came from any other country including Germany and the United States.

From a low of 20,000 in the years 1946 to 1950, immigration from Italy rose to a height of more than 166,000 between 1951 and 1957 and was more than 100,000 in each of the periods 1958 to 1962 and 1963 to 1967. The economic miracle in the Italy of the late 1960s and early 1970s led to a decline from these unprecedented levels, just as the economic recovery of the Netherlands and West Germany a decade earlier had led to a similar decline in admissions from those countries. Recent statistics show that in the 1980s and 1990s an average of about 800 persons a year come from Italy.

Looking over the statistics for the intended employment of immigrants in the 20 or 25 years following the war, one immediately notices that most aspired to relatively modest positions. They had come to Canada less for their own sake than for the future of their children. Almost one in three expected to find employment in manufacturing, mechanical and construction work; between 10 and 15 per cent looked toward either agriculture or something referred to as service and recreation; and just under 10 per cent intended to become labourers. Others, perhaps about 15 per cent, aspired to clerical work or the commercial and financial sectors of the economy. Only about 15 per cent hoped to work in the professions, and scarcely 1 or 2 per cent aspired to managerial positions.

Specifically, in 1948 there were 3,202 immigrants from Italy. I was one of them.

My father, a Canadian citizen, sponsored me. He had immigrated to Canada at the age of 38, in December of 1927 when I was six months old. I met him again for the first time when I came to Toronto at the age of 21. My father, an accomplished tailor who had his own store, had come to Canada with the intention of spending three or four years here and then returning to Italy. However, the depression thwarted his plans. For many years he did not have regular employment. Economic instability had a devastating effect on him.

However, in the late 1930s, economic conditions improved and he changed his mind and wanted to reunite his family in Canada. His family consisted of my mother, my two sisters and me. But the Second World War broke out, and his plans had to be put on hold. For many years, there was no correspondence. We did not hear from him until the summer of 1945. That year he wrote to us that he was contemplating coming back to Italy. I wrote back to him, asking him to first sponsor me to Canada. I had been dreaming of coming to Canada since my early childhood. I recall staring at the map in school, trying to find where Toronto was located. However immigration from Italy did not open up until early 1948.

While waiting for that moment to happen, I was fortunate to get a job with the British Armed Forces in 1945 at an Air Force base near Bertiolo, the village where I was born, in the region of Friuli in northeast Italy. During the two and a half years that I worked for the British, I undertook an intensive study of the English language. This was my preparatory period before coming to Canada. At some time during that period, my English became good enough that I was often called upon to act as an interpreter between the British officers and the Italian workers. I am profoundly grateful to Flight Officer McCray from Aberdeen, whose patience was responsible for my progress in learning English, even though at first I spoke with a Scottish accent. He taught me what I thought was my first English song, Just a wee deoch and dorris. I did not find out until I came to Canada that it was really a Scottish song of a particular kind, but I still remember the words.

My sisters got married in 1945. My father made one last attempt to reunite his family in Canada in 1950, but my brothers-in-law were not interested in immigrating. As a consequence, my father changed his plans again and was planning to return to Italy at some time in the future. He postponed this plan from one year to the next. He died in 1963 at the age of 74, without ever rejoining his family. My mother, who had been left behind at the age of 33 with three children, was in reality a widow caused by the economic conditions of the time. She died in 1974 at the age of 82 without ever having experienced the togetherness of a reunited family. Theirs was an involuntary separation. I thought I should mention my family background as a demonstration of some of the tragic consequences and hardships of immigration which do not always come to light.

I myself have had an exciting life in Canada. Within five days of my arrival in Toronto, my father got me a job for $20 a week in a clothing manufacturing plant where he had worked during the war, making Army uniforms. Six years later I was promoted to foreman of the cutting department. I had taken two years of designing at night school, which enabled me to become skilful in pattern making. There was no retraining assistance by employers or governments at the time; one had to do it on one's own. I was one of two immigrants in that department of 26 employees, and I was chosen to become the foreman. We often hear people speak of discrimination, but I can honestly say I have not experienced discrimination. At least, if I had been discriminated against, I was not aware of it.

In 1957 I resigned my position as foreman to get into the insurance business as a subagent with the Adriatic Insurance Agency. The insurance industry gave me the opportunity to earn a living and to improve my education at the same time. Prior to entering the insurance business, my education was comparable to Grade 12. I enrolled in a five-year life underwriters training course and received my chartered life underwriter designation in 1968.

I have been very active in both the Italian community and in Canadian society as a whole. Three weeks after arriving in Canada, I joined the Famée Furlane Mutual Benefit Society. I was elected to the executive and served as corresponding secretary. I have been president of the Italian Football Club and president of the Italian-Canadian Recreational Club. I have served on the allocation committee of the United Fund and on the board of directors of the Northwestern General Hospital for over 20 years. I have been a member of the York Lions Club for the past 25 years and of many other community organizations too numerous to be repeated here. Through this involvement in Canadian society, I made many friends and gained valuable experience.

One of the most difficult decisions that confronted me in Canada was whether to become involved in Canadian politics. I was born under the Fascist regime, and I had witnessed the profound changes that took place in Italian society. I had witnessed the fratricidal war and the clashes of political ideologies. I had also experienced the turmoil of the German occupation. As a teenager, I was very disturbed by these experiences. I was afraid to become involved in any political party. It was not until nine years after arriving in this country that I was able to wash the political fear syndrome from my mind.

I joined the Davenport Liberal Association and helped the Honourable Paul Hellyer in 1957 and the Honourable Walter Gordon and Charles Caccia in every election campaign after that. I felt comfortable in the Liberal party. The party slogan, "Unity in diversity" appealed to me greatly. My involvement in the party intensified, and I worked at every level of government, including the leadership contests of our colleague Andy Thompson in 1964 and Pierre Trudeau in 1968.

Working for a political party for me was a matter of public duty, and I never expected anything in return. It came as a great surprise to me when I was asked in the summer of 1963 if I would accept an offer to become the special assistant to the then Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the Honourable Guy Favreau. I accepted right away, even though the position offered less than two-thirds the remuneration I was then eaming in the insurance business. I was a bachelor at the time. I felt exhilarated. I also discovered that I had the distinction of being the first non-British-, non-French-Canadian to occupy such a position. My appointment received national coverage, and it sent a message to the ethnic groups that the Liberal party was serious about involving the minorities in our political process.

I also learned that one cannot make a career out of being a ministerial aid. When there is a cabinet shuffle, the assistants follow the minister in whatever department is assigned to them. Thus, in two and a half years, I had served as special assistant and executive assistant to the minister of Citizenship and Immigration, to the Government House Leader, and to the Postmaster General. It was a great experience. Some people might have thought that I was not able to hold on to a job.

While at Immigration, I had the unexpected and pleasant experience of meeting the immigration officer who had interviewed me in Rome 15 years earlier in March 1948, Mr. J. Robillard. At the time of my appointment he was the head of the placement section and, as such, we worked together on some cases. It was a phenomenal coincidence.

Senator Frith: Did he remember?

Senator Bosa: I am not sure. I showed him my old passport and he recognized the signature.

Senator Frith: You remembered him immediately?

Senator Bosa: Yes. In September 1965 I resigned my government position to work in the fall federal election campaign as chairman of a communications and public relations committee to liaise with the ethnic press and community leaders. After the election, I was offered opportunities with the federal public service, but decided instead to start my own general insurance brokerage in January 1966.

However, the political bug remained in me and in December 1969 I entered the municipal election in Ward 3 of the Borough of York and was elected on my first try. I was the first immigrant to become a member of council. I was elected two more times, but did not seek re-election in 1976. In November of the same year I was appointed chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, a position I held for three years. This position brought me in touch with Canadians from coast to coast. I learned much during that period about the diversity of the people of Canada.

In April 1977 I was summoned to the Senate. While in the Senate, I have had the opportunity to participate in the political process at the highest level and to contribute personally to the solution of some of Canada's difficult problems. I have also had the opportunity to work with some of Canada's outstanding political figures, including Mr. Trudeau and Mr. MacEachen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the rules require that I inform you that the honourable senator's time has expired. Does the honourable gentleman have leave to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bosa: I am glad also to use this occasion to acknowledge with thanks what Mr. Justice W. S. Tarnopolski of the Ontario Court of Appeal said at a public meeting some years ago at the Columbus Centre in Toronto. He attributed authorship of the idea behind section 27 of the Charter of Rights to Mr. Lawrence Decore of Alberta and me, though working independently of one another. Section 27 of the Charter of Rights refers to the policy of multiculturalism.

I celebrated the forty-fifth anniversary of my arrival in Canada last April 28. I could not have pursued a political career without the support of my family and many friends. Politics, as everyone knows, is demanding of one's time. I was absent from home a lot. My wife Teresa, a teacher of modern languages, stayed home to raise our two children. Angela, 23, graduated with a B.A. in Economics and is now working as an underwriter with an insurance company and Mark, 21, is in his last year of a business administration program at Ryerson Polytechnic Institute in Toronto.

When I left Italy to come to Toronto, I was confident that with hard work and perseverance, I would do well in Canada. I confess, honourable senators, that I never thought that Canada would be so good to me.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

UNEMPLOYMENT

A CAUSE OF DEFICITS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 4, 1993:

> THAT he will call the attention of the Senate to unemployment as a cause of deficits, the Tory reaction and the Liberal alternatives.

He said: Honourable senators, I was talking earlier about the threats to this country and other countries by so-called free trade. I was reading an article by William Pfaff and I would like to continue with that article:

> Theory said that industries in the rich countries would increase their productivity through investment and technological innovation. It has proved easier to force wages and benefits down and transfer production to low-wage countries. Thus the search for competitive efficiencies in the advanced countries during the 1980s and early 1990s has in practice turned into a competition in creating unemployment and lowering labour and welfare standards.
> Average wages have fallen in real terms, and social protection has been sharply reduced. This is obvious in the United States where the average wage has collapsed, the average family has been forced to depend on two incomes rather than one to maintain its standard of living, medical insurance for workers has been reduced or removed, and pension funds too often have disappeared in the course of corporate mergers, or have simply been looted by corporate management.

There is much discussion today in the United States as well as Western Europe about whether "the welfare state" destroys jobs. It obviously does so if the job-holder in Europe, which does have a welfare state, and in the United States, which does not, is directly competing with a Third World worker who earns a fraction of the Westerner's wage and has little or no social protection. How can it do otherwise? But the critic of free trade objects to the conclusion often being drawn, which says that the Western worker's income and social protection must be cut or eliminated to save his or her job.

The critic challenges the theoretical foundation of the free trade argument for universal betterment. This argument presumes a laboratory-model world in which industry, labour and investment are totally mobile, and currency values adjust to reflect and to correct competitive differences. None of these conditions actually exist. We currently see Britain the United States and other countries using competitive currency devaluation to rectify trade deficits or obtain trade or investment advantages.

The real-world experience of the Western countries during the last decade and a half does not demonstrate the superiority of the free trade model of global trade. It has demonstrated all too many of its disadvantages.

The matter simply is too complicated for sweeping conclusions and radical policy programs. High tariffs certainly contributed to the Great Depression of the 1930s. But it is equally clear that low tariffs are contributing to the great recession of our times — the competitive austerity and disinflation, and competitive unemployment and "social dumping" of the 1990s. Industrial specialization in the poor countries has too often tended to turn them into low-wage suppliers of goods that they remain too poor to consume, while weakening or destroying their agricultural self-sufficiency and undermining their social stability.

The French-British financier and sometime corporate trader Sir James Goldsmith, whom no one has ever accused of bleeding-heart liberalism, recently published (in the Paris newspaper Le Figaro) a powerful social as well as economic argument against further GATT tariff liberalizations. Writing for a European audience, he said that Europe is essentially self-sufficient in economic terms and added: "Let us recognize, once and for all, that economic growth is valuable only to the extent that it reinforces the stability of our societies and augments the well-being of our people."

He concluded that the effect of unrestrained free trade is "to impoverish and destabilize the industrial world at the same time that it cruelly ravages the Third World." This seems to me a partial argument, but a very powerful one, and I have not yet heard it satisfactorily answered.

The major issue in this year's election is jobs. The Tories will tell you the recession is over. It is over only for rich Tories. It is not over for the 1.6 million unemployed. The recession is not over for hundreds of thousands more who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and who are on welfare.

The multinational corporations of the Tories' rich friends report rising profits as a result of their "lean and mean" restructuring.

Senator Frith: Mostly mean.

Senator Gigantès: What this means to ordinary people is that jobs have been cut to increase profits. Jobs have been shipped to the southern United States, to Mexico and other low-wage locations where there are no laws to protect workers from exploitation.

What have the Tories done to create jobs here in Canada? Why, they have applied what is called "supply-side economics" and the "trickle-down" theory. They have increased the ways in which corporations can avoid paying their fair share of taxes. The Tories call that "tax incentives to invest."

Did the corporations invest their tax savings in Canada? For every dollar they received from you and me as tax incentives, the Tories' rich friends invested 20 cents in Canada, even in good times. The Tories have made thousands and thousands of Canadians much poorer. But the Tories have made the few rich much richer. In fact, Canada holds the dubious distinction of having the largest number of billionaires per capita.

Combine the fruitless Tory give-aways to their rich multinational corporate friends with the Tory policy of high interest rates and an overvalued dollar, which made our exports uncompetitive for several painful years, and you have the Tory economic policy. The result: 435,000 manufacturing jobs lost since 1988, according to Statistics Canada, and soaring unemployment. As President Clinton said, a recovery that does not reduce unemployment is not a recovery.

If we are to get the economy going again, we must create jobs. The Tories have never understood that the biggest cause of the deficit is unemployment. According to Statistics Canada, we paid $19.3 billion in unemployment insurance benefits in 1992. The federal government and the provinces also paid some $15.7 billion in welfare. The total for unemployment insurance and welfare is $35 billion. Then there is the deficit.

Through no fault of their own, those Canadians who want to work but whose jobs were abolished by Tory policies, collect $35 billion in handouts, written in red ink in government books. We are paying them to do nothing. Any business will tell you that paying people to do nothing leads to bankruptcy.

Unemployment has another deadly effect; it kills demand. The unemployed receive, on average, 60 per cent of what they earned when they worked. In other words, if two-thirds of the people who want jobs and cannot find them were working, they would be earning $39 billion a year, for which they would be producing $39 billion-worth of goods and services to make our economy grow — that is, a 5.5 per cent growth, which is great.

However, when they do not work, not only is the deficit increased by what they are paid in unemployment insurance and welfare benefits, but they also have 40 per cent less to spend than if they were working; $16 billion less to spend. A fall in demand of $16 billion. Who would invest when demand is down? To get an idea of how huge an effect $16 billion in demand can have, consider that President Clinton is asking Congress for $16 billion to restart the American economy, which is 10 times larger than ours. Unless we are prepared to practice euthanasia on the unemployed and their families, we must go on paying them to do nothing. Would it not be cheaper and more humane to put them back to work, which is what they want?

The first priority of a Liberal government will be to put people back to work. Our economic goal is simple: To help the private sector create well-paying jobs with a real future. We must also help Canadians adapt, through training, to inevitable change, because they may have to change jobs several times in one lifetime.

There must be a framework within which our job creation efforts will operate. Here is our framework: We will not introduce new programs that do not contribute directly to economic growth and jobs. We will finance new programs by cutting existing fat. We will reduce the deficit to 3 per cent of the gross domestic product, which is the standard the European Community has set for itself. We will reduce the national debt as a percentage of the gross domestic product. Thus, we will be able to have a monetary policy that produces lower interest rates. Our businesses have to pay rates that are double those paid by American businesses. It is difficult to be competitive with such a handicap.

We should stop being macho about zero inflation. Zero inflation means higher interest rates than those our competitors have. We should have the level of inflation the U.S. has. The price we have paid for trying to reach zero inflation is 1.6 million unemployed, plus hundreds of thousands more who have exhausted their unemployment benefits and are on welfare, although they would much rather work.

Our governments, federal and provincial, must collaborate genuinely, rather than trying to score points one against the other. To make its books look better, the Tory government cut billions of transfer payments to the provinces, as Senator Frith was telling us earlier. The provinces, in turn, cut transfers to municipalities. At the end of the day the taxpayer, other than the rich Tory taxpayer, paid the tab.

A Liberal government will renegotiate what share of taxes goes to the provinces and to the federal government. This redistribution should be based on agreed decisions about which level of government can best provide any given service. We will reduce duplication. While we are about it, we should also negotiate with the provinces to bring down barriers to trade among themselves. Our barriers to trade within Canada are much higher than those among European countries. It does not make sense.

A Liberal government will launch a major revamping of our roads, bridges, sewers, water mains, public transit, telecommunications networks and other essential aspects of our infrastructure. Our infrastructure is decades old, is crumbling and badly needs upgrading. With low inflation and high unemployment, this is the ideal time to launch these projects. The provinces and municipalities are willing to pay one-third each. The federal government will pay one-third. The Japanese are doing it. The Europeans are doing it. The Americans are about to do it. We cannot be left behind. Without solid, up-to-date infrastructure, a society cannot be competitive, attract investment or protect the environment.

If we really want to create economic growth, we must get our priorities straight. Nearly $6 billion for helicopters to fight the now-defunct Cold War is not a Liberal priority. Liberal priorities include spending on research, putting money in people, training them. In collaboration with the provinces, a Liberal government will establish an apprenticeship program that meets the best international standards; a Liberal government will offer tax incentives to companies that provide on-the-job training; a Liberal government will create a Canada Youth Service.

Moreover, a Liberal government will do its best to help business bring new products to market; help small and medium-sized businesses acquire new technologies; help these businesses export to markets they have not explored before; collaborate with provincial governments to reduce the regulatory burden on small and medium-size businesses.

We must negotiate determinedly with the Americans to convince them that it is in their interest, as well as in that of free trade as a whole, to have agreed rules of trade. We do not have them now. Any American company can start a tiresome and costly procedure, claiming — often falsely — that a non-American firm is selling products in the U.S. at below cost, which is called dumping; any American firm can claim, often falsely, that a foreign import is subsidized. American firms spend fortunes on lawyers. They could better use this money in improving their production techniques.

Traders, even American traders, need predictability, and known, non-capricious rules. If NAFTA is to go ahead, we shall want, as President Clinton wants, rules on labour standards and environmental protection. We shall want the same protection for our energy resources that Mexico got. The Tories gave our energy resources away in the free trade agreement and got nothing in exchange. We must correct that.

We must stop being so dependent on the American market, as we now are. No other country in the world is as dependent on one customer as we are. A Liberal government will work to find us other markets in the western hemisphere, the Pacific Rim and elsewhere.

Finally, a Liberal government will help the small and medium-size businesses which create most of the jobs to find financing. Even the most promising, those on the leading edge of technology and software development, environmental protection or databases, cannot get money from the banks. Canadian banks do not operate in an unregulated environment. Over the years, they have benefited greatly from the protection of the Bank Act. It is time for them to give something back, to develop concrete ways in which worthwhile small- and medium-size businesses can get access to the capital they need.

A Liberal government will put the interests of Canadians first — the interests of all Canadians, not just the interests of the Tories' multinational corporate friends. The Tories are mired in the thinking which brought about the Great Depression of the 1930s. They fight joblessness by cutting jobs. That is the Tory disease. It is time for the Liberal cure.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

INEQUITY IN TREATMENT OF SENATORS' PUBLIC BILLS AND PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS—INQUIRY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella rose pursuant to notice of June 10, 1993:

THAT he will call the attention of the Senate to an apparent inequity in the procedure followed by the House of Commons in dealing with Senator's public bills after they have been passed by the Senate, and the procedure followed by the Senate in dealing with a private member's bill passed by the House of Commons.

He said: Honourable senators, on June 10, I advised this chamber that I would call the attention of the Senate to an apparent inequity in the procedure followed by the House of Commons in dealing with senators' public bills after they have been passed by the Senate, and the procedure followed by this chamber in dealing with a private member's bill when that bill has been passed by the House of Commons.

This question has been of particular interest to me lately as I follow the journey of Bill S-15, recently passed by the Senate. However, honourable senators, I believe that the issue is larger than that. It seems to me that this issue touches on the ability of the upper chamber and the members of it to bring forward ideas and initiatives which would be given serious consideration and dealt with appropriately in the other place.

There are many senators within this chamber, myself included, who are strong proponents of the idea of Senate renewal. We believe that this chamber can play a creative and proactive role in the affairs of our nation. We believe that renewal of the Senate can occur from within; that through the force of our energy and ideas we can find exciting and contemporary roles for this chamber to undertake, roles which would otherwise be neglected in a unicameral system.

However, to do this, to fully utilize the collective talent and experience in this chamber, we must have a system which encourages proactive input and advice from the upper house and does not confine us simply to reacting to legislation from the other place.

If we are to develop this role of the Senate, to be creative and to seek initiatives, then we must know that our counsel will be heard in the other place. That is why I have initiated this inquiry. Honourable senators, you will know that legislation sent here by the other place receives our prompt attention, albeit, it is often argued, too prompt is the attention.

Even if a private member's bill is adopted by the House of Commons, our rules and proceedings in the Senate give that bill ample time to be debated, discussed, and decided. I believe this is the proper respect for one house of Parliament to show the decisions taken by the other house. The respect and the expediency we show legislation emanating from the House of Commons is not, I fear, reciprocated —

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think we are short of a quorum. Here is another senator now. We perhaps have just made it. Senator Kinsella was good enough to call a quorum when I was speaking and so produced a larger audience for me, so I am quite happy to do the same for him.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: In particular, as he has something to say.

Senator Frith: A charitable response.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: We have a quorum.

Senator Kinsella: The proverbial petard.

The respect and the expediency we show legislation coming from the House of Commons is not reciprocated in the other place.

Allow me to outline the process which senators' public bills must undergo to even be debated, let alone approved, in the other place. Upon hearing the delineation of these rules, honourable senators, I am certain you should come to recognize how it is that only one bill, Bill S-19, Senator Hastings' bill, an act to amend the Penitentiary Act to reinstate the visitation privileges of members of Parliament, has made it from this house all the way to being adopted in the other place in recent times.

Once adopted by this chamber, a senator's public bill must find a member of the other place to sponsor the bill as a private member's public bill. Upon finding a sponsor, the bill appears on the Order Paper under First Reading of Senate Public Bills in Routine Proceedings.

During Routine Proceedings, the Speaker in the House of Commons announces the name of the bill and the member sponsoring it outlines the bill's intent. While no debate is permitted, the bill must already face its first vote. While the courtesy of letting the bill proceed is usually extended, this is not always a fait accompli. In fact, several Senate public bills have been shot down in the other place upon first reading.

If the bill survives that vote, it is placed on a list of 15 and 30 other private members' bills which are all forwarded to the House Management Committee upon the recommendation of its Subcommittee on Private Members' Business. The fact that the bill has already received approval by this house, by the whole house, gives it no assistance whatsoever.

I would like to underscore that point because the bill, although initiated by an individual senator, at that point has been passed by the Senate and the message is sent to the other place. However, it is treated as if it were an ordinary bill, not approved by one house of Parliament, but rather treated in the same manner as a bill initiated by an individual member of Parliament.

It still must go through committee as well as a lottery to see if it is to be deemed a voteable item. If it is one of the lucky few selected, it may go to second reading in the other place, where it can be debated for up to 2 hours and 45 minutes and be voted on. Let me reiterate here, honourable senators. Only one senator's public bill has ever made it this far and only recently. This begs the question: Where do the rest of them go?

Like private members' bills, all of the other bills go on to a long list of unselected items that are debated one at a time. Once the bill finally reaches the top of the list, it is granted a mere hour of debate, whereupon it is voted on, might one think? Not at all. That would be too easy, perhaps. It then goes back to the bottom of the list to wait its turn for another precious hour of debate. This can happen up to three times before a vote is taken. Should that vote carry, is the bill adopted? No. Indeed, honourable senators, that was just the second reading.

From there, the bill goes to a legislative committee which after its deliberation, reports back on the bill and places it — you guessed it — at the bottom of another order of precedence list. When it makes it to the top, it has up to two hours of debate before it is sent back to the bottom of the list to begin its ascent once again. Only upon its second climb to the summit are there means to force a vote.

Honourable senators, I find myself feeling as if I have just painstakingly outlined the magic bullet theory from the movie, JFK. It is little wonder, I have just outlined a process which encompasses five votes, three committees, and over 150 sitting days to complete. Only unanimous consent at every stage can spare our poor Senate bills this gruelling odyssey.

Those honourable senators who understand this process can go on to more complicated concepts like the NFL's quarterback rating system. If there are honourable senators who fear that this process of turning our bills into law is too arduous, fear not, there are always simpler tasks to undertake. Ones which come to mind are working pi to the last decimal place, or uncovering the secret of the Holy Grail.

If I seem less than lighthearted and a little cynical about this process, it is because I am. There is something wrong. It seems to me that the point is very serious. I know how committed senators are to seeing our bi-cameral parliamentary system become more effective. I have reflected on a number of ideas for Senate reform from within. While our role in reactive treatment of legislation is limited by our non-elected status perhaps — at least some would argue that way — there should be no barriers to what we can accomplish proactively. We could form nonpartisan regional caucuses to better meet our mandate in addressing regional issues and grievances. We could save the government the $45 million it spends annually on royal commissions by having our Senate committees examine salient issues and making recommendations. We could give this chamber a vital role to play in safeguarding individual and human rights and the legislation which governs them. By initiating legislation in this chamber, we can bring the collective wisdom and experience of this house to bear creatively and proactively upon issues that might otherwise escape the crowded agenda of the other place.

Honourable senators, if we are to meet the great potential, to assume the greater role and to serve the vital functions Canadians have so often said they want the upper house to serve, we need certain tools at our disposal. One of those tools I would claim, one of the most fundamental of tools, is the ability of each of us to know that if this chamber puts its weight of approval behind an initiative of an individual senator, that initiative will be dealt with expeditiously in the other place. Without this guarantee, there is little reason for this chamber to take on greater responsibility or to contribute to the flow of ideas that makes a democracy such as ours work. Sadly, in my judgment, the current process by which a senator's public bill is dealt with in the other place does not put that tool at our disposal.

I do not know if members of the House of Commons also find the process limiting but, in any event, we need not wait for them to act. We must develop ideas and modifications that will either simplify the current private members' public bills process and make it more accessible, or insist that the other place develop a process to deal with senators' public bills adopted by this house, which is commensurate with the respect and expediency due any piece of legislation adopted by one of the two houses of Parliament.

I hope that other honourable senators will reflect upon this inquiry and join with me in pursuit of the goals of the inquiry. I, for one, feel that the Senate is worth it.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Will the honourable senator accept a question?

Senator Kinsella: Yes.

Senator Stewart: It is now an established practice of government in Canada that the government of the day initiates almost all public bills. It is also a fact that nowadays, almost all the ministers are concentrated in the House of Commons. That may be a mistake, but it seems to be a fact. Third, the House of Commons long ago distinguished between government public bills and private members' public bills and allocated almost all of its time to government public bills.

That creates the situation to which Senator Kinsella refers. A bill comes over from the Senate. Shall we put it with the government bills, the good bills, or this motley collection from private members? The decision has been made to put it in with the motley collection. I know that Senator Kinsella thinks that this is unfair to the Senate. I will state my problem and I hope Senator Kinsella will treat it as a question.

From 1984 to the fall of 1990, the government was in the minority in the Senate. In other words, the Liberal majority could have passed bill after bill and sent them over to the other place. If those bills had been treated as government bills in the other place, it would have disrupted Mr. Mulroney's legislative program — or should I say Mr. Andre's legislative program.

Senator Molgat: That may have been good.

Senator Stewart: That may have been good, but let us look ahead. Alternatively, they were put in with private members' public bills. It seems to me that unless you are going to take control of the time of the House of Commons away from the government, with all the consequences that that entails, you are going to have to devise some third category for these bills that come from the Senate. Has the honourable senator considered that problem? If so, what is his solution to it?

Senator Kinsella: I want to thank the Honourable Senator Stewart for that question. I recognize that the eventuality which you described is one that others have no doubt recognized, particularly those who were here before me when you had a majority in this chamber which was of a different political party than that in the other chamber.

Perhaps the solution is a special category in the time allotted in the other place to deal with Senate bills as passed. My initial reaction is that Senate bills should not go to the second category of Private Members' Public Bills. I would be happy to serve on a committee, if we found some interest from the other place to try to deal with this.

I will never have the political experience of most members of this chamber. However, many would argue that Bill S-15, for example, which we considered and passed, was a bill seeking to protect a group of people whom some might describe as a despised minority. Members of assemblies may not find it popular to be supporting a legislative initiative in terms of the majority of the voters. Perhaps, given the fact that senators are not elected, that is an argument in and by itself for this chamber to seek out those problem areas and to bring them forward. However, if they are brought forward and then just shunted aside in this lottery system, then there is not serious deliberation of the legislative initiative that comes from here.

We can think of other examples where legislative initiatives may, for all kinds of reasons, be best initiated in the Senate. However, as an example, our colleague Senator Hastings told me that it took years to get Bill S-19 through all stages. We should communicate with the other place, or perhaps have our officers communicate with them, and find a solution to this problem.

On motion of Senator Corbin, for Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

MOTION FOR DESIGNATION OF ROOM 256-S AS "ABORIGINAL PEOPLES ROOM"—MATTER REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, pursuant to notice of May 26, 1993, moved:

> THAT the Senate committee room No. 256-S be designated as the "Aboriginal Peoples Room".

He said: Honourable senators, the southern corridor of the Centre Block contains the Commonwealth Room, which incidentally, was formerly the smoking room of the House of Commons. You can still see the cigars, cigarettes and tobacco leaves in the motif in the rug and on the ceiling. I am sorry that my seatmate is not here to hear this. It was then changed and renamed the Commonwealth Room to commemorate the connections with the English-speaking commonwealth. More recently, at this end of the corridor, we have declared again the former smoking room of the Senate to be the Francophonie Room to recognize the Canadian connection with the Francophone community throughout the world.

While we have recognized both the English and French connections, we have not recognized the original people of Canada. I should like to see their contribution recognized in some way. On one occasion I had a tour of the New Zealand Parliament buildings. I was quite impressed to find the Maori room, which was decorated with Maori art and pictures of the Maori leaders. I was surprised at the number of those who had been awarded knighthoods by the monarchy. New Zealanders are very proud of showing and displaying the Maori room. In discussion with Senator Marchand, we decided that it would be appropriate for the aboriginal people of Canada to be recognized in the same way.

We selected room 256-S for obvious reasons. Presently the ceiling has a motif done in western Indian art. In addition to that, if we start in the east corner of the south block, we will find a series of paintings beginning with the canoe, building of the railways through the Rockies, ending up with a scene of Canadian ports. This represents the days when that room was used not only for committees on Indian Affairs, but also Transport. The Banking, Trade and Commerce committee also used this room. That is recognized by a painting representing the four industries at the time of Confederation. Farming, fishing, lumbering and mining are all represented.

It is not the intention of either Senator Marchand or myself that these paintings be disturbed in any way. Perhaps there could be some further Indian art added to that room without disturbing it too much. I will not comment on that because I am not much of a decorator. I would not want to start remodelling or redesigning that room. I am sure that that is not Senator Marchand's intention either. I would ask all honourable senators to give consideration to the motion.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Phillips for bringing forward this idea. I am happy to second the motion. He and I talked about it a few years ago, after he got back from visiting New Zealand and told me that there was a Maori room there and how impressed he was with the room. I am absolutely delighted that he has brought the motion to the floor of the Senate.

He has set out pretty well how he envisages it. I do not know how long he will be here. I know how long I can be here, but I do not know what the future holds. Some of the paintings on the ceiling will undoubtedly peel off. We also talked at some point of visualizing what the room might be. I mentioned to Senator Phillips one of the things that I would like to see done. We have some absolutely tremendous aboriginal artists in the country, which include Inuit, Indian and Metis. There are some blank spots in Room 256-S that need filling in.

We could have some of those places filled in with art by some of the quite famous artists that we have right now. These are just some of the ideas that we talked about. We have the Commonwealth room, and we have the Francophonie room, which is appropriate. However, our people were here just a little before those people ever arrived. While there are some symbols of our people around, there really are not that many. By the entrance to the House of Commons, you will see some famous Mohawk carvings. That is wonderful, but I like the idea of a room that would be here for however long this place will last. It has been around since 1916, and I presume it will be here for quite a long time to come in the future. In the long term, I see it as a tremendous room that would be a tribute to all of the aboriginal peoples in the country, a tribute to their lives in every way. I presume that the artists will get the first tribute there, since the artists among our people have been at the forefront of keeping our traditions and culture alive.

Many of you have been to the Commonwealth room, and if you turn to your right when you get inside the door, you will see a large Inuit soapstone carving. On the left you will see an argillite totem pole that is 75 centimetres tall, and was donated in 1967 by the late Arthur Laing. At the time, it was the largest argillite totem pole that had ever been carved. Arthur Laing was the Minister of Indian Affairs at the time, and he thought the room looked rather barren and needed to be filled up with some more appropriate things. Maybe we could take those appropriate symbols and put them in an Aboriginal Peoples Room, but that is not necessary.

Those are little things that went through my mind after Senator Phillips introduced his motion. I will close by thanking him again. I hope all honourable senators who are of good will might give every consideration to Senator Phillips' motion, which is a very good one, and together we can start something here that we probably should have done a long time ago.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I know it is late. I support Senator Phillips and the seconder of this motion. The only question I have is as to whether we should name the room. I think a room should be designated as the Aboriginal Peoples Room, but I am not sure whether that is the name that should be used. I should like to refer this whole matter to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples. They can decide, and perhaps tell us how they intend to decorate it, and how it will look. They can come up with a plan and report back to the Senate.

I move that this be matter referred to the Standing Senate Committee of Aboriginal Peoples for consideration.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lewis, that this matter be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I would like to speak to the amendment, and at the same time address the substance of the motion.

Honourable senators will notice the paintings on the walls in this particular chamber. There was a special committee, instituted well before I came to this place, which had been mandated to determine whether these paintings should be kept or replaced by other tableaus from World War I, and how we could best represent what this country stands for and its values. I am not sure, but I thought that committee had reported, and there was then some objection, particularly from senators who had served in the various worldwide conflicts. It is not very old history, and in fact is rather recent in terms of the life of the Senate. The decision was to leave matters as they are.

We also know for a fact that the war museum would like to take these paintings down and restore them. As we look at them today, it is obvious that they are dusty. Some of them are cracking. They need some type of restoration.

I have no quarrel at all with people who wish to retain these paintings. Senator Molson was one of those who really fought for that, and now he is gone. However, strictly speaking, this is not a memorial chamber. We have the Memorial Chapel in honour of the men and women who gave their lives in the two major world conflicts in this century, as well as those who served in peacekeeping missions and the Korean Conflict.

This chamber is made up of people who basically speak for, or represent, provinces and regional interests, and there has been this happy evolution, especially in the last two decades, whereby we have ensured that native interests are also properly represented. That is why we have people such as Len Marchand in the Senate; people like Willie Adams, Charlie Watt, and Walter Twinn. The Senate has been known over the years as the house of regional interests, so why not founding peoples' interests as well?

Rather than designate an obscure chamber as the Aboriginal Peoples Room, I would personally prefer to have in this very chamber art with respect to our two native groups, the Inuit and the North American Indians. It seems to me that we do not need all of these paintings. In terms of art, frankly, from what I know of art — and I have kept myself interested over the years — that is awful art. If we want to represent the sacrifice of those who gave up their lives, I think they are entitled to something better than what we have on those walls. I think a lot of people in this country, including experts, will agree with me. It seems to me we could find some —

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that we disregard the clock?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Corbin: I did not realize we were working so hard. It seems to me that we ought to recognize our native people, not by some relatively unknown room, whichever room it is on the Hill. They ought to be recognized formally, artfully and gracefully in this very chamber, because of the vocation, if I may use that term, of the Senate.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, both Senator Marchand and I are quite prepared to accept the amendment — I think actually it was more a suggestion by Senator Bonnell — and to have it referred to the Aboriginal Peoples Committee to let them hold further discussions, probably with aboriginal peoples to find out whether they have any specific wishes. They may have suggestions that will go beyond our ideas and can be incorporated. We would both be quite happy to accept that suggestion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand:

> THAT Senate Committee Room 256-S be designated as the "Aboriginal Peoples Room".

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lewis:

> THAT this matter be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, there is one suggestion I would make, and that is that the referral of this matter to the Aboriginal Peoples Committee not die with the adjoumment of this session, but that it be allowed to continue on in the next session without the re-introduction of a new motion.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I suspect that that presents some problems. In fact the committees, along with any matters before them, die if there is prorogation. However, it can be re-introduced.

Senator Marchand: Even if we pass the motion?

Senator Molgat: It has been referred to the committee and is in the hands of the committee.

Senator Bonnell: Perhaps the chairman of the Aboriginal Peoples Committee could call his meeting quickly, report quickly, and we can give it unanimous consent tomorrow. They should not call too many witnesses. That is what they do with closure.

Senator Corbin: Why bother with having the committee meeting?

Senator Bonnell: Because we want to hear from other people who are not here tonight. We hardly have a quorum.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Honourable Senators: Agreed.

Motion in amendment agreed to and matter referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Aboriginal Peoples.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE ECONOMY

MYTHOLOGY OF CONSERVATIVE ECONOMICS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, there is by now a considerable body of scholarly work examining and debunking the mythology of Conservative economics. The mythology of Conservative economics is based on theoretical constructs, one of which is that markets always clear if you leave things untouched; there is a considerable amount of voluntary unemployment; and, if the state would only keep its cotton-picking hands off, everything would be properly reestablished as the good Lord or the invisible hand has decreed.

I will not have time to expound to you the totality of this considerable body of scholarly research in a three-minute speech, or in what is left of the session, but I will be delighted to let you have popularized versions, written by myself, of what these scholars are saying.

This research proves that the markets do not clear. They have never cleared. It is a myth. It has never happened. However, the Conservative economic mythology says that, in the long run, markets will clear.

We have researchers working for the Library of Parliament who say Conservative economics have never had a chance anywhere at any time in the world. There is a very good reason for that: we live in a democracy and people vote their governments in and out.

Let us look at free trade, a subject which we will be debating today. In the long run, the Mexicans and other poor countries will no doubt raise their standards of living sufficiently to be able to become customers for our products. The long run in a democracy is four years, maybe five. When I ask the economists if it can happen in four or five years, they say, "No, no, of course not. It will be 14 or 15 years."

Well, I am sorry, but that is not the real world. It is the world of certain public servants; it is the world of certain theoretical economists. In the real world, the public is going to say, "I do not like my life disturbed and destroyed on the basis of some economic theory invented by Adam Smith, which does not take into account the way I live, or my mortgage, or my need to put food on the table for my children and winter shoes on their feet."

The real world is not the Conservative economic world.

MONTREAL

INAUGURATION OF SENATOR AZELLUS DENIS PARK

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, tomorrow at 2 p.m., a new and unusual park will be officially opened in Montreal at the corner of Châteaubriand and De Castelnau.

I wanted to draw the attention of honourable senators to this event, because the municipal authorities of Montreal are doing us the honour of naming the park after Senator Azellus Denis. It is the first time in the history of Montreal that city authorities decided to name a park after a senator. I thought that you, honourable senators, who knew him so well, would be interested and perhaps might wish to attend this event.

Of course we all know, but I want this to be on the record, that Azellus Denis was the member of Parliament for Montreal—Saint-Denis from 1935 to 1964. What history may have forgotten is that he succeeded his brother, Dr. Denis, who was a member of Parliament from 1921 to 1935. My father became involved when he went to the convention in 1935. I succeeded Mr. Denis, from 1964 until quite recently.

Senator Denis sat in this house for 28 years. In fact, there are few instances in the history of the British Commonwealth where a parliamentarian was able to sit for 56 years in Parliament, 28 years as a member, and 28 years as a senator. I myself sat almost 29 years as a member. Unfortunately, because of mandatory retirement I will not be able to break the record of my predecessor.

I would like to thank the city authorities of Montreal, and especially André Berthelet, municipal counsellor for Jarry and Chairman of the Municipal Council of Montreal, for accepting this recommendation a year ago, well before I even considered a future Senate appointment.

[English]

I hope that honourable senators will take note of the great honour that the City of Montreal is bestowing indirectly on the Senate of Canada by naming one of the most French-speaking districts of that city after the late Azellus Denis.

The ceremony will be held in Montreal tomorrow at two o'clock. I am sure all honourable senators will be kind enough to allow me to say tomorrow in front of a few hundred guests, "I am honoured to represent all honourable senators."

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

ALBERTA

VICTORY OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY IN PROVINCIAL ELECTION

Hon. Ron Ghitter: Honourable senators, I rise to share with all honourable senators some wonderful news. It is news which I am sure all of you would wish to applaud and to share with me at this moment in Canadian history.

For the last number of months all of us have heard about the difficult circumstances that were about to occur in the province of Alberta. Many were suggesting that the changes about to occur in that wonderful province would wreak all kinds of havoc, difficulties and chagrin among Canadians and Albertans.

I am happy now to share with all honourable senators the headline of the Calgary Herald of this morning which states: "Klein's Miracle". How wonderful it is, honourable senators.

Senator Ghitter: Living in Alberta for the last number of months has been interesting. Last October, when the polls were at 17 per cent there were those who said that there was no way Tory fortunes would rise. The Liberals were saying that this was their year, their time to take over the governance of the fair province of Alberta.

Let me say today that that has not occurred. The Conservatives have 51 seats — a solid majority. The only advances the Grits made in that election were as a result of disenfranchised socialists who determined they would vote for the Grits, which, perhaps, is appropriate.

This is but a portent of what will happen federally in the province of Alberta when there is a fresh individual, with a fresh face and fresh ideas about matters that intrigue and attract the population. I am sure all honourable senators will agree that the very same thing will happen when the federal election is called and the new face of Kim Campbell comes forward in Alberta to receive the support of Albertans.

Senator Ghitter: Is my time up, or would honourable senators like to hear more?

Some Hon. Senators: More, more!

Senator Ghitter: In conclusion, I am sure I have the permission of this honourable chamber to carry forward the congratulations of all honourable senators to Premier Klein of Alberta on his wonderful victory in the hopes that he will carry on for many years to come.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, there is some vital background information that the Honourable Senator Ghitter forgot to mention.

First, the Tory vote went down and the Liberal vote went up by almost 400 per cent, when measured by MLAs. It is extremely important to note that there is no Conservative Party left in Alberta; it is now the Ralph Party. Everywhere one went, there were signs that said "Join Ralph's Team".

The law requires that there be a sponsor named on the signs. However, they put the sponsor's name in the smallest print possible. In fact, it could not be read on road signs without getting out of the car. The signs said only, "Ralph's Team".

The other thing that must be remembered in this context is that last December, when Ralph Klein became the leader of the then sitting government party, the establishment, which I think includes Senator Ghitter, of the so-called Conservative Party in Alberta, did everything it could to defeat Ralph Klein. The great patriarch of the Conservative Party, Peter Lougheed, his family and his associates, even tried to beat Ralph in his own riding, and they did. They actually got more votes out of Ralph Klein's own riding to try to beat him at the leadership convention in December than he got himself. If you think that Ralph does not know that, you are kidding yourselves.

The Tory party is dead in Alberta. Even the Tories do not use the name any more. That is just a little background information to help you understand things better.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I hope this will not be regarded as a foreign intervention because I am from British Columbia.

Senator Ghitter almost sprained his ankle attempting to jump on Ralph's bandwagon. I want him to know that there is competent medical advice and assistance available if he requires it.

From the British Columbia perspective, we wish Alberta every success under Ralph. The miracle of the campaign was that he was able to go through the entire campaign without once mentioning the Conservative Party, yet today the victory is credited solely to the Conservative Party of Alberta. Ralph's victory and his relationship with the PC Party was one of the best kept secrets in Canadian political history.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, what response does the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate have to the question I put yesterday concerning the decision of the binational panel on swine.

• (1350)

Yesterday, the Leader of the Government made a commitment with regard to that matter. This is important because of the bill now before the house to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I assume that the matter is being looked into, Senator Stewart, and I hope to have a reply tomorrow.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, we are at the third reading stage of the NAFTA bill, the final stage. This provides a final opportunity to express our concerns about the enactment of this particular legislation, not only because of the content of the legislation itself but also because of the circumstances in which it is being legislated. With a major part of the negotiations still under way, the Canadian Parliament is being asked to pronounce finally on this legislation at a time when the United States government has yet to disclose the implementing legislation that will put forward the American version of what this agreement means. We will deal with those matters in more detail as the debate advances.

In my second reading speech, honourable senators, I mentioned the distressing fact that, once again, Parliament is being asked to pass its judgment upon the free trade agreement with the United States. Very few people in the country are satisfied that the results of the free trade agreement with the United States have been beneficial. There is disagreement, of course, but there is great concern generally in the country that the FTA has not produced the benefits that were claimed it would produce.

Despite that reality, we are being asked once again to reenact the FTA, because NAFTA itself reenacts the free trade agreement with the United States. If NAFTA passes and becomes law, the free trade agreement is suspended. It is held in existence but not in operation, because the NAFTA itself, with all its provisions, supersedes the free trade agreement.

Honourable senators, there is a real problem for Canada in entering into this agreement, and in framing an agreement that will confer equivalent benefits on all partners within the agreement, particularly when one takes into account that one partner to the agreement is a developing country with a rapidly growing population, a rapidly growing labour force, a high unemployment rate and a work force such that, in Mexico, wage levels are not reflected in their productivity. All these problems have in a sense been swept away and no provision has been made in the agreement for dealing with the particular circumstances of entering into an agreement not only with the United States but also with Mexico, which represents a totally different set of problems.

Mexico is the demandeur. Mexico asked for this agreement with clearly articulated objectives. It knows what it wants. It knows how it intends to reach its objectives. The United States responded to the Mexican overtures, maybe for political reasons, maybe for geopolitical reasons, and maybe for some economic reasons, probably the most important of which is the desire of the United States government to have consecrated in the NAFTA the market reforms which took place in Mexico and which could be changed by a new government, if they were not, as it were, solidified and given the support of international law through NAFTA.

Canada's objectives were never clearly formulated until the last minute, because we asked for permission to get aboard the train as it was ready to leave the station. We asked to come aboard because we were afraid either that the train would go in directions that might be harmful to Canada or that it might bring the passengers some benefits which Canada would miss. That is the situation.

We never received in the committee any convincing evidence that the NAFTA would confer real and substantial benefits on Canada. It is hoped that benefits will accrue. It is hoped that investment will occur. It is hoped that a lot of things will happen, and any assessments that have been provided have been based upon macroeconomic models filled with assumptions that seldom operate in the real world.

When the FTA was approved in 1988, Senator Murray was very optimistic. In fact, upon the passage of the FTA legislation in December 1988, he assured us that we were all entering "...a new era for Canada in which we build security and prosperity". If ever a statement was incorrect, that one was incorrect. He too, presumably, was basing his prognostications upon studies, documents and models that had been supplied by the Department of Finance and a host of private sector organizations that all came together to tell the Canadian people that prosperity and security were in hand once the FTA became a reality. The same has to be said about the prognostications concerning NAFTA itself.

Today, honourable senators, Parliament is being asked to pass this bill, to finish up NAFTA, and to adjourn as quickly as possible. The bill swept through the House of Commons. It is now proceeding through the Senate and the expectation is that it will become law in a very short time. It will receive Royal Assent, but it will not be proclaimed. The government will not proclaim NAFTA until some distant time in the future, because it knows that this is a leap into the unknown.

The President of the United States just said last week, I believe, that at present the negotiations were "at an impasse".

> We can't pass it in the House of Representatives today, but I think we'll be able to pass it when the time comes.

[Senator MacEachen]

I wonder when that time will be, because the Democratic House Leader, Richard Gephardt, left the question in a situation that is very disturbing. He said:

> All I'm saying is, let's not set an arbitrary time frame and say we've got to bring out side agreements whether they're good enough or not. In my view, they are the key to whether or not this whole transaction can be successfully completed, and if they aren't done, then we ought to just wait until they can be done. We ought to extend the time.
> The European Community took 13 years, and they still haven't fully integrated three developing countries into their midst. So why do we think we have to do it all at once, in six months, in one year and be done with it? I don't see why that has to be.

That is the leader of the Democrats in the House of Representatives saying, in effect, "Why the rush, because these side agreements are of deep importance to us and we ought not to rush them." In Canada we are rushing. We do not know what these side agreements really will contain.

It was interesting last week, when we had extremely valuable testimony from the chief negotiator for Canada, Mr. John Weekes, who told us, fresh as he was from the negotiations, what the state of play was.

Let us look for a moment at the labour side agreement. The President of the United States, supported by the progressive elements in the United States, is seeking through the side agreements some answer on the labour front to the concern that American workers and American plants will be harassed by cheap labour in Mexico. It was expected that through this agreement they might be able to do something about that.

Where is the state of play? Presumably, all that is intended now is that each country will comply with its own laws — labour standards, wages, hours of work, and safety. They will comply with their own laws. If they do not, they might be able to complain to somebody in a very uncertain system. There is no provision, and none is expected, that would prevent a country from changing its laws, if the country were found to be in noncompliance with the law. You could legislate downward and the side agreement would not cover that. Then Canada or the United States would complain about each other or about Mexico and they would come before a tribunal, a bureaucracy; but what would the sanction be?

What is the sanction? Canada is against trade sanctions, and rightly so, I think. Is there to be any sanction? Well, not really. They will simply tell each other, "You have misbehaved and you had better pull up your socks."

We are going through all this elaborate bureaucratic structure, the establishment of trinational commissions to hold surveillance over developments in each country with no possibility of exerting a real impact upon what is happening in each country.

Why do all of this, I ask myself, when the international labour organization has been working for many years in this field, attempting to elevate standards throughout the world? After listening to the testimony, my conclusion was that if this is all that is to come out of this negotiation, it will be very difficult for the President of the United States to convince his congressmen, his senators or his constituency that he has received anything valuable for the workers through the negotiation. That is my conclusion. I may be quite wrong, but certainly something substantial must emerge, because the American administration has stated that the passage of NAFTA as a whole is conditional upon the successful negotiation of side agreements on labour and the environment.

Why are we rushing this through? Is it to ensure that this bill is made law before Prime Minister Mulroney leaves office? What an unfortunate time to have reached the concluding phases of this bill, with the transition of office from one Prime Minister to another, and when the Minister for International Trade has decided that he will not be a continuing member of the Government of Canada. With all of these circumstances, Parliament is asked to proceed and to take, once more, a leap in the dark, a leap of faith.

I wish to conclude this point, honourable senators, by referring to the testimony which was given to the committee by Mr. Gordon Ritchie, who was deputy negotiator of the free trade agreement. I think we all have heard him from time to time. He is a frank, well-informed and straight-from-the-shoulder witness. We heard him when he was advocating the free trade agreement before the Senate. He appeared before our committee to testify on NAFTA, and when asked about the timing, he replied as follows:

> I am concerned, as someone who has worked in the trade policy area, about any suggestion that we legislate before the Americans have even put their legislation on the table...

Well, they have not put their legislation on the table.

> ...I can tell you without breaching confidence that the draft of the FTA legislation that the Americans were proposing to table was highly offensive, and the leverage we had in order to ensure that that legislation was cleaned up to a large degree was the leverage that we had not yet tabled, let alone approved, our legislation.

With respect to the NAFTA, therefore, here in Canada we have not only disclosed our legislation, which the Americans have not yet done, but we are about to pass it. The Americans will take their time, and we have not yet seen what will be the result of the negotiation that is now taking place between the United States administration and the Congress.

Mr. Ritchie went on to say that when the U.S. legislation came out on the free trade agreement, there were things in it that were perverse, and if Canada had acted, our leverage would have been diminished greatly. We had not acted, and we therefore had an option either to change our legislation to reduce benefits to the United States, or to bring them into line. That is exactly what happened. He said, "Having tabled it, you have the flexibility to amend it," if you have not passed the NAFTA legislation.

So, honourable senators, here we are, giving away all our cards, and the American administration is negotiating between itself and the Congress. I do not know the system well, but I understand that the bill will come out of a process in which elected people and the administration will work out the implementing legislation, then it will be disclosed and enacted. However, we have gone ahead of them all and said, there we are, we are good fellows, we trust everybody, and we consign our destiny to the goodwill of the United States administration and the Congress.

We have no reason, honourable senators, to be so sanguine that the American government or the American Congress will look after our interests. They look after their own interests, and that was never clearer than in the history of negotiations on trade rules. We all know that the trade rules to which I am referring are the disciplines on, or the practices concerning, the use of government subsidies, unfair pricing, antidumping and countervailing duties. Those are the trade rules.

Honourable senators may remember, with refreshed recollection, the debate prior to the enactment of the free trade legislation. It was the firm resolve of the Canadian government, repeated so frequently, that a principal objective of the free trade negotiation was to change American trade rules. There had to be a new regime. I would like to quote just a few excerpts.

In outlining the objectives for the negotiations with the United States in 1987, the Prime Minister said that he wanted a "comprehensive agreement addressing non-tariff barriers." That is what we are talking about. He went on to say:

> Let me leave no doubt that first, a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the Agreement.

He was quoted in the New York Times the following year saying:

> The U.S. trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada, period.

Our colleague Senator Carney, then Minister for International Trade, said:

> ...non-tariff barriers are on the table.

If they were, they were swept off by the Americans, as we shall see.

Mr. Crosbie, when speaking to the St. John's Board of Trade in Newfoundland, stated:

> Unless we get out from under the threat of...U.S. trade remedy laws — and that is what we are talking about,

> — and unless there is an effective dispute resolution mechanism to bind the Americans to their commitments, a free trade agreement with the U.S. would not be a good deal for Canada.

We did not get out from under the threat of U.S. trade remedy laws. They are still being applied with vigour and with frequency to Canada. The fact of the matter is that, on this point in the FTA negotiations, we got nowhere. Mr. Ritchie has described the process by which the Americans flatly refused to engage in any serious dialogue on this problem. He said they attempted to address both these issues, the rules themselves and the application of the rules, in the original FTA negotiations. They —

> ...did indeed attempt to establish a new and...fairer set of trade rules and...failed. It was not possible...The Americans were unwilling to engage in a serious discussion of fair trade rules that would have applied equally to both sides. They were prepared to see tough rules applied to Canada, but not to themselves.

We failed, and the Americans had their way.

In order to provide us with some substance, it was agreed that there would be an obligation under the free trade agreement that, over the next five years, there would be an intensive negotiation between Canada and the United States on trade rules. If they failed in the first five, it would be extended to seven. There were working parties set up to handle this important negotiation, which, in the words of the Prime Minister, was an indispensable part of their search for an agreement with the United States.

We have that picture, and then NAFTA comes along. Lo and behold, what did the Government of Canada do in NAFTA? It withdrew further, and the obligation to negotiate trade rules was dropped. The working parties were dropped. We were back at square one. This essential part of the original agreement now disappears. What is the official explanation? Well, we dropped it in exchange for the panels, the dispute settlement mechanism, and we expect that somehow, through GATT, we will be able to handle the trade rules.

Mr. Ritchie told us in the evidence on NAFTA that the agenda of the Americans was addressed, but that the important agenda of Canada with respect to this particular sector of the agreement was not addressed. He asked why we say we have permanency in the panel system. It is as permanent as the six-month termination notice of the FTA itself. That is what he said. That is how much importance he attaches to the trade-off, a termination of six months. It can be brought to an end.

The objective initially was to reach agreement on new trade rules. That failed. The second objective was to see that the trade rules were applied fairly and properly, and that was to be done through the panel system.

For those of you who want to understand better how tough the world of negotiation is with the United States, I refer you to Mr. Ritchie's testimony before the committee. He argued very strenuously that, while the panel system has worked and the panels have done a good job, the Americans are doing their utmost to undermine the operation of the panels. The panels themselves, in his words, time and time again, have found, for example, that certain stabilization programs in Canada were not in violation of the FTA. Time and time again, the Americans go back with a further complaint and, if possible, they go to the extraordinary challenge that is provided under the agreement.

The Americans have fought tooth and nail against the prospect that the findings of these panels will have precedential value, that they will have some judicial status — namely, if a panel finds on this matter, that decision has a bearing on the next case and the next. The Americans resist that. They resist it greatly because they do not want any system of precedential value to come into effect. They go back time and time again because they will not accept the binding, precedent-setting character of panel decisions.

Mr. Ritchie says that this matter was not addressed in the NAFTA negotiations. It was a matter of deep concern to Canada, but it was not addressed. We backed off. What is more, in the NAFTA itself, they have attempted to elevate the role of lawyers and judges on these panels. Let me say that when I use these professional terms, I am not launching a hidden attack on that noble profession. The fact of the matter is that, in the initial negotiations, the Americans insisted that lawyers have a prominent, if not controlling, role on those panels. The Canadians did not want it, but the Americans had their way. Why? Because they hoped particularly American members of the bar would take a strictly legalistic view of matters and look only at American trade law, not at the broader economic context that ought to determine a decision. They succeeded in that, and they are back a second time with NAFTA, getting a better role for judges. Mr. Ritchie argued that this is a clear-cut American objective that does not bode well for the operation of the NAFTA agreement.

Honourable senators, I draw these matters to your attention because it was said by those who appeared before the committee that we have everything in NAFTA that we got in the FTA and more. It is not true. It is simply not true. Mr. Ritchie said NAFTA is a step backward. It is a step backward because of the evolution of events in the field of trade rules.

I am concerned that we set ourselves an objective in the FTA, the negotiation of trade rules with working parties over a period of time, and we abandoned that for the making permanent of a panel system that can be terminated in six months, under the termination notice of the agreement.

The Americans have, as Mr. Ritchie testified, done everything to undermine the operation of the panels. They are attempting to insert a long hand into the internal operation of the panels by selecting those for the panels who are more likely to take a view that will serve more directly the application of American trade law.

Senator Perrault: Shame.

Senator MacEachen: I will mention something else because it will give you a flavour of what is at stake here.

• (1430)

Senator Atkins asked a question. He said:

> I am getting the sense from you that the Americans are now sorry they signed the FTA. That is the impression I get from many of the comments I have heard you make today, as well as from previous testimony given before this committee. Am I getting the wrong impression from what you are saying?

Mr. Ritchie responded:

> I do not think, sir, that the Americans are unhappy they signed the FTA. I think, as is not unnatural, when they look at it with a fairly protectionist view of their national interest, they find there are some areas they do not like, and they would like to claw back.

I think the clawing back is occurring in the area of the trade rules. He went on to say:

> They are assiduously and astutely seeking to claw those back.

Senator Atkins: Through the NAFTA agreement?

Mr. Ritchie: Through NAFTA and the way they have been operating under the existing FTA.

For the reasons stated, I find this a great step backward, as Mr. Ritchie has said, through what has happened in NAFTA, and I intend to move an amendment which, if adopted, would have the effect of at least ensuring that the step backward would not take place.

I move:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and adding the following words:
> "this House declines to approve and implement the North American Free Trade Agreement because inter alia the Agreement does not provide for the establishment of a working group to develop common rules and disciplines concerning the use of government subsidies, unfair pricing, antidumping and countervailing duties within time limits comparable to those prescribed in Article 1906 of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that Bill C-115 be read the third time.

It is moved in amendment by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bonnell:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and adding the following words:
> "this House declines to approve and implement the North American Free Trade Agreement because inter alia the Agreement does not provide for the establishment of a working group to develop common rules and disciplines concerning the use of government subsidies, unfair pricing, antidumping and countervailing duties within time limits comparable to those prescribed in Article 1906 of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America."

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate to reflect on this motion.

On motion of Senator Lynch-Staunton, debate adjourned.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Erminie Cohen moved the second reading of Bill C-126, to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act.

She said: Honourable senators, I was sworn in last Tuesday, just a week ago. It is truly amazing just how fast one can ascend from being a rookie to being in the big leagues. I wish to take this opportunity to thank each and every one of you for the warm reception I received upon my appointment, and for your very generous comments.

I wish to tell you that I consider my appointment to the Senate an honour. I treat it with great pride. I make a commitment to work hard for the Senate and to work with each and every one of you. Thank you once again.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Cohen: Honourable senators, it gives me great pleasure to speak on Bill C-126. The theme of this legislation is the protection of society. Its purpose is to improve the response under the Criminal Code to family violence, child abuse and violence against women. The bill has three goals. I will describe the various parts of the bill in relation to these goals.

The first goal is to improve protection in the area of family violence and violence against women. The bill makes three proposals: a new anti-stalking offence called criminal harassment; an amendment to the section giving a defence to a charge of parental child abduction; and amendments to bail provisions.

The new anti-stalking offence called criminal harassment will be less complicated and should be simpler to enforce and easier to use in protecting people from stalkers than the existing sections of the Criminal Code. Both men and women can be victims of stalking. However, it is most often women who are at risk. This proposed legislation sends a clear message to Canadians and members of the criminal justice system that the behaviour of men who stalk women is criminal, and will not be tolerated. The maximum penalty under the proposed section will be five years imprisonment. Also provided in this clause is a provision whereby the offender need not have overtly threatened the victim to have committed an offence.

This new criminal harassment clause would make it an offence for anyone with intent to harass to repeatedly follow or repeatedly communicate with another person or anyone known to them, or to watch where another person or anyone known to them lives or works, or to engage in threatening conduct directed at another person or any member of his or her family, if the behaviour causes that person reasonably to fear for his or her safety.

The definition is broad enough to capture behaviour that under different circumstances would be considered lawful. For example, parking in the street is legal, but if a man parks outside his ex-wife's home, watching her night after night, causing her to fear for her safety, then there are grounds for a charge of criminal harassment under this new legislation.

In my opinion, honourable senators, the proposed criminal harassment offence will capture the sort of behaviour that we as a society want to prevent without interfering unjustifiably with anyone's rights or freedoms as guaranteed under the Charter. While people have the right to move about freely and to communicate freely, no one has the right to deliberately harass another person in a way that causes the other person reasonably to fear for his or her safety. The bill makes a clear statement that this is a crime.

Regarding the other provisions in the bill that address family violence, the Criminal Code contains sections that prohibit the abduction of a child by a parent. The change, under section 285, gives people a defence to a charge of parental child abduction if the taking of the child was necessary to protect the child from danger of imminent harm.

The bill would amend section 285 so that the defence would also apply if the parent was escaping from danger of immediate harm to herself, not just danger to the child. This means that a battered woman who decides to escape the violence need not worry that she will be charged with parental child abduction. A battered woman ought not to have to choose between staying in the home or escaping the home and leaving her child behind for fear of being charged with abduction.

In relation to bail, it has been pointed out that, surprisingly, it is often the victim and her children, rather than the offender, who must leave the family home. I think most senators will agree with me that that is unacceptable.

Another concern addressed in this bill is that men who have been released on bail in a family violence situation often return to the family residence to harass, intimidate and even assault their wives. Again, I think most senators will agree with me that there is no reason why that situation should be allowed to continue.

The bill contains proposals that would correct these problems by amending the bail sections in the Criminal Code. Currently, section 515 does not specifically state that bail conditions include a clause vis-à-vis the accused communicating with the victim. The bill proposes to add this to section 515.

The bill allows a judge setting bail in a case involving physical violence or criminal harassment to order the accused not only to remain in a certain place, but also not to go near a certain place, such as the family home. The judge can also order that the accused not communicate with any witness, including the victim.

The bill proposes one more amendment to the bail provisions, and this was added based on the testimony of certain witnesses before the legislative committee in the other place. It is proposed to allow the judge to order, as a bail condition, that a person charged with criminal harassment be prohibited from possessing a firearm.

I believe these amendments to the bail provisions of the Criminal Code will improve our ability as a society to deal with the problems of family violence and violence against women in particular.

The second goal of Bill C-126 is to protect children suffering from various types of abuse. Sadly, we have heard a lot in recent months about how easy it is for convicted sex offenders to abuse children again once they have been released from prison.

One of the most repugnant crimes we know is sexual abuse of children. Interested groups and individuals have called for a change in the law in order to help prevent convicted sex offenders, after their release, from gaining easy access to children. The bill contains a proposal that would do that.

The proposed new section of the Criminal Code would authorize a court to ban convicted sex offenders from attending daycare centres, school yards, playgrounds, community centres, public parks or bathing areas, and from being a volunteer or an employee in a position of trust or authority over children.

I am convinced that this prohibition will reduce the likelihood of convicted sex offenders victimizing other children after their release from prison.

Also, as a part of this goal of protecting children, the bill proposes a new peace bond section in the Criminal Code that would allow a person to obtain a restraining order if he or she fears that another person will commit a sexual offence against a child.

The bill would also protect children from another danger by prohibiting people from taking a child from Canada to another country with the intention of committing an act of violence or sexual abuse against the child.

Recently, an Ontario Court of Appeal decision revealed a gap in our ability to protect children from parental abduction. The bill proposes to close that gap by amending the parental child abduction sections to state that an accused may be convicted when his or her intention is to deprive the other parent of custody of the child.

The third goal of Bill C-126 is to reduce the trauma suffered by children who have been the victims of sexual abuse and who must testify about this in court. As a result of a Supreme Court of Canada decision, in every case involving a child witness the judge must warn the jury about the danger of accepting the evidence of a child, even where the child has testified under oath. This view of children's abilities to testify is no longer supported by research. To correct this, the bill proposes to abrogate this rule. The result would be the removal of the presumption against the evidence given by children. The judge or jury would evaluate and determine the weight of a child's evidence on an assessment of the individual child's evidence, in the same way as they would an adult's.

Research has shown that child witnesses are much better able to testify about the abuse they have suffered if they are accompanied by a person who will provide emotional support. The bill would allow this by specifically enabling a judge to permit a support person of the child's choice to be present and close to the witness while the witness is testifying, even if the public has been excluded.

Finally, it is true that, generally speaking, people have the right to represent themselves in court. However, in child sexual abuse cases this may mean that the accused revictimizes the child by aggressively cross-examining the child about what has happened. This experience can be so upsetting for the child victim that she or he may be unable to testify.

I believe that in some cases allowing the accused to personally cross-examine the child victim of sexual abuse may amount to a court-sanctioned continuation of that same abuse. The bill would allow a judge to appoint counsel for the accused for the sole purpose of conducting this cross-examination. This solves the problem in a manner that is fair to all persons involved.

It is my sincere belief, honourable senators, that Bill C-126 proposes amendments that are both important and valuable as a response to the urgent problems of child abuse, family violence and violence against women. I believe that the proposals in this bill will offer greater protection from these abuses to those who most often suffer them and who are the more vulnerable members of our society.

On motion of Senator Stanbury, debate adjourned.

LAND TITLES REPEAL BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Eric Arthur Berntson moved the second reading of Bill C-103, to provide for the repeal of the Land Titles Act and to amend other Acts in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity to address Bill C-103. This bill continues the process of devolution launched by this government in 1984. It will effectively repeal the Land Titles Act and allow for amendments to related legislation that will provide the Yukon and the Northwest Territories with greater control and influence over local affairs.

The objective of the bill is to transfer legislative responsibility for land titles registration in the territories to the territorial governments. Both have clearly demonstrated their willingness and ability to accept this new responsibility. The territories formally requested this transfer in 1986. I am pleased that they will soon see their request granted.

In anticipation of honourable senators passing Bill C-103, both territorial governments have passed legislation, which will be proclaimed as soon as the Land Titles Act is repealed. This legislation will successfully replace the outgoing federal act. There is no question that the territories can assume this responsibility. Both governments currently register land titles within the boundaries of their respective territories. The Northwest Territories has administered the Land Titles Act since 1967; the Yukon has administered it since 1975.

Briefly, I will give my honourable colleagues examples of how the territorial governments have demonstrated their ability to manage affairs similar to those afforded them under Bill C-103. Since 1987, the governments of the North have been guided by the northern political and economic framework. One principle of this framework is devolution — the orderly transfer of programs and responsibilities of a provincial nature to the territorial governments, based on their willingness to accept and administer them.

Repeal of the Land Titles Act and transfer of responsibility for registration of land titles will extend this type of provincial function to the territories. Clearly, this function should be in their hands. In fact, the federal and territorial governments have been working towards just this sort of devolution for close to two decades. Your support of Bill C-103 will bring us, as governing bodies and as a nation, closer to our long-established goals. The transfer of this responsibility is not simply a rubber-stamping exercise. The issue on the table is genuine and the responsibility is, without question, desired by the territorial governments.

Honourable colleagues, I should like briefly to touch upon the purpose of the land titles registration system so that you can fully appreciate the significance of repealing the Land Titles Act. This administrative system is required to record interests in real property, ensuring certainty of ownership, protecting both the owners and others wishing to deal with the land or other real property registered in the system. Currently, all provinces maintain land title systems for those lands within their boundaries. Interestingly enough, in these jurisdictions, the federal government's only role is to ensure that all sales or purchases of federal Crown land are registered in the system.

In the North, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has retained, until now, this provincial responsibility for the actual management of the land titles registration system for both territories. The Land Titles Act, a federal statute which applies to both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, provides the authority for this process.

Repeal of this Land Titles Act will not give the authority to the territories for management of federal Crown lands; this authority remains federal, as set forth in the Territorial Lands Act. The federal statute for which I am requesting your support deals essentially with the transferring of the responsibility for legal and administrative systems under which all territorial landowners may register their land titles.

Although the federal government is currently responsible for registering land titles in the territories, in practice this function has been carried out by territorial governments for some time. In fact, as I have already noted, the government of the Northwest Territories has been administering the day-to-day operations of the Land Titles Office in Yellowknife since 1967. The Yukon territorial government has administered the Whitehorse Land Titles Office since 1975.

Honourable colleagues, in many respects, employees of the territorial governments have administered the Land Titles Act for many years. What Bill C-103 will accomplish is the completion of a transfer process initiated more than two decades ago. This transfer allows the territorial governments to implement their own legislation, bringing their land titles systems into the 1990s.

The transfer of legislative responsibility will enable the territorial governments to enact their own modern land titles legislation according to their own needs and timetables. The fact that both territorial governments have legislation prepared to replace the Land Titles Act clearly indicates their willingness and ability to shoulder this new responsibility. When repeal of this act is complete, the legislation they have prepared will be proclaimed. The authority for this exists in the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act, both of which empower their territorial governments to make ordinances for property rights and other local matters.

A number of provisions in Bill C-103 ensure that private property owners and the federal government will not forfeit rights under this new land titles regime. An example of provisions protecting these rights is the stipulation that the Land Titles Act must be replaced by legislation which will continue the Torrens system of land registration. This well-established system ensures that all reported land transactions are examined carefully and approved before being recorded against the title. This guarantees the accuracy of title as recorded on a certificate of title or deed.

Another provision of Bill C-103 restricts filing of caveats against lands for which no certificate of title has been issued. This protective measure is important to the Crown because the federal government is the major landowner in the territories. The effect of caveats filed against unpatented Crown lands could stall and complicate this government's determination to settle comprehensive land claims in the territories.

Honourable senators, I want to be perfectly clear on this point: Settlement of aboriginal land claims in the territories will not be affected by this transfer. We are continuing to act quickly in settling comprehensive land claims, and we will retain authority over the disposition of unalienated Crown lands.

With this legislation, we have also ensured the continued registration of certificates of title and statutory easements provided under the Northern Pipeline Act. Statutory easements are often required to secure financing for pipeline projects, so this clause is important. Bill C-103 also includes minor housekeeping amendments to the Navigable Waters Protection Act. These amendments will remove a reference to the Land Titles Act, thus ensuring certain documents can be registered with the territorial Land Titles Office.

The Assurance Fund, now maintained by the federal Minister of Finance under the Land Titles Act, will be transferred to the territorial governments under Bill C-103. This fund is operated from fees charged for registering a land transfer and new title. It defrays compensation and other costs payable by the Crown to persons suffering damage, loss or deprivation in the event of a faulty administration of the land titles system.

This one-time transfer involves a federal expenditure of approximately $1.7 million. Of this amount, $900,000 will go to the government of the Northwest Territories, and $763,000 will go to the government of the Yukon. The transfer reflects the assurance moneys credited to the land transactions in each territory. It will include earned interest beginning on the date the Land Titles Act is repealed in each territory.

Once the Land Titles Act is repealed and the one-time transfer is complete, the territorial governments will be responsible for paying claims resulting from operating their land titles registration system. Exceptions would be claims based upon actions prior to the transfer, and which exceed moneys in the Assurance Fund transferred to the territorial government in question. Should this happen, the federal government will indemnify the territory for the amount exceeding their one-time transfer, plus interest.

We have negotiated agreements covering the administrative costs of this transfer to the territories. Under the agreement, certain revenues from administration of the land titles system will be directed to the territorial governments. The government of the Northwest Territories will secure approximately $110,000 annually in fees for registering land transactions and titles, while in the Yukon, this figure will be about $60,000 annually. These revenues are to be deducted from the federal transfer payments made to the territories.

To cover operating costs of the Land Titles Office, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will make annual transfers of about $21,000 to the government of the Northwest Territories and $10,000 to the Yukon territorial government. As well, there will be a one-time transfer of computers, desks and other office equipment.

Bill C-103 also clarifies the authority of the Governor in Council to transfer lands to the commissioners and the authority for the commissioners to transfer lands back to the federal government. The Department of Justice recommends that legislation be enacted to clarify this authority. Bill C-103 does this by making appropriate amendments to the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has received legal opinions indicating that the territorial governments do not currently have sufficiently clear authority to manage and sell those public lands that have been transferred to and are being administered by the commissioners. To address this legislative shortfall we are proposing specific amendments to the Territorial Lands Act. These amendments are consistent with our objective to strengthen responsible local government in the territories.

My final point is that the government is satisfied that northern aboriginal residents have been duly consulted about the proposed transfer in preparation of this bill and, although concerns were raised, the territorial governments have properly addressed those concerns.

This approach is consistent with our commitment under the northern political and economic framework. It ensures that the transfers have the support of affected aboriginal organizations and that they do not impede the land claims settlement process.

I request your support, honourable senators, for Bill C-103, because the legislation sends a message to the territories that we are sensitive to their concerns and are acting accordingly.

This government is sensitive to the desires of all northern people. The repeal of the Land Titles Act and the transfer of land title responsibilities to the territorial governments will continue to fulfil our obligations to northern Canadians.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, first, I want to thank Senator Berntson for his explanation of Bill C-103, the Land Titles Repeal Act. The act confirms a relatively long-standing administrative practice between the federal and territorial governments concerning territorial government over land titles. The repeal of the Land Titles Act will enable the territorial governments to enact their own type of legislation.

The power to administer land titles is a power currently enjoyed by all provincial governments, and its extension to the territories is one more step towards provincehood. I am informed that the territorial governments have already prepared legislation governing titles and require only enabling legislative authority from Parliament to allow them to proclaim their legislation.

While the existing federal legislation dates back to 1894, the territories have been administering titles through administrative delegation for some time — since 1967 in the Northwest Territories and since 1975 in the Yukon. The bill responds to their 1986 request for the formal legislative transfer of authority.

New territorial legislation will maintain the Torrens land title system that was originally introduced into Western and Northern Canada in 1870, following the purchase of the territory from the Hudson's Bay Company. The bill also enhances territorial control over the assurance fund established to indemnify land owners from maladministration of the land titles legislation.

One important feature of the bill will be to transfer administration and control over lands to territorial commissioners, while at the same time bestowing territorial governments with the power to retransfer lands to federal government ministries.

The relatively flexible arrangement will provide the federal government with the ability to meet its outstanding obligation with respect to lands that may be reserved for the aboriginal people as a result of claim settlements. This legally clarifies the administrative practices that have developed over time. However, while I appreciate the intent of the bill and believe that the territorial government should enhance its control over territorial lands, this should not come at the expense of the pre-existing rights of the aboriginal peoples in the territories.

Several aboriginal representatives have expressed concern over the bill's impact upon aboriginal land rights and claims. The Tungavik federation of Nunavut stated:

> Tungavik...considers it appropriate to be explicit with the broad relationship of the proposed legislation to aboriginal and treaty rights, both defined and undefined. As land titles legislation purports on its face to go to the very heart of sorting out competing interests in the land, Tungavik believes it is advisable that the Bill incorporate the following non-derogation clause:
> > Nothing in this Act or in any ordinance of a territory enacted to replace the Land Titles Act shall abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including any rights that may be acquired by way of a land claims agreement.

The Métis nation of the Northwest Territories stated:

> We appear before this committee asking for the non-derogation clause, because that is what will give comfort to the Métis people of the Northwest Territories.

The Dene Nation has indicated that they:

> ...are not convinced this proposal will not affect land claims or future self-government agreements. We do not find a non-derogation clause with respect to aboriginal or treaty rights in the proposal.

The Council for Yukon Indians said:

> Bill C-103...Does more than consolidate territorial jurisdiction over land titles, as it would also legitimize public land transfers to Yukon. This ability to transfer public lands must be read together with Canada's constitutional responsibilities to settle with Yukon First Nations...through our proposed non-derogation clause.

My own view is that the transfer of power over land titles does not, as was the case in the transfer from the Hudson's Bay Company to Canada in 1870 and the extension of federal jurisdiction into the territory in 1894, affect the pre-existing land rights of the aboriginal peoples of the territories. That is an interpretation that is shared by the territorial governments. Nonetheless, when it comes to such an important matter such as aboriginal and treaty rights, I would tend to agree with my colleagues in the other place that assurances should be given to the aboriginal peoples that the legislation will not abrogate or derogate from those rights.

While the federal government has given this assurance, some aboriginal representatives would prefer to see that assurance inserted in the legislation.

I understand that the territorial governments are prepared to agree to this proposal. Efforts in the other place to amend the bill by inserting a non-derogation clause have been resisted by the government. This is unfortunate, because the resistance has, in itself, cast a shadow over the intention of the federal government on this matter.

I would like to remind honourable senators that it was not very long ago that we reviewed Bill C-104, the bill that paved the way for the treaty land entitlement with the First Nations of Saskatchewan. The settlement in that case stemmed, in part, from the outstanding expressed obligations of the federal government flowing from the land and resource transfer agreements concluded between the federal government and the prairie provinces in the 1930s.

Prior to 1930, the Government of Canada was not inhibited from settling aboriginal claims to land by the land titles of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. After the transfer of titles to the provinces, however, the federal government was unable to obtain provincial approval for the settlement of treaty land entitlements. The Natural Resource Transfer Agreements in 1930 contained language of a non-derogation type which recognized the federal obligations to treaty Indians with respect to treaty lands. Even with those assurances, it has taken over 50 years to settle their claims.

The current bill contains no such assurances for the aboriginal people in the territories. Clearly, we must be careful whenever transfers affecting the administration and control of lands is undertaken. We do not want to create any unnecessary roadblocks to the settlement of claims. There are far too many already.

While the current governments of the territories are disposed to settle aboriginal claims, this may not always be the case. While the jurisprudence on the recognition of aboriginal rights and aboriginal title has change considerably since the 1930s, the federal government continues to labour under the misguided illusion that it has no legal obligation to settle aboriginal claims.

An increase in population, a shift in federal policy and jurisprudence would create major political hurdles in the settlement of claims. We need not add to those. We must always remember that one of the reasons for extending federal authority over Indians and lands reserved for Indians in 1867 was to protect the Indians from local majorities. That is our constitutional obligation. We must ensure that it is done.

The government of the Northwest Territories has indicated that, failing the insertion of a non-derogation clause in federal legislation, it would be prepared to amend the Land Titles Transfer Agreement entered into between the NWT government and the federal government. The Northwest Territories government has indicated that it will provide an assurance in the agreement that aboriginal and treaty rights will not be affected. Perhaps this should be explored further. In any event, all options for resolving this matter should be explored.

This is not a matter where there is a disagreement on the aims and objectives of the bill. All agree that the territories should have enhanced powers over land administration, and that the legislation should not affect aboriginal treaty rights in the territories. It is somewhat disappointing, however, that the parties could not have arrived at an acceptable solution to this matter prior to our review of the bill.

However, I am prepared to have this matter referred to committee and to deal with it there as soon as we can. I understand from Senator Berntson that we are prepared to meet as early as five o'clock this afternoon.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER

EFFECT ON SENATORS' PRIVILEGES

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney was quoted in the Gazette of June 13, 1993, as saying:

> I thought it was instructive that some Conservatives, who had implored me on bended knee for appointments to the Senate, and assured me of undying loyalty to the government agenda, would without so much as a by-your-leave to Senator Murray go the other way.

This could be seen as raising a Question of Privilege affecting the senators who were the object of the Prime Minister's attention.

If it is such a Question of Privilege, then the privileges of all senators and the Senate itself are affected.

The implication is that senators undertook before their appointment, and impliedly as a condition of their appointment, to vote in a promised way — the offensive words being "the assurance of undying loyalty to the government agenda."

I can understand why the senators supposedly referred to would not want to start a long chain of privilege debate and rulings, but I do not think that the statement by the Prime Minister should pass without any response from the Senate.

The provocation was the vote on Bill C-93, and one can understand the Prime Minister's very negative reaction to that vote. He no doubt made his statement in a perhaps understandable state of deep disappointment.

However, he did make the statement.

I do not think he should have, and the Senate should both take and record its offence.

NEW BRUNSWICK BOTANICAL GARDENS

OFFICIAL OPENING

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, next Wednesday, June 23, in the beautiful northwestern region of New Brunswick, Premier McKenna and the Honourable Bernard Valcourt, in the presence of many citizens of that region, will officially open a brand-new institution of great importance for our province, the New Brunswick Botanical Garden.

I invite all my colleagues on both sides of the house to visit it, if not on Wednesday the 23rd, then perhaps some time in the summer or fall. This project required federal and provincial funding.

It is well known that for nine years, the senator from Edmundston worked hard with some of my colleagues to bring into being this important new "baby" which will make a major contribution to tourism and education for the whole province.

The beautiful site of the New Brunswick Botanical Garden, with a wooded mountain in the background and bordering a peaceful river, will charm you at first glance.

Spread over more than seven hectares, it is both a quiet, restful place and a centre to study nature at its most beautiful and colorful. Over 50,000 plants are on display there. The rose garden, the rhododendrons, the many annuals and perennials offer you a symphony of moving colour and the heady fragrance of a thousand perfumes. A walk in the arboretum or along the flowery brook will delight you.

[English]

Conceived and designed by a team from the prestigious Montreal Botanical Garden, the New Brunswick Botanical Garden can really be called a masterpiece.

Situated eight kilometres from the New Brunswick-Quebec border and seven kilometres north of Edmundston, the garden is conveniently located close to the TransCanada Highway.

So please come and see us and enjoy New Brunswick once more. Spend as many days as you wish, and bring some money too!

FREE TRADE

INFLUENCE OF BIG BUSINESS ON INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, we heard yesterday a masterful exposition of the issues in the North American Free Trade Agreement given by Senator MacEachen. He made a point which needs to be made again and again.

His point was that the Government of Canada, headed by Mr. Mulroney, did not meet its stated objectives.

We were told quite clearly — Senator MacEachen gave us the quotations, and I have them in a book I have written on the subject — that the principal aim of Canada in entering into those negotiations was to make sure that American trade laws did not apply to Canada. Well, they do. Senator MacEachen went on to say that what we did get, which is those panels that are supposed to adjudicate on disputes, is being undermined by what the Americans are doing now. In other words, we went into the free trade agreement and gave the Americans everything they wanted, and we did not get what we wanted.

The question has to be asked, were the Conservatives stupid about this matter, or did they have an ulterior motive? I know many of them are intelligent, so it is difficult to buy the "unintelligent" argument. That leads us to consider an ulterior motive.

The ulterior motive, as analyzed previously and as now being analyzed in Europe for similar issues, is that big business wants to enshrine the big business agenda in international agreements, and big business has a big hold on the party opposite. As we were saying yesterday, big business wants to have international treaties that will make it harder to roll back what Reagan and Mulroney and Thatcher wrought; to make sure that there are no obstacles to this mythical clearing of markets; to make sure that labour and consumers and Canadians outside of multinational companies can have no effect on the economy. The ultimate objective, of course, is for the rich to get richer while the poor get poorer and weaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON WELFARE—REPORT ON WELFARE PAYMENTS, 1992

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, the National Council on Welfare, an agency that acts as an adviser to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, recently published its report: "Welfare Incomes, 1992."

The report contains conclusions that are embarrassing to the government and the Progressive Conservative Party. For instance, welfare benefits are well below the poverty line in all Canadian provinces and territories. The report also says that the absolute value of the benefits of many welfare recipients has steadily diminished in the past few years.

The Council states quite frankly that income statistics collected by various government agencies hardly reflect the desperate poverty of 2.7 million Canadians.

Hundreds of thousands of children and families on welfare do not get enough to eat. Thousands of single persons and families live in substandard housing. Some welfare recipients even go without food, in order to get better accommodation. Thousands cannot make ends meet. The financial pressure on the disabled is even greater, however, because of the additional expenses incurred as a result of their disabilities.

Previously, the most striking improvement to social programs had been the decision to index benefits. Unfortunately, in line with its regressive policies, the Mulroney government dropped full indexation in many cases, including benefits for children.

With the exception of Quebec, the provinces do not index welfare benefits. From time to time, they grant some discretionary and rather meagre increases that fail to reflect real needs. The Council notes that the discretionary increases granted by the provinces are no substitute for annual increases indexed to the cost of living.

Between 1986 and 1992, thousands of welfare recipients have become even poorer. Take the case of a single, employable person living in Alberta. In 1986, his annual benefits drawn on the welfare account were $7,765, in constant 1992 dollars. Today, his income is $5,640. I imagine these statistics are good news for those who support the Tory government. To us, it is damning evidence that this government has ignored the plight of needy Canadians during its past two terms.

The Mulroney government has even ignored the recommendations of its advisory council. Clearly, this government is fully responsible for the chaotic condition of Canada's social assistance programs and for the lack of national minimum standards. Of course, they could not care less.

The Council concluded that today welfare only guarantees a life of desperate poverty, thanks to our friends across the way.

Hon. Mabel M. DeWare: Honourable senators, as we may or may not be sitting in this chamber tomorrow, I should like to pay tribute to the male gender of this country, and to those in the Senate who may be fathers, grandfathers, godfathers or uncles who will be celebrating their day on Sunday.

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

SEVENTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized on Tuesday, 8th June, 1993, to examine and report upon the continued imprisonment in Brazil of two young Canadians, Christine Lamont of Langley, B.C., and David Spencer of Moncton, N.B., now presents an interim report.

Your Committee recommends that it be authorized to publish and distribute its report as soon as it becomes available, even though the Senate may not then be sitting.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN B. STEWART
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(g), I move that this report be taken into consideration now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the Honourable Senator Stewart to tell us why leave is required to proceed now?

Senator Stewart: Yes, I am quite happy to explain. The reference to the committee relates to the continued imprisonment in Brazil of two Canadians. The committee has set the process in motion to hear what evidence there is available on this matter as early as possible.

However, we anticipate that we will not have completed our work on this matter — indeed that we will not have another meeting — prior to the adjournment of this house for the summer. We concluded, therefore, that, given the urgency of the matter, it would be desirable that our committee report be prepared and made available before the end of the adjournment, or prior to the time that a new Parliament is summoned.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, considering the length of time that these young Canadians have been in gaol, the attempts to have them released and the urgency of doing so, if it will hasten that possibility, I am prepared to give leave.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

THURSDAY, June 17, 1993

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

EIGHTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-101, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act, has, in obedience to its Order of Reference of Thursday, June 10, 1993, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NOËL A. KINSELLA
Acting Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, before the motion is put, may I ask the chairman of the committee if he received the correspondence from the minister today, whether or not the Minister of Labour will accept the amendment, and if so, will he let the other members of the committee know, or will he keep it a secret to himself? Why is he presenting the report without the letter from the minister telling us whether he accepted the amendment? He said he would get it to us this afternoon.

Senator Doody: The report will be considered tomorrow.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: There is no debate allowed at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: This is not a debatable motion.

Senator Bonnell: This is not a debate. I am entitled to ask the chairman a question and he is entitled to answer me. Why have we not received anything from the minister, as the minister promised we would?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your question is out of order. He cannot answer.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Bonnell, perhaps your question could be answered on third reading.

Senator Bonnell: No. The minister told us this morning that he would tell us in writing this afternoon whether he would accept an amendment. The French language in the bill is not correct, according to the interpretation of the minister and some of the witnesses. He was going to look into it and report back to the chairman and the chairman was going to report back to us before presenting this report to the house today. The chairman did not report back to me, and I am a member of that committee.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, the report which I presented to the Senate is a report made pursuant to the decision of the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator DeWare, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a group of petitions, which state, "We refuse the dictatorship of the GST." They are worded very much like those that have previously been presented petitioning for the repeal of the act and for an election.

They are from the following sources: First, from Quebec, I have Barraute, Cadillac, Hull, Rochebaucourt, Senneterre, St- Joséphat and St-Marc; from New Brunswick, there are Bas-Caraquet, Bertrand, Goulet, Pokesudie, Saint John and Shippigan; from Ontario, there are Kirkland Lake, Larder Lake, Ottawa, Rockliffe, Timmins and Vanier.

In summary, from Quebec there are seven petitions with 145 names; from New Brunswick there are five petitions with 107 names; and from Ontario there are six petitions with 137 names. The total is 18 petitions, 389 names.

I must compliment these Canadian citizens for their petitions, for what they are requesting, for what they are saying, and, in particular, for their persistence.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 199 citizens of British Columbia who object to the goods and services tax, especially as it relates to books and periodicals.

Most of these petitions are from Kelowna, Vernon, Penticton, Westbank, Summerland and Revelstoke.

If they are not heeded by this government, they certainly will be by the next one.

QUESTION PERIOD

BUDGET IMPLEMENTATION (GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATIONS) BILL, 1992

DEFEAT OF BILL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I should like some clarification on the impact of the defeat of Bill C-93, and I have a number of questions on that subject.

First, I should like to know whether or not any preparations had been made by the government in anticipation of the passage of this bill to bring it into effect — for example, the transfer of resources, the reduction of funds, and so on. Assuming such preparations took place, then, in view of the decision of Parliament, I should like to know if any such preparations will be undone.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the short answer to the question is "yes". I think that answer will not surprise my honourable friend.

Whether these preparations should, can, or will be undone is a matter that I cannot answer at the moment, but I shall make inquiries.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, to take one example, which is not the most important in the bill, Part X repealed the Veterans' Land Act. I presume now that the status quo ante will prevail and the new arrangements that were envisaged in Bill C-93 will disappear. That is one specific example.

Another example is the repeal of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Act. Do I take it that whatever preparations were put in place to give effect to the anticipated repeal will now be reversed? One example that comes to mind readily was the transfer of the cultural relations division from the Department of External Affairs to the new body. Will that all be undone and any personnel that might be involved restored to the Department of External affairs?

Finally, and this is not to exhaust the questions, there are the provisions in the bill that terminated the existence of Enterprise Cape Breton. In fact, the Financial Administration Act was amended to expunge from the act any reference to such a noble concept as "Enterprise Cape Breton", because the term "Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation" was expunged.

Those are some of the questions that I have. Generally, the minister has said in reply that any preparations will be undone and the status quo as it prevailed before the Budget will now come back into existence. However, I should like any detail that the minister can provide today or later.

Senator Murray: It is a fair question, honourable senators. I must say that I have not been looking into it in any detail since the defeat of the bill in this chamber last week.

While much light has been made of the amounts of money that are involved, which have perhaps been underestimated by some commentators, the fact of the matter is that I know for certain that the Minister of Finance and his officials are addressing themselves to the question of where and how to recoup the savings that could have been realized by this bill.

The short answer to all the questions asked by the honourable senator is that to the extent that any of these changes require legislation, they cannot be made. What administrative arrangements may be possible now, I do not know. I do know that in anticipation of the passage of the bill a great many routine organizational steps were taken.

I will ask to see whether a comprehensive note can be prepared by the appropriate people at Privy Council, Treasury Board, or elsewhere — that is, from the machinery of government people — as to what steps may now be necessary as a result of the defeat of the bill.

COMMUNICATIONS

FUTURE OF CANADIAN MAGAZINE INDUSTRY—INTERIM REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, it would appear that the Canadian magazine industry might just be saved. If I can quote from the Citizen of today:

> A parliamentary task force has suggested changing Investment Canada regulations to make it harder for American magazine publishers to print Canadian editions.

The report has not been made public, but the minister is reported by his aide to be very happy with it. That is good news indeed. I would be remiss if I did not compliment the members of the task force who have moved with far greater speed than I could possibly imagine. I am quite prepared to give the Leader of the Government some credit, since he, I am sure, pushed them along.

However, we are sort of left with two tiers. We do not have the third tier. We are almost there. The article goes on to say:

> ...Beatty can't move without the permission of Industry Minister Michael Wilson, the minister in charge of Investment Canada. The two ministers may not be able to address the issue before June 25, when Tory leader Kim Campbell's first cabinet is sworn in. Beatty and Wilson could find themselves with different jobs after that.

My question to the leader is: Will this matter be resolved or not? It seems to me there must be this final step, and I wonder if I should be positive about going all the way.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I pointed out some days ago to Senator Davey, in answer to a question on this very matter, that when we appointed the task force, consisting primarily of Mr. P. J. O'Callaghan and Mr. Roger Tassé, we invited them to bring in an interim report if they felt that such a step was necessary or desirable. I can confirm that they have done that. Mr. Tassé and Mr. O'Callaghan have presented an interim report to Mr. Beatty.

I can also confirm that what is being proposed in this interim report is in the nature of a standstill measure to prevent other U.S. publications from taking advantage of the loophole, if I may call it that, of which Sports Illustrated availed themselves through Time Warner. Meanwhile, the task force will continue its work with a view to finding some long-term solution here.

Senator Frith: Running in behind their blocking.

Senator Murray: It is a standstill measure that is recommended. I can also confirm that it would require some change in regulations, perhaps a change in policy on the part of the minister responsible for Investment Canada.

The report is in. I have not seen the report. I am telling the honourable senator what I understand to be in it. I do not think it is a matter that can be dealt with simply by one minister. The government will have to consider it. If this government does not consider it, I would hope and expect that it will be dealt with immediately by the new government. We all recognize that, in a situation of this kind, a decision will have to be taken very quickly.

Senator Davey: How will it affect Sports Illustrated, the so-called Canadian edition of Sports Illustrated?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question. As I told my friend, I have not seen the report. I should not be stating my impression, but my impression is that Sports Illustrated will be there, at least until the final report of the committee comes in. They are not seeking by way of interim report, as I understand it, to undo the situation with regard to Sports Illustrated. They are proposing, as I understand it, a standstill measure to prevent others from following in the footsteps of Sports Illustrated before the task force has an opportunity to bring in its final report and recommendations.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, does this mean that Sports Illustrated will continue but that new magazines coming in will not?

Senator Murray: When Mr. Beatty appointed the task force, he made it clear that he was giving no guarantees to Sports Illustrated. I gather from that that Sports Illustrated will continue at least until the task force has brought in its final report and recommendations. If adopted by the government, the recommendation in the interim report would be to prevent others from doing what Sports Illustrated has done.

Senator Davey: Would it be fair to say that Sports Illustrated will not be grandfathered in this situation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the situation with Sports Illustrated is as it was when Mr. Beatty appointed the task force. We acknowledge that that magazine has taken advantage of what I might call a legal loophole. As I understand it, their situation is not immediately affected by the interim report and recommendations.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, does the acceptance, as the government leader puts it, of the report require regulation or legislation?

Senator Murray: It does not require legislation. It requires change in regulations governing Investment Canada, as I understand it, particularly to the definition of "new business". That change in itself has policy implications sufficient to engage not just one minister but the government.

Senator Frith: Those regulations, then, can be made by the Governor in Council, and would require no legislative approval, and would not be subject to any sunset laws or anything of that kind that would require legislative revival?

Senator Murray: I am certainly having a great deal to say about a report I have not seen. However, I am interested in the subject.

Senator Frith: I am more interested in what the result is.

Senator Murray: The regulations in question are within the ambit of the Investment Canada Act, which Parliament passed in 1985.

Senator Frith: The authority is there to pass the regulation.

Senator Murray: The authority is there to pass regulations, and it may well be that, technically speaking, the minister has the power himself to do this. However, as I said, there are policy implications that are sufficiently important that the matter will engage the government, not just one minister.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILINGUALISM—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, my question is to the minister. I realize that the new leader of his party is not yet the Prime Minister, so on policy matters I suppose we will have to wait. Nevertheless, my honourable friend was on the right bandwagon —

Senator Frith: He has a good chance.

Senator Molgat: — and is a close confidant of the new leader. Perhaps he can tell us whether we can expect a change in the government's policy vis-a-vis the bilingual and multicultural nature of Canada. In March at the leadership debate in Montreal, his new leader pointedly refused to defend bilingualism in Quebec. Subsequently, in an interview by the Financial Post on June 5, she was asked the question:

> Would you eliminate, change, or maintain in their present form, federal policies on bilingualism and multiculturalism?

The answer was:

> I support bilingualism for Canadian federal institutions.

My honourable friend will be aware that the Official Languages Act, under sections 41, 42, and 43, goes far beyond purely federal institutions. Is this a shift in policy?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Absolutely not, honourable senators.

Senator Molgat: That is clear. We shall wait.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BOSNIA—THREATS TO UN-DESIGNATED SAFE HAVENS—SOMALIA—UN PROTECTION OF CIVILIAN POPULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Several days ago, I asked a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate as to the status of the government's policy relating to the crisis in Bosnia, with particular regard to UN-designated safe havens.

The New York Times today reports that seventeen people were killed in the last day or so in Serbian attacks on the safe haven. Apparently eight UN troops are now moving towards this enclave — to do what, we do not know.

The government has supported the United Nations; the United Nations has designated safe havens in Bosnia, but as yet has not brought about any means or efforts to contain murderous acts by Serbian forces on the helpless and unprotected Muslim population.

Can the Leader of the Government give us some elucidation as to what is the current thinking of the government in this transitional period?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): The current thinking of the government on what matter in particular? I do not understand the question.

The honourable senator is aware that we have 2,300 troops in Bosnia and Croatia. The United Nations has a plan that would require more than 7,000 additional troops for the implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 836. The resolution is still subject to consultation with the UN and with current or potential troop-contributing nations. Of course, we are part of those consultations, but no final commitment to additional troops has been made by us or by anyone else at this stage.

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, in Somalia the United Nations has decided to attack, by gunship, those offending militias that attacked UN troops. Has the government indicated any support for a similar plan to use air support to protect civilian populations against attacks?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the safety of our own troops, as in other UN peacekeeping operations, is of considerable concern to the government. I remind the honourable senator that the UN resolution clearly lays out the mandate of those troops. Among other things, their mandate is to deter attacks against safe areas declared by Resolution 824.

Senator Grafstein: Is the Leader of the Government saying that in this transitional period the government does not have a precise policy on defending this helpless and unprotected population, despite the fact that the United States, as well as Canada, has designated these areas as safe havens?

Senator Murray: I do not know what the honourable senator is talking about when he suggests we do not have a policy. We are there pursuant to the United Nations Security Council resolution. As I said, the mandate is to deter acts against safe areas defined in Resolution 824; it is to monitor the ceasefire; it is to promote the withdrawal of military or paramilitary units other than those of the Republic of Bosnia-Hercegovina; and it is to occupy key points on the ground, in addition to participating in the delivery of humanitarian relief to the population. That is what we are there for, and that is what we are doing.

Senator Grafstein: In this interim period, perhaps the government might consider seeking air support from the United Nations in order to deter these attacks, because the present efforts appear only to be causing further deaths and do not really defend the population.

Senator Murray: I will see that the honourable senator's comments are conveyed to my cabinet colleagues.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have three delayed answers to questions asked in the Senate: First, on May 27, 1993, by Senator Simard regarding the difference in federal compensation programs between the fishermen of Newfoundland and the fishermen of the Gulf; on June 15, 1993, by Senator MacEachen regarding the Senate committee report on the macroeconomic impact of the FTA; and on June 15, 1993, by Senator Stewart regarding the findings of the binational panel on swine.

FISHERIES

COMPENSATION PROGRAM OFFERED TO FISHERMEN OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK

The first question deals with the different assistance measures offered to the individuals affected by the northern cod moratorium and those affected by the 1993 groundfish quota reductions. The situation facing each of the regions is quite different. In July 1992, a moratorium was announced for the northern cod fishery. In the Gulf, quotas were reduced substantially for groundfish fisheries as part of the 1993 Groundfish Management Plan, but fishing continues on a limited basis. In addition, outside of Newfoundland, the fishery is much more diversified and the majority of fishers derive more of their income from other species such as lobster, crab, other shellfish and pelagics. These fisheries are being successfully pursued in 1993.

The transitional adjustment measures recently announced by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Employment and Immigration Canada are designed to meet the specific needs of individuals affected by the groundfish quota reductions, such as those being laid off or having insufficient weeks of work in 1993 to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. These measures are providing temporary income support and long-term training opportunities to affected individuals.

The second question deals with the decision to allow a fishery and set Total Allowable Catches (TACs) for groundfish stocks in the Gulf in 1993. The situation of the Gulf cod stock biomass is not parallel to that of northern cod. Scientific assessments in 1992 indicated that a moratorium was not needed to maintain the spawning stock in NAFO area 4T. The 1993 TAC for the stock in 4T has been set at the target conservation level of F0.1, or 13,000 tonnes. Each fleet sector has been asked to submit conservation harvesting plans to ensure that juvenile fish are protected and control measures put in place on discarding and dumping practices.

The final question asks if the government is willing to review the 1993 transitional adjustments measures in light of the information provided by the Gulf coalition fishermen.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans (DFO) has identified additional resources to launch job development projects at sea which will put fishermen's skills to good use. These projects could include the experimental use of gear to test for conservation applications. DFO is also prepared to begin discussions immediately on the vessel support program, to help defray tie up or maintenance costs in individual hardship cases.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ENTITLED "MACRO-ECONOMIC IMPACT OF THE CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT"—STATUS OF ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

(Response to question raised by Hon. Allan J. MacEachen on May 27, 1993)

The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has recommended that the government examine the possibility of commissioning a private-sector pilot study of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement's (FTA) impact on a limited number of sectors of the Canadian economy. The analytical approach suggested by the committee would assess market share changes based on tariff reductions in specific sectors since the FTA was implemented. The committee has suggested that such an approach might provide some indication of whether tariff reductions in canada had resulted in Canadian companies displacing domestic or third country suppliers in the U.S. markets.

Two considerations are particularly important in examining the possibility of undertaking such an analysis. The first relates to significant problems that have been identified by a number of studies in attempting to analyze the impact of the agreement on the Canadian economy. These problems are also identified in the Senate committee report itself and relate to the fact that the early years of FTA implementation took place during a period of prolonged recession coupled with major adjustments of the international economic system, tight monetary policies and the introduction of domestic economic initiatives such as the Goods and Services Tax. The Senate report quotes Peter Pauley of the University of Toronto as pointing out that, "it is patently obvious that it should be extremely difficult to discern any potential contributions of the FTA to the Canadian ... Macro-economic performance underneath the noise induced by other national policies and a volatile international environment".

Although general impact analyses may not reveal much, many reports and studies of the FTA's impact on various sectors of the economy since its implementation have been published. In fact, certain aspects of the analytical approach suggested by the Senate committee have already been looked at. For instance, DRI Canada* and Statistics Canada both have analyzed market share trends in Canada-U.S. trade over the past five years.

The DRI study concluded that market shares have changed in many U.S. And Canadian industries since the FTA. Of the 108 Canadian and U.S. manufacturing industries studied, 34 Canadian industries gained U.S. market share, 63 maintained U.S. market share and 11 lost U.S. market share. Important Canadian "winners" included several large technology-based industries such as the automotive, communications and electronic equipment, aircraft, business machine, electrical industrial equipment, plastics and fibre and man-made filament yarn industries.

The Statistics Canada study concentrated on trends in Canada-U.S. manufacturing industry trade patterns using market shares and their change over time as a means of separating changes due to market penetration from movements created by economic boom and recession. In the period 1989-1991, the study shows that Canadian manufactures as a proportion of U.S. Domestic supply reached an "all-time record share — 2.6 per cent of all manufactures available for domestic consumption in the United States."

A third study by the C.D. Howe Institute has also concluded that Canada's exports to the United States have performed strongest in those sectors that were liberalized by the FTA - and languished in those sectors not opened by the agreement. These studies are indicative of only part of the analytical work that has been undertaken by a multitude of institutions, organizations and individual authors since the FTA.

This leads to the second consideration the government must take into account in reviewing the feasibility of undertaking further analytical work on the impact of the FTA which is financial. Commissioning a private sector study of the specific impact on the economy of one aspect of the FTA is difficult to justify in the current climate of fiscal restraint. Although this government is still examining the recommendation of the Senate report, the conclusion of much of the scholarship and commentary on the FTA indicates that such an expenditure would be difficult to justify.

The Honourable Senator also asked whether the government had given any consideration to the committee's recommendation to promote efforts by Statistics Canada to develop a concordance with U.S. statistical data that would facilitate analysis of the impact of the FTA. Statistics Canada has been fully aware for some years of the difficulties in reconciling bilateral trade data. It has developed close working relationships with its corresponding agencies in the United States in order to ensure the greatest amount of consistency possible with respect to statistical systems. Significant progress is being made and appropriate changes are being incorporated within both the Canadian and U.S. statistical systems to help facilitate trade analysis.

(Response to question raised by Hon. John B. Stewart on June 15, 1993)

The FTA ruled that for the period on April 1, 1989 to March 31, 1990, Canada's National Tripartite Stabilization Program and other support programs provided countervailable benefits to the live swine industry.

This is the second time Canada has challenged a United States Department of Commerce (DOC) duty on live swine before a FTA panel. In the first instance, during the review period of April 1, 1988 to March 31, 1989, the panel upheld Canada's position that the National Tripartite Stabilization Program and other support programs did not provide countervailable subsidies. This was reaffirmed by an Extraordinary Challenge Committee under the FTA.

Each Administrative review covers a different time period and the results are based on the level of assistance given to producers during that last time.

The latest decision means that a duty of 9.32 cents per pound imposed by DOC on exports of live swine to the United States will remain in place.

The panel also ruled that Quebec's Farm Income Stabilization Insurance support program did not provide countervailable benefits to the industry during the DOC's subsidy calculation.

Since the duties on live swine were imposed in 1985 — before the FTA — Canada can take only the findings from each administrative review period to a Chapter 19 dispute settlement panel under the FTA, and not the original decision. Only administrative review findings by DOC issued after January 1, 1989 may be reviewed by binational panels.

Canada will continue to defend its position that these support programs do not provide countervailable benefits to the industry during the sixth (April 1, 1990 to March 31, 1991) and seventh (April 1, 1991 to March 31 1992) administrative reviews of live swine exports.

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT OF SENATOR MACEACHEN—VOTE DEFERRED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and adding the following words: "this house declines to approve and implement the North American Free Trade Agreement because inter alia the Agreement does not provide for the establishment of a working group to develop common rules and disciplines concerning the use of government subsidies, unfair pricing, antidumping and countervailing duties within time limits comparable to those prescribed in Article 1906 of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement, be read the third time.

[Senator Lynch–Staunton]

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those senators opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Your Honour, before we proceed further, perhaps it would be a good time to outline the understanding between myself and the Deputy Leader of the Government.

It is our intention to call for a deferred vote. My understanding is that, under the Rules of the Senate, a deferred vote today would be held at 5:30 p.m. tomorrow. However, it is within the power of the Chief Whip of the Government to defer such a vote until the next sitting of the Senate, which would be next Monday, as I understand it. Under that procedure, the vote would be held on Monday at 5:30 p.m.

In discussion with my colleague opposite, we have agreed that, with the agreement of honourable senators, 8:30 p.m. on Monday would be a better time for the vote. The deferment would be to 8:30 p.m. on Monday.

Once we have disposed of this matter, and the vote is deferred, we will revert to the debate on the main motion, and further amendments may be made this afternoon. We propose that, with respect to such further amendments, the same course of action be followed, and that we again defer such votes until Monday at 8:30 p.m.

When we return again to the main motion on Monday, the understanding is that the same procedure would continue, and that further amendments could be made. The deferment of the votes on those amendments would again be to 8:30 p.m.

Then at 8:30 p.m. on Monday, when we proceed to the votes, the understanding is that we would move through the amendments, one by one. On each amendment, before the standing vote is taken, there would an opportunity for an honourable senator from this side, and one from the other side, to speak on that specific amendment in order to refresh the memories of honourable senators. When we have five or six amendments in a block, it is sometimes difficult for honourable senators to recall the specific amendment with which we are dealing. Speaking to each amendment will clearly bring back the issue that is before the Senate at that time.

Senator Doody: What about independent senators?

Senator Molgat: Any senator can block this agreement. No senator is bound by the agreement. I am proposing it, after our discussion, as a sensible way to proceed, and a way in which, with the proviso of two speeches on each amendment, there will be a focus on that particular amendment.

With that understanding, we are prepared to proceed. My colleague, the Whip, would then call for the deferment of the vote.

Is that the understanding of my honourable friend?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we are prepared for a vote right now, but the rules do provide for deferment. We have used it, and the opposition has used it when convenient, so we cannot quarrel with their decision. We are disappointed, however, because we were prepared for the vote.

Be that as it may, ordinarily the deferred vote would take place tomorrow. As it is, because we will not sit Friday, it would be at 5:30 on Monday. The discussion between my friend opposite and me was that, because we normally do not sit on Monday afternoons, it would only be a matter of courtesy and fairness to our friends from the West and the East that we defer the vote until as late in the evening as possible. We thought 8:30 p.m. would be convenient to all.

I certainly agree that each amendment can be discussed separately and voted on separately. The issue is too important to steamroll it through. The final point we have to agree to is: when do we come to a final disposition of the legislation?

Senator Graham: "Steamroll" is a great word. We have become accustomed to steamrolling.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: When we come to a final disposition of the legislation, again I hope my friend opposite will agree that no later than eleven o'clock Wednesday morning is a schedule which would be convenient to all of us.

Senator Doody has asked when we will sit. The suggestion will be made, when we get to the adjournment motion, that we sit on Monday afternoon at two o'clock; that is because we are not having a vote this afternoon or tomorrow and we will not sit on Friday.

We will adjourn at the end of this day, once we have disposed of the major legislation, which could mean that we will have to ignore the clock and sit beyond six o'clock. We will return at two o'clock on Monday afternoon, dispose of the votes as of 8:30 on Monday evening, carry on with the rest of the business, and vote on Bill C-115 no later than eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning.

That summarizes the discussions we have had and I hope this receives the approval of this house.

Senator Molgat: Yes, that correctly reflects the discussion that we have had. My honourable friend did ask for an eventual time limit for a final vote and I did agree that it would be no later than eleven o'clock on Wednesday, and it could be earlier.

It is clear that, if there are five votes on Monday night and the whip opposite insists on a one-hour bell for each vote, we may not complete the voting on Monday night; we may have to decide to continue the voting on Tuesday morning. Obviously, when all the amendments are voted on, we are back to the main motion and there can be further amendments moved at that time and further discussion. There is no limit on that. The only limit is that no later than Wednesday at eleven o'clock we will dispose of the main motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to our rules, if a vote is deferred until Monday night, it has to be taken on Monday night and not on Tuesday.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Your Honour, we are asking for leave to delay until 8:30 p.m. the vote which would ordinarily take place at 5:30 p.m. With leave, it can be decided among ourselves how we wish to proceed.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, perhaps I could make a comment on the question of the bells, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition having raised the question. Having lived through last week, when my worthy counterpart drew me into agreeing to a five-minute bell —

Senator Molgat: It was purely a suggestion.

Senator Frith: I think "readily" agreed would be a better word.

Senator Kelly: With the best of good heart, and trusting my colleague as I do, over the weekend I will give some thought to whether it would be more prudent to have a one-hour bell in order to have the opportunity to check the halls to see who is hiding, since last week five minutes was not enough time to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, do you wish a special Order, or is it all agreed?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It will be in the Debates of the Senate and could be considered an agreement and the equivalent of a house Order.

Senator Molgat: Perhaps it should be a matter on which we agree, so that there can be no change at a later date. If there is no disagreement at this time, then make it a house Order. In that way, the matter will be clearly settled and we will know for sure that there will not be someone objecting at the last minute.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if you want a special order, it may be drafted and put on the record. What is the wish of the chamber?

Senator Frith: We have agreed on it, so it is ordered.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: As the Leader of the Opposition suggests, what has been agreed to is so ordered, and that can be the Order of the house.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is on the record now.

Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Molgat: The question was asked by one of my colleagues, "What about other business?" There is no particular understanding on other business. It carries on as usual.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the motion in amendment of Senator MacEachen will be addressed and voted on on Monday at 8:30 p.m.?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: We are back on third reading.

Senator Molgat: I believe our whip should now call for the vote to be deferred.

Senator Hébert: Honourable senators, I ask that the vote be deferred.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT OF SENATOR STEWART—VOTE DEFERRED

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wish to move an amendment to clause 218 of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

My amendment deals with the new subsection 77.013(2) of the Special Imports Measures Act. That new subsection is proposed on page 159 of the bill. It would read as follows:

> (2) Judges of any superior court in Canada and persons who are retired judges of any superior court in Canada are eligible to be appointed to a panel.

Let me explain. The declared object and purpose of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States is:

> The establishment of fair and predictable conditions for the progressive liberalization of trade between the two countries while maintaining effective disciplines on unfair trade practices.

Chapter 19 of the free trade agreement provides that the United States retains the right to apply its own antidumping and countervailing duty laws to goods imported from this country. We, likewise, can apply our laws to goods imported from the United States.

In addition, each country retains the right to change or modify its antidumping or countervailing laws. When a change or modification is made, the other country can initiate an examination by a binational panel to ascertain if the change or modification is contrary to the declared object and purpose of the agreement.

If the legislature that enacted a law found by a panel to be contrary to the object and purpose of the agreement does not take remedial action, the other country has the right to terminate the agreement.

Under the free trade agreement, Canada may bring on a binational panel review of a United States decision to impose antidumping or countervailing duty on Canadian goods.

Similarly, the United States can bring on a panel review of Canadian decisions. The purpose of these binational panel reviews is to ascertain whether or not the relevant law was applied properly. The decision of a binational panel is final. Each of these binational panels has five members, and three of these members, including the chairmen, must be lawyers.

Now let us focus on how the binational panels have been working. Back in 1988, we were told repeatedly that the main aim of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States was secure access to the United States market. The great difficulty for Canadian exporters in the 1980s was not high United States tariffs but rather what we regarded as administrative harassments. The binational panels, we have been told again and again, have worked to reduce harassment.

On March 31, 1993, Mr. Gordon Ritchie told the committee on External Affairs that the binational panel system has worked well. He told us that Canada has won the cases it ought to have won and has lost the cases it ought to have lost. Let me quote what Mr. Ritchie told the committee.

> The panels have taken their mandate very seriously, flexing their muscles a bit, and put the spotlight on the practices of administrative agencies in both countries.
> In my view, these panel decisions are batting a thousand. We have not won every case. We have lost some cases. We have lost the ones we should have lost; we have won the cases we should have won.
> Most important, the panels have found that the Americans have been unfairly applying their own laws on every product that has come before the panels. In some cases, they found that the Americans inflated the margin of alleged subsidy or dumping; in other cases, they found that they had invented injury where none existed. However, by and large, they have clearly determined that, quite apart from the problems with the American laws, the application of those laws has been unfair in the view of the binational expert panels.

Mr. Simon V. Potter, from Ogilvy, Renault, a highly experienced panelist, agrees emphatically with Mr. Ritchie on the effectiveness of the panels.

Senator Frith: Was Mr. Ritchie a panelist?

Senator Stewart: I don't think Mr. Ritchie was a panelist. He was the assistant negotiator of the free trade agreement. I never read anywhere that he had served as a panelist, but I assume that he has observed the work of the panels carefully.

What did Mr. Potter tell the committee? He said:

> The way to judge the system is whether it is operating fairly, are people winning the ones they ought to win, are people losing the ones they ought to lose. I am telling you it is working that way and Mr. Ritchie has said the same thing before both committees.

I assume he means the committee of the House of Commons and the Foreign Affairs committee of the Senate.

However, honourable senators, all is not well. The Americans refuse to accept the panels' findings as having precedential value. Senator MacEachen referred to this yesterday. As a result, what looks very much like the same case goes to the panels again and again.

According to Mr. Potter, some Americans believe that the panels have not shown sufficient respect for the American administrative agencies. Those Americans have complained about what they see as the willingness of the binational panels to change American law.

Let me quote Mr. Potter, perhaps the most experienced of all the panelists:

> They believe that some panels have gone too far and have been too big for their britches.

It takes a lawyer to turn a phrase like that.

They even took the 1992 panel decision on pork to an Extraordinary Challenge Committee. The Extraordinary Challenge Committee is not a court to which an appeal lies from a panel. Senator Carney, who is an authority on this matter, commented in the committee that the Extraordinary Challenge Committee was set up to deal with

> ...sleaziness, thuggery and outright thievery or bribing of judges and things like that.

Nevertheless, the Americans took the decision of the panel on pork to an Extraordinary Challenge Committee. They misused the Extraordinary Challenge Committee.

Senator Frith: They turned it into an appeal court.

Senator Stewart: The Americans are frustrated, and the Canadians are frustrated too. A panel produces what the Canadians see as the right decision, and then the Americans refuse to accept that decision as final. Something is wrong.

What is the explanation? Is it that the Canadians are somehow blinded? Is it that the Americans are obtuse?

My conclusion, honourable senators, is that the basic cause of the trouble is the binational panel system itself. Let us remember that this system was contrived at the very last minute to keep the free trade negotiations with the United States from falling apart.

In the United States, the panels now perform the role of a judicial body, the role formerly performed by the Court of International Trade. Those panels include persons who are not judges; indeed, two of the members of a panel may not even be lawyers. Consequently, the panels are not producing the kinds of decisions Americans would expect from their own Court of International Trade. They are disappointed. What they want is decisions such as they would have had from the Court of International Trade.

For example, the decision on live swine rendered last Friday, June 11, is very revealing. According to that decision, which I have here:

> Panels are required to hold unlawful the determinations of Commerce — meaning the Department of Commerce

> — that are unsupported by substantial record evidence or otherwise not in accordance with law.

The panel then quotes an admonition uttered by the Extraordinary Challenge Committee: Panels "must follow and apply the law, not create it." Presumably, that suggests that panels have not been following the law, but have been attempting to create it.

Now let me read the very next sentence in the decision in the live swine case decided last week:

> Moreover like the Court of International Trade, panels must show deference to Commerce with respect to its interpretation of the law, as well as its determinations on the facts in each case.

From the American viewpoint, what is the root of the problem? The root of the problem is that the panels have not been acting with judicial restraint. There are too many trade lawyers on the panels. Indeed, there are too many panelists who are not even lawyers.

The United States wants to exclude what are called trade practitioners from the panels. Growing weary of having been found wrong again and again by the panels, the Americans have come to question the personnel of the panels. There are just too many people on the panels who understand trade law; too many people who feel competent to question the Department of Commerce on the facts in a case.

Now we can understand the provision on page 19-16 of the North American Free Trade Agreement which states that the roster from which the panellists are to be selected for the NAFTA "shall include judges or former judges to the fullest extent practicable." What the Americans want are panels composed entirely of judges to the fullest extent practicable. Conceivably, I say 100 per cent. For the United States, the inclusion of that provision in the North American Free Trade Agreement was a major achievement. According to Mr. Ritchie:

> ...the Americans have systematically attempted to throttle or subvert the panels.

In other words, what they failed to do in the free trade agreement, they are now doing in the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Potter of Ogilvy Renault commented:

> ...if it is required that we install judges, sitting or retired, on this roster and eventually on the panels, this may bring about a significant change for the binational panel process. I believe that a great deal of what we have seen from the binational process comes from the fact that the panels are made up, essentially, of practitioners who know what it is to deal with the Department of Commerce or with the ITC in the United States.

Later, Mr. Potter made a remark loaded with meaning, heavy with significance. He said that the effect of this change — the change that is proposed in the roster and thus in the panels — may be to change the attitude to the binational panels in Canada as well as in the United States.

What does he mean? He means that the congratulatory attitude which we hear expressed by the Government of Canada, by Mr. Ritchie and by Mr. Potter himself may disappear as a result of the panels being composed of judges only. On the other hand, the attitude in the United States may change. Whereas up until now the panels have been regarded as at least a bother, and at worst as a corruption of U.S. fair trade law, they will come to be regarded as very satisfactory, almost as satisfactory as the Court of International Trade. That is the situation.

What does clause 218 of Bill C-115 now before this house do? It brings the Special Import Measures Act into accord with the North American Free Trade Agreement. As I said earlier, the proposed new section is clause 77.013(2) on page 159 of the bill. Look at it, honourable senators.

Our Judges Act precludes judges from acting as members of these binational panels. The proposed subsection of the Special Import Measures Act would read as follows:

> Judges of any superior court in Canada and persons who are retired judges of any superior court in Canada are eligible to be appointed to a panel.

By this clause, the Government of Canada is asking this house to support the government's decision to acquiesce in the American demand that the nature of the panels be changed.

But, honourable senators, we have been told by the same government and by expert witnesses that the decisions of the panels have been sound. We have been told that the decisions of the panels have been fair. We have been told that we won when we ought to have won, and that we lost when we ought to have lost. If what the government says is true, why should the composition of the roster, and thus the composition of the panels, be changed?

Honourable senators, we ought not to give our approval to this change in the panels. Accordingly, I move:

> That Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in clause 218 at page 159 by striking out section 77.013(2) as set out in that clause, and by renumbering section 77.013(3) as 77.013(2).

Honourable senators, to vote for this change in the panels is simply to accept the American view of the role of the panels. Indeed, to vote for this change is to reject the contention of the Canadian government that the binational panel system has been working very well.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have just a few words to say in support of the argumentation which Senator Stewart has made with respect to the composition of the binational panels and the American request to have panels composed of judges or former judges.

We dealt with this subject in the committee. It is interesting to put some of that testimony on the record. It illustrates that not only did the Americans request, in this case, that the composition of panels be readjusted to permit the service of judges and former judges on the binational panels, but that our negotiators acquiesced to request. Further, the Government of Canada undertook a special amendment in this bill to accommodate that request.

Honourable senators, in a sense, we are retracing steps that we covered on the occasion we examined the free trade agreement, because, at that time, we noted there was a provision in the free trade agreement to provide for a special status for lawyers on the panels. It was put forward in testimony at the time that that particular request was made by the American partners. I have been unable to put my finger on the exact testimony, but I referred to it in the recent committee hearings in the presence of the legal advisor and other witnesses, and no one raised their hand and said I was mistaken.

What is the relevance? The relevance is not that anyone is opposed in principle to the service of lawyers. It is because the government of the United States is of the view that members of the legal profession are more likely to take a legalistic view, rather than what one might call a broader view. In other words, the standard of review which the Americans seek is a highly legalistic one, and not a broad one. Therefore, they asked for lawyers in the first case and they came back this time and asked for judges. In the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Issue No. 30 of June 8, 1993, in asking some questions, I made the following comment:

> If that is the case, having achieved that wish — namely, the role assigned to lawyers —

> — which I understand was not greeted with enthusiasm by Canada — there is now in the NAFTA a provision for judges or retired judges to become members of panels, or a certain class of panels. Was that sought by Canada or by the United States?

I asked that question, and Mr. von Finckenstein, the chief legal adviser, said he did not know, and he went on to make other comments. However, another official from the Department of Finance, Ms Susan Spencer, replied voluntarily and said:

> It was an American request, certainly, to have judges appear on the roster. You will see that the language says:
> ...judges or former judges to the fullest extent practicable.
> From that perspective, we are still permitted to appoint persons of the trade community in Canada, either lawyers or trade consultants or academics, anyone who meets those particular criteria.

Here again, the witness confirmed that the request was put forward by the Americans.

I went on to ask the legal advisor whether it was true that, in order to accommodate the Americans, the government of Canada was undertaking an amendment to the Judges Act:

> ...As I understand it, we have accommodated the Americans by proposing an amendment to the Judges Act to permit judges to participate; is that not the case?
> Mr. von Finckenstein: No, there is no amendment to the Judges Act in the legislation before you, senator.
> Senator MacEachen: I was mistaken, then.

However, it was a purely temporary setback to my argument, because the witness then acknowledged that, in order to make it possible for judges to serve, there was required an amendment to the Special Import Measures Act. An amendment was undertaken to accommodate the Americans to permit judges:

> Senator MacEachen: That was the point I raised.
> Mr. von Finckenstein: I apologize, senator. I made a mistake.

So in this case, it is clear that we accommodated the American request.

Honourable senators, I just conclude by saying that the relevance of this analysis by Mr. Ritchie, the deputy trade negotiator, is that there is a purpose, an effort on the part of the Americans to "claw back", as I said yesterday in direct quotation, the gains which were made in the FTA. The effort to claw back is exemplified by the refusal of the Americans to assign precedential value to the findings of the binational panels, a subject that Mr. Ritchie thought ought to have been addressed in the NAFTA negotiations and which was not addressed.

What has been addressed in the NAFTA is, to put it bluntly, the American agenda; the attempt to weaken the binding powers of the binational panels. That is why there is a rather strange clause that provides not only that lawyers will be the majority on the panels but that, normally, judges will be named to these panels to narrow the scope of the panel review.

That is the significance of this argument, and that is the significance of the amendment proposed by Senator Stewart. I am delighted that we have this occasion to highlight two aspects: The efficacy of the binational panels and, at the same time, to underline what has been described, not only by Mr. Ritchie but by the witnesses cited by Senator Stewart, as an effort to undermine and to claw back what was given in the FTA process.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator MacEachen will entertain a question? I notice that the witness quoted says it would be permissible to appoint persons other than judges, and that, in fact, the purpose of this would be to permit the appointment of judges. Surely the provision of the North American Free Trade Act is more demanding than that. The language says, "to the fullest extent practicable". That might be 100 per cent.

Surely Canada, entering this international obligation, will not try to duck out by appointing a judge here and a judge there. The roster is to be composed of judges or retired judges "to the fullest extent practicable." That might be 100 per cent, or something very close to it. Consequently, most panels will be composed largely of judges; not just lawyers, but of judges. Is this not the point of which we must not lose sight?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think it is, and I regret that I did not underline the point as vigorously as Senator Stewart has done. It is true that Ms Spencer said that:

> You will see that the language says:

The witness goes on to say "we are still permitted". In other words, others are not ruled out, if to the fullest extent practicable, a search has been made for a judge and a former judge and the search has been fruitless.

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I wish to speak in favour of Bill C-115. At this time I will not speak to the amendment which the honourable senator has just moved.

I want to differentiate NAFTA from FTA in this sense. I respectfully, therefore, disagree with Senator MacEachen's opinion that we are being pulled into the NAFTA. In the FTA, the government made a conscious and strategic decision to embark on a new trade strategy —

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I really hate to interrupt a new senator, but for the sake of the rules, and since she said she would not be speaking to the amendment, why do we not put the question on the amendment. We would then be back on the main motion and the honourable senator would be perfectly in order to speak on the main motion. We will defer the vote in any case, so it will take only a minute.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by honourable Senator Keon, that this bill be read the third time. It is further moved, in amendment thereto, by Senator Stewart, seconded by Senator Olson:

> That Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in clause 218 at page 159 by striking out section 77.013(2) as set out in that clause and by renumbering section 77.013(3) as 77.013(2).

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion the nays have it.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We will abide by the agreement that was made and defer this vote until Monday as of 8:30 p.m.

Senator Molgat: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The recorded vote will take place as of 8:30 Monday night.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I want to enter a thought in light of what has been stated by Senator Lynch-Staunton. One might get the impression that by deferring this amendment the vote would occur instantly. For the purposes of my own clarification, it is still possible, before the vote is taken, for a speech to be made by either side on this amendment.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I did correct myself by saying "as of 8:30 p.m.". In other words, we will have discussion and a recorded vote on each amendment. They will not all be disposed of in a single fell swoop. The process will commence at 8:30 and will then unfold.

Senator Andreychuk: Honourable senators, in light of that agreement, I am perfectly willing to wait until a future time to make the comments I wish to make on the bill. If it would be preferable to continue with whatever other amendments there may be, I can defer my remarks to a later time. I have no difficulty with that.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT OF SENATOR STOLLERY—VOTE DEFERRED

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, I wish to speak on the main motion, assuming that the amendments have been put off until Monday. I will be moving an amendment.

Honourable senators, the debate about the North American Free Trade Agreement has not only been extremely interesting and useful, but has been very important as an introduction to an issue forced to marginal importance by the Cold War.

There is a useful anecdote about the Cold War and the Spanish speaking republics. General Marshall made his famous speech and announced the Marshall Plan at Harvard University on June 5, 1947. Ten months later, on March 29, 1948, General Marshall led the U.S. delegation, which included Avril Harriman, to the ninth International Conference of American States in Bogota, Colombia. It was to be the founding meeting of the Organization of American States. The Who's Who of the Spanish republics, plus Brazil, many of whom described themselves at the time as "Rooseveltians", hoped for a regional Marshall Plan. Even Fidel Castro, recent survivor of his first revolutionary attempt to overthrow Trujillo in the Dominican Republic, was at the meeting and thought that there would be a Marshall Plan.

To quote Willard Beaulac, then U.S. Ambassador to Colombia, Marshall addressed the delegates "with sober eloquence. No one could doubt his sincerity. He disabused his listeners of any thought that they could expect a Marshall Plan for Latin America".

The Cold War had started and almost all the wealth and materials that the United States could spare were applied to helping Europe rebuild its war-shattered economy.

A few days later, on April 9, there was a terrible riot in Bogota, the worst riot in the history of the Americas. It was and is called the Bogotazo. It had little to do with the conference, but the delegates were caught in the middle and Generals Marshall and Ridgway organized U.S. embassy emergency measures. About 4,000 people were killed in the riot and more than 80 city blocks burned to the ground. Marshall made the following statement:

> This situation must not be judged on a local basis, however tragic the immediate results to the Colombian people. The occurrence goes far beyond Colombia.
> It is the same definite pattern as occurrences which provoked strikes in France and Italy... In actions we take here regarding the present situation, we must keep clearly in mind the fact that this is a world affair — not merely Colombian or Latin America.

General Marshall was wrong. The Bogotazo was a local affair. It had everything to do with Colombian politics and nothing to do with international communism. Nonetheless, for the next 40 years world affairs took precedence. The Spanish speaking republics and their often unpleasant ways of governing themselves were forced to the sidelines and local secrecy.

The North American Free Trade Agreement, this attempt to create a hemispheric trading bloc, has opened that subject again. As I say to my Mexican friends, and I will say it to others if this goes any further, "You can say it is none of my business how Mexico governs itself, but you can't say it if you want free trade with Canada and want Canadian workers to compete with your workers. I now have the right to inquire and get answers about your labour rules, for example."

Listen to this sanctimonious codswallop that we have heard: "the American family of nations", "hemispheric solidarity", "our hemispheric trading partners".

When I asked a visiting Mexican congressmen, whose spokesmen told the Senate Foreign Affairs committee that we had much in common; just what it was that we had in common apart from our geography, he had no answer. I think that he was surprised, because in most of Spanish speaking America those public statements are left unquestioned. Only in private do the real conversations take place.

In New York, at the time of the Panamanian adventure, the wife of an important ambassador said to me, "You know our countries, Peter. In our countries time is not permitted to move. Every once in a while someone comes along who does make it move. That person is always murdered and the crime is never solved."

What is the reason for the institutional Revolutionary Party in Mexico? León Blum said it best many years ago when he stated that "No government can remain stable in an unstable society." The Revolutionary Party in Mexico has been in power since 1927 or 1929, depending on how you calculate. It is in power because that country was never able to change governments without a blood bath.

Honourable senators do not need me to explain what happens in one-party states. Senator Ghitter did it very well on Monday. I doubt, for example, if in Mexico there is an independent judiciary. As years go by, the police become more active and more powerful and, from the reports of the murder of Cardinal Posadas Ocampo, clearly more out of control.

In Mexico the unions are not independent. In fact, the foreign affairs committee was told by an expert Mexican witness:

> One has to understand that traditionally the CTM —

And the CTM is the main union organization. The witness goes on to state:

> ...is one of the gears, one of the links which the government has in order to maintain political control of the labour movement.

Honourable senators, we know that wages are low in Mexico. I do not believe that government members of the committee seriously disagree with that. We know that as productivity has gone up, wages have not risen and have actually gone down. We also know that distribution of income is limited in Mexico, so that the real impact of the 1992 World Bank Development Report, Table No. 1, Basic Indicators, which shows Mexican income at $2,470 a year, is quite awful.

We know, from Mr. John Weekes, our chief negotiator who gave evidence at the Foreign Affairs Committee, that the enforcement of labour standards may help kill NAFTA in the United States. We know that the problem arises because we do not trust the government of a one-party state with questionable judiciary and no independent labour movement.

I was surprised when I read the human rights concerns of Senator Ghitter, who pulled his punch on Monday when he spoke so eloquently of human rights and seemed to be leading to an inevitable conclusion, namely that he would not be able to support the NAFTA agreement. Surely Senator Ghitter would regard independent judiciary and independent unions as important elements of human rights and elements that are crucial to the success of this agreement. Surely he would view the lack of these elements as possibly causing the failure of this agreement.

Human rights are something — not just a vague, make-me-feel- good assurance. This is an important opportunity for this house and for the Parliament of Canada to make a meaningful statement on human rights in Mexico. Yet Senator Ghitter, who the other night made his strong appeal for better human rights and had been horrified by a report that he had read by Amnesty International, proceeded to collapse. He was supported here in the Senate by Senator Di Nino and Senator Kinsella, but they all just collapsed. They did not say, "Look, our negotiators were not instructed when they went about their business to deal with labour legislation in Mexico."

[Senator Stollery]

If there were independent unions in Mexico and if there was a law that was in force by an independent judiciary, this would be of immeasurable assistance to the human rights that Senator Ghitter is so concerned about. But did he state that? No. He said, "Well"; "Nevertheless"; "I hope"; "This is significant"; "Notwithstanding"; and all of the rest of it. So did Senators Di Nino and Kinsella, who also said, "Notwithstanding", "Well, okay, but I will not deal with that issue at this time."

Well, honourable senators, I am going to deal with it. I will move an amendment to this bill.

I will move that Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in clause 242 at page 193 by striking out lines 20 to 30, inclusive, and substituting therefor the following:

> tion (1), unless
> (a) the Governor in Council is satisfied that the government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America have taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement, and
> (b) the Senate and House of Commons have by resolution approved all agreements entered into prior to the date of the order that are supplementary to the Agreement.

Honourable senators, I think that this is an important amendment, particularly in view of the fact that the foreign affairs committee learned, to my surprise, that the terms of reference to our own negotiators included nothing about labour standards and inquiring about independent judiciary and the labour movement in Mexico. Consequently, the deal is now on the verge of collapse because of the lack of labour standards in Mexico — caused by the observations that I have made — and the suspicion that in a one-party state, the law will not be enforced. That is causing more than consternation and caused the President of the United States, as recently as last week, to question whether the agreement would pass the House of Representatives in its current state.

Honourable senators, in passing this amendment this house would be very wise to ensure that whatever agreements there are, have the approval of the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that Bill C-115 be read the third time.

In amendment it is moved by the Honourable Senator Stollery, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time but that it be amended in clause 242 at page 193 by striking out lines 20 to 30, inclusive, and substituting therefore the following:

tion (1), unless

(a) the Governor in Council is satisfied that the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America have taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement, and.

(b) the Senate and the House of Commons have by resolution approved all agreements entered into prior to the date of the order that are supplementary to the Agreement.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Pursuant to the Order of this house, we will hold the vote on Monday.

On motion of Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, moved the second reading of Bill C-110, respecting the Northumberland Strait Crossing.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak on behalf of this bill which, when passed, will bring the dream of a fixed bridge linking New Brunswick and Canada to Prince Edward Island one step closer to reality.

This is not a new idea and, if I may digress from the bill for a moment, I should like to point out that a former member of this chamber, the late Senator Howlan in the late 1880s, proposed a tunnel under the Northumberland Strait to connect the rest of Canada to Prince Edward Island. At one time I had a number of the post cards they had printed at that time. It consisted of a blue area representing the Northumberland Strait, the tunnel underneath it and a train in the tunnel. Perhaps it is interesting to know that in the discussions leading up to the fixed link proposal, a tunnel was one of the considerations. It was rejected by the experts and I will not go into the reasons. I will leave that to my honourable colleague —

Senator Frith: Tunnel vision, probably.

Senator Phillips: — Senator Macquarrie, as I do not want to steal any of his thunder.

This enormous project will have a profound impact on the economies of Prince Edward Island and the rest of Atlantic Canada for years, indeed for decades to come. It will be constructed primarily as a private sector initiative, with most of the business risks being borne by the development consortium Strait Crossing Incorporated (SCI) and with limited annual costs to the Government of Canada and to Canadian taxpayers.

This is essentially what Bill C-110 is all about. It spells out the financial terms and conditions under which the project will operate. These terms ensure that neither future federal governments nor Canadian taxpayers will be subjected to undue or unexpected financial obligations. The agreement between the Government of Canada and SCI provides that $645 million plus interest of $75 million for a total of $720 million be placed in a trust. SCI can only draw from this trust with the approval of an independent engineering firm in charge. In addition, the agreement calls for a 10-per-cent contingency fund, 10-per-cent equity and a $200-million performance bond. I point out to honourable senators that the $200-million performance bond is one of the largest performance bonds ever asked for in Canada.

In addition to the guarantees I just mentioned, the major partners with SCI — Morrison, Knudson Corporation of Boise, Idaho and GTM International of Nanterre, France — also carry financial guarantees for the project's completion.

A fund of $10 million is provided for fishermen whose livelihood may be affected by construction. A most interesting aspect of this project is the fact that the fishermen represent 70 per cent of the Fishermen Liaison Committee, which will administer the $10 million fund and that committee will make the decisions on any required payout from the fund.

Unfortunately some of the present employees of Marine Atlantic will face layoffs and no one regrets this more than I. However, the Marine Atlantic employees will be given first priority for employment on the fixed link and its service areas. Retraining and early retirement packages will be offered and it is hoped that present employees of Marine Atlantic, who do not have the seniority to receive benefits from the packages I mentioned, will be offered employment on other branches of Marine Atlantic. A development fund has been provided for future economic development for the Borden area and other areas affected by the cessation of ferry service.

Honourable senators, let me first deal with the proposed annual federal subsidy of $42 million, in 1992 dollars, which will be paid over the first 35 years of the life of the contract. This figure was carefully worked out by Transport Canada and represents the sum of direct costs paid to subsidize Marine Atlantic, which operates the ferry service, as well as the administrative overhead, the replacement of vessels, the refitting of boats and repairs of land-based facilities. In other words, the cost of the subsidy to Canadians will be less than the current subsidy we pay to ensure the continued operation of the Borden-Tormentine ferry service. As the Minister of Public Works pointed out in introducing this bill in the other place, the difference is that at the end of 35 years, the Canadian people will inherit a bridge in good condition, with 65 years of further operational life and with no further subsidies required. In all probability, honourable senators, the bridge will last longer than the projected 100 years.

I wish to make a brief comparison of the cost of the ferry operation/ferry replacement and the bridge over a 100-year period. The average life of a ferry, I am told, is 25 years. Today's cost of replacing the ferries four times over the 100 years would be 1.4 billion, in today's dollars. Honourable senators, this does not provide for an increase in traffic. Should traffic increase — and later on I will point out that traffic over the last 10 years has increased dramatically — each car ferry, I am advised by the Department of Transport, would cost in the vicinity of $100 million.

Allow me to make some comparisons in traffic increases. In 1982, Marine Atlantic carried 1,450,000 passengers. The cost to the passenger in 1982 was $1.30; today it is $6.50. Marine Atlantic carried 442,000 cars in 1982; last year, that figure had increased to over 600,000.

Trucks used in taking produce off the Island and bringing in requirements from the rest of Canada are more significant. Marine Atlantic, on the New Brunswick-PEI run in 1982, carried 66,000 units, while last year it carried 126,000 units.

Let us look at the costs of transportation. A truck crossing in 1982 cost $11.11. That cost has now risen, honourable senators, to $39.50. I wonder if honourable senators appreciate the fact that the cost of an 18-wheeler, including the rig, the drivers, wages, operating while they are waiting — and I point out that these units must run at half throttle because you cannot shut them off during a waiting period — could be as much as $250 to $300 and perhaps even higher during a six- to eight-hour waiting period. That type of delay is not unusual in the wintertime.

The alternative, honourable senators, is the continuation of the ferry service. This entails the payment of the subsidy in perpetuity, plus the escalating subsidy year by year as a result of inflation. It is clear which option represents the best deal for Canadians.

The bridge will have a design that should carry it into the end of the twenty-first century, with proper maintenance. The agreement with Strait Crossing Incorporated includes a strict provision that the developer will not have access to the annual toll revenues until the government is satisfied that necessary maintenance and repairs have been carried out. The responsibility for this function rests with an independent engineering firm, which I believe is from Vancouver. I would point out that the engineering firm is in place not only for the period of construction but for the 35-year term of the agreement as well.

By agreement, no subsidy will be paid to the developer until a prearranged completion date comes into effect; that is, October 1, 1996. Should the developers fail to complete construction and have the fixed link in operation by that time, they will assume the cost of operating the ferry system until the fixed link is opened.

Fears that the users of the bridge will be at the mercy of tolls set by the private sector are groundless. I readily admit that I, at one time, shared this fear of tolls being increased by the developer. However, one of the important provisions of Bill C-110 limits the increase in annual tolls to three-quarters of the Consumer Price Index. This means that, as the years go by, the relative cost of using the bridge will actually decline.

Many honourable senators have asked me about the environmental impact of the project. The proposed bridge has had a more thorough environmental assessment than any other major project undertaken in Canada. Over 90 studies, costing $21 million, have been conducted. These include 24 studies on fisheries; 17 on ice movements; 2 socioeconomic; 4 on wind; and many miscellaneous studies. In addition, a total of 64 public meetings have been held across Atlantic Canada.

Most recently, in response to a Federal Court order, the developer prepared a specific environmental evaluation of its proposal, which was then scrutinized at a number of public meetings and by the federal government and provincial government experts.

In P.E.I. over 4,000 people attended nine public meetings. On this basis, the Minister of Public Works concluded that the potential environmental effects that might be caused are either insignificant or can be solved with known technology.

The economic benefits that the bridge will bring to Atlantic Canada, in particular P.E.I., have been well documented.

P.E.I. producers have indicated in a letter to me that they often experience delays of six to eight hours, waiting to get to the mainland. This creates difficulty for those producers who must meet deadlines in delivering the produce, whatever it is; but it must be delivered to an area at a specific time and this is, naturally, a matter of great concern to them.

During construction, the fixed link will generate 3,000 to 4,000 person-years of employment; 70 to 80 per cent of the total expenditure, materials and labour, will come from the Atlantic region. This will help very much with the high chronic unemployment in the area.

The federal government has agreed in the negotiations with New Brunswick and P.E.I. to provide $20 million to each province for construction approaches to the bridge. P.E.I. has asked, and the federal government has agreed, that the province can use the $20 million to upgrade highways where it anticipates traffic will increase significantly. It is my hope that my province will maintain the approaches to the bridge to the same high standard as New Brunswick.

Building the bridge will contribute $450 million to the region's economy.

When the bridge is completed, the lasting and long-term benefits will begin to kick in. These benefits include an estimated 25-per-cent increase in P.E.I.'s annual tourist traffic which, as honourable senators know, is a vital mainstay of the province's economy. We must remember that this bridge will be 13.5 kilometres long, one of the longest in the world and the bridge will draw sightseers during construction and for years after it is completed.

Senator Corbin: I prefer the ferry any day.

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator is entitled to his viewpoint. I express the hope that he will continue to visit P.E.I. as often as he does. I assure him that he will receive the same welcome as he has always received.

The bridge will greatly improve the efficiency of those industries that require a constant and certain transportation route for their products. It will save money, too: an estimated $10 million annually, according to the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Committee.

Agricultural and fishery industries will have greater certainty for their deliveries. Earlier I referred to the necessity of meeting deadlines in delivery. At the end of each day, one firm in eastern Prince Edward Island, with which Senator Bonnell will be well familiar, sends out four trailer trucks of washed and selected potatoes for the Miami market. That firm must meet a time delivery so that those potatoes can be distributed throughout the restaurants in Miami. The bridge will certainly make it much easier for firms of this nature and will generally open up opportunities for greater economic diversification within all the province.

Given all of this, it is not surprising that the bridge has the strong support of the citizens most directly affected. A recent independent poll showed that the bridge has the support of 63 per cent of Islanders interviewed, compared to only 34 per cent opposed. Popular support for the project is both strong and growing as the benefits of moving forward become more apparent.

The governments in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have strongly supported the project from the beginning. I wish to point out to Senator Corbin that the provincial government in his province is one of the most ardent supporters of this project.

Senator Corbin: Unfortunately, they always make their decisions without consulting me.

Senator Phillips: I often find that the provincial government of P.E.I. makes its decisions without consulting me.

Senator Corbin: On occasion, they even dare meddle in my federal problems.

Senator Phillips: Again, I share the same problem.

From the beginning, the governments of both Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have cooperated closely with the federal government in working out the details of their shared responsibilities. The efforts and studies of the provincial government as well as APEC and other organizations working towards greater development within the Maritimes always come back to transportation as the number one problem for further economic development and diversification.

The business organizations throughout Atlantic Canada, as well as most of the unions in the region, have also been consistent in their support.

The idea of a fixed link joining P.E.I. with the mainland of Canada has been talked and dreamed about since before Confederation. The difference today is that the present federal government has acted, where previous governments were content to talk and conduct studies.

I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute to the efforts and the work of the Honourable Elmer MacKay, the Minister of Public Works, who has spent many hours working on this project. On behalf of myself and the two out of three Islanders who support the project, I extend my thanks to him.

The present government has encouraged the private sector to take the initiative, thus strictly limiting the costs and the risks that will fall to the government and to ordinary Canadians. They have carefully and painstakingly considered all the social and economic impacts of the project and have developed a detailed plan which takes into account the concerns of fishermen, the ferry workers and others whose livelihoods may be affected.

Prince Edward Island needs this project; Atlantic Canada needs it; Canada needs it. It is clearly a winner. Bill C-110 is an important element in this project. It will enshrine in law important financial aspects of this history-making initiative. It will ensure the fiscal integrity of the undertaking and protect the interests of the government and the taxpayers of Canada.

It is my hope that honourable senators will want to give this bill the speedy passage it deserves so that we can move ahead to the final phases and get this great project under way.

Hon. John B. Stewart: May I ask the Honourable Senator Phillips a question or two?

The last time the fixed link project was under way, studies were begun by the auspices of the Diefenbaker government. I think it is unfair to say that Mr. Diefenbaker only conducted studies. Is the work that was done on approaches to the fixed link that was projected in the 1960s still intact to the extent that the work and expenditures required for the approaches to the bridge will be reduced?

My second question is, did I understand the Honourable Senator Phillips to say that if there is an impact on the fisheries — I have in mind particularly the lobster fishery — by reason of any change in water temperature caused by the disruption in ice movements, the fishermen in Pictou and Antigonish counties will be compensated?

Senator Phillips: I thank the Honourable Senator Stewart for his question. I recall the 1967-68 election. I remember there was a great sod-turning with a bulldozer to begin construction. I would remind Senator Stewart of a cartoon in the Halifax Herald which I am sure he saw. I have what I claim to be the original cartoon, but others also make that claim. It shows Mr. Pearson driving up in a Jeep and saying, "Stop the construction of the causeway. There is nothing over there but taters and Tories." Unfortunately, the taters have increased and the Tories have declined. I anticipate with our new leadership we will be correcting that situation.

The question concerning fisheries would probably be better asked in committee. However, my understanding of the fisheries liaison fund — and this is strictly my understanding — is that it would apply only to disruption of the fisheries during construction. I think there is very little danger of fishermen in your area being affected. I recall that when the Canso causeway was being built, the Prince Edward Island fishermen made no claim of disruption, and I do not think they experienced any disruption or loss of fisheries. I would anticipate that the same would be true in reverse on this occasion.

Senator Stewart: Senator Phillips, with regard to the Canso causeway, I do not think there are many fishermen on either the north or south side of the causeway who would agree that that causeway has not had a considerable impact upon the fishery. When you go to the south of the causeway, the argument is heard that because the flow of water through the Strait of Canso has been interrupted, the lobster in the larva stage are not carried down into Chedabucto Bay, with the consequence that the lobster fishery there has been reduced. If that is the parallel upon which you rely, I think you had better talk to some fishermen.

Senator Phillips: I would point out to the Honourable Senator Stewart that a lobster does not move very far from its place of origin. A lobster is very much like a Liberal. It does not move forward; it moves backwards. Consequently, it does not travel very far.

Senator Stewart: You may know how to eat lobsters, but you do not know much more than that about them.

Senator Phillips: I do not think the fixed link across the Northumberland Strait will affect the lobsters in Chedabucto, because they just do not travel that far.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, this is a very historic day, because today Senator Orville Phillips from the western part of Prince Edward Island made a historic motion concerning a historic event. Another senator from the eastern part of Prince Edward Island is now up to take the other part of the argument. I am hoping that my friend Senator Macquarrie will also be able to get on the agenda for this day so that his remarks, too, can be recorded in history.

Senator Corbin: Is he from the south or the north?

Senator Bonnell: He is from the centre. He is from the populated area. He is from the area so close to Borden that he can look out of the window of his summer cottage and see the ferry boats coming and going, which is a beautiful sight to see.

(1640)

Perhaps Senator Rossiter will have an opportunity to say something today to make this an even more historic day. If that is the case, then all senators from Prince Edward Island will have put their names on the record as to how they feel about the fixed link.

Senator Stewart, a former Islander who got misplaced in Nova Scotia, is now concerned about Chedabucto Bay. He is asking questions about this bill.

Honourable senators, I rise to make a few comments with respect to Bill C-110, respecting the Northumberland Strait or, as it has been more commonly referred to, the fixed link project. This bill provides the authority for the Minister of Public Works of Canada to enter into and carry out agreements relating to the fixed link.

The minister will also be authorized to lease any Crown property necessary for the construction or operation of this bridge. When the agreement with the developer has expired or otherwise terminated, the minister will be authorized to set the tolls by regulation.

The concept of a bridge, a tunnel or a causeway has long been part of Prince Edward Island's history. As part of our agreement in joining Confederation, the government of Prince Edward Island stipulated that the Government of Canada needed to maintain a continuous transportation link to the mainland. This has been accomplished by two ferry systems provided by the federal government, one which operates the full year and the other which operates in the summer only.

This is not the first time the federal government has approved such a project. In 1965, the federal government approved the construction of a combined causeway-bridge-tunnel. Because of financial and hazardous shipping grounds, the project was terminated in 1969 before much was completed, except part of a road. The Honourable J. Watson MacNaught had a bulldozer there even before the election was called to show how the thing would proceed.

Honourable senators, that leads us to today's proposal. The Government of Canada, in its December 1992 budget, announced that the current project would go ahead. In deciding to solicit project proposals, the federal government developed a number of principles which bidders were required to consider when looking at the project.

The private sector would be responsible to design, finance, construct and operate the bridge for 35 years. The private sector would accept all risk except for very limited events, including acts of the Queen's enemies, the EARP process, federal legislation directed to the project and non-insurable nuclear events. The government's annual subsidy would be limited to $35 million in 1988 dollars, or $42 million in 1992 dollars. The project needed to be environmentally sound and the project was to provide significant regional benefits. They targeted approximately 70-per-cent benefits. The sponsors were to provide a complete insurance and security package. The project needed to be delivered by a certain date, otherwise the developer would be required to reimburse the cost of the ferry service if the project was late.

On January 30, 1992, the Minister of Public Works announced that three bridge proposals met the environmental requirements. However, the three bids did not fully comply with the terms of the proposal called.

On July 17, 1992, Public Works Canada announced it would initiate discussions with the lowest bidder, Strait Crossing Incorporated, in the hope that this company could submit an acceptable plan. In its December 2 economic statement, the government announced that Strait Crossing Incorporated was selected to carry out the project.

The fixed crossing will be 27 kilometres long — 13 kilometres spanning the channel and two 7-kilometre sections joining existing approach roads. The two-lane bridge would allow the crossing of about 1,000 vehicles per hour in either direction and could accommodate all probable loads.

The estimated cost of the proposed bridge is between $800 million and $900 million, with construction to take up to five years, providing up to 3,500 direct person-years of employment.

The fixed crossing will be financed, constructed, owned and operated by a private sector consortium which, after 35 years of operation, will transfer it back to the federal government.

The Government of Canada will guarantee subsidies for operation to the developer not exceeding $42 million for 35 years. This amount represents the projected cost of the Borden-Tormentine ferry system over the next 35 years and includes capital expenditures which are not covered by the annual subsidy granted to Marine Atlantic.

In this argument we often overlook the costs of a continued ferry service. If the bridge is not built, the federal government would continue to spend $42 million, not only for the next 35 years, but forever. With the completion of the bridge, the government will get a bridge in good operating condition after only making 35 payments of $42 million.

Furthermore, honourable senators, the bridge will have a design life of 100 years without any major refits. By ensuring proper maintenance, the bridge's life expectancy can be extended far beyond a century. In addition, there is a strict requirement that the developer not access the toll revenue funds until after the repairs and maintenance have been carried out.

As you would expect, this issue has sparked a very emotional debate on Prince Edward Island over the years. As honourable senators may recall, the Prince Edward Island government, led by the Honourable Joseph A. Ghiz, decided in the truest form of democracy that the citizens of the Island should be asked directly to vote in a plebiscite on the concept of a fixed link. The plebiscite held on January 18, 1988, resulted in a 58 per cent vote of approval for the fixed crossing.

However, Premier Ghiz recognized that while there was obvious support for the project, Prince Edward Island's interests had to be protected. Before signing any agreement, he and the government of Prince Edward Island spelled out 10 preconditions or, as we call them on the Island, "Joe Ghiz's 10 commandments". These had to be met before the final signing of an agreement. These 10 conditions formed the basis of a federal-provincial agreement signed on December 16, 1992, by the federal government, the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

I would like to take a few moments to highlight the "10 commandments" as spelled out in a letter from Premier Joseph A. Ghiz, dated November 6, 1987, to the Honourable Stewart McInnes, then Minster of Public Works Canada.

First, the federal government would fund the construction of the approach roads and transfer them to the province upon completion.

Second, the construction of a fixed-link crossing would only replace the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service. The Wood Islands-Caribou ferry, recognized as a distinct and important alternative system, would be supported on its own merits.

Three, the provincial government would transfer to the federal government administration and control of such property as is necessary for the purposes of the fixed link crossing.

Four, in exercising their responsibility for establishing tolls, the federal government would consult with the provincial government to ensure that such tolls as may be set are fair and reasonable.

Five, the federal government and Marine Atlantic would develop an assistance program for displaced ferry workers, including job training, relocation assistance, early retirement benefits and, where qualified, the right of first refusal for any new jobs on the fixed crossing. This would all be included in such a strategy.

Six, the federal government agrees to carry out, in consultation with the province, further studies into development opportunities for the Borden area, with the aim of offsetting negative employment and income effects.

Seven, all proposals must demonstrate significant Atlantic regional economic benefits.

Eight, the fixed-crossing project must meet strict environmental criteria established under the Federal Environmental Assessment and Review process. Full public participation is required. The project would proceed only when all significant environmental issues had been satisfactorily resolved.

Nine, the federal government would establish, in consultation with the fishermen, a mechanism to compensate the fishermen whose livelihood is adversely affected by activities related to the construction of the fixed crossing.

The tenth commandment is that the fixed link crossing would include, at no cost to the province, a utility corridor.

Honourable senators, this project is very important to the people of Prince Edward Island and, in turn, the three maritime provinces.

Senator Corbin: Has the new premier endorsed the "10 commandments"?

Senator Bonnell: The new premier endorsed the "10 commandments", and if there were 12, she would most certainly endorse them.

Premier Joe Ghiz and Premier Frank McKenna appeared before the legislative committee in the other place, expressing their support for this project. Premier McKenna stated in his testimony:

> We see in this project, 13.6 kilometres, a bridge that will span two provinces, the longest structure of its kind in the world — another project of enormous magnitude that would act as a tourist magnet for generations to come. We want to prove to the world that we have the technology, the know-how, and the skilled workers to do this project and do it well; we know it can be done. I want to close by saying, and unequivocally, that having looked at every dimension and manifestation of this project, we're satisfied in the province of New Brunswick that it is in the best interest of our province, of our region, of our country, that this bill receive parliamentary approval.

Reflect on that.

This project is undoubtedly the most important venture in Prince Edward Island's history since the Island joined Confederation in 1873. Because of the enormous potential impact on the Island's economy and social welfare, one would assume the respective levels of government would ensure extensive consultation and examination.

Honourable senators, this project has received immense scrutiny. Years of debate translated into study after study. The public has been thoroughly consulted through both public meetings and, of course, the plebiscite in 1988. A recent CBC poll confirmed that 63 per cent of those Islanders polled support the project. Therefore, honourable senators, the time has come to make a decision with respect to the project.

The weather conditions over the Northumberland Strait have been studied extensively, and the conclusion is that the bridge would not be interrupted as often as the ferry system. The design of the bridge itself would constitute a solution to the impact of the wind on the traffic. In addition, it is my understanding that the developer will also be required to establish procedures and use monitoring equipment that will ensure the safety of the bridge users.

The expected economic impact of the construction phase of the project will be significant. This project will put a stimulus of $850 million into a region that desperately needs it. Over the life of the construction period, 7,500 direct and indirect person-years of employment will be created.

I cannot begin to explain how profoundly this project will impact on the lives of Islanders. This new mode of transportation will allow the Island to become more efficient and competitive by eliminating many barriers to exporting our goods around the world. This bridge will greatly improve the efficiency of those industries that rely heavily on the effective transportation system while, at the same time, allowing more visitors to come to the Island. It is estimated that the transportation industry alone will save over $10 million annually because of the bridge.

Tourism is one of Prince Edward Island's more sacred industries. Our wonderful seafood, stunning beaches and, of course, Anne of Green Gables, attract visitors from all over the world. The fixed link will be a great help to our tourist industry. It is estimated that the tourist industry will benefit the most from this bridge with a permanent 25-per-cent increase in visitors to the Island. The economic benefits of the bridge will also allow other industries such as agriculture and fish processing to fare better from an increased ability to schedule their products' delivery.

Honourable senators, such a discussion cannot go any further without mentioning the impact the crossing will have on the fisheries. The project will not have any long-term impact on the marine environment and the fishery. However, it is recognized that the fishery will be displaced because of the construction period. Therefore, the developer has made available up to $10 million to compensate those displaced fishermen. This fund will be administered by a fisheries liaison committee, which is made of fishermen themselves.

There has been much discussion concerning the environmental assessment process. This project has been subjected to a more thorough environmental assessment than any similar project ever undertaken in this country. Over 64 public meetings have been held with respect to this project. Public Works has spent over $21 million, of which a significant amount was spent on over 90 studies for the Environmental Assessment Review Process and Project Feasibility.

Some fear that by replacing the ferry system with a bridge, the toll will significantly increase. It is my understanding that the toll on the bridge will be comparable to the toll for the ferries during their last year of operation. In addition, the tolls will not be allowed to increase more than three-quarters of the Consumer Price Index.

That means that over time the relative cost of a crossing will diminish in 1992 dollars.

Public Works Canada has determined that toll revenue will in fact go down. In 1992, the cost of a crossing on the ferry was $39 for a family of four. In 1996, it is projected that it will cost the same family of four $46 to cross on the ferry. However, if the fixed link is built, it will cost them $39. In year 35 the cost will be $28 and in the year 36, when the federal government takes possession, the bridge toll will be $7.

The decrease is due to the fact that the bridge will be paid off and it will only have to be maintained.

Honourable senators, I cannot leave this discussion without making some comments on the court challenge brought forward by the Friends of The Island against the building of the fixed link. On March 19, the Federal Court ruled that an environmental assessment of the specific proposal by Strait Crossing Inc. is required. The ruling also suggested that a discontinuance of the ferry service would be unconstitutional and constitute a breach of the Prince Edward Island Terms of Union.

On April 1, the Honourable Elmer MacKay, Minister of Public Works, announced that his department would appeal the March 19 decision and, at the same time, comply with the court judgment and conduct an environmental assessment of the specific proposal. Public meetings were held in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia on Strait Crossing Inc.'s specific proposal.

On May 13, 1993, the minister announced the completion of the environmental determination of SCI's specific proposals and concluded as follows in a document entitled Initial Assessment — Northumberland Strait Crossing Project completed by Public Works Canada:

> Pursuant to section 12(c) of the order (of the court), PWC (Public Works Canada) has decided that the potential adverse environmental effects that may be caused by the proposal are either insignificant or mitigable with known technology. It is also the decision of PWC that the proposal may proceed with mitigation.

In closing, I hope I have conveyed to you, honourable senators, the importance of the fixed link project to Islanders and to the Maritimes in general. I would like to leave you with a quotation from Catherine Callbeck, the former member of Parliament for Malpeque and the current premier of Prince Edward Island. She said:

> In the future Islanders must become more self-reliant, competitive and entrepreneurial in nature. Government must foster these objectives by creating an infrastructure within which the private sector can prosper and grow. Transportation will continue to be an integral part of this infrastructure. The fixed link will not transform our economy, but there can be little doubt that it will assist and enhance our economy. It is a project whose time has come.

Honourable senators, on June 8 of this year, the Minister of Justice in Prince Edward Island, the Honourable Walter McEwen, entered a resolution in the legislature of Prince Edward Island suggesting that the Constitution of Canada might be amended to agree with the judge's decision of earlier this year. The amendment to the Constitution was proposed in the legislature of Prince Edward Island. The Honourable Walter McEwen gave notice that tomorrow he will move, seconded by the Honourable Catherine Callbeck, the following resolution:

> Whereas section 43 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by a proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the Legislative Assembly of each province to which the amendment applies;
> Now therefore the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Prince Edward Island resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by his Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule thereto.

On the next day the resolution put forth was:

> Amendment to the Constitution of Canada:
> (1) The schedule to the Prince Edward Island Terms of Union is amended by adding thereto, after the portion that reads "and such other charges as may be incidental to and connected with the services which, by the British North America Act, 1867, and pertaining to the general government and as are or may be allowed by the provinces", and substitute the following:
> That a fixed crossing joining the Island to the mainland may be substituted for the steam service referred to in this schedule.
> That for greater certainty nothing in this schedule prevents the imposition of tolls for the use of such fixed crossing between the island and mainland or the private operation of such a crossing.
> (2) This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1993, Prince Edward Island

That amendment was unanimously carried in the legislature on June 11 of this year.

Honourable senators, under the old Constitution the federal government was to guarantee a steamship service to the mainland and the federal government was to be responsible for that. Many Islanders, including myself, have always said that the federal government should pay the full cost of that ferry service and that neither Prince Edward Islanders nor anyone else should pay a toll to cross the strait. As I have often said, the people from Quebec can go to Ontario and it does not cost them five cents. The people from Quebec can go to New Brunswick and it does not cost them five cents. The people of New Brunswick can go to Nova Scotia and does not cost them anything. The people from British Columbia can go to Alberta at no cost. However, if you want to come to Prince Edward Island, you have to pay, and if Prince Edward Islanders want to visit any other province in Canada, they have to pay.

Since we do not have a judge from the province of Prince Edward Island sitting on the bench of the Supreme Court, the government of Prince Edward Island believed that if it took that issue to court, we might have difficulty persuading the court that we are entitled to free transportation across the strait. Therefore, they have given up the right to free transportation in order to get a fixed link, a permanent crossing, winter and summer, at all hours of the day with no wait, for thousands of years to come.

In order to get the fixed link, they gave up the right to go to court. I believe they gave it up because they thought they could not win and it would cost a lot of money. Instead they passed this resolution.

I ask you, honourable senators, to send this bill to committee and get it back here as quickly as possible in order that we can give it third reading before next Wednesday. We should even set the hour for eleven o'clock, as the Leader of the Government has said that all other motions must pass by that time. We should fix the time as well as the date for third reading for the fixed link.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, this is not exactly the best timing. This measure is coming up at the end of the session and I am coming up at the end of the day. The two senators who spoke before me had, in accordance with our rules, 45 minutes to speak and I, the one who is against this proposal, have 15 minutes to speak.

I am appreciative of the speeches of my colleagues. Senator Phillips did not surprise me in his advocacy. I was not sure that Senator Bonnell felt so strongly about the fixed link.

Senator Phillips made an excellent speech. I know that he has been aging over the years, although I have never seen much sign of him mellowing. However, today I did see a slight tendency toward that. He made his remarks in a very good natured way.

I was interested to hear Senator Bonnell close his remarks with reference to the resolution in the Prince Edward Island legislature. It seems that my fellow Islanders in the provincial realm, when they spoke about the Island being united to Canada, lost the confidence which their predecessors had.

When Lord Dufferin was down in 1873, celebrating the union of the federation he said, "To hear them tell it, the Dominion of Canada was joining the Island." They lost that phraseology, and I am sorry about that.

To start at the end, not at the beginning, I do not think such an important measure can properly be dealt with by being sent into a committee for a few hours, as Senator Bonnell mentions. I agree with both my predecessors in the debate. It is a profound measure, and will have great effect upon all Prince Edward Islanders for our generation and all generations to come. That is why I was shocked when I heard that this was not one of the bills that were to be deferred. I think it will be difficult to proceed because, while Prince Edward Island may have made proper constitutional action, the lower house in this legislature is gone. How can you get a constitutional measure through? The Senate alone cannot do it, no matter how great we are. In a sense, it has been held up by that block.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am sorry to interrupt my honourable colleague.

Senator Macquarrie: I did not interrupt you.

Senator Phillips: I wanted to ask him if he was aware that the interpretation given by the Department of Justice says that the amendment to the Constitution may be made any time prior to the cessation of the ferry service. In other words, it is not essential to do it in this session; it can be done in one or two years' time. Was the honourable senator aware of that?

Senator Macquarrie: I am aware of the box the province would be in if, after the bridge is half completed, the legislature said, "We do not want this." So much for that ruling. What would you do? It would be an absurdity.

It would have been so thoughtful, prudent and sensible to hold off on this measure. For what reasons? One is the careful, independent, outside environmental study that the Federal Court of Canada called for. That has not been produced. It is all very well for the spokesmen of the group that desires to build it to say, "We have handled it. We have looked at that and called in experts." But you cannot fulfil the court's ruling by moving a few papers on someone's desk and saying, "We are satisfied that all of these environmental problems have been dealt with." There are issues before the Federal Court of Canada at this day which would put into contempt any disregard by the Government of Canada in building this bridge.

Despite what has been said about the generosity, there is great concern about the financial element of this project. I am not nearly satisfied. Two of the great papers of this country, the Financial Post and the Globe and Mail, have caused me to be very concerned. "Taxpayers to pay all of the Prince Edward Island bridge bill" was the headline in the Globe and Mail on May 11. There was an equally disturbing, and longer, article in the Financial Post of May 26. That is the kind of thing that should be studied, and studied carefully, by the most competent and impartial financial experts that we can find — someone of the calibre and lustre of the Auditor General of Canada. This is not a mere bridge; this is a profound operation with ramifications that we cannot discuss — not even the three of us can discuss them properly. This should be carefully studied by this upper house of the Canadian Parliament.

Some of us are not satisfied with the spokesmen for the bridge builder saying, "Yes, we are satisfied." That does not surprise me. They want to build a bridge. Surely no one should advocate unseemly haste in something that could change the lifestyle of Prince Edward Island forever and ever. I do not like these unwholesome and worrisome clouds over those two important aspects: The environment and the economic parts of the bill.

Parliament, as McIlwain used to say, is itself a high court. It is a court. Should we casually be showing before the public of Canada that we are contemptuous of what other great courts say? Should we not be sure? The people of this country, alas too much and too often, hold us in contempt, and also the institutions that we form. What an example we give if we say, "Oh, yes, the federal court said you must do this. But we have looked after it. We have satisfied ourselves that it is all right and it must all go ahead." We know that the Minister of Public Works has been gung ho for this measure for a long time. Perhaps he wants to go down in history as being a great bridge-builder, and the people in his department have visions of being the creator of the highest bridge that man has ever created. That may be an exaggeration, but it will be awfully high for some of those windy northeast winds that sweep down the Northumberland Strait.

Another aspect that my colleagues did not discuss was the risks that are inherent in any undertaking of this kind. What about the cost overruns? We are already looking at a figure of nearly $1 billion. As a poor Prince Edward Islander, I find that a great deal of money, especially in a deficit-fighting, debt-wrestling era. When I put forward a certain proposal to help a wharf, I was told, "We cannot do that in these days of austerity."

Can any senator here think of any project — be it the National Arts Centre, or one of our museums, or a building at home, or a bridge — that had a cost overrun? I am asking an almost ridiculous question. A harder one would be: Think of one that did not have an overrun. What happens if the bridge gets under way and the company reports that, because of this and that, they now need that much more money? What happens then? What happens to the bridge? What happens to the people of Prince Edward Island? What happens to a government that will cut out the deficit in four or five years — I forget the exact measure of time there.

Shouldn't that be considered just a little more? Should we say we must go ahead regardless? They say there are enough environmental studies. I say, until an independent group responds to the Federal Court of Canada, we have not had enough.

Down in Prince Edward Island there is division among the people in our little province. I am sorry about that. It may be that this bridge will be built, but let it be built after every measure is taken to assuage those of us in our population who are troubled about it. It does not have to be done in two month's time. Could we not get along without it for six months more?

I hear about how long it takes to wait for the ferries. Sometimes it does. People are always thinking it is too long, even if it is only a red light in a busy city. I travel on that ferry, I live near it and I honour and salute the fact that time after time they are right on schedule, sometimes in very bad weather, but of course you never hear about that. You hear, "I was held up for two hours." That is life. I am not going around the country saying that the ferry service is slow, "My God, we can't get anything moving." That would not be a very good way to help the tourist industry.

There are a few other things that my colleagues did not mention and I do not blame them; I probably would not have either in their situation. There are some things we do not know about the environment, but one thing we do know is that that bridge goes straight across one of the finest scallop beds on the eastern coast of North America. Now what is the company going to do for those scallops that are rudely dispossessed of their living grounds? I have seen no press release to alleviate their anxieties. I am not sure about the lack of mobility of the lobsters, nor am I at all sure, in the absence of a proper study of the bottom of the strait, that we know we are not endangering them. I have mentioned two of the aspects of the fishing industry, a great industry in my province, which can still function and flourish. We have lost, God knows, cod; mackerel are a magnificent fish, but they are more temperamental than ever. We count very strongly on the scallop and lobster and we produce an absolutely A-1 product with both of them.

The link's future also requires more reflection. What is the aim, the major economic summum bonum of that bridge? It is to maximize return travel, because the profit is made in going and coming from the other way. There is no genius in my suggestion that what would be helpful to the bridge operators would be something on Prince Edward Island to bring short-term visitors. These are the very things which down through the years we have avoided. There are no casinos on Prince Edward Island.

People come to Prince Edward Island and love it and come back year after year; generations have come and what do they say, "We love it here because it's different." Now we have some people saying, "The thing to do is to make it the same as the place they came from. Get lots of traffic going." Great, if you like that sort of thing.

I do not envisage with any pleasure the establishment of honky-tonk institutions of the type on Cape Cod and other places we know well. No one suggests that everybody who is against it, is considered an old fogey. Perhaps I would be considered one.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Macquarrie: Thank you, perhaps a middle-aged fogey. I am not cheered by the fact that I am in the minority in this. I have been in the minority most of my life, but I have remained an optimist. How could a Conservative be anything but an optimist and remain a Conservative through the years? What has pleased me and helped, when I am discouraged, is that while most of us are in our senior years, years of serenity, a lot of our kinship is with, not those middle aged people like some of my colleagues here, but the young students who are studying environmental matters. As one young university student said to me at Charlottetown airport, "Do what you can to stop them from "FUing the Island." She was actually more explicit than that. She was certainly very definite in her views.

We are not going back to the days of L.M. Montgomery or the days of Sir Andrew MacPhail, but are we going to give up all of those virtues and values which we still exude, all in the face of the suggestion that there is nothing more important than a fast buck? There is nothing wrong of course with the profit motive. It has done us a lot of good as well as a lot of harm. Someone in the paper, the Charlottetown Guardian of May 1, said that "vested interests push link, Mr. Wells." He was the right hand man of, I would say, the most able Liberal premier our province has had in the past 50 years. Mr. Andrew Wells gave that opinion as he testified at one of these meetings which have passed for environmental studies over the past several months. I never heard of an environmental study taking place in a crowded meeting.

Speaking of tourism — my colleague Senator Bonnell mentioned it and I talked about it to a friend of mine in this chamber this morning — while the tourist industry as it is officially organized in Prince Edward Island is very much in favour of the bridge, as I listen to their advertisements they talk about coming to where it is quiet and where we put the clock back 30 years. God, I was in my heyday 30 years ago. The tourist ads are not saying how we are bustling, moving fast and getting into the twenty-first century. It is a terrible thing ever to be accused of not moving fast enough, not getting with it.

I note that there was not much said about the environment. It is the holy writ today for all politicians of all parties to say, "Oh, we must not allow this burden of debt, this crushing load of deficit to continue a day longer. Are you going to leave our succeeding generations with that?" How much worse to despoil the environment for succeeding generations than to leave them with a bad balance in financial books? One would think that that concern and anxiety for the environment would at least equal the concern for an economic debt-free inheritance.

It is too often the case, however, that our environmental studies are like the musical banks in a very famous English novel. That is what we go to big conferences and talk about. But try to make that an operative part of any decision, and too often — alas, wink, nudge — "Oh, yes, the environment." But this is the way we must do it.

We forget that, as a people, we have ravaged our resources and despoiled our environment for generations. The Sahara Desert was once a great forest. Waters that, in this country of our own, once teemed with fish are now putrid and contaminated. We are working on projects such as this wholeheartedly, but thinking of the environment so very little.

I am glad to hear people say that new jobs will be created by the bridge and on the bridge, but I cannot help but note that while we are not sure of the number of new jobs of a part-time nature, we know that 600 of the people on the ferry service are likely to be disemployed, and the Wood Islands ferry on the other part of the Island has a couple of hundred more. If you count the possibilities, as we have visions of great prosperity dancing in our heads, we must also count the realities.

I will be charged as being old-fashioned if I say I like the Prince Edward Island of Lucy Maud Montgomery far more than that of Mr. Campinella, the spokesman for Strait Crossing Inc. However, as Senator Phillips listed all the good things Strait Crossing Inc. would provide, I thought the company should be more aptly named Santa Claus Inc.

A descendant of Lucy Maud Montgomery, now living in the United States, wrote a wonderful letter to the Charlottetown Guardian after her regular summer visit last year. She pleaded for the cessation of the bridge project. She wrote:

> I have learned only recently of the plan to build a nine mile long bridge connecting Prince Edward Island with the mainland. This project and the environmental havoc it will cause is truly unconscionable. Furthermore, the additional traffic and congestion and pollution which will result will spoil forever the most attractive aspect of this special island — that is, a truly peaceful and unspoiled place for residents and visitors.
> If this bridge is viewed as a means to increase tourism, I believe it is doomed to fail. If the Island becomes part of the mainland, the magic is lost.
> I urge you to halt this projected bridge. If it goes through, all of us who love Prince Edward Island will be losers.

I have no trouble saying that I appreciate that lady's letter. As her second name was Montgomery, I got in touch with her and said, "Are you a descendant of the great author?" I was not surprised to discover that she was.

We have had our problems in the Maritimes, the Atlantic area. The National Film Board put out a documentary entitled "Empty Harbours and Broken Dreams". We have had, through the years, people come to our little province with great projects. They wanted to make gloves in Newfoundland and bricks in Charlottetown. After a while, we walk by these establishments and look at rusting padlocks on the closed doors — a dream followed by a fizzle.

Today, every project must be launched in global terms. "Globalization" is one of our buzzwords. I often think the buzz word should be "gobble-ization".

Honourable senators, if big is great, there is no place for Prince Edward Island. What will happen when we accentuate our speedy contact with the mainland? There will come into play another buzzword — it is not so buzzy because I heard it when I studied economics — that is, "economies of scale".

I read quite an article not long ago by a very bright Prince Edward Islander — and we have a lot of them — entitled "The Monctonization of Prince Edward Island". When Senator Phillips and I came into the House of Commons in 1957, we could go to this department or that department in Charlottetown — and God knows we had plenty of problems as new members. But now you will go to some federal office in Charlottetown, and they will have to phone Saint John or Moncton. There has been an outward movement of high government offices; the emanations of government are moving. And we will find more and more movement. Why would people coming over to the Island for a few days not stay over in Moncton at a bigger hotel where the rates are cheaper? People today travel the ferries to New Brunswick to shop the bigger stores and to get cheaper groceries. We will accentuate that movement by having a bridge. I am sure Senator Phillips noticed in the debate in the House of Commons the eagerness of New Brunswickers to support this bill. They never cared before when we had trouble with the ferries. It was always called the Prince Edward Island ferry service.

I had the good fortune — they may not have had the good fortune — to attend an annual meeting of the Conservatives in Cumberland. They asked me to be their guest speaker a while ago. They had listed some items for a discussion group. One was the fixed link. Out of courtesy to me, they obviously had stricken it from the agenda. Bill Casey, M.P., a most excellent young man, said, "I see it is not on the agenda, but I want to say a word about it. It is this: I support the bridge for the same reason Senator Macquarrie opposes it, and that is because the most benefit will come to New Brunswick." I was not surprised at that. Even I could have figured that out.

There is so much that could be said. There is so much that should be said. We all, as serious senators, should be sitting around calling in experts to get to the bottom of these questions. We cannot, honourable senators, do justice to this measure. Sending such an important measure out of Parliament, with the Senate of Canada spending only three hours on it — three magnificent speeches, no doubt, we rendered — but is it enough? I think not. We must be assertive of more discussion and more study.

I am often disturbed when people say, "Officials of the Department of Public Works say 'The bridge is great'" Well, now, what would you expect them to say? A retired mandarin was interviewed on the CBC not long ago. He was asked about the relationship between the professionals and the political head. He was asked, "Do you freely give your views, or do you take note of what the political head thinks?" He said, "Of course you can give your candid views, but if you give a view that is inimical to the head of the political apparatus, your advice will probably not be asked again." A very smart man. As I say, he was retired, or perhaps he would not have said it.

I would like to have time to reflect upon what happens when the water level of Prince Edward Island goes down and it has to be imported across that bridge. Who will control that? Who will make the cost decision when we need a new line for electricity, because they will hardly be digging the bottom of the strait to start another one when there is a superstructure up there. There are questions, questions and questions. There are so many that, honourable senators, I would like to move:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and add the following words:
> "the Bill be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this day three months hence".

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Macquarrie a question. Do I understand that he referred to the need for a constitutional amendment and stated that such an amendment could not be made because the House of Commons had adjourned, and that it could not be passed by the Senate alone? Then I thought I heard Senator Phillips say something about a ruling or an opinion that a constitutional amendment could be passed by the province alone. I cannot believe that that is so.

Senator Phillips: No.

Senator Frith: Section 43 states that such an amendment must be passed by a resolution of the Senate and the House of Commons, and of the legislative assembly of each province to which the amendment applies. I take it that this amendment would apply to a vote — although I am not as close to the geography as other senators — if it requires a constitutional amendment, or was the ruling that it does not require a constitutional amendment?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It does.

Senator Frith: We passed the New Brunswick one, for example.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, as I attempted to explain, I understand Senator Frith's difficulty with the law. I have the same problem.

Senator Frith: You still have no difficulty with smart-alecness, I see. You did not lose that in your humility.

Senator Phillips: I am informed that the Department of Justice states that the decision allows the amendment to the Constitution to be made at any time before the cessation, and does not require it to be made before the passage of one test, but it does require a federal amendment as well as a provincial amendment.

Senator Frith: It requires the procedure under section 43, but not before the passage of the bill; is that what you are saying?

[Senator Macquarrie]

Senator Phillips: That is correct.

Senator Frith: I understand.

Senator Stewart: May I ask why the constitutional amendment at all? Why not have both? If you are stubbornly determined to push ahead with the bridge, the bridge will be there, I suppose, until there is a major storm. In the meantime, leave the guarantee in the Constitution. There is no reason to change the Constitution before spending money on the bridge.

Senator Phillips: I agree.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like clarification from Senator Phillips. Did I understand him to state that a resolution will be proposed at a later date in the House of Commons and here?

Senator Frith: Or in the legislature. The legislature can initiate it.

Senator Molgat: However, it has to be passed here as well. Senator Phillips states that can be done at a later date. Can the government spend money on this project without such a resolution? Can it proceed to give the contract?

Senator Phillips: The government can award the contract. I would also point out that the government will not be spending money; it will only be the contractor that will be spending money. It is a private initiative, and the federal government will not be spending money.

Senator Frith: Does the government not have to put some money into a fund?

Senator Phillips: Not the federal government. The contractor has to put money into a fund.

Senator Molgat: Is there not a subsidy?

Senator Phillips: There is no subsidy to be paid to the contractor SCI until completion of the fixed link.

Senator Molgat: Can construction begin prior to having a resolution passed by the House of Commons and the Senate?

Senator Phillips: That is the opinion of the Department of Justice.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I must disassociate myself from these instant "rulings." If this is the case, Prince Edward Island has it made. They made a great mistake in passing their legislation. They should have kept the security of the boats. I cannot understand this sort of ruling that one can go right ahead without any of these constitutional things being done.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I guess what we are witnessing here is the Senate at its best. We are putting aside stiff rules and we are debating, in a very informal manner, critical and important issues.

Nevertheless, an amendment has been presented. I would like to speak to that amendment. If Your Honour would now put it, I would be in a position to speak to that amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cohen that this bill be read the second time.

It is further moved in amendment by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and adding the following words:
> "the Bill be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this date three months hence".

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I cannot match the eloquence of Senator Macquarrie, but I certainly can appreciate the depth of his feelings and his honesty about this issue of the fixed link crossing.

I will not specifically enter into the issue of the bridge. However, I am interested in peripheral issues. Nevertheless, I do not take those peripheral issues lightly.

I would certainly like to endorse the concern expressed by Senator Macquarrie as to the environmental impact of the project. That is a consideration that has bothered me ever since the exercise was launched. I felt very uneasy about the attempts to speed up the process. I thought it was rather indecent at times.

The environmental issues are real and they are fundamental. Some people will say, yes, it will damage the environment but, by golly, we need the development, we need the link, we need the growth. One has to look at this in the larger context. Today it is P.E.I., yesterday it was Canso, tomorrow it will be somewhere else. Gradually, little by little, we have been filling up our wetlands, to mankind's and wildlife's everlasting loss.

These matters are important, they are critical, and they deserve close scrutiny by this house. I tend to want to support Senator Macquarrie so that the Senate is given ample opportunity to examine all aspects of the project.

My peripheral concern is an important one. I speak here as a New Brunswicker, as one who was born practically next to the old Number 2 route which disappeared when we got the Trans-Canada Highway, the two-lane highway. We are now rebuilding short sections of the Trans-Canada Highway and converting it into a four-lane highway. It has been a very slow process. New Brunswick has just concluded another federal-provincial agreement to the tune of $300 million to continue that process.

If I am to believe Senator Phillips, the fixed link is going to generate traffic like you have never seen in your life. You are going to get tractor trailers heading down from Ontario and Quebec, rushing through New Brunswick, heading for the fixed link to P.E.I, taking its produce back to the heartland of this country. That is all fine as far as it goes.

Unfortunately, the Trans-Canada Highway in New Brunswick cannot accommodate much more heavy traffic. Traffic flow on the Trans-Canada Highway has reached its critical capacity. I think that has to be part of the overall concern with respect to the fixed link.

The outgoing Prime Minister has told New Brunswickers repeatedly that New Brunswick is in need of rebuilding the Trans-Canada Highway. The situation is a national shame. I am paraphrasing what he said. I may be almost quoting him, but I am not exaggerating what he said.

Therefore, as one who prefers to drive to New Brunswick and back, I do not look with great excitement at the increased loads of traffic on our roads. It is bad enough as it is. It is no fun to be caught with three or four tractor trailers in front of you, six more behind you, and two or three wanting to pass you, all on a two-lane highway. Every month we record tragic deaths in New Brunswick due to the incapacity of the present Trans-Canada Highway to bear the traffic.

This problem has been an ongoing concern of mine. I have raised this issue in the Senate from practically the first time I sat in this house. In spite of decrying the current situation, in spite of promises, the federal government has been proceeding at a turtle's pace.

I am all for Nova Scotia, P.E.I., and Newfoundland getting their share of the industrial potential of this country. I am all for them getting their goods to the markets of the world. However, we have to give ourselves the tools to do that in a safe way.

The premier of New Brunswick is all for this. That is fine. He did not consult me, and I do not expect him to consult me. Nevertheless, as a senator from New Brunswick, I am entitled as well to express my concerns. I am doing that today. Rather than just giving a blank-cheque go-ahead because it has great job development potential and everything else, New Brunswick should have insisted much more than it did for federal funding to rebuild the Trans-Canada Highway. It may be satisfied for now with a $300-million fund for road improvements on the Trans-Canada and elsewhere in New Brunswick, but to my mind, in the light of the fixed link project, we need an accelerated program.

Over the years with my family, I am one who has enjoyed the serenity — I use that word advisedly — the beauty and calm of Prince Edward Island. Do not talk to me about Parlee Beach in New Brunswick. I would rather go to some isolated beach on P.E.I. However, once the fixed link is built and once you have all these hundreds of thousands of tourists driving through, I am not sure that I would have the same incentive to go to a P.E.I. with a summer population built up much more than it is now. The grace of P.E.I. is that its position on the waters has kept the masses of the northeastern United States and the rest of Canada from deluging it with traffic, noise, and all the other trappings that go along with increased traffic.

Nevertheless, if the majority of people in P.E.I. think that that is good for business, is good for them, is good for growth, it is their choice. I will not question that. I know it bothers Senator Macquarrie a great deal.

Honourable senators, the critical question facing us now is the time frame we provide for study of this legislation. I would be willing to sit on a committee that is prepared to give careful consideration to the project as it is now before us. I am not simply volunteering when I say that, because I feel it is the duty of this house to do just that. The proponents of the project should not resist such a suggestion, in my opinion. If their cause is sound, if the project is sound, it would survive careful examination by a committee of the Senate.

I also believe that we should wait for the conclusion of proper and thorough environmental assessments before we proceed, unless there are guarantees of a nature such that the proponents of the bill commit themselves to abide by the environmental recommendations.

The matter is in your hands.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I must say that I always admire Senator Macquarrie's ability to go to the heart of the matter. I think that today he has demonstrated superlatively his capacity to do so. He has caused us to focus on the whole question of ends. Too often we concern ourselves only with mere means. We ask: "Can this be done? If so, let it be done." Seldom do we ask: "Ought we to do it?"

I have some problems with this bill. The interpretation clause states:

> "crossing" means a fixed structure that provides a means of crossing the Northumberland Strait and includes all facilities and appurtenances related to that fixed structure;

I understand that those words in this context mean a bridge. As Senator Phillips and Senator Macquarrie both know, there has been talk about a fixed link between the mainland of Canada and Prince Edward Island, or vice versa, for a long time. When Prime Minister Diefenbaker was in office, he set up a consortium of distinguished engineering firms to look into and, if feasible, to propose a fixed link.

That consortium produced a highly sophisticated design suitable for the peculiar circumstances of the Northumberland Strait. Do not ask me to go through all the details, honourable senators. As I recall, there was a causeway section at each end. There was an artifical island somewhere toward the middle. There was a bridge section and then two tunnel sections.

All this complexity was thought necessary because of the special circumstances which had to be dealt with there. First, as I recall, they took cognizance of the fact that there are great floes of ice which endanger the pillars on which a bridge would rest. They took cognizance of the fact that they did not want to interrupt the movement of ice floes. The design took into account the movements of fish. It took into account the need to avoid the interruption of navigation.

The tunnel sections were intended to assure that automobiles were not moving across a structure high up in the air for long distances, particularly in winter.

Another factor which had to be taken into account was that it had been ascertained that the rock under the seabed was shattered. This would make a tunnel expensive because it would have to be armoured. The shattered rock also made it difficult to provide the foundation for bridge structures.

As honourable senators know, the government changed in 1963. Tenders were called for the first portion of the fixed link. That was the causeway section on the New Brunswick side. The bids came in. If I recall correctly, the lowest bid was around $43 million. The engineers had estimated it at about $22 million.

The government of the day said, "Look, if they're that far wrong on putting a pile of rocks out into the strait, how can we trust their estimates for the tunnel sections, for the artifical islands and for the bridge?" The government of the day said, "We simply cannot rely on those estimates."

I remember asking a senior deputy minister in the Department of Public Works why the estimates were so far wrong. What he said was, "The consultants have produced a perfect plan. It is wonderful on paper. But the contractors will have to cope with the real-world circumstances of the Northumberland Strait."

That experience, which goes back now a quarter of a century, makes me wonder about how much realism underlies what is now being proposed. We are to have this bridge reaching out across the Northumberland Strait which, at certain times of the year, is as bad a stretch of water as you can find anywhere in the world. It is an area subject to blizzard conditions.

The Canso causeway connecting the mainland of Nova Scotia to Cape Breton Island is not very long. It is a mile and a quarter at the most. You can have a snap blizzard there, which is especially intense and dangerous, particularly when accumulated snow blows across 60 or 70 miles of ice. Just think of the joy of being out on that bridge, halfway between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, on February 27 when a sudden blizzard springs up. I wonder if the people who have come up with this design know the circumstances with which they intend to contend.

I have great sympathy for Senator Macquarrie's motion. If he needs a seconder, although I think he already has one, I am quite prepared to second it. If he wants a vote, I will vote with him.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I should ask whether it is the intention of the Senate not to see the clock?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That has been agreed to, Your Honour.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cohen, that this bill be read the second time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator DeWare:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and adding the following words:
> "the Bill be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this day three months hence".

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment, please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion in amendment, please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Senator Macquarrie: On division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cohen, that this bill be now read the second time. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk moved the third reading of Bill C-121, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend another Act in consequence thereof.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Those in favour, say "yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Those contrary, say "nay".

Some Hon. senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Carried, on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

CRIMINAL CODE
YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cohen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Desmarais, for the second reading of Bill C-126, to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity of speaking on Bill C-126 which is commonly referred to as the anti-stalking legislation. I had an opportunity to listen to Senator Cohen introduce the bill yesterday. The senator spoke very well and with great lucidity. I congratulate her on her maiden speech.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stanbury: I agree with Senator Cohen that the principle of the bill is very laudable and, for that reason, I recommend that we not delay its progress. Accordingly, this bill should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs forthwith.

Nevertheless, I am not yet convinced that all aspects of the legislation have been well vetted and are completely workable. Of course, it should be noted that this is not just an anti-stalking bill. It is almost an omnibus bill. Everything has been thrown into it but the kitchen sink.

Senators may know that this bill received all-party support in the House of Commons. There is little doubt that the provisions contained in the bill, which are, as I have said, much more far-reaching than just anti-stalking, are worthwhile. I do not challenge the need for the legislation. At the same time, I do have concerns about how Bill C-126 fulfils this need and whether it may not actually be precipitating some unintended consequences.

I found it somewhat curious that there has been little parliamentary opposition to the bill, given some of the comments I have read in the press lately. The headlines have been dramatic to say the least:

> Stalker law under fire.
> Stalking bill is 'gravely flawed': NAC.
> Stalking law gives 'illusion of safety,' Boyd tells MPs.
> Stalking law could put women on trial, group warns.

With these objections in mind, honourable senators, I would like to quickly review some of the more serious concerns that have been expressed about this legislation and some of the questions that require answers before I can be satisfied about this bill's receiving Royal Assent without amendment.

There is a lack of definition of the term "reasonable fear", the test for those pressing charges. Representatives of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women have questioned whether there may be some practical, harmful consequences of this test.

The National Action Committee, NAC, has gone so far as to say that the bill is "gravely flawed" and that:

> ...a law that is unenforceable or poorly enforced or enforced at the expense of women victims is worse than no law at all.

Would this bill, as a federal statute, provide the provincial governments with an unenforceable law? It is the provinces that have the responsibility for administration and prosecution. Ontario's Attorney General, Marion Boyd, has already cast doubt upon the enforceability of this legislation and suggested that, if the bill is not changed:

> ...those of us at the provincial level will be trying to enforce and prosecute a law that won't work.

It has been suggested that there may be some contention between this bill and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We must be satisfied that no conflicts with the Charter exist prior to acceptance. After all, what is the purpose of allowing this bill to go forward if it will only be defeated in whole or in part by the courts?

Several other problems have been raised which will have to be studied by our committee. Honourable senators, I ask that you consider this bill and pay some attention to the work of the legal and constitutional affairs committee as it hears witnesses and considers its report. It would be a shame if a worthy objective were spoiled by an ill-conceived and hastily-written bill. That is one of our concerns. It was one of Senator Macquarrie's concerns in the previous discussion and it has been one of our concerns in these bills that are coming to us at the last moment. They are ill-conceived and hastily written.

With some modesty, I believe that it is up to the Senate to provide a cautionary examination and possibly amendments to clear up some of the problems that have been identified. Bill C-126 should go to committee as quickly as possible.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cohen, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN PETROLEUM-RELATED ACTS IN RESPECT OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS AND TO CONFIRM THE VALIDITY OF A CERTAIN REGULATION

SECOND READING

Hon. Gérald J. Comeau moved the second reading of Bill C-106, to amend certain petroleum-related Acts in respect of Canadian ownership requirements and to confirm the validity of a certain regulation.

He said: Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to lead off the Senate debate on second reading of Bill C-106, which eliminates Canadian ownership requirements. Before discussing the content of this bill, which would eliminate the 50 per cent Canadian ownership requirement to qualify for a production licence to operate in frontier lands, I would like to say a few words about oil and gas exploration in those areas.

Canada's conventional oil resources are declining. Although the western sedimentary basin contains a high volume of as yet untapped reserve, it is clear that we will increasingly depend on non-conventional sources and reserves in the frontier areas, which will play a key role as part of our future energy supply.

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources estimates there is a 50 per cent probability that the frontier lands contain at least three billion cubic metres of petroleum and about eight billion cubic metres of natural gas. Only 15 per cent of these resources has already been discovered — 655 million cubic metres of oil and 1.14 billion cubic metres of natural gas — and only a small percentage has been developed.

Only four oil fields and two gas fields are currently in production in the frontier areas.

There are, of course, a number of major development projects in the frontier areas, including Terra Nova off the coast of Newfoundland, the Venture gas field off the coast of Nova Scotia and Amauligak in the Beaufort Sea.

There are also many excellent sites where no drilling has been done at all.

Unfortunately, there is currently very little exploration activity in the frontier areas, and although the industry continues to look at various possibilities, no specific development projects have been announced.

Although this is due to a number of factors, it is clear that our frontier lands are not attractive to Canadian and foreign oil companies, compared with sites in other parts of the world. Many of the major foreign players in the industry are directing a substantial part of the exploration and development budgets to projects in the former Soviet Union, where Canadian oil companies are also very active, in addition to their interests in Southeast Asia and South America.

Throughout the world, countries are updating or fine-tuning their oil and gas legislation to enable them to better compete for investment dollars. There is a steady stream of representatives or agents of countries visiting Canada and other developed countries to describe their modernized exploration and production regime and to invite companies to shift some of their limited exploration budgets to these areas.

Canada must compete for the capital to explore and develop its frontier lands. In order to be competitive, we have to have a regime in place that signals to industry that if they make a discovery on the frontier lands, they will be able to bring it to production without having to contend with the current, complex Canadian ownership requirements.

According to the several hundred international and Canadian oil and gas companies surveyed by Salomon Brothers for the January, 1993 edition of their annual, Comprehensive Survey and Analysis of Worldwide Oil and Gas Exploration and Production Expenditures, the Pacific/Far East is considered the most attractive area on a world-wide basis to explore for oil and gas. Canada, unfortunately, ranked last.

Unless we remove impediments such as the Canadian ownership requirement, this situation is unlikely to change. As the former head of Canadian Petroleum Association, the predecessor to the current Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, noted in a 1991 letter to EMR:

> The Canadian Ownership Rate provisions can significantly reduce the reward for project risk since the fair market value of a share of a developable field...sold to meet Canadian ownership requirements would not likely cover exploration costs.

The government recognizes that frontier development is more likely to take place when a variety of investors can be attracted.

The removal of the Canadian ownership requirement is an important step toward achieving an investment climate for the petroleum industry which is similar to that enjoyed by other sectors of the economy.

This bill would eliminate the Canadian ownership provisions in three pieces of federal legislation; the Canadian Petroleum Resources Act, the Canada-Newfoundland Accord Implementation Act and the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Petroleum Resources Accord Implementation Act.

The most significant change is the elimination of the minimum 50-per-cent Canadian ownership requirement for production licences. This means that companies will no longer be required to meet this Canadian ownership target when investing in frontier oil and gas resource development.

Industry will no longer be required to seek ministerial approval to transfer ownership in a frontier oil and gas production licence. The decision to invest in frontier projects will be based on the financial and technical capabilities of the interest owners, not on whether the Canadian ownership content in the production licence meets a minimum 50-per-cent rate.

The provisions of the current legislation which allow individuals to hold production licences, and the related Canadian residency requirements, will be repealed. Once the bill is passed, only a corporation incorporated in Canada will be allowed to hold a production licence or a share in a production licence. This will provide legal benefit to the Crown in terms of corporate liability in case any problems arise.

It is not in Canada's interest to insist upon an arbitrary level of Canadian ownership in high risk energy projects, if it simply results in the underdevelopment of those resources.

We need to attract additional sources of capital to foster exploration and development, to secure our energy future, to ensure the health of the petroleum industry and the economy, to make Canada competitive, and to maintain the prosperity of Canadians.

This bill is an affirmation of Canada's commitment to a strong, vibrant, open and competitive economy. I hope we can count on the support of senators for the bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Comeau for his explanatory remarks.

I must say that, at first, I was not very happy with this bill. Although my province is not an oil producing province, out West we were not, on the whole, very supportive of the program proposed by the government at the time.

However, we still felt that as far as natural resources and, especially, our oil reserves were concerned, it was important for Canada to control those resources. To us, the Canadian ownership requirement as a prerequisite for developing those resources seemed quite reasonable. However, I must admit times have changed. Today, many countries which formerly would not have allowed foreign ownership are now prepared to do so.

For instance, in Venezuela and in those parts of the former Soviet Union that are now open to foreign investment, facilities are being extended to multinational companies to invest in drilling projects. As a result, it has become less attractive to invest in Canada. A good example is the situation in Alberta, our main oil producing province, where development is lagging. After being in the forefront for many years, this formerly wealthy oil producing province is now in financial trouble.

In the final analysis, I feel, be it with some reluctance, that I must support this bill.

I repeat, this is only second best. It is not what I would have preferred, but we must be realistic.

This is not to say that at some later date I would not support stricter controls on investment in Canada, if circumstances were to change. However, for the time being, I am prepared to accept this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Comeau, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have received a request, and I believe Senator Molgat is aware of this, from both the chairman and the deputy-chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to ask leave to call Bill C-128. Time is getting relatively short and they would like to get that bill before the committee as soon as possible and at approximately the same time as Bill C-126. I understand that the same officials and some of the same witnesses are interested in both bills.

With leave, can we call Bill C-128?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, regarding Bill C-128, Senator Stanbury spoke to me about this matter. On the understanding that I have from him that they will be hearing from the same witnesses for the two bills, it seems logical that we proceed in that way. At his request, I am prepared to grant leave.

CRIMINAL CODE
CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman moved the second reading of Bill C-128, to amend the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff (child pornography and corrupting morals).

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to say thank you to the honourable senators on both sides of this chamber for the manner in which they have accepted me into the Senate. I should also like to thank the staff for the help they have given me in getting my office almost ready for work, and helping me somewhat in preparing this short speech.

When I was first given this task, I was made to understand that I would be making this speech on Monday next, and I did some reading on the subject. There is a lot of reading that can be done on this bill, and there has been a lot of work done on it. Notwithstanding that, I heard later that I would be giving my maiden speech today. I took one hour off and have done the best that I can.

Bill C-128 is about pornography. More particularly, it is about pornography dealing with children. Before I began looking into this matter, I did not appreciate the severity of this problem. For example, I did not know — and I do not know if all honourable senators know — that there is an organization in Canada and in the United States known as the North America Men-Boy Love Association. I have just seen this for the first time today. It is a disgusting publication, but there is nothing one can do about it at the moment. The law in respect of pornography as it stands today does not prevent anyone, be it male, female, older person, or a person under 18, from possessing pornography.

The main purpose of this bill — it has another purpose which may be somewhat redundant but it is there, nevertheless — is to prevent people from possessing pornography in respect to children under the age of 18, or to prevent persons over that age depicting themselves as persons under the age of 18 years.

Two commissions have dealt with this problem, one in 1984 and one in 1985; the Badgley Commission and the Fraser Commission both recommended that something should be done to change the law in this regard.

I was reluctant to take on this task, because, although I practised law for 46 years, I have handled very few criminal matters. This particular criminal matter was heard by the Supreme Court in June 1991 and was reported in February 1992. It was a case heard by all nine judges of the Supreme Court. There were 11 counsel representing 11 other parties, including attorneys general from a number of the provinces. I also found, to my amazement, that one of the partners in my law firm — of which I am an associate and not a partner — also participated in the hearing.

The judgment is a long one, but for the purposes of my discussion now, I want to read section 163(8) of the Criminal Code. This is the law as it stands today. It says:

> For the purposes of this Act, any publication, a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex in any one or more of the following subjects, namely, crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

It also happened that this case was heard first by Mr. Justice Wright in the Court of Queen's bench in Manitoba, then appealed to the Court of Appeal and heard there by Mr. Justice Twaddle, Mr. Justice O'Sullivan and Mr. Justice Hubensett, and then appealed further to the Supreme Court, and there heard by nine justices. The reason for the case is that the person who was running this video store in Winnipeg was showing what they call hard porn. He, or his counsel on his behalf, quoted the Charter of Rights, which says:

> Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:
> (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication.

He said that was one of the freedoms to which he was entitled in showing what was known as hard porn.

However, the argument on the other side, upheld by Mr. Justice Sopinka, was that section 1 of the Charter, which gives you that right, also says:

> The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

The question then was; yes, you have that fundamental freedom under section 2, but was it reasonably prescribed by law as can be "demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society." The court in this case said "no". For the purpose of our case in the obiter of the two judges who wrote the decision — all the judges agreed — Justice Sopinka said on page 30 of the reasons for judgment in talking about pornography:

> Pornography can usually be divided into three categories: (1) explicit sex with violence, (2) explicit sex without violence but which subjects people to treatment that is degrading or dehumanizing, and (3) explicit sex without violence that is neither degrading nor dehumanizing. Violence in this context includes both actual physical violence and threats of physical violence. Relating these three categories to the terms of s.163(8)...the first, explicit sex coupled with violence, is expressly mentioned. Sex coupled with crime, horror or cruelty will sometimes involve violence. Cruelty, for instance, will usually do so. But, even in the absence of violence sex coupled with crime, horror or cruelty may fall within the second category. As for category (3), subject to the exception referred to below, it is not covered.

Therefore, (3) is explicit sex without violence that is neither degrading nor dehumanizing. He said that that would not be caught, excluding the exception. Further on Mr. Justice Sopinka said:

> In making this determination with respect to the three categories of pornography referred to above, the portrayal of sex coupled with violence will almost always constitute the undue exploitation of sex. Explicit sex which is degrading or dehumanizing may be undue if the risk of harm is substantial. Finally, explicit sex that is not violent and neither degrading nor dehumanizing is generally tolerated in our society and will not qualify as that undue exploitation of sex unless it employs children in its production.

Mr. Justice Gonthier also made reference to that matter again. He said:

> The content of the third category of materials is generally perceived as unlikely to cause harm, as Mr. Justice Sopinka rightly points out. He mentions as an exception, child pornography, i.e. materials in the production of which children were employed. This exception is important, since it obviously flows from the high likelihood of harm ensuing from the production and dissemination of child pornography.

It is those words by both those justices that encouraged and gave support to the government in bringing forth this particular bill. The nine judges were unanimous. It may well be challenged and we might well expect it to be challenged, but it should be upheld because what the judges said is encouraging; in that an attack under the Charter will not be successful.

The government wants those who have possession of pornography that involves children under 18, or the depiction of children under 18 performing sexual acts, to stop. This legislation was the subject of a long hearing in the House of Commons and there was much discussion in committee. Without exception the media, CBC, ACTRA, all these various associations are in favour of the principle. Some did say that there were things about the legislation they might want worded differently. It was suggested in the Commons that perhaps we should not include persons over 18 who are depicting children under 18. The important point here is that even though they maybe over the age of 18, such pictures depicting children will affect children. Those pictures may be passed around and you will still get things like this publication, which is unbelievable. For a person who has lived 70 years, I have never seen anything like it.

Time is short and there is a lot more I wanted to say. I ask honourable senators to support this bill. I would like it to go to committee. I hope that this can be done soon and that we can pass it. There cannot be many people against the bill as it is worded.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, we are all most grateful to Senator Jessiman for his careful explanation of the bill. Again, I have the good fortune to be able to congratulate two freshman senators on their maiden speeches today. I do so very genuinely, Senator Jessiman.

Honourable senators, this is a very unhappy subject, as I noted Senator Jessiman was saying. It was with great sadness that I approached the task of speaking about this bill. The activities it purports to penalize disgust me, and I can think of no penalty that I would regard as inappropriate for the sick spectacles the bill is intended to proscribe.

However, we are a legislative body. We cannot carelessly define offences against our senses as offences against the law; and we cannot so carelessly define offences as to leave in danger those who are the innocent creators of our art and literature.

There are respectable and responsible members and organizations of our society who believe that this bill is too imprecise, too far-reaching, too quickly put together and therefore dangerous. There are also excellent legal minds which believe that this bill is so offensive to our Charter of Rights that it will not survive the first Supreme Court challenge — an expensive and unfair way to find out that we were wrong. Whether we agree with these responsible members of our society or not, we must give them an opportunity to testify before a Senate committee.

Since time is short, I will simply ask that Bill C-128 be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs immediately.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Beaudoin, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Is this the last series of reports for this part of the session?

[Translation]

Senator Lavoie-Roux: I am not sure I heard you correctly, Senator Corbin. I assumed you were going to start on a new topic. Did you ask whether there would be further reports?

Senator Corbin: That was my question. Are these the last reports from the committee?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: There is one more report, which will be tabled Monday afternoon.

Senator Corbin: A report on what, honourable senator?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: A report on a policy we have been discussing for quite some time, concerning travel expenses for trips to Ottawa and other expenses incurred while in the capital.

Senator Corbin: Thank you, honourable senator.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the disastrous record of the Mulroney administration from 1984, when it first broke faith with the Canadian people, to 1993, when the Prime Minister announced his resignation. — (Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, remember the manufactured glitter of national reconciliation in the Throne Speech of November 5, 1984, advanced as one of the key objectives of the new Mulroney team? Let us look at how the Mulroneyists went about achieving national reconciliation.

On May 28, 1993, in a speech before the Confederation Club here in Ottawa, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney gave his version of what transpired.

He began by warning:

> Revisionism and myth-making are constant companions of political controversy.

Stay tuned. Virtually everything he then subsequently uttered proved the truth of that statement. He said:

> Today I want to speak from the record and indeed he soon distanced himself from the record and his imagination took over.

Let us start with his own attitude to the agreement reached by nine provinces and the federal government to patriate the Constitution with an amending formula and a Charter of Rights. The agreement was reached on November 5, 1981, and the Constitution was patriated the following year.

I have already mentioned in Part 3 how Mr. Mulroney had supported Prime Minister Trudeau's earlier attempt to unilaterally patriate the Constitution. In his Ottawa speech, Mr. Mulroney admits that he was generally supportive of Mr. Trudeau's initiative in 1980. However, when it came to the actual patriation package and the politics of his earlier loyalty to the principle, he became uncomfortable and, to paraphrase, policy soon sat above conscience. Here is what he said last month:

> The myth created by some revisionists, however — that my generally-supportive position expressed in 1980 implied assent to all aspects of the final product — which had been modified often during the process and —

Senator Simard: Dispense, please.

Senator Frith: I am not going to dispense. You don't want to dispense with Mr. Mulroney, for goodness sake.

Senator Stewart: But they have.

Senator Simard: He is gone. Why worry about it. Are you worried about his ghost now?

Senator Frith: There was no night of denial. Surely Senator Simard was not there playing Brutus.

Senator Molgat: How short memories are.

Senator Frith: I will carry on.

> The myth created by some revisionists, however — that my generally-supportive position expressed in 1980 implied assent to all aspects of the final product — which had been modified often during the process and into which the now infamous notwithstanding clause had been inserted at the last moment, sometime between November 4 and November 5, 1981 — is false. In fact, I had specifically rejected any approach that reduced the powers of the Quebec National Assembly, which this final amendment did.

It is not the alleged myth which is false, but rather the statement itself. Therefore, if the statement is allowed to become part of the historic record, that record will be false.

The truth, his own truth, is that Mr. Mulroney supported the agreement of November 5, 1981. He thought it was legitimate and that it represented a national consensus.

In his book Where I Stand, Mr. Mulroney reprinted a series of speeches he gave while a private citizen. One of the speeches contained in that slim volume is one made to the fundraising dinner for the Regional Federation of Servecom Associations of the North Shore at Hôtel Le Manoir, Baie-Comeau, Quebec, November 14, 1981.

That is nine days after the patriation agreement of November 5, 1981, and not during the period of his so-called general support in 1980, which he said changed immediately after.

That speech of November 14, 1981, is reprinted on pages 62 to 66 of his book. At page 65, he says:

> But if Mr. Trudeau feels victorious, he should remember the words of Churchill, who, God knows, knew defeat and disappointment and finally the most exalting moments: "In victory, magnanimity."

That is what the book says, but that is not what Mr. Mulroney said on November 14, 1981, in Baie-Comeau. The Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 24, 1981, printed large extracts from that same November 14 speech. This is what it says:

> But, if Mr. Trudeau today feels victorious — and why not? — did he not ably negotiate a national consensus which is really "legitimate"? — he should remember the words of Churchill, who, God knows, knew defeat and disappointment and finally the most exalting moments: "In victory, magnanimity."

When he reprinted the speech in his book Where I Stand, the words > and why not? — did he not ably negotiate a national consensus which is really "legitimate"?

disappeared. They vanish as if never spoken. There is no subtlety to his revisionism. It is the Stalinist technique. Don't refine history, abolish it.

Listen once again to what he actually said of Prime Minister Trudeau nine days after Trudeau and nine provincial premiers agreed on the patriation of the constitution, an agreement that left Quebec premier René Lévesque allegedly out in the cold. This is Mr. Mulroney:

> did he not ably negotiate a national consensus which is really "legitimate"

In Mr. Mulroney's own words, the November 5, 1981 patriation agreement was "legitimate," it was "ably negotiated", and it represented "a national consensus". That stand, which he took in November 1981, disappears in his 1983 book Where I Stand, and now, in 1993, he says the suggestion that he supported the agreement is "a myth" and "is false". He now says that the agreement was actually "an ominous moment in the evolution of the Canadian federation." Again we have the smell of revisionism: Don't just delete; if possible, reinvent and then replace.

This alteration of what he actually said on November 14, 1981, was Mr. Mulroney's first foray into constitutional myth-making and revisionism. He started in 1981, and he has kept up ever since.

In his speech of last month, instead of admitting he in fact supported the patriation agreement, Mr. Mulroney declares that any such assertions are false and then approvingly quotes Ernest Manning, who called the agreement "a ticking constitutional time bomb". It was a time bomb that Mr. Mulroney then had to try to diffuse. That is the way he wants the record to read. That scenario is hard to sell to customers who know that he believed and said that the patriation agreement was legitimate and represented a national consensus. He tries to convince those same customers who remember the truth that they are the revisionists and myth-makers.

That is the important basic truth about the salesman. As we continue with our examination of his record, we should keep that in mind, namely that he was trying to change and falsify the record even before presenting himself to the electorate for the first time.

[Senator Frith]

Even after all the examples we have seen of his duplicity, I am still astonished with the way he doggedly and relentlessly defends a story he knows is not true. Until this Chronicle-Herald article was drawn to my attention, I had not seen a statement by Mr. Mulroney himself that he supported the patriation agreement of 1981. I had heard others say so, but I had not found any document quoting him directly. However, his support was no secret to those who knew him.

On January 25, 1990, in an Ottawa Citizen article, Peter Blaikie, former national president of the Progressive Conservative Party, was quoted as saying:

> I don't think it's any secret that during the period '80 to '83, Brian Mulroney was very supportive of Pierre Trudeau. ... He was one of the cheerleaders for all that ... and the revisionism now is absolutely staggering.

(1910)

Following Mr. Mulroney's recent Ottawa speech, Mr. Blaikie said, "If one wants to search for revisionism, there is no greater revisionism that Brian Mulroney's own...when he was absolutely a fervent supporter of Pierre Trudeau's position. Basically, so was I."

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. It is obvious that, for lack of interest, and certainly for lack of a quorum, the sitting of the Senate should be suspended.

Senator Frith: Is Senator Simard calling a quorum?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Ring the bells and advise senators in the adjoining rooms.

Senator Simard: There is no interest.

Senator Frith: Are you calling for a quorum, sir?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: A quorum has been called.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, why can't we continue? Senator Frith is close to being finished with his speech.

Senator Simard: Senator Frith can continue, but there is obviously lack of interest.

Senator Corbin: Speak for yourself. That is an insult to all other senators who are listening attentively.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, we have a quorum.

Senator Frith: "If one wants to search for revisionism, there is no greater revisionism than Brian Mulroney's own... when he was absolutely a fervent support of Pierre Trudeau's position. Basically, so was I", says Mr. Blaikie.

Jeffrey Simpson in the Globe and Mail of January 4, 1990, wrote:

> (Mulroney's) outrageous distortion is too great to let go unchallenged. I remember as if it were yesterday a long lunch at the Mount Royal Club in Montreal in January 1981 with private citizen Brian Mulroney, in which he went on at great length against the 'community of communities' approach to Canada of then-Conservative leader Joe Clark.
> In the course of that animated soliloquy, Mr. Mulroney said emphatically that Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, faced with a separatist government in Quebec, would have no choice but to bring home the Constitution over Quebec's objections.
> Later on, when the patriation debate heated up, Mr. Mulroney again said privately that he supported what the Liberals were doing, given the circumstances that presented themselves at the time in Quebec. For Mr. Mulroney to say now that the whole exercise was done by people celebrating 'in striped pants' is a gross perversion of his own attitudes.

It makes one wonder how Mr. Mulroney can believe that he can continue the deception, in spite of the evidence from everyone who knows what he said and where he then stood. He must have been so uncomfortable with the truth that he wiped from his mind his own words supporting the 1981-82 patriation of the Constitution. He said it; it was reported in the Chronicle-Herald; Mr. Blaikie knew, and he said to it to Mr. Simpson. But now he says otherwise. Because he is on the record in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 24, 1981, he is on the record as saying, of Mr. Trudeau's successful patriation gambit, "Did he not ably negotiate a national consensus which is really 'legitimate'". Those are his words. Twelve years later he says he speaks "for the record" and begins right off the bat by denying it.

Perhaps, in retrospect, it is not surprising that the constitutional talks, when led by a man with such shiftily held constitutional principles, were doomed to failure. They certainly started cautiously and innocently enough.

In December 1985, Bourassa's Liberal government replaced Lévesque's separatist administration. As discussion began between Ottawa, Quebec and the other provinces, there was no hint of urgency. Gil Rémillard, Quebec Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, said that without some indication of a solution he was not particularly interested in engaging in constitutional talks. He said, "Without that, we'd stay where we are," as reported in an article in the Globe and Mail of August 5, 1986. This observation brought no gasps of dismay, no anguished cries of betrayal from anyone anywhere.

The federal government's pointsman on this portfolio, Senator Lowell Murray, was very candid about the mood of the country in 1987. As reported in the Toronto Star of March 4, 1987, Senator Murray said:

> I don't think there is any interest whatsoever from the population of the country on the Constitution — none whatsoever...It's just not an issue.

Senator Murray was correct: there was no interest whatsoever, not even in Quebec. Although interest was low, the Constitution nevertheless remained a potentially explosive issue. That was clearly recognized by Senator Murray, when he said:

> ...we do not want to embark on any formal negotiations unless we are convinced that the chances for success are good. We must spare the country unnecessary agony.

That was from Maclean's, August 25, 1986.

In retrospect "unnecessary agony" turned out to be the exactly right way to describe what, in fact, has taken place over the past six years.

When did Senator Murray change his judgment? Well, early in 1987, Senator Murray's views had still not changed. "We're not going to go into formal negotiations unless we think there's a very good chance of succeeding," Murray said. "We don't want another failure. We think it'd be very bad for the country." That was reported in the Toronto Star on March 4, 1987. He certainly had it right — Then! Opening this portfolio and failing, for whatever reason, would be bad for the country.

Although the risks were very high, they were nevertheless taken. Who chose to assume those risks? Part of the answer can be found in an interview Senator Murray gave to Don Braid, which appeared in the Gazette of September 9, 1986. Apparently, it was up to Senator Murray to advise the Prime Minister whether a deal was possible before the next election, or whether it should be put off until much later. Senator Murray stated:

> The Prime Minister would also want to hear from me, from a person in whose political judgment he has some confidence, if it's not on. I hope I don't have to tell him that, but I'll do so if that's my judgment.

We can only deduce that Senator Murray, in whose political judgment the PM had confidence, at some point advised that formal negotiations were warranted.

Quebec's goals were well known — its five demands had long been in the public domain. The federal government, on the other hand, was tight-lipped about its position. What appeared in the public domain from Ottawa was a commitment to broker a deal, but no information on what the federal government was or was not willing to contribute. Only when the Meech Lake Accord was struck on April 30, 1987, were Canadians made aware that the bottom line for the Mulroney team was Quebec's five conditions, plus.

Even Bourassa was shocked at what had transpired at Meech Lake.

> We didn't expect, after 20 years, to reach an agreement. Then suddenly, without warning, there it is: an agreement.

That was reported in the Toronto Star on May 4, 1987.

Bourassa confirmed that, as far as he was concerned, there was no urgency:

> We could have waited until next year, we could have waited until after the next federal election.
> We were under no pressure; I was serene. But when I saw that it was falling to us piece by piece, I said to myself: Bien voilà, there it is.

Years later, Ghislain Fortin, former Senior Adviser to both Bourassa and Ryan, and one of those who helped draft Quebec's five conditions, admitted that he was astonished when Meech Lake was concluded. "I fell out of my chair when I learned (of the Meech Lake Accord) on April 30, 1987." He then said:

> I was of the view that it was too much for English Canada...I always felt it was something to (get) past the (1985) election.
> ...if people had said no to Meech in 1987, we would have moved on to other things...Since it was accepted, it was blown beyond proportion...it became a symbol of what English Canada accepts.

That was from the Globe and Mail of March 9, 1990.

However, the Mulroneyism was not ready to move on to other things. It relentlessly pushed forward with Meech Lake and started a disastrous chain of events which culminated five and a half years later in a national referendum.

One of the elements of Meech which caused perhaps the greatest acrimony was the recognition of Quebec, within the body of the Constitution, as a distinct society.

This had not been one of Quebec's original five demands.

Quebec had been seeking recognition as a distinct society within the preamble of the Constitution. For those with short memories, I refer you back to the following newspaper articles, which are on the record: Southam News byline, Ottawa Citizen of July 12, 1986; Joel Ruimy from the Toronto Star of March 4, 1987; Eugene Forsey from the Globe and Mail of March 17, 1987; and Jeffrey Simpson from April 19, 1987.

All these articles described how Quebec wanted recognition in the preamble. Lest Quebec's demands escape the attention of the federal government negotiators, La Presse, on April 25, 1987, only days before the Meech-fest was due to begin, printed a large chart of Premier Bourassa's demands. One of them was:

> Recognizing, in the preamble of the Constitution, given that Quebec is a distinct society.

[English]

This would have been acceptable to Mr. Mulroney's predecessor government, and to most of Meech's most vocal critics, including Clyde Wells, Frank McKenna and Sharon Carstairs. However, entering the meeting with the demand of recognition within a preamble, and leaving it with that recognition within the text of the Constitution itself, Bourassa had every reason to be pleased.

But what of the federal negotiatiors? Was this raising of the stakes a make-or-break item for Bourassa? In retrospect, I believe that had Meech met Quebec's five demands as originally and publicly presented, the course of the debate would have been much different. If it had been a bottom-line item, I agree with Ghislain Fortin that it would have been preferable had Meech failed on April 30, 1987, to what has occurred to date. If it had remained in the preamble, Meech might have passed.

The willingness of the Mulroney team to so quickly embrace this new demand of Bourassa's was one of two crucial, fatal and characteristic errors in political judgment. They were expensive ones for the country.

The other error, of course, was the outright dismissal of any public participation, meaningful or otherwise.

When Senator Murray, the Mulroney team's chief negotiator, reported to the Senate on May 5, 1987, he was understandably proud of what had been achieved. As reported at page 932 of the Debates of the Senate for that day, he said:

> ...the accord is an eloquent demonstration of the government's commitment to make national reconciliation a basic principle of our political and constitutional existence.

He then explained what would come next — a first ministers' conference to ratify the legal text, and then resolutions in Parliament and all legislative assemblies. Conspicuously absent was any role for the people of Canada. The terms "egregious error" and "seamless web" had yet to be coined by Senator Murray, but the die was cast.

On June 2, 1987, the 11 participants met at the Langevin Block to ratify the legal text. Some 19 hours later, at dawn the following day, they staggered out, dazed, but successful. Canadians were surprised by this new negotiating technique. Little did they know that it was just the beginning of a whole new and astonishing style that was to turn negotiating into some kind of casino or carnival game.

On the evening of June 4, Prime Minister Mulroney, addressing the nation on the Constitution, said:

> I speak to you tonight at a time of renewed purpose for our country, at a moment of renewed unity for our people. Tonight, Canada is whole again, the Canadian family is together again, and the nation is one again.

Mulroney's declaration that "Canada is whole again" on that June 4, will join in the history books with other world-class errors of political judgment.

In a speech he gave years earlier on November 14, 1980, he had definite ideas about how governments should go about amending constitutions. This quotation is from his book, Where I Stand:

> The debate would be entirely open to the public at all times. There would be no sessions behind closed doors. Canadians could see and judge those who have been elected to serve them and determine if, in the interest of a more generous country, they have really answered an urgent and irresistible call to grandeur.

If honourable senators wish to look that quotation up, they will find it at pages 61 and 62 of the book. What is worth noticing is that the words, "There would be no sessions behind closed doors." were in italics. It is the only italicized passage that I could see in the whole book.

Yet, when the deed had been done, it had been done entirely behind closed doors. There had been no open sessions — not a single one.

With the agreement — not the negotiations — now in the open, the citizens of some provinces were asked to participate in public hearings by their provincial governments prior to ratification, but others were not. The Quebec and Saskatchewan legislatures quickly approved the deal, holding no hearings. In Ottawa, the Joint Senate and House of Commons hearings quickly dissolved into a charade after Senator Murray told the members what the Mulroney team expected of them. He said:

> ...the accord is a seamless web and an integrated whole...it should not be lightly tampered with...Your public hearings will ensure that the text of the amendment is carefully scrutinized before adoption. If it should come to light that there are egregious errors in the drafting, we would have an opportunity to address them, while bearing in mind that any change would have to meet the test of unanimity.

Reporters and others turning to their dictionaries found that "egregious", coming immediately after "egomania" and "egotism", meant "shocking, remarkable...standing out from the flock".

Andre Ouellet expressed the frustration of all Liberal members when he said, as reported in the Toronto Star of August 9, 1987:

> ...the government's position is that the hearings should be held to publicize the accord and not to change it. Our position is the reverse — that the hearings should lead to some changes.

Unfortunately for the accord and for the country, this was not to be. Mulroney and Murray were the engineers on this constitutional train. They had no intention of taking their hands off the throttle, and there were to be no new passengers. The train was going non-stop.

No one was surprised when Senator Murray concluded in September of 1987 that the joint committee had discovered no egregious errors. As reported in the Ottawa Citizen of September 10, 1987, he warned that if the accord were reopened to accommodate even one change, this "would lead to irresistible pressure for others, and the accord would soon unravel". The consequences to future generations would be "grave", he declared.

In the following years, any opposition to the accord was either ridiculed, or wished away. Amendments introduced here in the Senate by the Liberals were denounced as "killer amendments" by Senator Murray, when in fact they could have saved the accord. Changes of governments in New Brunswick, Manitoba and Newfoundland caused the Mulroney team no concern. The accord was going to pass and that was all there was to it. That public support had dropped from 56 to 28 per cent, according to the results of a Gallup poll published in the Gazette of Montreal on April 29, 1988, was not relevant because this was a deal between 11 individuals, and not the people of Canada. As long as it stayed in the hands of 11 individuals and never got into the hands of the people, there should be no danger of any changes.

When the Ottawa Citizen called for the accord to be reopened, Senator Murray answered that to reopen it:

> ...for amendment would lead to its unraveling and destruction. I could not think of a better way of insulting Quebecers and indeed, all Canadians, than by scuttling an agreement that achieves Quebec's willing acceptance of our Constitution and ends Quebec's isolation from the constitutional process.

Right in the Mulroney style, the accord's failure would insult Quebecers. "Here you are, 11 of us cooked this up —"

Senator Lynch-Staunton: And it did.

Senator Frith: "— 11 of us cooked this up; don't talk or ask about it; just swallow it. We know what is best for you."

It is reminiscent of that famous New Yorker cartoon of 1928, with a caption by E.B. White. The cartoon showed a mother and a child sitting in a highchair. She is feeding something to the child and she is saying, "It is broccoli, dear." The child is saying, "I say it's spinach and I say the hell with it."

(1930)

That became even more apt with regard to Charlottetown. In the Toronto Star of June 5, 1988, the Prime Minister called upon the rest of Canada "to say yes to Quebec", implying that a rejection of Meech did not mean just saying no to the deal, it might mean saying no to Quebec.

More broccoli. When Bernard Valcourt appeared before the New Brunswick hearing, the Globe and Mail of February 15, 1989, reported his advice:

> You must resist the opportunity to use the accord to say no to Quebec.

When Bourassa used the notwithstanding clause and Filmon responded by withdrawing Manitoba's support, Senator Murray concluded that Filmon had acted "in the heat of the moment" and urged the Premier to send the accord to committee for the required hearings. That is from the Toronto Star of December 20, 1988.

Early the following year, Mr. Mulroney confidently declared that Meech was "a done deal", as reported in the Gazette on February 20, 1989, but he provided no information on how he would deal with recalcitrant premiers. Although he spoke confidently about the future of Meech, Mr. Mulroney stepped up his attack on its opponents, both real and imagined.

On April 6, 1989, during the Throne Speech debate, he launched a blistering attack on the 1982 Constitution and, by association, its creators. He lamented that, because it had not been approved by the separatist-controlled Quebec National Assembly, it did not bring unity —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: They were Canadians then and they still are. Do not get demagogic.

Senator Frith: — forgetting conveniently what he himself had told Jeffrey Simpson:

> Mr. Trudeau, faced with a separatist government in Quebec —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Canadian citizens, all.

Senator Frith: These are not Senator Lynch-Staunton's words. These are Mr. Mulroney's words.

> Mr. Trudeau, faced with a separatist government in Quebec, would have no choice but to bring home the constitution over Quebec's objections.

Mulroney's words. But now he argued that since our Constitution contained the notwithstanding clause, it did not protect individual rights:

> A constitution that does not bring Canadians together, that is not accepted by all Canadians, and a constitution that does not protect the inalienable and imprescriptible individual rights of individual Canadians is not worth the paper it is written on.

Never mind in 1981, he said it was ably negotiated, represented a national consensus, and was legitimate. His words! Eight years later it was not worth the paper it was written on.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Tell us about Mr. Trudeau and wage and price controls.

Senator Frith: Like a vaudeville magician, he was tearing it up in order to try, like a magician, for the credit of putting it together again. But it did not work. The dice were rolled. The Meech Lake agreement failed.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Thank you, Clyde.

Senator Frith: The shock triggered a sort of nervous breakdown in the government. The Prime Minister seemed to disappear for days. However, after some agonizing, the act was pulled together again for the Charlottetown Accord. That, however, was shot down by voters in every region of the country.

That is when the people got a chance to speak and they found that this was a very expensive, high-pressure campaign to sell spinach as broccoli and, as in the New Yorker cartoon, said, "To hell with it."

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We are rewriting history now?

Senator Frith: This is exactly what happened. Am I rewriting history? Am I rewriting history when I say that the Charlottetown Accord was rejected in every region of the country? I do not know what history you read, but that is what happened. Why was it overwhelmingly rejected? What was the referendum all about?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Do not blame it on one party.

Senator Frith: Kim Campbell said she knew what the referendum was about. Speaking at Harvard University on November 10, 1992, she told her audience:

> It was about the Canadian political process and what Canadians think about it, their ignorance about it, their lack of understanding of how the Canadian political system works.

Thanks, Kim, for explaining us to the Americans. However, you could be wrong. Maybe, the overwhelming majority of Canadians who voted in the referendum on October 26, 1992, believed they understood only too well your government, of which you are a part.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: She never called parliamentarians a bunch of "nobodies".

Senator Frith: They knew too well how your government had run the Canadian political system.

As for ignorance, it was not the ignorance of the Canadian people which placed the country at risk. It was you and your fellow Mulroneyites. You may have thought they were ignorant when you tried to fool them, but it turned out they were onto you. There is no "better luck next time" because they will not give you a next time.

The Senate adjourned to Monday, June 21, 1993, at 2 p.m.

NEW SENATORS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received certificates from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following persons have been summoned to the Senate:

Pierre Claude Nolin
Marjory LeBreton

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there were senators without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senators were introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and were seated:

Hon. Pierre Claude Nolin, of Montreal, Quebec, introduced between Honourable Lowell Murray and Honourable Michel Cogger.

Hon. Marjory LeBreton, of Ottawa, Ontario, introduced between Honourable Lowell Murray and Honourable Wilbert J. Keon.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senators named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am very pleased to welcome our two new colleagues, Senators LeBreton and Nolin.

Both have contributed significantly to Canadian public life through their work in the political party that most senators represent. The expertise acquired through these years of hard work will be called upon in a very special way, which should reassure our colleagues opposite!

[English]

Senator LeBreton has served under four leaders of the Progressive Conservative Party. She has worked tirelessly to attract women to political and public life. In so doing, she has helped Prime Minister Mulroney set a record that is second to none in Canadian history by appointing women of all walks of life and of all parties to key positions in government, cabinet and federal institutions.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Throughout his career, Senator Nolin has shown uncommon organizational talents and no doubt he will have an opportunity to apply them in the near future, to the delight of all our colleagues, I am sure!

[English]

Honourable senators, it is with great personal pleasure that I welcome our two new colleagues, Senator LeBreton and Senator Nolin, and wish for them every satisfaction in the important work they are undertaking for Parliament and the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators would not expect me to know anything more about our new colleagues than does Senator Murray, and therefore would not expect me to add anything to what he has said, and I will not. Nor will I add to anything I have said previously, except to make it clear that any objection I may have recorded, or any negativity I may have displayed, relates to the process and not to the people.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ADVISORY COMMITTEE—STATEMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, some years ago the Canadian government established the Advisory Committee to the Canadian Wheat Board. The reason was that Wheat Board members, as honourable senators will know, are appointed by the government. It was felt that producers should have a direct link through an advisory committee.

I wish to place on the record of the Senate a recent press release from Mr.Wilfred Harder, Chairman of the Advisory Committee to the Canadian Wheat Board. Mr. Harder was elected by the farmers. The press release is from Winnipeg, and is dated June 14. It reads as follows:

> Winnipeg—Wilfred Harder, Chairman, Advisory Committee of the Wheat Board, today vehemently denounced those who, deliberately or otherwise, have misinterpreted his committee's position on a continental barley market. Mr. Harder said that he had just received a letter dated June 9th, which had been sent to 25 members of Parliament representing all three political parties. The letter, which was a strong statement of support for the Honourable Charlie Mayer's recent decision to create a continental barley market, showed the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee as one of the document's signatories. Mr. Harder said that the CWB Advisory Committee had not authorized the statement in question nor had it even been consulted on the issue. He said that the Advisory Committee of the Canadian Wheat Board's position on continental barley marketing was clear and unequivocal —
> (a) the Advisory Committee does not want to see any erosion of the Wheat Board's single-desk marketing authority and,
> (b) before any changes are made to the Wheat Board's marketing mandate, producers must be consulted through a plebiscite after a reasonable period of open consultation and debate involving all industry players.
> Despite a late, half-hearted attempt to correct the statement, Mr. Harder said the damage has been done. He called for the supporters of the letter to publicly acknowledge that an error was made and that the Advisory Committee does not support a continental market for barley.
> Mr. Harder went on to say that there were a number of things about the June 9th letter to senior Government Ministers and Opposition MPs which were puzzling. For example, he wondered how the privately-owned grain companies who had signed the letter could purport to speak for producers in calling for "the farmers' right to decide". He also wondered who the Alberta Government-funded commodity groups were representing.
> Mr. Harder said it was also curious that the letter of support for continental barley marketing had been faxed across the country from the Winnipeg office of the Canada Grains Council — a taxpayer-funded, non-profit Crown Corporation which, among other things, is supposed to be doing independent research on contemporary agriculture issues.
> He said that as a grain producer, he was particularly disturbed and offended that the barley marketing issue has now become so overshadowed by partisan politics that the economic aspects of the issue were being forgotten. He said that the current incident only serves to underscore the unethical and unscrupulous process surrounding the Carter report.

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 150 residents of British Columbia who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Kelowna, Vernon, Revelstoke and Penticton. These 150 petitioners are particularly upset, and rightly so, about the fact that this shameful tax is applied to books and periodicals, thus making it even more difficult for people on low incomes to have access to culture.

QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CANADIAN STEEL INDUSTRY—CHARGES OF DUMPING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I refer to a news story in today's Globe and Mail relating to the Canadian steel industry. The first paragraph states:

> Canada's struggling steel industry is bracing for another dose of bad news this week.

In January, the United States Department of Commerce found that Canada was guilty of dumping certain forms of steel in the United States market at less than fair value.

I understand that this affects about $270 million worth of exports each year.

United States law requires that foreign companies not only recover the costs of producing the steel, but that they realize an 8 per cent profit. If they do not record such a profit, they are liable for dumping penalties.

This puts Canadian steel makers in a bad position since all the major producers have reported losses for the past fiscal year.

To make a long story short, we are told in this account that the Right Honourable Donald Mazankowski and the Honourable Michael Wilson have announced the establishment of a joint government-industry import surveillance committee to monitor steel imports and prices. They are said to have pledged to commission an independent study on "the differences between Canadian and U.S. trade remedy legislation".

Honourable senators, we are three and a half years into the free trade agreement with the United States. Under that agreement there was to have been a working group to establish a code with regard to fair trade practices. Are we to understand that three and a half years into the free trade agreement it now is necessary for Canada to establish an independent study on the differences between Canadian and U.S. trade remedy legislation? If this is necessary in 1993, why did Canada agree to Chapter 19 of the FTA in 1988?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the problems in the steel industry are an old story. Nobody expected that those problems would be solved overnight, or quickly, by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Our goal all along has been, and continues to be, a special pact with the United States to regularize trade in steel between our two countries.

I have to say that the decision announced the other day by Mr. Mazankowski and Mr. Wilson was taken following a meeting that those two ministers had with representatives of the Canadian steel industry.

Senator Stewart: My question is, three and a half years after the free trade agreement went into effect, why is it necessary for the Government of Canada to begin to inform itself now as to the differences between Canadian and U.S. trade remedy legislation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is only one part of the mandate of the —

Senator Stewart: That is the part about which I asked.

Senator Murray: That is only one part of the mandate. The committee is being set up to study the differences between our trade remedy laws in light of recent concerns expressed by the industry. In addition, the committee will provide a mechanism for monitoring, in close cooperation with the industry, the potential for diversion into Canada of imports from off-shore steel suppliers affected by the U.S. countervail and anti-dumping actions. These are fairly recent actions that we are talking about here, and they pose new problems, and potential new problems, for the Canadian industry. The Canadian industry is of the view that this is an appropriate step for the government to take on the matter at this time.

Senator Stewart: Are we to understand, then, that what is being sought is a kind of steel pact comparable to the Auto Pact?

Senator Murray: Comparable to, yes.

Senator Stewart: I will not discuss now what happened to the Auto Pact under the free trade agreement.

We have been told repeatedly how effective the binational panels are. Why would a resort to the binational panel system not help Canadian steel exporters in this instance?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is a matter on which I would have to ask advice from Mr. Wilson or other ministers concerned.

Senator Stewart: Is it not a fact that, regardless of whether or not there was an appeal to the binational panels, the U.S. law would apply, and the U.S. law says that there is dumping if the exporter is not recovering costs and also an 8 per cent profit?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the problem raised by the honourable senator. As I said, I will see if the Minister of International Trade can properly give us an explanation as to why he chose one course over another.

CITIZENS' PROGRAM—MONITORING OF FOREIGN INVESTMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on June 10 I asked the minister a question regarding the Citizens' Program and the fact that the Province of Manitoba had withdrawn from the program. Some serious difficulties had been experienced. I also asked him whether the federal government proposed to continue the program. I wonder if he has an answer to these questions.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I do not seem to have one front of me now, honourable senators, but I thank the honourable senator for jogging my memory on this matter. I will seek an early reply.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

REPLACEMENT FOR MR. BLAKENEY ON ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Several weeks ago, Mr. Blakeney, one of the members of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples, retired from that commission.

To my knowledge, no one has been appointed to replace Mr. Blakeney. There have been so many appointments lately that I might have missed this one. It is hard to keep track when they come in such numbers. Has an appointment been made? If not, when might we expect one to be made?

(1430)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I was aware that the cabinet had passed an appointment for a replacement quite recently. I am told it has been announced. Appointed was Professor J. Peter Meekison of Alberta.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY—CANADA'S PREPARATIONS FOR COMMEMORATION

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the historic importance of the fiftieth anniversary of D-Day, which will take place next year on June 6, is the government aware of the urgency that this anniversary demands? Will he advise what plans are taking place other than that a coordinator has been named?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have before me any more information on that matter than that to which the honourable senator has referred. I will be glad to look into it and report to him as soon as I can.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, besides the assurance that the leader has just given me, and with the likelihood of a long adjournment of Parliament, can he gain the assurance from the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Defence that Canada will be at the forefront of preparing and staging events, and not be delegated to a minor role in the programs designed to highlight the Normandy campaign in recognition of and reflecting the honour that our troops gained for Canada at the Normandy campaign?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate fully the point the honourable senator has made. I will draw it to the attention of my cabinet colleagues and bring in a report as soon as I can on the state of the arrangements and the intentions of the government in that regard.

THE CONSTITUTION

STATUS OF "NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE"—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, will the minister advise me as to the current position of the Government of Canada regarding the "notwithstanding clause"? We know that the Prime Minister spoke in strong terms against the "notwithstanding clause". Yet we find that, when the Canadian government appeared before the United Nations on the matter of the Quebec sign law, the position of the government was in support of the "notwithstanding clause".

The argument put forward by the lawyers for the government was that it was consistent with international human rights standards. Generally, their whole argument was that this is a good clause. What is the position of the government in this regard?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): The position of the government at that tribunal was to defend the Constitution of Canada. No government could do less.

Senator Molgat: Is the position of the government that this is a good clause and that the government supports it?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the position is that it is a part of the Constitution of Canada, which we are bound to defend in international fora of that kind.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING BILL

CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION IN COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. Is it the view of the Leader of the Government that the Senate must approve the legislation on the fixed link between P.E.I. and New Brunswick before it rises for the summer, or will some reasonable time be given for a proper examination of the bill before the standing committee?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, unlike the House of Commons, there is nothing in our standing orders or elsewhere that obliges us to rise for the summer at any particular time. The honourable senator and his colleagues will have the time that they need — within reason — to study that and all other legislation that is before the Senate.

I hope that as a New Brunswicker my friend would not oblige us to bring in allocation of time to put the bill through.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, in view of the last words of the leader, I know what he means by the words "within reason".

This has nothing to do with me as a New Brunswicker. It has a lot to do with the merit of the initiative per se.

Senator Murray: I would certainly want to hear from the honourable senator on the matter. Now that we have heard from Senator Bonnell and I have been reassured as to his position as of the other day, I look forward with great pleasure to hearing from Senator Corbin.

Senator Corbin: I am sorry the honourable leader missed my eloquent speech on this very topic at the last sitting of the Senate.

Senator Murray: I am sorry, too, but I shall read it at once.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISABILITY PENSIONS, WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE, VETERANS INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM AND VETERANS AWARDS—NUMBER AND NATURE OF APPLICATIONS

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have not received as yet an answer to Question No. 95 on the Order Paper standing in my name. It deals with applications for disability pensions, the War Veterans Allowance, the Veterans Independence Program and other matters.

On June 8 the Senior Assistant Deputy Minister for Veterans Affairs appeared before the House of Commons committee and gave the answers, in some cases, to the questions which I have asked. Where the does the Senate stand in the order of priority? I put a question on the Order Paper on April 2 and I still do not have an answer. Yet, answers were given at a committee hearing in the other place.

I think this is ridiculous. It is disloyal. It is many other things. Will the Leader of the Government tell me why the Senate cannot get the answer to a question before the House of Commons gets it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to look into the matter.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THIRD READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-123, respecting the management of certain property seized or restrained in connection with certain offences, the disposition of certain property on the forfeiture thereof and the sharing of the proceeds of disposition therefrom in certain circumstances.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS BILL

Hon. John Sylvain moved the third reading of Bill C-62, respecting telecommunications.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, Bill C-62 went through many changes in the committee in the other place. A number of those changes were recommended as a result of our pre-study on the subject matter of the bill. While I support most of the amendments and believe them to be good, I do not believe culture should have been removed from the objectives of the bill.

What were the government's reasons for removing culture from the bill? The Minister of Communications, Mr. Beatty, gave two reasons. First, he told the committee in the other place that:

> It must be clear that the government has no intention of using its authority to regulate telecommunications carriers to erode the provincial role on culture.

That quote can be found in Issue 8 at page 6.

Mr. Beatty later told the committee that the whole idea was absurd. He said:

> I frankly found the debate on the other side —

— meaning here, in the Senate —

> — somewhat phoney when people were saying that we were going to use a telecommunications bill to take over culture from the provinces...It was never our intention to do that, nor was the bill designed to do that.

That is from Issue 8, page 10.

Therefore, although Mr. Beatty believed the clause would respect provincial authority and saw no reason in this respect to remove the word "culture" from clause 7, he did it anyway.

Mr. Beatty's second reason for removing culture from the objectives had to do with sovereignty. He said:

> The essential elements of culture are subsumed under sovereignty. You can't have sovereignty unless you have a flourishing culture.

That quote is from Issue 8, page 10.

Mr. Beatty's argument in the second case is that culture comes under sovereignty, and sovereignty is already included in the objectives. According to Mr. Beatty's logic, there is also no need to include the social and economic fabric in the objectives; both of these are also needed to maintain sovereignty. A nation cannot be sovereign if it does not control its own economy or its own social development. Why did he not remove social and economic objectives from clause 7 as well?

There is no doubt as to the connection between culture and communications. The government's response to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture report, entitled "The Ties That Bind", makes the point quite clearly. The report states:

> We believe that the word "communication" taken in its fullest sense already embraces all aspects of cultural expression. A vibrant cultural life is the inheritance of a nation blessed with the honest exchange of ideas, images and experience; a nation seeking to nurture and sustain its identity, a nation ready to communicate within the world around it.

That is found in Issue 8 at page 11. The report also states, at page 13, that a "sound legislative framework supporting cultural and communications activity" is necessary.

ACTRA, the Alliance of Canadian Cinema, Television and Radio Artists, also believes there is a strong link between culture and communications. In a letter to Senator Oliver, from which Senator Frith read in his intervention at second reading, ACTRA president Sandy Crawley writes:

> The convergence of the television, the computer and the telephone will have a huge impact on the legislative and regulatory framework in which Canadian cultural industries operate. The historical line of separation between carriage and content is increasingly blurred.

ACTRA clearly has justifiable concerns that culture should be included in, and protected by, the objectives in clause 7 of the bill. I also hold that belief. Therefore, honourable senators, I wish to move, seconded by Senator Graham:

> THAT Bill C-62 be not now read the third time, but that Clause 7 of the Bill be amended on page 4,
> (a) by adding immediately after line 13, the following:
> "(b) to enhance the expression and communication of Canada's cultural identity;"; and
> (b) by relettering subsequent paragraphs and any cross-references thereto accordingly.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Donald H. Oliver: Honourable senators, I wish to make a few remarks respecting the amendment proposed by Senator Corbin. In his opening remarks, he referred to the pre-study report that was done by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications some months ago. That particular pre-study report was well received by the telecommunications community and there was wide-spread support for the Senate committee's recommendations. Indeed, the Minister of Communications praised the report as a positive and constructive contribution to the development of this important legislation.

Indeed, the bill as it is now before this chamber reflects a great majority of the recommendations contained in the pre-study report. Among those recommendations, as Senator Corbin has indicated, was a proposal that reference to sovereignty, politics, and culture be removed from clause 7, the statement of policy objectives.

The committee recognized at that time, during its pre-study, that this recommendation might prove to be either politically sensitive or a matter of some controversy, or both. Nevertheless, we were satisfied that there was reason to consider the need for these references in the bill.

Witnesses who came before us had questioned the appropriateness of these references on two grounds, and reference to these witnesses was made at the last meeting of the committee. Some witnesses felt that such references were inconsistent with the overall intent of the bill to provide for economic regulation of the carriage, rather than the content, of telecommunications. Others were concerned that some provinces might view a specific reference to culture in this bill as allowing the federal government a new opening to intrude or interfere with their legitimate responsibilities in this area.

In the end, the minister and the government chose, in my view, a wise course. They followed the middle path. An amendment brought forward by the government in the other place removed the reference to culture and politics, but retained the reference to sovereignty. There has since been much discussion in the other place, and indeed in this chamber, about the removal of the reference to culture. I am satisfied, however, that the government's amendment was the right one. The removal of this term eliminates a potentially harmful criticism of the bill without in any way diminishing the federal government's ability to support and protect Canadian culture.

In addressing this issue the minister said that he agreed to remove the specific reference to culture because it is not essential. Indeed, it is not essential, because the bill clearly recognizes, in other ways, the increasingly important role of telecommunications as a carrier of cultural products and services.

The policy objectives state that telecommunications "perform an essential role in the maintenance of Canada's identity and sovereignty" and that the telecommunications system should serve to "enrich and strengthen the social and economic fabric of Canada".

To quote the minister:

> Surely our culture is fundamental to our identity and sovereignty; and, just as surely, cultural products and services are an important part of the social and economic fabric of Canada.

There is little doubt that telecommunications serve to link this country together through a whole range of activities from personal conversations to data and information transfers and business transactions. Increasingly, these activities include the transmission of cultural products and services.

It is worth noting that the objectives are not the only part of this bill that recognize this reality. For example, clause 28 allows the CRTC to permit Canadian carriers to give preferential treatment to the transmission of broadcast signals where this would be consistent with the broadcasting policy set out in the Broadcasting Act.

In addition, clause 36 of the bill even foresees the possibility of the CRTC authorizing Canadian carriers to control or influence the meaning or purpose of the telecommunications they carry, should it determine this to be in the public interest.

Some who oppose the removal of the reference to culture have suggested that the reference is useful because there may be a legislative gap between Bill C-62, which governs telecommunications, and the 1991 Broadcasting Act. Yet, while they have been unable to substantiate this concern, the Minister of Communications, the Honourable Perrin Beatty, has stated that there is no such gap. Indeed, it is evident that the two pieces of legislation were developed in tandem under the same government and within the same government department.

Under these two pieces of legislation, the CRTC will have broad authority, within the limits imposed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to regulate broadcasting and telecommunications in the public interest. It will also have the flexibility and scope required to take into account the increasingly interrelated nature of these two activities.

In my view, it is time to cease discussing matters which have been dealt with in a reasonable manner and to move forward with this important legislation, which is both long overdue and widely supported.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I received a letter this morning from the minister responsible for telecommunications in Manitoba, who said, among other things:

> I understand that Bill C-62 is before your committee for review prior to third reading in the Senate.
> The bill has improved a great deal as a result of the earlier work by your committee and the amendments proposed by the Commons committee. Passage of this bill would result in a significant improvement in the legal framework governing Canada's telecommunications service industry.

His letter concludes:

> Your cooperation in ensuring the early passage of this legislation would be greatly appreciated.

CRIMINAL CODE
CROWN LIABILITY AND PROCEEDINGS ACT
RADIOCOMMUNICATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the third reading of Bill C-109, to amend the Criminal Code, Crown Liability and Proceedings Act and the Radiocommunication Act.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, before the vote is taken on this bill I should like to make a few observations with respect to it. This bill concerns amendments made to the Criminal Code with respect to new powers that are given to police and public officers for electronic interceptions of various kinds. Another part of the bill deals with cellular telephones. That caught the attention of the public in the beginning, but those provisions are not nearly as significant or as important to the public as are the ones regarding the wiretap provisions.

I will give you an idea of the types of problems we experienced with this bill, which, once again, was brought to us at a very late date. We struggled with it for several days. It is extraordinarily complicated.

We simply did not have the time to study this bill properly or have the kind of input to assist us in making proper suggestions as to amendments because the bill is so complex. I remain convinced that we should have insisted on some amendments, but we simply did not have the time nor the facility to do so.

To give you an idea of what was involved, for instance, there is a new definition in the bill of "private communication". The Police Association and the Criminal Lawyers' Association agreed that this definition was not sufficiently clear. That is unfortunate, because the definition is central to the establishment of the legality of many electronic interceptions.

Another clause in the bill uses what, for us, is a new expression; "agent of the state". In the Criminal Code, there is a definition of a "peace officer" and a "public officer". We now have a clause that deals with an individual called an "agent of the state". It seems unnecessarily complex to introduce this new definition, because it requires moving back and forth to determine the difference between a public officer under one clause and a peace officer in another clause.

Senator Frith: It also has some very chilling associations.

Senator Neiman: The explanation of the justice official who appeared before the committee was that the expression "agent of the state" has been used in various judicial decisions in the Supreme Court.

Senator Frith: And in Germany and Russia.

Senator Neiman: I think the courts have picked up on American decisions, to which we appear to be referring more and more often in our judicial decisions. In my view, we need not incorporate this particular expression into our Criminal Code.

We have serious questions about when consent should be obtained. A clause in the bill says that no prior consent is necessary under certain circumstances. Then, again, another clause says that, having intercepted certain communications, the individual who does so may destroy all the evidence immediately, or as soon as practicable, after the action has been completed. The Police Association thought that was strange, to say the least. From their point of view, there may be a question of alleged perjury, or where a party to the prosecution — the Crown attorney or the accused — may wish to establish further evidence that could have been derived from the destroyed interceptions.

The drafters of this legislation have changed the clause giving authority to police officers to make an application for an authorization, rather than such applications being made by the Crown attorney. This has considerably widened the number of people who can make applications for authority to intercept.

In a few instances, the drafters have changed the present wording of the code in the application section to establish a justification to get information, rather than evidence, that a crime has been or may be committed. This broadens the ambit of "investigation" considerably. I can understand very well where that might be justifiable under certain circumstances, but the problem is that those circumstances have not been defined.

Another clause in the bill gives permission to intercept in "exceptional circumstances". According to the argument of the Canadian Bar Association and other witnesses, this appears to be reverting to the old Writ of Assistance, declared illegal many years ago by the Supreme Court of Canada. It gives an individual an open-ended authority to intercept, with no time limit.

There are serious questions regarding the constitutionality of granting extraprovincial jurisdiction to a designated agent and whether that is constitutionally valid.

There are also questions as to procedure and how evidence can be destroyed before an accused or his counsel have had an opportunity to view the evidence. This contradicts present procedure, where the trend is to make any evidence to be adduced available to the accused as well as the Crown.

One clause in the bill amounts to a "basket clause"; a clause that allows information to be gathered and kept. This contradicts a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Honourable senators, those are just a few of the problems we found with this bill when we studied it in committee.

Inevitably, and according to witnesses such as the Canadian Bar Association and the Criminal Lawyers' Association, these clauses are vulnerable to Charter challenges. Some appear bound to be struck down when they are considered in court. Some will be questioned and contested. Not all of them will be struck down. Groups such as the Criminal Lawyers' Association have put forward their objections and said that they have done what they can to warn us, as legislators, that we are making an error in passing some of these amendments. As they say, it creates more work for them.

Years from now, many of these clauses will be appealed and some will be rejected by the Supreme Court of Canada. Who wins then? Certainly not the police. They expressed a need for additional powers provided by these amendments to catch and convict criminals. However, if their hard-won conviction is overturned and a criminal goes free or a new trial is ordered because a procedure permitted in the Criminal Code violates a clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, where is the gain? Certainly not with the public, which pays constantly for criminal activity, then it pays for the legal prosecutions whether they are successful or not. At every turn the public bears the cost.

At some point I hope that the legislators will make some hard decisions. We cannot continue to pass laws that are questionable or vulnerable in response to what may be valid public concerns. We, particularly in this chamber, need to be given the opportunity to study bills carefully and thoroughly and then be able to convey any of those concerns that we have to the minister responsible for further consideration.

We are under the gun these days. This is only one of a series of bills that have come before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I hope that this exercise in haste, which seems to have been exacerbated in the last few weeks by this government, will change in the future — perhaps under a new government.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed, on division.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this important bill. I have appreciated the speeches that have been made by my colleagues on both sides of the house. I hope that the debate will continue on that high level.

Trade development is an area on which I have focused for 20 years. I am very much interested in the public debate that has been conducted on the subject during the last six years in particular. Unfortunately, I have been deeply disappointed by the nature of the debate. It is my humble opinion that it has not done justice to the importance of trade as a public policy issue.

The problem with our negotiations has been lack of experience and, therefore, naivety on the part of officials. The problem with our public debate is the lack of understanding of the issues by our politicians. The debate has been pushed to unrealistic extremes.

Canadians have not been well-served by this debate. A combination of Question Period histrionics, media "bites" and election-year pressures transformed the debate, which should have been about Canada's evolving economic relations within the western hemisphere, into a simplistic debate about the survival of the country in the late twentieth century. Somehow, as the debate went forward, Canada was suddenly portrayed as an economy in danger of precipitous decline — the one major industrialized country without access to a market of over 200 million people. The only solution, we were told, was a free trade agreement with the United States. Such an agreement, we were assured, would create at least 250,000 jobs. It would allow Canada to escape the rising protectionism in the United States and would ensure Canada's transformation into a technologically advanced, post-industrial economy. The agreement would be a virtual panacea.

Of course, the opponents responded in kind. Free trade with the United States would be an unmitigated disaster. Social programs would disappear. Canada's lakes and rivers would be drained. Our resources would be raped. The border would be erased. My colleagues on both sides of the house will be well aware of these familiar refrains.

If there is anything we should have learned in this country in this decade, it is the need to try to build consensus on major policy issues. We have a delicate political fabric in Canada today and it is imperative that responsible governments and responsible political actors take steps to reach consensus instead of provoking confrontation.

We have had too many examples of political debate degenerating into black and white, refusing to acknowledge the grey and leaving the public in confusion and frustration. In any event, Canadians were told that the FTA would be a magic elixir on the one hand, and the direct cause of devastation on the other. The reality has proved more complicated than black and white, and harder to evaluate than either side will admit. The experience should not be ignored.

Since the end of World War II, Canada had been moving toward a freer trade relationship with the United States under the auspices of the GATT. By 1988, we were already two of the most fully integrated economies in the world, with 80 per cent of our trade crossing the border duty free and most of the remaining tariff barriers scheduled to fall under the terms of the pending Uruguay Round of the GATT. In whole sectors the distinction between a Canadian and a U.S. economy was becoming meaningless, with intercompany transfers replacing the more traditional forms of trade. We were to all intents and purposes emerging as a single North American market.

More important, the FTA drama unfolded against a backdrop of a profound technological revolution on an international scale, a process which is now referred to as globalization. Microprocessors, fibre-optics, communications satellites and transnational corporations were ensuring that the Canadian economy would be pried open, not just to the United States but to the world, whether we liked it or not. To this extent the FTA did not mark a radical departure in Canada-U.S. relations, so much as an accelerated reflection of changes that were already occurring worldwide.

The Trudeau government had already investigated the possibility of sectoral agreements. I have always believed that, had it been re-elected, it would have begun negotiating a general agreement with the United States. That is why Mr. Mulroney came out so strongly against the idea and later had to change his position.

We should not forget the reasons that many of us on this side of the house opposed the FTA. We did not oppose opening up trade. We were not afraid of the competition, as the current Minister of Defence and Prime Minister-designate, has implied.

We saw that the trade agreement reached in 1988 not only failed to fulfil the basic objectives set out by the government itself, but significantly failed to satisfy the requirement of the national interest. There is no reason why those objectives could not now be achieved in the NAFTA process of negotiations. In fact, a lot of us — people who were critical of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement — had high hopes that the basic shortcomings of the FTA would be addressed and resolved in NAFTA. To be fair, there have been some significant improvements made. Nevertheless, there is still work to be done. There are still some fundamental weaknesses.

The principal objective avowed by the Canadian government in negotiating the FTA was to get exemption from growing U.S. protectionism and the increasingly arbitrary application of U.S. trade remedy law, both countervail and anti-dumping — a worrisome trend which had first become evident in the early 1970s. "Secure, enhance and enshrine" access to the U.S. market was the buzz phrase to be found in all government public statements. This would have meant the inclusion of mutually acceptable definitions of subsidies and agreeing to substitute a common competition/anti-trust policy for anti-dumping action.

Although the FTA provided for "subsidy" definition, in seven years there has never been even a hint of progress. There was a working group struck to work on the definition, but I do not think it has ever met. The unfortunate reality is that the FTA leaves the whole thing up to the U.S. definitions and the rulings of the U.S. Trade Commission and U.S. trade laws.

Not only is there no definition of subsidies in the NAFTA agreement, nor a commitment to replace countervail action with competition law; even the FTA's modest provision to pursue these objectives and definitions has been quietly dropped in the NAFTA, to be replaced by a rather unsubstantial commitment to pursue this goal in future "consultations". There was never any real intention under the FTA, and NAFTA has just admitted as much. There ended the principal objective stated by the government before entering into the negotiations. That was the principal objective and it never got off the ground.

There has been a similar defeat with trading rules. Nothing has done more to undermine enthusiasm in Canada for the FTA — even among its erstwhile supporters — than the highly public spectacle of ongoing, punitive, and seemingly groundless U.S. trade actions, launched during the four years since the beginning of the supposed era of "free trade" with the United States. Steel, softwood lumber, pork bellies, fish — American industries keep coming back even after they have lost. The scenario is simple: representatives of American industries petition the U.S. government with a complaint to the domestic International Trade Administration of the Department of Commerce, which determines whether American industry is harmed even by legal imports or whether a subsidy exists. A trade action is launched and the Canadian industry implicated is left with the option of acceptance or of fighting the decision. It is important to recognize that it is not the final decision that has been problematic — because we have been winning these cases — but the financial strain of the fight. Millions of dollars have gone in fees to Washington lawyers and lobbyists. That has caused the most serious problems for Canadian industries. The Americans appear to be willing to continue to file complaints and appeal decisions, simply because they know the devastating cost for Canadian industry. The money needed for the fight is what would normally be the Canadian industry's margin of profit.

Not only has an inadequate FTA harmed some of our industries, but our workers have been harmed by their very own government, a government that failed to match its policies to the changing needs of a significant portion of the workforce; the government provided no worker adjustment program.

Honourable senators will remember the promise Prime Minister Mulroney made in his effort to sell Canadians on his trade deal. In 1988, Brian Mulroney assured us that there would be "massive" adjustment programmes to help Canadian companies and workers adjust to the FTA. They never materialized. The government gave up on the idea. Perhaps the scope was too daunting, but thousands of Canadians who have lost jobs or lost their businesses in the last five years have been betrayed and abandoned by this government.

Now we are facing the forced draft implementation of the North American Free Trade Agreement and we have not heard any suggestion of worker retraining, or of programs to help small business to reorient itself. Of course, if there were some mention of such programs now, Canadians would have no reason to believe the government. This is one of many examples of why Canadians have lost faith in the present government.

The Liberal Party, on the other hand, has made a commitment to worker training in this country. In a policy speech given by Mr. Chrétien earlier this year, he outlined the broad strokes of our plan and assured Canadians that the program would be a high priority under a Liberal government.

Clearly something has to be done to re-tool the workforce and business for the types of jobs that are a part of the new and future economy. People who have been working in failing industries have to be given the means to find employment in the growing industries. We cannot ignore an entire generation of displaced workers. I am not suggesting that we can solve the problem by just throwing money at it. Coordination of government, business, and labour is the key. Programs in which the private sector can participate and a government that gives strong leadership and appeals to people's sense of national well-being and pride could accomplish a great deal.

Beyond the substance of this bill, I must make some brief comments on the process that Bill C-115 has followed through Parliament. I find it distressing that even though the side agreements, which have been characterized as a fundamental part of NAFTA, are still subject to the negotiation process, and even though the legislatures of the United States and Mexico have not yet gone nearly so far in the ratification process as we have, here we are breathlessly, blindly rushing toward passage.

Honourable senators, why can't the Canadian government re-concentrate efforts on meeting the national interest and its original objectives in these areas. This agreement is not a seamless web — just ask Bill Clinton — and for the government, for Michael Wilson, the disappearing minister, to treat it as such, is doing a major disservice to Canada. This should not be characterized as a take-it-or-leave-it proposition. Why have we been subjected to so much pressure to pass this bill? There is too much similarity to the way this government has rammed through some of its other sacred cows.

Moreover, as a country, will we not lose our bargaining power if we go ahead and pass this legislation before the terms of the other accords are negotiated and finalized? It is only reasonable to see what the whole thing looks like before you accept it; that you kick the tires before you buy the car.

As a Liberal, I am fundamentally committed to the precept that every citizen should be given the maximum opportunity to flourish as a winner, to fulfil his or her aspirations. Frankly, I do not see how we will succeed globally if we do not tap and nurture the talents of all. And, as a Liberal, I am committed to the precept that if a trade deal, a new program or an economic change causes pain and dislocation, the national government must recognize those difficulties and must act to correct them. A comprehensive re-training program must be a basic tenet of the federal government's industrial policy and consequently its international trade policy. After all, trade policy cannot be viewed in isolation. Trade policy is not a substitute for sound domestic policies. Monetary, fiscal, investment, training, education, and research policies go hand in hand with a nation's trade policy.

Expanded trade, if fairly accomplished, will result in a higher standard of living for all — not, as has been the case with the FTA, an obscene enrichment of the few at the cost of the devastation of the lives of millions.

This bill should not be passed now, in the dying days of a government which has so seriously neglected our interests. It should not be passed until a new government with a new mandate has an opportunity to try to repair the damage done in the improvident negotiation of the FTA and NAFTA.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, in my brief comments on Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement, I intend to deal with only three aspects of this particular subject.

First, the impact of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, also known as FTA, on the Canadian economy, since NAFTA is in effect an extension of the FTA; second, the anticipated economic impact of NAFTA; and finally, the views of our friends opposite in this debate.

I want to discuss the impact of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement on the Canadian economy in connection with the report of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee on this question and the comments of Senators MacEachen and Stewart on the subject at second and third reading. My point is, first of all, that most of the serious economic studies published on the economic consequences of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement are positive, as were the 1988 predictions in that respect.

Take, for instance, those by Messrs. Globerman and Walker, the C.D. Howe Institute, the Royal Bank, Mr. Pawly of the Institute of Policy Analysis of the University of Toronto, and Richard Lipsey, one of Canada's foremost economists. Some views on the free trade agreement were unfavourable or negative. These were published either by the Government of Ontario, by unions representing certain industries, such as the Canadian Auto Workers, or by representatives of certain manufacturing groups, including the furniture sector.

As to our own External Affairs committee, its report was neutral rather than positive or negative, in that after listening to the experts, it felt that the statistics either covered too short a period or were not sufficiently broken down by sector or industry for the committee to judge the specific economic impact of the FTA. In a way, that will always be the case. So many factors are involved simultaneously in the process of exchanging goods and services between two countries that it is technically very difficult to measure, in the short term, the relative impact, for instance, of a tariff reduction provided under the agreement as compared with a change in monetary policy during the same period, with its impact on the exchange rate and interest rates, or a change in fiscal policy and its effect on personal, corporate or consumer taxes, and finally, the impact of other macroeconomic policies or the international economic situation, or factors that are industry-specific.

I did not mention the occasional contributions of the media, which, for instance, report on plant openings or shut-downs and, on the basis of one or two cases, offer some very creative interpretations that have no basis in fact or extrapolate to a degree that verges on pamphleteering.

For instance, they tell us there were so many bankruptcies in a given location. But people forget that the areas with the most bankruptcies usually have the largest number of new businesses. That is the case, for instance, in U.S. economic regions like California or Texas, or in the Boston area or Japan. It is important to bear both those factors in mind.

I think there are two main conclusions we can draw from all these speeches and reports. The Senate report is dated February 1993. Later, in March 1993, Statistics Canada published under the supervision of Mr. Ryten, a recognized expert, a more detailed statistical study of developments in Canada-U.S. trade between 1981 and 1991, in the manufacturing sector. It would take too long to analyse this document, but I would urge honourable senators who are interested to read it because of the information it contains. In fact, I hope the Senate committee on Foreign Affairs will invite Mr. Ryten again in order to hear his views.

Meanwhile, I concluded from this study that Canadian manufacturing industries improved their market share in the U.S. during this decade, and more so, comparatively speaking, during the second part of this period, from 1985-87 to 1989-91. The amount of Canadian manufactured products as a percentage of the total U.S. market rose from less than 2 per cent to 2.6 per cent. The difference is the equivalent of over one-third of one per cent, which is enormous for an economy the size of ours. This occurred mainly during the second half of the decade.

We all know that starting in 1990, we had a major recession in North America, which reduced the demand for our primary resources. At the time, Canadian interest rates were high, our fiscal policy had changed and the Canadian dollar was also high.

However, despite several negative factors, we increased our market share in the U.S. in 38 specific industries out of 100. Isn't this an indication that a modest tariff reduction helped improve our trading position? I know it is difficult to identify one specific economic factor, but can we ignore the effect of tariff reductions? In fact, I see no other explanation for the levels at which we continued to export manufactured goods to the United States, although during that period, from 1987 to 1992, the value of our dollar seesawed between 78 and 88 cents. Interestingly, our market share increased in industries specialized in the production of transportation equipment, certain food sectors, chemical products, plastics and electrical and electronic products, thus continuing the trend towards specializing in the production of sophisticated goods.

Of course, not all sectors were as successful, and I am thinking of leather goods, printing and other industries. My point is that without the FTA, the situation would have been a lot worse in this country.

And now for my second conclusion. As a result of the drop in the value of the Canadian dollar and a moderating trend in collective bargaining agreements, our exports have increased at an impressive rate. Everyone knows the Canadian dollar was not artificially devalued. We have substantially improved our productivity and our competitive position as a result of extensive industrial structuring, largely due to the FTA.

Honourable senators, the second aspect I wanted to discuss is the anticipated economic impact of NAFTA. We have heard a number of witnesses during the past six months. Some anticipate a positive impact for Canada, and I am referring, for instance, to Mr. Lipsey; Mr. Frenzell, a former U.S. congressman, an expert on international trade and now a member of the Brookings Institute; Professor Weintraub, an eminent U.S. economist; and representatives of the Business Council on National Issues, speaking on behalf of our major manufacturers.

Other witnesses were less positive: Lester Thurow of MIT; Dr. Roger Cohen of the Economic Strategy Institute and a colleague of Ms Tyson, the new U.S. official in charge of international trade relations; and finally, Mr. White of the Canadian Auto Workers.

In his speech, Senator MacEachen made much of the views of Dr. Cohen of the Economic Strategy Institute, a U.S. group representing Liberal and Democratic views. Basically, they are afraid that with the agreement, low wages in Mexico will attract investors to that country and away from the other two countries where wages are higher, and that this movement will exert a downward pressure on wages in the United States and even more so in Canada.

Professor Weintraub, an eminent expert on international trade who has spent several years in Mexico and knows the country well, responded, I think, very incisively by making a distinction between types of industries, based on whether they are capital or labour intensive.

In the automobile industry, for instance, labour represents only 10 per cent of production costs. Investment decisions should be based on other factors that are equally important, such as productivity and skills, equipment, capital costs, energy cost, transportation, the quality of infrastructures and utilities, the cost of other production inputs such as materials and finally, the technology involved in the production process.

Today, the average cost of labour in Mexico is one-eighth of ours, but their productivity is only one-seventh of ours. Wages are going up five times as fast as in the United States. In fact, Dr. Weintraub's arguments and explanations, as well as other arguments reported daily in the Wall Street Journal and The Economist, convinced me that although Senator MacEachen's concerns may be justified in the case of a few industries like the clothing industry, his argument cannot be applied in every case.

As for Senator Stollery's arguments about the considerable disparity in distribution of personal income in Mexico and how this would affect the market for our products, I want to point out that this country's development, and I think this applies to other countries as well, is affected by the unfortunate decisions of a previous political regime, the severe recession that took place during the 1980s in Mexico, and the major changes introduced by the new regime which, as in Eastern Europe, cannot be absorbed without some adverse effects.

Ten years from now, however, this country will have a middle class of 25 million people. For us, this is a major market. I agree that in the very short term, wages in Mexico will probably not reflect the increase in productivity. However, the example of many Asian countries is quite conclusive in this respect. Singapore is a case in point.

In any event, Canada's trade policy which has basically consisted in gradual tariff reductions since 1948, through GATT, has not prevented us from growing, from expanding, from being able to afford social services that are the envy of other countries and from increasing our wages, although in some periods, productivity has been greater than in others, and this has been reflected in personal incomes.

In the 1950s, tariffs were extremely high, and since then they have gradually gone down. Today, tariffs are around 6 or 7 per cent. As a result, as far as our manufacturing processes are concerned, we have an economic system that is practically integrated with the United States.

It is true that from 1988 to 1990, excessive wage increases in Canada were not helpful to some of our industries. Someone has to pay the piper eventually. However, over the past year, we have experienced very strong productivity growth in this country.

In committee, Senator MacEachen also expressed his concern that Mexico might unilaterally lower its labour standards. Since when has economic growth been based on decreasing wages? Should we negotiate an agreement that would give an international panel the authority to arbitrate these matters? The Canadian government's position is to rely on an exchange of information process to prevent such occurrences. We think it is better to try to change attitudes through tripartite discussions than to rely on formal arbitration.

Implementation of standards will improve over time, just as in a business when there is a new collective agreement. People adjust gradually.

My third point, and I will be brief, is just a simple commentary on the views of our friends opposite on free trade. What exactly is their position? Are they in favour of the status quo? Do they want Mexico to maintain its tariffs and keep us out of its markets? Do they think along the lines of the CAW, which wants us to sign a pact with Mexico like the one we signed with the United States 20 years ago, under entirely different circumstances?

In fact, as a result of the pact, tariffs have gone down to almost nothing today. Everyone knows that. Are they afraid Canada's manufacturing industry will be unable to stand up to the competition? Do they want managed trade? That would be protectionism in disguise, and it would be a total disaster, in any case. Senator Cohen admitted as much. Granted, in the United States some people are getting ready to do something along those lines.

Honourable senators, the fact is that, today, there are no valid alternatives for Canada if the U.S. Congress reacts positively to the Bush-Mulroney-Salinas agreement. I imagine Mr. Howe and Mr. Pearson must be turning over in their graves when they hear Senator MacEachen, one of their political heirs, trying to stop the traditional free trade policy of the Canadian government, which goes back 50 years, at a time when our manufacturing sector and our various services are showing astonishing competitive strength.

Considering verbal testimony and written submissions from reputable economists as well as official representatives like the people of the Business Council on National Issues, it seems to me that the scales have tipped in favour of implementation of NAFTA, in the best interests of the Canadian public.

I am sure our friends opposite won't mind if we recall the wise words, for once, of one of their old friends, Mr. Kenneth Galbraith, whose admirer or successor in this liberal American tradition is Lester Thurow, whom Senator MacEachen is so fond of quoting.

So what did Mr. Galbraith write? He wrote the following:

[English]

> Once, a smaller, higher-cost production and, perhaps, lesser competence caused Canada to protect its factories from the competition of U.S. firms. Perhaps there was a case for this at one time. Now no longer. I applaud the combination of improved efficiency and self-confidence, along with the intelligently cheaper dollar, that now causes the Canadian government — Tory no less — to press for free trade.
> Canadians are concerned that free trade will impair their sovereignty and bring Canada even more dangerously under U.S. influence. This is nonsense. The U.S. influence is there, no one can doubt it, but it is a fact of geography, not of trade.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I must advise Senator Bolduc that his time is up. Is leave granted for him to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bolduc: In closing, I would like to come back to what Senator MacEachen said to us on third reading about some points of the accord in a way that does not cease to amaze me, coming from a man like him who was trained in the best universities such as the University of Chicago, of which I too am honoured to be a graduate. I think that someone who is a social scientist by training should be a little more objective! I know that we live in a party system and that, for him, the Senate is the continuation of the other House. But I think that truth also has its place. I am not asking him to be impartial. That is not possible. We know that it is hard in politics. We are dealing with issues that always have two sides.

But we do not enlighten the debate by deliberately exaggerating a few minor points, as opposed to the essence of the plan. Essentially, the idea is to open the Mexican market to Canadian companies and to retain a large share of the investment to be made in North America.

Here are a few examples of these assertions of Senator MacEachen which I consider exaggerated. He is no less competent for that!

First, he said that the FTA had a negative effect on the Canadian economy because the United States took advantage of us on the dispute settlement mechanism. To support his point, he mentions the assistant negotiator, Mr. Ritchie, about whom he has many good things to say. Mr. Ritchie negotiated and he tells us that he is a very good man, but he says that we were had! Is it not true to say that, considering the whole agreement, as I think Senator Stewart will admit, Canada has managed to make its economic and trade relations with the United States more civilized, to some extent?

It is not perfect, but we have more civilized relations, compared to the jungle that existed before, as you know. Even if we did not win everything, I think that we have at least made relations a little more civilized. I think it is important to admit that! There is a big difference between that and the way Russia used to treat Latvia and other countries!

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Will the honourable senator accept a question?

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: Senator Stewart, I will finish in a few minutes.

After all, the trade between Canada and the United States amounts to $225 billion annually and covers 8,000 different Canadian products. This trade goes on 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Of course there are some difficulties. People say that there were problems. Inevitably!

The Americans allow interest groups to operate within their political system. It would be surprising if that were not so! We have put in place a multi-stage dispute settlement mechanism. Of course, it works in two or three stages. In the first stage, people can take the U.S. government to task and try to change its position. Officials may yield to pressure from a group. There are several stages and on the whole it works well. In fact, we have won more cases than we have lost!

In all, these cases applied to only 5 per cent of the international trade between the two countries. I think that is reasonable. We do $225 billion worth of trade and $200 billion of that is not contentious. There are some sticking points, as with steel, for example. I admit that there are problems with steel, but they will be solved in the end. For now, it is annoying, I admit.

I think that we should be objective and look at the total picture and admit that it has been successful. Of course, it came in during a depression. People say that things have been going badly since 1990. That is not the FTA's fault. Things are going badly in Germany now. Twenty per cent of the German auto industry will disappear within a year. Philips has lost 45,000 employees. Siemens has taken a beating. Nissan is losing money this year. We know what happened to General Motors. We know what happened to IBM. What do you want? Things are in upheaval everywhere. We in Canada are lucky that our big companies have not yet gone down the tube. Perhaps the FTA has something to do with that?

In other words, the American elephant has agreed to follow some rules with us. I find that wonderful. It is not perfect, but what has been done is great. I think that we must admit that.

Senator MacEachen does not agree either. He says that we did not establish rules for subsidies and that we did not smooth out trade.

I think that it was very wise not to. We are negotiating with GATT at the same time and we decided that GATT was the place to raise this issue because it is much more wide-ranging. We would have been crazy to create rules here that would not work internationally.

Therefore, I think it is very wise to leave the definition to GATT. Indeed, Senator Stewart knows what I am talking about. The definition is coming and it seems that it will not be too bad. In any case, I am optimistic about it.

Senator MacEachen passes a sweeping judgment by saying that we failed to set rules for trade in general. Come on! For support, I take Mr. Gotlieb who was our ambassador to the United States, who is a senior official and who probably worked for Senator MacEachen when the senator was Minister of External Affairs. Mr. Gotlieb came to tell us about the American administrative process for grievances, which is quite different from Canada's. His explanations were enlightening and helped us understand how the U.S. government works. I do not see anything wrong with that!

If we understand how the U.S. government works, there is nothing scandalous about lawyers pleading cases and trying to do business. We should not be shocked about that! Mr. Gotlieb, a great public servant, said that he too was very favorable to Canadian trade policy. He is an important witness. He is independent. He is retired now.

Senators MacEachen and Stewart referred to the fact that the Americans chose lawyers as panel members and that now they want judges.

What is wrong with choosing lawyers specialized in corporate law, people who are trained to read the law and apply it to individual cases? Senator Stanbury is a lawyer. He knows as I do that it makes sense. There is nothing shocking about it. Senators MacEachen and Stewart only repeated the prejudices of some social scientists who think that lawyers and judges by their nature have to take very narrow legalistic positions and are not open-minded enough to grasp economic processes and how they work. I feel sorry for Senators Frith and Stanbury. I think that judgment is exaggerated. The Americans have great respect for their judges; they want judges on the panel.

In Canada we added that clause because we know that we will not have enough competent judges to do it. That is why we added it.

[English]

Senator Stewart: I can well understand why he does not want to take a question.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: In my opinion, Senator MacEachen exaggerated a lot, just like Senator Stewart.

Earlier I was listening to Senator Stanbury. The beginning of his speech was good. The honourable senator was objective and so on. But, as he was talking, and even though he said he was not partisan and felt sorry that the debate was so partisan, he himself became partisan. Toward the end, I could see through him clearly!

I find this regrettable because when people show such partisanship... We are not talking about just anybody! We are referring to senior senators who are well informed! Senator Stewart, who studied at Columbia, et cetera.

I have not been very active in the political sphere, but I know a lot of people who have. I was always struck by the fact that when people talk loud like this, it is because they have a bad cause.

So, what is their point of view? Our opponents base their logic on "managed trade".

This is a popular concept in the United States with Ms Tyson and all the others around President Clinton. These people want "managed trade". Do you know what "managed trade" is? It is the opposite of the logic based on efficiency and free trade. It is protectionism. Let me tell you in two words what protectionism is: It is patronage with public funds. This is what they do. they are into patronage by transferring wealth from one group to another. I cannot support that.

Honourable senators, I conclude with these humble thoughts.

[English]

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I am glad Senator Bolduc agreed to answer these questions at the end because as his speech went on he got worse and worse.

First, I want to ask about the point on which he attacked me specifically. He quoted the evidence we had in committee that the panel system has worked well: That we lost the cases we ought to have lost; and that we won the cases we ought to have won.

In contrast the Americans come along and say that the system is not working well. Why? They tell us it is because these trade lawyers are in there, bad fellows. I am sure Senator Bolduc will agree that I never said anything against the lawyers.

In Washington they say that the panels, like the Court of International Trade, must show deference to the Department of Commerce, bow to the department with respect to its interpretation of the law, as well as its determination on the facts of each case. The panels have not been doing that. Consequently, the Americans say the panels must be changed.

They say, "We must get those economists out of there; we must get the trade lawyers out of there; and we must have judges who understand judicial restraint, judges who will bow to the Department of Commerce on the interpretation of the law and its determination of the facts".

The Americans demanded that we move away from the system which Senator Bolduc says produces such good results. What did the Prime Minister say? He said, said, "Yes, yes. I cannot sleep well if the President of the United States is not completely happy". That was the attitude of Prime Minister Mulroney throughout the piece.

I ask Senator Bolduc: Why should we agree to panels composed as much as possible, which may mean exclusively, of judges and retired judges when we have heard, as Senator Bolduc agrees, that the panels have worked well? That is my first question.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: Honourable senators, I do not see anything wrong with that. It is arbitration to settle disputes. I see nothing outrageous about taking people with legal training to apply the law or agreement or convention to an individual case and to distinguish questions of law from questions of fact. I think that is all right. What difference is there really between a corporate lawyer who arbitrates and a judge who was a corporate lawyer before being appointed to the bench? He does not change the way he thinks because he is a judge. That will not change.

[English]

Senator Stewart: I agree with the honourable senator. He has just conceded my point because, under the existing agreement, the panels must have at least three lawyers. The Americans say that is not good enough. They say the panel must be composed solely of judges, if possible.

Senator Frith: What is the difference, as he says?

Senator Stewart: Why are the Americans making so much of the distinction between judges and lawyers if Senator Bolduc is correct? The truth of the matter is they do not want trade lawyers on the panels.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: Honourable senators, first of all, if they are intelligent, they will take judges who have done trade law. That is for sure. There is nothing extraordinary about that. What will their role be? Their role in the panels will be to take the place of the legal review that would otherwise have been done by an American court. They are replacing that with a binational panel. I see nothing wrong with that.

I think that Senator Stewart is looking for a problem in what is a valid legal system, on the whole. He is looking for weak points to emphasize. A small change is being made there. They said that it would be judges instead of lawyers, so he emphasizes that. I think that does not change the nature of the decision-making process.

[English]

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, this is very important; I would not persist if it were not. Senator Bolduc is now telling us that panels should operate exactly like the Court of International Trade.

(1600)

Then what is the point of the change away from the U.S. Court of International Trade — made up of judges — to panels made up of judges? What do we gain? What does Canada gain?

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: Honourable senators, we have gained nothing here. In the free trade treaty, we won binational panels and therefore instead of having a legal review done only by the Americans, we have a legal review done by both countries at the same time. The chairman of the panel is chosen from among the Canadians or the Americans. Honestly, I do not see the difference in kind between this treaty and the other one.

[English]

Senator Stewart: Are you saying then that a good Canadian judge, because he is a Canadian, will not interpret the law in the same way as a good American judge?

Senator Bolduc: Not at all.

Senator Stewart: Well then, why not have five American judges? What do we gain by the panel system? You tell us it is so wonderful.

[Translation]

Senator Bolduc: Honourable senators, as Mr. Ritchie told us, we have won more often than we have lost — that is what we have gained.

[English]

Senator Stewart: Yes, and because we have been winning cases, the Americans want to change the composition of the panels.

Let us not lose sight of the real point, Senator Bolduc. We were told in the 1980s that most of our trade with the United States already was duty free, that the big problem was that we lacked secure access. There were problems with pork, salmon, softwood lumber, lobsters, and so on. The problem was not the whole waterfront of trade but rather these disputes. Consequently, the panel dispute settlement system was vital to the free trade agreement.

The Canadian view is that the system has worked well. The Americans are vastly unhappy, so they want to change the system by bringing in more judges. No one will argue that they are not unhappy. They made that clear. They want judges who, as they themselves say, will show deference to the Department of Commerce with respect to its interpretation of the law, as well as its determination of the facts in each case. They are saying that the panels have not been doing that, and that they want to change the composition of the panels so as to get the kind of results they want.

I have other questions, senators, but I will forgo. Senator Bolduc is weary.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I am very happy to be back in the Senate and to work with you to produce better legislation. I appreciate, in particular, the opportunity to take part in the third reading debate on Bill C-115, the bill which is supposed to implement the North American free trade agreement.

We have heard many useful speeches that contribute to this debate. We have also read many critiques and commentaries on this implementing bill, as well as on NAFTA. We have also heard, especially this afternoon, that the government is trying to bulldoze Bill C-115 through the Senate this week with unwarranted haste. In fact, I would call it indecent, even insane, haste.

There are many people opposed to this bill. Not only are Liberal senators in this chamber and opposition members in the other place opposed to it, but many very responsible and important Canadian citizens are opposed to it.

One of those is the Premier of Ontario, Bob Rae. I would like to bring to the attention of the Senate what the premier said about NAFTA in an article he wrote which was published in the Toronto Star on April 27 of this year. It is entitled, "Mexican trade deal only adds insult to Ontario's injuries". In the article he says:

> The proposed North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), on balance, is a bad deal for Ontario and its people. That is why our government opposes it.
> NAFTA will continue the devastation of Ontario's economy that began under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement (FTA). The price of more of this kind of free trade is too high.
> ...NAFTA, is a bad deal for the people of Ontario.
> It will cause a net job loss. The FTA has already cost Ontario tens of thousands of manufacturing jobs. Under NAFTA, Ontario will lose thousands more...
> NAFTA also will encroach into many areas of provincial jurisdiction, including the regulation of investment and financial services. It will limit the ability of the Ontario government to respond to the public's legitimate expectations for action on economic and social issues...
> NAFTA also reinforces the FTA's giveaway of Canadians' ability to make their own decisions on the future use of Canada's resources. Under the FTA, Canada lost ultimate control over its energy resources and is obliged to supply energy to the U.S. in times of shortage. NAFTA does nothing to change this, even though Mexico realized the value of its energy resources and refused to surrender control to the U.S...
> For all these reasons, NAFTA is not a good deal for Ontario.

I mentioned earlier that there are not only Mexicans but Americans who are concerned and frightened by NAFTA. As I was walking out of church after hearing mass two Sundays ago, a fellow parishioner gave me a white envelope which contained a copy of The Buffalo News dated May 24, 1993. In the column headed "Viewpoints" is an article entitled, "Free trade has clobbered Northeast, Midwest — and Canada". The author, Douglas Turner states:

> A small congressional office has developed some staggering information about the loss of manufacturing employment and income in Northeast and Midwest since the mid-1980s...
> This employment, lost to Ontario's Golden Horseshoe and American border states, has left for Japan, the People's Republic of China and Mexico...
> In U.S. dollars, the average Mexican hourly wage is $2.35; in Taiwan, it's $5.19; in Hong Kong, $3.89; Singapore, $5, and Korea, $4.93. Japan, Canada and the U.S. are just about even at $17 an hour.
> And that's why the multinationals in Canada, the U.S. and Japan are pouring money into new plants and equipment into Mexico, and why more than $10 million a year is being spent here lobbying Congress to vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement.
> These corporations are nothing but insatiable carnivores — great white sharks roaming the borderless seas for smaller game...
> Early this week negotiators from the three countries are supposed to produce drafts of the touted side agreements on labor and the environment to NAFTA. But they will be missing the "teeth" that the president, and his trade ambassador, Mickey Kantor, have demanded.

> The deal is just right for multinationals the way George Bush left it. There's too much juice in it for the big corporations that finance presidential, House and Senate campaigns to let it be spoiled by meddlers like House Majority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., and AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland.

So much for American opposition.

The Toronto Star, in a lead editorial on June 18 entitled "Hold up NAFTA", says that the Senate is being forced to pass the North American free trade agreement before any of the questions on the side deals are answered.

> It seems bent on giving Prime Minister Brian Mulroney his crowning achievement — and, as it turns out, his last roll of the dice.
> For the Senate to pass the bill blindly would mock the very notion of a chamber of sober second thought.

I agree with these comments, honourable senators, and say again that the government is bulldozing this bill through the Senate before the side deals or the parallel deals on workers' rights and the environment are complete.

The other criticism I have about this implementation bill, Bill C-115, is that it treats NAFTA as a done deal to which there are certain parties and not others. The inclusion or the identity of parties as "governments" is ill-defined in this bill. The "governments of these three countries" can mean many things. In Canada alone, the term can mean the general government as set up by the right of the Crown in the British North America Act, or the democratic parliamentary government we call the House of Commons and the Senate. It can mean the provincial and territorial legislatures, taken together or separately; or it can have the conveniently limited meaning of the governing party, with its cabinet and Prime Minister.

My third criticism of this bill is that the new provisions in the NAFTA appear to be imported holus-bolus out of the Dunkel text for GATT. This text has been bogging down GATT negotiations in the Uruguay Round for seven years. Is this the way to loosen the log-jam? Foist the untried text on the North American triumvirate and get it moving? Honourable senators, that is putting the cart before the horse.

Canada, the United States and Mexico are peoples with the right to know what they are getting into — and if GATT is unfinished, why pretend in the NAFTA right now that it is settled? Why shoe-horn GATT into effect at the risk of exposing the North American continent to democratically and constitutionally destabilizing factors? I will try, in the short time I have at my disposal, honourable senators, to call your attention to some of these important factors.

I read in the Canadian Forum just last week an article written by Duncan Cameron entitled "One America", in which the view was expressed that the content of the NAFTA is an American "statement of policy with serious consequences for Canada". From the Marshall Plan to the Gulf War, Cameron argues that the United States of America has taken unilateral initiatives with Canada following along, and with the NAFTA now no exception. A powerful network, he warns, of American-controlled transnational corporations have strengthened themselves on liberalized European markets, and today dominate American foreign policy.

Given that American interests are experiencing a decline on the world markets, Duncan Cameron sees America as consolidating U.S. economic domination of the Americas to achieve the largest single market and labour base in the world. Through these cartels, he says, the European Economic Community and other countries derive a dividend in the political power brokered under the NAFTA.

Honourable senators, Bill C-115 provides good reason to hold Mr. Cameron's observations in respect. From beginning to end, this bill shows a painful unawareness of the values held in Canada with regard to the provincial governments, the sovereign bars of Parliament and the Supreme Court of Canada, or the role of the Crown — which without normative moderating language is abrogated in clause 5 in right of Canada, and in clause 20(5) in right of a province. At clause 20, a regulation made by the Governor in Council, entirely on the strength of his own opinion, is binding on the Crown that he, in fact, is supposed to represent. Even a cursory look uncovers numerous other such attempts, by a mind not familiar with the Canadian way, to have Canada's Governor in Council act as though he were the governor of some state.

Mr. Cameron concludes his article with a strong warning about the uneven force held by way of the NAFTA as a binding or covering law on a scale with our Charter of Rights. While the United States Congress will be able to amend its implementing legislation, by the terms of Bill C-115, our government will not.

Mr. Cameron writes:

> That's what we are being asked to accept as the new North American constitution, an agreement that binds Canadian governments but not necessarily the U.S.

Honourable senators, Mr. Cameron's significant phrase "North American constitution" is no exaggeration, for the whole Canadian balance of powers, federal, parliamentary and provincial, is directly and permanently affected by this agreement to be bound. This is Duncan Cameron's main warning. It may be slight consolation to him to know that changes of the scope before us, enacted without a requisite constitutional amendment and provincial agreements, will be unconstitutional in Canada. This flaw in the proposed implementation of the NAFTA is, therefore, a very serious matter which we should not be recklessly trying to pass today.

My fifth criticism of this bill is that enterprising scientists and technologists in Canada, and even in Mexico, are deterred from developing their cost saving ideas by the NAFTA's preferential option for the multinational corporations. Mr. John Dillon, in an article entitled "Intellectual Property" which appeared in the Canadian Forum in January of this year, notes that among the network of American-controlled multinationals, a powerful group of biochemical and pharmaceutical companies obtained satisfaction of their interests in enforcements of intellectual property — something entirely new in the NAFTA. These corporations, he says, including giants such as Bristol-Myers Squibb, Johnson and Johnson, Merck, Pfizer, Proctor & Gamble, and DuPont, among others, formed the compact known as the Intellectual Properties Commission. This IPC group was dissatisfied, not only with what the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement provided, or with the Patent Act amendments that the Canadian government was forced to enact extending patent protections, but also with the Trade-Related Intellectual Property Rights provisions in the draft GATT text. These corporations did not like the extra time even GATT offers less developed countries to phase in protection for transnational corporate patents.

In consequence of the IPC's lobby in the United States, Chapter 17 of the NAFTA "advances the biotechnology industry's goal of eventually winning patent rights over plants, animals, genetic materials, and even life forms derived from the human body".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senator, according to the rules, your time has expired.

Honourable senators, is there unanimous agreement to allow the Honourable Senator Haidasz to continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, another feature of NAFTA that the government is attempting to implement in Bill C-115 is the exposure of the provinces and the peoples of Canada to powerful interests other than their own duly elected governments. Their own efforts to gain legislative permission for enterprise at bringing down the costs of many drugs will be overruled, or Canada will be required to defray damages as though its people were pirates brought before NAFTA's dispute settlement high court, called SIMA — or Special Import Measures Act. As implemented here, therefore, NAFTA can be a serious cause for social strife and destabilization, not only in Canada, but also in Mexico.

(1620)

In view of the limited time that I have, it is unfortunate that I cannot go into much detail how, in Bill C-115, the powers of the legislatures, the Senate and the House of Commons are being curtailed. If this house ever needed to live up to its age old and noble reputation as a non-partisan house of sober second thought, this is the day it should do so. It should be moved that we convoke a committee of the whole to consider the draft legal text of NAFTA and the best amendments to it and to study in greater depth Bill C-115, so as to preserve the integrity and sovereignty of Canada in its Constitution, national security, moral and ethical values, human rights and its multicultural heritage. The current insane haste to pass Bill C-115 is far from a testament to what has preserved our country for 126 years. That preservative has always been prudence and the concern for the common good.

I have one more point to make. NAFTA encourages implementing legislation to enact its recommendations and provisions. However, among these recommendations is that the parties respect one another's constitution. Therefore, I have an addition to make to the bill as an amendment in order to fill this glaring omission and give expression to what it is to respect the Canadian constitution; otherwise, we may find ourselves tacitly approving resolutions that are tantamount to constitutional amendment without the proper procedure.

A failure to include normative guidance on a bill, so far-reaching as Bill C-115, is an invitation to commit constitutional suicide. Clauses 3, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of Bill C-115 are particular to legislation that implements NAFTA. However, they are insufficient to guarantee the sovereign rights of Canadians, their federal Parliament, and their provincial legislatures.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT—VOTE DEFERRED

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Therefore, honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Adams, the following reasoned amendment:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by adding immediately after Clause 5, at page 4 thereof, the following new clause:
> Existing constitutional rights
> 5.1 Nothing in this Act abrogates or derogates from any powers or rights of a provincial or territorial legislature, or of the Parliament of Canada, or from any other powers or rights held in Canada and recognized by the Constitution of Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon that Bill C-115 be read the third time.

In amendment, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Haidasz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Adams:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by adding immediately after Clause 5, at page 4 thereof, the following new clause:
> 5.1 Nothing in this Act abrogates or derogates from any powers or rights of a provincial or territorial legislature, or of the Parliament of Canada, or from any other powers or rights held in Canada and recognized by the Constitution of Canada.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I believe that there is an agreement about voting on the amendment?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Yes.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): You can add this amendment to the others on which we have agreed to vote separately as of 8:30 p.m. this evening.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: The vote is deferred until 8:30 p.m. this evening.

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I will try to focus on a few issues in this debate of Bill C-115 that are of particular concern to me. I differentiate NAFTA from FTA in this sense: In the FTA, the government made a conscious and strategic decision to embark on a new trade strategy with the U.S; in NAFTA, the initiation of discussions was between Mexico and the U.S.

Canada had the choice of being silent, thereby being prejudiced by an agreement between the U.S. and Mexico, or it could enter into negotiations to ensure the best position for Canada in the North American region. NAFTA has also provided an opportunity to make improvements on the FTA that have been enumerated in the committee and in the House of Commons debates. In addition, I personally believe that the future lies in freer trade for Canada, with an eye to markets and opportunities in Mexico and south. A more stable growth economy in Mexico can also enhance the quality of life and the individual rights and freedoms of the individual Mexican. I also believe that completing the Uruguay Round of GATT is needed.

In the field of human rights, I have always been struck by the credible position Canada has taken for decades. This has been to the credit of all governments and all parties in Canada. The universal declaration of human rights is the most important instrument with its covenants, protocols, instruments and bodies for action both for Canada to act against human rights abuses in other countries, while also allowing the same scrutiny of us. It is my conviction and belief that, while Canada can take some pride in its records, we still have some distance to go in the adherence of human rights for all of our own citizens.

Those who say that no improvements to human rights are possible until economic growth occurs, are wrong. Those who state the reverse are also, in my opinion, wrong. The covenant on civil and political rights and its optional protocol and the economic, social and cultural covenant, which are the two most important tools to further the UN declaration on human rights, are fundamentally important in the struggle to attain adherence to the United Nations Charter on Human Hights.

In her pursuit of the adherence of human rights for all people, Canada turns to the United Nations Declaration, the Human Rights Commission, the Security Council and all other United Nations bodies, for strong universal action to achieve compliance. In addition, I know from my own several postings, each mission abroad has the task to analyze, to assess, varying aspects of human rights developments and to pursue human rights adherence in all countries. We enter into dialogue, discussion and, in some cases, condemnation of and action on human rights records when we deal bilaterally. The onus is on our ambassadors, government officials, ministers and the Prime Minister. It is an added, unique role that Canada has played through nongovernmental organizations. This scrutiny, dialogue and action does not exempt any country, nor should it single out any country for different treatment.

Regular reports are received from missions. We have had cause in the past, and we continue to have cause to be concerned about the human rights issues in Mexico. It would be fair to say Mexican governments of the past have been defensive and less than cooperative in addressing human rights abuses. Equally, it would be fair to say that the present Mexican government and President Selinas have expressed their concerns and have moved to open their government and their economy to closer scrutiny and challenge.

While we remain concerned about the human rights record, trade has continued with Mexico. We have heard much in committee of the one-sided trade from Mexico to Canada. There is a vague implication that the Government of Canada should not have entered into a NAFTA arrangement because there was no assessment of the human rights situation in Mexico. In my opinion that is not the case. The ongoing processes in the international human rights fora, as well as the bilateral field, have continued and Mexico has not been excluded. Entering into NAFTA will not stop the analysis, criticism, dialogue and action that Canada can and should take in the human rights field. What it will do is stop one-sided trade and provide more scrutiny and impetus for implementation of human rights legislation and compliance.

Further, in my opinion, words by either the Government of Mexico or parliamentarians in Canada are less useful. Action is needed. One test of NAFTA will be whether here or in Mexico or, for that matter, in the United States we see, by the implementation of NAFTA, that economic conditions of citizens and individuals are improved in the long run. Another test is whether it will stimulate an environment that will allow for greater implementation of and adherence to human rights principles. An open economy will inevitably lead to greater scrutiny. An open society will lead to greater scrutiny and greater pressure for positive gains in human rights. NAFTA has already turned the spotlight on Mexico and there is no room to hide. The Mexican government will be judged by its commitment to the implementation of the machinery that is now in place for human rights and for economic reform. Canada too will be judged. NAFTA will require a greater dedication by our government to education, training, retraining and, above all, research.

As we debate, the International Conference on Human Rights has been convened in Vienna with a goal of strengthening human rights machinery. There lies a real chance for action. Our best global hope is to agree on universal human rights standards with countries creating strong, independent institutions to safeguard human rights. It is there that our action should be placed.

Senator Stewart: Would Senator Andreychuk undertake to cope with a question or two?

Senator Andreychuk: Yes.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Thank you. The honourable senator has just now emphasized the desirability of a universal approach to human rights standards. Yet it would seem that, in so far as trade in North America is concerned, she would prefer to move away from the GATT approach to a country-to-country approach. Perhaps she would comment on that observation.

I would outline the specific problem with which I wish she would help me. Senator Ghitter gave an eloquent address on human rights. What he said was echoed to some extent by Senator Di Nino, Senator Kinsella and today by Senator Andreychuk. All four conclude with an unspoken word. That word is, "nevertheless".

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It is better than "notwithstanding".

Senator Stewart: "Canadians should stand for all these great things, nevertheless, I am going to vote for this bill." That is what these senators are saying. Should we not in the future refer, in a friendly way of course, to Senator Andreychuk as "senator nevertheless"?

Senator Andreychuk: Thank you for noticing me, Senator Stewart. For a new senator that is quite an achievement. May I say that I did not say "nevertheless"; I said quite the opposite. We have in fact been scrutinizing their human rights record, as others have been scrutinizing our record, and as we have also been scrutinizing the United States. I believe we use bilateral means and international means to do that. Our standards have always been there. We have been outspoken in the human rights field. I do not see that NAFTA is anything magical in the human rights field. We had trade before with Mexico and we should have been concerned with the human rights record at that time. The point I am trying to make is that I am concerned today and there is no NAFTA. I believe that they go hand in hand, but not every policy should include every clause on everything about which I am concerned. In another world perhaps I would have an environmental clause, a human rights clause and everything else that I believe in and hold fundamental.

I am saying that we have to look at the whole area of how we work together with Mexico. We did not stop trade on the basis of human rights records last year or this year. I do not see how NAFTA changes that. However, I see that NAFTA could be a tool to improve the situation. That is my respectful opinion.

On the honourable senator's other point concerning GATT, I believe we should conclude the current GATT round and begin, as quickly as we can, on a new economic restructuring in the world for the benefit of young people. In the short run I will admit there will be difficulties. I look to Canada not just to pass this legislation. I hope it will implement it with sensitivity to the Canadian people.

Senator Muir: The honourable senator seems to have a new-found interest in human rights.

Senator Stewart: I believe Senator Andreychuk has had a long-standing interest in human rights. I believe she recognizes that the Government of Canada is in favour of a side agreement on labour. She also recognizes that the Government of Canada is in favour of a side agreement on the environment. Would she then, in view of her strong interest in human rights — for which she, apparently, has great support — be interested in a side agreement on human rights?

Senator Andreychuk: Is the honourable senator asking for my personal opinion?

Senator Stewart: Yes, I am interested in what the honourable senator is going to vote for, nothing else.

Senator Andreychuk: I am not running for anything. My personal opinion in the field of human rights is that we have to find some international standards. That is what is being discussed in Vienna at the moment, and it is somewhat encouraging.

Unfortunately, I feel that we will not yet come to a conclusion. I have always felt that a universal standard on human rights moves away from cultural imperialism and power politics to a standard to which we all must adhere. It also does not exempt one because of certain things in one's country. The United Nations is working for a universal standard. It seems to me that is where we should put our emphasis.

Perhaps I could have said the same about the other two agreements. I wish we had been able to accomplish more in the environment field in Rio. Had we, perhaps we would not need the side agreements. However, we failed to get the standards I would have wished and I will find every avenue to pursue them.

Hon. John Buchanan: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about this bill. In 1987, I endorsed the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia. At that time, there were many concerns expressed; partisan political concerns, and those of labour and others.

During the 1988 election campaign, many of these concerns were raised. There were concerns that regional economic development would be dead in Atlantic Canada as a result of the FTA. That certainly did not happen. Based on discussions that were held and decisions that were made during consultations for the agreement, programs on regional economic development were not touched by the FTA. Such things as pensions, Medicare, hospitalization — the so-called bogeymen of the FTA — were discussed during the election campaign. People were terrified by it.

Senator Gigantès: Quite rightly so.

Senator Buchanan: "Quite right," Senator Gigantès states. I ask the honourable senator to name one area of the country where Medicare, pensions or hospitalization has been affected by the FTA. Not one area in this country has been affected by the free trade agreement.

Senator Gigantès: There have been 450,000 manufacturing jobs that have gone south.

Senator Buchanan: Here we are again, honourable senators, with the same concerns being expressed by some of the same people.

In Nova Scotia we endorsed the FTA. In Atlantic Canada generally the FTA was endorsed. Why? Because it was good for Atlantic Canada; it was good for Nova Scotia. It has to be remembered that approximately 75 per cent of everything we produce, manufacture or process in our provinces — I will speak about Nova Scotia in particular — is exported; over 60 per cent of that goes to the United States. Some $1.6-billion worth of fish products, tires, paper, pulp, wood, iron, steel, and coal are exported to the United States.

Therefore, as the Premier of Nova Scotia, along with all the other premiers, we endorsed the free trade agreement and it has been good for Nova Scotia, Atlantic Canada and Canada generally.

Senator Haidasz: Not for Ontario.

Senator Buchanan: I see; not good for Ontario? It is interesting that the Premier of Ontario of the day thought it was good for Ontario. The present premier may not. However, he has a lot of other problems brought about by himself and his government which have nothing at all to with the free trade agreement.

Senator Gigantès: Premier Peterson opposed it.

Senator Buchanan: I support this bill wholeheartedly because it will be good for Canada. We have to remember that, as far as communication and trade are concerned, the world is narrowing. Massive trading blocs have been built and are building. Eastern European countries are joining with western Europe; the Pacific Rim and other areas are mounting massive trade blocs. We in North America had better get our act together.

The free trade agreement has been good for Nova Scotia. I have already mentioned the reasons some people opposed it. They were not affected whatsoever by the free trade agreement.

Honourable senators, what is the difference between the FTA and NAFTA? NAFTA is but an extension of the free trade agreement into Mexico.

Senator Gigantès: That is what we are afraid of.

Senator Buchanan: Today Mexico is the largest trading partner that Canada has in Latin America; it will be much larger after NAFTA is passed, and that is what it is all about.

Senator Stewart: It may even double.

Senator Buchanan: It is about jobs, saving jobs, increasing our economy and ensuring that, in a global sense, we are competitive, and will be competitive. Therefore, it is good for Nova Scotia. The FTA opened up a market without tariffs of 260 million people. What about NAFTA? I would remind senators from the Antigonish area about a market of 85 million people that we presently trade with, but which will be responsible in the future for saving jobs in Nova Scotia and creating new jobs in Nova Scotia. I would like to put some examples on the record.

At the present time we export to Mexico some fish products, steel, coal and forestry products. However, the NAFTA will be good news for Nova Scotia. It will open up this market for even more exports. Mexico has agreed to eliminate the 20-per-cent tariff applied on hake, salmon, herring, mackerel and some species of dried and smoked fish. Tariffs on lobsters and scallops will be phased out over five years. No import licenses will be required for lobster, as at present. It is estimated that markets for fish products will grow in Mexico at a average of 3.5 per cent per year, reaching $1.4 billion by 1994. That is good news for Nova Scotia fishermen and fish processors.

Senator Stewart: Before the honourable senator continues, may I ask if he stated that the Mexican tariff on commercial salmon from Nova Scotia will be eliminated? Is it not true that there no longer is a commercial salmon fishery in Nova Scotia. Perhaps the honourable senator could tell us where all the other fish to be sold to the Mexicans will come from?

Senator Buchanan: I am glad the honourable senator asked that question. I stated that the 20-per-cent tariff which is presently applied will be eliminated on salmon, hake, herring, mackerel and some dried fish.

Senator Stewart: There is no commercial salmon fishery in Nova Scotia.

Senator Buchanan: The honourable senator states that we have no commercial salmon operations. I was in Washington last week and do you know what I saw on a menu in a restaurant?

Senator Frith: No, but you are going to tell us.

Senator Buchanan: Nova Scotia smoked salmon.

Senator Frith: But when was it smoked?

Senator Buchanan: There was smoked salmon on the menu of the Essex Marriott Hotel in New York City. If the waiter had been asked where it was from, he would have stated that it was from the eastern shore of Nova Scotia.

(1650)

If you go to some of the best restaurants in Paris, France, and ask where their smoked salmon is from, it is not from Denmark, not from —

Senator Stewart: It is from Tangiers.

Senator Buchanan: You've got it: It is from Tangiers.

Senator Stewart: But where did the salmon come from before it was smoked?

Senator Buchanan: Where does the salmon come from? This reminds me of being back in the legislature, with the Liberals across the way again.

Senator Frith: You know what happened in the legislature.

Senator Buchanan: But they would never ask that question. They knew where the salmon came from.

Senator Stewart: From the St. Mary's river, is that what you are saying?

Senator Buchanan: Perhaps we are talking about two different kinds, senator.

Honourable senators, it is good news for Nova Scotia, because we may be able to catch and process many of those species in spite of quotas. There are tons of some of those species off the coast of Nova Scotia at the present time, and we will find markets for them.

What will happen with our other products? Over the next number of years, we will be growing and producing many of the products that will have an increasing market in Mexico. Some of those markets will increase by 30 to 40 per cent per year. These products include Annapolis Valley apples and Cumberland County and Valley blueberries.

Some honourable senators may not know that Nova Scotia at the present time probably exports more blueberries than any other country in the world. We were in Japan one time, and the dessert we were served was Nova Scotia blueberries. They made sure they told us about that. I checked, and they were shipped from John Bragg's in Collingwood, Nova Scotia, all the way to Japan. Go to Mexico, and when you have your dessert, you will have Nova Scotia blueberries because of the NAFTA agreement.

John Bragg would be one of the big supporters of NAFTA. John Bragg is a fine man, but if he were in the Senate, he would not be sitting on this side. He would be over there with the Liberals. If he knew my friends opposite were opposing this measure, however, I wonder whether he would stay over there.

Honourable senators, in Nova Scotia we also process vegetables. We have all kinds of pies in the Annapolis Valley. Where can the market be for those in the future? Mexico. Once again, it is good news.

Senator Gigantès: Tortilla pie.

Senator Buchanan: Goods news for Nova Scotians. As you know, we have been selling steel rails to Mexico for years. Mexico is planning new railroads, improving existing railways, and building new suburban railway systems in Mexico City and Monterrey. That is good news for Sydney Steel, as there will be more exports of rails from that company. Tariffs will be removed, and other barriers were removed for rails, railway stock, parts, tires. That is good news for Michelin, Trenton, the steel workers in Sydney Steel and other plants throughout Nova Scotia. I am sure honourable senators would agree that keeping those jobs at the present time is more important than some political offensive you may make against this bill.

Senator Stewart: What is the Mexican tariff on steel rails now?

Senator Buchanan: There is a tariff.

Senator Stewart: How much is it?

Senator Buchanan: I cannot tell you, but I will find out for you.

Mr. Speaker —

Senator Frith: Say, "Honourable senators," John.

Senator Buchanan: I am sorry. Force of habit for 26 years. No disrespect intended.

Senator Frith: You can take the boy out of the house, but you can't take the house out of the boy.

Senator Buchanan: That is good. I must use that sometime.

Honourable senators, let us talk about coal. All tariffs on coal will be removed. That is good news for Cape Bretoners.

Senator Frith: This is the place where you are supposed to pound your desk, Bob.

Senator Muir: You had better tell some of those characters over there where Cape Breton is.

Senator Buchanan: I think some of them know where it is.

Senator Haidasz: I was there.

Senator Buchanan: There is no question that the removal of those barriers and tariffs on coal will be good news. We can get into that market.

What about tariffs and barriers on wood products, pulp, paper, and other forest products? They will be removed under NAFTA. Demand for pulp will grow by 50 per cent over the next ten years in Mexico. Demand for other forest products will grow by 12 per cent over the next five years. It now stands at $1 billion annually. Again, that is good news for Nova Scotia's forest workers.

What about Christmas trees? It would be wonderful to be in Mexico City, Monterrey or Acapulco, enjoying Christmas — I always enjoy it in Nova Scotia, but some of you may want to go down there — and see a Nova Scotia Christmas tree there as a result of NAFTA. That is good news for Antigonish Christmas tree growers.

Senator Stewart: What is the tariff on Christmas trees going to Mexico now?

Senator Buchanan: It is good news for NSFI and Scott Paper. It will save existing jobs, create new jobs, and increase the work force.

At the present time, Jacques, Whitford and Associates are engaged in a joint venture with Mexican firms. I was talking to Hector Jacques just last week. Hector Jacques says NAFTA is good news. His group of engineers is in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, all over Atlantic Canada, into the U.S., into Ontario, and now joint venturing with Mexico.

Clearwater Fine Foods is in the process of negotiating a distribution contract with supermarkets and restaurant chains in Mexico. Our fish products will be there. Clearwater knows more about it than I do. They know more about it than you do, senator, and they say it is good news for Nova Scotia. I agree.

Sydney Steel is already providing steel rails for the Mexican market. We will supply more.

Nolan, Davis & Associates, a leading Canadian exporter of environmental services, landed a large contract with a Mexican mining company.

Honourable senators, there is no question that NAFTA will be good for Nova Scotia and good for Atlantic Canada. I disagree with those who say we will lose jobs because we cannot compete. As I said in 1985, 1986 and 1987, and as I will repeat now: I have faith and confidence in our Canadian and Nova Scotia work force; I have faith and confidence in their efficiency and their productivity; I have faith and confidence in our technology in Nova Scotia, Atlantic Canada, and Canada; I have faith that we will not only compete but will be better in so far as production, efficiency, costs and technology are concerned. I have such a great faith in our Nova Scotia efficiency and work force that I have no hesitation whatsoever in voting for NAFTA. It will be good for Nova Scotia and good for Canada.

Hon. Stanely Haidasz: May I ask my colleague Senator Buchanan, what is the price of a Nova Scotia lobster in Ottawa today? How much is it per pound?

Senator Buchanan: I would say probably somewhere in the range of $5.50, $6.50, something like that. If you want to come to Nova Scotia sometime, I will take you down to the wharf, and we can buy lobster down there for $2.50 or $3.00 a pound sometimes. They are not cooked, however. You must take them home and cook them.

Senator Adams and I had a lobster in Washington last week. They advertised the meal as the New England Clam and Lobster Bake. I tasted the lobster. It was delicious, but it did not come from Maine. It came from Nova Scotia. Eighty per cent of the lobsters they say come from the state of Maine are really from Nova Scotia.

Senator Simard: Come on, some of them come from New Brunswick.

Senator Buchanan: I meant to say Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I spoke at a seminar in Bangor, Maine, along with the Governor of Maine about eight years ago. On the menu there was lobster. I thanked the governor for having Nova Scotia lobster. He interrupted to say, "No, that is Maine lobster." I sat down and his Secretary of the Interior said to me, "You're right. The governor is wrong. It came from Nova Scotia on the boat this afternoon."

Our lobsters are everywhere. They are in Mexico and there will be more in Mexico.

Senator Haidasz: The point of my question, honourable senators, is that if a Nova Scotia lobster costs $5.60 per pound in Ottawa, how much will a worker in Mexico City, Guadalajara or Acapulco pay for a pound of Nova Scotia lobster there?

Senator Buchanan: I want to tell honourable senators that if we were in Halifax, Nova Scotia, right now, we would be able to see two planes being loaded with Nova Scotia lobster getting ready to leave for Hong Kong. There are lobsters leaving Nova Scotia every second day of the week for Paris, France.

Under the NAFTA, our refrigerated trucks will be able to leave for Yarmouth and drive all the way to Mexico with our lobsters. There will be no big expense for air shipments. After dropping off their shipment, they can load up and come back through the United States without having to pay any tariffs. That is good news, honourable senators, is it not?

Senator Haidasz: Again, the point of my question, Senator Buchanan, is how much will a pound of Nova Scotia lobster cost in Acapulco or Guadalajara?

Senator Buchanan: It depends on the volume we sell. Unfortunately, here in Ottawa the volume is not great. If you can sell 200 pounds, you will pay more. If you sell 2,000 pounds, you will pay less. It is simply that easy.

Senator Haidasz: A Mexican worker can only eat one Nova Scotia lobster at a time.

Senator Stewart: What is the Mexican tariff on lobster, blueberries, and salmon now?

Senator Buchanan: I just told you, senator. It is 20 per cent on salmon.

Senator Stewart: The commercial salmon fishery in Nova Scotia has been closed down for years.

Senator Buchanan: I am surprised at you, senator. I won't tell anyone at home you're opposed to the lobster fishermen, but obviously you are. He is opposed to the lobster fishermen of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

In Mexico, it is the lobster tail that is consumed. It is not like our lobster. Those people who have eaten the spiny lobster and the Nova Scotian and New Brunswick lobster, will tell you that our lobster is by far a better quality and tasting lobster than the spiny lobster caught off Mexico. That is why people will pay a bit more for our lobster than the spiny lobster. That is why it will be good for Nova Scotia.

Senator Simard: And New Brunswick.

Senator Haidasz: I love Nova Scotia lobster. It's the best in Canada. However, if some people in Canada have a problem paying $5.60 per pound for a Nova Scotia lobster, then the worker in Guadalajara who makes only $3 an hour will not be able to buy your lobster.

Senator Buchanan: All I can tell you is this, senators: I have never been to Guadalajara, maybe you have. In the restaurants of Mexico City, Acapulco, Monterrey and others, you will find Nova Scotia smoked salmon and lobster in the very near future at a price that is affordable for those people. This will ensure that Nova Scotia lobstermen, processors and truckers will make money. Everyone will be happy with NAFTA.

Senator Haidasz: I will go to Mexico to buy Nova Scotia lobster. It will be cheaper there than here.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, we are not against the principle of free trade. It is our duty to point out what is wrong with this agreement.

Having said that, I will adjourn this debate until tomorrow in order to speak about the Auto Pact and point out the deficiencies of NAFTA in connection with that agreement.

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the disastrous record of the Mulroney administration from 1984, when it first broke faith with the Canadian people, to 1993, when the Prime Minister announced his resignation. — (Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in Part 5 of this inquiry —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You mean Part 55, do you not?

Senator Frith: — I mentioned how Mulroney's promise of a new, open and responsive government was quickly buried under the sands of political corruption.

Richard Cleroux is a veteran Parliament Hill reporter, who for many years covered the Hill for the Globe and Mail. Late last year, speaking before the Media Club, he laid a very serious charge against the record of this government. He said:

> We here in Canada between 1984 and 1992 have lived through the most corruption-ridden federal government in our history. More members of Parliament have been charged and convicted of corruption, breach of trust and conspiracy than at any time in our 125 years as a nation.

That is a serious charge. What is the evidence? Let us look at it. To do so, we will take a little trip down memory lane, perhaps a painful memory lane for some. We will see. We will not try to examine every incident that Mr. Cleroux relies upon. However, let us look at what might be termed the highlights, as well as other relevant items during the Mulroneyites first term of office.

Where to start with this trip down memory lane? Why not with Minister of Defence, Robert Coates? After spending $139,000 to redecorate his office, but before getting an opportunity to fully enjoy his new trappings, he stepped down from cabinet on February 12, 1985. The resignation of Canada's Minister of National Defence followed reports about where he chose to spend some R&R while inspecting our troops in West Germany.

The next sad event which turned out well in the long run for the minister, but not for the government and certainly not for the Prime Minister, was the resignation of the then Minister of Fisheries, John Fraser, on Monday, September 23, 1985. It had its beginnings when the new minister decided that a million tins of tuna, which his own inspectors had found to be unfit for human consumption, which had been rejected by the Department of Defence and then by a humanitarian relief agency as unfit for the starving people of Ethiopia, should be allowed onto the shelves of Canadian supermarkets.

That was clearly a serious error in judgment. The minister himself recognized it as such by, eventually, doing the right thing.

Senator Perrault: Tunagate!

Senator Frith: Mr. Fraser then became the apparently popular, first-elected Speaker of the House of Commons. However, at the time, he made remarks that suggested that Prime Minister Mulroney had not been telling the truth.

The story began on Tuesday, September 17, 1985, when the CBC's Fifth Estate revealed how the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans had dealt with the tainted tuna.

During Question Period the following day, Mr. Mulroney doggedly defended his minister and claimed that the health and safety of Canadians had never been at risk, although people had been very sick all across the country. Suggestions that he dismiss Mr. Fraser from his cabinet were rejected out of hand.

The following day, Thursday, September 19, the minister ordered the rancid tuna off store shelves.

The next day, the Prime Minister held a press conference saying that the first he had heard of the tainted tuna was when the television program had originally aired. Unfortunately for him, on that same Friday, his fisheries minister said:

> The issue was in the prime minister's office in detailed form a couple of weeks ago.

Senator Perrault: He doesn't read his mail.

Senator Frith: That quote was reported in the Ottawa Citizen on September 24, 1985.

There was now only one possible outcome. On Monday, September 23, Mr. Fraser tendered his resignation and Mr. Mulroney accepted it.

That could have been the end of it, but it was not. There was more to come. On Wednesday morning, September 25, Conservative MP Fred McCain, in whose riding the Star-Kist tuna plant was located, told Robert Fife of Canadian Press that he had long been raising the problems the plant was having with the federal fisheries inspectors who were labelling tuna as rancid. He said:

> I did bring it up, I'm sure, in caucus during discussions since September of last year...

A short while later, he phoned the reporter back and said he had been mistaken and that he had never raised the issue at caucus or with the prime minister's office. When asked by the puzzled reporter, "Did the prime minister's office talk to you about it?", McCain answered, "Yes, they did. I have double checked it, but, no, I did not raise it..."

After that conversation, Mr. McCain phoned the reporter back yet again and said:

> I say unequivocally the following:
> There was no pressure by the prime minister's office on me to make any change in any statement which I have ever made now or at any time in the past.

A partial transcript of the three telephone calls appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of September 26, 1985. When questioned in the House of Commons about this latest episode in Tunagate, Mr. Mulroney denied everything and charged: "The Liberal Party...has no respect for the truth or for Parliament."

Six months later, during an interview with the New York Times, Mr. Mulroney gave his thoughtful and "truthful" perspective of Tunagate. Perhaps the newest "revision" would be a better description.

> When it was brought to my attention, bang! Immediately the minister's resignation was secured.

We now know that this statement was absolutely false and no one was particularly shocked to hear John Nunziata charge, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of March 22, 1986, that, "The Prime Minister is a compulsive liar."

It is very important to remember that Mr. Nunziata's statement was made outside the chamber, beyond the immunity which exists inside the House of Commons. But here, too, no one seriously thought that the Prime Minister would launch an action for defamation or slander. They were right. Not only was there no slander suit; there was not even a request for a retraction from any of the Mulroneyites.

Let us get back to the final week of September 1985. The week went from bad to worse when Marcel Masse, Minister of Communications, announced that he, too, was resigning from Cabinet because he was the subject of an inquiry concerning an alleged violation of the Elections Act. Fortunately for the Mulroney team, the allegations at first proved completely unfounded and Mr. Masse quickly rejoined his cabinet colleagues. However, again, the initial resignation led to another episode where Prime Minister Mulroney's veracity was placed in doubt, to put it mildly.

In the House of Commons on September 26, 1985, at page 7050 of Hansard, Mr. Mulroney stated he had no prior knowledge of his minister's problems and neither had his staff. Responding to a question put by Mr. Turner, Mulroney replied that he had made inquiries of his office, and:

> I wish to assure him of two things. I had no prior knowledge of any kind; nor am I aware of anyone on my senior staff who might have had such a knowledge.

On that same day, Mr. Jerry Lampert, national director of the Conservative Party, told the media otherwise. The Toronto Sun of September 27, 1985, reported:

> Lampert had said that although he did not inform Mulroney, "(I) had discussions, you know, with people in the prime minister's office..."
> Asked if they were senior aides, he replied: "Oh, yes, senior PMO people."

After the inconsistencies in the two versions of the events between Mr. Lampert and the Prime Minister, understandably headlined in the media, Mr. Lampert followed the McCain example and issued a letter of apology saying he had been mistaken. Six months later, he resigned as national director of the party.

These episodes, though always followed by a retraction or an apology, spawned headlines such as, "The Pinocchio of Politics", a label that has understandably followed the Prime Minister ever since.

That was not the end of the bad news in 1985 for the Mulroneyites. We had bank collapses, the first in more than 60 years. First it was the Canadian Commercial Bank on Labour Day, and then the Northland Bank on September 30. Taxpayers were stuck with the bill while all Mulroney ministers steadfastly denied any responsibility whatsoever. These banks could have collapsed on another planet as far as their responsibilities were concerned. They did not blame the Liberals, as they usually do, although a Mulroneyism is never to admit responsibility for anything that goes wrong. They may have thought of blaming the Liberals, but they did not.

Then more embarrassment. The Minister of the Environment Suzanne Blais-Grenier toured northern France for four days in a chauffeur-driven government-financed limousine accompanied by her husband, her chief of staff and his girlfriend. According to the Globe and Mail of August 6, 1985, an External Affairs telegram described her husband:

> ...as a civil servant and the companion of her chief of staff was called a consultant.

When questions were raised in the House of Commons on October 4, 1985, as reported at page 7333, about her expenses, Erik Nielsen, the Deputy Primer Minister, questioned the motives of those who perceived any wrongdoing. He said:

> I asked myself whether the motivation was not to arouse some kind of racism here, something which I think is most regrettable.

It is Mr. Nielsen's silly fancy that is regrettable. But what is more true to form is to blame or to suggest that blame should be levelled at the critic. The government is never responsible for anything.

Honourable senators, the pattern became annoying, disillusioning and repetitive, and it included everything and everyone from a chief of staff to a cabinet minister who was paid $50,000 for a 4-month contract; $40,000 rent spent for an empty house for a non-existent consul general in Munich; and $773,500 spent for memberships at a Hong Kong golf club for employees at Canada's high commission.

Senator Perrault: Pretty high green-fees.

Senator Frith: More major league action involved corporate tax schemes. First there was the takeover of Gulf Canada by Olympia & York. When questioned on October 1, 1985, the Minister of Finance did not deny that Gulf Canada saved $1 billion in taxes through a favourable tax ruling. He refused to discuss the matter saying at page 7203 of Hansard:

> ...tax rulings are privileged matters between the Minister of National Revenue and the particular company concerned.

Then there was the takeover of Canada Trustco Mortgage Company by Genstar Financial Corporation. Genstar, needing money, floated a share issue and, according to the Ottawa Citizen of December 2, 1985:

(1720)

> By the time the tax brains in the private sector had fiddled with this offering, it allowed a foreign bank a chance at windfall profits for a middleman role and offered some investors with $100,000 to invest, an after-tax return on investment of more than 30 per cent a year, compounded for five years.
> One leading tax specialist interviewed by The Citizen said the scheme was clearly legal but scandalous...

The articles continues:

> Because of Genstar's unusual application of tax law the federal treasury will lose, at a maximum, about $10 million a year for five years, federal finance department officials said this week.

Genstar asked for and received, in advance, a binding tax ruling from Revenue Canada, allowing it to creatively interpret provisions in the Income Tax Act originally designed for family trusts. Revenue Canada is not obligated to provide binding advance rulings. Afterwards, legislation was introduced to close this loophole, but not before millions of tax dollars poured through it to safety.

Nineteen eighty-five was also the first full year in which Mr. Mulroney was able to show Canadians how he would, to use his words, do honour to Canadians and to the country with his patronage appointments.

Nineteen eighty-four had not brought that much honour. A Vancouver Sun editorial of January 8, 1985 observed:

> Today people could be forgiven for wondering if Mr. Mulroney conned them on the patronage issue.

What evidence is there to support that? Well, 1985 was not much different. Here are some highlights.

The pattern shifted form a bit. Friends and relatives were now featured. The Toronto Sun of April 23, 1985 said that the Department of Finance awarded $234,000 in untendered advertising contracts to Lawson Murray Ltd. The Minister of Finance was Michael Wilson. The president of the company, Doug Lawson, was the brother-in-law of the Minister of Finance. The sister of the Minister of Finance was a director of the company, although, according to the Toronto Sun, Mr. Wilson said that came as news to him.

One of the company's two vice-presidents was Doug Robson, Wilson's riding association president and a former employee in his Ottawa office. We were assured that this was mere coincidence.

The Ottawa Citizen of May 4, 1985 reported:

> The brother of External Affairs Minister Joe Clark is the federal fundraising director for the Progressive Conservatives in Alberta and now receives all outside legal work awarded by the federal government's Calgary Olympic office.

We are still trying to find out if there is any basis for what Mr. Cleroux said. Again, it is mere coincidence.

The Ottawa Citizen did a number of pieces on this part of the pattern, that is, the friends and relatives. The Ottawa Citizen of May 8, 1985 reported that Peter Clark's wife was made a temporary member of the National Parole Board. The same Ottawa Citizen article reported that William Elliot was named to the board of directors of Petro-Canada. Who is William Elliot? He is the brother of Mulroney's brother-in-law, Dick Elliot.

The Ottawa Citizen of June 4, 1985 reported that John Crosbie, Minister of Justice, presented the two-lawyer firm where his son, Chesley, worked with a contract to handle all government prosecutions under two federal fisheries acts and the Oil Pollution Prevention Regulations. The Ottawa Citizen also reported that another son, Michael, worked for the law firm of Chalker, Green and Rowe. His dad, the minister, made him legal agent in Newfoundland for Income Tax Act violations. Both sons were also made agents for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

According to the Toronto Sun of June 4, both sons had been members of the bar only since 1983. Nevertheless, they became legal agents for the government of Canada. This created more embarrassment for the government, so both firms eventually resigned as federal legal agents, but a few weeks after the withdrawal, according to the Globe and Mail of August 20, 1985, both legal firms were appointed as standing agents for the Federal Business Development Bank at the direct request of the Justice Minister's office.

The Globe and Mail of June 7, 1985 reported that John McMillan of Prince Edward Island had two brothers. One was tourism minister, Thomas McMillan. The other was Charles McMillan, senior policy advisor to the Prime Minister. John McMillan was called to the bar of P.E.I, went out and gained some work experience, and then, two weeks later, was appointed legal agent in the province of Prince Edward Island for the government of Canada. According to the Globe and Mail:

> Securing the appointment of legal agent was not all that difficult, Mr. McMillan recalls. He just picked up the telephone and called his brother Tom's office in Ottawa. Actually, he did not speak to Tom, he said, but to his executive assistant who just happened to be an old roommate from university days.

The Globe and Mail of September 4, 1985 reported that when Gayle Christie, a PC activist who was appointed to the board of directors of Air Canada, was asked about her credentials, she replied: "Well, I can drive a car". She is frank.

The Toronto Star of September 12, 1985 reported that Mr. Sam Wakim, a university roommate of the Prime Minister allegedly "approached a number of Toronto law firms promising new government business if they hired him. Wakim eventually joined the Toronto law firm of Weir and Foulds, which later won $200,000 worth of government business previously handled by another firm".

At year end, when Mr. Mulroney was asked whether it had been difficult to deal with all the controversies that surrounded his government during that year, particularly the scandals, he replied:

> Well, as it turns out it wasn't difficult because my integrity was questioned and it came out completely unsullied.

That is from the Toronto Sun of December 19, 1985.

Looking again at Mr. Cleroux's charge, he seems to have a good case for 1984 and 1985. What about 1986? I guess they would have liked to turn a brand new page in 1986, but it was not to be because the front page headlines on New Year's Day announced the resignation from cabinet of Ms Suzanne Blais-Grenier. She allegedly was protesting her government's decision to let the Gulf refinery in Montreal close down, throwing 450 people out of work. Others, however, viewed it more as a pre-emptive strike from the minister who knew her days were numbered. As, now senator, Marcel Prud'homme was reported as saying in the Globe and Mail of January 1, she "received wind of the fact she was going to be dropped (from cabinet) and said, 'if you're going to drop me, I'm going to drop you first'".

As a member of cabinet, one could not describe her as a shining star. The Ottawa Citizen of January 2, 1986, reviewing her accomplishments, reported:

> When a truck spilled toxic PCB's on the Trans-Canada highway in April, Blais-Grenier told anxious reporters they would have to wait until she had put on some lipstick...
> A month later, she faced the cameras and scribes again, this time to suggest the government might allow mining and lumbering in national parks.

The Ottawa Citizen of January 12, 1986, reported another departure. This time it was the firing of cabinet minister Roch LaSalle's special assistant Frank Majeau. According to the article, Mr. Majeau operated a nude dancer booking agency in 1983. One of his business partners was involved in the murder of a drug courier "who once used Mr. Majeau's Toronto apartment as a drop-off point for cocaine". That partner, Réal Simard, was convicted of murder. Mr. Majeau had a criminal record himself for assault with a weapon causing bodily harm. Although LaSalle and Majeau had been friends for nearly 25 years, Mr. LaSalle was apparently unaware of his background until alerted by the media.

The evidence continues to mount, and not once did the team's leader ever admit fault, mistake or responsibility. He couldn't blame the Liberals, in spite of Mr. Nielsen's silly comment, so whom to blame? Guess.

The headline of the Ottawa Citizen of January 20, 1988 read: "PM blames press for sagging popularity". The article describes how Mr. Mulroney told a press conference:

> We know what we're up against. We're not a bunch of children. We understand your (media's) obligations and we accept our own and we've got to get our message out and we're going to do it, you can be sure of that.

What did he do? The partial answer is provided by a January 23, 1986 Toronto Star headline, "PM's new strategy: Breakfast with Brian". That was a plan to invite media people to breakfast. Another part of the plan, according to Toronto Sun of February 7, 1986, was:

> ...to have some sort of "dial-a-date" arrangement between selected news reporters and certain cabinet ministers. By pairing ministers with friendly reporters they hope to get the good word out to the people of Canada.

Were the dial-a-dates and breakfast gabs with the media successful? Only the participants know the answer to that. We do know, however, that no one, no matter how hard they tried, could ignore the continuing and seemingly endless stories of cronyism, patronage and corruption.

Let us move along to the two opening paragraphs of a January 22 Ottawa Citizen story.

> Revenue Minister Elmer MacKay and former defence minister Robert Coates lobbied Fisheries Minister Tom Siddon to approve a fishing licence for a firm partly owned by Coates's former chief of staff, the Canadian Press has learned.

(1730)

> Liberal MP Russell MacLellan said Tuesday the deal is outright patronage, but all Conservatives involved in the arrangement denied it.

Onward, through 1986. The Toronto Star of March 9 reported:

> Conservative party members have been ordered hired as census commissioners in Ontario and Quebec even though they failed miserably on tests given to prospective candidates...
> They were hired on instructions from Supply and Services Minister Stewart McInnes even though in some cases candidates scored in the 20s on the test, sources said. A passing grade is 60 per cent.

The article described one case where:

> "(a) census area manager said he had two candidates who had failed. He was ordered to pick one, he said.
> He was also referred a candidate who had already been told a starting date by his Conservative MP.
> The person scored zero on the test, and only on appeal was the candidate rejected.

Well, perhaps caught in flagrante delicto, an admission? An apology? Forget it.

The Toronto Star reported:

> An aide to McInnes called the allegations "a non-issue".

Apology? Shame? No.

Conservative MP Marcel Tremblay sent a letter to party workers in late February of 1985. According to the Globe and Mail of March 6, the letter:

> ...said contracts should be given to people who contributed to the 1984 election campaign who belong to the Brian Mulroney Club (a Quebec Tory fund-raising group) or who took part in a fundraiser in Mr. Tremblay's riding in October.

The letter mentioned that every year there were over $1 billion in untendered government contracts, and attached to the letter was a list of 66 government projects in Mr. Tremblay's riding which would be awarded without public tender.

Mr. Tremblay, of course, sent out a second letter apologizing and claiming the first was sent in error. The Deputy Prime Minister, Erik Nielsen, said it was just a mistake, but was anything wrong? No — a mistake. Case closed.

The next day, March 7, 1986, there was another revelation. This time, it was the disclosure of a letter signed by the Minister of State for Youth, Andrée Champagne, addressed to her fellow Mulroneyites in the PC caucus dated January 6, 1986.

First, it described "the significant diminution in youth-related spending (close to $100 million since the election)." This did not cause any excitement, even though it showed that Mulroney's election promise to treat youth unemployment very seriously had been tossed in the bin. By now, however, broken Mulroney promises had become so commonplace they raised nothing but yawns.

The interesting paragraph in the letter read:

> 2.5 of 4.5 million young Canadians (15 to 24) will be casting a vote for the first time in 1988. Support to the recruitment efforts of the PC Youth Federations will be pre-writ priority for the government.

The letter was marked "SECRET". Secret because it was wrong? No, just an honest mistake.

At first, Ms Champagne suggested the letter might be a forgery, but later she confessed to her signature and explained that the suggestion of using taxpayers' money to recruit people into the Conservative party was a mistake. This time there was an apology for the mistake.

In April and May of 1986, the Sinclair Stevens affair sprung to life and Mr. Nielsen, stonewalling all opposition questions, earned his now famous nickname of "velcro-lips".

Mr. Stevens, as we recall, was the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He owned controlling interest in a company called York Centre Corporation. Those shares were put in a so-called "blind trust" following the election. His campaign manager was the company's president, and his wife was vice-president. She negotiated a $2.6-million loan from an individual with extensive government dealings. The loan was interest free for the first year. The company had apparently been very strapped for cash.

That is the short version of the story. Canadians were expected to believe that Mr. Stevens and Mrs. Stevens never talked about the company or what Mrs. Stevens had been doing to place the company on a less precarious financial footing.

It is also mere coincidence that Mr. Stevens personally approved $18.3 million in government grants during the first half of 1985 to a company closely linked to the individual who made the loan.

So, "sorry, we did wrong"? No. Never the Mulroneyites. The government stonewalled. But finally, when the country could not take it any longer, Mr. Stevens resigned from cabinet on May 12, 1986. Mr. Mulroney said he expected his minister to be "fully vindicated".

Mr. Justice William Parker was appointed to conduct an inquiry into the affair. He reported in December of 1987 that Mr. Stevens had broken conflict rules on 14 occasions when in cabinet and that he had shown "complete disregard" for the standards of conduct expected of someone holding such high office.

What about the blind trust? Mr. Justice Parker concluded that it "was not in fact blind", something the opposition had been alleging all along.

So much for conflict of interest. But, at the same time, the Michel Gravel story was beginning to unwind on the corruption front.

Mr. Gravel, Conservative MP for Gamelin, was charged with 50 counts of influence peddling, fraud and influence of public trust on May 15, 1986. According to the Ottawa Citizen of May 16, 1986:

> The charges against Gravel came just hours after a beleaguered Mulroney — stoutly defending his action in the Stevens case — boasted that the Conservatives "are erecting a new standard of morality day by day in Canada."

Senator Gigantès: It is new, that is true.

Senator Frith: On a certain interpretation, that is true.

It was alleged that Mr. Gravel obtained more than $100,000 in bribes from contractors doing business with the government. Mr. Gravel declared he was innocent. In the Montreal Gazette of April 10, 1986, Public Works Minister Roche LaSalle had insisted that "it is impossible to influence the awarding of a federal contract."

Mr. Gravel staunchly maintained his innocence right until the 1988 general election was safely in the bag. Then he pleaded guilty, was fined $50,000 and sent to jail for two years. His fine was paid by a mysterious benefactor who remains unknown, even to Gravel, to this very day.

Before we leave 1986 — yet another dark year for the government — in January it was revealed that, while an opposition MP in the 1960s, Erik Nielsen eavesdropped on Liberal caucus meetings. In an interview he taped in 1973, he said:

> There was a method by which we knew every Wednesday what was said in the Liberal caucus word for bloody word.

Apparently, wires had been crossed while an electronic system was being installed, and the Tories took full advantage of the error.

Senator Molgat: Nice fellows.

Senator Frith: They listened on headphones in a translation booth to the Liberal caucus.

An Hon. Senator: For goodness' sake!

Senator Frith: Yes, that is the official story. But the House of Commons has no record of any crossed wires, according to the Globe and Mail of February 4, 1986.

The Ottawa Citizen of the following day carried a story about a House of Commons' technician who alleged that:

> Communications devices in the Liberal caucus room had been deliberately tampered with' around the time of the Erik Nielsen eavesdropping affair.

The technician described how he found a microphone wire "that wasn't our work and wasn't our wire" spliced into one of the junction boxes.

So was it innocently crossed wires or deliberate wiretapping?

An Hon. Senator: Watergate!

Senator Frith: You decide.

In any event, remember how Mr. Nielsen railed when he discovered that Mr. Trudeau's office filed press clippings on Mr. Mulroney? It was one of the greatest violations of parliamentary ethics the civilized world had ever seen, Mr. Nielsen said. This is the wiretapper! It was terrible, he said.

Electronic eavesdropping on fellow parliamentarians, on the other hand, was apparently just something the Tories did in the normal course of business. When raised in the House of Commons on January 30, 1986, Mr. Nielsen, the Number Two Mulroneyite in the pecking order, said there had been anonymous plain brown envelopes flying around the Hill for decades, as if it were the same thing. The Prime Minister defended Mr. Nielsen to the limit, saying that he had "served his country honourably" and that "there is no allegation of illegality, or even impropriety". That is at pages 10327 and 10332 of Hansard.

There was not even any impropriety, claimed Mr. Mulroney. The Oxford Dictionary definition of "impropriety" is: "Incorrectioness; unfitness; indecency; instance of improper conduct".

Well, this time the Mulroneyites were too cornered for even them to brass it out, because of course there was improper conduct. After stalling and stonewalling for almost a week, Mr. Nielsen finally gave a half-hearted apology. On February 3, 1986, he told the House of Commons:

> I apologize to those who believe that proprieties were violated 25 years ago by my conduct.

I suppose for him that is a confession, but it certainly is not repentance.

In 1986, we also learned that the decision to switch the construction of a new federal prison to Mr. Mulroney's riding from Drummondville, would cost taxpayers $18 million in extra construction costs and another $3 million in additional operating costs every year. Three architectural firms awarded a $4.2 million contract by Public Works Minister Roche LaSalle to work on the prison were generous contributors to the Progressive Conservative Party.

(1740)

On October 19, 1986, the Globe and Mail reported that the architecture contract was not put out to public tender. The story also states:

> Jean-Maire Lavoie said in a telephone interview that his firm always makes larger donations to the party in power. He said local companies have no choice but to attend Tory fund-raising events and make generous donations if they hope to get any Government contracts.

Mr. Lavoie's firm was one of the three that was doing the prison work.

Let's end 1986 with this story from the Globe and Mail of December 16. Mr. Stephen Walter was appointed as a citizenship judge by Mr. Mulroney in 1985. Perhaps here we had an appointment that would finally bring, as he said, "honour to all Canadians". The Globe and Mail story reads:

> A man who applied for citizenship last week said yesterday that Toronto Citizenship Court Judge Stephen Walter told him —

That is, Judge Walter told the applicant this, namely:

> ...that he should vote Progressive Conservative in the next election and work for the Tory party.
> Al Roberts, a landed immigrant from India, said Judge Walter told him that voting Liberal would lead Canada "back to socialism and ultimately communism".

According to the same article:

> ...the judge began by asking him what he thought of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India. Mr. Roberts, who has lived in Canada for over 7 years, said he had been away from India for some time and could not comment.
> The judge then said the Gandhi family was a bunch of "Communist bastards" and that India was a country—

Senator Molgat: This is a judge?

Senator Frith: Yes, just appointed. He went on to say:

> ...that leaned to the left...

He had been appointed in 1985. I repeat, the judge then said:

> ...the Gandhi family was a bunch of "Communist bastards" and that India was a country that leaned to the left...
> Mr. Roberts said in his statement that the judge later asked him which Canadian political party he supported. When he replied that he was disappointed with Conservative policy and was leaning toward the Liberals, "the judge totally lost his composure and cast (my) application aside with the comment: "I am disappointed in you."
> Mr. Roberts said Judge Walter asked him to pick up a framed letter of appreciation from Finance Minister Michael Wilson and read it.
> "Meanwhile, he lectured (me) on the good the Conservatives had done and about his association with people like Michael Wilson and Brian Mulroney.
> He called (me) and the Liberal Party socialists. He said I should not only vote Conservative but also work for the party."

Following similar stories from others who appeared before him, Judge Walter decided that he had brought enough "honour to Canada", and resigned. In his letter of resignation, he said that he was "deeply saddened" that the media coverage "appears to have brought embarrassment to the Government which I was so proud to serve".

The years 1987 and 1988 followed in the predictable pattern established in 1985 and 1986: More patronage appointments that did not exactly fulfil the Prime Minister's promise of bringing honour to all Canadians. I am sure that some did, but others did not. There was political corruption, including the gangland-style murder of a Tory fundraiser who was linked to a questionable land transaction around Mirabel Airport. There was also the conviction of a cabinet minister's riding association president for fraud in more questionable land dealings. We saw accusations made by former Mulroney minister Suzanne Blais-Grenier that companies dealing with the federal government routinely gave kickbacks in order to secure contacts. According to a Globe and Mail article of August 24, 1988, she stated:

> I'm not talking about $500 under the table or $1,000 in someone's pocket, I'm talking about millions of dollars.

There was also the firing of Supply and Services Minister Michel Côté in early 1988, after it was revealed that he failed to report, as required by conflict of interest guidelines, a personal loan of $250,000 from a businessman whose company had dealings with the federal government.

Towards the end of 1988, the RCMP were investigating more Tory MPs, one of whom would be charged within months of the election, and convicted after quickly pleading guilty to eight counts of breach of trust and three counts of fraud.

That takes us back to the question that we started with today concerning the statement by Richard Cléroux:

> We here in Canada between 1984 and 1992 have lived through the most corruption-ridden federal government in our history. More members of Parliament have been charged and convicted of corruption, breach of trust and conspiracy than at any time in our 125 years as a nation.

Is there evidence to support this charge? There is — and we have looked only at the period of 1984 to 1988.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You forgot the election result.

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That was in 1988, too.

Senator Frith: You can put that on the record if you wish.

Senator Stewart: He is so proud of being associated with these wonderful people!

Senator Frith: You want to have something to be proud of.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: One more is coming up.

Senator Frith: Even more evidence surfaced following the 1988 election, the results of which Senator Lynch-Staunton has just proudly referred to.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You are absolutely correct on that!

Senator Frith: Stay tuned. I now move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Two down; the third is yet to go!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

RULES OF THE SENATE

MOTION TO AMEND RULE 98(3)—MATTER REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rivest:
> THAT the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding, immediately after Rule 98(3), the following:
> "98.(3)(a) That within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing committee or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto." — (Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, concerning Order No. 56, Senator Molgat indicated a few days ago that he was waiting until I was present before responding to it.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is correct, honourable senators. Unfortunately, though, I do not have the file before me. Perhaps I can do it without the file.

This matter was discussed in the Standing Rules and Orders committee some years ago. If I had the file, I could give Senator Marshall all the details on it, but it was brought up originally by the then Senator John Godfrey. Those of you who were here may recall that, when Senator John Godfrey was here, he suggested quite a number of reforms and changes.

The Standing Rules and Orders Committee spent a good deal of time on a number of these proposals. One of them was that there should be the same type of reporting as in the House of Commons.

After considerable debate, and having looked at the whole issue, the Standing Rules and Orders Committee finally produced a report, which was not accepted by the Senate. The matter was sent back to the Standing Rules and Orders Committee. However, I am going by memory, and I would be glad to go through the details more thoroughly with Senator Marshall, if he wishes.

Eventually, the matter was dropped. The reason that the Standing Rules and Orders Committee and the Senate did not agree on this matter is that there was no way of enforcing it. The Standing Rules and Orders Committee and the Senate can indeed approve such a motion, but there is no way that the Senate can impose that kind of obligation on the government. It is for that reason that the matter was finally dropped.

More recently, I obtained from the Law Clerk of the Senate — not since Senator Marshall raised this matter, but some months ago — another opinion to see if things had changed. I received the same kind of answer. I have some doubts that we can proceed in this way. On the broader question, as a regular rule it is better, when we feel there should be a change in the rules, to refer the matter to the rules committee rather than to have the Senate make the change itself. I am not suggesting that Senator Marshall give up his cause; I simply think it would be better to have the rules committee look at the matter again. It is not a good practice to have the Senate automatically change the rules without further thought by the rules committee.

Senator Marshall knows my thoughts on the present rules and the way they were brought about. I do not think it was the right way to do things. Rules should be changed by consensus, by agreement and by all members, not on a party basis.

Senator Marshall: It seems strange to me that of all the things we do in the Senate, the only thing we get any credit for is the work of our committees and the reports they make. Here we are after 125 years and our reports are meaningless unless some minister is kind enough to say, "He is a good fellow, so I will respond to the recommendations." We have many rules. I suggest that we make an effort to adopt this one and therefore that we refer, as Senator Molgat has suggested, the matter to the rules committee. Senator Lynch-Staunton and I discussed this point while we were waiting for Senator Molgat. We came to the conclusion that if there is not consent to adopt the motion, we request the rules committee to look at the matter again. Whatever procedure is necessary, I will follow it, or write a letter to the chairman of the rules committee asking it to look into this proposal and come back with a report.

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, the rules committee, I am sure, would be interested in looking at this matter. There is the discrepancy of what we expect to fly and what will not fly. I think possibilities would improve if we approached the leadership in the House of Commons in an attempt to come to some understanding on these matters. Certainly the rules committee would be glad to accept the motion as an item on its agenda. I guarantee that we would pursue it with some degree of vigour and report back to the house in the normal manner.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I wonder if it would suit Senator Marshall's purpose if the Senate agreed to refer the principle to the rules committee. That could be done by a simple amendment, to the effect that the principle of this matter be referred to the rules committee.

Senator Marshall: Then, with leave of the Senate, I move that Order No. 56, 98 (3)(a) be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and matter referred to Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before we suspend until eight o'clock this evening, as agreed we will start the votes on amendments to Bill C-115 as of 8:30. Could we agree that between 8:00 and 8:30 p.m., if Senator Bonnell is ready, he can speak to Bill C-101 and, if Senator Marchand is here, he can speak to Bill C-103 so that we can move them along to committee. It is a question of saving some time; otherwise we will call them tomorrow.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I cannot speak for Senator Marchand or Senator Bonnell.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I think we can do something about that.

Senator Molgat: Senator Marchand has arrived and I will check with him.

Before we adjourn, would the Deputy Leader of the Government advise us on the timing for tomorrow. There had been some conversation between the two of us at an earlier stage that we might meet tomorrow morning. Earlier today it was confirmed that we would be meeting at two o'clock. Is that the situation?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I believe there are three committees meeting tomorrow morning to process a number of bills which I hope will be reported to us tomorrow afternoon; the fixed link, two justice bills —

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Is the fixed link coming back in one day?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We will have to wait and see. Otherwise we will meet the following day or any other day if need be. We will meet at two o'clock and see what reports we get from the committees. I understand we will have more amendments to Bill C-115 and will have to dispose of them. The arrangement is that by house Order, we will vote no later than eleven o'clock Wednesday morning to dispose of Bill C-115. Between now and that time we are on standby. Royal Assent has been fixed for Wednesday noon or one o'clock, depending on when we are through. If things are accelerating at a faster pace, we could consider Royal Assent tomorrow evening. However, it is up to the house to decide how and when we dispose of the legislation.

The sitting of the Senate was suspended until 8 p.m.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed at 8 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we held back on Bill C-103 and Bill C-101 since senators on the other side who were interested in these bills were not present. I understand from Senator Marchand that he has nothing to add to what he has stated on Bill C-103. We will, therefore, proceed to third reading. Senator Bonnell, however, will speak on Bill C-101.

LAND TITLES REPEAL BILL

On the Order:

> Resuming from earlier this day the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Berntson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kinsella, for the third reading of Bill C-103, to provide for the repeal of the Land Titles Act and to amend other Acts in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator DeWare, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaulieu, for the third reading of Bill C-101, to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few comments during third reading stage of this bill and to propose an amendment that I believe will make this bill satisfactory for those most affected by this legislation, the workers of Canada.

As you may recall from the second reading debate, this bill will make amendments to the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

This bill contains many good measures, including a more flexible parental leave schedule, improved provisions concerning maternity reassignment and leave, and security for workers who are injured or become ill on the job. These amendments will benefit workers in a fair and respectable manner. I fully support the above provisions contained in this bill although I feel that, in some cases, the benefits could be extended.

Many of the above-cited amendments were adopted through a lengthy consultation process between employer representatives, employee representatives and government officials. While such a process is often cumbersome and time consuming, I applaud the government for providing a forum for all parties to deliberate. It appears that this process, while lengthy, was appreciated by the employee representatives.

However, the good faith exhibited by this government soon disappeared. Without prior consultation with the employee representatives, the government included two damaging clauses, clauses 2 and 42, in what one would otherwise consider to be a well-balanced bill.

Clauses 2 and 42 are very controversial, first, because of the lack of consultation with employee representatives, and, second, the magnitude of such measures on the collective bargaining process.

Clause 2 entitled "Vote on Employer's Offer", allows the minister, where notice to bargain collectively has been given and deemed to be in the public's interest, to call a vote on the employer's last offer received by the trade union. Employees in the affected bargaining union would be given the opportunity to accept or reject the last offer in respect of all matters remaining in dispute between the parties. The parties will be bound by this decision.

Clause 42 amends the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Before or after the commencement of a legal strike, a minister designated by the Governor in Council, other than a minister of the Treasury Board, if it was felt the public interest would be served, could order a vote similar to that which the Minister of Labour could order. The vote would be held without delay and would be conducted by the Public Service Staff Relations Board. If the offer was accepted, any legal strike would cease at once and, unlike the proposal for Part I of the code, the employees would be required to return to work as soon thereafter as the employer determined practicable. In clause 2, parties would be bound by this decision.

I believe these two clauses have the potential, when implemented, to destroy our collective bargaining process in Canada. Honourable senators, I would like to take a moment to draw your attention to the testimony of two of the witnesses appearing before our committee and also a witness who appeared before the legislative committee in the other place.

I would like to quote from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers brief, which stated:

> We also object to the cavalier attitude of the government and its complete disregard for the mechanism by which decisions are made, within unions, and between unions and other organizations, even employers. The fact that clauses 2 and 42 were introduced outside of the LSCC committee shows disrespect for the channels we had assumed the government supported, given their participation. Moreover the content of these clauses not only belies an arrogance about the magnitude of the proposed undertaking, it belies an underlying suspicion of the democratic nature of trade unions. Given the flagrant lack of respect for the democratic process displayed by this government, whether this be by including clauses 2 and 42 in Bill C-101, by ramming through unemployment insurance cutbacks, or by forcing the North American Free Trade Agreement through the House of Commons in undue haste, this government is not in any position to question the democratic integrity of trade unions. Equally shocking is the fact that the government would slip such cynical amendments into a package of proposals which had indeed been drafted in a co-operative and consultative manner. We see the introduction of clauses 2 and 42 as being a serious attack on trade unionism in this country.

The Professional Institute of Public Service of Canada, which appeared before our committee, wrote in its brief:

> At first glance, Bill C-101 appears to be positive legislation for Canadian workers, but it contains a section (90) which threatens the legal responsibility of unions to represent their members. This shocking addition permits the government, as employer, to put a vote directly to employees, changes to terms and conditions of employment, denying employees their representational rights at any time during collective bargaining process, including before or after the commencement of a strike.

I would now like to refer to the testimony given by Mr. Ian Deans, chairperson of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, to the legislative committee of the other place on April 4, 1993. I quote from his comments with respect to the vote on the employer's last offer.

> I guess my bottom line for you is that if you want to do something like this, I think this perhaps is not the appropriate vehicle...This may be fine in the private sector...But in this case, because of the close relationship between the government and the employer, the Treasury Board, it would be impossible for them to extricate themselves from the process afterwards...on those occasions where it would be necessary or desirable to use some sort of process like this, Parliament always has the right to bring forward legislation on an emergency basis to deal with it. It would take less time to do that than it will take to do this, considerably less, and it will be a lot less costly and much more predictable in its outcome. I say to you also that it would do less damage to the labour relations atmosphere.

Furthermore, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the United Transport Union, to name but a few of those unions affected, view clauses 2 and 42 as being unfair and unethical. I agree with them.

Therefore, honourable senators, I move:

> That Bill C-101 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by deleting clause 2 on page 1, and clause 42 on page 27, and by renumbering all subsequent clauses accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator DeWare, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaulieu that this bill be read the third time now.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman:

> That Bill C-101 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by deleting clause 2 on page 1, and clause 42 on page 27, and by renumbering all subsequent clauses accordingly.

[Senator Bonnell]

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I have just a few comments. First and foremost, I agree with Senator Bonnell that the provisions of Bill C-101 are in large part a very welcome addition to the Canada Labour Code, and as well, that the consultation process related to the amendments that we have before us has involved groups that have welcomed these amendments.

Senator Bonnell's amendment to strike clause 2 and clause 42 brings some focus to a matter that many of us believe is a very welcome addition to the Canada Labour Code and to the Public Service Staff Relations Act: An opportunity for the minister, if he or she deems it appropriate and in the public interest, to provide for a vote by the membership in a bargaining unit on an employer's final offer.

I wish to address some of the concerns that my honourable friend has with certain provisions of the bill, namely clause 2 and clause 42. I will attempt to alleviate some of the concerns that he has and, indeed, the concerns of some of the witnesses who appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology and before the Legislative committee in the other place.

Let me state first of all, honourable senators, that these clauses are not revolutionary provisions, as my honourable friend might have us believe. Several other jurisdictions already have such a provision in their labour codes. For example, the idea that a minister can ensure consultation of unionized employees on an employer's last offer has already been put into law in several provinces, including the provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Ontario.

Our friend has raised the spectre of ministers perhaps forcing vote after vote on one offer, or using this clause repeatedly before the collective bargaining process has had a chance to work. That is not what the Minister of Labour testified to when he appeared before our committee last week. Other witnesses who appeared before our committee were hard pressed to name examples where the legislation had ever been used, let alone overused, in the provinces that now have the legislation in place.

In Ontario, for instance, honourable senators, this clause has only been invoked once, in the case of the Toronto Transit Commission strike. Any honourable senator familiar with that city would have to admit that that was clearly done in the public interest. Here we had a city that had effectively ground to a halt, complete with traffic jams, half-full offices, people unable to work, and a bargaining process which had clearly bogged down. Since the Ontario Minister of Labour had this provision available to him in the Ontario Labour Code, the dispute was settled by affording the workers an opportunity to vote themselves on the final offer.

We have heard absolutely no evidence or precedent to suggest that this option would be misused by any minister, regardless of the party in power, and we are all familiar with the political stripe of the provinces where this provision is included in their respective provincial labour codes. In fact, the provincial examples should make us optimistic that this kind of provision can indeed work.

Testimony heard by our committee adds to my certainty that this clause must, practically by definition, be invoked with all necessary prudence and restraint. This is what Minister Danis spoke to when he appeared before our committee. Also, the representatives from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers outlined in great detail for us the pains that one must take in order to conduct a fair vote of union members that is beyond reproach and appeal. They asked how anxious government would be to engage or entangle itself in ensuring that such a process was properly conducted. Indeed, I would agree with them that government would be reluctant to take on this task, which in my opinion would support the minister's claim before our committee that this clause would only be used when there was no other means to resolve a dispute that was disrupting services that Canadians count on.

Honourable senators, let me be clear that support for this legislation does not imply a lack of faith in the collective bargaining process. On the contrary, witnesses told us that, in a majority of cases, that process works, and works fine. I agree. I think that senators on both sides of this chamber would also agree. The real question is: On those occasions when it does not work, will we have some means to break a logjam in the process that still allows workers to vote on a final offer? Right now, the government lacks such a tool, and this bill would give it that tool. However, this amendment would take that tool away.

The final point raised against clauses 2 and 42 is the assertion that calling for a vote somehow grants the employer some new unfair advantage. After two days of testimony and speeches from senators opposite, I still have not heard this new power identified or explained.

We have heard the minister testify before the committee of the pains taken by the Department of Labour to ensure that the ability to call for a vote will not reside with any minister who sits on the Treasury Board and might therefore be involved in negotiations.

Is there a phrase or a clause here that would deny union leadership a chance to make recommendations to their members? Not at all. Is there a phrase or a clause here that puts an onus on workers to accept the offer? Not at all. Perhaps there is something here that gives the employer greater ability to lobby union members. No, honourable senators, there is nothing like that. For all the dire predictions, none of that is included in this bill.

We have heard nothing that can alter the bottom line: all Bill C-101 calls for is a vote, a question put to the workers who, after all, must live with the final deal. It simply lets the minister say, "All right. Let us, in the public interest, ask the workers". It asks the workers, "Yes or no; is this an acceptable contract to you?" They can say yes or no. Nothing can happen that the employees do not want to happen. What could possibly be wrong with that?

Honourable senators, we have often heard those who condemn the use of back-to-work legislation. I grant that the use of such legislation can at times be too blunt an instrument to settle a dispute. However, when Canadians are denied services because of a labour dispute that shows no signs of ending, we must have alternative means of ending that dispute.

Bill C-101 would give government an alternative tool to use, one that could end the dispute and restore service to Canadians with the consultation and consent of employees and with none of the disadvantages of back-to-work legislation.

Adoption of the amendment of Senator Bonnell would deny government that tool. That is why I defend the committee's decision to report the bill without amendment and ask for defeat of this amendment and adoption of the bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator DeWare, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaulieu, that this bill be read the third time.

It is moved in amendment by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Neiman:

> THAT Bill C-101 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by deleting clause 2 on page 1, and clause 42 on page 27, and by renumbering all subsequent clauses accordingly.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in the amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Senator Molgat: On division.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator DeWare, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaulieu, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, we shall now proceed to the recorded division on amendments deferred until 8:30 this evening.

NORTH AMERICAN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

THIRD READING—MOTIONS IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

On the Order:

> Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement;
> And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Bonnell, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and adding the following words: "this house declines to approve and implement the North American Free Trade Agreement because inter alia the Agreement does not provide for the establishment of a working group to develop common rules and disciplines concerning the use of government subsidies, unfair pricing, antidumping and countervailing duties within time limits comparable to those prescribed in Article 1906 of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America;"
> And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Stewart, seconded by the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., that Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 218 at page 159 by striking out Section 77.013(2) as set out in that clause and by renumbering Section 77.013(3) as 77.013(2);
> And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Stollery, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin, that Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 242 at page 193 by striking out lines 20 to 30, inclusive, and substituting therefor the following:
> (a) the Governor in Council is satisfied that the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America have taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement, and
> (b) the Senate and House of Commons have by resolution approved all agreements entered into prior to the date of the order that are supplementary to the Agreement.

The Hon. the Speaker: Shall we ring the bells?

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): The agreement is that one senator from each side is allowed to speak to the amendment before the house, and then a vote may be taken following the debate, if it is the wish of honourable senators.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there is no one on our side who wishes to speak to the first amendment.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: There is no one on this side who wishes to speak to it, either.

Senator Molgat: The bells can now be rung. The question is, how long a time will the Whip insist upon?

Hon. William M. Kelly: There is a great deal of risk involved here, honourable senators.

Senator Frith: Have you done the sofa check?

Senator Kelly: I suggest a five-minute bell.

Senator Molgat: Five minutes seemed to work very well in the past. I cannot see why we should change now.

Senator Frith: Some think of it as a magic number, in fact.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is agreed that the bell will ring for five minutes.

Call in the senators.

THE HONOURABLE SENATORS

(2040)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, in amendment it is moved by the Honourable Senator Stollery, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin, that Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 242 at page 193 by striking out lines 20 to 30, inclusive, and substituting therefor the following:

> (a) the Governor in Council is satisfied that the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America have taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement, and
> (b) the Senate and House of Commons have by resolution approved all agreements entered into prior to the date of the order that are supplementary to the Agreement.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I understand that, pursuant to the agreement made between the parties, it is possible for one or more senators to speak at this point. I wish to take advantage of that agreement.

Clause 242 of the bill authorizes the Governor in Council to decide when to bring the act into force. As it now stands, the bill gives the Governor in Council absolute discretion, except that the Governor in Council must be satisfied that the two other governments have taken satisfactory steps to implement the agreement.

The amendment would add a second requirement, namely that the Senate and House of Commons have, by resolution, approved all agreements entered into prior to the date of the order that are supplementary to the agreement. This refers to the side agreements now under negotiation.

The government is asking Parliament to give it the power to bring the North American Free Trade Agreement into effect without this Parliament ever having seen those side agreements. In the United States, the North American Free Trade Agreement and the side agreements are seen as parts of one deal, and the United States has made it quite clear that it will not implement the NAFTA without side agreements acceptable to the President and the Congress.

Why should the Senate of Canada show indifference to business and labour interests in this country? Why should we show indifference to the content of these crucial side agreements? The government is proposing that we show indifference.

Let us not underestimate the strength of the American position. The American negotiating position on these side agreements is extraordinarily strong. To see why that is so, let us look at the Mexican situation. The government of Mexico is desperate for the NAFTA because it forms the foundation for the Mexican government's economic, social, and indeed its political program for the foreseeable future. The NAFTA is of fundamental importance to Mexico.

The NAFTA is also of great importance to the Progressive Conservative government of Canada. Let me explain why. I think there is a common view in Canada that it would be nice if the NAFTA would just go away. I have heard it said, "Wouldn't it be wonderful if the Congress of the United States would turn down the NAFTA." If it did, there would be certain serious consequences for Canada. Let me explain.

Earlier this evening we voted on an amendment put forward by Senator MacEachen with regard to the desirability of a working group which would develop a code of fair trade rules governing subsidies and dumping. In the free trade agreement with the United States, provision was made for just such a working group, but nothing came of that. Mr. Wilson told our committee on foreign affairs that it was decided that it would be better to wait for the GATT. However, we had expert advice that there was another explanation as to why the working group undertaking was abandoned; That explanation was that it was found that the whole enterprise of working out a code was impractical. Mr. Potter, one of the most experienced of the panellists, also gave us that explanation.

As a result of dropping the working group, we had to rely entirely on the system of binational panels to overcome disputes. We have been told they work very well.

We have to recognize, honourable senators, that under Chapter 19 of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States, the system of binational panels will undergo a sunset at the end of seven years. The working group has been abandoned and the FTA provides that Chapter 19 will expire at the end of seven years. The panel system will disappear. When the binational panel system disappears, Canada loses what has been vaunted as the principal achievement of the free trade agreement.

Under the panels we can contest changes that the United States makes in its fair trade laws. Under the binational panel system, we can challenge decisions made by the U.S. Department of Commerce in the application of these laws. Canada has paid the heavy costs of adjustment required by the free trade agreement in order to gain, chiefly, the binational panel system; yet at the end of seven years, that system is gone.

Let me read article 1906 of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. It says:

> The provisions of this Chapter shall be in effect for five years pending the development of a substitute system of rules in both countries for antidumping and countervailing duties as a applied to their bilateral trade. If no such system of rules is agreed and implemented at the end of five years, the provisions of this Chapter shall be extended for a further two years. Failure to agree to implement a new regime at the end of the two-year extension shall allow either Party to terminate the Agreement on six-month notice.

Canada has paid all the adjustment costs for the free trade agreement. At the end of the seven years, if the working group —which already has been abandoned — has not achieved a set of fair trade rules, the United States can say, "We have decided that we do not like this free trade agreement", and can give a renunciation notice, effective within six months.

In other words, in 1988 the government went ahead with free trade with the United States knowing that the binational panel system was only temporary. In 1996, at the end of the seven years, Chapter 19 of the free trade agreement expires. At the end of seven years there may be no common rules governing antidumping or countervailing duties, and there may be no binational panels to assure that United States law conforms to the object and purpose of the free trade agreement. No binational panels to settle disputes about the administration of U.S. law.

How does the North American Free Trade Agreement change that? It makes the panel process permanent. That is why the present government is desperately anxious for the North American Free Trade Agreement to be implemented. Mexico is anxious, and regardless of its pose, the present government of Canada is desperately anxious.

The American negotiating position is strong. What do they want? They want a side agreement on labour that will lead to the creation of a commission to deal with the whole range of standard labour matters; worker health and safety, child labour, working hours, minimum wages, et cetera. The commission would have all the privileges and immunities to enable it to perform its mandate in Canada, Mexico and the United States. If any one of the three countries, on the basis of a report from its secretariat, considers that another country has demonstrated a persistent and unjustifiable pattern of non-enforcement of its labour law, that country may lodge a complaint. Ultimately, a panel would be appointed to investigate. It would be possible to impose trade sanctions on a country found delinquent and recalcitrant. The complaining country would be able to suspend an appropriate level of NAFTA benefits until remedial action had been taken by Mexico, Canada or the United States.

The United States also wants a side agreement on the environment. The model is the same; a commission, a secretariat, and the possibility of imposing trade sanctions if Canada or Mexico, or the United States, were to be found in violation.

There are good reasons for trade sanctions. First, given the difference in the size of the Canadian and American economies, the impact of the same trade sanction would be far greater in Canada than in the United States. Second, we have many companies that produce primarily for export. A far greater percentage of our productive economy is producing for export than is the case in the United States. Those companies would be hit much harder than American companies by trade sanctions. Third, we were told by reputable witnesses in the committee that there is good reason to fear that, notwithstanding assurances, complaints about labour and environment violations would be used to harass Canadian companies, not unlike the way complaints made concerning pork and steel now are used to harass Canadian companies and divert investment to the United States and away from Canada.

If anyone doubts what I am saying, they have only to read the evidence given by Dr. Richard Lipsey and Mr. Thomas P. d'Aquino, who persuasively made the three points before the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. The amendment now before us would provide a barrier against side agreements that provide trade sanctions.

As I said, the United States is in an extraordinarily strong negotiating position. Mexico needs the NAFTA. The government of Canada needs the NAFTA to perpetuate the binational panel system, which Mr. Wilson told us was the chief achievement of the free trade agreement. At page 25:52 of our committee proceedings, when asked by Senator Bosa what gains Canada had made in the NAFTA, the very first point Mr. Wilson made in answering Senator Bosa was that the binational dispute settlement system will be made permanent. He said: The key thing you get in the FTA that is continued now in the NAFTA is the ability to resolve those disputes in a satisfactory way, based on the rules and with time frames. With the words "that is continued now", Mr. Wilson drew attention to the fact that under the NAFTA, the binational panel system will be continued. Under the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States, it expires. If it is not continued by the NAFTA, it expires December 31, 1996.

Is it any wonder that the government is desperate to agree to what the United States is seeking to gain in the side agreements? Without those side agreements, the NAFTA will not be implemented by the United States. The Congress has made that clear.

There is our situation, honourable senators. We are being asked to write a blank cheque; we are being asked to put that blank cheque into the hands of an unknown person. Mr. Wilson will not contest the next election. We do not know the outcome of the next election.

If this house is ever to deserve the reputation of a house of sober second thought, surely it is on this occasion. Surely this is the occasion for honourable senators experienced and new to demonstrate prudence. Prudence, I put it to you, requires that we support this amendment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, in amendment it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stollery, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin, that Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 242 at page 193 by striking out lines 20 to 30, inclusive, and substituting therefor the following:

> (a) the Governor in Council is satisfied that the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America have taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement, and
> (b) the Senate and House of Commons have by resolution approved all agreements entered into prior to the date of the order that are supplementary to the Agreement.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I would ask the Speaker if it is his intent to start the bell as we did before? I suggest, given that we have had an interesting intervention from Senator Stewart, that we could have a short five-minute bell.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If five minutes would be enough for my honourable friends across the floor to reflect on the seriousness of Senator Stewart's intervention, I would agree to five minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the bells will ring for five minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, in amendment it is moved by the Honourable Senator Haidasz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Adams that Bill C-115 be not now read the third time but that it be amended by adding immediately after Clause 5, at page 4 thereof, the following new clause:

> 5.1 Nothing in this Act abrogates or derogates from any powers or rights of a provincial or territorial legislature, or of the Parliament of Canada, or from any other powers or rights held in Canada and recognized by the Constitution of Canada.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I have a brief intervention. I want to ask a question of Senator Haidasz concerning this motion in amendment.

Honourable senators, the California state legislature has a concern under the North American free trade agreement that American truck drivers hauling produce and other goods between Mexico and California will be replaced under the provisions of that agreement with drivers being paid approximately $1 per hour, and as a result will be driving 16, 18 and 20 hours a day in an unsafe manner.

Second, because there is no enforceable regulation dealing with the operation of their equipment, they are seriously considering adopting state legislation that would control this serious problem to protect the citizens of California from these unsafe drivers, unsafe conditions and unsafe equipment.

In the absence of the federal government taking any similar steps to protect Canadians from this problem that we will have, does this amendment provide that individual provinces could legislate safety conditions and enforcement of safety conditions, testing equipment and limiting hours to protect ordinary Canadians from this serious problem that will place them in jeopardy?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Yes, honourable senators. The intent of this amendment is to maintain the authority of the provincial governments over labour matters such as the one that was just brought to our attention by Senator Lawson.

If we vote for this amendment, we will be able to ensure that the workers will be treated fairly and the provincial authorities will maintain their constitutional right in labour matters and disputes.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we would be prepared to accept the same vote as the last one, if that is agreeable. If not, then we will have a standing vote.

Hon Senators: Agreed.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

DALAI LAMA

VISIT TO CANADA

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, this past Sunday I had the pleasure and privilege of meeting His Holiness the Dalai Lama. The Dalai Lama continues to be a staunch defender of, and tireless ambassador for, international human rights, as well as one of the world's most persistent ambassadors of peace — not only for his beloved Tibet, but for all oppressed and downtrodden peoples, having been so recognized by being awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

The Dalai Lama is visiting Canada to continue his crusade on behalf of Tibet and Tibetans, and his efforts to free Tibet from China's occupation. I extend my most fervent wishes for a successful and fruitful visit, and pray that the Dalai Lama may again soon set foot in a Tibet free from oppression and brutality.

At an early opportunity, I will reintroduce in this chamber an inquiry on the Tibet issue. However, in the meantime, I hope all my colleagues will join with me in extending to His Holiness the Dalai Lama, a man of peace, the warmest of welcomes and best wishes.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF POLITICAL RALLIES IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators will remember that I have spoken often about Telefilm Canada, which has been planning to finance a film glorifying the separatist terrorists who kidnapped, sequestered, tortured and killed Pierre Laporte, a Quebec cabinet minister, in 1970. The purpose of the film is to foment hatred among francophones towards anglophones.

We are now in a situation where a Quebec political party, the Bloc Quebecois, will be running in the forthcoming federal election and using hate-mongering as an electoral tactic. Moreover, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is helping the Bloc Québécois and its leader, Lucien Bouchard, the man who stabbed his best friend, Prime Minister Mulroney, in the back and thus scuttled an all-party effort to salvage the Meech Lake Accord.

Last Sunday, June 20, there were two electoral rallies in Montreal: One, with an audience of 1,200 people, featured Mr. Chrétien as speaker; the other, with 400 people, featured Lucien Bouchard. Both the French and English CBC television news at 10 p.m. that evening ignored Mr. Chrétien's rally and featured Lucien Bouchard exclusively.

Why did this happen? Because French CBC assigned the camera crews in Montreal and provided the English network with the footage. The producers of French CBC are nearly all separatists. Le Devoir is a separatist newspaper, but it covered both events. The Globe and Mail's editor does not like Jean Chrétien, but his paper covered both the Chrétien and Bouchard rallies.

There is a clear line of journalism dividing propaganda from reporting. Too many people in the French section of the CBC cross that line and act as propagandists for the separatist cause. They are perfectly entitled to hold separatist political views, but they are not entitled to be unprofessional. It would be perfectly professional for them to report on Mr. Bouchard objectively, but it is not professional for them to censor other political leaders by excluding them from television coverage.

Mr. Veilleux, an appointee of the Tory party, is clearly too scared of his separatist staff to demand that they show professionalism in their work. It is not good enough for the government to hide behind the formula of the arm's-length relationship, thus allowing a national institution like the CBC to become an organ for separatist propaganda.

No other government, no other country would be so suicidal. Elections are fundamental to a democracy, but elections are meaningless if the electorate is ill-informed. The CBC is financed by all taxpayers. In an election year, the CBC does not have the right to be partisan in its news coverage. The French half of the CBC must not be allowed to continue being an exclusive propaganda vehicle for separatist propaganda.

SENATE COMMITTEES—ACTIVITIES AND EXPENDITURES—ANNUAL REPORT, 1992-93

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to a report prepared by the Committees and Private Legislation Directorate of the Senate entitled "Senate Committees — Activities and Expenditures — Annual Report, 1992-93". It is a remarkable report. This

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

TWENTIETH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-110, an Act respecting the Northumberland Strait Crossing, has examined the said Bill in obedience to its Order of Reference of Thursday, June 17, 1993, and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DONALD H. OLIVER, Q.C.
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Phillips had mentioned this matter to me before the commencement of today's proceedings. I thank him for doing so, rather than having it sprung upon me.

My answer to Senator Phillips was that if there was to be Royal Assent today, I would have no objection to giving leave under the procedure we normally follow. However, in conversation with my honourable friend opposite, the Deputy Leader of the Government, I understand that Royal Assent will likely not take place today.

I would say this to my honourable friend: If it turns out later that there could be Royal Assent today, I would be prepared to recommend that we revert back to this item on the Order Paper and proceed to third reading at that time.

Senator Phillips: I thank the Honourable Senator Molgat for his remarks. I am always hopeful of the prospect of having Royal Assent today. I know that many senators on his side wish to start the summer adjournment, and I am sure he does not want to keep them here any longer than necessary.

Senator Molgat: My honourable friend will appreciate that for the time being we do not have very much control as to when Royal Assent will be. In a few months' time, things may change. At that time, I will be happy to accommodate him.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Senator Molgat: Leave is not granted, with the understanding that, should the circumstances change, we would consider reverting to the item at that time.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Agreed.

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 308 residents of British Columbia who oppose the goods and services tax.

These petitions come mainly from Tatla Lake, Mission, Williams Lake, Courtenay, Abbotsford, Victoria, Agassiz, Clinton, Vancouver, Surrey and Kelowna.

I have the honour to present a petition signed by 12 residents of Ontario who oppose the goods and services tax.

Most of the signatures are from Morrisburg, Rockland, Iroquois and Ottawa.

This makes a total of 320 petitioners who continue tirelessly to protest against the GST, a tax whose days are numbered. This latest group of petitions was signed about three months ago, Senator Murray and the other sceptics should note.

QUESTION PERIOD

ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

REQUEST FOR REPLIES TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to outstanding written questions. As indicated in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of last Thursday, a number of questions remain unanswered. The ones that concern me are No. 86, standing in the name of Senator Wood, which was presented on February 25; two standing in my name, No. 88, presented on March 2, and No. 94, presented on March 29.

As we are soon drawing to a close, could the minister tell us when we might expect the answers to these questions?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): I can only tell the honourable senator that today we will be replying to two written questions. One is Question 96 standing in the name of Senator Marshall, and the other is Question 100, standing in the name of Senator Wood.

I will inquire as to the status of the other questions, including those mentioned by the honourable senator.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLOCATION OF SALMON FISHERY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government about the state of the salmon fishing industry on the Pacific coast. There are many in British Columbia who believe that the situation is approaching ruinous proportions.

Last year we experienced a total free-for-all for the salmon. The lack of supervision by the Ministry of Fisheries, the lack of tracing of the whereabouts and the lack of allocation of salmon have brought about accusations that seriously jeopardize the policy of the government with respect to permits to aboriginal entities.

At this stage, it is reported that there has been a total breakdown in the consensus between the commercial and the native fishermen, that there has been a total breakdown in the negotiations between the United States and Canada with respect to the allocation of the salmon fishery, and that there is no regime in place to do anything other than allow events to take their course.

It would appear, honourable senators, that a serious tragedy, including self-help on the parts of various of these communities, is not only a real threat, but is imminent.

Does the minister have a statement to make on the government's policy with respect to the chaotic situation in the B.C. salmon fishery? Has the department made any decisions to alleviate the tension between the aboriginal fishermen and the general commercial fishermen on the Pacific coast?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): No, I do not, honourable senators — certainly not on the Canada-U.S. aspect of the matter. I am aware, as is the honourable senator, that the negotiations between Canada and the U.S. on this matter are at a standstill.

On the question of the aboriginal and commercial fishery, I can only say that I believe the honourable senator is unfair in characterizing it in the way he has, suggesting that the problems are caused by lack of supervision on the part of the federal government or its Department of Fisheries.

The honourable senator knows that this is an extraordinarily difficult and delicate issue, which arises largely by virtue of certain decisions or judgments brought in by the Supreme Court of Canada.

The present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, Mr. Crosbie, has been bending every effort to reach an understanding on the part of all those who are interested in that fishery, especially including the aboriginal community and the commercial fishermen, an understanding that will ensure proper conservation and proper development of that resource.

• (1420)

He has bent every effort to do that, and it is hardly his fault or the fault of his department that there are occasional walkouts from the meetings that are being held. He has not, however, abandoned the cause, nor has his department. They are working on it as we speak.

The honourable senator is also aware, I believe, that the situation will be, shall I say, clarified — at least, I hope so — by judgments coming down, I expect, later this month in the British Columbia Court of Appeal.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, by my questioning, I am not seeking to cast blame. I am seeking to state what I believe are the facts. That it is a difficult issue, I concede. That there are dramatically different points of view in the fishing community, I concede. However, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans does not have any credibility at this stage. I do not know why that is.

Senator Murray: With whom?

Senator Austin: With the fishing communities in British Columbia. It is not a persuasive force in settling these issues. The minister may well have exerted every possible effort, but the situation is promising to deteriorate into chaos.

I believe I state fairly that the government stands to be in a very difficult place this summer if this fishing harvest is a normal one, because the claims of the stakeholders are enormous. The government is issuing permits under the authority of the minister, which authority was given the minister by new regulations, and which allow very substantial uptake to the aboriginal communities without —

Senator Murray: What is the alternative to the permits, senator?

Senator Austin: — having been able successfully to negotiate equitable sharing with the total fishing community. It is a situation which I think the government should revisit —

Senator Murray: We never left it, senator.

Senator Austin: — and perhaps revisit with people who have credibility in the fishing community of British Columbia.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we are doing our best. This is not a partisan political issue. The Government of British Columbia has an interest in it, of course, but the aboriginals have certain rights conferred upon them by a court judgment — the Sparrow case, I believe.

The minister has certain responsibilities relating to conservation and development of the resource, and the commercial fishermen have certain interests. These overlap, and in some cases conflict and collide, and the minister is doing his level best to sort this out.

One of the matters which I think will be adjudicated, which is now before the British Columbia Court of Appeal, is whether the aboriginal right to fish — and I think to hunt in some cases — extends to a right to fish for commercial purposes, or whether it is simply for personal and ceremonial use. These issues will be adjudicated by the British Columbia Court of Appeal within a matter of days, I think. Whether that will clarify, simplify or compound the problem, I do not know, but of one thing we can be certain: The matter will probably go from there to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Meanwhile, the minister, the political authority who has certain responsibilities, is doing his level best to discharge them in the national interest and in the interest of conservation and proper development of that resource. I appreciate the disclaimer that the honourable senator makes, that he is not trying to apportion blame, but I heard him say in the preamble to his question that it was lack of supervision on the part of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans that was the problem. That is not the case.

ESTABLISHMENT OF INDEPENDENT TRIBUNAL

Hon. Jack Austin: The minister is unaware, then, of one aspect of the situation. Last year, the problem was that the minister and his officials completely abandoned the field during the fishing season because it was so difficult to administer the competing claims, so there was no supervision. They probably felt that the officials of the department might be in physical danger if they tried to enforce the rules as they existed last summer. There seems be no better program for this summer.

There is no question that the Court of Appeal will have a view on one side or the other of the issue of the entitlement of the aboriginals, but that will have very little impact on the fishing grounds, whatever the decision is, unless the department has a policy that is clear and is applied clearly and fairly. The decision by itself will do nothing. What is the proposal of the government?

I have made a constructive suggestion. I have said that the minister and his officials, for whatever reason — and part of the reason, I know, is the difficulty of having been involved in the issue for the last two years — justly or unjustly, lack credibility in the community of fishermen and stakeholders in the fishing industry on the Pacific Coast.

I am suggesting that a tribunal be set up to which all these claims and issues can be addressed. That would be a positive action on the part of the government.

• (1430)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Let me add one anecdote to this question of the department and the minister, who my friend says lacks credibility with the fishing community. It is nothing more specific than that. Some of us have been inundated in recent days with communications from aboriginal groups, including the Assembly of First Nations on the West Coast and others, telling us what a catastrophe it would be if Mr. Crosbie were allowed to leave the Fisheries and Oceans portfolio when the new government is formed on Friday.

Senator Austin: I have no comment one way or the other to make about that.

Senator Murray: Now, that is a man who is supposed to have no credibility.

Senator Austin: I am trying not to use partisan terms so that you will listen to me. I am not criticizing the minister.

Senator Murray: There is nothing partisan about it.

Senator Austin: I am saying that, for whatever reason, the department is no longer credible on the Pacific Coast.

Senator Murray: Mr. Crosbie has a lot of credibility.

Senator Austin: If you do not do anything about the situation, you will see a consequence this summer.

ENTERPRISE CAPE BRETON CORPORATION

STATUS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, my question is posed to the Honourable Leader of the Government in this place. It is in reference to the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, which was set up by this administration to promote and enhance industry in Cape Breton and do many other things to promote the welfare of Cape Bretoners.

I should like to know if the ECBC is still in operation as of today; if so, will it continue in operation, doing the work it has been doing?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, all I can say to that is that I believe it was one of the agencies targeted by Bill C-93. To that extent, therefore, it has had, if not a new lease on life, then artificial respiration as a result of the vote that was taken here one week ago.

Senator Muir: I have a supplementary question. Can you reaffirm to me that the board of directors is still in operation.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, all I can tell you is that the organization is still at least clinically alive.

Senator Muir: That is interesting. I am sure the medical people around here will be interested to know that it is "clinically" alive.

I ask the honourable gentleman this question: Will the corporation continue? Since he is such a strong force in the cabinet and a Cape Bretoner originally, will he continue to assert himself and try to make sure that the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation remains in Cape Breton and continues to do work down there?

It was the present administration that announced that the corporation would be the answer to a lot of our problems. I should like to see them try it out for a few years yet.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, seriously, the organization was to be absorbed fully into ACOA and its functions would have been carried on by the Cape Breton office of ACOA. As of the failure to obtain passage of Bill C-93 in the Senate, the organization is still there and it is still alive. I presume that it will continue to carry on its functions.

Senator MacEachen asked a question the other day about all the organizations that had been the subject matter of the proposed reorganization of Bill C-93. I don't know whether I have an answer to that yet, but I hope to have one respecting all those organizations before we break for the summer.

Senator Muir: Honourable senators, I was unaware that Senator MacEachen had asked a question about this. It must have been on one of the days that I was not here, I guess; but I do know that Senator Graham raised a question on it some while ago.

The problem is that, if Bill C-93 had passed, the office would have been in Moncton or Halifax, or somewhere else; we would not have anyone on site.

Senator Murray: I do not think that is true, senator.

Senator Muir: Will it be just one office with one person in there with a couple of secretaries? I hope something will be done so that we will not lose out.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING ON THE WEST COAST

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a follow-up question to those asked by Senator Austin. I want to ask the Leader of the Government if in his conversations with the Minister of Fisheries he would remind him not just to focus on the aboriginal aspect of the fishing problem on the West Coast. The food fishery, which was commercialized last year, takes an infinitesimally small amount of the overall fish that are taken on the West Coast — something like 3 per cent or less. Yet this has been the focus of the whole question.

Please do not just focus on that issue alone. Look at the overall picture, especially at the overfishing. Ask him to look especially at the overfishing by Americans. Ask him to look at some of the environmental aspects that will affect especially the Fraser River fishery, such as the Kemano Dam and the possible impact of that and other projects on the very large and lucrative fish populations that go up the Fraser system.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate the points made by Senator Marchand. I will make certain that Mr. Crosbie is aware of them as well.

SIDE AGREEMENTS—INCLUSION OF TRADE SANCTIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, by its vote last night on the amendment concerning bringing Bill C-115 into force without the Senate and the House of Commons having even seen the side agreements, I realize the Progressive Conservative senators have expressed indifference as to the content of the side agreements.

Nevertheless, Bill C-115 is still before this house. I ask the Leader of the Government if, before the final vote on Bill C-115 is called, he will arrange to make a statement on the progress of those side agreement negotiations, and to give assurance to this house that the side agreements will contain neither trade sanctions nor other comparable sanctions.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with regard to the latter part of the question, I have already given the assurance of the government to the Senate that we are opposed and we will continue to oppose the inclusion of trade sanctions in any of these side agreements.

My friend talks about comparable measures. That is far too broad a net, as he must know, for me to get caught in at this time. What he might call comparable and what I might call comparable could be two different things. I will restrict myself to the statement I have already made on behalf of the government that we are opposed to the inclusion of trade sanctions in these side agreements.

I will give some thought to the suggestion made by my friend as to whether there is some short statement I might make before we vote on the question of the side agreements and the progress that is being made thereon. I hope that can be arranged quickly.

I think that my friend exaggerates — and I am now making comments on a speech he made last night, comments which I should have made last night — the exposure of Canada in these negotiations for various reasons. I think that the initial demands of the United States administration will be diluted considerably in the negotiations. I am not sure that there is even as much enthusiasm in the Congress as there was initially for some of the measures talked about in the side agreements.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the answer of the Leader of the Government prompts two questions: First, by saying emphatically that the only form of sanction that the government is prepared to rule out at this time is trade sanctions, he leaves the possibility of several other kinds of sanctions that might be equally abhorrent to Canadians. Perhaps he can clear that up and say what categories of sanctions, in addition to trade sanctions, Canada would consider unacceptable.

Second, does the Leader of the Government mean to imply that he has new information as to the views of the members of the U.S. Congress on the content of the proposed side agreements? He seems to know what the President and members of the U.S. administration have in mind. Could he tell us the views of the congressmen and senators, and inform us how he knows so well what they are thinking?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think my friend will find, in a close reading of even the popular press and an examination of the media, that there is quite a variety of interests represented in the Congress, and that initial enthusiasm for some of the more extreme suggestions made with regard, certainly, to the environmental and labour side agreements may be tempered by the realities of politics.

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE ON EMPLOYMENT IN CANADA

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I have two questions for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The government is in a headlong dash to approve the North American Free Trade Agreement, even though there seem to be grave doubts that the Americans will do it as quickly without these side agreements, if they do it at all.

I am convinced from the research in the U.S. and in Canada that we will lose thousands and thousands of jobs in Canada. In the next couple of years we will probably add a percentage or two to the unemployment rolls, which does not seem to trouble the government.

With all the people out of jobs and not making $12, $15 or $20 an hour who are being replaced by people making 50 cents or $1 an hour, who will be left to pay the taxes to finance government? Who will be left working, and with enough money to buy all these wonderful products that these efficient operations in Mexico will produce? Even though producers will be reducing their wage bills by 90 per cent, they never give the consumer a break.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I trust the honourable senator took advantage of the opportunity to attend the committee and to put those questions to the minister when the bill was under discussion there. If not, he still has time to raise them in debate. I hardly think that the oral Question Period is a time to get into this matter.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have answers to questions asked on May 5 and May 27 by Senator MacEachen regarding the report entitled "Scotia Synfuels: The Project for the 1990s"; and on June 8 by Senator Stollery regarding the assassination of Cardinal Ocampo in Mexico.

ENERGY

SCOTIA SYNFUELS STUDY — GOVERNMENT POSITION

(Response to questions raised by Hon. Allan J. MacEachen on May 5 and May 27, 1993)

The basis for the Senate Report was an application made by Scotia Synfuels Limited to the Department of Industry, Science and Technology (ISTC) in September 1989 and a subsequent rejection of that application in November 1990.

ISTC decided to reject Scotia Synfuels Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit (CBITC) application on the basis that the facility would not be viable without additional government financial assistance beyond that provided by the tax credit and that the project was not without significant technical risks. In addition, the sponsor did not have financial, management, and operational support from other private sector energy interests. Furthermore, the facility could not be constructed in time to meet the CBITC requirements that the assets be purchased and on-site prior to 1993.

During the period of November 1990 to June 1992, the sponsors sought to address the deficiencies in the previous proposal and applied through the Premier of Nova Scotia for government assistance in undertaking a new set of feasibility studies. The sponsors now maintain that the financing for construction of the plan will not require government involvement, although the Department has no firm information on the currently contemplated commercial arrangements for such financing.

The federal government has given serious consideration to the current Scotia Synfuels Limited proposal. When asked by the Department of Industry, Science and Technology to provide a financial evaluation, EMR concluded that Scotia Synfuels' original project proposal was not economic. Since then, Scotia Synfuels has reworked its proposal to improve the economics via a feedstock pricing arrangement with Corpoven to lower feedstock costs and shift the risks of heavy/light price differentials to the Venezuelans. Plans were also revised to sell a slate of refinery products instead of synthetic light oil in order to obtain a higher feedstock/product differential.

This revised proposal did not seek federal funding for the construction phase of the project but does request assistance to complete a new set of feasibility studies. As currently outlined, the project would be financed 60% through debt and 40% equity. It would also be eligible for a 30% special Investment Tax Credit, which would provide a benefit of approximately $200 million. The request for excise tax relief is not an immediate financing problem but something to be resolved when and if the project goes into production in 1996 or thereafter. The Department of Finance and the Department of Environment are currently reviewing the overall application of the excise tax.

The Government of Canada's energy policy is market based. Projects should be able to pass a market text which requires them to be economically viable. In this specific region there is a special Investment Tax Credit that provides a 30% credit to investors. This tax credit is intended to provide a financial uplift to any marginal project.

The federal government has been involved extensively in the analysis and the funding of the different technical concepts proposed by Scotia Synfuels, but it has not carried out a comprehensive social cost-benefit analysis.

In the early 1980's, Canada provided $1.75 million through the 1977 Canada-Nova Scotia oil Substitution and Conservation Agreement in the initial work done on the liquefaction of Cape Breton coal into oil. Petro Canada contributed an additional $400,000 to these studies.

In 1988-89, Scotia Synfuels undertook a new work program to determine the technical and economic feasibility of co-processing coal and residue from refineries or heavy oil to produce a synthetic product. Through ACOA and Petro Canada, the federal government contributed close to $1.5 million in these studies.

All these tests were a technical success, but none of these concepts produced economically viable results.

A new round of feasibility studies has been proposed which will combine Cape Breton coal with heavy oil from Venezuela. These feasibility studies are currently taking place in New Jersey, U.S. This new concept is of primary interest to the Venezuelans who, according to the sponsor, would enter into feedstock arrangements and provide financing to construct the plant if the tests are successful.

The federal government is not a participant in these studies which are taking place in the United States. However, should the studies be successful and the sponsors decide to proceed with the plant, Canada has a very generous fiscal regime in place that would see the project benefit from a special Investment Tax Credit available to the Cape Breton region. This credit is automatically available to the project and would not require a social cost-benefit analysis.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MEXICO—ASSASSINATION OF CARDINAL OCAMPO—EFFECT ON NAFTA NEGOTIATIONS

(Response to question raised by Hon. Peter A. Stollery on June 8, 1993.)

The problem of drugs has not been approached in the context of the North American Free Trade Agreement. However, Canadian and Mexican officials regularly discuss the situation and work together closely both bilaterally and multilaterally.

Specifically, a memo of understanding between Canada and Mexico was signed March 1990 establishing such cooperation. This agreement reflects the balanced approach adopted by Canada's Drug Strategy and also establishes an on-going mechanism for cooperation in this field. Furthermore, the two countries are currently working together on an OAS drug survey.

Further efforts to deal with the problem include Canada offering places to Mexican officials on an anti-narcotics course run by the RCMP, and as of July 1993, the posting of an RCMP liaison officer to the Canadian Embassy in Mexico City.

Mexico has not asked Canada for assistance in investigating the murder of Cardinal Posadas. However, the Mexican authorities have made progress on the case, including the arrest of the Jalisco-Sinaloa drug leader "El Chapo" Guzman who was involved in the shoot out in the Guadalajara airport during which Cardinal Posadas was killed.

Senior officials in Mexico are aware that there was police complicity and are investigating this aspect of the incident. To date 32 arrests have been made. About half of those arrested are police officers, including senior officers from Sinaloa and San Luis Potosi.

The Mexican Government takes the problem of drug trafficking and the shooting of Cardinal Posadas very seriously. During President Salina's presidency there have been 80,000 drug related detentions. There is no impunity being extended to corrupt officials; on June 16, 67 members of the Federal police were dismissed for professional misconduct. A number of these officials will face criminal charges.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN PETROLEUM-RELATED ACTS IN RESPECT OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS AND TO CONFIRM THE VALIDITY OF A CERTAIN REGULATION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Reports from Standing or Special Committees:

Hon. John Buchanan, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

TUESDAY, June 22, 1993

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy, the Environment and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-106, an Act to amend certain petroleum-related Acts in respect of Canadian ownership requirements and to confirm the validity of a certain regulation, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, June 17, 1993, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Buchanan, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. Peter Bosa: In taking part in the debate on the North American free trade agreement, I would draw the attention of honourable senators specifically to the impact of the free trade agreement and the NAFTA on the Auto Pact. In the course of my remarks I will refer to the background of the pact, the elements of it, how the free trade agreement changes the automotive trading relationship and the long-term possible consequences on Canadian autoworkers' jobs.

The Canada-United States Automotive Products Trade Agreement, also known as the Auto Pact, was signed by Prime Minister Lester Pearson and U.S. President Lyndon Johnson on January 16, 1965. Canada implemented the agreement through two Orders in Council on the same day, while the U.S. passed enabling legislation in October of that same year.

Prior to the Auto Pact's introduction, Canadian automotive manufacturing was an inefficient miniature version of the U.S. industry. Protected behind tariff walls, the Canadian industry made a large number of car models in limited production runs for Canadian and Commonwealth markets. Not surprisingly, the productivity of Canadian auto manufacturers was only 60 per cent of the U.S. industry. In addition, Canadian automobile prices were significantly higher than those in the U.S.

What were the main elements of the Auto Pact? Fundamental to the Auto Pact was the removal of bilateral tariffs between Canada and the U.S. on most types of newly manufactured vehicles, as well as on original equipment parts. Excluded from the Auto Pact, and therefore still subject to tariffs, was trade in replacement parts and accessories, tires and tubes, batteries and used vehicles.

Beyond this, the U.S. placed few conditions on imports of new vehicles and parts from Canada, stipulating only that the original equipment parts and vehicles contain at least 50 per cent Canada-U.S. content. The U.S. permitted both individuals and manufacturers to import qualifying equipment parts and vehicles.

Trade in the other direction, from U.S. into Canada, was to be anything but free. The Canadian negotiating team, headed by Simon Reisman, insisted on a number of conditions and safeguards in order to maintain automotive production and employment in Canada. Two of the safeguards continue to have relevance. These are the provision of the Auto Pact requiring that companies match the value of the vehicles they produce in Canada with the value of their Canadian sales; and the commitment in the Letters of Agreement with the companies that the value of their production and purchases in Canada stays at or above a percentage of the value of their Canadian sales. For automobiles this percentage must be 60 per cent of Canadian sales; for commercial vehicles, it must be 50 per cent.

As Professor Paul Wonnacott has pointed out, the U.S. and Canada have always had differing views of the Auto Pact. The U.S. regarded the Auto Pact as a sectoral free trade agreement, while Canada saw the Pact as a market-sharing arrangement. Canada's objective has not been to eliminate its protection and move to free trade, but rather to make the protection more efficient, to promote both efficiency and additional production, and also to lower costs to consumers.

The differing U.S. and Canadian views on the Auto Pact have led to some disagreements over the years. The U.S. always regarded the Canadian assembly and value-added safeguards as transitional, while Canada viewed these as essential components of the production sharing arrangement. The provisions of the Auto Pact were asymmetric in the sense that the U.S. permitted duty-free motor vehicle imports from Canada if 50 per cent of the automobile's value was produced in either country. Canada, on the other hand, permitted qualified companies to import duty-free from any country in the world providing that the companies achieved certain production targets in Canada, the Auto Pact's so-called "safeguards".

Under the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement — or FTA — which came into effect on January 1, 1989, the Auto Pact safeguards remained in place. However, other aspects of the Auto Pact which the FTA did change may determine whether the safeguards continue to be respected by the auto makers. For example, the FTA will eliminate all tariffs on Canada-U.S. automotive trade, including duties on replacement parts and tires. The Auto Pact would be closed to new members; in other words, new firms will not qualify to import duty-free into Canada from third countries by meeting Canada's safeguards. The basis of calculating the 50-per-cent Canada-U.S. content was changed, resulting in an effective increase in the required level.

Some have argued that the FTA left the Auto Pact intact, since the safeguards remained in place. It is true that auto manufacturers that continue to meet the safeguards can import duty-free from third countries, saving the Big Three auto makers about $300 million per year. However, since free trade means the removal of tariffs on all Canada-U.S. trade, the main reason for auto makers continuing to meet the safeguards — the threat of duties on imports from the U.S. — is no longer a factor.

It is true that, in the history of the Auto Pact, Canada never reimposed duties on auto imports from the U.S. even when auto makers failed to meet the safeguards, as happened in 1980. Indeed, some have argued that, because Canada would never have reimposed automotive duties in any event, the threat was ineffectual. I would have to disagree with that view. Like atomic weapons, bilateral duties never needed to be used because both sides understood the serious implications of such moves.

Absent a threat of bilateral tariffs under free trade, will the Big Three auto makers continue to meet the Auto Pact safeguards? There are only two reasons for them to do so. The first reason, as already noted, is the $300 million the companies save in duties on automatic goods imported from third countries. However, depending on the tariff reductions to which Canada agrees under the GATT, the value of the right to import duty-free from non-Auto Pact countries could be seriously undermined.

The second reason is also economic. So long as Canadian costs are competitive, there is an incentive for manufacturers to continue to make automobiles here in Canada. However, can we be sure that multinationals will make decisions purely on economic grounds?

Here are the main automotive features of the NAFTA: the phase-out of all tariffs on North American vehicles and parts; in order to qualify for duty-free treatment, passenger automobiles, light trucks, engines and transmissions will need to meet a 62.5 per cent level of North American content; other types of vehicles and auto parts will need to meet a 50 per cent North American content rule; and Mexico will phase out the provisions of the Mexican Auto Decrees involving domestic content rules, trade-balancing requirements, and limitations on imports based on sales in the domestic market.

As under the FTA, the Big Three auto makers must still meet the safeguards in order to qualify to import duty-free automotive products from outside countries. However,

NAFTA removes tariffs so auto makers no longer have to earn the right to import duty-free into Canada from Mexico. The Auto Pact safeguards, which were seriously weakened when the FTA removed the threat of Canadian tariffs against U.S. automotive products, will be further devalued by removing this threat vis-à-vis another country, Mexico.

The removal of Mexico's Auto Decrees and other restrictions under NAFTA would enable the large auto makers to rationalize production on a continental basis. If this rationalization process follows the Canadian experience with the Auto Pact, Mexico can expect increased production and employment in the automotive sector.

There are already signs that Canadian Auto Pact firms are moving to Mexico to take advantage of the increased auto assembly operations and low wages in that country. For example, auto parts maker Sheller-Globe Corp. is reported to have shifted production to Monterey, Mexico, at the cost of 400 jobs in Kingsville, Ontario. United Technologies Automotives has moved 319 auto parts manufacturing jobs from St. Thomas, Ontario, to several locations in the U.S. and Mexico. Fleck Manufacturing Inc. shifted 232 auto parts jobs to Nogales, Mexico, although the company has since transferred 75 jobs back to Tillsonburg, Ontario, because of quality control problems in Mexico. TRW Vehicle Safety Systems is moving its seatbelt manufacturing operation, involving 194 jobs, to Mexico from Penetanguishene, Ontario. Canadian auto parts giant Magna International has built a $30 million plant in Puebla, near Mexico City, to supply a new Volkswagen plant.

What sort of wages do these companies pay their Mexican workers? On the basis of Magna International's experience, we know that unskilled workers make only $10.50 per day, while skilled workers like welders are paid just $21. Even workers with skills that are in short supply, such as toolmakers, earn about $35 for a day's work. Compare this to the wages of toolmakers at Magna's Canadian plants who make $20 an hour, or about $160 a day. Even taking into account benefits in both countries, there is obviously a significant differential in compensation paid in the two countries.

Can Canadian auto production facilities compete with such low wages? The government's stock answer to the wage differential problem is that this is offset to a large degree by low Mexican productivity. Yet, some analyses suggest that it takes an average of 20 hours to assemble a car in the U.S. compared to 30 hours in Mexico. According to the U.S. Office of Technology Assessment, this translates into labour costs of US$700 per vehicle in the United States and US$140 per vehicle in Mexico because of the lower wages there.

I will not dispute that Mexican plants incur higher costs for production inputs — offsetting some of the wage advantage. Certain auto parts, for example, still must be shipped from the U.S. However, as I have already indicated, there are signs that auto parts makers are being drawn to Mexico to supply assembly operations there. As Mexico modernizes its transportation system, this is also likely to lower shipping costs at Mexican plants. Thus, any shipping cost advantage enjoyed by the U.S. and Canadian plants may eventually disappear. Furthermore, it is not clear that Canadian and U.S. plants can continue to maintain the labour productivity advantage they currently enjoy over Mexican plants.

At Magna International's new Mexican auto parts plant, for example, productivity is already 75 per cent that of its Canadian, U.S. and European plants. If both the productivity advantage and the shipping cost differential were to disappear, Canadian and U.S. plants could be at a disadvantage. Given Canada's smaller market and our geographic location at the northern edge of the continent, it may be Canada's auto production that is hurt more than that of the U.S.

Under NAFTA, what guarantee is there that auto assembly and parts manufacture would remain in Canada? Ultimately, the only real protection for Canadian auto workers' jobs is contained in the Auto Pact safeguards. But will these be sufficient once Mexican workers improve their productivity, and shipping costs in that country are reduced? Furthermore, the value of these safeguards may be eroded further by multilateral tariff cuts under the GATT negotiations. That is why I am suggesting that additional safeguards protecting Canadian automotive production and employment be written into the NAFTA.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Therefore, we are proposing:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for reconsideration of Clause 113(3) at pages 76-77 of the bill, insofar as Section 13(3) and Section 13(4) of the Customs Tariff as set out in that clause relate to the implementation of Article 403 (Automotive Goods) and the related appendices of the Agreement.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that this bill be read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bosa, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for reconsideration of Clause 113(3) at pages 76-77 of the bill, insofar as Section 13(3) and

> Section 13(4) of the Customs Tariff as set out in that clause relate to the implementation of Article 403 (Automotive Goods) and the related appendices of the Agreement.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, one thing I have learned in my service in Ottawa as a member of Parliament and a senator is the importance of Ontario to the Canadian economy. No matter what jibes other Canadians may make at times in envy at the strength of Ontario, it is still a fact that a strong and prosperous Ontario is essential to a strong and prosperous Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: In my part of the world, when unemployment was high, it was generally possible for people to move and get a job, in earlier times, in Northern Ontario and, latterly, in Southern Ontario. Now it is impossible to get a job anywhere in Ontario, not only for the residents of Ontario but also for people who may move from other parts of Canada.

Due to a declining economy, Ontario today is struggling under heavy financial burdens, caused in part by the decrease in federal government payments to that province. I take it as a very serious matter for all Canadians when an important industrial sector in Ontario is adversely affected, first by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, and second by the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Honourable senators, after having heard evidence in committee, it is my conviction that the FTA, first, and the NAFTA, second, are bad news for the province of Ontario. I draw to the attention of honourable senators a report of a special Ontario cabinet committee on the North American Free Trade Agreement. I believe the report is a factual report because its argumentation has been supported by independent witnesses.

Let me mention that the automotive industry in Canada accounts for approximately 121,000 direct jobs in Canada, of which about 110,000 are in Ontario. Autos are a vital industry for Ontario, where approximately 90 per cent of the Canadian auto industry is located. Almost 40 per cent of Ontario's total exports are accounted for by the auto industry.

Senator Bosa has outlined the impact of the Auto Pact, which was negotiated under the Pearson government in the early sixties, and which had the effect of transforming the automobile industry in Canada. The success of the Auto Pact is well established. Its Canadian success has been noted by the United States to the extent that the U.S. has been consistently engaged in an effort to reduce the beneficial impact of the Auto Pact for Canada. The success of the Auto Pact arose, in large measure, from a series of Canadian value-added safeguard rules which, while promoting the rationalization of automobile production in Canada and in the U.S., meant that it still was to the advantage of the manufacturers to create an automobile industry in Canada through this managed trade agreement, thus creating jobs in Ontario.

We know that the free trade agreement maintained formally the Auto Pact, but largely undermined the safeguards. That is what the Cabinet Committee of Ontario concludes. It said:

> The free trade agreement formally maintained the Auto Pact, but largely undermined the safeguards. NAFTA further weakens it by establishing new rules of origin for automotive products, with a requirement of 62.5 per cent North American content for light vehicles, engines, and transmissions, and 60 per cent for other auto goods to qualify for duty-free treatment.

The cabinet committee goes on to analyze the impact of the automotive chapter on the industry in Ontario and concludes that, because of the importance of the automotive industry to Ontario's economic wellbeing, the committee finds any potential negative impacts of the NAFTA on this sector to be of sufficient magnitude as to raise grave doubts about the agreement's advisability.

Honourable senators, I do not think that these implications have been seriously debated in Canada. They have not been debated in the Senate and they have not been properly examined in the Foreign Affairs committee. These concerns have not yet been fully examined.

For my own part, if this bill comes to a vote, I will be forced to vote without having given full consideration to the impact of this agreement on the automobile industry in Ontario and on the country. I must say that if there was ever a good case for sending a bill back to a committee, it would be because of the necessity of canvassing the impact of this bill on the automobile industry.

Honourable senators, while I have stated that I found the report of the Ontario Cabinet Committee objective, it might be said that of course it is an NDP government hostile to the present government, and therefore may be likely to bias its findings. In order to counterbalance that suggestion, may I turn to the evidence presented informally to the committee by Mr. C.D. Arthur, who is presently a consultant in Ottawa, but with a long history of attachment to government departments, his field of expertise being automobile-related matters.

If honourable senators would like, I would be happy to table Mr. Arthur's impressive credentials so that they can examine his evidence in the light of his knowledge of the automobile industry and the service which he has rendered to Canada in various capacities.

Mr. Arthur began his brief to the Foreign Affairs committee by referring to Auto Pact provisions that safeguarded Canada's auto industry. He said that:

> Failure to meet the safeguard requirements would have subjected imports of vehicles and parts to a 17.5 per cent duty penalty.

That penalty of 17.5 per cent against those who failed to comply will disappear under the free trade agreement. There will be no more future penalty. He goes on to say:

> To encourage offshore vehicle producers operating in the North American market to establish assembly operations in Canada, the government also extended Auto Pact status by means of special remission orders to vehicle assemblers in Canada such as Toyota, Honda, Hyundai and CAMI that met certain performance requirements modelled on the Auto Pact.

His conclusion is that the Auto Pact and the special remission orders for offshore vehicle producers brought significant investment in new automotive production in Canada to meet demand both in Canada and in the United States.

That is the background and I will add to the argumentation by reference to the more explicit and colourful language of the President of the Canadian Labour Congress, formerly the President of the Canadian Auto Workers Union. But first the more technical language of Mr. Arthur. He says:

> Under the FTA, which came into effect on January 1, 1989, Canada gave up its future ability to use duty remission as a means of ensuring performance in Canada in return for continued duty-free access to the U.S. market...In my view, the FTA seriously weakened Canadian programs designed to ensure continuing automotive production in Canada and removed the prospect of actions designed to encourage the industry to produce in Canada...The elimination of duties under the FTA will be accomplished by January 1, 1998, following which U.S. automotive products will enter Canada duty-free on the basis of rule of origin only and without regard to whether Auto Pact safeguards have been met...

That is the technical conclusion.

He continues:

> Under the FTA, it is theoretically possible that vehicle producers in Canada could withdraw from Canada and supply the Canadian market for vehicles from their U.S. facilities.

There is nothing any longer to prevent them from doing that.

> The effectiveness of the Auto Pact safeguards has been substantially weakened as the only incentive to meet these production requirements relates to the extent to which the Big Three continue to import vehicles and parts from off-shore.

That is from offshore of the North American continent. That has been accomplished by the FTA, which we are asked to re-endorse in this bill.

On the subject of the NAFTA negotiations, Mr. Arthur was even less optimistic. He recalled that the United States sought and achieved a tougher North American content rule.

> From a Canadian standpoint, the only effect of a more stringent rule of origin would be to divert transplant activity from Canada to the United States, where the domestic market could be served without complying with the rules of origin.

Further —

> The FTA and now NAFTA have preserved the Auto Pact. But the elimination of the Canadian duty on imports of vehicles and parts from the United States and Mexico will substantially reduce the incentive to maintain production levels in Canada. With the exception of the need to import vehicles and parts from offshore, there is reduced incentive to maintain the present level of production in Canada or to invest in new facilities.

Honourable senators, is it not time for Ontario senators to pay some attention to what is happening to their own province? That is the evidence we received; it has not been contradicted by anyone in the committee and it was even more colourfully supported by the President of the Canadian Labour Congress, who testified on some detail on the Auto Pact.

It is worth repeating a few paragraphs from his testimony. Mr. White stated:

> The Auto Pact had some very basic premises and principles. It said to the American industry, if you want to sell a car in Canada, you must manufacture one here. If you want to sell a truck in Canada, you must manufacture one here. You must reach a 60 per cent level of Canadian content. There was a significant penalty for violation of these guidelines.

We have talked about that penalty. It was a tariff, which is to be removed.

> The penalty for not meeting the ratios was that you paid a tariff on everything you brought in from the United States.

The fact is that the extent of the tariff was so significant that the threat of its being used was usually sufficient to secure compliance from the automotive industry.

He went on to level the same concerns about the North American Free Trade Agreement. He said.

> Under the FTA, with respect to Mr. Reisman when he said, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it," what he did was do away with the 60 per cent Canadian content level and moved to a 50 per cent North American content level. The penalty for the assembly-to-sales ratio became 10 per cent of what it was because if you violated the assembly-to-sales ratio, you paid a penalty on what you brought in offshore, not what you brought in from the United States. That lifted the penalty significantly. The Americans were arguing that the North American content level was not high enough. Now, under NAFTA, there is an increase in North American content level to 60 per cent, but still it does not require a level of commitment in Canada.

Well, honourable senators, there you have it. We are asked to re-endorse the FTA, which has seriously weakened the future potential for the Canadian automobile industry, and we are asked to add to it the NAFTA, which on the evidence of both technical expertise and the head of the Canadian Labour Congress will further add to the difficulties this industry faces.

Honourable senators, in my previous speech in the Senate, I referred to very interesting testimony that puzzled me and caught my attention. It was testimony by Dr. Roger Cohen, who belongs to an economic institute in New York. He left with the committee a series of detailed studies which he and his institute had conducted on the automotive trade as it would be affected by the North American Free Trade Agreement.

What caught my attention about his testimony was the assertion that there was a special provision in the NAFTA treaty or agreement that provided a special 50 per cent Mexican content level for new assemblers in Mexico applicable only to Mexico. I will read it exactly as he gave it to the committee:

> There are special arrangements under the auto part of the NAFTA that provide that any company that does not presently operate a particular model line in North America, the U.S. and Canada, would get exemption from the Mexican content rules and have to meet a 50 per cent level instead of a 56 or 62.5 per cent content level.

He goes on to conclude that this five-year exemption establishing a lower content level for new model lines would be a very strong incentive to offshore producers, European and Japanese, to establish in Mexico, not only to service the North American market but to service world markets. Mexico would become a very important export platform, which would, in his view, have a very bad effect on auto parts manufacturing in the United States and an even worse impact on Canada.

That conclusion to me was quite worrying. We had not only the impact of the FTA itself, but we had the further integration of the North American market with higher content rules, with the threat of lower Mexican wages in the automotive sector combined with equal productivity, now added to by a special provision that would favour Mexico as the export platform for automobile production.

We tried to establish whether Dr. Cohen was right or not. We put all this before the officials who came before the committee. I must say that I thought at one time they had convinced me, at least from listening do them, that maybe Dr. Cohen was wrong. I was not confident enough in my knowledge of these arcane rules of origin.

By the way, I believe it is absolutely disgraceful the way this agreement and the material has been written. It is incomprehensible to any intelligent layman. It is in a language that is not spoken by anybody in this chamber. It is in an entirely new language. If there is anything that we could do to reprimand those who are responsible for the writing, we ought to do it. I assure you that even the most painstaking efforts are not great enough to permit you to read and understand these documents. At any rate, I shall put that aside to return to the committee hearings and our effort to throw some light on the important evidence of Dr. Cohen.

The officials disagreed with him. They said he was wrong. When no logical argument could suffice, one of the officials resorted to questioning his motives by saying, "Well, after all, he is an American." I found that was quite an interesting way of dealing with an intellectual argument. In any event, I left the committee thinking the matter was in doubt.

After I had left the committee, I was handed another article that appeared in The International Economy. It was written by Dr. Clyde Prestowitz. Here the same argument is repeated as follows:

> Take the auto industry. Cars built in Mexico for export must include at least 36 per cent Mexican-produced parts. This regulation will limit sales by U.S. auto parts firms to assemblers, especially the Big Three U.S. auto makers in Mexico.

That would apply to Canada too.

He goes on to say:

> Another provision of the agreement permits some non-North American investors in Mexico to meet only a 50-per cent North American content level during the first five years of their operations, instead of the 62.5 per cent > that will be required of everyone else. Again, this is likely to reduce the sales that U.S. auto parts firms might have gained from a less restrictive NAFTA.

• (1530)

I have to conclude, honourable senators, that this is a matter of great importance which is unsettled, and in our attempts to discover the truth, I regret to say that we have not been helped greatly by the officials who appeared before the parliamentary committee. I must say that, as a former minister of government who served in that capacity for about 21 years, I found it interesting to observe the conduct of the public officials who appeared as witnesses before this committee.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I regret to advise the honourable senator that his time has expired. Honourable senators, is leave granted to extend his time?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator MacEachen: Thank you, honourable senators. I think I ought to complete this comment. As one who served as a minister for 21 years in the government of Canada, I found it interesting to observe the changed conduct of the officials who appeared before the committee in explanation of the bill. That used to be the role; officials came and explained. That role has changed. They have become the passionate defenders of the bills. They no longer explain; they become emotionally involved. Objectivity seems to have disappeared; at least that was my impression. They no longer regard it as their duty to explain the policies of the government. Now a conspicuous few of them identify themselves fully with the policy of the government. They now take on the role that was formerly filled by politicians, by ministers, by parliamentary secretaries, by members of Parliament, by senators.

I think that is a serious development that cannot be overlooked. It is not in what I consider to be the long tradition of the Public Service of Canada. From officials we want objectivity, explanations, the facts; not a passionate defence of the government, not a battle to the death saying that everything that has happened is perfect, not an introduction to their testimony saying, "Let us list our accomplishments, let us list all these beautiful things that we have done."

Read the testimony, honourable senators. If I have another opportunity, I will refer to it in more detail.

Senator Murray: And in broader historical perspective also.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, if I have another opportunity, I will refer to it in more detail.

As I struggled through this difficult conundrum posed by testimony, and hoped to be helped by the officials, I found, not cool logic and objectivity, but a rather passionate defence of their position against any comers, including Senator Ghitter, who was reprimanded by officials for even raising the question of human rights. He was brushed off in a defensive action that never gave a clear answer to the questions put by Senator Ghitter.

I will refer to that later and explain how, in the committee, Senator Lawson, Senator Ghitter and myself were, as it were, put in our places by officials who felt we were dangerously treading on the delicate terrain of government sanctity. How dared we talk about this lovely government!

However, that is just a side issue. Let us get back to the substance: The impact of NAFTA, the auto pact and the FTA. We never really addressed the effect on workers in Canada, health and welfare, human rights and the interrelationship. We never dealt with these broader issues that were the concern of Canadian people and Canadian politicians. We were trying to struggle with the auto pact and its ramifications. What does this NAFTA do to Canadian automobile production? Mr. Bob White, in a sense, shoved to one side the underbrush or verbiage, logic and rules of origin, and posed the question this way:

> One does not have to be a rocket scientist to ask the question, if Mexico has the technology and has labour costs one-tenth of what they are in Canada and the United States, and if one can ship out of that market into the bigger markets, if you were a Japanese auto investor today, where would you locate?

That is the question that is left dangling. Where will the offshore investors go? Will Canada become the export platform? Will Mexico become the export platform because of its one-tenth wage rates and with equal productivity in its most efficient plants? Where will the investors go? That is not an insignificant question, and I must say that we do not know the answers based upon our examination to date. It is left up in the air.

Honourable senators, if there were no other reason for sending this legislation back to the committee, one reason is the questions that have been raised by Senator Bosa, and by the evidence that has been given but not tracked down, not tied up, not packaged so that the committee can say to the Senate, "Yes, we have answers. We can say to you with clarity what the impact of these agreements will be on the Canadian automotive industry, which accounts for 110,000 jobs in Ontario and 40 per cent of its exports to the world."

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, we now have had four proposed amendments to the motion for third reading, and except for a speech by Senator Bolduc, no serious effort whatsoever has been made by the government to refute the arguments that led to those proposed amendments. There were good speeches on human rights by those whom I call "senators nevertheless," but insofar as the proposed amendments, there has been no response. One begins to wonder what sort of organization we are in.

Is the NAFTA so complicated that government supporters must take it on faith, saying, "I rely on those higher up in the hierarchy, the ministers"? Is that the way we are to debate and vote here? It seems so, for there has been no reasoned, factually based attempt to defeat the argumentation of a single one of four amendments. Four amendments already have been defeated, and we now have a fifth amendment before us. Will that silent performance be repeated? Is voting for Bill C-115 an act of faith? Do the departing ministers who now ascend on high know best?

Is that what the Senate is all about? If the government side has arguments, surely this is the time to adduce them. If the government has facts that refute what we have said, this is the time for us to hear them. Otherwise, we might as well abolish this place and save a lot of money. Let us not bask in the glory of having defeated one bill, Bill C-93.

• (1540)

For the future of Canada, Bill C-93 was important. But in the longer context, that bill is far from being as important as the NAFTA bill. Are senators so mesmerized by their achievement with regard to Bill C-93 that they just sit there and say nothing? Is that what the supporters of the government will do, except for a speech from time to time on human rights? Is that what we are to have? If so, we might as well pack it up and save the people of Canada some money, money which can go to reduce the deficit.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Agreed. Let us hear a speech from the government side.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it will not be a speech; it will be a reminder to honourable senators that Senator Stewart should be the last one to complain about—

Senator Frith: He talks about the senator, not about his arguments.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Senator Stewart asked a question and I assumed that he wanted a reply. If Senator Frith wants to reply, let him reply. I thought he only interrupted new senators.

Senator Frith: As usual, you are talking about him, not his questions.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I will try once more. Senator Stewart, in reply to your anxieties regarding the lack of response to Senator Bosa's amendment, you should be the last one to be surprised that it is not the reaction that you expected. Your committee has been studying free trade since early 1992 and it did a pre-study of Bill C-115.

All the arguments that we have heard so far are based largely on testimony that was given before the committee. Senator MacEachen has repeatedly — at least for the second time in his interventions — gone back to Mr. Cohen and others, whose views he sides with, and based his argument on what has already been argued before the committee. I do not know what more can be added here which has not already been said for the other side elsewhere.

It is possible, when we get to the main motion at third reading, to make an intervention then. But at the moment we see nothing in the possible replies to the amendments that would add anything to the arguments; we see nothing that has not already been given.

Senator Stewart: Senator Lynch-Staunton is saying that the role of the officials is exactly what Senator MacEachen said they now think their role is. He refers to one particular witness. Senator MacEachen mentioned Dr. Cohen, and said that initially Dr. Cohen's testimony was convincing. Senator MacEachen then began to have some uncertainty. He asked for more information. So far, the information that has been brought forth has not been sufficient to assure him one way or the other on the evidence that Dr. Cohen gave.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is what the committee is all about.

Senator Stewart: Dr. Cohen was only one witness. No one in the committee said one word to refute what Mr. Arthur said. Mr. Arthur, I am told, is a prominent authority on the Auto Pact and the free trade agreement. He was there at the beginning, and he has followed the history of the pact right through. No one has said anything to refute what he said.

However, let us assume that there were witnesses who gave information contrary to what Mr. Arthur said; also that witnesses gave information contrary to what Mr. Bob White said. That does not excuse the members of the Senate from saying something here on third reading. The witnesses are not members of Parliament — in either the other House or this one.

Senator Murray: The Minister of Trade is.

Senator Stewart: Well, what the Minister of Trade said was so vague and general that it was nice to see him go so that we could get on to someone who could talk in specifics.

An Hon. Senator: Come on.

Senator Stewart: That is accurate. All right, if Senator Murray wants to talk about the evidence given by the minister, let us deal with the specifics.

Senator Murray: It must have been inadequate questioning.

Senator Stewart: The minister was asked by Senator Bosa: "What were the chief gains made by Canada in the NAFTA?" Mr. Wilson said that the NAFTA makes the binational panels permanent. That came as quite a surprise to me, because I had understood that it was the claim of the minister and the government, including Senator Murray, that the binational panels were a great achievement in the FTA, an achievement worth all the things we gave up, including control of our energy, to get it.

But here was the minister testifying that the binational panels were good for only seven years under the free trade agreement. That was startling. If I am wrong, let Senator Murray, who is a confidant of the minister, explain how the minister went wrong in his testimony.

Senator Haidasz: He is an advisor.

Senator Stewart: Surely there is room for debate here. We got some information in the committee, but some of it is contradictory. We now are trying, particularly with regard to the automobile industry, to gain clarification of an extraordinarily complicated and difficult matter, propounded in occult language.

That is the purpose of Senator Bosa's amendment. For the life of me, I cannot understand the attitude of Senator Lynch-Staunton. If I did not know better, I would say that he is lazy.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who is still a member of the cabinet of this government, which will change in three days, if he would please inform this house what the Canadian stand is in the current discussions on the side deals of NAFTA in the matters of labour and environmental affairs?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, during the oral Question Period today I indicated to Senator Stewart that I would consider making a brief statement on that matter before this bill comes to a final vote. I hope to be able to do that.

Senator Bosa: Will the honourable gentleman also rebut the point that I made concerning the Auto Pact, that in the long run Canadian auto parts manufacturers will suffer?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, unfortunately I was detained in my office and came in only toward the end of Senator MacEachen's speech. Perhaps I should simply take the opportunity to put on the record a few thoughts or notes that I have on the Auto Pact and the alleged threat to the Auto Pact and automobile workers.

Under NAFTA, the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact remains intact. The content rules have been clarified to increase the confidence and security of foreign auto producers in Canada. We gain access to the rather explosive Mexican auto market where only one in 16 own cars at the moment.

We have secured the same access to the Mexican market as the U.S. There is immediate significant improvement in access for Canada into Mexico for autos produced by assemblers which already have operations in Mexico; the Big Three, Nissan and Volkswagen. There is also immediate access into Mexico for Canadian medium and heavy duty truck and bus exports.

I think honourable senators are aware, and I am sure Senator MacEachen drew attention to this, that at present the Mexicans have a highly protectionist auto decree which, under the NAFTA, will be eliminated over 10 years. It will permit Canadian and U.S. firms easier access to Mexico as an export market. Mexico currently imports more than $5 billion in automotive products from its North American partners, and demand for automotive parts is expected to grow by more than 7 per cent annually over the next 10 years.

I said earlier that the automotive content rules of the FTA are strengthened and clarified in the following respects. Opportunities are created for North American auto parts producers. Therefore, disputes such as the Honda Civic example are less likely to happen. There is more certainty for foreign investors and a built-in adjustment period for foreign auto manufacturers.

Canada, of course, retains its own high safety and emission standards for automotive products and remains an attractive location for foreign investment in the automotive sector. As Senator MacEachen has pointed out, the auto sector is vital to Canada. It is our largest export sector, with $40 billion in exports in 1992. Direct employment in the auto industry is more than 125,000.

The higher content level of 62.5 per cent is to be phased in over eight years in two stages. Foreign car makers with plants in Canada will have four years at 50 per cent, and another four years at 56 per cent. These two phase-in periods will allow sufficient time for automakers in North America to adjust to new requirements. The full duty drawback is extended two years beyond its scheduled termination under the FTA, and partial duty drawback is retained indefinitely for non-qualifying goods.

Again, the auto industry's confidence in Canada as a production base remains strong as witnessed by recent investment decisions. Senator MacEachen expresses great anxiety about the future, but as recently as three months ago, Chrysler Canada announced a $550-million expansion of the Windsor mini-van plant. Ford's Windsor No. 2 engine plant will be reopened to produce a new generation of truck engine — a $1.1 billion investment with 860 jobs. This does not appear to me to be the feared flight of automobile investment out of Canada or away from Canada to Mexico.

I can only add to that a few statements by knowledgeable people. For example, in a commentary in October of last year, which appeared in the London Free Press, Rory Leischman said that with the Mexican automobile industry expanding rapidly, Canada's high-tech parts exporters should find even greater export opportunities in Mexico under the NAFTA's free trade rules.

I could put similar quotations on the record, but I will spare honourable senators at least for the moment.

That, in a nutshell, is the position the government has put forward with regard to the automobile industry. We remain confident that Canada will remain an attractive place for automobile investment, as we remain confident that in the NAFTA, as in other free trade agreements, when a regime of freer trade is introduced it leads to higher incomes and expanded opportunities and living standards on both sides of the borders.

Senator Stewart: I should like to ask Senator Murray a question. Let us set aside the testimony given by Dr. Cohen with regard to the advantage that will accrue to Mexico by reason of the low content requirement for five years when there is a new model in a new plant. Let us put that aside because we do not know whether his view is correct or not. We have not had conclusive evidence one way or the other.

As I understand the situation, and Senator Murray will tell me where I am wrong, by reason of the annual reduction in the tariff brought about by the FTA, Canada loses its ability to require that the terms of the Auto Pact be fulfilled insofar as North American vehicles are concerned. The way we have enforced the Auto Pact provision of one car sold in Canada, one car produced in Canada, was by saying that if this ratio was not maintained, then the vehicles imported into Canada by the Big Three and other eligible companies would attract initially a 17-per-cent tariff. However, that tariff goes down and will disappear under the FTA. It will become zero before the end of the century. Thus, we lose our sanction to enforce the Auto Pact against North American-produced vehicles.

On the other hand, Mexico has distinct advantages. It has relatively cheap labour and relatively low taxes to maintain a medical care system. It has no unemployment insurance system to be paid for. It has no welfare system to be paid for. All of this is in evidence, as Senator Lynch-Staunton will remember.

Moreover, we are told that in the areas where Mexico competes with Canada, such as in automobile parts and in assembling, the Mexicans are every bit as good as we are now or will be in the immediate future.

What does the United States have as an advantage? It has the advantage that the Big Three have their home offices in the U.S. and companies like Chrysler, which recently enjoyed considerable support from the American taxpayers, are susceptible to the argument that Americans should have jobs.

The Mexicans have something going for them. The Americans have something going for them. What do we have going for us?

The argument has to be that in order to assure continued investment in new plant, not simply the modernization of existing lines to produce a particular vehicle which happens to have been a great success, something for which we are all thankful, the only thing we have going for us is the possibility that we can say to the Big Three, "Notwithstanding the advantages of an American or Mexican location, Canadian workers are able to produce more at less cost."

• (1600)

That will be the one factor which may induce new investment in Canada. That is my understanding of the situation. Am I wrong?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend expresses anxiety about the lowering of tariffs and the consequent reduction, as he puts it, in our ability to apply certain sanctions with regard to the Auto Pact. However, it is not really the Auto Pact he is concerned about. What we have just heard is the classic argument against freer trade. That is what we have heard. He refuses to accept the reality, against all experience, that freer trade and more open markets lead to increased incomes and increased living standards wherever they exist.

Senator Frith: Tell that to the unemployed Canadians. They would love to hear that, too.

Senator Murray: He invokes the lower wages, inferior working conditions and lower taxes, and the lack of social programs in Mexico, believing that they will stay that way as incomes rise, trade flourishes and commerce increases among Canada, the United States and Mexico. Of course, that is not the case.

Senator Frith: Can you hear that out there in the food banks?

Senator Murray: The first thing that will happen, if history is any guide, is that those workers and consumers will demand better wages, better working conditions and better social programs. Who said it better than my honourable friend Senator Stewart the other night? He said NAFTA was essential to the economic and, yes, the social and political agenda of Mexico and the Mexican government. That is what I mean when I say that free trade on all sides of every border has always led to higher incomes, better working conditions and higher living standards.

Therefore, I say to my honourable friend, do not be afraid of a prosperous Mexico. We have everything to gain from a prosperous Mexico. It is an old cliché, but a rising tide lifts all our boats. A prosperous Mexico means more opportunities for Canadian workers, Canadian industries and Canadian products.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: I know that the honourable gentleman specializes in spinning, but that is certainly the most elegant and deceptive spin I have heard in a long time.

Senator Frith: I did not find it that elegant.

Senator Stewart: Let me say that Senator Murray really has not learned anything since he took Economics 101. He should consult the experience of the Europeans and see how valid are those economic dogmas when they are applied in the real world at a very rapid pace. I think he will find that the social and political consequences of moving toward free trade at a rapid pace can be extremely difficult, especially in terms of high unemployment. Even Adam Smith, his patron saint, to whom he prays every morning, would not agree with him.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend wants to keep the tariffs up. The only thing he left out was the old statement about "blasting our way into the markets of the world". I want to tell him that R.B. Bennett would be proud of him.

Senator Stewart: If this is to be the level of argumentation, I wish I had not asked for a speech from that side.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Will the honourable Leader of the Government accept a question? How about the time factor? Let us assume that Canadian auto workers are paid $14 an hour and Mexican auto workers are paid $1.40 an hour. You take the jobs of 10,000 Canadian auto workers away from them and move those jobs to Mexico. Those 10,000 Canadian auto workers can no longer afford to buy 10,000 cars. The Mexican workers, at $1.40 an hour, also cannot afford to buy 10,000 cars. The result? Reduction in automobile production by 10,000 units.

Eventually, through the multiplier effect, the Mexican auto workers will get to the point where they can demand a higher salary. They will not necessarily get it, however, because production will then move to some other third world country so that the multinationals can continue paying low wages. Eventually. How many years — ten years, fifteen years? — before they are rich enough to buy from us? Will it be tomorrow? Will it be in the mandate of the next government?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if I may, before I address the question of the honourable Senator Gigantès, I have been reminded of the critique that Senator Stewart made about the European Economic Community, saying that my assertions about the value of freer trade there have been disproved. I do not think there are many people in Europe who would agree with him.

Certainly, with regard to investment, if he is right in what he said, one asks, why are not all the plants in Europe flocking to Portugal, for example?

To come to the point raised by Senator Gigantès, he reminds me a bit of Saint Augustine, who prayed, "Lord, make me virtuous, but not yet." His attitude toward Mexico and our trading partners is, "Lord make them prosperous, but not yet." "Let us just see if we can maintain the status quo for as long as possible," he says; "keep them relatively poorer than ourselves, and hope for the best."

I have made the argument, and I continue to believe — as I think most people believe and as history proves — that open markets and freer trade lead to prosperity and higher living standards everywhere. I can only say to Senator Gigantès, and others who speak in the same vein, "Lord, deliver us from these reactionaries."

Senator Gigantès: The Honourable Leader of the Government forgets that national governments, such as the one in Canada and in various other countries, are elected to take care of the interests of their voters. Their voters think in terms of the next four years. They do not think in terms of the long-term expansion of your multinational corporation friends.

As for Saint Augustine, he is a bad example because he became a saint only after he became impotent. That is the kind of sainthood that this government has exhibited.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will not touch that one. All I can say is that the argument of the honourable senator with regard to the responsibilities of national governments to their own voters is rather Poujadiste in its origin and in its sentiment. We have heard it all before. You are hearing it now from the French farmers and others who are trying to oppose reforms to the GATT.

It is not the Auto Pact you are worried about. It is not any of these specific examples that you are raising here. You are making the classic arguments against open markets and freer trade, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier would not be proud of any of you.

Senator Gigantès: But Sir John A. Macdonald would fully understand, and would disown you completely. It is very nice when you have a nice fat pension, honourable senators, and a senatorial salary, to disregard the unemployed, but it is not easy for them to take it.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch Bolduc: Honourable senators, towards the end of his speech, Senator MacEachen referred to the senior officials who appeared before the committee.

I was there for several days, for most of the testimony given before the committee, and I must say Senator MacEachen went too far just now when he said the senior officials had been partisan and that they had defended the government's policy. Really!

We heard at least a dozen senior officials who appeared before the committee. One of them may, owing to lack of experience, have made a few comments that were in fact value judgments of the government's policy. I would attribute that to the senior official's inexperience, but I would not conclude that his contribution to the debate as such was not up to the mark.

I think the senior officials who testified before the committee were competent and showed a great deal of self-restraint. I am thinking of the legal experts, for instance, Mr. Von Finckenstein and several others whose answers I felt were satisfactory, except perhaps for one member of the group, but it must be pointed out that he testified for three hours. Perhaps at some point fatigue was a factor or he was perhaps not as experienced as he should have been. In some of his comments he may have said something Senator MacEachen did not appreciate.

With respect, however, I think you did exaggerate somewhat.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government if he thought it was right to avoid the question by Senator Stewart? Instead of answering the question, he engaged in political disputations by accusing the opposition of being against free trade. In the context of free trade, he then raised the fact that the Auto Pact would have a large market in Mexico.

The honourable gentleman should be reminded that the Auto Pact is not free trade. It is managed trade and relates to market share. His argument that we are against free trade, using the Auto Pact to reinforce his argument, is not valid.

Senator Murray: I appreciate the distinction the honourable senator has made, but I do not think it diminishes the validity of my argument or the veracity of my point about my friend's attitude toward freer trade and open markets.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that Bill C-115 be read the third time.

It is moved in amendment by the Honourable Senator Bosa, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for reconsideration of Clause 113(3) at pages 76-77 of the bill, insofar as Section 13(3) and Section 13(4) of the Customs Tariff as set out in that clause relate to the implementation of Article 403 (Automotive Goods) and the related appendices of the Agreement.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Your honour, we would ask for a 30-minute bell.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the bells will ring for 30 minutes.

Call in the senators.

• (1620)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I will propose an amendment to this bill. Before I do so, I would like to remind the Senate of certain things that we predicted about the free trade agreement which have come to pass; I would like to remind senators opposite of their own words. Their memory is short and they do not particularly like being reminded. The fact is that when they went into the free trade agreement there truly was no urgency to enter into that agreement other than to obtain relief from American trade laws, which they did not obtain; other than to obtain, as they put it, freedom from these trade laws so they would not apply to us. We were to have national treatment in the United States, which we never did get.

We now learn that essentially they dropped any attempt to get agreed rules of trade because, they said, the GATT was satisfactorily moving in that direction. We said that when you were discussing the free trade agreement. We told you that the GATT was going to do as much for us as the free trade agreement. In fact, there was nothing in the free trade agreement to speak of giving us any more than the GATT.

I would like you to remember, honourable senators, what Mr. Mulroney and Ms Carney said in those days. Ms Carney stated in the House of Commons on October 9, 1998, as reported at pages 253-254, of the Debates of the House of Commons, that U.S. court cases against Canadian exporters based on U.S. trade remedy laws "complicate investment decisions because, to be successful, Canadian producers need security of access to foreign markets...If the rules keep changing, that security is jeopardized and diminished."

Mr. Mulroney, as Honourable Senator MacEachen reminded us, said that is why we seek new roles on subsidies. He told the New York Times on April 3, 1987, that there were several vital conditions the trade agreement would have to meet. "Most important among these," Mr. Mulroney said, "is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the United States' fair trading laws."

It reminds me of that tale of the frog that saw the cow and blew itself up to try to appear large. This was bluster that did not work at all.

What did we get in the free trade agreement? Nothing that we did not already have in the GATT. The FTA and the GATT have appeals procedures that work very similarly. For example, at page 261 of the free trade agreement, Article 1802 states:

> The Parties hereby establish the Canada-United States Trade Commission (the Commission) to supervise the implementation of the Agreement, to resolve disputes that may arise over its interpretation and application, to oversee its further elaboration and to consider any other matter that may affect its operation.

The Special Agreements on Interpretation and Application of Article VI, XVI and XXIII of GATT state:

> There shall be established...a Committee...composed of representatives from each of the signatories of this agreement...The Committee...shall afford signatories the opportunity of consulting on any matters relating to the operation of the Agreement or the furtherance of its objectives.

No difference. I can go on through the free trade agreement and give you the similar articles of GATT which do exactly what the free trade agreement has done.

The Mulroney trade deal, even in its best presentation, the best-case scenario, presented to us in a document written by the Economic Council of Canada, entitled "Venturing Forth", would have meant that, by 1998, if the free trade agreement were signed — obviously these were things that came out before its signature — each Canadian would have seen his or her income increased by just the price of one cigarette per day. We are not even getting that, these days.

Therefore, we were clearly misled. The FTA, we were told, gives us a right to national treatment. No, it does not give us any right greater than we already have under GATT.

Mr. Lipsey, the Saint Thomas d'Aquino of the free trade agreement, the twin of Thomas d'Aquino, was asked:

> Since the objectives of the negotiations, to provide security of access to the U.S. market by gaining exemption from U.S. fair trade laws, was not achieved, shouldn't the Agreement be rejected?

Mr. Lipsey replied, "significant progress...was achieved in reaching the objective" of providing security of access to the U.S. market by gaining exemption from the U.S. fair trade laws. He proceeds to give his evidence:

> The right of national treatment gives blanket assurance that the United States will not discriminate against Canadian producers in any activities covered by the Agreement.

Tell that to the lumber and steel industries, to the pork producers, to anything else that Canada works on and exports to the United States. The capricious and arbitrary trade laws of the United States have not been touched. Their effect on Canada has not been diminished by the free trade agreement.

We have not gained very much, except, as Mr. Lipsey said, a decade from now what will turn out to be one of the most farsighted measures of the whole agreement is that it will guarantee the right of Canadian investors to invest in the United States. I remember telling you that I did not particularly care about that at all. I want them to invest here. I am not interested one little bit in investing in the United States and I suggest that those in Canada who are elected, those who will be elected in the fall, and those who were elected in 1988 and in 1984 were not elected to help the economy of the United States. They were not elected to increase employment in Tennessee and South Carolina. They were elected to help Canadians, and they have not.

We paid a great deal and we got very little in return. We paid with water. It has not happened yet, but we could find ourselves caught in a dispute over water for agricultural irrigation. Water is included in the free trade agreement under Article 711, which refers to item 22.01 of the "Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System" of the international Customs Cooperation Council. Item 22.01 includes "ordinary natural water of all kinds other than sea water."

Years down the road, the United States could ask us to sell it irrigation water in large quantities, by diverting our rivers if necessary. If we refused, by invoking Canadian laws that prohibit bulk exports of water, the United States could invoke Article 2011 of the free trade agreement which states:

> If a Party considers that the application of any measure, whether or not such measure conflicts with the provisions of this Agreement, causes nullification or impairment of any benefit reasonably expected to accrue to that Party, directly or indirectly under provisions of this Agreement, that party may...proceed to dispute settlement...

Dispute settlement, as I have told you in the past, and as I can demonstrate, means you go to the commission. If you are the United States and the commission finds against you and you refuse to comply, then the Canadian mouse has the right to kick you. If the Canadians refuse to comply, then the American elephant has the right to kick them.

We gave up our capacity to defend our water. We gave up the right to tell a foreign investor that there are some things he is obliged to do in Canada. They have that right in Europe, but now, with the free trade agreement, any American company can come here, gut a Canadian company, send its research and high-value-added jobs down south, and keep only the warehouse here to sell things to us.

There have been movements to the United States, as naturally there will be. If there is no government intervention, if we cannot use our energy resources to attract people, then of course they will go south of the border. If you have a market that is split into one large and one small part, it would be ridiculous and absurd to build a factory or to expand production in the small part. You will build it in the middle of your largest market, and the largest market in the tandem Canada-U.S. is the United States.

What did we have to attract people? Among other things, we had energy. Did we do anything to protect our energy? No, we did not. We will be at risk to U.S. countervail actions, said Mr. Lipsey, as much, no more, no less, than before.

There are some things that we cannot do and for which we could be punished if we tried to do them under article 904(a) of the free trade agreement. It states that neither party may > reduce the proportion of the total export shipments of a specific energy good made available to the other Party relative to the total supply of that good in the exporting country. In other words, if we have been selling half the energy we produce to the United States and we lower our production, the United States will still be entitled to half of our lower production.

The Tories talk of mortgaging our children's future. They gave away one of the biggest resources of this country; one of the biggest resources that our children could use in the future. They gave it away. For what? National treatment, free access to the United States, something we do not have to any greater degree than GATT already gave us.

Article 904(b) of the free trade agreement states that neither party may > impose a higher price for exports of an energy good to the other Party than the price charged for such energy good when consumed domestically by the exporting party.

This is reversing the dumping argument. Normally you are prohibited from exporting things at a lower price because that is considered unfair. Here you must not export at a higher price either. I thought the rules of the market would have said, "Well, if it is a higher price, we won't buy it." But no, the U.S. wanted certainty. They wanted our energy resources to be theirs, not ours, and they got it. You gave it to them.

In the winter, Montreal falls to 20 below, and Los Angeles or Miami is in the grip of a heat wave. We need more energy than normal. We cannot cut our energy exports to the United States without cutting our supply of energy to our own people, even though it is a special circumstance and we need our energy more than they need it. This was given away.

Senator Stewart: Wait until the people of Montreal hear about that.

Senator Gigantès: We used energy to attract people to invest here. They get cheaper energy in Quebec. Why would one of these aluminum companies or any industry that is a great consumer of energy establish itself in Canada when it can establish itself in the United States, have the same-priced Canadian energy, be nearer the larger market, and probably be in some state where there are no rules protecting workers?

This is what you have done. We protested it. We protested because we were paying much more than we were getting. Our research and energy are gone, and our water is in danger. Why, as the honourable Senator MacEachen asked, would the Japanese investor come here when he can go to the United States?

We were much less prudent than the Mexicans. The Mexicans protected the ownership of their energy resources. We gave them away. Why did we give them away? Are the Tories stupid, or are they totally dominated by multinational companies which are only interested in their quarterly returns and not in the fate of Canada, its workers and its people?

Honourable senators, it is for these reasons that I move:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 188 at page 141 by adding immediately after section 120.5 the following new section:
> Emergency restriction.
> 120.6 (1) Notwithstanding any provision of this Part or of the Agreement, it is the duty of the Board to introduce, with or without an order under section 120.2, a restriction on the exportation to the United States of any specific energy goods, if the restriction is necessary to reduce or offset a shortage, or anticipated shortage, of specific energy goods in any part of Canada.
> Effect on Article 605
> (2) Where any measure is taken by the Board under subsection (1), the proportion of the total export shipments of the restricted energy goods, relative to the total supply of the energy goods that is required under paragraph (a) of Article 605 of the Agreement to be maintained, may be adjusted in any manner that is fair and reasonable having regard to
> (a) the needs of the public of Canada,
> (b) the circumstances of the supply of the energy goods affected by the shortage described in subsection (1), and
> (c) the principles of the agreement.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that this bill be read the third time.

In amendment it is moved by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 188 at page 141 by adding immediately after section 120.5 the following new section:

(a) the needs of the public of Canada,

(c) the principles of the agreement.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, the amendment moved by Senator Gigantès addresses the energy chapter of the free trade agreement and the energy provisions of the North American Free Trade Agreement. From the very beginning, I have regarded the energy chapter of the free trade agreement as a very unwise step taken by the government of Canada. That conviction has not changed since I opposed the free trade agreement when it was brought before the Senate. It has not changed as a result of the developments surrounding the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Perhaps I should begin by reminding honourable senators of a bit of philosophy of the Conservative Party. There is no doubt that in many ways the Conservative Party has deserted, by the enactment of the FTA, certain principles which it held dear in former years.

The National Energy Board Act became law under the Diefenbaker administration. It was enacted following the recommendations made by the Borden Commission. It was introduced into Parliament by the late Gordon Churchill and it was regarded, at the time, as an important nation-building piece of legislation because it attempted to establish the rules under which energy could be exported from Canada.

The National Energy Board was given very strong powers to regulate and licence exports of oil and gas. It had strong and independent authority. No licence could be granted for the export of oil and gas unless that supply was determined, by the National Energy Board, to be surplus to Canadian requirements.

It is a fact that the National Energy Board spent a good part of its early history elaborating what a surplus is. In elaborating the test of a surplus supply, it examined very carefully the long-term interest of Canada.

That was a sound policy. It was enacted by the Conservative government under Mr. Diefenbaker and it remained in force until the amendments were made to the National Energy Board under the Free Trade Agreement. As a result, the independence of the National Energy Board was stripped away. It could no longer deny an export licence for which an application was made. It lost its independence. In effect, under the free trade agreement, the National Energy Board could make a recommendation to the cabinet that an export licence be denied, and the cabinet could let it sit there and nothing would happen. If, however, an export licence were denied by the cabinet, there was immediately triggered what has become known as the principle of proportionality. In other words, the denial of an export licence to send oil or gas to the United States would immediately usher in, in Canada, a period of restriction. Therefore, we would have to reduce our internal consumption of oil and gas and share proportionately with the United States our supplies based upon the preceding 36-month experience.

That is the principle of proportionality. It introduced a new concept into the Canadian management of its resources. We lost control.

Bear in mind that up until the free trade agreement energy resources were covered by the GATT, but the GATT seldom, if ever, interfered with any action taken by a national government to restrict energy exports. There was a tacit understanding that energy was a strategic commodity or product and that, therefore, it did not enter into trade like any other commodity. That changed with the free trade agreement.

Now, let me recall to you that the testimony to us under the free trade agreement at that time indicated that energy was put on the table very late in the negotiating process. In fact, it was a surprise when we learned that energy was under negotiation under the free trade agreement. It was put on the table because the Americans insisted it be put on the table if they were going to make any movement on the big demand that Canada had for a dispute-settlement mechanism.

That history was well known at the time of the free trade agreement and we have described how the dispute-settlement mechanism is now working. According to the testimony of the deputy negotiator, Mr. Ritchie, in reply to questions from Senator Atkins, Americans were doing everything they could to claw back the benefits Canada had received through the dispute-settlement mechanism. That is history.

It so happened, honourable senators, that I was in Washington about that time and attended a private luncheon which was addressed by a number of notables, including the about-to-leave chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors to the President. It was in the final period of the Reagan administration when the Republicans were looking forward to the next election. The chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors was commenting upon the evolution of Reagan policies. He said that in the free trade agreement with Canada, they got access to Canadian energy resources, a major achievement.

I have always thought it was bad for Canada to give that up, to remove from the National Energy Board the principle which had been so firmly established by the Diefenbaker administration; that Canadian resources are first for Canadians, that there will be an independent review of our requirements before a drop goes abroad anywhere. That was removed.

• (1650)

Honourable senators, when the North American Free Trade Agreement negotiations were launched, I happened to meet a senior Mexican official. We talked about the North American Free Trade Agreement and the subject turned to energy. He said, "In our negotiations with the United States we certainly will not make the same mistake that Canada made. We will benefit from your mistakes and we will reserve to ourselves control over our energy resources."

That is precisely what the Mexicans did. They did not make the mistakes in NAFTA that Canada made in the FTA. They did not sell their energy in exchange for that dubious reward, namely, a dispute-settlement mechanism.

I invite you to look at the document that has been circulated by the Department of External Affairs — and Senator Buchanan will realize that it is green in colour; perhaps in anticipation of Donald Cameron's election logo, which was changed from blue to green in Nova Scotia — entitled: "NAFTA—What's it all about?" What did the Mexicans learn from Canada? On page 45 of this document, "Chapter Six, Energy Goods and Basic Petrochemicals", the following is stated:

> Encouraging Mexico to adopt the FTA framework proved difficult in certain areas...

They were learning from Canada's mistakes. It goes on to state:

> ...largely because of its constitutional and legal requirements to restrict foreign activity in the energy sector. Mexico has reserved the right to restrict foreign participation in the following activities:
> upstream oil and gas exploration and development;
> refining and processing of crude oil and natural gas;
> foreign trade, storage, distribution and transportation of crude oil, natural gas and basic petrochemicals;
> the supply of electricity as a public service and related generation, transmission and distribution; and > exploration, exploitation and processing of radioactive materials.
> The restrictions on foreign investments in these activities will apply until such time as Mexico voluntarily liberalizes its laws...

I repeat: "Liberalizes its laws voluntarily". That is the first step that Mexico learned from Canada: "We reserve our control over important areas of the energy field".

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Will Senator MacEachen allow a question?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Is that restriction not in their constitution in Mexico, regarding the foreign intervention and energy field?

Senator MacEachen: It may be.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Is that not the reason why?

Senator MacEachen: No, I do not think so.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I think so.

Senator MacEachen: They did it because, in the words of the senior official, "We want to retain our control over our energy resources."

We will not debate the Mexican constitution here. It is a fact that Mexico has done that. I will move on to something that is important: Is it in the constitution of Mexico that the law of proportionality is prohibited? The answer is "No".

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Foreign ownership is.

Senator MacEachen: All right. We are talking about the law of proportionality now.

Senator Frith: That is another bill.

Senator MacEachen: The Mexicans resolutely refused to accept the principle of proportionality. Only Canada is bound by this evil subjugation of its energy interests.

May I refer, not to my testimony but to the testimony before the Foreign Affairs committee from Dr. Campbell Watkins' brief to the committee. It states:

> The NAFTA repeats a key energy caveat introduced in the FTA: if supplies were restricted to one of the parties under any of the first three reasons (conservation, supply shortages and price stabilization), the share of the total supply available for export purchase may not fall below the average level in the previous 36 months.

That is what Canada undertook by saying, "If we deny an export licence, the only condition under which Canada can now deny an export licence is by declaring a period of restriction in Canada, which obligates us to bring in the principle of proportionality and share the total supply available, to the extent that export purchase may not fall below the average level in the previous 36 months.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the rule states that Senator MacEachen will need approval to continue. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to let Senator MacEachen continue?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator MacEachen: Thank you, honourable senators. I intend to conclude as quickly as possible, but this is an important issue for Canada, and it will not go away.

Dr. Watkins goes on to state:

> Mexico has been able to opt out of the more precise expression of the GATT limitations on energy export restrictions established under the FTA - although these provisions would be affirmed between the U.S. and Canada.

Therefore, Mexico is learning, because it has opted out of the provisions that apply to Canada. I wish to quote again from Dr. Campbell Watkins, who says:

> Let me deal with the Mexican reservations, and I have mentioned a couple of them already. They are really quite restrictive. The Mexican state has reserved activity in exploration, development in production, pipelining, refining and trade. All these areas are reserved to the Mexican state. Electricity is reserved to the Mexican state. As regards dispute mechanisms and government procurement, a free trade commission is set up which would handle energy-related disputes.
> There is also a provision for arbitration, a new provision which says that domestic laws cannot delay decisions, and so on. Again, because of the particular position on foreign investment, Mexico is excluded in general from the investment provision.

After having laid out the restrictions and the reservations of Mexico, he concludes his testimony by saying:

> Just by way of summary, then, in terms of the agreement itself, in broad measure the energy provisions of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement are preserved, but Mexico has basically opted out.

Why did Mexico do that? Because it understood the value of the principle that was established by the Diefenbaker government in the early sixties, that a country should retain control over its energy resources and that energy resources should be available first to its own citizens; that if an export licence were to be denied, that was a reasonable denial for purposes of serving ones own citizens. Mexico understood that. Mexico has basically opted out.

Dr. Campbell Watkins concludes:

> The phrase I use in my essay is that, to some extent, Mexico is a distinct society in terms of energy, within the context of the agreement.

• (1700)

Therefore, it is true that Mexico learned from Canada's mistakes. We are still bearing the burden of the mistake that we made in the free trade agreement.

The position of the Liberal Party is to remove, through renegotiation, this principle of proportionality. It is to restore the principle that had been established by the Diefenbaker government. It is to renegotiate and secure for Canada the same treatment that Mexico received under the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Why should Canada secure a lesser treatment? Why should Mexico have greater freedom than Canada? Why should Canadian citizens be denied the use of their own resources in order to export to other countries? It makes no sense at all.

In notes which I made at the time of the free trade agreement some months ago I speculated upon the situation that would occur in a period of energy dislocation. We have had several oil shocks. The international cartels have imposed upon the world, in two instances at least, very high energy prices. If we had to observe the principles of the free trade agreement in energy, we would devastate the Canadian economy, because we could not, through political administration, ameliorate the impact of an international supply dislocation.

We are asked again, honourable senators, to re-endorse this iniquitous feature of the free trade agreement.

Senator Murray earlier raised the red herring that our comments on this side indicated we were enemies of free trade. It was a nice debating point, but that is not the issue. The issue is, of course, to liberalize trade, but liberalize it in a manner that protects our own vital interests.

Does the principle of free trade obligate Canada in any way to supply energy to citizens of the United States and curtail the domestic consumption in Canada? Does the principle of free trade deny Canada the ability to foresee far in the future and determine what energy goods are required to secure our future? Does the principle of free trade ask us to do any of these things? Of course not.

The free trade agreement with the United States obligates us by its provisions. I know at the time that many people liked it because it would constrain the ability of the federal government. It would reduce the government's power to act. It would allow the provinces and private interests more leeway. For those reasons, they liked the provisions of the free trade agreement.

However, in the longer run, if we ever have a crisis in energy, any Canadian government that is looking after the interests of its own citizens and that will listen to the indignation of its citizens, which would boil up in a period of this kind of restriction, would be forced to re-examine the provisions of the free trade agreement with respect to energy.

That is why I have always disliked them. It is because at some future time these instrumentalities that will be required by the national government will be denied. Our hands will be tied because of obligations we have undertaken, not with the international community, not at all, but with the United States, obligations which Mexico refused to undertake, because, as a senior official said, "We intend to learn from Canada's mistakes." So they did.

We now hope to learn and build upon Mexico's victory in asserting its sovereignty over its own energy resources.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: Where is Senator Murray with another lecture?

Senator Lynch-Staunton): Honourable senators, I would be happy to try to reply to the number of red herrings which have been dragged out in this debate.

On the question of water, I do not understand how one can still maintain that water is part of the NAFTA and the FTA. Water in its natural state is not covered by any international agreement which Canada may have anywhere in the world — in NAFTA, the FTA or the GATT. The only water which is covered is water as a good, such as water in a tank car, or in a bottle or sold as a commodity. Water in its natural state, whether in a lake, a river or anywhere else is not covered. I wish once and for all that we can dispel that misinformation.

As for energy, we must understand that the United States is a major market for our energy industry in western Canada. Gas exports increased to 2 trillion cubic feet in 1991-92, or more than 2.5 times their level six years earlier. Some 48 per cent of our crude oil production goes to the United States; 65 per cent of our uranium production goes to the United States.

Senator MacEachen is quite right when he says that there is a proportional access provision in the FTA which is being repeated in the NAFTA and which does not include Mexico. What is the purpose of this proportionality measure? It is to provide assurances to long-term buyers and purchasers of Canadian energy on the other side of the border that their access to imported energy and basic petro-chemicals will not be arbitrarily restricted.

The provision applies to both Canadians and Americans buying and selling to each other. It applies to both sides. This is a long-term agreement.

Senator Thériault: Do we buy from them?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: That is not the point. It applies to both. It cannot be brought into effect unless there are reasons of shortage, conservation or price stability. It cannot be arbitrarily imposed.

As I suggested to Senator MacEachen, and I now have notes to support my suggestion, if Mexico is not involved in this proportional access provision, it is because it has constitutional prohibitions on the energy sector in activities by both foreign investors and Mexican nationals.

Again, the complete story should be told. It was told in committee. It should be told here. Water is not part of any international agreement of which Canada is a part. Let us dispel that idea once and for all.

Senator Gigantès: But you haven't.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: As for the dispute-settlement mechanism, even its success is being challenged. Canada is a winner thanks to that provision. We have won on durum wheat, tomatoes, pork and other commodities. We are a net winner thanks to the dispute-settlement mechanism. We are winners over all.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: May I ask if the honourable senator regards the decision made on swine a week ago last Friday as a victory for Canada?

• (1710)

I thought we lost. That was the decision in which it was said that panels must show proper deference to decisions made by the Department of Commerce and must respect the views of the Department of Commerce on the interpretation of U.S. law and on the interpretation of facts. Is that one of the victories that Senator Lynch-Staunton wishes to submit in evidence?

Again, speaking specifically about energy, Senator Lynch-Staunton defends the terms of the free trade agreement entirely from the viewpoint of those who engage in the development and exploitation of Canada's energy resources. Naturally, these companies, companies such as Imperial Oil, companies such as Amoco and Shell, wish to sell as much oil and gas as they possibly can. As Senator Lynch-Staunton says, they are interested in selling to Americans in as high a volume as they can and, in order to get good contracts, they must be able to provide their consumers with a secure supply.

However, that is only one part of the picture. That is the part of the picture that the negotiators of the free trade agreement saw when they were making that deal, when they were buying into the dispute settlement system which the Americans are now trying to claw back by the provision in the NAFTA that the panels will be composed of judges to the greatest extent possible.

But let us look at the other side. As Senator MacEachen has said, the situation has not always been that there is a surplus of energy. We have had energy crises. We could have had one at the time of the Gulf War. I think Senator Lynch-Staunton is missing the point with regard to this provision of the FTA.

Let us imagine a situation where there is a shortage of fuel. It comes on, unfortunately, in January or February. The suppliers of natural gas in Canada have contracts with the United States. It happens that the city of Los Angeles is undergoing a heat wave. Temperatures are up in the 80s, old style. But in the city of Montreal, there is Arctic cold. Think of the Prime Minister of Canada saying to the citizens of Montreal, "Because of the shortage of energy, we have to cut you back by 15 per cent. We will do this fairly. Under the principle of proportionality, you will be cut back 15 per cent and, in the name of proportionality, the people of Los Angeles will be cut back 15 per cent."

How do you justify proportionality to the people of Canada? We have a colder climate. The level playing field concept will never equalize our climate with that of the southwest United States where we sell a great deal of our energy. How do we justify that politically, and I mean in the proper sense of the word? It seems to me it will be very difficult.

I understand what Senator Lynch-Staunton says. When you have a surplus of supply, you want to give assurance to those to whom you are selling that they will not be cut back arbitrarily. But what about the situation? We have had situations brought on, not by market factors, but by cartels or political crises in the Middle East, where there is a genuine shortage. What do we do then? It seems to me that we have bound ourselves so that the government of Canada in that case will not do what it ought to do on behalf of Canadians. Is there an answer to that? If there is, I should like to hear it.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I do not think there is an answer to that, because it is a hypothetical case in which you are assuming that, to satisfy our export customers, Canadians may have to suffer a shortage of their own energy requirements. We can build up a worst-case scenario, but it is highly hypothetical. We can create another scenario where we have so much surplus that the price of energy will collapse in Canada and all across the world. You take one extreme; I am trying to take the middle ground, and I certainly will not take the other extreme.

On dispute settlement, I did not say that we have won them all. I said that we have won a majority of them. In the most recent one, I believe there are other recourses for the government, so it may not be final. Overall, Canada has come out the winner.

Hon. John B. Stewart: But, Senator Lynch-Staunton, we have already said that. We quoted witnesses who said that we won the ones we ought to have won, we lost the ones we ought to have lost. That is exactly why the Americans are unhappy with the composition of the panels. They want judges rather than trade lawyers on the panels. Under the NAFTA, the panels will be composed of judges as much as possible.

So we bought the existing binational panel system, for seven years, it is true. We bought that by the energy part of the free trade agreement. The Conservative senators voted yesterday to agree with the Americans that, in the future, the panels will be composed of judges, or retired judges,persons who will observe judicial restraint in looking at the interpretation of the law and the interpretation of the facts introduced by the Department of Commerce. We have paid the price, our energy, and now we are giving away that which we bought with the price we paid.

Senator Gigantès: On water, I quoted fact, chapter and verse, and you say it should be laid to rest.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No, I did not say that.

Senator Gigantès: You said we should not mention the issue of water any more.

Senator Stewart: He said there was no agreement.

Senator Gigantès: There is agreement on water, and the facts are as I stated.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Bottled water.

Senator Gigantès: No. I said:

> We could find ourselves caught in a dispute over water for agricultural irrigation. Water is included in the Free Trade Agreement, under Article 711 which refers to item 22.01 of the "Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System" of the international "Customs Corporation Council". Item 22.01 includes "ordinary natural water of all kinds other than sea water."

There is no word "bottle" in there anywhere.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: What are you quoting from?

Senator Gigantès: I am reading a book written by me, Is the Free Trade Deal Really for You?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I hope you will not read it all and get another translation.

Senator Gigantès: You had a chance during the free trade agreement debate and you have a chance now to say that my quotation is inaccurate, but your researchers could not find that the quotation was inaccurate, because it is not. It is not. Item 22.01 of the Customs Corporation Council's Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System includes, "ordinary natural water of all kinds other than sea water". All of it. That definition does not mention bottles, and it is part of the agreement. There is drought in the United States. It is a thirsty country. It is turning into desert. It needs water, and it may ask for it. If we say no, they may then quote to us Article 2011 of the free trade agreement which states.

> If a Party considers that the application of any measure, whether or not such measure conflicts with the provisions of this Agreement, causes nullification or impairment of any benefit reasonably expected to accrue to that Party, directly or indirectly under the provisions of this agreement, that Party may...proceed to dispute settlement...

In other words, we have put ourselves on the American wish list. If they turn up one day and say, "We want water because we reasonably expect that you would give it to us," then they can start the dispute settlement mechanism, and, if we refuse to comply, the American elephant will kick the Canadian mouse. That is how water can be included. Go check the facts. I will give you a photocopy of this page.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: God forbid. Senator Gigantès has his own authority. I, too, have one which is from the negotiators of the agreement itself. I will quote from it and leave it to honourable colleagues to decide who is closer to the facts:

> At the beginning of the NAFTA negotiations, the Canadian negotiators were aware that there had been concern over whether water was covered under the FTA. Including a reference in the NAFTA to make it clear that water was not covered would certainly have dispelled those concerns. But inserting an exemption from alleged obligations that do not, in fact, exist would have had the perverse effect of creating doubt about whether obligations existed with respect to other unprocessed natural resources. Furthermore, both the United States and Mexico were fully aware during the NAFTA negotiations of the provision in the Canadian legislation implementing the FTA that made it clear that water, except where packaged as a beverage or in tanks, was not covered by the FTA.

It is there.

Senator Gigantès: That is what you say, and that is what our government says, but if the large giant to the south decides to say the opposite and we refuse, they can then use Article 2011 and drag us through the procedure of dispute settlement.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I will end:

> Neither party objected, an important factor to take into account in interpreting the NAFTA. Bill C-115 simply repeats this provision.

Therefore we have the interpretation given by the negotiators, and that of the narrow readership of Senator Gigantès' obscure novel.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, not all of us are trade experts like Senator MacEachen and others, but we all have concerns. Sixty-eight per cent of Canadians still have concerns, and they are not stupid. When will this government realise that Canadians are not stupid?

Just think for a moment. Senator Lynch-Staunton has just made the point that the export of gas and oil to the United States has more than tripled in the past three or four years. One does not have to be an expert to know there must be a finish line somewhere in Canada for that natural resource. Those of us who have been around for a while have seen, in the past 25 to 30 years, many different projections as to the reserves under Canadian soil. Senator Lynch-Staunton's philosophy, the Conservative philosophy, is to encourage the big companies who are their friends, and who have made it possible for their party to become so rich, and they have made it possible for them to have increased access to our oil and gas supplies.

Suddenly, 10 years down the road, the amount exported is 20 times what we are exporting today. Then we may find that we have run into a shortage. We are bound by a trade agreement that says we must, in proportion, export to the Americans. The agreement is not based on what our reserves are, or our needs as Canadians, but on what the big companies have exported to make millions and millions of dollars, regardless of the interests of Canadians.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, in amendment it was moved by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 188 at page 141 by adding immediately after section 120.5 the following new section:
> Emergency restriction.
> 120.6 (1) Notwithstanding any provision of this Part or of the Agreement, it is the duty of the Board to introduce, with or without an order under section 120.2, a restriction on the exportation to the United States of any specific energy goods, if the restriction is necessary to reduce or offset a shortage, or anticipated shortage, of specific energy goods in any part of Canada.
> (2) Where any measure is taken by the Board under subsection (1), the proportion of the total export shipments of the restricted energy goods, relative to the total supply of the energy goods that is required under paragraph (a) of Article 605 of the Agreement to be maintained, may be adjusted in any manner that is fair and reasonable having regard to
> (a) the needs of the public of Canada,

(c) the principles of the agreement.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I have a bit of a problem. First, will we see the clock?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): There are a number of amendments to come, and there is no possibility that we can complete our work, so I suggest we break until eight o'clock. If we are prepared to vote now, we will not see the clock for, say, five minutes.

Senator Kelly: I would ask to have the vote at 6:10 p.m. if possible. That would mean we would not see the clock.

Senator Molgat: Then why not do it at eight o'clock?

Senator Kelly: You mentioned 6:05 p.m. and I have mentioned 6:10 p.m. We are talking five minutes. Why not have the vote at 6:10 p.m. and then break until eight o'clock?

Senator Molgat: What does our Whip say?

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Ten minutes after six is fine.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I did not have an opportunity to prepare extensive notes leading up to the amendment that I wish to move, so you will be treated to the shortest speech that I will ever make in this chamber.

I have received representations, mainly from the treaty Indians of Canada, regarding this agreement. They expressed some concerns about it. I think honourable senators know quite a lot about treaties, especially after all the deliberations that have gone on over the past few years leading up to the Charlottetown accord. My not making a long presentation tonight does not mean that honourable senators will be deprived of any special knowledge.

Therefore, I move:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 3 at page 3 by renumbering Section 3 as set out in that clause as Section 3(1) and adding immediately thereafter the following new section:
> 3(2) For greater certainty, this Act, any provision of an Act of Parliament enacted by Part II and any other federal law that implements a provision of the Agreement or fulfils an obligation of the Government of Canada under the Agreement shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had expected my honourable friends opposite to make some comments on what is a very important amendment for the First Nations of Canada. The proposal made by my colleague, Senator Marchand, is a sensible approach to what, for those people, is a potential problem.

I have often heard my colleague, Senator Marchand, state that if they had had a better immigration policy back in the days when the Europeans first came, they would not find themselves with the problems they now have. Here we are, newcomers to this country, imposing governments upon them that are making treaties and arrangements with other countries. They have a legitimate concern that their original rights are protected.

Senator Marchand, in proposing this amendment, will give us an opportunity to once again assert what we have so often said in Canada; that we respect the rights of the First Nations, that they ought to be recognized and that we ought to ensure that nothing that we do intrudes upon the treaties they made long before Canada became a nation. Many of those treaties go back a long time prior to that. They were made with a sovereignty other than the one here now. Certainly, it is the same in the continuity of the Queen but it is a new government. In this case the Government of Canada is making a treaty with two other nations and First Nations have a legitimate claim in ensuring that their rights, which go further back than those of Canada per se, are protected.

I support Senator Marchand in his proposal.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly speak no longer than Senator Marchand or Senator Molgat. I simply wish to say that I appreciate the points they have made. They know that aboriginal rights, including treaty rights, are protected in the Canadian Constitution. They also know that land claims negotiations are under way in a number of areas in Canada, and that the government, as was our predecessor, is committed to negotiating those land claims, including self-government where this is desired and possible.

All this is under way principally between the federal government, the provinces, and the aboriginal peoples of Canada. The case that has not been made is that inclusion of this qualifying amendment in the NAFTA is desirable or necessary. That case has not been made. Frankly, I do not think it would add anything, because nothing can be added in this way to the aboriginal and treaty rights that are already protected, nor would it add anything in particular to the treaty between Canada, the United States and Mexico. It is a commercial agreement, the content of which is well known. There is no way that anyone can foresee that the provisions of that commercial agreement could in any way derogate from aboriginal and treaty rights.

Senator Molgat: I wonder if the honourable senator would permit a question. There is a request from the aboriginal community that this be done. My honourable friend, Senator Marchand, has indicated that this request has come from the aboriginal community. In fact, approximately 10 days ago there was a delegation in Ottawa which was going across the country. It made this point very forcefully. What is wrong with including it, for the assurance of the aboriginal peoples? How could it hurt in any way? How can it not help but reassure them? Why should we not include it?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, frankly, I think that it would be superfluous. If the honourable senator wishes to suggest that a provision of this kind should be added to every international agreement that we sign, or every commercial agreement that we enter into, I suppose we could have that discussion. Whether in this particular case or in others, I do not see the relevance of the proposed amendment.

Aboriginal rights, including treaty rights, are protected by the Constitution of Canada. There are many processes under way now regarding land claims, self-government and all the rest of it. There is nothing that this, a commercial agreement, will do, or any others, that could successfully derogate from those aboriginal and treaty rights.

Senator Molgat: Perhaps I might ask my honourable friend another question. At the moment, a number of Canadian aboriginal groups have the right to freely traverse the Canada-U.S. border. They can do so and it is something that goes on all the time. Will they have that right with Mexico?

• (2010)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is a legal opinion that I would not be in a position to give, but I would seek one. I was not aware they were seeking that.

Senator Molgat: Are we not effecting a change by making this arrangement for Canada as a whole with Mexico? Are we not affecting their rights? Should they not be able to claim that right as well?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if they wish to claim it, they can claim it, and it would be a matter for discussion and negotiation. The NAFTA, as I understand it, is silent on that issue.

Senator Molgat: That is the point. Let us make sure we protect them.

Senator Murray: So they can cross the border into Mexico?

Senator Molgat: If they wish.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that the bill be now read the third time.

In amendment, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Marchand, seconded by the Honourable Senator Graham:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 3 at page 3 by renumbering Section 3 as set out in that clause as Section 3(1) and adding immediately thereafter the following new section:
> 3(2) For greater certainty, this Act, any provision of an Act of Parliament enacted by Part II and any other federal law that implements a provision of the Agreement or fulfils an obligation of the Government of Canada under the Agreement shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion in amendent please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

Hon. William M. Kelly: I suggest a ten-minute bell. That would put the vote at 8:25 p.m.

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I regret to rise on a point of order, but during the vote I objected to a senator standing to speak who had come in after the vote had started. In fact, the count had been taken on this side when he came in. I should like to make the point, because this could be a problem. In fact, I saw another senator come in as well. I would appeal the rule.

Senator Kelly: Are you suggesting that the number be subtracted, honourable senator?

Senator Molgat: I do not want to be difficult, but I really think it could present a problem. The result of the vote will not change this time, but it could, on occasion, be an important issue.

Senator Murray: Yes, the vote is important.

Senator Kelly: The only point I would make is that the first offender under those new rules was Senator MacEachen. We very willingly granted his vote that time.

Senator MacEachen: When was that?

Senator Kelly: On one of the early votes.

Senator Frith: He did not enter after the count; after the doors were shut, but not after the count had started.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I do not think a point of order can be raised during a vote; it should be raised after the vote.

• (2020)

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators before we proceed to any further motions in amendment, I want to stress that this is something the Senate has to look at, because we could end up at some time having a very close vote. We have to know exactly where we stand.

Under the old rule, the doors were locked. That was changed, and now the rules say that the doors shall not be locked.

Senator Frith: Under the new rules, the doors to the gallery are locked when the vote starts, but not the doors to the Senate chamber.

Senator Kinsella: The rule says that the senators must be within the bar.

Senator Molgat: I am obviously not about to appeal this vote the result was quite clear, but we have to have an established rule or we may be in trouble at a later date.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, we all know that there have been critical periods in the twentieth century when the world economy has been characterized by transformation and the dislocation which accompanies it. Aldous Huxley wrote Brave New World in 1932. He took a satirical look at the social and other problems inherent in the megachanges of his time.

Today, Canada appears to be going through an equally dramatic process of adaptation to the globalization of production and markets. It is only natural for Canadians to look to government to formulate a brave new policy for a brave new world.

I believe that we must do three things to adjust successfully to the new age. First, we must expand our understanding of the issues involved. Second, I believe we must also make fundamental adjustments in our domestic policies. The practices of business and government must adapt to the global transformation. However, there is a third interrelated development we must never forget — which the present government has clearly forgotten. We must ensure that Canadian values and priorities are reflected in the evolution of the rules, written or unwritten, which govern the new order, the brave new world of the future.

There are those who believe that 100 years from now, our present geographical boundaries will be odd, old faded lines on ancient maps. They may be right, but if this is true, we all hope that the new global entity will inherit the best of what came before, that Canada will take the lead now in ensuring that real development, that is, improvements in the quality of life for the majority of our people will mark the advent of a new age, of new maps, of new realities.

To get to that brave new world, Canada must initiate brave new policies, and we must initiate them now. Regretfully, there is no sign of bravery in the present rush to ratification of the NAFTA.

The rush to ratification is predicated on the axiom that a state of permanent inferiority has and will condition Canada's relations with the United States. We are told today by the present government that we must participate in the NAFTA because we must forestall the development of a "hub and spoke" trading system in this hemisphere; a system whereby the United States would become the natural investment location for any firm wanting duty-free access to all countries.

I believe the United States will become the natural investment location for most industries, because of the NAFTA, although we are told by the government that we can bypass this by ratification. There is, of course, a major omission from the NAFTA, the absence of a new impediment to the use of anti-dumping and countervail procedures against free trade partners. The FTA made the same error. Adding Mexico clearly complicates the Canada-U.S. agreement on a subsidies code.

The point I am making is really a very simple one. How much trade harassment can we afford, the threat of trade sanctions being only the most recent illustration of the long arm of our friends in the United States. Why would we signal our compliance with an agreement which, unless very significantly amended and revised, will be a major catalyst in making Canadian businesses decide they should just as well set up in the United States where, of course, they can serve both markets without facing the risk of U.S. trade harassment.

If we add to this perspective the fact that the bulk of the gains will clearly go to the transnational corporations — consider the question of intellectual property rights, consider also the proliferation of "brains trust" business consortia which exclude the participation of foreign subsidiaries, all facilitated by the NAFTA — we will see, in effect, the consolidation of research and development and high technology areas in the hands of the transnationals. The brains trust will not be shared by those powers operating on the periphery of the United States.

There are those who would contend that the NAFTA agreement consolidates the position of Canada as a hewer of wood and a drawer of water. The official argument is that its ratification will forestall a new form of neo-colonialism. In reality, the argument is facile, simplistic and, yes, downright embarrassing for all those Canadians who believe that our foreign policy must reflect our interests and values as a nation. In reality, this argument ensures that the actions of the hub already dictate the movement of the spokes. By precipitous ratification, Canada signals to the international community that inferiority dictates our foreign policy.

It is no longer the concept of radical, but responsible internationalism which dominates our foreign policy. Not even the concept of helpful fixer is useful here. Just imagine what the Lester Pearsons, the Escott Reids and the Norman Robertsons would think, all the post-war greats who gave Canada a foreign policy. What would they think of our great step backward into what will be perceived internationally as an act reflecting permanent inferiority.

However, it is an act which has an amusing twist to it, for as the lowly spoke bends to give even greater compliance to the perceived future movements of the hub, the hub stands fast. The new administration of President Clinton, as everyone knows, is beset by concerns over labour and environmental issues and is committed to side agreements ensuring American objectives with regard to these issues.

I believe that the rush to ratify the NAFTA in Canada, prior to the satisfactory conclusion of the ongoing debate south of the border, is by no means perceived there as the action of a friendly power constructively engaged in seeking out the underpinnings of a brave new world. It is instead a signal of Canada's disengagement from one of the most critical debates of our time.

Environmental and labour laws and regulations govern the way certain goods are to be produced. This is an elementary observation and one central to the present debate raging in the United States. The key word is 'harmonization' — harmonization of, for example, product standards that were created to promote health and safety. Now harmonization is such a friendly word! It isn't quite so friendly, however, if we are talking about production standards being 'harmonized' downwards. It is this prospect that presently unnerves many Americans and threatens the prospective congressional authorization by December 30 of this year; unless, of course, the side deals are resolved to the satisfaction of the United States.

There is a backdrop to this debate that needs some clarification. There are those who believe that if the present GATT treaty is passed, a kind of free-trade world government will come into place with the power to make binding decisions to resolve trade disputes among member nations. In fact, in the name of free trade, such tribunals could drive down existing health and safety standards to the lowest common denominator; to the levels of less fortunate countries. For many, GATT and the NAFTA are, as Walter Russell Mead argued in a recent edition of Harpers, "...about more than sending first world factories into the third world. They are about importing third world social conditions into the west."

Now the debate over side deals in the U.S. is reminiscent of the debate over the FTA in this country in 1988. During that debate, critics warned that Canadian social programs were at stake. They were, of course. Over the last few years we have seen cuts to unemployment insurance, downsizing of universal family allowance programs, shelving of plans for a national child care program, and huge cuts in federal funding to education, health and welfare. Along with this, Canadians have experienced the longest, deepest decline in the manufacturing sector since the 1930s.

I would argue that if any one country has something to teach the world about the merits of reflecting long and hard on FTAs, it is Canada. The FTA has not delivered in vital areas of social, political and economic development. When I speak of 'development', I speak of not just the fulfilment of basic material needs. I speak also of the nurturing of an appropriate social, cultural and physical environment and the improvement in the quality of life for a majority of a country's population.

I spoke some time ago of initiating an inquiry into international election observing as a component of our assistance to democratic development around the world. All these issues are interlocked.

I come back to what I said earlier: Canada must ensure that its values are reflected in the evolution of the rules which govern the new international economic order, just as Canada does when it attempts to monitor the broad sweep of democratisation in elections around the globe.

The NAFTA could be an excellent testing ground because it is an agreement between two developed countries and a burgeoning developing country, with all the strains attendant upon that development, including a rapidly growing labour force.

The reality is that Mexico has pursued its objectives with great strength. As that country's economy becomes more open over time, it is expected to gain the most of any of the signatories to the NAFTA.

But the human side of development has remained neglected in Mexico as, of course, it has in many rapidly developing states. Restructuring has meant high unemployment in a country without unemployment insurance. It has meant a shrinking state support for subsistence agriculture — the poorest sector in Mexico. Overall, restructuring has meant the strengthening of extreme economic inequalities in that country.

Honourable senators, I believe that our trade agreements must reflect our value systems. Canada must promote not only the mobility of capital and the rights of corporations, but also developmental needs and the rights of people. I speak here of an agreement which promotes not only the bottom line, but, more fundamentally, the basic assumptions about human rights which Canadians too often take for granted.

I move, seconded by Senator Corbin:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 10 on page 5 by deleting the words "is hereby approved" and by inserting instead thereof the words "shall be considered for approval only after provision has been made in a side agreement for the establishment of a Commission on Human Rights and other institutions for the promotion of human rights comparable to the commission and institutions on labour, as proposed by Canada in its draft dated May 14, 1993.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

• (2040)

Hon. Wilbert J. Keon: Honourable senators, Senator Graham quite rightly referred to the entire question of human rights when we approach the question of trade in the global community. I cannot see the relevance of human rights as it relates to Mexico and Canada when we consider the discrepancies between G-7 countries, Africa, South America and the rest of the underdeveloped world.

It seems to me that, somewhere along the way, those of us who have all the wealth and resources have a responsibility to those who do not have wealth or resources. Somewhere along the line the world has to open up to these countries and help them to develop.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Keon: The only hope for the global community is that this can be done without too much pain to the developed countries. Therefore, would you explain the difference between cheap labour in Mexico and cheap labour in black Africa?

Senator Graham: I thank Senator Keon for his question. I understand exactly what he is saying. There is nothing in his question with which I disagree or even question. However, we cannot be importing the standards of Mexico into Canada.

As Senator Lawson pointed out yesterday, when he spoke about the transportation of goods and the standards that would apply thereto, that is one of the concerns. We must ourselves ensure that the people of our country, no matter where they live, do not suffer as a result of an agreement of this kind.

I come from an area where the unemployment rate today is officially 30 per cent. Unofficially, it is probably closer to 40 per cent. Our people are worried about this. The rate of unemployment has gone up by 10 per cent since the FTA came into vogue.

The honourable senator has mentioned black Africa. I was in black Africa several times, and more recently observed an election in Cameroon. I mentioned here two weeks ago, when I talked about international election observing, that after our report, the official report of the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs, which I was representing, the World Bank and the IMF put Cameroon under investigation. Germany suspended its aid; Canada cut its aid by 50 per cent; The United States cut its aid by two-thirds.

I agree with the honourable senator if he is suggesting that there has to be a better balance in the world. I think we should all work to achieve that better balance.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that Bill C-115 be read the third time.

In amendment, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Graham, seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in Clause 10 on page 5 by deleting the words "is hereby approved" and by inserting instead thereof the words "shall be considered for approval only after provision has been made in a side agreement for the establishment of a commission on Human Rights and other institutions for the promotion of human rights comparable to the commission and institutions on labour as proposed by Canada in its draft dated May 14, 1993.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, for those watching the twilight —

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the sound system is not operating.

Senator Gigantès: You sabotaged the sound because you cannot stand to hear the truth.

Senator Cogger: Why is it that we can hear Senator Gigantès but we cannot hear Senator Grafstein?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I understand that the electrician is on his way. There is no sound for the translators or for the Hansard reporters.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, while we are waiting, I think we should acknowledge the ingenuity of our Clerk Assistant in counting the votes of our new senators here without missing a beat.

Senator Frith: Do we have a volunteer to translate that?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, your comments will be off the record, because the sound system is not working.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like this to be on the record. I think we should acknowledge the presence in the south gallery of Mr. Robert Fulton who has announced that he will not seek re-election. I am just wondering if he is looking at some empty seat some place in the Senate?

Senator Murray: There is only one, and it is for British Columbia.

An Hon. Senator: Don't jump! Don't jump!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the electrician is here. I understand it will take him ten minutes to fix the problem. We will suspend our sitting to the call of a five-minute bell.

The sitting of the Senate was suspended.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, for those watching the twilight of the NAFTA debate here in the Senate, in the other place, and in the media, it is much akin to witnessing a latter-day morality play.

Senators will recall that the purpose of the ancient morality plays, the medieval passion plays, was to teach a lesson, a moral lesson, and to show the audience the struggle between good and evil, fighting for control of man.

In this our morality play, the forces of good and evil are naturally in the eyes of the beholder, yet no one seems untouched by the power of the play, the passion of the plot, and reason seems to have taken her leave.

Each side, each chorus sings that their side, their verse, their song is the safer, the saner path to economic paradise. Each side contends that any flaw or fault in the veracity lies in the score of the other. Each chorus predicts damnation for all who refuse to harken to their lyrical truths. Yet the music and the truths remain strangely elusive, strangely unconvincing, strangely unpredictable, as we reach the final act.

For one can be either for or against freer trade, even this form of freer trade, and still be baffled by both the players and the plot. The onus, dear senators, lies not with us. The onus, dear senators, for this play rests with the other side, the supporting players, and the protagonist government.

What have the protagonists in this morality play told us? NAFTA is a defensive measure to save us from evil times. Protagonists confide that NAFTA was not Canada's chosen path either to export heaven or import hell. We are told that we threw ourselves into the pit of NAFTA for fear of being left out of the pit. For, if we were left out, we were given a warning, in pathological terms, that all investments would coagulate around the American heart and hub, and that we Canadians and Mexicans would struggle and strangle ourselves — or worse, serve as mere conduit drains for the international market and investment forces that would flow inevitably towards the American heartland, the American centre, seeping away and weakening both the economic sinews of Canada and Mexico.

Better to join the NAFTA, protagonists on the other side admonish us, than to be left out, and better to sign up quickly before anyone else. For, if we do not, we will dissipate our own best national interests and decrease rather than increase our leverage against that well-known selfish leviathan, that bloated mammal of narrow national interests, the U.S. Congress. We are reminded that the great American white whale has thrashed about persistently, very reluctantly delegating limited powers over trade issues to binational tribunals in the FTA. Yet, it may still agree once again to limited, parsimonious delegations of powers in NAFTA. So the white whale's lapse should be coveted before it gulps again, and dives deeper away from even such shallow delegation of powers for adjudicating trade disputes.

One protagonist minister in the Foreign Affairs committee, Minister of Trade Wilson, confided to us that even though we dragged ourselves into NAFTA, NAFTA will be good for us. Canada does not relish any side labour agreements, he told us. We need no add-ons; we need no help, particularly if these side deals are armed with sanctions. NAFTA stands alone as a jewel that sparkles with its own internal glow, that needs no polish to make it shine. So says Minister Wilson, that eternal, true believer.

Meanwhile, another protagonist minister, Minister of Labour Danis, having failed to memorize the script for the play, confides to yet another Senate committee, the Social Affairs committee, that side agreements endorsing and enforcing higher labour standards in Mexico would be desirable. Indeed, bilateral meetings have been conducted with Mexico to enhance labour standards, even memos of understanding have been signed between Mexico and Canada in the past year or so. So confusion reigns, even as the plot thickens.

Last week we were told, to spontaneous cheers in the Senate on all sides, that human rights should be a component of NAFTA, at least in the preamble. This we are told more in regret than in anger by a supporting player in this chamber, for the Mexicans have a very spotty record, we are told, on human rights. Forcefully, carefully, this eloquent supporting player on the other side in the Senate documents a rather sorry tale culled from studies of respected organizations such as Amnesty International, recording Mexico's failure to maintain even minimum standards of human rights.

For a moment, for a brief shining moment, morality triumphed in the Senate. Spirits rose on all sides. Then we were told that we should talk about human rights as this is good, this is cathartic, but we should not impose any legal or even perambulatory, written requirements about human rights in NAFTA because, nevertheless, this might be bad for NAFTA, or worse, unnecessary. At that, our spirits fell. What a roller-coaster of emotions we on this side experienced in this play.

What script was being read when we heard those words? Do we hear the voices and the forces of good or the voices and the forces of evil? All very confusing. Of course, to add to our confusion, in the plot of this morality play we are told that NAFTA cannot wait for Canadian passage. Speed ahead, legislate, even though we are told that the first actor in the play, the Mexican government, has delayed passage while the U.S. President and the U.S. Congress are now dithering and vacillating in their passage of this same legislation.

The Canadian audience watching this morality play moves from perplexity to puzzlement. As we draw closer to the climax of this protagonist government, the intensity of passion floods in and the level of rationality drains out.

To recap, honourable senators, the Senate, this legislative audience, is told that we must rely on speeches rather than law; faith and hope rather than law. We must delegate our judgment to others and all will be well. Freer trade lies beyond morality. What a strange witch's brew this play has become.

What modest part can we in the Opposition hope for at this late stage in this play with all its devilish twists and turns? What can we hope to do? There appears to be but one course. Morality begs moratorium. Passion begs pause. Rely on the rule of law and wait. Reliance on the rule of law means a slender written amendment to ensure that principles that Canadians cherish — human rights — are respected. Patience, rather than passion, dictates that we wait until the great white whale, the U.S. Congress, swims to the attack to dismember NAFTA by tearing off its head, arms or feet by using side agreements or other means. Let's wait and see what is left to legislate.

All we ask for at this stage is a simple agreement from those who applaud human rights. Would such a dainty morsel of morality, this slender amendment at home and abroad, deter any protagonists, even the truest believers in freer trade?

Honourable senators, freer trade is a good idea. Liberals believe in freer trade. Liberals have always believed in freer trade.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Notwithstanding the fact that you have always believed in free trade —

Senator Molgat: We just don't like bad deals.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You just read the polls.

Senator Grafstein: Like God and the Devil, the truth often lies buried in the details, and the details beg that we add an amendment to the preamble of NAFTA respecting human rights so that, at least, we are gently consistent with our own morality. Then principle and passion can march together.

All senators may recall that in the early days of this government public hearings were held in all parts of Canada by the Joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Foreign Affairs, reaching out to Canadians, searching for their views on principles that should underpin our foreign and trade policies. A strong consensus report found that Canadians wished — and it is still their wish — to place their sentiments where their sentences are.

Our human rights concerns should be twinned with our trade concerns, we were told. Yet, when given an opportunity to do so here at home, this same protagonist government balks. It is an unseemly balk. Meanwhile, only last week in Vienna, the same protagonist government lead the world community in insisting on higher standards for the enforcement of human rights universally, which we all applaud.

Let me quote from the excellent speech prepared for the Minister of External Affairs and given to the United Nations World Conference on Human Rights in Vienna on June 16:

> ...concrete and practical measures resulting in early improvements in human rights are what we need...

That is the position of the protagonist government in Vienna, but when the government legislates at home it is different. Which player of this protagonist government are we to believe? Which plot are we to follow?

Senators, what have we to lose by injecting respect for the rule of law into NAFTA. Come, honourable senators, we have morality to gain.

The Leader of the Government earlier today referred to St. Augustine. I defer to his deeper knowledge and closer proximity to sainthood than I, but I do recall that St. Augustine divided all creation into two cities: One the city of God, civitas dei, and the other the city of man, civitas terrena. One destined to reign eternally, the other condemned to perpetual torment. Which city do you choose? For us the moral choice seems very clear. This, honourable senators, would not be a bad finale for this passion play.

Honourable senators, amend the preamble. I move as follows:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in the preamble at page 2 thereof by striking out lines 12 to 14, inclusive, and substituting the following:
> tions,
> protect, enhance and enforce workers' rights, and
> enhance the multilateral development and enforcement of human rights and international treaties respecting human rights;

Senator Stanbury seconds the motion.

Senator Haidasz: You can't vote against that.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Noël A. Kinsella: Honourable senators, I have a comment, and perhaps Senator Grafstein would permit a question. I have listened for the past few days to this debate and also attended the meetings of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have focused on the concerns that many witnesses and many of our colleagues have raised as to the question of human rights in Mexico. The question I would like to put to Senator Grafstein is this: Can he point out for honourable senators whether or not Mexico has ever been found wanting by the General Assembly of the United Nations for any violation of resolution 1503 of the General Assembly?

Senator Grafstein: Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question, but I relied to a large measure in my comments on the excellent remarks by a senator on the other side in dealing with Mexico's record of human rights, and that has been documented by senators on both sides. There seems to be a general consensus in human rights monitoring organizations such as Amnesty International, American Watch and a number of others, who, as objective third-party bodies, survey human rights. Apparently, all have recorded that Mexico has a spotty, difficult experience maintaining reasonable standards of human rights. I do not believe that there is a question or a contest on this issue, based on the evidence that we have heard in this chamber.

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, as those of you who follow these matters will know, resolution 1503 of the United Nations is the resolution that concerns the assessment of gross and consistent patterns of human rights violations. In the international human rights machinery it is the United Nations Human Rights Commission, on which our honourable colleague Senator Andreychuk served as Canadian ambassador for a number of years, and never has Mexico been found wanting by that commission of any violation of resolution 1503. I find it more than passing strange, a little disconcerting, that we in Canada sit in adjudication of Mexico and its human rights records with their blemishes, as we have our blemishes. That standard under that machinery is in place and has had a significant success in dealing with the struggle to improve human rights around the world. Over and above that, the machinery of the Organization of American States is present with its human rights implementation mechanisms.

I remind honourable senators that President Salinas himself was prepared to admit that the human rights situation in his country is in need of reform, just as I hope that we are prepared, in our country, to recognize that we must continue to take steps to enrich the human rights enjoyed by Canadians. Here we have the President of Mexico recognizing the need for improvement of human rights in his country, and —

Senator Frith: Only he does not have to do anything about it.

Senator Kinsella: — his government has tackled the problem head on.

Let us give our colleagues and friends in Mexico credit for the steps they have taken in recent months and years. Let us not forget that in 1970, the Mexican government created the National Human Rights Commission, which has been working — according to many observers, including non-governmental organizations in the human rights field — to enhance the human rights situation in Mexico.

The National Human Rights Commission in Mexico, if I have the data correct, has investigated over 15,000 cases in two-and-a-half years. On the one hand, that speaks to problems, but, on the other hand, it also speaks to a recognition that governments have a responsibility to improve their human rights records.

Honourable senators, the 16th preambular paragraph of Bill C-115 says that the parties to this undertaking are resolved to "protect, enhance and enforce basic workers' rights;" That is an achievement in and of itself, notwithstanding greater achievements that must lie ahead.

We also can point to the 13th and 11th preambular paragraphs that speak to the public welfare, and to improving working conditions and living standards, which of course are in the realm of the social, economic and cultural rights articulated and recognized by the world community in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Honourable senators, I encourage the rejection of this amendment, not because we do not recognize the need for ongoing improvement in the human rights field, but rather that there is the basis of the principle, not only in the bill before us, but in established machinery.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Grafstein: The thrust of the honourable senator's comments, I take it, is that we should not be pointing the finger at Mexico, the United States or any state. That is not the purpose or the prose of my amendment.

Perhaps I could just repeat a portion of the amendment. It reads as follows:

That applies not just to Mexico. It applies to Canada. It applies to the United States.

I do not question the efforts made by the President of Mexico to enhance the demography of human rights in his country. As a matter of fact, I applaud those steps. Having said that, certainly there could be no objection from Canada to my amendment. I doubt if there could be any objection from the United States. Certainly, there cannot be any objection from Mexico to enter in an agreement which enhances the progress being made there. Who can object?

The amendment is not meant to point fingers at any state. I was referencing not my views but the comments made by other senators, particularly a senator on that side, about the Mexican record of human rights.

As was said by Canada at the United Nations conference in Vienna, we must change the culture of how we think about human rights. What we are doing with this amendment is not talking about human rights; we are attempting to change the culture by a simple preamble.

There is no strong muscle to this amendment. It is preambulatory; it is easy and slender; it is certainly not offensive.

I suspect that if one went to the President of Mexico and asked him if he disagreed with this amendment, he would say no. If Bill Clinton was listening and was awake and was asked the same question, I think he would say no. Certainly, the next Prime Minister of Canada, and the present Prime Minister, who have declared themselves in favour of a vigorous policy of international human rights, could not be against this amendment.

This is a motherhood proposition. The difference is that we are not talking about it; we are putting it in writing; we are putting it in law.

That is the thrust of my comments and my amendment.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I had not intended to say anything, but Senator Kinsella has really confused me.

On June 14, 1993, at page 3488 of the Debates of the Senate, Senator Kinsella commented on a speech which had been given earlier that day by Senator Ghitter. He said:

> I share the sentiment expressed by the previous senator. It was an excellent presentation.

Senator Molgat: That was last week!

Senator Stewart: He went on to say:

> It is important that we underscore the human rights dimension of NAFTA.

I thought that was the intention of Senator Grafstein's amendment.

Senator Kinsella said:

> I was glad you drew our attention particularly to those paragraphs contained in the preamble of the bill. The one that is on page two of the bill speaks to a purpose. It states:
> "...having resolved to protect, enhance and enforce basic workers' rights;"

Honourable senators, when I heard Senator Grafstein, I said, "Have I not seen that style and that formulation somewhere before?" Lo and behold, it is precisely in the words that Senator Kinsella applauded last week — "...protect, enhance and enforce basic workers' rights;" — except in this case it is human rights. How is it that what was good last week is no good tonight?

Senator Kinsella: Honourable senators, there is nothing contradictory or obfuscating at all.

Senator Molgat: No, that was last week; this is this week.

Senator Kinsella: As we were pleased to point out to our honourable colleague last week, the bill itself contains a principle of recognition for the promotion of human rights. The argument made last week was that this has nothing to do with human rights. I disagree with that proposition because the plain language of the bill in preambular paragraph 16 speaks exactly to that.

What I say to my honourable colleague Senator Grafstein is about mechanism. He is looking for another mechanism. I am suggesting that another mechanism is not necessary at this time when we have in place the mechanism of Resolution 1503 of the United Nations General Assembly, the mechanisms of the two international covenants and, since a year or two ago, the mechanisms available through the Organization of American States.

Senator Stewart: Since these mechanisms are in place and are so effective, I take it that Senator Kinsella is rebutting what Senator Ghitter said here the other night?

Senator Kinsella: You just do not want to understand, do you?

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, Senator Kinsella seems to be contradicting himself. He said that the President of Mexico admits to violations of human rights in his country. He also said that, under Resolution 1503, Mexico has never been found guilty. That might suggest that the mechanism for finding violations of human rights did not operate very successfully in the case of Mexico if, under Resolution 1503, nothing was found against Mexico, when the President of Mexico admits that there is a lot to be repaired. It seems to suggest that, as so many other organisms of the United Nations, it is highly politicized.

There are trades. Friends back one another. You will not vote against Mexico on this issue because Mexico might vote against you on something else.

What Senator Grafstein is attempting to do is strengthen the bill for the sake of the poor people of Mexico. Let us think of other parts of the world.

The honourable members on the other side of the chamber do not sound very sincere. You are objecting to a protection of human rights, workers' rights, and the fate of the poorer Mexican, but yet earlier you were preaching to us about Africans and poor people around the world. When talking of these agreements, some of us here in this chamber object to what we see as an attempt to entrench in international treaties the multinational agenda. For instance, look at what Nike Shoes did. It had a factory in the United States and moved to Korea because it could pay lower wages to its workers. When the Korean workers felt their oats a bit, decided that they were a little better off in the world and wanted a little more, Nike was moved to Indonesia where children of 12 were paid $30 a month to work 12 hours a day, six days a week.

Wal-Mart in the United States boasted that all of its products were made in the United States, and then it was discovered to be using child labour in Thailand, and paying them tiny portions.

These are the sorts of things that make someone like me suspicious of free trade pacts that are dictated by the multinational agenda. They increase the profits of multinationals, which profits are not reinvested here. You are the party that in 1986 passed legislation which allows Canadian firms that invest abroad, and make losses abroad, to deduct those losses from their Canadian earnings. That does not do very much for Canadian workers, for the Canadian people and for the welfare of this country. Your colleagues in the other chamber were elected to look after the welfare of this country.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Tell us about the research tax credits. Tell us about the 150 per cent write-offs.

Senator Gigantès: Senator Grafstein is also trying to help the people of Mexico.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Selective memory.

Senator Gigantès: They are not prepared to do anything about that because their friends under Resolution 1503 in the United Nations did not find a single violation, even though the President of Mexico admits their existence.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Tell us about Dome Petroleum. Remember Dome?

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable Senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon:

> THAT Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement, be read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Grafstein, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stanbury:

> THAT Bill C-115 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in the preamble at page 2 thereof by striking out lines 12 to 14, inclusive, and substituting the following:
> tions,
> protect, enhance and enforce workers' rights, and
> enhance the multilateral development and enforcement of human rights and international treaties respecting human rights;

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion in amendment please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

Hon. William M. Kelly: I suggest a five-minute bell.

Senator Molgat: My honourable friend is getting over his fears.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is agreed that the bell will ring for five minutes.

Call in the senators.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

• (2210)

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): I intend to make a brief intervention on this bill, and I can make it brief for a very good reason. I have listened to the debate on NAFTA and all the amendments proposed over the last few days, and I think all senators will be proud of what the record shows with respect to the quality and articulateness of the debate, and the attention that the Senate has given to this very important and far-reaching bill.

I have listened very carefully, and I heard a lot of debate and a lot of differences of opinion on why we should or should not proceed with this bill, and why we should or should not amend it. In all cases, I found myself persuaded by the arguments in favour of the amendments. In fact, I was very impressed and proud of my colleagues and the work they did in support of those amendments.

After listening carefully, the one thing that I heard not a word about, at least not a word in support of in this debate, was: Why now? I heard a lot of very impressive, articulate, lucid arguments as to why it should not be adopted now, but I did not hear one word as to why it should be adopted now. There were strong interventions in support of the bill from Senator Buchanan and others, but not a word of why now.

I checked the debate in the other place and could not find any reason given there why the legislation should be adopted now, particularly in the context of the uncertainty in the United States. I watched for and checked the government hand-outs on the question. I have had some mail on the question. I have checked the speeches distributed by government ministers, some of them touching on the subject. I have listened to whatever the Prime Minister had to say. I have not heard one word as to why this legislation should be adopted now, before the legislative steps have been taken in the United States and before we know about the side agreements, which are the principal reasons for non-adoption in the United States.

What possible advantage is there to Canada in adopting it now, before everyone else, showing our hand and losing all our leverage?

If I take into account all the excellent debate that I have heard, I think we can find an amendment with which everyone can agree, or at least to which we have heard not one word in opposition. I therefore move:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and adding the following words: "the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day three months hence."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, that the bill be read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and adding the following words: "the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day three months hence."

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Certainly my honourable friend is entitled to move the adjournment of the debate. I do not want to misinterpret what my honourable friend may or may not have told me, but I understood we were to dispose of all the amendments presented this evening. Of course we have an understanding that we need not dispose of the entire legislation until tomorrow morning, no later than eleven o'clock. However, having regard to the way in which we were proceeding, I thought that all the amendments would be disposed of tonight, with a chance of also disposing of the main motion. Since we have disposed of three amendments tonight, I am wondering why we should suddenly stop, and no longer proceed with this issue.

Senator Molgat: The issue is very important. Having reached this time of night, and considering that we have had a very thorough debate today, I thought that perhaps we could have a slight break and continue tomorrow. We have an understanding that all matters pertaining to this bill will be disposed of no later that eleven o'clock tomorrow, and we intend to follow that quite to the letter, so there will be no delay.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I intend to move that we reconvene tomorrow morning at nine o'clock, and that we proceed immediately with government business. I assume that then we will dispose of Senator Frith's amendment, proceed to the main motion, and then carry on with the rest of the orders. Is that in agreement?

I might add, however, before you reply, that obviously we cannot have Royal Assent today. We could have had, but it has been delayed until tomorrow. It has been fixed for more or less 1:30 p.m. tomorrow afternoon. This is an hour that has been fixed by other persons than the one who is speaking to you. It will be between 1:00 p.m. and 1:30 p.m., but probably closer to 1:30 p.m. Therefore, honourable senators, if we want to be out of here for the summer after Royal Assent, we should schedule our work tomorrow to start at nine o'clock and proceed with all the orders of business, starting with Bill C-115.

If that is agreeable, then on that basis, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

> THAT when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 23, at nine o'clock in the morning.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Leave is granted. I have no objection to that timetable. I would assume, in view of the hour, that honourable senators might have hoped it would be later than 9:00 a.m., possibly 9:30 or 10:00 a.m., but I have no objections if we have that amount of work —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I would have suggested later, but since some honourable senators are a little weary now, from what I heard from the opposite side, it was my intention to move that all further orders, enquiries and motions be allowed to stand until tomorrow morning.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators may or may not be delighted to know that I intended to finish my series tonight on the disastrous record. However, I am prepared to give leave, as long as it is understood that I will do so tomorrow, after Royal Assent, if necessary. I think some of you may be happier tomorrow if I did it tonight, but then some of you may not.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Are we mentioned?

Senator Frith: Yes, in dispatches. I do not remember whether you are mentioned in this series or not. The other alternative is that I could do part of it now. I am prepared to wait until tomorrow, if that is the general feeling of the house.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You could start after the adjournment. We will leave the lights on.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I do not intend to oppose the proposition of my honourable friend. I just want to make it clear that if there are any honourable senators who want to speak on any item, they are free to do so. We are not foreclosing them.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that all remaining orders, inquiries and motions stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I want to be assured that we will go through the Orders of the Day tomorrow and that everyone will have the opportunity to speak on any of the orders, even though we will be having Royal Assent.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It is certainly the intention to call every item on the Orders of the Day tomorrow before we adjourn, whether it takes place before or after Royal Assent.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 23, 1993

The Senate met at 9.00 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

QUALITY OF TELEVISION COVERAGE—WARNING TO FUTURE CANDIDATES

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, this is something entirely non-partisan. Warn friends on both sides who are going to run in the next election not to trust TV producers. All things considered, TV producers are not journalists but makers of mosaics.

They see every tiny part of a film as a small tile. Mosaics are made of small tiles, arranged in a certain way to create a picture, but endless variations are possible.

TV producers do that all the time. They want to show people, not what you want to say but what they want to say. They take part of a sentence and put it next to what someone else said to produce the desired effect. That is not journalism. In any case, these people are not journalists. They have no journalistic ambitions. They want to make commercials — which pay a lot better than journalism — and maybe end up as film producers.

So, be careful. Television is the politician's enemy. They aren't there to help you. They are there to destroy you. Perhaps the only way to get around this is to agree to go live, which means that what you say is broadcast immediately to the viewers. This way, at least, any mistakes are strictly your own, and not the result of what producers do to convey a certain image of you.

If they insist on an interview and want to tape it, ask for a copy of the tape then and there. Ask them not to make any cuts. If they want to give you 20 seconds, be prepared to speak for 20 seconds, but no more. Get it in writing that they won't cut this message or fool around with it, otherwise you are in for some unpleasant surprises. They will do this to the Conservatives, to the Liberals and to the NDP. They are not professional journalists. They are just makers of mosaics who are not to be trusted.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FISHERIES

CURRENT CONDITIONS AND FUTURE PROSPECTS OF CANADA'S ATLANTIC COMMERCIAL INSHORE FISHERIES—REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Eileen Rossiter: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries on its examination of the current conditions and future prospects of Canada's Atlantic commercial inshore fisheries and any related matters.

If you please, I should like to make a short comment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Rossiter: With the pressure on printing, one page, which I believe is in the appendix, was inserted in the wrong way. Honourable senators will see page 3 before they see page 2. They should not be too upset, however, because there has been a short, extra run to correct the problem. So the chances of getting a correct one are just as good as getting an incorrect one.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, before Senator Rossiter resumes her seat, I should like to say that the members of the committee enjoyed working under her leadership. She did a very good job. We have a report which should command the respect of all senators, a report which is of great importance to the North Atlantic fisheries.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present petitions signed by 113 residents of British Columbia who object to the goods and services tax.

Most of these petitions are from Courtenay, Anahim Lake, Vancouver and Burnaby.

These are the last petitions I will have the honour to present until a new government is in place, a government that will be more attentive than this one to the appeals of the public, which shouldn't be difficult!

ORDERS OF THE DAY

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING BILL

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-110, respecting the Northumberland Strait Crossing.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wonder if the records of the important committee meeting held yesterday are available, even in the form of the blues. Certainly, I have not seen them. The minister and the officials provided us with a fair amount of technical information, and senators ought to have that information before they vote on this bill. Of course, if the government wants to press ahead, it has the majority to do so.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the motion before us is that the bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I do have some remarks to make regarding this bill, but I cannot say that my figures will be sustained by the evidence because the proceedings of the committee hearing are not available to us.

What is happening in this case with regard to the third reading is, in miniature, exactly what is happening with regard to the fixed link itself: We are proceeding in ignorance.

We were told yesterday that some 44 piers are to be erected across Northumberland Strait, forming a great comb-like structure across the strait. That structure will be approximately eight miles long. The exact figure will be found in the committee record, which is unavailable to us today.

• (0910)

Senator Phillips: It will be 13.5 kilometres.

Senator Stewart: All right, it will be 13.5 kilometres. The piers will be based on rock. In some places, the sand and silt overburden is upwards of 65 feet deep. Then, if I recall correctly, at low water, ordinary spring tide, there will be approximately 65 feet of water. Then the piers will go up to — what is it, Senator Phillips, 165 feet in the air?

Senator Phillips: At the highest point.

Senator Stewart: Yes, and that is where a chain breaks, at the stress point.

We shall have these very tall piers, and on top of them there will be a deck 33 feet wide. On that there will be two roads, one going each direction, each 11 feet wide, and a service lane.

We had testimony that it will be impossible to move a prefabricated home across the bridge without closing off traffic.

There is a possibility that trailer trucks may jacknife. We are told that in certain weather conditions it will be necessary to arrange convoys. An escort vehicle will proceed the line of automobiles.

We were told that there are to be no lay-bys, no places where disabled automobiles can pull off the highway so as not to interrupt the flow of traffic.

One of the reasons I am interested in this project is that I was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works back in the 1960s when the last attempt was made to construct a crossing. At that time, given the extraordinarily difficult circumstances in the strait, it was decided that a highly sophisticated structure involving causeway segments, tunnel segments and an artificial island, was necessary. Now we are told it can all be done by a bridge. The model mentioned in the committee was the Chesapeake Bay bridge.

Well, Senator Phillips has crossed the Chesapeake Bay structure and he knows that the weather conditions there are entirely different from what can be experienced in the Northumberland Strait.

I do not know whether this design is going to work, but I have serious doubts about it. I have no faith in group thinking; Certainly, I have no faith when the group thinking is done by engineers. There has to be an impartial evaluation on this kind of project, because, let us remember, engineers, like architects, have their own special motivation.

I remember when the National Arts Centre was being planned. We were told it was going to cost about $9 million. The final figure, if I recall correctly, was $43 million.

I asked, "How is it that the estimate was so wrong?" The answer was, "Oh, well, architects can never tell the thruth, because if they did, nobody would ever build anything."

One of the witnesses in committee yesterday, Mr. Wells, made mention of engineer-driven projects. Then we discussed lobbyist-driven projects. The Honourable Angus MacLean denounced lobbyist-driven projects.

Honourable senators, I do not know that this project is structurally sound. I have doubts.

Of course, this government's attitude is an old American attitude — damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead, regardless of the dangers. We saw that with the free trade agreement; we are seeing it with the NAFTA. "We don't care; we will vote for it." I suppose that is what will happen today with this bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to add a word to what Senator Stewart has said.

I do not have the necessary information to make an informed judgment on this project. Furthermore, I cannot get it in time to vote because we have not even the evidence that was before the committee. My inclination, of course, is to accept the representations, judgment and opinion of our Prince Edward Island colleagues.

Given that I cannot have access to the information that would enable me to make a thoughtful and considered decision in this matter — and perhaps I never could have enough information, because this is such a complex, frontier-breaking and record-breaking engineering project — I am left with no alternative but to be influenced exclusively by the senators from Prince Edward Island.

I must also join Senator Stewart on the question of the process. I am very uncomfortable with the speed of the Senate's process in dealing with this issue. I find it an inadequte fulfilment of the Senate's constitutional responsibilities to study legislation much more carefully than we have had an opportunity to do here.

As Senator Stewart says, the government seems determined to proceed. I suppose we must, as usual, say "So be it" under present voting circumstances, but I am not at all happy about it.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, in listening to the committee witnesses, particularly the Honourable Angus MacLean, I was most impressed by what they had to say. Mr. MacLean had a great deal of doubt about this project. He thought it was environmentally and economically risky, a project that, as he put it, placed at risk the future of his province.

It is important to note that the minister, Elmer MacKay, in testifying before the committee, admitted that not all steps or options available to him at his discretion under the EARP process have been exhausted. It is still possible to strike a panel to conduct public hearings. All of the current studies that have been conducted to date have been done by proponents of the project; various government departments and the developers of the bridge.

The main issues surrounding the fixed link appear to be the cost and the unique means of financing, the environmental impacts, in particular the possible effect of ice buildup on the bridge, and consequently on the Northumberland Strait fishery, which we are told is wonderful. I speak here with a bit of trepidation because I have never even been to Prince Edward Island.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Spivak: I admit that; it is true. I would love to visit P.E.I., but I would like to go by ferry.

I am concerned about the impact of a fixed link on the traditional Island way of life. I sincerely hope that in dealing with this massive megaproject, the minister will see fit, once all the evidence is in, and keeping in mind the court ruling, to look at this project carefully through instruments available to him under the EARP process.

• (0920)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I think that some of us or some of you may have been left with the impression that this project, as presently conceived, has the potential to adversely and seriously affect the ecology, the aquatic environment and the fishery, insomuch as it is important to Prince Edward Islanders. That is only half of the truth because those considerations are equally important for coastal New Brunswick populations, especially those who earn a substantial living out of the fishery resources in the Northumberland Strait. The sea bottom, the fishery, is very important to the people of Southeast New Brunswick.

The other day I raised concerns on the basis that I, for one, am not satisfied with the environmental-impact studies so far proceeded with. I am gravely concerned with the potential for ecological disaster. I take good note of Senator Stewart's concerns with respect to potential ice build-up damage. For that reason, I will not to support this piece of legislation at this time; I will abstain. The project as it now stands is not sufficiently mature, in my opinion, to be proceeded with.

In the committee yesterday we dealt mainly with the financial package. We did not have time to go into any great depth into some of the economic considerations. This area has only been skimmed. I pleaded the other day for sufficient time for this house and that committee to examine not only the bill, but the overall proposal. In committee yesterday we were not even given a kit that would have illustrated to us the sheer physical dimensions of this project. All we had was a bare bones financial bill.

Most senators — including those who have never visited either New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island and have never crossed the Northumberland Strait — have no idea what they are voting for here. I invite them to travel to the strait even in the high winds of the months of August so they could get a good impression of the devastating potential of the forces of nature when it decides to go wild.

Let the matter stand. I do not want to be associated with the legislation as it stands today; I will simply abstain. I wish Prince Edward Island the best. If, in their wisdom, they think that this is what is needed, it is fine with me, but I cannot support it.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I am surprised that Order No. 2 came before Order No.1. I was out to get an important note and did not get back in time. In my excitement I spilled a glass of water, which is the first time in my many years here.

I have noted what senatorial colleagues have said and the anxiety they have about what to do and how to vote. Perhaps before I am through I may be able to offer an avenue whereby they can follow their consciences and help the project greatly.

I have never, since I came to the Senate, engaged in anything even slightly negative about the institution. I used to be pained and shocked to hear senator after senator say that "This place should be abolished; it is no good." Therefore, I am reluctant to comment, but I will bring myself to make a remark or two on the way the Senate has examined this important bill, a vital determinant of the future of Prince Edward Island.

We are told by the would-be builders, "It is the newest, it is the first, it is the greatest." How much time does the chamber of sober second thought give to it? One-half day! A project that will cost millions of dollars, we are up near a billion dollars, which, to poor Prince Edward Islanders like myself, is a phenomenal sum. It was given one-half day!

We heard from the Department of Public Works. It might look as if things were structured so that we would hear from the government and hear from those who are against it and those who are for it — a very fair division, like Gaul divided into three parts. However, in this matter that is not the case in reference to the Department of Public Works. Old Isaac said, you remember, "The voice of Jacob but the hand of Esau." However, there is not even that difference between what the company says and what the government says.

One may pick up the Charlottetown Guardian any day and read a report and easily transpose the lobbyist from SCI to an official from the government. Therefore, we had two points of view for it, and one for the side that is against the bill and is fearful of what it will do to Prince Edward Island.

I was also slightly amused, and slightly chagrined, when I recalled all the times that I had been called to go over to the Transport committee because it was short of members and there was the possibility that there would be a vote. But was I called yesterday? I looked at the list and I saw one name stricken out. Who was written in? Senator Phillips. I may remember those things when next I am called to make a quorum or be "voting fodder", which is what you are really wanted for, at times.

Senator Phillips: I was put on the night before. Were you here?

Senator Macquarrie: That does not make it any better senator, at all; some things are done at night that should not be done.

I cannot believe that we are satisfied, after hearing a splendid group of witnesses, including a former Premier of Prince Edward Island who will go down in history as the environment Premier, a man who was in this Parliament of Canada from 1951 on until he became Premier. We heard some expert testimony from the former president of APEC, a former official of ACOA. There were about 15 senators at that meeting; good attendance, good people. But there will be 80 or 90 people asked to vote today on this bill and not one of them will know what these people said, because it has not yet been printed.

Things were done in such haste that Mr. MacKay, the minister, came in with only English documentation and apologized for nothing being in French. Do we really, honourable senators, think that is sober second thought?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Macquarrie: Do we really know what we are voting on?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Macquarrie: Thank you. The answer is no.

I do not believe that the Senate, which, rightly, is so concerned about its image, should allow this to be charged against it. It has hurried this through in a rush at the last minute. I do not know what the rush is. We are at an interesting stage now, where there is to be a new Prime Minister, a new government, a new Minister of Public Works, a new Minister of the Environment — a minister we have not heard much from on this important matter.

I am not a suspicious type, but is perhaps the reason for the rush to structure some sort of fait accompli? If so, that is not a good reason. it is the opposite, surely. What distresses me is that we will be accused, not of sober second thought, but of callous disregard.

I was there at the committee. I could not vote, of course, so I had to declare that I was against it. There was not even time to go over the bill clause by clause. What was the hurry? There were some tremendous things said yesterday, and naturally there would be only one chance for questions with there being such a short period of time. The chairman, I may say, did an excellent job, being very courteous and thoughtful and on track. But so many things came up. I have heard senators from that committee say that they did not know that there was this or that problem. Let us spend a little more time and find out some other problems.

I think the solution here, and I tried it the other day, is to take that time, when the election will be held and the government will be changed, to do what should and must be done, and that is to have an independent study of the environmental problems — and they are grave. They were detailed yesterday.

Yesterday was not a great day for me, but this morning I have heard something that is very interesting. You might not know it from what you hear from me and Senator Phillips, but, believe it or not, there are people who are neutral about this. They do not know whether they want the bridge or want the ferries. One such group is the Island Nature Trust. Someone who heard from them received this document and passed it on to me. It is a public document.

The Island Nature Trust people say that the project absolutely must pass through the Environmental Assessment and Review Process in accordance with federal guidelines, and following the ruling of the Federal Court. That has been the problem all the way through, that the Federal Court reference — and I would call it an order — has not been complied with.

We are told about studies. An article that I have here is headed, "SCI report evaluates bridge proposal." Who is SCI? Strait Crossing Incorporated, a new company. Obviously, that "Strait" reference indicates it is not an old established company that has been building bridges. I do not know whether it has built a bridge. As I said in the committee yesterday, I would not be too reassured if my operating surgeon said, "This is the first one I have done." I am not sure Prince Edward Island is the place I would put forward for the experiment.

We did have some soothing syrup yesterday which, I said, reminded me of the old patent medicine, Dr. Comfort's Soothing Syrup. Everything is going to be rosy.

Has any consideration been given to cost overruns? Our beautiful National Arts Centre was supposed to cost $9 million, but it ended up costing $43 million. What will happen when you start with a figure of nearly $1 billion and you have a cost overrun? I would remind you that this might all be at the taxpayers' expense.

I mentioned the opinion expressed by the Globe and Mail financial expert, as well as the article in the Financial Post but it seems no one is taking those seriously. Should I be directing these business papers to other people who know much more about economics and finance, and making more money, than I do? I am alarmed by what these papers are saying.

If I had until next fall, I could not read you all the material that I have amassed. A bridge could almost be built with my files.

I was much moved by a statement made by Mr. Sidney Clay as reported in the Globe and Mail. He went directly to the heart of the question when he said:

> There is no comparable bridge in a similar situation in existence. This bridge will span an environmentally harsh strait —

I live close enough to know it can be mighty bloody harsh.

> — not a harbour — not a bay — not an estuary.

Honourable senators, we will not have the option of taking a detour if something goes wrong; we Islanders will be stranded there, victims of technology, faulty planning, or insecure financing. I am not going to apologize if I seem a little excited. This is the province to which I belong. I am deeply concerned.

The man Senator Spivak and I spoke of, Angus MacLean, our elder statesman, made the most important, the most impressive, and the most impassioned speech I ever heard him make. His anxiety was dramatic. It should have, and I hope it did, move the people who heard it.

Mr. Clay, who is quite a brilliant man in his own right, concludes his letter by saying how delighted his wife and he were that their son was able to come home to spend Christmas with them. He came across on the ferry in bad weather. Had the bridge been built, he would not have been able to cross.

As Angus MacLean said, we are not talking about keeping the ferry technology behind the times so people will criticize the ferry service more and, therefore, be easily persuaded to believe that we need a bridge. The main concern I have relates to heavy vehicle traffic, and I recognize their importance. However, ferries can be built, and they could have been built by now, that would expedite the movement of trucks for our important potato and lobster crops.

As I said the other day, and I am sure all my colleagues listened with close and acute attention, nothing has changed. Although no mention was made of scallops yesterday, they are still there, right in the very path of the proposed bridge. Our precious lobster fishery is still in danger. No study has been conducted of the bottom of the Northumberland Strait, and no serious recent study has been done of the ice situation, the extent of which surpassed memory of our oldest fishermen.

As for the soothing comments made by the experts, the engineers to whom Senator Stewart referred, I have one more anecdote which I think will speak for itself. About 25 years ago, a very smart-looking bridge was built in the fishing village of Covehead, where I like to go to fish mackerel — and I sometimes catch them too. The fishermen said, "That bridge is not going to last." I was told by the engineers, "No, no," and they gave me all sorts of elevation stresses and all that sort of thing. They said, "They are crazy." Well, it was good for that year and the next year. Finally, one morning, after the bridge had been standing for a year or two, I got a phone call from one of the oldest fishermen in the village. He told me, "Guess what, Mr. Macquarrie? We had a northeaster last night, and there is no bridge here now." In other words, those fishermen knew what would happen.

Of course they knew. Anyone familiar with the ice conditions in the Northumberland Strait knows that when it narrows, all sorts of things can happen that are quite clearly dangerous. Now they want to put up a great big bridge, and provide a chauffeur, if necessary, and that scares an old guy like me. Even some young fellow like Senator Prud'homme might be nervous about driving across it.

Yesterday in committee Angus MacLean mentioned what would happen if a truck jackknifed on the bridge. The response was, "Well, we will have it cleared in three or four days." The province of P.E.I. cannot wait three or four days. The hazards are enormous.

I suggest that we be sensible and look upon this period ahead of us as a time to have some research done. That strikes me as being prudent. It allows for time to do that which is needful and imperative for a project that will affect us so seriously.

I fear this greatly. I will not live to see the total ill effects, or if by chance I am wrong, the total good effects, but someone near and dear to me will. Like Sir John A. Macdonald, with my utmost strength and my latest breath, I will oppose it so long as opposition is not totally in vain.

Therefore, honourable senators, I move:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and adding the following words:
> > the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day three months hence.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, that the bill be read the third time now.

In amendment, it was moved by the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart:

> THAT the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and adding the following words:
> > the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day three months hence.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those senators in favour of the motion, please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?.

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: I think the "nays" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators. Is there agreement on the length of the bell?

Hon. William M. Kelly: Do we wish to hold the vote now?

Hon. Jacques Hébert: No, we need a bit of a bell.

Senator Kelly: Is a five-minute bell sufficient?

Senator Hébert: Yes.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I would like to explain why I abstained, but I realize we have a very busy schedule this morning. With your leave, I prefer to say a few words on third reading of this bill.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): I abstained from voting to verify or confirm that the vote on this side was not to be determined or influenced on party lines.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips —

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we proceed any further on Bill C-110, in view of the fact that time is marching on and there may be further debate on the third reading motion, I wonder if we should not go to Bill C-115, which is a very important bill and which is coming up for a vote at no later than 11 a.m. By agreement, perhaps we could come back to Bill C-110 later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I suggest that, perhaps, Prince Edward Island is just as important as Mexico. Perhaps we should look after one of our 10 provinces rather than going abroad to another nation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: Therefore, I think we should proceed with the third reading debate on Bill C-110 and get it off the agenda. Honourable senators could cut their speeches a little shorter on the next item, if they have to.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I think I have to support my honourable friend in his suggestion.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: I am not at all happy with the idea of dividing up this matter and bringing it back another time. Yesterday, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition was unwilling to proceed with third reading, which was his right and privilege. I did not object to that.

Parcelling up debate on third reading is not usual procedure. It is very improper, as he is well aware. Let us finish this matter first.

I agree that the speeches do not have to be an hour long. I could make one for three hours, if honourable senators want me to.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no!

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I will be brief and make one comment to those who have concerns about the fixed link. Ask any Cape Bretoner, including Senator Graham, if they want the Cape Breton causeway torn up and replaced by a car ferry. I will leave it at that, honourable senators.

Senator Molgat: One should know better than to try to tamper with P.E.I.

Since there is not agreement, I have another suggestion to make. Can we agree to defer the vote on the NAFTA bill until noon? Royal Assent is scheduled for 1:30 p.m.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Molgat: If there is no agreement, then that is fine. I shall remember when my agreement is sought. I have a long memory.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, am I correct in thinking that the house wishes to proceed with the third reading debate on Bill C-110?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by Honourable Senator Beaudoin, that Bill C-110 be now read the third time.

Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, honourable senators?

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I must say I have visited Prince Edward Island several times, and some day I hope to go there with my good friend Senator Spivak and several others to visit what I consider to be the cradle of Confederation.

I discovered the beauty of Prince Edward Island because the first person who spoke to me about the Island—

[English]

• (1000)

— was my excellent friend Senator Phillips. When I was a student, he became a senator, and I was a regular on the Hill even then. If my memory serves me well, he is the first one who ever spoke to me at great length, in his English and in my very broken understanding of English. My understanding of P.E.I. is from the Honourable Senator Phillips. Then my good friend joined the Senate, Senator Bonnell. Then my colleague in the house, the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, spoke to me about P.E.I.

I think Canadians should know about P.E.I. It is a fabulous place where they know hospitality and have an attachment to tradition. I am a traditionalist. I have no hesitation to say that. However, I am also extremely careful when I have to vote money for any kind of project. In all my long-time experience in the House of Commons, I have seen that all these projects, when they say it will only cost this, always cost immensely more; be it Mirabel, all kinds of projects in Alberta, Saskatchewan and even in Newfoundland.

[Translation]

Yesterday, I attended my first meeting of a Senate committee. I went in with a great deal of enthusiasm, and I was keen on getting all the answers to the questions I had. However, I came out profoundly troubled, because questions that should have been given clear and specific answers were not answered to my satisfaction.

[English]

The majority of people from P.E.I. want the Northumberland Strait crossing. The government wants the Northumberland Strait crossing. The majority of my colleagues want the Northumberland Strait crossing, and my elected friends in P.E.I. want the Northumberland Strait crossing. Therefore, who am I to come here at the last minute as a new senator to say that I vote against it? I thought, at least, it was my duty to stand up and reaffirm, first, my pride in P.E.I. where I learned so much of the meaning of attachment and tradition. Because of that, I have to be a little more careful in what I intend to do.

Second, I am a new senator. I believe that it is the sentiment of many new senators — I spoke with every one of them and I know every one of you — that they have a role to play. It is kind of a future warning. I do not like the word "warning" but I lack the vocabulary.

[Translation]

It is a warning for the future that senators are determined to play a definite role.

[English]

Canadians will decide what to do with the Senate. However, as I say to the press, "in the meantime, would you mind if we do something?" One of the things we can do is scrutinize more attentively what is being said by the other chamber.

That is why I abstain, because I am a new senator. Who am I to arrive at the last minute and say, I will teach you, you are wrong. I am in doubt, as are many of the witnesses we have heard. We are in doubt, as has been expressed by the Honourable Senator Stewart, by Honourable Senator Macquarrie, by a very vivacious ex-colleague of the House, the honourable ex-premier of the province, the Honourable Angus MacLean.

I do not want to show any partishanship, the new premier versus the old premier. However, when you are in doubt, you at least abstain. That is what I did this morning. I would not like to delay this bill but I must say that I am extremely concerned.

My last hope is that the people responsible will read what we said this morning. We will probably give Royal Assent to this bill, but it will have to be proclaimed some day. That is where I hang my hat. I will say the same later on this morning on another bill. Before it is proclaimed, at least those of us who have doubts, those like Honourable Senator Spivak who have doubts on certain issues, and others, that at least their concerns will be re-examined before we finally go ahead with what may become one of the greatest projects to make the people of the Island happy.

However, I am always suspicious when these kinds of Madison Avenue people descend on us with money, with a lobby and tell us that what we are about to do is the greatest thing on earth. I think everyone in this chamber has had that kind of experience. I do not like to be lobbied that extensively. We all have a mind of our own to reflect on whether this is the best thing to do. It seems that the majority of this chamber thinks it is the best thing to do, to go ahead with it. I abstain because I am in doubt. I am too new to arrive here and say, categorically, I am sure of what I am saying.

I thank those who impressed me with the beauty of the island. I want to be on record that the first one who ever spoke to me, as I said earlier, was the Honourable Senator Phillips, followed by the Honourable Senators Bonnell and Macquarrie. Now there is a new addition in that province. I look forward to returning there this summer with all of you who have never visited the island. You will have a much better feeling of what we are accomplishing here today if you know exactly what the island is all about.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I have a question for my honourable friend whom I welcome to this chamber. Impressed as I am by his traditional eloquence, but surprised by his unassuming and unusual modesty, would he be satisfied if I offered my services as a guide and chaperon when he and Senator Spivak come to visit Prince Edward Island?

Senator Prud'homme: It is done. I just saw the acknowledgment of Senator Spivak. I would be delighted on the condition that our friends Senators Bonnell, Phillips and Rossiter accompany us. In this way we will be non-partisan and we may start a new era of cooperation between the two sides of the Senate.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I want to express my appreciation to Senators Macquarrie and Stewart for bringing to this chamber what I think is probably one of the most enlightened aspects on this subject and perhaps on many subjects which come before us.

I will oppose the bill. I had hoped that the motion to set it aside for three months would have passed. That would have given us all an opportunity to be better informed on this issue. I am very sorry that that did not happen. I certainly have not talked to everyone in this chamber, but to those of whom I have talked about the issue, no one has enough information, I find, to really say that the project is good.

In the past few years, we have had these major projects which were the greatest thing for the Canadian people. When the issues came up, we said that the province of Newfoundland wants it, or the province of Saskatchewan wants it, the members of Parliament from those provinces want it, so we should not really defy that. We should accept that.

We made a number of mistakes by accepting that. We just blindly accepted the Hibernia project which will cost millions more than was estimated. It always happens. Senator Macquarrie mentioned the National Arts Centre. Yes, it will only be $9 million and it ends up as $40 million. It happens all the time.

In Saskatchewan, we said that because the rest of the country is getting mega-projects, we need the heavy-oil tar sands plant in Lloydminster, Alberta-Saskatchewan. We need that. The costs are unbearable, and the costs are nowhere near what the estimates were. The Canadian people are having to pay for that project which will not be efficiently operated and will not pay its own way for years.

Millions of dollars were poured into the Alameda-Rafferty Dam megaproject in Saskatchewan. There is no power being produced by that dam at the moment.

One of the senators mentioned Mirabel Airport. That was supposed to be a great project. We bought 85,000 acres of the best farm land in the country for this megaproject. Billions of dollars were spent on it without studies being done to find out if it was feasible. The province of Quebec wanted it and members wanted it because it was to be a great thing.

The rest of the country, including this chamber, went along with those projects, knowing in our hearts that they were not feasible projects.

I might not be opposed to this project if I had the information that Senator Stewart, Senator Macquarrie and others have asked for. If it were proven to be a viable project, environmentally and economically, I would have another look at it. However, in all conscience I cannot blindly vote, on behalf of the people I represent and all Canadians, for this project.

If we had the opportunity to shelve this project for a time and study it further, I might not be forced to vote against it. However, I have to vote against this bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, that Bill C-110 be read the third time now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time on the following division:

THIRD READING—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Stratton, seconded by the Honourable Senator Keon, for the third reading of Bill C-115, to implement the North American Free Trade Agreement.

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and adding the following words: "the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day three months hence."

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, despite the fact that last night it was not this side that adjourned the debate on this matter, but the other side at 10:10 p.m., when we had time to proceed on the amendment and further debate, we must recognize that the fixed link legislation took longer to deal with than certainly I had anticipated. If agreed, perhaps we could move the vote on Bill C-115 back by half an hour and have it no later than 11:30 a.m.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had adjourned this debate last night, but I understand the Leader of the Government wishes to participate in the debate. I would be prepared to let him proceed, because it is important that he have the opportunity to speak and we have the opportunity to hear him.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had undertaken yesterday that before this bill came to a final vote I would make a brief statement about the side agreements. I can just as well make it now on Senator Frith's amendment, if it is the wish of honourable senators. I will try not to be too long.

I do not recall whether it was in the oral Question Period or in the course of exchanges we had in debate on one of the amendments, but I said yesterday that I thought Senator Stewart greatly exaggerated the exposure of Canada in these negotiations. Indeed, he built a great deal of his case in opposing the NAFTA on what I believe is a mistaken judgment as to the extent of Canada's exposure.

As I indicated yesterday with regard to the content of these agreements, Senator Stewart seems to take it as a given that the initial demands put forward by the United States administration, under the pressure of labour unions, environmental groups and other interest groups in that country, will form the outcome of the side agreements. That is an unrealistic proposition in any step of international trade negotiations.

In any case, as I indicated yesterday, it is evident just by reading the lines and reading between the lines, even in the popular media, that some second thoughts are being had in the U.S. administration and in the congress about some of the more extreme demands put forward by these groups in respect to the side agreements. A great many interests are represented in the Congress of the United States; a great many interests always make their presence felt there, and a great many interests other than the interests of trade unions and environmental groups. Political realism and experience would suggest very strongly to me that the initial demands of the U.S. administration with regard to these side agreements will be very considerably diluted in the course of negotiations.

Honourable senators, the second assumption on which Senator Stewart has built his case for our extreme vulnerability is that Canada is "desperate" to get the NAFTA. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are there to protect our own interests. We are there, as has been said many times, to protect against the United States' hub-and-spoke approach to hemispheric trade — the United States as the hub, concluding a bilateral agreement with us, a bilateral agreement with Mexico and a bilateral agreement with any other country. We believed it to be in our interest to avoid that, to protect against it, and to be part of any hemispheric free trade arrangement. This arrangement provides for the accession of other countries to the NAFTA in the future.

We are also at the negotiating table because this agreement will open up to Canada one of the fastest growing markets and economies in the world. It is a great opportunity for Canada.

Further to that, if I am not mistaken, approximately 80 per cent of Mexican imports to Canada come in to our country free of duty, whereas I think an amount of the same order of magnitude going from Canada to Mexico is subject to duty as we speak. So we have free trade with the Mexicans in one direction — coming in our direction. The NAFTA will provide for free trade in both directions. To us, therefore, the NAFTA makes eminent good sense in every way.

But Senator Stewart also suggests that Canada is "desperate" for the NAFTA because Chapter 19 of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is made permanent under the NAFTA.

Senator Stewart: As Mr. Wilson told us.

Senator Murray: "As Mr. Wilson told us," adds Senator Stewart.

Otherwise, Senator Stewart says, the Chapter 19 provision of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement would disappear, vanish and evaporate in a few years.

If the NAFTA did not pass, why is Senator Stewart so sure that bilateral negotiations to improve upon, build upon and make permanent the dispute-settlement provisions of these bilateral negotiations would necessarily fail?

Senator Stewart seems to believe, or assume, that there is some incentive for the United States to get rid of the dispute-settlement mechanism. But what is that incentive? Why would they want to get rid of it?

Senator Stewart: Especially if it is composed of judges who make decisions that they want.

Senator Murray: They have invoked it as we have, sometimes successfully and sometimes unsuccessfully. It is an element of stability in a trading relationship that the United States values as much as we do.

Senator Stewart cannot have it both ways. In one breath, during one part of the debate, he is heaping scorn and ridicule on the dispute-settlement mechanism —

Senator Stewart: Never!

Senator Frith: No, he did not!

Senator Murray: Oh, yes.

Senator Stewart: I quoted again and again the evidence we had received.

Senator Murray: At every opportunity Senator Stewart has had in Question Period or elsewhere, he has heaped scorn and ridicule on the dispute-settlement mechanism.

Senator Stewart: That is bad mythology.

Senator Murray: He is now telling us how important it is to make it permanent. He cannot have it both ways.

Senator Frith: Nor does he want it both ways.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me say a few words about the side agreements.

We believe that the NAFTA agreement is a good agreement in its own right. We think it is a good agreement for all three countries, and we think that constructive side agreements can be achieved to increase cooperation on environment and labour matters across North America.

We are putting forward, at the bargaining table, concrete proposals for the side agreements. We will work with the United States and Mexico to ensure that these are effective.

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: What does "effective" mean? No sanctions?

Senator Murray: I am coming to that, senator. Please have patience. Do not let your visceral anti-Americanism and your inward looking nationalism carry you away.

• (1040)

Senator Grafstein: For the purposes of the record, my first grandson was born in the United States. I have no visceral animosity towards America or any other state.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): You better try someone else. I think you picked the wrong person.

Senator Murray: If your grandson was born in the United States, he showed better judgment than you have.

Senator Grafstein: Each generation improves upon the former. That is true in your case as well.

Senator Austin: Does that mean that you wish you were born in the United States?

Senator Murray: Let me talk about the so-called trade sanctions, why we oppose them and believe they would have serious drawbacks.

We believe that a primary objective of the environmental and labour agreements should be to improve environmental and labour standards in North America. Trade sanctions that penalize the nonenforcement of domestic, environmental and labour laws would, we believe, favour the maintenance of easy to enforce low standards, not the development of high standards.

Second, Canada does not believe that the environmental and labour agreements should favour protectionist interests. It seems to us that trade sanctions would encourage harassment from well-financed protectionist interests in all countries.

Third, Canada does not believe that the agreements should discourage North American investment in jobs. We are absolutely convinced that the impact of trade sanctions among the NAFTA partners would encourage investors to locate outside North America.

Fourth, we believe that the agreements should promote greater environmental and labour cooperation in North America. We are convinced that trade sanctions would produce, not cooperation, but confrontation.

Senator Stewart sees enormous advantages for the United States as the largest of the three partners. He sees enormous advantages for the United States to pursue and put in place a regime of trade sanctions related to side agreements. The potential advantages that Senator Stewart sees for the United States in such a regime are illusory and will be seen to be so by the Americans. They are illusory when they are seen in light of the disadvantages to all three partners and to the North American economy from accepting trade sanctions related to these side agreements.

Some observers believe that trade sanctions are the only way to enforce the agreements. We want to make sure that there are active but accountable secretariats and strong dispute-settlement mechanisms. Let me outline, and this gives me an opportunity to sketch out, as much as I can under these circumstances, what our proposal is.

We have proposed that independent inquiry and evaluation committees could investigate complaints that a party is consistently failing to respect its obligations. The glare of the public spotlight would be a powerful tool in encouraging governments to respect their domestic and international obligations.

Canada has also proposed that the three countries work towards ensuring that their citizens have the right to take legal action in each others' courts in the event of transboundary damage. We are prepared to be creative, as we have told our partners at the table. We think the parties should explore ways to encourage the governments to fix problems identified by the environmental and labour commissions, rather than face penalties.

Beyond that, I do not think honourable senators can expect me to discuss details about what is still being considered at the negotiating table.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Do we proceed on faith?

Senator Murray: Finally, honourable senators, I intend to say a word about the amendment proposed by the Honourable Senator Frith. I shall do so because the amendment would give the third reading a three-month hoist.

The Leader of the Opposition asked why we must go ahead now. I suggest to him and to the Senate that no good reason has been suggested for not going ahead now. After all, the suggestion is made that we should wait for the side agreements and see what these negotiations produce. But, honourable senators, as I pointed out in this house on many occasions, the United States, Canada and Mexico have said that the NAFTA will not be re-opened. The NAFTA will be passed as is.

Senator Stanbury: We have heard that before.

Senator Frith: In other words, just fill in the blanks!

Senator Stanbury: A seamless web!

Senator Murray: Further to that, we have added a saving provision to the bill, as the honourable senator knows. It is to be found in clause 242, Part III of the bill under the heading "Coming Into Force", which reads that the bill would not come into force:

> ...unless the Governor in Council is satisfied that the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America have taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement.

Senator Frith: That is totally subjective though, is it not, senator? Parliament has no rule.

Senator Murray: We are fully protected in this matter. I do not know if the Honourable Senator Stewart still thinks that it is somehow an abuse of our executive authority to hold that decision for the cabinet, after all the debate on this matter that we have had, but I should hope not. Nevertheless, we are fully protected.

Honourable senators, we heard it said last night from Senator Graham that pressing ahead with this bill was an indication of a Canadian inferiority complex vis-à-vis the United States. Honourable senators, attempting to block, obstruct and defeat this bill is an indication of an inferiority complex vis-à-vis the United States. It is inward looking, defensive, insular, protectionist and ultimately reactionary to suggest that we can turn our backs on the world in this way.

Honourable senators, the world would think that we had taken leave of our senses if we turned away from a hemispheric free trade agreement.

An Hon. Senator: You have!

Senator Murray: We belong in this hemisphere. There are great economic opportunities for Canada in the NAFTA and great economic opportunities for all the people of this hemisphere.

• (1050)

Open markets, freer trade have never failed to improve living standards and increased prosperity, wherever they have been tried.

Honourable senators let's get on with it, let's pass this bill and seize the opportunities of tomorrow.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, one thing I can say for certain is that this is my last speech on NAFTA and I will spare you and myself the pain of making further comments.

Honourable senators, in a sense we are at the end of this process and we are on the threshold of making a final decision on the North American Free Trade Agreement.

In the course of the debate, we on this side moved three amendments affecting what I might call the institutional framework of the NAFTA. The first was to seek the extension of working groups established under the free trade agreement for the purpose of developing new trade rules that would deal with subsidies and antidumping. The second was intended to oppose efforts of the United States to frustrate the panel system, by unduly legalistic interpretations and their refusal to accept the precedent-setting impact of the panel decisions. Third, we put forward an amendment asking that parliamentary approval be sought for the side agreements before the Governor in Council would proclaim the North American Free Trade Agreement.

We also moved two amendments on two critical resource and industrial sectors, automobiles and energy; and we moved three amendments with the broad purpose of strengthening the protection for important social groups, namely the aboriginals and workers.

All our amendments were defeated by the government majority as a matter of rote, with machine gun precision and regularity. Very little concern was expressed by government members on the content of the amendments. There was little debate, very little effort to refute the argumentation, no acknowledgement of the precarious situation in which the government finds itself at the moment with a Prime Minister leaving because he has lost the confidence of the people and a new Prime Minister yet to be sworn with no mandate from the people of Canada to do anything.

In this circumstance, there might have been some recognition that there were ideas and thoughts that at least ought to be dealt with, if not accepted. But with very minor exceptions, the amendments and the debate on this side washed over members of the government as if they were indifferent to what was going on around them. They did not seem to care. I am delighted that Senator Murray this morning broke his silence —

Senator Murray: I was on my feet half of yesterday.

Senator MacEachen: — and dealt with some of the substance of the NAFTA.

Honourable senators, we had good reason to move these amendments, and we had good reason to draw these questions to the attention of the Senate. Although they have been defeated, the issues raised still have to be dealt with.

The Government of Canada, in espousing the free trade agreement, said that a principal objective to be achieved in the agreement was the establishment of working groups which would devise new trading rules for Canada and the United States, so that Canada would be spared the capricious impact on their exporters of American trade rules. That was held up as a principal objective of the free trade agreement. That objective has been abandoned by the government in NAFTA.

When we used those words in the committee and confronted the officials with the abandonment of that purpose, they got their hackles up, they bristled, suffering, no doubt vicariously, for their minister, the Minister for International Trade. But they gave it up in exchange for what is described as permanent panels. "Permanent?", said the deputy negotiator of the FTA. "Permanent my eye!" says Mr. Ritchie. They can be terminated by six month's notice by terminating the agreement, and he raised that as a possibility. Senator Stewart placed the conundrum clearly before the Senate in saying that if NAFTA is not passed, then the panels will disappear in 1996 in any event, the main achievement, so we are told, of the free trade agreement.

I thought the response of the Leader of the Government was particularly feeble because, he says, who is to say that bilateral negotiations will fail? We know they failed. That is why they were abandoned, because the Americans would not move. They are not going to move on that. We raised this in the form of an amendment to see whether we could put some backbone into the government to go back and say that we want new trade rules, that we want to negotiate them and that we want a time period. But no.

Then we observed that the Americans again scored victory after victory against Canada and its negotiators. First of all in FTA, by disregarding the Canadian reluctance to have lawyers on these panels, and now in NAFTA, by disregarding Canadian reluctance to have judges and retired judges. It is not a question of the profession. It is because the Americans understand that it is more likely that juridically minded people will pay greater obeisance to the literal law of the American trade rules than they will to the wider economic context. They have their heads screwed on, they knew what they were doing and they succeeded in doing it.

In accepting the American demand, Canada did not get its own agenda satisfied, which was to have the precedential impact of panel decisions acknowledged in the NAFTA. Mr. Ritchie told us that Canada had backed off and did not have its agenda accepted.

That is a concern and we moved an amendment to that effect. That was turned down. The American view was accepted because we collapsed in the negotiation. Then we moved another amendment which would have enabled us to be a little prudent and give Parliament a chance to pass upon the side agreements to see what is in them before the Governor in Council proclaims the bill.

That seemed reasonable, but Senator Murray said, "Why shouldn't we press ahead?" Our law will be passed and will get Royal Assent presumably today, and we do not even know what is in the American law. We have not seen it yet. We have not seen it. We do not know what is in it.

The deputy negotiator of the FTA told us that it was wise that we had not passed the FTA bill in Canada before the Americans tabled their bill, otherwise we would have lost all leverage in having removed from the American FTA certain features which they put forward in their Congress. That is the testimony from the deputy negotiator. He said it is madness for Canada to pass the law before the Americans at least disclose their bill. Once it is disclosed, where is our leverage? There may be passages in there that are against Canadian interests. That was the experience under the FTA.

Senator Murray: That is why clause 242 is in the bill, senator.

Senator MacEachen: Of course, but the government is pressed in that circumstance not to proclaim the whole bill. It is all or nothing. Surely there is a more prudent middle course to take. We could say, "Well, let's see what the Americans do, and if there is something there that is bad, then we can say we have not passed our law yet and we can change ours to accommodate their changes." That possibility has been removed.

Honourable senators, we put forward an amendment dealing with the automobile industry, and that was defeated. We argued that the FTA had weakened the safeguards for the protection of the Canadian automobile industry. We argued that NAFTA added to that weakening trend. We believed that we had not yet examined, to anybody's satisfaction, the impact on the Canadian automobile industry of this combined FTA and NAFTA. That amendment was rejected.

We are asked to take a leap of faith. We are asked to believe the generalities of Senator Murray that trade itself is a glorious thing and it is bound to lead to a new Jerusalem.

I hate to bring up energy again. It is a painful memory for me to think of how the FTA gutted the independence of the National Energy Board, which had been created by Mr. Diefenbaker, of how we lost control of our energy resources, and how we gave the American consumers the same rights as Canadians in the use of Canadian energy resources. That is what we did.

Canada is an industrial power. It is a member of the G-7. Mexico is not. However, Mexico showed us in these negotiations how to stand up to the Americans. Dr. Campbell Watkins, a man from the West immersed in oil problems, says the Americans created a distinct society for themselves in energy through NAFTA, yet they reaped all the other benefits of NAFTA. How is it that they could be so successful and we were pushed back? I ask that question again, and it will be asked in the future, and it will be dealt with in the future.

We tried to project a human dimension to this bill through amendments by Senators Graham, Grafstein, and Marchand. Behind the shrubbery of legalese, there were people who wanted jobs, who wanted self-expression, but that too was put aside.

It was interesting that, in the committee, the officials religiously reflected the view of ministers that the NAFTA should have nothing to do with the human dimension of life; it all had to be the parameters of trade. Senator Ghitter made this comment:

> I am somewhat disappointed to see no reference whatsoever in the legislation respecting human rights. The environment made the preamble, but human rights did not even make the preamble of the documentation ...

The deputy negotiator Mr. Clark, said:

> The NAFTA is not a panacea for the societal problems of all the participants.

He brushed Senator Ghitter off.

Equally interesting was an effort by Senator Lawson to tell us that there were people behind all of this. He asked:

> Working conditions, or health and welfare for the workers, or the wages that were being paid were not a concern for our negotiators? You had no concerns about these matters?

Mr. Clark says:

> I do not understand what you are saying.

Senator Bolduc: Read the rest of what he said.

Senator MacEachen: If you want me to read it, I can. I am trying to respect the time frame. I do not think reading the rest mitigates the sting of, "I do not understand what you are saying."

It is clear that there was not much attention paid to the human dimension of this problem. That is what came through from the ministers of the government and the government side.

I want to end in a moment, but I cannot end without referring to Senator Murray's assertion yesterday, and repeated today, that, "Believe me, there are benefits there. This is for prosperity, and this is for growth, and this is for a better life for all." Senator Murray will forgive me if I am —

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if I may, at the request of both government and opposition whips, I draw the attention of honourable senators to rule 67(3). The effect of that rule is that, there being the house Order that the vote take place at 11:30 a.m., the Speaker would interrupt at 11:15 a.m. and cause the bells to be rung for 15 minutes. It is at the request of the whips on both sides that I am pointing that out to honourable members. Senator MacEachen?

Senator Murray: Do not stop now.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I was unaware of that loss of 15 minutes. I wanted to conclude in order to give another person who may want to speak 10 or 15 minutes. Because of that loss of 15 minutes from 11:15 a.m. onward, I think I should stop now, although this is really the best part of my speech.

Senator Murray: Come on. Don't leave us hanging like that.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, Senator Bolduc has mentioned in one of his speeches that I should know better, that I was well trained as an economist. He said I attended great universities, which I did, the University of Chicago and Cambridge, Massachusetts.

• (1110)

I studied under two professors who, at that time, were among the leading international trade theorists. One was Professor Domar at the University of Chicago and the other was Professor Kindelberger at MIT. They were leaders in their field. They put us through our paces. I absorbed all the belief about prosperity, that trade brings prosperity and begets prosperity.

I cannot say that I am totally an agnostic on the subject, because I cannot abandon my faith that easily. However, I am wavering in my belief. I am getting somewhat sceptical. The arguments made by Senator Murray are so reminiscent of the arguments made for the free trade agreement.

Honourable senators will remember that the Prime Minister said that the agreement would allow Canada to improve its welfare programs. He rashly promised that it would create 250,000 new jobs for young Canadians over and above current predictions. Surely, the Prime Minister would like to retract those words now. The opposite happened.

There was a professor in the U.S. who was a consultant to the Economic Council of Canada. He was asked to give a deep probe into all the studies that had been made on the impact of the free trade agreement. He made his probe. He came up with a worst- case scenario. He said the worst-case scenario for Canada would be "a minuscule 0.2 per cent of Canadian manufacturing employment".

People believed that. Then, we are confronted with the fact that in this recession, more than half the job losses in Ontario have been due to plant closings. Compare that with the figures for the 1982 recession, when less than 25 per cent of the layoffs were due to plant closings — plants gone forever.

If we look at the manufacturing industry in the United States and Canada, we will see that from 1989 to 1992, the volume of total manufacturing in the U.S. increased by 1.6 per cent. In Canada, it decreased by almost 12 per cent. That is why I get a bit sceptical about these claims.

I agree that, theoretically, free trade can lead to a more efficient allocation of resources and, on the principle of comparative advantage, greater total production. That would apply throughout the whole of the integrated North American market. Wealth would increase.

Then one talks about the gains from trade, which would be economic growth and more wealth. One then talks about the trade adjustments, a euphemistic term used in books. What the hell does it mean? It means job losses. It means salary cuts. It means all those bad effects that are gently passed over.

The big question for me is not the broad question Senator Murray poses but this: Who are the losers and who are the winners in the North American integrated market where, generally, wealth will increase? Will the investment shift from Canada to Mexico? Will Mexico become the export platform for automobile production rather than Canada? These are the questions. Who are the winners and who are the losers?

I want to end by quoting one item which, in a sense, establishes my point. In the United States in the 1980s, according to government statistics, the growth of manufacturing productivity and of the economy as a whole was higher than it had been in the 1970s. However, 44 per cent to 70 per cent of the increase in income went to the richest 1 per cent of all the families and lower middle income families, while the poor lost ground. Critics are saying that NAFTA will produce more of the same.

Economics leaves the debate at this impasse — a prediction of gains from overall growth but adjustments, potentially harming large groups, because its most basic premises have to do only with gross incomes. In economic equations, a dollar is a dollar, as long as it is adjusted for inflation, whether it accrues to the homeless person or to the millionaire.

That brings up the question raised by Dr. Keon when he asked, are we not ready to open our markets to build up the incomes of those poor Mexicans. Yes, of course, that is what free trade would do in a free society with free markets. But we know that in Mexico, Senator Keon, despite the fact that productivity in certain industries is equal to that in the United States and in Canada, the wages are one-tenth of ours. Why? Because trade unions are suppressed. Recently, there was a case where a trade union negotiated a wage increase which was nullified by the government in the interests of anti-inflation policy.

If I thought all these benefits would flow in this way, then it would be worth it. But I do know, honourable senators, one certain thing. The passage of the NAFTA will put downward pressure on the standards of living of workers in Canada and downward pressure on their incomes. No longer will the industrial towns of Ontario, based upon the automobile industry, be able to face ever-rising increases in real incomes because every operator will be looking down to Mexico in this new globalized economy. They will be saying, "Surely, I can do better down there with my plant than facing these tough negotiators in the CAW."

Those are the questions that I ask. They have not been answered yet. I think they have not been answered for the Canadian people.

We are again taking that leap of faith. Good luck.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Wilbert J. Keon: Senator MacEachen, I always thoroughly enjoy listening to you with your years of experience and so forth. When I sat closer to the Speaker's chair, I used to come to sit opposite you so that I could hear what you had to say. I enjoyed your speech this morning.

It seems to me there is a false premise in the arguments against free trade. I do not profess to understand the theories of global economy. However, it seems to me that the reason the Germans and the Japanese were so enormously successful during the last quarter century was because of their ability to trade and because their products were better than anyone else's. That was because they had better educated technologists, scientists and engineers than anyone else.

You use the automotive industry as an example. I do not believe that lack of protectionism was the problem with our automotive industry in Canada. The problem with the industry was that they were not building very good cars for a long time. When they had to start to compete with the Germans and Japanese, they pulled up their socks and came up with better products. Now they can compete with them.

• (1120)

Also I do not understand, if protectionism is a formula, why Russia has been such a disaster. I have been in eastern Europe many times. These are very well-educated people. They could not function because they could not interface with the rest of the world. I do not believe that free trade between Canada, the U.S. and Mexico is much of a threat, provided we emphasize the promotion of our educational, training, engineering and business systems. I would like the honourable senator to comment on why eastern Europe has been such a disaster compared to western Europe in the past 25 years.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to rule 67(1) and the order of this house, I must stop the proceedings to allow a 15-minute bell for the vote.

Senator Molgat: We would agree to a five-minute bell if that would permit another 10 minutes of debate.

Senator Kelly: No, honourable senators, we would like to stick to the rules.

Senator Hébert: Why? Give us the reason once in a while!

Senator Stewart: What has gone on here is transparent. There has been a deliberate effort by the government to eat up the time on the NAFTA bill.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Then why did you adjourn the debate last night?

Senator Corbin: Question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators. We will ring the bell then put the question.

Senator Corbin: You can't ring the bell without putting the question.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will not put the question because the question has been deferred, as agreed earlier. We will have a 15-minute bell, then I will put the question and we will vote.

Senator Corbin: Have we changed the rules again?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I believe the question before us is on the amendment.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: We greed that the legislation will be disposed of as of 11:30 a.m. The rules provide for a 15-minute bell unless there is agreement to shorten or lengthen it.

Senator Molgat: There need be no more reading of the question by the Speaker, I gather.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Not at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

CRIMINAL CODE
YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Erminie Cohen moved the third reading of Bill C-126, to amend the Criminal Code and the Young Offenders Act.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, Bill C-126 and Bill C-128 were dealt with in tandem in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. We had the same witnesses on each of the bills and questioned them all, including the minister. I will speak to both bills at the time of this motion, and suggest that these remarks be taken as read at the time of the motion on third reading of Bill C-128.

Honourable senators, my preliminary remarks apply to each of Bills C-126 and C-128. These are bills which have the distinction of dealing with the stalking of individuals, child abuse, child pornography, and other such unhappy subjects, all subjects worthy of our careful attention. Unfortunately, the bills also share the same history, which may be described as follows: The subject matter was suddenly recognized as being important to pre-election strategy. Second, the bills were hurriedly drafted and tabled in the other place with no consultation with those knowledgeable of the issues. Third, they were rushed through the other place with almost no discussion and in rapid order because of the support of the law-and-order groups in all parties. Four, they landed in the Senate with almost no time left before the end of the session. Five, all of the witnesses, all of them, opposed the bills and complained bitterly of no consultation and no time to study the bills and prepare their evidence.

The complaints concerning both bills were that their terms were vague, their language undefined, the field covered unnecessarily broad, inconsistency as to objective and result, and highly vulnerable to attack under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is true that the minister and his associates assured us that all is well, but they were alone in their assurances.

Bill C-126 leaves tremendous discretion in the judiciary because important items are not defined. It opens up substantial opportunities for mischievous charges to be laid with severe effects on reputations. It empowers a judge to banish even a first-time offender from society for life. Some witnesses believe that it covers picketing in a labour dispute. The Attorney General of Ontario says that the act will be unenforceable.

Bill C-128 is admitted to restrict the freedom of expression guaranteed by the Charter. The hope of the drafters is that the restriction is justified under Section 1 of our Charter. However, the Supreme Court of Canada has established some criteria for laws before they can be justified under the Charter.

While an expert from the Department of Justice assured us that he had applied these criteria to Bill C-128, it is hard to see any relationship between the tests established by the Oakes case and the provisions of this bill. There is no clarity of objective of the bill. There is no proven causal relationship between the proposed remedy and the harm identified. The bill goes much further than necessary to address the problem. The terms are vague and general, not in the pattern of the Criminal Code, and introduce a fundamental change in the law. The bill makes no distinction between explicit sex acts involving a seven-year-old and those involving a 17-year-old.

The bill creates a chill which will be felt by producers of television and movies and authors and producers of printed material. No creator of such products will even begin an artistic project without deep concern if children are to be involved.

Each librarian, film distributor, TV store owner, et cetera, will have to take inventory and examine each item. Simple possession of certain material without intent to commit any wrong could send you to jail.

Honourable senators, the government, faced with an opportunity to deal seriously with some of the most hurtful human behavioral aberrations, acted hastily and carelessly, without due consideration or consultation. The result is bad legislation which will cost heavily in dollars and pain while the social diseases they intend to attack continue unabated.

The committee voted, on division, to recommend that the bills be reported without amendment, but some of my colleagues believe that these bills should now be withdrawn so they can be redrawn after consultation and careful drafting. They should be reintroduced as soon as possible, that is, as soon as they have been properly redrafted.

If the government refuses to withdraw these bills, I recommend to honourable senators that both Bill C-126 and Bill C-128 be defeated in the Senate by rejecting motions for third reading .

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Cohen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Di Nino, that the bill be read the third time now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Molgat: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

CRIMINAL CODE
CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Duncan Jessiman moved the third reading of Bill C-128, to amend the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff (child pornography and corrupting morals).

He said: Honourable senators, I listened to the Honourable Senator Stanbury, and, as you might guess, I came to a much different conclusion as to what we should do with this bill.

As I said at second reading of the bill, this matter was before the public and before two commissions as long ago as 1984. The first commission, in 1984, was chaired by Mr. Robin F. Badgley. That commission included the following outstanding citizens of Canada: Herbert Allard, B.A., B.S.W., Senior Judge, Family Division, Provincial Court of Alberta; Norma McCormick, B.A., Director, Day Nursery, Health Sciences Centre in Winnipeg; Patricia Proudfoot,B.A., LL.B., LL.D., Judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia; Denyse Fortin, B.A., L.L.L., Director of Continuing Legal Education at the Quebec Board of Notaries; Doris Ogilvie, B.A.,LL.B.,LL.D., Former Deputy Judge of the Juvenile Court of New Brunswick; Quentin Rae-Grant, M.B.Ch.B., D.P.M., F.R.C.Psych., F.R.C.P.(C)., Psychiatrist-in-Chief at the Hospital for Sick Children; Paul-Marcel Gélinas, B.A., M.S.W., Director General of the Quebec Division of the Canadian Mental Health Association;

Lucie Pépin, R.N., President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, and Sylvia Sutherland, B.A., Commentator, CHEX Radio, Peterborough.

In 1984 they said:

> Despite the widespread purchase of pornography, there is also an urgent public concern about the open display of these materials and about their ready accessibility to young persons. There is considerable agreement in Canada that an age limit should be established in relation to the purchase of pornography and that pornographic materials should not be displayed in a manner which makes them accessible to children.

They went on to say:

> The prohibition against access by children to pornographic materials which the Committee recommends would apply to any visual materials which depict sexually explicit conduct...

The Fraser Commission of 1986 was chaired by Paul Fraser, Q.C., B.A., LL.B. Also on the commission were Susan Clark, a sociologist and Dean of Human and Professional Development; Mary Eberts, B.A., LL.B., LL.M, and a partner in the Toronto law firm of Tory, Tory; Jean-Paul Gilbert, B.A., M.A. (Criminology) and senior board member (Quebec Region) National Parole Board; John McLaren, a professor of law at the University of Calgary; Andrée Ruffo, B.A., B.Ed., LL.B., M.Ed; Joan Wallace, B.A., former chairperson, Commission of Inquiry into Part-time Work, Labour Canada.

These people said:

> In our view, it is necessary to provide direct criminal sanctions which would deter the use of children in the production of pornography. Sanctions against possession of pornography involving children are also, in our opinion, important because they attack the market for such materials and arguably will thereby reduce the incentive to produce it.

As I explained the other day when speaking on second reading of this bill, there was a case heard in the Supreme Court in June of 1991. Reasons for Judgment were rendered on February 27, 1992. I am referring to the case of Donald Victor Butler vs Her Majesty the Queen and the Attorney General of Canada, the Attorney General for Ontario, the Attorney General of Quebec, the Attorney General of British Columbia, the Attorney General for Alberta, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, Manitoba Association for Rights and Liberties, the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, Women's Legal Education and Action Fund and GAP, (Group Against Pornography) Inc.

[Senator Jessiman]

This was a unanimous judgment. Although the case dealt only with the law as it is today, Mr. Justice Sopinka and Mr. Justice Gauthier said that children were in a different position than adults. This judgment gave the government the opening and the conviction that the Supreme Court presently sitting in Ottawa would favour the legislation we have before us today.

There is a concern, as there was in the Butler case, that this legislation may infringe on the freedom of the press and the freedom of expression. In the Butler case, the court said that you have those freedoms, but there are certain limitations. Those limitations are set out in section 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Butler case is an example of how section 1 of the Charter limits the freedoms given in another section of the Charter.Therefore, I suggest that this legislation will definitely, to my mind, stand up to any court challenge.

Honourable senators, it is true that all of the witnesses who appeared before us at our last committee meeting were opposed to this bill. My understanding, however, is that the government side could have called several witnesses, but in fairness to those opposing the bill, the government allowed them, and them alone, to speak.

The witnesses — the CBC, for example — tried to convince our committee, and through the committee the Senate, that in passing this legislation it would be incumbent upon the CBC and others to prove that they fell within the exceptions of the bill. There are exceptions. Clause 163.1(4) reads:

> Every person who possesses any child pornography is guilty of...

But there is a saving section for a defence. Clause 163.1(6) reads:

> Where the accused is charged with an offence under subsection (2), (3) or (4), the court shall find the accused not guilty if the representation or written material that is alleged to constitute child pornography has artistic merit or an educational, scientific or medical purpose.

Counsel for the CBC indicated to us that this clause, by expressly saying the clause is a defence, puts the onus on the defence to prove artistic merit. They said, "How do we prove artistic merit?"

Honourable senators, I do not agree with that. The Attorney General did not agree with it. The Minister of Justice did not agree with it. The onus is not on those who say there is artistic merit; the onus is on the Crown. If a charge is laid, the Crown must prove beyond a reasonable doubt, as in any criminal case, that there is no artistic merit. If there is the least bit of doubt about artistic merit, the accused would be acquitted.

The minister and his staff indicated that they have much experience in dealing with cases involving the Charter, and in particular have been involved in the 200 Charter cases that have been considered to date. In only two of them has the Crown been wrong as far as the Charter is concerned. In the majority of cases, the legislation was held to be valid.

In one of those cases, a partner in the law firm with which I am associated took one of those two successful cases to the Supreme Court of Canada, having first lost in every other court in the land.

I am satisfied that this legislation is important for Canada. It is important for the children of Canada.

This legislation is not carved in stone. If improved legislation can be suggested, I am sure the government of the day — whichever government is in power — will listen.

Honourable senators, we must decide today: Do we do nothing and stay with the status quo? We have had this problem since 1984. We have had two commissions. I say the time is now. We must support this legislation, get it on the books, and enforce it.

Honourable senators, I urge you to vote in favour of this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, as I indicated when I spoke on Bill C-126, it is not my intention to repeat the speech in connection with Bill C-128. Anyone who is looking in Hansard for my comments on Bill C-128, should look at the debate on third reading of Bill C-126.

However, I wish to take a moment to say that, excepting Senator Jessiman's premise that there has been discussion of these matters for at least 10 years, I suspect he would agree that there was adequate time during that period for consultation with people who are knowledgeable of these issues. I also suspect he might agree that these bills should have been presented much earlier than six weeks before the end of the session.

Honourable senator, the shame of this legislation is that it was not tackled earlier and was not tackled seriously. As a result, we have two bills before us which should not be inscribed in the laws of Canada in their present form.

Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Jessiman that these bills are not carved in stone, but his former partner may very well earn a lot of money defending someone else, given the flaws in this legislation.

Senator Frith: Good objective; badly done.

Senator Molgat: It is window dressing.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

A BILL TO AMEND CERTAIN PETROLEUM-RELATED ACTS IN RESPECT OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS AND TO CONFIRM THE VALIDITY OF A CERTAIN REGULATION

THIRD READING

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton moved the third reading of Bill C-106, to amend certain petroleum-related Acts in respect of Canadian ownership requirements and to confirm the validity of a certain regulation.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I should like to make a brief comment on this bill to indicate my opposition to the bill.

Senator Comeau, in his second reading speech, urged all senators to lend their support to the passage of this bill. I certainly cannot do that because I find it regrettable that a measure is now being proposed to remove the necessity of any Canadian ownership whatsoever of Canada's frontier lands.

We have already had a discussion on the bill that passed just recently in which I argued the importance of maintaining some Canadian control over the resources of Canada. The bills that are being repealed provide that there be at least 50-per-cent Canadian ownership of Canada's vast frontier lands. Now, in the last moments of the government's nine-year mandate, it is repealing this particular provision and saying that it is appropriate in the future that all of Canada's frontier lands and their development be open for foreign ownership. We know what the result will be.

I have never been a passionate Canadian nationalist, as have others in both my party and in the party sitting opposite. They have been more vigilant than I have ever been in asserting Canadian sovereignty in every conceivable situation. Though I was never as passionate as they were, I was always conscious of the necessity of maintaining some Canadian identity and some Canadian ownership. I always thought that it was appropriate for Canada to maintain this level of Canadian ownership in the frontier lands.

This is all being removed now. I do not like it. It reverses a policy that was approved and effected by myself and the House of Commons. Very little defense has been given for it except to say that there is no activity now on the frontier lands. That is true, because the system of support that was provided for the development of the frontier lands has been eliminated entirely.

I will not repeat the arguments I made several years ago in which I described the gradual decrease of offshore activity because of the removal of the incentive program.

It was understood that development of the frontier lands would not be easy; that it may not always attract total private investment; and that therefore, in the interest of Canadian identity and Canadian control, it was appropriate for public participation in the form of incentives. That happened on the East Coast of Canada when we had considerable drilling activity. But it is now gone. Senator Comeau gives this as an argument why we should pass the bill.

I regret that the bill has been introduced. It is a backward step. I echo the nervousness that Senator Molgat expressed on his second reading intervention in which he said this was a second-best solution. I agree with that and I should like to say that I cannot support the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

RIDEAU HALL

June 23, 1993

Mr. Speaker,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Beverley McLachlin, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in her capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 23rd day of June, 1993, at 1:15 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Government Notices of Motions:

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before proceeding to make the adjournment motion, and because we are adjourning today until much later this year, unless we are convened during the summer, the next time we meet formally will be with a new government and as part of a new Parliament. It is appropriate, therefore, to make a few remarks and to express words of appreciation to the personnel of the Senate, who have been so supportive and cooperative since we started this session last September. I am referring to the Clerk and Table Officers and their staff; the Black Rod and his staff; the translators; the Law Clerk and his associates; the Debates and Journals Branches; the committee clerks and their staff; the staff of senators; and the security staff and messengers.

• (1200)

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I would like to thank all those whom we see only from time to time or even not at all. Unfortunately, there are many people we do not know as well as our staff, but we realize that each and every one of them is personally and enthusiastically dedicated to making our life easier. Therefore, on behalf of all my colleagues, I want to say thank you to the entire Senate staff and wish them a good summer.

[English]

I have left mention of the Pages for last, only because four of them are leaving us today and I would like to recognize them individually. They are Steve Bevington from Ottawa, Tyson Dahlem from Saskatoon, and Sonya Han and Pat McIntyre who are both from Alberta.

Steve is entering his third year at Carleton University in the School of Public Administration, and I understand he hopes to run for political office. I trust that he has not been too discouraged by some of the scenes he has witnessed here.

Tyson is entering his third year at the University of Ottawa. In the past year, he has been very involved in counselling students at his residence.

Sonya is also entering third year at Ottawa University. After she completes her B.A. she intends to attend law school.

Finally, Pat has just graduated from Carleton with a bachelor's degree and, like too many graduates, is in search of employment.

To all of them in particular, and to all the Pages in general, thank you and all best wishes.

I want to thank all colleagues on both sides for their patience and understanding as government legislation has moved through the various stages to Royal Assent. I particularly want to thank Senator Molgat with whom I feel I have an excellent working relationship.

Senator Gigantès: He is a saint.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: He is not a St. Augustine, however.

Senator Gigantès: St. Augustine was a Tory.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: In the past few months the Senate has functioned reasonably smoothly, and that would not have been possible without his excellent cooperation. At the same time he defended his colleagues' and his party's position. I would thank him personally, and wish him and his colleagues all the very best during the summer. Hopefully we will all be here together in the fall.

[Translation]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is a pleasure, both for me and my colleagues, to reiterate what was said by the Deputy Leader of the Government. We often forget all the people working behind the scenes, the people we don't see, who often work at odd hours, since we do not necessarily work from 9 to 5. I don't want to enumerate all the people my colleague has already mentioned, but I want them to realize that we really appreciate what they do. Of course, it is easier in the case of people we see every day, because we can talk to them, and I think they realize how much we appreciate them. However, I am thinking particularly of our invisible helpers.

[English]

My colleague mentioned the Pages who are leaving us and discussed some of their particular accomplishments. I would like to touch on somewhat different accomplishments that I was surprised to find out about them. Senators may be interested in knowing some of the activities they engage in outside their academic lives.

Steve Bevington, whom my honourable friend indicates is looking forward to a political career, has already had a substantial political career as a young political activist with positions in the party he has chosen. I think he has made an error in his choice, but apart from that, he has chosen a party, and I commend him for it. More people should belong to a political party.

Tyson Dahlem is from Saskatoon and, as a westerner, I have a special interest in other westerners. His record indicates he has enjoyed many interesting pursuits such as having been a hockey referee and, to my surprise, a glider pilot.

Sonya Han is another westerner from Edmonton. Apart from being a very good student, Sonya is an accomplished cellist who plays in an orchestra in Edmonton.

Pat McIntyre, who is also a westerner from Grande Cache, Alberta could qualify as a conservationist. Prior to coming here, among other jobs, he had one which involved cleaning up old mine sites, reseeding them and planting trees.

To these young people, I want to say how much we appreciate the work they do. I hope that their period here has not disillusioned them about politics, but, rather, will encourage them to participate more in the future.

My honourable friend opposite was very kind in his comments about me and I must reciprocate. In our dealings, although we have not always agreed, honourable senators will have observed that, on all occasions, our relationship has been very cordial and direct. We have to operate in this system on the basis of understandings, and he and I have had that.

I do not necessarily tell him everything. However, there is a clear understanding I try to adhere to, and that is, never to tell him anything which is not correct, and he does the same. That is the only way it can work. I have appreciated the relationship we have had.

I wish all my colleagues on both sides a very pleasant summer. As my honourable friend has said, when we return there will be a new government and a new Parliament. I would like to tell my friends opposite that we have taken good care of all the furniture. We have kept these seats warm and they will be here for them when we return. I am sure they will feel very comfortable sitting over on this side.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen: Honourable senators, I do not rise to compete in this session of unexpected conviviality. I would like to remind myself and others that the Senate committees can still meet even though there is an adjournment. I mention that because I hope it will be possible for the Foreign Affairs committee to meet at least once or twice during the summer months to hear ongoing reports from the chief negotiator, Mr. Weekes, who is still working on the side agreements in connection with the free trade agreement. He appeared once before the committee and I believe it would be appropriate for the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman to take the responsibility of ensuring that the committee is convened to hear Mr. Weekes at an appropriate time.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to add my two bits of thanks to the people who make our task easier.

I am sure that it was not deliberate, but when Senator Lynch-Staunton referred to the translators, rightfully so, he did not include the interpreters.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I meant both.

Senator Corbin: I was sure that was the case. I think special thanks are owed to the interpreters. They are so important that, in their absence, everything stops dead in its tracks around this place. Interpreters are discreet people. They attend our caucus meetings. Never have I heard that any one of them has ever spilled the beans with regard to caucus secrets. They are very important people. I tip my hat to them, and thank them for their excellent work.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF NEW SENATOR FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, as we end the session, and as a senator from British Columbia, I ask whether we will have a colleague from British Columbia appointed sometime today, later this week, or not at all.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think my friend can exclude the possibility of not at all. That is the only assurance I can give him for the moment. I had hoped and expected there might be an appointment from British Columbia before we rose for the summer months. If this has not happened, I trust it will happen within a very short time.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CONTINUATION OF COMMITTEE STUDY OF LAMONT-SPENCER CASE DURING SENATE ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): If I may, on the point that Senator MacEachen raised regarding committee meetings during the adjournment, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has before it the Lamont-Spencer question. I realize that, with the recent publicity regarding the passports found in Nicaragua, there may be some hesitation in the minds of certain Canadians. However, I think it is important that the study continue, and that we find out exactly what the situation is. Part of this family has roots in Manitoba, so I have a particular interest in the matter. I do hope the committee will be able to continue its work.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), moved:

THAT when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 28, 1993, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EXCISE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND——MOTION FOR SECOND READING NEGATIVED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, for the second reading of Bill S-14, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.— (Honourable Senator Kelly)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It was moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hébert, that this bill be read the second time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): On division.

Motion negatived, on division.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before calling committee reports, I suggest that we start with Items 4 and 5 under that heading, which have to do with the Senate policy on harassment in the workplace. These reports have been on our Order Paper for some time. They are extremely important as an issue, and I think it would be appropriate at this time to start discussion on these matters so that we can dispose of them one way or the other.

FORTY-NINTH AND FIFTIETH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, for the adoption of the Forty-Ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (policy on harassment in the workplace), presented in the Senate on June 15, 1993.

And resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, for the adoption of the Fiftieth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (schedules to the policy on harassment), tabled in the Senate on June 15, 1993.

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I have a few words to say about these reports, if I may. I have to acknowledge that a great deal of work has gone into developing these policies, and progress has been made. However, I do not believe that the policies as they stand now are appropriate for the Senate to adopt.

My first concern relates to the fact that, under the rubric of harassment, we have harassment, sexual harassment, discrimination, abuse of authority, and malicious complaint. I accept that all of these are related issues and that people can find connections between one and the other, but that is also my concern. Simply put, by lumping all of these policies together under one, people are likely to see a complaint under discrimination or under harassment or under abuse of authority as one of sexual harassment.

We would be better served if we had not necessarily different, but separate, policies on these rather than lumping them together. We have already seen situations where actions have taken place that relate to harassment, and immediately the assumption is that it is an issue of sexual harassment.

Second, I am concerned about the abuse of authority section that we have here. The difficulty with the abuse of authority section is the need to differentiate between the abuse of authority and routine grievances. There are, again, situations that have arisen where, on the face of it, there would appear to be a routine grievance. Someone has a problem with their supervisor; they do not agree with a decision that has been made, and they see a remedy under the harassment policy. I think this might become a significant club, or a large weapon, if you will, that can be misdirected.

I am also concerned with the policy, inasmuch as when honourable senators review it, they will notice that there is no schedule of remedies anywhere in the policy.

I am very concerned about the definitions. For those of you who have the policy in front of you, I would encourage you to take a look at some of the definitions. In a nutshell, one definition is used to define another definition. Harassment is used to define abuse of authority, and abuse of authority is used to define harassment.

The definition for abuse of authority is:

> improper conduct that meets the definition of harassment and that is an abuse of power and authority inherent in a position held.

If you go back to harassment, the definition given is that harassment is:

> improper conduct that intimidates, threatens, blackmails, or coerces a person, or demeans or belittles a person towards whom it is directed and might reasonably be expected to offend or humiliate and to be unwelcome by that person. The conduct may be done on a one-time basis or in a continuing series of incidents, by word or by act, including a communication, a gesture, a display, a behaviour or a touch. Sexual harassment, discrimination, abuse of authority and making a malicious complaint can be considered forms of harassment.

If we go down through each of the definitions, we find that one defines the other, in each case.

Thus, you are left at the end of the day without a clear definition as to what the policy relates to.

• (1220)

Honourable senators, the committee has made real progress. This is a worthwhile policy to develop although its development has been rushed. There has been a sincere effort to come forward with a policy. There is a sincere concern by some senators that, for the next six months, we will go without a policy; and that it would be better to put this policy into effect. If we lend our support to this policy today, it will come into effect immediately.

I would argue that we already have a staff policy. As any complaint may relate to senators, they have recourse to the Human Rights Commission. It would be preferable for us to spend another few hours in committee trying to clean up these problems, in particular those to do with the definitions, before we put it into effect; otherwise we will go ahead for six months with a policy that I believe is clearly flawed.

I believe many who read the definitions will come away scratching their heads and saying, "Have we really put that into effect? Do we really want to leave it in place for six months until we can come back to tidy it up?"

I know there are some members of the committee who believe, and they hold their beliefs sincerely, that it is important that the Senate be on record as having a new policy.

I argue that we will be better served staying with the policy we have today, even if it takes a long period of time to develop a new one. However, I do not think it will take long to straighten this matter out. If we go ahead with these definitions, we may well find ourselves, over the course of the summer, having people use these definitions, or try to use these definitions, which could result in a serious miscarriage.

Consequently, honourable senators, I move that these reports be returned to the committee.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Kenny, seconded by the Honourable Senator Gigantès, that the reports be returned to the committee.

[Translation]

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, I don't mean that certain comments by Senator Kenny are unfounded. When we tabled the two reports, the first one, which constitutes the policy as such, was tabled for adoption. The second report was tabled as a background paper on how the policy would be applied, in the knowledge that throughout the process — and I hope there will not be many instances where we will have to apply the policy — some adjustments will be necessary. That is why the policy was tabled in two parts: The policy as such, plus the definitions, procedures and background information. It was tabled in this House for the guidance of honourable senators and in order to provide some flexibility for any adjustments that may be necessary.

I would like to thank all senators who contributed to this debate by putting many hours of their time at a number of meetings on many occasions during the past two years. Senator Kenny tells us there is a policy for staff and employees and that it includes a possible recourse to the Human Rights Commission. Senator Kenny, you know, and this was explained to us in great detail, it is extremely difficult for an employee who is strictly dependent on her employer, the senator, to complain to the Human Rights Commission. According to the Commission, only very few such cases are brought before it. We wanted an in-house procedure that would make it easier to deal with the occasional case of harassment. I believe this point was made several times.

Furthermore, we should not forget that the policy not only protects employees and senators' staff but also the senators themselves. There have been a few, fortunately rare, instances where employees complained of harassment and were unable to substantiate their claims. Since there was no policy at the time, the result was that rumours were rife, without any protection for the person concerned — in this case, the senator.

Honourable senators, we could go on, but we have already spent quite a lot of time on the subject. As an institution of the Parliament of Canada, I think we should adopt this policy, in the knowledge that any policy may, at some point, have to be adjusted and reviewed, if necessary. I think this is urgent. I would point out to Senator Kenny that this policy was adopted unanimously. We agreed to stand the debate, to let you express your position. I am sorry, but I would ask my colleagues to reject your motion and to adopt this policy.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, one of the points raised by Senator Lavoie-Roux, and it is an important one, was not addressed at all in these reports. It is this: If an employee who works for a senator, and thus depends on the senator's good will, files a complaint, the employee is in a very delicate situation, because if the senator decides to get rid of the him or her, what happens then? He or she runs a risk by filing a complaint.

At one of our committee meetings it was explained that if she went to the Human Rights Commission, where the case might drag on for years, the employee would be in a very uncomfortable and stressful situation and perhaps be without a job for some time.

We must deal with this problem, but the report fails to address it. It was suggested at one of the meetings that perhaps arrangements should be made to put the employee on indefinite leave of absence with pay, so that he or she is no longer working for the senator against whom the complaint was filed. That is the problem, and that is the solution. This was not really addressed. We are simply making rules for their own sake, not to deal with the real problem. That is why I support Senator Kenny, when he says that this report should be sent back to committee — back to the drawing board. This particular problem has not been addressed. We must have a policy that says what is to be done with this person until the matter is settled.

Senator Lavoie-Roux: Honourable senators, the point raised by Senator Gigantès was discussed several times. I agree this is a real problem, and I will tell you why it exists. The main reason is that senators' secretaries are not public servants but are employed by the senators, so that the senators, as you said, are free to hire or fire a secretary as they wish. This is a problem in itself. Even without a policy on harassment, there are many people who wonder whether senators' secretaries should, for the purposes of employment, come under the sole authority of the senator. I think we have a serious problem here, but it seems it is a rather delicate matter. However, we shall see what happens, and in any case secretaries will be better protected. They will not feel vulnerable with the Human Rights Commission as their only recourse. The problem you raised is real, but it is related to the fact that senators say: We hire our secretaries and we fire them. Personally, I think this should be changed, although honourable senators may not agree, and I don't want to discuss this today, to ensure that they are protected and that, if they are between jobs for one or two years, they are not in limbo.

Senator Gigantès: That is precisely the point. Why are we not addressing this point? It is not necessary to address it by saying senators can no longer hire their staff as they wish. We are only addressing the problem of a member of the staff that has alleged such behaviour on the part of her employer, a senator. What happens to that member of the staff until the issue is cleared up? That is the problem. We can take care of that problem without putting an end to the practice of personal suitability, which applies to deputy ministers and ministers. You do not ask either ministers or deputy ministers to hire a secretary they do not find personally suitable.

If a secretary or other employee feels they have been ill-treated by the senator, we should provide for them a kind of side line with pay until the allegations are settled. That is the main problem. Otherwise, if that problem did not exist, we could go to the Human Rights Commission and not have this stuff at all. Senator Lavoie-Roux is not on the right road when she says that the problem is that these are employees of senators themselves. They can continue to be employees of the senators themselves, but they can be given a protective niche, another status until the allegations are settled. That is what we must address.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I think we should recognize that a lot of people have done a lot of work on this policy, not only staff but, in particular, Senator Kenny and Senator Doyle, who spent many hours reviewing this policy. Many hours have been spent by the committee on this policy. Senator Lavoie-Roux has suggested that this is the seventh draft. It is probably the seventh published draft, as there were others that were not published.

The issue is whether we are on a quest for a perfect policy or whether we should show leadership by, at least, putting into place an adequate harassment policy, which the majority of the committee believes we now have, so that not only employees but also senators will have some direction on how to remedy the situation if an accusation is raised. I do not want to abdicate that leadership necessary to make decisions. We have a good document, although it is not perfect. I do not think perfection can be achieved in this world. I urge my colleagues to vote for this policy, put it on the books and show some leadership.

Hon. A. Raynell Andreychuk: Honourable senators, I simply want to support this policy and support the committee that has worked on this matter for a considerable time. We can use the Canadian Human Rights Commission as a policy, but I also believe, as Senator Di Nino has said, that we have to have some leadership here and to put a policy in place. I am a new senator, but have already had four opportunities to comment on this draft. I believe the time has come to institute a policy.

We have the summer to reflect. When we come back we can introduce any amendment we deem necessary. The best policies usually start at some point and are perfected as they go along. We do not get the perfect policy from the start. That is the kind of leadership that is necessary from this body. I urge even those who support the amendment to withdraw it at this time so that the Senate can be seen to be supporting this policy. I urge honourable senators to bring forward their amendments to the committee at a later date, where I think all of us would be pleased to deal with the concerns in written form.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I am not and have never been a member of this committee, but I have understood from conversations within our caucus and with senators on the other side that this matter has been under discussion for a long time. I know how long the committee has struggled with it. Unfortunately, I think this is a case where, despite how hard and conscientiously members have worked, the document is simply not adequate as a foundation for putting this policy in place. I say that after reviewing the definitions themselves.

I agree absolutely with Senator Kenny that the definitions are simply not definitive. They are confusing. I am sorry to say that they are dreadful as definitions go and this represents the foundation of the policy we want to put in place. I think it would be totally wrong to start with a foundation that is absolutely inadequate. None of the sections can be construed by any one in any logical way, if complaints were brought under any one of them. It is difficult to understand how they differentiate from each other.

I am sorry to say that I think these two reports should be withdrawn. We should start the work again with a new Parliament and new committee in place. I would support any effort to see that the work goes on as quickly as possible and that the policy is put in place as quickly as possible. I agree with the chairman, Senator Andreychuk and Senator Di Nino that we need this kind of leadership and this kind of policy. I am sorry, I cannot support these two reports.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, there is another point which should be considered: Any of these cases might end up in court. We have lawyers in this chamber, good lawyers. Let them look at these definitions. They will tell you that the way they are phrased, they are likely to help a miscarriage of justice. They are likely to make the eventual role of the court much more difficult. They are likely to be a mess.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): We are not writing criminal law.

Senator Gigantès: If it ends up in court, as it might, the antecedents —

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if there is any suggestion of an infraction of the law, you call the cops. We are talking about a proper policy to govern the relations between senators and their employees.

There are various steps before calling the cops. The steps as described are amateur and they would not stand up to a lawyer's examination.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, it seems that the hangup with respect to the policy surrounds the definitions. As someone has just said, we do have some pretty good legal and drafting expertise in our midst. I am not suggesting that the members of the committee on internal economy do not have the capacity to do a proper job, not at all. However, these are matters that bind eventually. If the policy is flawed, I would think that the whole matter, particularly the section dealing with definitions, should be sent to the committee on legal and constitutional affairs. They are our in-house experts on these matters.

Therefore, I would like to move, in amendment to Senator Kenny's proposal:

> THAT we strike out the word "committee", and replace it with "to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs".

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, you will recall that we are dealing with two matters. We are dealing with a policy which is set out and which is terribly important. We are dealing with a second report which deals with definitions that are there as guidelines, for the use of the policy. They are not written as law, nor is the policy written as law. The only reference to law is that, if we reach a certain point, the thing falls out of the hands of the Senate and goes to the police. Then we have no role to play whatsoever.

Also, at any time, the matter can go from here to the Human Rights Commission. The lawyers who drafted this law consulted with the Human Rights Commission about both the policy and the definitions. It was with their advice that the language about which you are now complaining was obtained.

Much was made of the fact we already have a policy. Yes, we have a policy for our employees. We do not have a policy for senators. While the senators can say, yes, we can go to the commission, so can any citizen of this country go to the commission; so can our employees. However, we find it necessary to have rules of our own for dealing with them. If we do not, and when I take cases to the commission, I would vouch that the first thing the commissioner will say is, "Why have you not drafted a policy of your own? You have been trying long enough."

Senator Gigantès: Senators, surely this should not be a partisan matter. It should not be regarded as something that was done by a committee in which the Tories have a majority. It should not be regarded as something that deserves to be passed simply because so many hours were spent on it. It is like going in a restaurant and finding that the food is not good. The waiter says, "We worked for hours on this. How can you say it is not good?"

If you think it is so good, what is the objection to sending it to the legal and constitutional affairs committee which has expertise about drafting and will ensure that what we put in this policy and definitions is not likely to cause a legal mess at any later stage? What is wrong with that?

Senator Di Nino: Obviously we do not agree.

[Senator Corbin]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I want to take a few minutes on this subject. I appreciate the first point that Senator Gigantès has made. It is a matter that affects every senator and every senator is naturally sensitive and concerned about the drafting and the implementation of such a policy. In that sense it is not a government or a partisan matter. I appreciate that.

Having said that, it is a matter which has been worked on for two years by our colleagues on this committee.

More than that, I want to remind honourable senators that most enlightened private sector corporations have a policy dealing with harassment in the workplace. The House of Commons has a policy dealing with harassment in the workplace relating to its employees. There is also a well-understood procedure for dealing with a matter when a member of the House of Commons is affected or complained against.

We have a policy here relating to our employees only. There is no policy, there is no process, in this place to govern a situation in which the conduct of a senator is complained of. That is what we lack.

This is not a matter of alleged criminal conduct. As I said in an exchange with Senator Gigantès a few moments ago, whenever there is a case of alleged criminal conduct, you call the cops. It is not a matter where the policy is applicable. It is a matter where the criminal law is applicable. Nothing in the policy can be seen, as Senator Gigantès suggested, as steps preliminary to a criminal charge being laid. These are two separate matters. This is harassment of various kinds and abuse of authority in the workplace, which would not be covered by the criminal law.

My appeal to honourable senators is the following. We do not have a policy as it relates to complaints against honourable senators. You need the policy to protect your employees. You need the policy for the guidance and the protection of your senior staff. You need the policy to protect yourselves. We need the policy to protect ourselves. There is no process. There is no policy as it affects us at the moment.

If an employee of this place comes to the administration of this place with a complaint that he or she is being harassed in one way or another by an honourable senator, what steps is the administrator to take? Does anybody know? Does anybody know what the management of this place is to do when confronted with such a situation?

What happens when an employee comes to the administration and says, "Do not tell anybody. Do not tell my senator, but I am being harassed. Get me out of there. Get me another job. Put me on another track." Fine. Administrators are sympathetic people. They will want to accommodate that kind of situation. However, is that not doing an injustice to the senator, not to inform that senator that he or she has been complained against?

What is the responsibility of the administrator, who, as we stand here, has no role, responsibility or right to investigate? What is the responsibility of that administrator in terms of sending a new person into that senator's office? Is the administrator bound to whisper in the ear of the new person that his or her predecessor had complained about the senator?

There is a blank page facing our senior staff, and there is a blank page facing the leadership of our parties on this matter.

The policy that is suggested here is not all that radical or different from policies that exist in other places, private and public. Senator Doyle tells me that some of the definitions have come from the documents of the Human Rights Commission.

It may not be perfect, but we need to have a policy. We need a process for the good of this institution, for the protection of our employees, for the protection of our senior staff, and finally, I assure you, for the protection of honourable senators.

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I agree that we should not approach this in a partisan or nastily argumentative context — trying to prove that some are right and others wrong. However, I believe the various positions should be clear on the record. These positions have been clarified by the interventions made, including the one just made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Nevertheless, I hope honourable senators will understand why I think it is important, in the context of what has just been said, that our position be clear.

We have no quarrel with the fact that we need a policy. Every reason put forward by Senator Murray as a reason for a policy is a good one. However, some of the argument seems to be that we need a policy so badly that we should accept this one; that we should accept any policy. We have been told, "Don't wait for perfection, don't ask for improvement, take this policy just because we need a policy".

It is difficult to answer part of that argument. In fact, there is no answer to that part, namely, we do need a policy, but do we need any policy, no matter how bad?

In the context that we agree we should have a policy, our position is not that we are looking for perfection in draftsmanship. We agree that the committee has worked hard, but to agree that we need a policy and that the committee has worked hard does not lead to the conclusion that, therefore, we must accept any policy that was produced by such long, hard work.

As I said, we are not looking for perfection in draftsmanship. We are not looking for draftsmanship that meets some alleged standards of the criminal law, or even of the civil statutory law.

All we are suggesting — and we are not suggesting it in an attempt to disprove anything or to prove anyone wrong — is that, on a plain reading of it, it meets what I think should be our standard, and that is, very simply, a policy that is so worded as to be capable of sensible and practicable implementation.

We do not think that this policy is so worded. I think we will regret passing it if — and I hope this does not happen — there is ever a case put forward to which this policy has to be applied. We should all hope, for every good reason, that there are no complaints. However, having read this policy many times, we should all hope that we do not receive any complaints under this policy because I believe there is a very good chance that any senators who are the subject of a complaint under the policy as it is now written will be very sorry that we passed it and, indeed, will not know what hit them.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I should point out that there are two amendments, the second one by Senator Corbin and the first one by Senator Kenny. We will deal with the second amendment first.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

SPECIAL STUDY ON DRAFT REGULATIONS—REPORT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the thirty-fourth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce (special study on draft regulations), tabled in the Senate on June 21, 1993. — (Honourable Senator Sylvain).

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FIFTY-FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fifty-first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (policy on Senators' travel expenses), presented in the Senate on June 21, 1993. — (Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux).

Hon. Thérèse-Lavoie-Roux moved the adoption of the report?

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this, it is true, is a report of a government-dominated committee, but it has its supporters, opponents and doubters among the senators, and they are not grouped on party lines. Opinion in our caucus reflects this heterogeneity and our members are free to take individual stands, free of any party line. However, I am bound to say that our party, as a party, does not support it.

Accordingly, speaking for myself, I am supportive of the principle but a doubter on the detail and timing because I am — and have been for 15 years — a supporter of House of Commons and Senate parity on the flat expense allowance, including, if appropriate, as some have often suggested, any adjustments for non-attendance.

I am told that the allowance, which is now some $10,000 for senators and better than $20,000 for members of the House of Commons, was at one time the same for senators and members but it was doubled for members of the House of Commons on the basis that members of the House of Commons have constituency obligations that members of the Senate do not. That reasoning, of course, no longer exists because members of the House of Commons are paid separately to support their constituency operations.

Still speaking for myself, I do not think senators should have less than 50 per cent of the allowance given to members of the House of Commons. Hotels and restaurants, as far as I have seen, do not give senators a 50-per-cent discount on accommodation and meals.

This initiative on the part of the committee attempts to remedy this. That is the principle I support. It is the right to claim actual expenses with receipts up to a fixed ceiling. Of course, it will be perceived and described as an increase in the allowance, which it is not. I would invite fair-minded Canadians to ask themselves whether the last time they claimed for actual expenses incurred and received payment for them they thought they were getting a raise.

Because of my circumstances, I do not and should not qualify for the expense compensation provided for here. I say "I should not qualify", because I do not have the expenses many of my colleagues have, they not living in Ottawa as I do with my designated area less than 80 kilometres from here.

However, I understand why they feel entitled to payment for their expenses.

If there is to be a standing vote, I will abstain.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is leadership.

Senator Frith: Yes, and it is precisely for that reason I would abstain. I do not want to give anyone on our side the impression that they must follow my position. I am not making this intervention as the leader of my party in this place, but it is because of my position that I will abstain.

I would treat it, then, as a less-than-satisfactory, interim and temporary step, but I will abstain because of my role here, and because I continue to hope for full expense allowance parity with the House of Commons.

If the present Leader of the Government in the Senate is correctly reported by the Canadian press, he thinks that should be attended to right after the next election, when his support as Leader of the Opposition will be most welcome.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I, too, should like to take a moment to intervene in this debate. First, I should like to correct some of the reported misconception about this issue.

I have a couple of articles from local newspapers. One, in particular, calls this a "$6,000 Tax-free Bonus". Another newspaper "lists the facts about senatorial compensation". They are certainly correct about the allowance of $64,000 and change, and the tax-free allowance of some $10,000 but they also include — if not specifically then by suggestion — a comment suggesting that the research and office expense is "another grab by senators". They also talk about a "modern gym and instructor". I still do not know where it is and I have not met one of my colleagues yet who knows where it is. They talked about $6 hair cuts and $3 for shampoos and things of this nature. I have yet to get a haircut, shampoo or have a massage in Ottawa, even at these special rates.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: At what rates do you give massages?

Senator Di Nino: I do not give massages, thank you. I cannot afford them either.

The press also talked about "new offices with private bathrooms". Will someone please lead me there, because I neither have a new office nor a private bathroom. They also talk about cellular phones, "faxes for their homes", and so on. This is total nonsense. They also talk about a $1.5-million budget for foreign travel. In the three years that I have been here I have not been out of the country at the expense of the Senate.

The last point they mention is a $15,000 trip anywhere in the world upon retirement. I wish someone would inform me of that so that, perhaps, when and if I retire I will be eligible for that. I will decide whether or not I want to take it then. One of the articles also talks about going back to sleep for 70 days a year.

Honourable senators, I am bringing these comments to your attention because they are insulting. I have come here, hopefully at public service, to try to do a job for Canadian taxpayers and, particularly, for the constituents of the Province of Ontario. I am offended by these insinuations.

I, like most of my colleagues, attend most of the sittings, which would be approximately 70 days a year; and I, like most of my colleagues, come to Ottawa to attend Senate committee meetings. I also have an office with a staff member and I come here on a regular basis to conduct business as usual. The office does not close when the Senate is not sitting.

• (1320)

There are many public issues and public interests which bring me back to Ottawa on a regular basis when the Senate is not sitting. I suggest that the 70 days a year is certainly misinformation, if not worse than that.

This issue is not at all complex. The policy change on Senate travel expenses deals with the basic, necessary living expenses for senators working on behalf of the Senate and on Senate business.

For some of us, the need for additional expenses may not be as great. Let me give you one example. It would be easy for me to be self-righteous and oppose this measure, but I will not. I live in Toronto, an easy commuting distance from Ottawa. Most of my colleagues on both sides of the house do not have the option of flying home at 10 p.m. after a sitting is concluded, necessitating an additional day of expenses for accommodation and meals. I have done some calculations and the $10,000 allowance that I presently receive is not quite, but nearly, adequate to cover my out-of-pocket expenses for accommodation, meals, taxis and incidentals. For many of my colleagues, particularly those who have to be here those extra days when I can go home at night, this is not the case.

Contrary to public opinion, most senators are not wealthy. Let us be clear that this issue is not a partisan one. The media has painted it as a $6,000 grab by senators. That is absolutely false. All senators will not be claiming this allowance or any part of it. We are dealing here with fair and proper expense reimbursement for members of this chamber while working on behalf of the Senate. The expense is not automatic; it must be applied for with appropriate receipts and is subject to maximums. Some senators may submit a request for reimbursement, some will not. I gather many would not.

Honourable senators, for these reasons I have decided not to oppose this measure. If a vote is called, I will abstain from voting as at this time I will not be affected either way by the passage or defeat of this report.

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, I would like to add a few words to the debate. The principle here is whether senators, like all other salaried employees in either the private or the public sector, are entitled to be fully reimbursed for their travelling expenses to Ottawa or wherever they have to travel to in their jobs.

It has been apparent for a number of years that the present allowance no longer fully reimburses all senators, particularly those who attend sittings regularly, those who travel to attend committee hearings at times when the Senate does not sit, or those who live in areas where the travel connections add days to their trips to Ottawa.

The committee report seeks to correct this imbalance. It makes available a maximum amount of up to $6,000 that can be drawn upon, upon submission of receipts, and then only for accommodation and only in Ottawa. This is not a bonus; it is not an increase in salary; it is a remedy for an unfair condition.

I do not feel at all embarrassed by this committee report which seeks to obtain for senators fair and equitable treatment, to place senators on the same basis as other Canadians whose jobs oblige them to travel.

When it was first discussed, it received very strong support from both sides of this chamber. Now that the media is making its usual comments, the resolve here may be weakening.

I would urge senators to vote for this report, if they feel it is just to be reimbursed for their out-of-pocket expenses. If senators feel that many senators should simply accept being out of pocket, then by all means they vote against it. That is what we should be voting on, not media reports.

If we do not have the courage of our convictions, how then can we expect any respect either from the media or from Canadians?

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate Senator Lavoie-Roux for bringing this report to the Senate and asking for debate here today. I feared at one point that an effort would be made to carry this proposal to fruition without a proper discussion by the whole Senate.

For a long time I have objected to this particular approach to the problem of expenses. Here I differ from Senator Sylvain. We already receive a tax-free allowance for expenses. That allowance is not accountable. Now we are taking a second, a different approach to the problem of expenses: Up to $6,000 for certain expenses, with receipts.

The effect of that $6,000 is that senators will be reimbursed twice, in so far as the $6,000 overlaps the $10,000. It may be that the total is correct, or it may be that the total is inadequate. However, I object to the notion that we are to use two different approaches to the problem of senatorial expenses. Combining these two techniques may be acceptable to the members of the House of Commons. I do not think it is acceptable in the Senate. The proposal now before us is indefensible. Let me state why.

There are a fair number of senators who attend here only infrequently for various reasons, many of them good reasons, I am sure. Those senators are eligible for their ordinary indemnity. They are eligible also for the $10,000 non-taxable expense allowance. It is true that they will be docked if their attendance falls below a certain level. Let us say a senator who is being docked because of low attendance decides to come here for two or three days. Is it defensible that, in that case, the public should pay for the accommodation in Ottawa of that particular senator? I think not. So much for the substance of the proposal. I could say much more, but obviously this is not the occasion for a long harangue.

• (1340)

Quite aside from the substance, I think this proposal is untimely. Let me tell you why: We have here in the chamber today a fair number of new senators. It is invidious to ask new senators to vote, either yes or no, on this proposal. Moreover, we are now at the end of the session. What is the urgency? We are to be away throughout July, August, and September. What is the urgency?

I find it difficult to contrive a refutation for the accusation that this is a money grab. Consequently, I will vote against the proposal.

Hon. Alasdair B. Graham: Honourable senators, I had not intended to participate in this debate until just a few moments ago. The fact of the matter is that the whole system is wrong. I came here in 1972. I also educated ten children. Why did I come here when my income was cut in half? I was persuaded by the challenge.

I do not think we should get a tax-free allowance, any more than anyone else in the country should get a tax-free allowance. I think that somebody finally has to decide — this goes as well for people in the other place — what a fair salary is for a member of the House of Commons or a Senator — in truth, as Senator Olson has always said, a Member of Parliament.

We should be paid a fair wage and reimbursed on expenses that are properly vouchered. If I am on government business and I come from Sydney every week and go home to Sydney every week, I should be treated as the employee of any business, any corporation, whether it be for a public corporation or a private corporations. I should be reimbursed for proper expenses no matter where I travel in a province, the country, or the world.

The press says that we sit an average of less than 100 days. That is a great statement. They really do not understand about the committee system, and the fact that many of us do the same work as a member of the House of Commons. We get the same mail.

Senator Muir: Constituency work.

Senator Graham: Look at Senator Muir and Senator Molgat.

I really believe that we should put this on a proper footing and a proper scale. The people should understand the kind of work we do. I would challenge anyone who says that I do not do the same work as a member of the House of Commons. However, they get twice or two-and-a-half times the tax-free allowance that we get here.

I just called my office to ask my secretary how many days I spent in Ottawa last year, and the answer was 209. I do not have a tooth fairy or anyone else who is ready to put money under my pillow every night. I appreciate the challenge, I appreciate the opportunity, and I am honoured to serve the people of my province and my country in this chamber, but until Parliament decides to change this terrible system, I would defer in favour of my banker.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I will not support the proposal, and I want to be very straightforward and level as to why I do not support it.

First, I do not think the patient should be prescribing his own medicine, and that is what is being done here and now. That is what Commoners have done in their own interests, in spite of the fact that they already enjoy substantial compensation packages for their parliamentary and riding needs.

As chairman of the National Liberal Caucus in the early 1970s, I was instrumental in convincing the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, that members' pay and compensation ought to be reviewed and a mechanism established for the future periodical revision of the pay and benefits of members of Parliament. The Prime Minister of the day bought that idea.

We then established a committee in our own caucus, and asked members of other caucuses to also set up study committees to examine the problem and the parameters of a possible solution. The then leader of the opposition, the Right Honourable Robert Stanfield, played ball in the sense that he had identified the need. He justified in a very understanding way the complaints and the requirements of the people who sat with him. The New Democratic Party and the Créditiste party also complied.

A package was brought down, and a formula for periodical revision of the salary and compensation of members of Parliament was also brought down. The formula basically said that, after every general election, the government will name a commission to review, on behalf of members of Parliament, the whole gamut of salary and compensation. They would examine the whole horizon of our needs.

It worked well for a period, but I must say that the last two commissions established by the current government failed parliamentarians miserably. In fact, the opportunity was used by one of the commissions to denigrate members of the Senate in particular, so much so that the government, for all practical purposes, never accepted the reports of those commissions, but put them aside.

Members in the other place thought that there were some elements in those reports that they should pick up for their benefit on their side of Parliament, leaving the senators hanging. Goodness knows, we have tried in recent years to come up with a formula that would bring some sense of equilibrium to the compensation package for senators, only to be told by members of the other place or by the government, "No."

• (1350)

As I said initially, I do not think it is right for the patient to prescribe his own medicine. I think what the House of Commons did was not right in light of the mechanisms that were put in place in the mid-1970s. That formula should have been respected. Rather than appoint defeated members of Parliament to such commissions, the government should have appointed people widely representative of Canadian society.

When my government, my Prime Minister, appointed a commission, he named a former member of Parliament, long retired, from the Progressive Conservative Party. Also named to that commission was someone from private enterprise who was in a position to compare pay scales. I forget who the other one was, since it is not all that fresh in my memory.

In any case, this gave a certain assurance to the public that this was a straightforward and objective approach to resolving the perennial problem of what a member of Parliament is worth. What are his needs? What is a senator worth?

Senator Thériault: Ask the media.

Senator Corbin: I am not criticizing the media. They can write all the funny stories they want. For one thing, I do not have to read the media. I do not waste much time reading the media. I have more important things to do in life.

Senator Murray: Is this a former journalist speaking?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: And broadcaster.

Senator Corbin: What is a senator worth? I am not saying there is not any merit to the claim that we are underpaid, or whatever you want to call it. My purchasing power, like that of most citizens in this country, has been decreasing consistently. My municipal taxes have not decreased, I can tell you that; nor have my water or electric bills decreased. They have gone up, just like everyone else's. I am beginning to feel the pinch. I also have children who want an education. I am sorry I could not outperform you, Senator Graham. Nevertheless, I can play ping-pong, while you have a baseball team.

I want to be serious, honourable senators. I honestly believe that it is incumbent upon the government of the day to ascertain that the people who leave their families and travel great distances to give the best of themselves to the democratic process have their needs met, and to ensure that they receive proper pay and compensation.

I take the view that this matter should stand. I am not basically opposed to improvement; I do not think the process is right. However, there is a mechanism in place, and it should be respected. Credible people should be named to a commission after the next general election to study the problem in full public view, and in a critical way. Let the press blabber all it wants. They are entitled to do so, just like anyone else in the country.

Ultimately, it is the government's responsibility, from whichever party they come, to come to Parliament and to table in both houses a proposal, and then let the members decide. I think that would be a more just, objective and democratic way of going about it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I want to say that if this matter comes to a vote, I will vote in favour of it. I base my decision not on what I read in the press but on the fact that for 33 years — since 1960 — I have been in public life. I spent some 20 years in the provincial legislature, and I have been here for 13 years.

The same problem has always existed: Those in Parliament have to vote on their own salaries. It is not a pleasant situation, but that is the way it is.

I can tell honourable senators that the improvement that has now been accorded to the pay and expense accounts of the people who sit in the Legislature of New Brunswick has occurred to a much greater degree than has my own situation sitting here in the Senate. I have often thought since my appointment to this place that perhaps this place should not exist. As a Canadian, I would not lose any sleep if it were decided that the Senate were to be abolished. I operated in a legislature where there was no Senate, and we got along. If a Royal Commission, or any kind of commission, were to ask the people of Canada if senators should be paid, 90 per cent of Canadians would say, "Pay them $1 a year." We know they will say that.

Had I been wealthy, I probably would have gone home the year after I was appointed. Nevertheless, I am here. The members of the Internal Economy committee have laboured with this problem for years. We came forward two or three years ago with a suggestion. I have sat for years in the national Liberal caucus and have very seldom heard an elected MP state that he or she has any use for the Senate or what it is doing. It was only after they arrived here that they changed their minds. That is true, in my humble opinion, and applies to members on both sides of the house.

I have tried to work at my job as a senator to the best of my ability. I believe that the expenses which I must incur for my coming to Ottawa should be paid. Someone just mentioned July, August and September. Do they close down their apartments then? Do their landlords tell them that they do not have to pay their rent?

I am sure that, for those who stay at the Chateau or the Westin, $6,000 does not go very far. Honestly, do honourable senators expect the general public, the elected members of the House of Commons or the press, to support anything that we do that will help our financial situation? If you do, you will have to wait a heck of a long time.

I think we should pass this thing, and forget about it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pietro Rizzuto: Honourable senators, I think we may have overlooked an essential aspect of the decision we are being asked to make today. We do represent the people, even if we are not elected, and we must consider the message we are sending to Canadians. Today, governments at all levels are asking Canadians to tighten their belts. People are being asked to accept a wage freeze. They are being asked to do their bit to help the economy. Canadians are being asked to make sacrifices.

Personally, I agree with many of my colleagues who argued in favour of this proposal. In the circumstances, however, it would be a serious mistake. We have a duty to send a message to Canadians that we are aware of the problems, that we realize that there are hundreds of thousands of people who are looking for work, and that there are people in need, people on welfare.

Despite all the reasons for which some of our colleagues may be in favour, I do feel it would be a mistake to support this motion today, because we have a duty to send a message to Canadians that we realize we too must tighten our belts. That is the message we should be sending.

I realize that all things considered, there may be times when it may be more expensive for some senators, and many senators may spend more than they receive to cover travel and accommodation expenses. However, the day before "La Saint-Jean" is hardly the right time to adopt this report. It would give the impression that we want to sneak through something which, after all, is a legitimate concern for senators.

Honourable senators, I think it would a mistake to adopt this report. We would be sending the wrong kind of message. We would give the impression that we are not aware of the problems that exist in this country. I want Canadians to get the right message, and this is not the right time to vote for any increases whatsoever. We must show Canadians that we are prepared to make sacrifices. I will therefore vote against this report.

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, the salary issue has always been extremely controversial. Whenever we talk about raising our salaries or our expense accounts, a storm of protest goes up across the country. I want to try and express, as briefly as possible, what my feelings are on this very important issue. There is a lot of confusion. First of all, there are people who constantly attack the press.

• (1350)

[English]

I am not one of those who ever attack the press. I read the press. I have had to swallow my pride at times when I thought they were misquoting me. The next day I have made the effort to be more clear in my remarks. If we are to gain any respect in this country there is no doubt that we must make an alliance with the press because they are the ones who ultimately explain what we do: what we do well; and what we do badly. Therefore, I would like to be in another role when talking about this important issue.

Because of changes in society people at the moment are very unhappy. I will not be partisan by saying that some are unhappy, as some Liberals would say, because of the GST. Others will say that it is because of the breakdown of the family, drugs or unemployment. All of this is to say that people look for something or someone to blame. That is where the danger starts. They attack their parliamentarians because we are fair game, that is not fair because it destroys respect for the institution, and this is what I have tried to point out in the lower house many times. It fosters anarchy because people will not want to represent the country as a whole. We are the ones who represent the country.

I am not one to say that I will oppose this measure and then run to the bank to cash my cheque, as I have seen others in the lower house do. Some members would oppose a certain raise in salary, would speak out against it, but be the first to take advantage of it. I will not be like that. When I came here there was no talk of $6,000. I knew that my expenses were going from $22,000 to $10,000 and I said so to the public. I came here for other reasons.

I know that it would be proper to have the $6,000 because, as has been pointed out by many senators, it is not income but money for expenses. I understand how it would affect the lives of senators from as far away as British Columbia and not so much those from Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto. We have to explain this and we have to take the press into consideration. This morning Senator Gigantès said that, when you appear on television you should not volunteer to do a clip, but that you should try to get on a program where you will not be cut off and be able to express yourself directly to the Canadian people. Then, if you are stupid, Canadians will say so, but they will not say that you are unintelligent or greedy as a result of a clip of two or three minutes duration. You prove to them that what you say makes sense or you prove to them that what you say does not make sense.

Personally, I will vote against the measure for the time being, not because I am afraid, I am backing off, or worried about blackmail by some Canadians, but because I think we will be dealing with something more concrete this summer. If the measure should pass, until we come up with something Canadians can understand — and there are ways to make them understand — I shall not use this $6,000 even though it may become law. In my conscience I believe in this institution and that we can convince Canadians that what we are doing is as good as what Mr. Daoust, who is the great leader of a union in Quebec and for whom I have a great deal of affection, is doing.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I would like to ask the press if those people have expense accounts too. When the presidents of the CEQ, the FTQ and the CSN travel throughout Canada for the benefit of those they represent, are they afraid to say that they receive something for the expenses to which they are entitled? Members of Parliament have often been received by union leaders. I am well aware that they did not pay. We summoned them here to Ottawa. We see them at conventions across the country. I am well aware that the workers in those unions understand very well that the expenses are paid. We should make the public understand that. It is a question not of salary but of justice.

I pay nearly $9,000 rent in Ottawa. I live in Montreal.

[English]

If I am paid $6,000, do I have to give my life to the press? I see some distinguished members of the press in the gallery with whom I have a good rapport. They have a job to do and I have a job to do. My job is to try to convince them that what we are doing is the right thing. Their job is — and I believe some of them are conscientious — to represent the views expressed here in a conscientious way.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I am sure of that, but if we attack each other, we will get nowhere. So I am convinced that some of them will realize that distinctions must be made.

Now what is the Senate?

[English]

Someone talked about sitting for a few days. I am glad to inform you that I am not the spokesperson yet, but the press will be surprised to learn that many new senators will together sit this summer to see what can be done. It is not the press and it is not we who will decide the future of the Senate.

• (1420)

Only the Canadian public can decide about the future of the Senate. When Canadians decide that the Senate should be abolished, should be elected, or should be transformed, then we shall abide. In the meantime, I do not see why anyone should have any objection if we do something concrete.

I am a senator, and now if the Senate is attacked, I feel personally attacked and I shall defend until I decide to be something other than a senator. I am proud to be a senator. I will not duck. I think there are many things the Senate has done well. There are many more things the Senate can do very well. We shall see that in the months to come. The press should take notice that many more senators are ready now to stand up and say, "Here are the things that can be done."

Some members of the Lortie Commission called me. They were very upset that I said the Lortie Commission cost $20 million. How many Canadians know that $20 million represents 40 per cent of the Senate budget in one year? We could have done what the Lortie Commission did. How many other commissions could we have conducted? Within a year, you can spend less money than what the Senate costs, just by the work that can be done.

That is what Madam LeBreton spoke to me about. That is what Madam Cohen said. That is what my new companion said, Mr. Nolin, and Mr. Angus, Dr. Demarais and Madam Thérèse Lavoie-Roux. I am only talking about those who have already come forward and said we want to do that. Madam Andreychuk, Mr. Rivest, Mr. Beaudoin. I can name many. We are looking for volunteers for the summer.

Do not worry, Senator Frith, we may consider inviting you. You have expertise to offer. If you want to do so, you shall do so in your own way.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, what I mean is that it is very obvious now that we have lost the battle for public opinion.

[English]

I am not backing off because I am afraid of public opinion, but I think we have time this summer. We will not sit. There will be an election. There will be time before the Senate meets again in many months from now.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I am sorry, I may not have your eloquence, but when you speak, I listen to you with great dignity and respect. That is what I hope to bring here to the Senate. I must say that whether we are friends or not, I am very serious in what I want to do here together. I think that we have a unique opportunity to make a collective sacrifice. Yes, it is a sacrifice for many of you, I know. I think that we could make this sacrifice with the firm idea of starting to show the Canadian people what the Senate can be, what the Senate is, what the Senate can become. I think such a gesture would go a long way to explaining that.

I still believe that it is a mistake to continually attack the press because the press is always attacking us. At some point, when we belong to an institution as noble and worthy as the Senate, it is up to us perhaps to act with more dignity than those who accuse us of being a useless institution.

[English]

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise in support of the press, the poor people. We must leave them their easy prejudices, and the Senate is one of those, something they can always write against. They have cultivated this since 1867. They can always get a nice headline. The headline writers have them in their drawers there, they pull them out.

These are hard-working people. They have to contend with the fact that they went to unsatisfactory secondary schools; that they are therefore not very good at using language; that they are working for newspapers whose editors do not particularly care about the truth; that they are edited by sub-editors who never leave the inside of a newspaper except to go into a bar.

They need a rest. Life is difficult. We must not ask them to come here and listen to us during serious debates such as the one we have just had on NAFTA. They were not here. Now they are. Look at them, like a row of carrion crows, sitting up there, coming because this is an easy, easy issue.

Senator Murray: They were here for NAFTA.

Senator Gigantès: They are going to vote. They will write about something which is a cliche. It has been a cliché since 1867. Deservedly so. It was invented by Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir George-Etienne Cartier. Sir George-Étienne Cartier said that since they were imitating the ancient Athenian constitution, they should have a scapegoat.

The ancient Athenians had a scapegoat at which they threw stones when things were going badly. Sir John A. MacDonald said they cannot possibly think of that because Queen Victoria was president of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. So instead of a scapegoat, they established the Senate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is one matter concerning the media coverage to which I reluctantly will refer because it relates to the understanding of Canadians about the process here.

I refer to the impression created in much of the media coverage in the last day or two that this issue, indeed that the recommendation and the report of the Internal Economy committee would never have come to light but for the vigilance of the Parliamentary Press Gallery.

I should state for the record that, in this place, unlike the House of Commons, the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration meets in public. Its meetings are open to the public and the media. I also must point out that this issue has been around now for at least two years that I am aware of. It was discussed as long ago as last December at meetings of the Internal Economy committee.

Before our friends in the Parliamentary Press Gallery nominate themselves for Pulitzer Prizes for investigative reporting on this issue, the question they should ask themselves is how they managed to miss such a big story for six months.

The other thing that I observed as recently as this morning in the media was our old friend, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, doing an open-line broadcast from some radio station, saying that he objected to the timing of all this. He could not understand why the government was bringing it forward.

There was somewhat of an echo of that this afternoon when the Leader of the Opposition here, Senator Frith, referred to the report as coming from a Conservative-dominated committee. However, he did have the grace to add that it was a matter for supporters and opponents in both of our parties and on both sides of the chamber and that is correct. It is, of course, not a government initiative, and my colleagues in this caucus are, as they know, free to vote on the matter as they wish, as Senator Frith has indicated that his are.

This issue has been pursued tenaciously for almost three years by Liberal and Conservative senators on the Internal Economy committee. When it passed the Internal Economy committee, it passed, not unanimously, but on a majority vote across party lines, or so I am told.

We have heard some very good speeches this afternoon on this matter, and I thank honourable senators for the candour of their presentations, and for dealing with the matter so directly.

Two of our colleagues in this place have taken leadership roles on this matter and have not been heard from this afternoon. Senator Doody has been the liaison on this issue between the Internal Economy Committee and our caucus. Senator Doody is, as you know, chairman of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Committee and is overseas. I am sure that if he were here, he would be speaking in support of the recommendation of the committee. Senator Kenny has been the liaison for that committee with his caucus and has been one of the most active proponents of this measure, and I must confess that I am astonished not to have heard from him this afternoon on this issue.

This is a matter that was canvassed endlessly at the committee. It has been through more drafts and redrafts, iterations and reiterations, than almost any document I have ever seen coming before the Senate, right up until the moment of tabling the other day.

I want to place on the record, because it has not been done, the authority under which the committee came to its decision and made its recommendation, because this is relevant to the discussion. The authority exists in the Parliament of Canada Act as follows:

> For each session of Parliament, there shall be allowed to every member of each House of Parliament such actual moving, transportation, travel and telecommunication expenses as that House may, by order, prescribe.

I personally think that it is stretching it a bit to use that section of the Parliament of Canada Act to provide for annual accommodation expenses in Ottawa. Nevertheless, this was the authority under which the House of Commons, two years ago, made essentially the same change in its arrangements as is being proposed by the Internal Economy Committee here. I agree with Senator Corbin and Senator Stewart who say that it is stretching it a bit to use that authority, but that is the precedent.

In the case of the House of Commons, as in the case of the Senate, there is a travel expenses budget within which the Senate and the House of Commons have the right to make certain regulations. That budget, in the case of the Senate, is there from year to year and approved in our Estimates.

I should point out, again for the record, that in terms of the overall budget of the Senate, the Internal Economy committee has done an excellent job in keeping our expenses down. In recent years, they have slowed down the rate of increase in our budget very considerably, and latterly — that is to say, within the last two years — year over year they have brought in an Estimate at dollar amounts which were less than the previous year. They did that in 1992-93. The Estimate for 1992-93 is for less expenses than in 1991-92, and for 1993-94 again, year over year, there is a smaller budget for the Senate, in actual dollars, than there was in the previous year.

The Internal Economy Committee and the management of this place deserve our congratulations for that effort, because you will find, if you examine the budgets and estimates of our friends down the hall in the other place, that, year over year, there has never been a year in living memory when they have managed to come in at an amount less than they did in the previous year.

My view on this process, and on the substance of pay, allowances and expenses for senators and members of Parliament, is well known to my colleagues in the Conservative Party, and I think it is pretty well known to honourable colleagues opposite. Indeed, I have recently been the subject — or is it the object? Perhaps both — of a letter-writing campaign from some honourable senators on both sides to protest against changes that I had been proposing in some of the travel arrangements.

Further to that, as I have said outside the house, there is in the law a provision that, after every election, the government is obliged to appoint a commission to look into all the pay and allowances provisions of senators and members of Parliament. I believe that that is the way to study a question like this. I do not believe that we should take a particular item of our expenses, namely the lodging in Ottawa for those who come from 100 kilometres or more outside the city, and deal with it in isolation. The job of the committee which will be appointed after the election is to look into all the pay, allowance and pension provisions for members of the House of Commons and the Senate.

In the case of this year, in anticipation of that committee being appointed and of its report, Mr. Loiselle, the President of the Treasury Board, has appointed some outside advisors to do a special study focusing, in particular, on the pensions that are available to parliamentarians. This, in my view, is the way it should be done. This is the way it will be done within a matter of months. I believe that we can wait for it. I am sure that we can wait for it.

In reply, advocates of the Internal Economy Committee majority report point, as Senator Frith and a number of other honourable senators did, to the growing disparity in the tax-free expenses for members of the House of Commons and the Senate. They point to the precedent set by the members of the House of Commons when they voted, to a maximum of $6,000, certain expenses for their lodging in Ottawa. They point out, as several senators have this morning, that landlords, hoteliers and so forth, do not charge senators any less than they do members of the House of Commons.

They also point out that the present situation rewards senators who stay home rather than give full attendance here. There is, as some honourable senators have pointed out, a real disincentive for senators to come here for committee work when the Senate is not sitting.

All these factors are valid, honourable senators, but I believe that as a matter of process, substance, and timing, we should not take this decision. This recommendation is unwise. I agree with Senator Rizzuto that it sends the wrong signal to the people of Canada when we are at the end, not just of a parliamentary session, but of a Parliament after five years. When the country is in the midst of a painful economic restructuring affecting thousands of Canadians, I believe it would send the wrong signal. Therefore, I would oppose the adoption of the report.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, Senator Murray raised my name a moment ago, I think it is appropriate that I should say a few words.

I did not think my views in this chamber were in doubt to anyone. I am in favour of this proposal; I support it. You should know I will not get a nickel of the proposed increase to the allowance. I live in Ottawa, and the proposal is not designed to benefit me in the least.

Having said that, I see senators on both sides of this chamber who are not having their expenses covered and who deserve to have their expenses covered. This proposal is a reasonable step in that direction.

The Honourable Senator Murray mentioned Senator Doody. You did not mention Senator Kelly, who was also on the steering committee and has been silent. You did not mention Senator Hébert, who was also on the steering committee. The four of us composed the steering committee that looked into this matter.

Senator Doody is not here. It would be interesting to hear from him as to why he stepped down from the Internal Economy Committee — whether he stepped down because he was unhappy with the way your side was dealing with this proposal.

It is also damned interesting to know that this proposal was moving forward until your whip announced to the committee that there had been a discussion in the government caucus and all proposals were off. He then came back a couple of months later and said, "Whoops, boys, the proposal is on again." "We will put it through." "The government caucus has decided." "The proposal is on." That is what happened. Everyone in this chamber knows what happened. We all heard it.

Honourable senators, as for the process that has gone on here today, it is complete nonsense. You say it is crazy to wait until the end of the session to go ahead with the proposal. Well, when a new session begins, people will say, "Good Lord, what are you doing? It would be inappropriate to start the increased allowance at the beginning of a session." Now is the time to do it. The session is at an end, and the proposal is for the next session. That makes a lot more sense.

As for your comment about the proper way to proceed with commissions, we have heard from senators who have told us clearly that commissions set up afterwards did not work. The Loiselle approach is clearly different. It is an effort by the government to move the issue of pensions off the agenda until after the election. It is simply an effort to sidestep the entire process.

As for the appropriateness of proceeding under the Parliament of Canada Act, it worked perfectly well in the House of Commons. They thought it was appropriate. I did not hear you objecting at the time. The proposal on this side calls for receipts for actual expenditures. In the House of Commons, they do not need to present any receipts; they receive a lump sum payment. On this side, we are talking about producing receipts for every nickel spent.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Kenny: People can move back and forth on this matter all they like, but senators in this room are penalized when they come here. Their expenses are not covered. They should be covered. The system we have set up has been a combined effort of all parties.

Senator Murray: What system?

Senator Kenny: The system being discussed today. It is an improvement over the system used in the House of Commons, which you did not object to. In our proposal, we insisted on providing receipts.

There will be grief on this issue no matter what we do. Folks, when you go to deal with it, the grief has happened. You can wait as long as you want for the Parliament of Canada Act to be amended. I do not think it will happen.

Honourable senators, this proposal will not increase anyone's pay. Those of us, like myself, I suspect Senator Frith, even Senator Murray, do not benefit from this proposal because they are within the radius. Senators who live in Ottawa will not benefit from this proposal. Those who own property here will not benefit from this proposal.

Honourable senators, this proposal is a sensible step forward. I am pleased to support it, and I will vote for it if it comes to a vote.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, I am a novice senator. I will abstain if this matter comes to a vote.

Honourable senators, I suggest we simply amend the motion to say that all amounts in excess of $10,000, up to a maximum of $16,000, will be paid. Those senators who receive the $10,000 and do not have any expenses if they live in Ottawa, they get their $10,000. If those senators outside the area have expenses in excess of $10,000, they will be paid up to the $16,000 figure. Surely that is reasonable.

Senator Thériault: Question!

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, after 40 years in politics, I know that getting involved in this type of debate is a no-win situation. Nevertheless, my colleague and my leader, Senator Frith, has stated that the position of our party is that this will be a free vote. In view of the fact that my vote is somewhat different from his, I want to state my position very clearly on this matter.

The problem that I see with payments to legislators, be they here, in the other place, in provincial legislatures or wherever, is the public perception that we are receiving preferential treatment. The real issue is the tax-free allowance. We must do away with the tax-free allowance. It is perceived by the public as something very special to politicians, which the public cannot receive. I do not blame them for being annoyed at that.

On the other hand, Canadians are reasonable people. They believe that individuals should be paid a fair wage for the work they do. Where Canadians disagree is when they think individuals are receiving extras.

What we are discussing today is a move towards payment for receipted expenses. Some honourable senators have pointed out that we currently receive $10,000. We have asked in the past that the members in the House of Commons change that situation because they are the only ones who can do it. They would not do it. So what are we to do?

The facts are that costs now outstrip that $10,000 amount. Therefore, I believe that the solution we are now proposing, while not perfect, is a step in the right direction.

My hope is that we will move totally away from the tax-free structure. In this regard, I am on a par with Senator Graham. That is the normal, standard operation in whatever employment you have. If you are a carpenter and are sent on a job to Churchill, Manitoba, your expenses are paid. If you are a member of the media and do a news story away from your base, your expenses are paid. That is what we are talking about today.

Senator Rizzuto speaks about this as being a salary increase. It is not a salary increase. The fact is that our salaries have been frozen for the past three years. Indeed, there was a roll-back in our salaries this year. So let us not deal in illusions.

Honourable senators, I intend to support this proposal, as we move in the right direction to have our expenses paid on receipts, so that when we legitimately spend money for our responsibilities as senators, we can collect for it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly, that this report be adopted now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators opposed to the motion please say "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Hon. William M. Kelly: I would request a five-minute bell, please.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the bells will ring for five minutes.

Call in the senators.

Hon. John Sylvain: Honourable senators, I move that this report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

Hon. Consiglio Di Nino: Honourable senators, I have a prepared speech that I was to deliver on this issue. PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Grimard, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaulieu for the adoption of the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders (amendments to the Rules of the Senate), presented in the Senate on 4th March, 1993. — (Honourable Senator Corbin).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I know I will make a lot of people happy over there by saying that I went over this third report with a fine toothcomb.

I find the proposal quite acceptable. I am sorry that it took me so much time to do it. Nevertheless, I take this opportunity once again to say how offensive I thought the whole process of the so-called reform of the rules was to me and my colleagues.

This is probably the last opportunity I will have to say so. I look forward to the next Parliament when I hope that an atmosphere of cooperation and collaboration will be in place. I do not think the members of the government should hold any grudge against us for feeling the way we have felt since the introduction of the rules, especially the way they were imposed on us and, I still say, for no good reason or excuse.

This house has to go back to basics. It should operate in the best parliamentary tradition. I do not think we need rules that limit senators to 15-minute speeches. If a senator has something to say, he or she ought to be given the opportunity to say all he or she has to say on an issue. I do not think we should ever again invoke one incident to attempt to quash the freedom of speech of members of this place.

Honourable senators can count on my cooperation in the future.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE GOVERNMENT

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Frith calling the attention of the Senate to the disastrous record of the Mulroney administration from 1984, when it first broke faith with the Canadian people, to 1993, when the Prime Minister announced his resignation. — (Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, like Senator Di Nino, I have some prepared notes. Unlike Senator Di Nino, I intend to read them.

Senator Di Nino: We look forward to hearing them.

Senator Frith: There is good news for some, which is that this is Part 14, the last part of the series, the object of which was to put on the record, the record.

We are now at 1988, an election year, and everything the Mulroneyites did that year was done with a view to the anticipated election.

The first and overriding priority was to induce a collective state of amnesia across the country. Canadians had to forget that the performance of the team bore absolutely no relationship to what had been promised. They had to forget about all the broken promises and lies. That was the strategy. The tactics were simple: First, say whatever it takes to win the election, even if it means showing a total disregard for the truth; and, second, tar and smear the opposition as liars, especially when they are telling what you know is the truth. Just as in 1984, it was to be a campaign constructed on a foundation of lies. If successful, the foundation would not collapse until the Mulroneyites were safely in office.

For the Mulroney team, the 1988 election campaign began with Michael Wilson's budget of February 10.

As we have described, the deficit in 1984 was not a major concern. In 1985, it became a priority. In 1986, a call to arms. In 1987, just before the election, it was suddenly under control, and in 1988, Mr. Wilson announced that it had been caged and tamed. In fact, the deficit was not even mentioned by Finance Minister Wilson until the second page of his budget speech, when he said: "We have restored fiscal responsibility by reducing the deficit and cutting the growth of the national debt."

Mr. Wilson's tough-love deficit talk had disappeared. John Ferguson of the Montreal Gazette of February 11, 1988, began his column:

> The Chinese have an expression which best sums up Michael Wilson's budget: "Big noise at top of stairs, no one comes down."

Although the deficit still stood at approximately $29 billion, only $3.5 billion less than in the last complete liberal fiscal year 1983-84, the battle was suddenly over and victory was declared. A headline in the Globe and Mail of February 11 had it right: "Attack on deficit takes back seat to Tory programs."

Things were said to be going so splendidly that there were new program announcements months before the election call. In June 1988, Mulroney's friend and confidant from Laval University days, Lucien Bouchard, now head of the Bloc Québécois Demolition of Canada Team, was seeking entry into the House of Commons via a by-election in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean. Never one to deny help to a friend in need, Mr. Mulroney showed the people of Lac-Saint-Jean the meaning of federal largesse.

The Gazette of June 14, 1988, described how Mulroney suggested there might be $40 million in federal funds to help construct a highway between Lac-Saint-Jean and James Bay. He said:

> These aren't presents I'm talking about. A road for a remote region isn't a present. It's an investment... It's an investment for the future.

The Gazette of June 16 reported how Mr. Mulroney personally approved a $1.5 million grant to a job creation centre in Lucien Bouchard's riding. Honourable senators will remember that every day there was more spending in that riding to guarantee the election of Mr. Bouchard who, right now, is the head of the demolition team.

This grant was approved within days of the request, as opposed to the six to eight weeks it normally takes to even process such a grant.

There was more: $500 million in federal money for regional development in the province.

Mr. Bouchard won the by-election, and a few years later showed how he spelt the word "loyalty".

In addition to these specific promises to a Quebec nationalist friend he wanted elected, there were promises designed to appeal much more widely. The Globe and Mail of August 15 reported on Mr. Mulroney's suggestion that there might be federal money for the construction of a $1.4 billion aluminum smelter in Sept Iles.

There were also promises of $1 billion to develop Hibernia, with another $1.6 billion in loan guarantees. There was $420 million for all-terrain vehicles for the Armed Forces. You must remember that two years before this the deficit had been made into the biggest problem imaginable and an excuse for not spending money, especially on social programs.

Continuing, $150 million was promised for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island; $400 million was promised for the Husky heavy oil upgrader in Lloydminster; $110 million was promised to fight illiteracy; and $88 million was promised to grape growers. There was even $1 billion for the OSLO oil sands project and $250 million for the Canadian film industry.

With that kind of piling on, it is not hard to understand why the government took the trouble to stop worrying about the deficit. Let us not stop, however, because there is more, much more, as the advertisement said.

There was $39 million to combat family violence; $12 million for western drought relief; $129 million for AIDS research; and an extra $1 billion for child care. As the Globe and Mail of June 11, 1988 reported:

> With military-like precision, government corporate jets carrying cabinet ministers have been dispatched daily on missions from coast to coast, distributing money to often unsuspecting citizens.

The election had not even been called. According to an October 5, 1988 edition of the Toronto Star, it amounted to "a $16 billion pre-election spending spree."

When the election was finally called, Mr. Mulroney showed the true depths of his cynicism. As everyone knows, he had long been making promises about a national child care program. His government finally acted in 1988.

• (1510)

This next part is important in light of the position the Prime Minister later falsely took. On Tuesday, September 27, 1988, Bill C-144, the child care legislation, arrived in the Senate and was given first reading. Under the rules of the Senate, debate on second reading could not start until two days later. Liberal senators, however, agreed to waive the rule, and debate began the same afternoon. The next day, on Wednesday, September 28, the bill was given second reading and referred to committee.

What was the Prime Minister's response? Was he grateful that his precious legislation was advancing so rapidly in the Senate? Was he happy the Liberals were waiving the normal rules in order to get his bill into committee within 24 hours of receipt? The answer is no.

In a CBC interview aired on September 28, Mr. Mulroney said:

> what the Senate has done is already obstructive.

He claimed that:

working women need these spaces tomorrow...

and that they were

...suffering substantially...

because of the Senate's actions, namely getting it from first reading into committee in approximately 24 hours.

The hypocrisy was breathtaking.

The committee quickly started its work and began holding hearings. It was interesting that virtually the entire day care community opposed the bill, believing that more federal funding would be available under existing Canada Assistance Plan provisions. Nevertheless, as the rhetoric from the Prime Minister escalated, Senator MacEachen, on Friday, September 30, countered with the following statement found at page 4550 of the Debates of the Senate:

> We are prepared to have the committee continue its work tomorrow, with a view to affording the committee enough time to report the bill tomorrow. We are prepared to have the consideration of that report completed in the Senate and, indeed, have Royal Assent tomorrow at some point, depending upon the progress that is made in committee.

There was the offer: Passage and Royal Assent of the bill before the end of the following day.

No one on the government benches said a word in reply: Not a word from the government leader, Senator Murray; not a word from the deputy government leader, Senator Doody; and not a word from the government whip, Senator Phillips. You will soon see why.

The following morning, Saturday, October 1, the committee was meeting to hear the final witnesses and prepare its report. I was there.

In the middle of the hearings, Senator Phillips stormed into the committee room and declared that the committee had no right to meet any longer because Parliament had just been dissolved by the Governor General at the request of the Prime Minister. There was to be an election. All legislation still before Parliament, including the child care bill, died with the election call. That is what actually happened.

I want to pause for a moment to again compliment the very spunky response of Senator Spivak who was in the chair. She told Senator Phillips she was the chairman of the committee and she decided when the committee hearings would be interrupted and stopped. She proceeded with the committee's work.

Could Mr. Mulroney not have accepted Senator MacEachen's offer and delayed the dissolution of Parliament until later that day? We are not talking about days, just later that same day. If he had done so, he would have ensured passage of the legislation that, to use his own words, working women who were — so badly needed. The answer is no, he could not wait. He did not want to wait. Clearly he did not want his bill.

With more of his stunning hypocrisy, after yanking the rug out from under his own bill, he started his attacks on the Senate. The London Free Press of Tuesday, October 4, 1988 reported:

> The prime minister said Senate Liberal leader Allan MacEachen and his fellow Liberals "killed" his child-care legislation by stalling it in the Senate last month.

Senator Molgat: Does he ever tell the truth?

Senator Frith: Well, we will see.

Is there some kind of penance Mr. Mulroney does after making statements like this? I guess not, because he makes them constantly about the bill he could have had but clearly did not want, including as recently as April 27 of this year. The facts have no influence whatever on the Prime Minister and his spree of false statements. At page 18530-1 of Hansard, Mr. Mulroney is shown responding to a charge that he broke his promise of a national day care program, as we now know he did. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is indulging in revisionism. This House passed a national child care program in 1988 and it was killed in the Senate by the Liberal Party.

Senator Molgat: He has a sense of humour.

Senator Frith: Yes. It could be funny if it did not have these consequences. He went on to say:

> ... the House of Commons voted for a national child care program in 1988 and it was killed by the Liberals led by the Hon. Allan MacEachen in the Senate. The Liberal Party of Canada killed a national child care program and you will pay for it forever.

He was 50-per-cent right, because he killed his own program, but when the truth caught up to him, as it always does, he started paying for it, and he will pay for it forever. History will catch up to him.

After pulling the plug on his own daycare legislation, he then promised it all over again during the election campaign and again promptly broke that promise as soon as he was safely tucked into 24 Sussex.

During the campaign, Mr. Mulroney carefully followed the tactics of deceive and smear. The Globe and Mail of October 10, 1988 reports how he told North Shore residents:

...we have kept our promises.

From the same newspaper, dated October 17, 1988 there is a report of another Mulroney promise in Prince Edward Island:

"Let me say a special word to senior citizens:"

Knowing what actually happened, you will not believe these words. He said:

"...in the future Canada will be doing more, not less for all of you," he told about 100 seniors at the Parkview Senior Citizens Club in Summerside on Saturday morning.

As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada, social benefits — especially those for the elderly — will be improved, not diminished by the government, which is committed to social justice and fairness for all Canadians.

During the leaders' debate in that election, he repeated these assurances.

How did he keep his promise of improving, not diminishing, social benefits for seniors? Right after the election, he introduced the claw-back, and tens of thousands of seniors saw their old age pensions vanish.

Back to the 1988 election front, as the race became closer, the Mulroneyites turned more and more to smear tactics. Mulroney accused Turner and Broadbent of being —

...shameful and dishonest...

— about their statements on the free trade deal, according to the Toronto Star of October 28.

Michael Wilson also joined the fray. According to the Toronto Star of November 1, 1988 Mr. Wilson, in an Ottawa speech, said:

...to sow fear and peddle lies is much easier than to build a country.

A lot of people would have agreed with him, but he did not mean, as they understood eventually, who it was that was sowing the fear and peddling the lies. Responding to Turner's charge that free trade imperilled our social programs, he said:

I say to Mr. Turner that that is a lie.

Now we know it is happening. History is going to prove who was right. It is worth while remembering the position that Mr. Turner took in the debates and in that campaign and what he said about the free trade agreement, supported by the judge who wrote the very careful analysis of the free trade agreement. It must be ironic and difficult for Mr. Turner to think back and realize he was called a liar and everything he said turned out to be right.

The Ottawa Citizen of November 2, 1988 described how Mr. Mulroney took up the chant of his Finance Minister.

...they should tell the truth, not sow fear among the elderly, not sow fear among the poor.

We have seen the fruits of the promise he himself sowed in Prince Edward Island and elsewhere. As soon the election was over, he turned around and cancelled and changed the very things he promised.

Next it was the turn of Deputy Prime Minister Mr. Mazankowski, who favoured us with his presence here today. The first paragraph of a November 2 Toronto Star article reads:

It's time for a government truth squad to expose the "big lie" being told by opposition parties on free trade, Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski says.

Look at that now in the light of reality and how things have really turned out. It should be an "Opposition" truth squad to expose the big lie being told by the government on free trade.

• (1500)

According to the Toronto Star of November 3, 1988, Mr. Mulroney charged that the lies of his opponents had become so outrageous that:

They owe Canadians, especially senior citizens, an immediate and genuine retraction and apology...

...The Opposition party thought they could get through an election campaign propagating deception and distortion and deceit.

You might say, "And they were wrong." He is the one. He had the monopoly on getting through an election campaign propagating deception, distortion and deceit.

He continued:

I think that the opposition parties believed that a lie that goes unchallenged for 24 hours would automatically become the truth.

He sure understood how to work that. Did he know then what he intended to do? I wonder.

The Globe and Mail of November 3 reported that John Crosbie also charged Liberals of spreading "deliberate lies and untruths". The line was out and the team members were fanning out across the country delivering it.

The Ottawa Citizen of the same day, however, reported how Mr. Crosbie claimed that the Economic Council of Canada believed that rejection of the FTA would lead to a flight of capital out of Canada. The article continued with the observation that the council had said no such thing. So what Mr. Crosbie said had been a lie; but it was Mr. Turner he was accusing of lying. How typical.

The Toronto Star of November 4 described a visit Mr. Mulroney paid to a senior citizens' home in Edmonton:

> In a grave voice, Mulroney gave them his best prime ministerial assurance: "No one is going to take away your pensions or medical services."

What was that? Again, it was a lie.

When retired Supreme Court Justice Emmett Hall was wheeled out to say he did not think free trade endangered medicare, Mr. Mulroney reached the pinnacle of his campaign against John Turner. As the Citizen reported:

> The 89-year-old Hall came forward "to nail the lies down and to pin them right on John Turner's forehead," Mulroney said.

He was right about the lies, although he had the wrong forehead.

Conservative TV ads repeated the same message. Let me read a short portion from Charles Gordon's column which appeared in the Citizen of November 7:

> "John Turner says there's something in the free-trade agreement that threatens Canada's sovereignty," says an announcer's voice, as the map of North America shows on the screen.
> "That' a lie," the voice continues...

On November 15, still a bit desperate, having heard the people of Canada were going to throw them out because of the agreement, Simon Reisman was brought in as the clean-up hitter. The Ottawa Citizen of November 16, reported Mr. Reisman as saying:

> I think the man who is selling out Canada is John Turner because he's reckless, he's betraying the country and he's playing with the future of our children and grandchildren...I challenge him, I accuse him of being a traitor to Canada for saying the things he is saying.

A civil servant, wades in on behalf of the Mulroneyites, and accuses the former Prime Minister of Canada of being a traitor. Imagine a public servant accusing Diefenbaker or Pearson of being a traitor? It is unimaginable. But labelling the Right Honourable John Turner a traitor was just a part of the campaign because of the desperation caused by the reading of the polls. It showed how far that Mulroney team was prepared to go, while knowing all along that theirs were the lies. I do not recall any member of Mulroney's cabinet saying that perhaps Mr. Reisman had gone too far. Knowing some of them, I would have thought that some of them would, but they did not.

Lyin' Brian became Honest John, and Turner, unwilling to join Mulroney in the gutter, paid the electoral price.

That was the smear portion of the campaign. The other part was to say anything so long as it led to electoral success. We have already seen some good examples from the team leader himself, including promises to seniors and working mothers. But the master of the art of deception during the 1988 campaign turned out to be Finance Minister Michael Wilson, the same Mr. Wilson who has so ardently embraced Ms Kim Campbell as a kindred spirit because she is going to continue his policies, we are told.

First, Mr. Wilson attacked the Liberal campaign platform. The Globe and Mail of November 3 reports Wilson as saying:

> All I know, having been Finance Minister for the past four years, is John Turner is going to have to break those promises or we're going to have taxes going sky-high or the deficit going sky-high.

What about the conservative promises? The Globe and Mail of November 11 provides an unbelievable answer:

> The Progressive Conservative Party has not made any election promises during this campaign, Finance Minister Michael Wilson said in an extraordinary exchange with reporters last night.
> Liberals, he said, have made election promises. Conservatives have made "spending commitments".
> According to Mr. Wilson, the current election-promise score in this campaign is $37.7 billion for the Liberals to zero for the Conservatives.
> "In the way that I've described it, yes, it's zero", he said.

If they were not promises, but so-called spending commitments, would they be kept by a Conservative government?

> "Forget there's an election," Mr. Wilson added. He said that all Tory promises could be covered by the flexibility written into the five-year "spending track".

Remember those words — "Forget there's an election". Mr. Wilson continued:

> In those reserves, we have sufficient money to handle the announcements that we made prior to the election and those that have been made since the election was called.

The deficit will be a focus. I predict we will soon hear all about being on track, reserves and so on. We will find suddenly that the whole deficit is manageable. We will see. If Ms Campbell turns out to be a good pupil of Mr. Wilson, that is what we can expect.

Late in the campaign, when there were rumours that rising interest rates were pushing up the deficit, Wood Gundy, according to the Globe and Mail of November 15, released a study. As I remember it, when I had my offices at the northeast corner of King and Bay, Dominion Securities was across the road on the northwest corner, where, I believe, Mr. Wilson had worked. Just along King Street was Wood Gundy. I had always thought that Charlie Gundy and Wood Gundy were generally very well respected by Mr. Wilson and his colleagues.

Wood Gundy, according to the Globe and Mail of November 15 released a study warning:

> "With interest rates already 200 basis points higher than forecast in the current fiscal plan, the government's estimate of a $28.6 billion deficit for 1989-90 is simply unattainable in the context of current tax and expenditure policies."
> It estimates that in the absence of changes in expenditure policy, Ottawa's budget deficit next year will soar to $32 billion.

The article also said that some government sources were confidentially predicting the same scenario.

Senator Molgat: But Wilson was not?

Senator Frith: No. What did the Mulroneyites do? They called Wood Gundy liars, of course. "Don't deal with what they say, just call them liars. There's an election on."

Mr. Wilson's response is found in the Ottawa Citizen of November 15, 1988.

He says it was all a big lie:

> 'A report that the government now expects the deficit to rise to $32 billion next year is wrong', Finance Minister Michael Wilson said.

That is how he dealt with the Gundy report and how he dealt with the confidential statements made by the finance functionaires.

> 'No that is not accurate', Wilson said as he left a Conservative rally at which Prime Minister Brian Mulroney spoke to about 3,000 business supporters.
> Mulroney refused to answer any questions on the report as he left the rally.
> ...'I don't know the basis on which anybody is making those assumptions', Wilson said adding, 'I don't buy those assumptions'.

There is nothing about what was said. He says he does not know what the basis was of the assumptions, but he does not buy them. How could he not buy them if he did not even know what they were? The article goes on:

> 'I made it very clear that our program spending track is right on line,' he said.

Yes, on the party line of lies, because it wasn't on track. Following the election, Mr. Wilson all but admitted that he had been less than truthful during the campaign. He announced that higher interest rates had pushed up public debt charges for 1989-90 fiscal year by $6.4 billion. That was twice as high as even Wood Gundy, whom he had called wrong-headed liars, had been predicting.

Senator Molgat: That was after the election.

Senator Frith: This was after the election. Did Mr. Wilson apologize for misleading Canadians? Guess. He didn't. In his April 27, 1989 budget he declared:

> We, as Canadians, have a serious problem: Our large and growing public debt.

He then announced that his so called "commitments" — remember the spending commitments — including the national daycare program, were being cancelled wholesale. Taxes, including income taxes and excise taxes, were increased. During the election, he had said that they would not touch the social programs and that he could do it all without raising taxes. When the election was over, out went the social programs and they raised taxes. Taxes, including income taxes and excise taxes, were increased. Social programs, including UI, family allowance and old age pensions, were cut back. The growth rate of transfers to provincial health care and education programs were curtailed.

During the election he had said to Canadians, "Forget there is an election". Now he was telling Canadians "Forget there was an election and forget everything I said during the election." And he should have added, "Forget also anything that my team members said and everything that the Prime Minister said." For the Mulroney team, however, the important thing was that the election had been won. Repeating what occurred following the 1984 election, there were no apologies for misleading Canadians and the brazen breaking of all promises. In fact, at the Tory leadership convention we saw signs that this government is more than prepared to lie its way into power for a third time when Mulroney declared, "We kept our word".

Let's remember that in the next election. We know the exact opposite is true. The only words he kept were those he uttered during the Throne Speech debate on November 7, 1984, when he said, "Give us 20 years and...you will not recognize this country." Few Canadians now recognize their country or like its fifty-first-state status, among other changes in social programs and taxes. And it took only nine years, not 20. Let's hope after the next election we can start on the road to restoring it to what Canada should be. I do not adjourn the debate; I have completed my intervention.

Senator Haidasz: Is that all?

Senator Frith: Call for more.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Hon. Jack Marshall, rose pursuant to notice of Monday, June 21, 1993:

> THAT he will call the attention of the Senate to the need of urgency in the planning by the government for the 50th anniversary of D-Day on 6 June, 1994.

He said: Honourable senators, this motion asks that I call the attention of the Senate to the need of urgency in the planning by the government for the fiftieth anniversary of D-Day on June 6, 1944. I do so because my concerns are real and they are concerns shared by many who are interested, including Senator Molgat, who has taken an active role in the Normandy foundation in making sure that Canada is well represented on this historic occasion.

Just under a half century ago the troops of the Third Canadian Infantry Division and the 2nd Canadian Armoured Brigade stormed ashore on June 6, 1944 at Juno Beach as part of that vast Overlord Allied invasion force. On either side, in "Operation Neptune", were Canada's British and American allies all bound for running battles that only 11 months later would smash Adolf Hitler's Third Reich into surrender on May 8, 1945. Over 100 ships of the Royal Canadian Navy, crewed by 10,000 Canadian sailors, first swept mine-free channels, then bombarded the invasion beaches and finally carried our troops into action.

Meanwhile, overhead thousands of Canadian air crew in fighter and bomber groups of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the RAF, provided our ground troops with an air umbrella in the greatest of all combined operations. Before dawn, the first Canadian soldiers to land on the soil of France were from the 1st Canadian Parachute Battalion, dropping to secure the left flank of the Normandy Bridgehead. The 100,000 Canadians engaged at D-Day and in the three-month Normandy campaign which followed, performed one of the most remarkable feats of arms in all Canadian history, considering where it lead and the size of our small nation's participation compared with the principal Allied masses. Thousands more Canadian soldiers were to follow those first 30,000 D-Day assault troops and by May 1945 when the war ended, the First Canadian Army commanded nearly one-quarter of a million troops in Europe, more than twice the numbers of the fabled Canadian corps which had captured Vimy Ridge a quarter of a century earlier. Mercifully, Canadian casualties on June 6 were relatively lighter than feared, with 340 killed and 574 wounded.

Honourable senators, with that background, the 50th anniversary of D-Day is not far off. Soon it will be time to remember the epic Canadian D-Day achievement for its veterans and for the generations of Canadians who have come since and, of course, for the present-day descendants of D-Day, the Canadian Armed Forces. It can be a brilliant occasion to enliven a gallant chapter from the history books of Canada. In these days of the threat of disunity, it can show us who we once were.

It begs the question: What are Canada's plans to honour this great Canadian achievement? Clearly it is much more than an event for veterans. It is, as well, for our present soldiers and for all Canadians. As yet, little is known of any Canadian D-Day anniversary program, although the other allies are already making elaborate plans. Without the considered Canadian action — which the Prime Minister says is underway, and I refer to his letter to me of November 12, 1992 when I showed my concern and wrote to him at that time — our role on June 6, 1944, could well be obscured both at home and abroad.

There is a danger that, in Canadian modesty, the story of Canadians on D-Day may largely be overwhelmed in a welter of British and American commemoration and reenactment, particularly with the overflow of American television into Canada; rather as in the feature film "The Longest Day" which many have seen and in which Canadians were barely visible. This cannot be allowed to happen.

Based on past form and in the light of financial constraints, the Department of Veterans Affairs might be expected to repeat its traditional pilgrimage of veterans to the battle site. I do not think this is good enough on this historic occasion.

In the Canadian Armed Forces, where the 14 Canadian infantry and armoured units which landed on D-Day still exist, all but one as militia regiments, hopefully the Department of National Defence may be expected to assume a supporting role with military pageantry, in remembering Canada's greatest military feat. These traditional approaches may not, however, be equal to so important an occasion in Canada's history, especially when contrasted with our allies' flair already being planned.

Clearly, to tell the Canadian D-Day story with impact, there is a need to mount an imaginative, coordinated communications and operational activity of respectful and accurate showmanship, to recall vividly the story of Canada and D-Day to Canadians today, to veterans who will hardly have forgotten it, but more particularly to their descendants and to all those millions of Canadians who were not born 50 years ago.

The objective is to help solidify national unity by generating a sense of pride in Canada's historic contribution to victory and world peace 50 years ago. As a veteran, I suggest that the anniversary must become important to all Canadians and not merely to the veterans who took part. This was a high point in Canadian history and should not now be underplayed.

Last year, Canada celebrated the 75th anniversary of our great victory at Vimy Ridge and the 50th anniversary of the Dieppe Raid. Both became major communications exercises in recounting Canadian history. In analyzing the extensive media coverage of both the Vimy and Dieppe anniversaries, I note that media accounts of the original events and veterans' verbal testimony in the media greatly outweighed coverage of the relatively modest veterans' ceremonies in France and Ottawa.

Sadly, the planning included few events outside Ottawa which could have swelled the communications harvest and made the events even more relevant to Canadians today. Also in this nation of localities, the achievements of the locally based regiments involved in both events could have appealed to the local news media, as local angles to national and international stories.

The Vimy and Dieppe anniversaries last year were well received by the public and demonstrate the potential of the major D-Day anniversary coming in less than one year.

Still within living memory for older Canadians, the D-Day event can yet communicate a chapter of Canadian history and the story of the march of Canadians to victory amid the ruins of Berlin 11 months later, not with vainglory, but grateful national pride in our history and our valorous young people.

I honestly hope that Canada will not now hide its D-Day light overshadowed by its larger allies. Therefore, I believe the Senate should continue to inquire about and demand D-Day plans from both the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Veterans Affairs, offering our support for adequate planning for this important anniversary. We should not skimp on resources or imagination in shaping this historic event, for we owe it to present-day Canadians and our future posterity.

As for any ceremonies in France, it is clearly important that Canada's script be presented there with style, to extract world and trans-Atlantic media coverage also beamed back to Canada. Otherwise, the world may not remember that Canadians were there half a century ago.

Since very few Canadians will actually be able to visit Juno Beach on June 6, 1994, coverage of Canadian-based events should inevitably be greater if they are also staged here in Canada.

Local observances by the 14 Canadian D-Day regiments, entitled to the rare battle honour "Normandy Landing", would augment Canadian understanding and remembrance. These would be more likely to move our largely local media to cover what were and still are almost all historical regiments of the militia, considerably manned by local people in that day and now. These activities could complement coverage from Normandy and Ottawa.

Only a short time remains to properly plan this solemn yet informative look back with pride into Canadian history. This is the legacy of June 6, 1944.

Will we be too shy to claim our place in history? Will D-Day be presented largely as a British-American feat? I hope not.

Imaginative planning by the Departments of National Defence and Veterans Affairs, supported by government with adequate resources, can ensure that this does not happen. Canadian national pride can be kindled by the D-Day story in these divided days. Our past can come to the rescue of the present. This is the true message of the D-Day anniversary.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to commend my colleague Senator Marshall for having brought this to the attention of the Senate. It is, indeed, a very important item. As Senator Marshall has stated, he and I are directors of the Canadian Battle of Normandy Foundation, which holds an objective to ensure that Canadians remember this very important event in Canadian history.

Those of us who have had the privilege of visiting the memorial at Caen in the past certainly have been disappointed to find that it says almost nothing about Canada. It is essentially based on American and British forces. Yet there were no American forces in Caen or in the region. It is our hope that the foundation can correct some of that.

It was my good fortune about two weeks ago to be at Juno Beach and to go the memorial at Caen. I was delighted to see an excellent temporary exhibit there. This is the Canadian exhibit that gives an entirely different view of the memorial and of the Canadian participation in the war.

Next year, as Senator Marshall points out, it will be very important that the commemoration at Juno Beach be properly done. This certainly requires advance work. I do not know how much has been done to date. I would hope that, through Senator Marshall's committee or through this inquiry, we may find out what the program is.

I know from my recent visit that there will be some real problems of space. The hotel space in the area is virtually booked. My own regiment started planning two years ago for our pilgrimage on D-Day. Although I was not there, Senator Marshall and my own regiment landed on D-Day. Although we planned early, the closest hotel we could obtain was some 30 kilometres away from the beach.

That gives you an idea of the immense interest by other groups, American groups in particular. Unless Canada moves very quickly to book space, there will be difficulties. I would urge Senator Marshall to put on all the pressure he can in this regard.

He also mentioned commemorations within Canada. This is extremely important because it is what will reach more Canadians. Only a small number will be able to go to Juno Beach, but if we want to instill in our young people here in Canada, and bring back to some of the older ones, a sense of the role that Canada played in world affairs at that point and of how important we were to the liberation of Europe, it has to be done through events here in Canada.

This again will require a great deal of planning. The Battle of Normandy Foundation has this in mind for one of its activities next year.

I urge Senator Marshall, through his committee, to find out everything possible and to put pressure on government circles to realize the importance of this event in order that we properly commemorate a very important part of Canadian history. I assure him that he will have my total support in this regard.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY AUDITING PRACTICES OF NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice of June 10, 1993, moved:

> THAT the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report on the financial management and auditing practices of the National Film Board; and
> THAT the Committee present its final report no later than 30th September, 1993.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Senator Marshall is asking that the National Finance committee look into the management of the National Film Board and report by the end of September. That is almost an impossible task since, as far as I know, the National Finance committee will not be meeting this summer. The least that could be done would be to extend the deadline. The wisest thing to do would be to adjourn the debate on the motion, and await the return of the chairman and deputy chairman to hear their views on this.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Possibly Senator Marshall would accept an amendment to change the date for reporting to December 31, 1993.

[Senator Molgat]

Senator Marshall: I would accept that. I thank Senator Molgat for his advice.

Motion agreed to, as amended.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THE VALOUR AND THE HORROR—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND OTHER RELATED MATERIAL

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, April 28, 1993, moved:

> THAT there be laid before the House copies of all papers, letters, Fax messages, recorded telephone calls, statements to the press or any form of communication between the Prime Minister's Office, the Ministry of Communications, the Minister of National Defence and Veterans Affairs, the Office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and any and all officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the National Film Board and the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission having to do with their participation in the series of films The Valour and The Horror.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should alert Senator Marshall that the way he has phrased his motion will result in very little response, because government policy is to divulge those documents which are identified as government documents, and they are only released subject to the conditions spelled out in the Access to Information Act. Ministerial correspondence is not considered government material and, therefore, is not subject to release under the act.

I am not arguing against this motion, I am just pointing out that, in the way it is worded, much of the information he is requesting would certainly be considered ministerial correspondence and not subject to release. I hope he will not be too disappointed when he sees the incomplete answer which I think he is bound to get.

Senator Marshall: I gave notice of this motion on April 28. Certainly someone from the ministry could have advised me of that before now. I know the answers will be difficult to elicit, but the reason for this notice of motion is that officials of all these agencies have made statements in the press which contradict the information they gave me by official letter. These contradictions have to be explained. They gave the committee one answer, and then gave the press a contradictory answer; an answer contradictory to the truth.

They owe that to us. They have already disregarded the Senate. They have disregarded Parliament. We did not summons them to appear before the committee out of respect for them, but perhaps we should. We may try to do so when we resume.

If we keep making excuses for those who are treating the Senate with contempt, there is no point in us being here. I will wait and take my chances on what the answer will be, if that meets with the approval of honourable senators.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: I am not objecting to the motion, I am just saying that due to the way it is worded Senator Marshall may not be satisfied with the answer.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It might be very interesting to see what answers the government does not give. That in itself will be extremely revealing. Once we know what the government does not want to give us, maybe we can proceed to find out how we can get that information. Senator Marshall is right. If they have given statements and letters to other people and contradicted some of the things they have said to him or his committee, we ought to know that. Let us find out what they can give us.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH ORDER OF THE SENATE—MATTER REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice of June 21, 1993, moved:

> THAT the matter of the government's failure to comply with the order of the Senate dated February 4, 1993, viz:
> > THAT, within 60 days of the adoption of this motion, the Leader of the Government shall provide the Senate with the response of the Government to the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: The Valour and The Horror, tabled in the Senate January 25th, 1993, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders; and,
> THAT the committee be instructed to report within 60 days upon whether this failure constituted contempt of the Senate.

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am trying to be helpful. Senator Marshall is moving that the committee be instructed to report within 60 days. If it is 60 days from now, that is an impossible task because the committee will not be meeting before we reconvene in the fall, at the earliest. It is to be helpful that I point this out. Perhaps the senator could change his motion to make it more flexible at least.

Senator Marshall: I realize that now.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: At the time you did it, it made sense.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps Senator Marshall would agree to saying 60 days from the beginning of the next session, or the formation of the committee.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Perhaps it should be 90 days.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed that the motion be amended to that effect?

Senator Molgat: We might agree on 60 days from the formation of the committee in the next session.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The point has come up — and I am not sure to what extent it is academic or to what extent it is real — as to whether we can bind a future Parliament. Perhaps we need not get into that. We can just put the motion and it will be up to the committee to decide on that matter.

Senator Molgat: They will know our intent.

Motion agreed to, as amended.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 28, 1993 at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, July 12, 1993

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk Assistant of the Senate has received a certificate from the Registrar General of Canada showing that the following person has been summoned to the Senate:

Gerry St. Germain

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker, having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and was seated:

Hon. Gerry St. Germain, of Maple Ridge, British Columbia, introduced between Honourable Lowell Murray and Honourable Terry Stratton.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk Assistant of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

PRIVILEGES, STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

REPRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF RULES OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform you that following the adoption of the amendments contained in the Third and Fourth Reports of the Standing Committee on Privileges, Standing Rules and Orders, the Rules of the Senate were reprinted with a new index and distributed to all honourable senators' offices and have also been inserted in the rule books in your desks in the chamber.

SENATORS' STATEMENTS

THE HONOURABLE GERRY ST. GERMAIN

WELCOME TO SENATE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, permit me to take just a minute of your time to extend a warm welcome to our newest senator, the Honourable Gerry St. Germain from the province of British Columbia, whose appointment brings the Senate to its full complement. The Honourable Senator St. Germain is a Privy Councillor, former minister of the Crown, a member for five years of the House of Commons, a businessman, a young man.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I am confident that he will make an excellent contribution to Parliament and to the wellbeing of his fellow Canadians. Therefore, I wish him a warm welcome.

[English]

I am sure he will prove to be a valued and esteemed colleague and one who will make a great contribution to the deliberations of Parliament and to the welfare of the country.

THE SENATE

LIVING EXPENSE ALLOWANCE—PARALLEL ACTION PROPOSED FOR HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I know I reflect the views of most honourable senators when I welcome to this chamber, many for the very first time, members of the press gallery.

We hope that finding your way here was not too onerous a challenge. Welcome to the Senate, and may you come more often in the future.

Honourable senators in recent days the Vancouver Sun newspaper has carried a reply coupon inviting its readers to express their views regarding the Senate; whether it should be reformed or abolished, along with a question pertaining to the Senate's living expenses proposal.

In the spirit of Voltaire, I may not agree with all aspects of the Sun's initiative or with the precise wording of its questionnaire, but I shall defend the right of the Sun to seek the views of its readers in any form that the Sun may choose. Indeed, it is in that spirit that I brought to Ottawa this afternoon a box of over 4,000 replies received by the Sun.

They have been delivered to the office of the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate who was gracious enough to receive them.

Whether the perceptions of the Sun's readers are valid, most of the replies are very angry — reflecting the status today of politicians of all parties and those who serve in all levels of public life.

Honourable colleagues, we have much work to do to re-establish respect and confidence in the parliamentary and political system. By the time this evening is over, may I express the hope that the proposed Senate accommodation allowance will be rescinded and that there will be early parallel action in the other chamber of Parliament to give up the expense allowances they are currently paid. Action by both chambers would constitute recognition of a practical and symbolic nature to the people of Canada that members of both houses understand some of the problems besetting Canadians in all parts of the nation. I urge all of the national party leaders particularly to show leadership here by example and be the first to come forward and make this sacrifice; to come forward in support of these proposed parallel actions of restraint. I hope that I may speak to this question later in debate.

TRANSPORTATION

STATUS OF CANADIAN RAILWAY LINE ABANDONMENTS—PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, as you know, Canada's railways are faced with a situation that threatens their very survival on the North American market. Because of this crisis situation, our carriers will have to bring their labour costs and productivity levels more in line with those of the trucking industry and U.S. railways, and drastically reduce their infrastructure costs.

[English]

In pursuing this latter element, railways in Canada have been attempting to abandon and\or sell off components of their networks. Nowhere has this been more evident than in Atlantic Canada. Currently, CN is attempting to sell the Truro-Sydney line in Nova Scotia and CP is seeking to abandon its line between Sherbrooke, Quebec and Saint John, New Brunswick.

While it must be recognized that Canadian railways should have the freedom to manage their operations in an efficient and competitive manner, it also must be acknowledged that public interest implications and impacts on regional economies have to be considered prior to allowing abandonments to take place. One way to accomplish this is through the determination of an essential national rail network prior to any major rail rationalization.

For the past 18 months, a federal-provincial task force has been working on the development of such a network. While there has been no indication of when the task force will complete its work, the House of Commons Transport Committee suggested that, because of the crisis facing our rail carriers, this should be accomplished within one year. To this end they recommended that the Minister of Transport place a moratorium on all abandonment applications for secondary and main line trackage until a basic national rail network has been established. This is to be done by July 1, 1994.

At that time, the House of Commons Committee suggested that the rail abandonment could be accelerated, but that a broad and rigorous public interest test be applied to such abandonments.

Because of the importance of these matters to the economy of Atlantic Canada, this moratorium is urgently needed before any further abandonments take place. During this period, I think we must take the opportunity to examine what the public interest is and how it can be assessed when rail lines come up for abandonment.

We have been attempting to develop a coherent and coordinated transportation policy since Confederation. While some have said that this is not realistic, others have stated that we have no choice but to develop such a policy because the survival of the industry depends upon it. Geography, great diversity and the federal structure have all played a role in making it difficult to achieve a fair balance between the forces of competition and the protection of the public interest.

In closing, colleagues, as part of this policy development, I believe the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications can play a significant role in the development of such a policy, particularly in the area of public interest issues as they relate to rail line abandonment. To this end, I propose that the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications undertake a study of the broad public interest implications of rail line abandonments, with particular reference to the possible impact on Atlantic Canada and that this report form part of the basis for assessing whether or not a rail line be abandoned.

At the appropriate time later on today, I will present a motion to that effect, and I will be seeking leave so that this matter can be dealt with urgently, tonight, so that we can start this in New Brunswick, Quebec, and possibly elsewhere later on this summer.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Simard and welcome him aboard our train. Senator Graham and I have been debating this very issue for the last two years by way of inquiry and special studies in committee. This is the first time in those two years that we have had someone over there jump aboard our train.

I welcome Senator Simard. I believe his motives are basically honest. I sincerely regret that he did not listen to our numerous appeals in the past months respecting this issue of rail line closure and abandonment. Nevertheless, he has seen the light, and I say "Bravo".

However, I am not sure I detect the will over there to get the committee going this summer. We will see. We will see.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I have given written notice to the clerk that I intend to raise a question of privilege later today.

The question of privilege regards a letter to the editor of Saturday Night magazine written by Mr. R. A. Pattillo, CBC Vice-president of Communications, Toronto, Ontario. In the letter, printed in the July/August 1993 issue of Saturday Night, Mr. Pattillo accuses me of dishonesty. He refers to an aide-mémoire my office prepared regarding a meeting between Mr. Pattillo, myself and two staff members.

• (2010)

Mr. Pattillo states in his letter that the aide-mémoire "...seems to have been written long after the event and apparently from bad memory (but powerful, imaginative capabilities.)..."

Honourable senators, copious notes were taken by staff members during the October 2, 1992 meeting with Mr. Pattillo. A three-page "note to file" regarding the meeting was prepared the same day. In addition, the aide-mémoire was prepared on November 20, 1992 detailing, in chronological order, exchanges between my office and CBC officials. The aide-mémoire documents exchanges of correspondence, telephone calls, for which detailed notes to file exist, and notes to file regarding meetings.

In light of this, I believe Mr. Pattillo's accusation constitutes a breach of my privileges as a parliamentarian. As such, I will rise on a question of privilege later this evening.

THE HONOURABLE GERRY ST. GERMAIN

WELCOME TO SENATE

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, like all of you, I took note of the admission of a new senator, a colleague and friend, Mr. Gerry St. Germain. He will sit next to me for several years, or at least for as many years as Canadians, and only Canadians, will allow the Senate to exist.

I know Mr. Gerry St. Germain very well. It might interest honourable senators and perhaps even members of the press, with whom I always hope to maintain good relations, to know that he was a member, with Francis Fox, of the commission set up in 1989 to look into allowances for members of Parliament.

[English]

I hope none of you will be too scared to note that among his multiplicity of recommendations, there was one to reduce the number of days of excuse from 21 per session to seven per year and that the fine should go from $60 to $500 per day per absence.

A report of this kind would provide a good topic for us to discuss this summer.

[Translation]

A report was also produced by William Clark and Colleen Campbell in 1985, and I want to mention it because some honourable senators may not have had the honour and pleasure of knowing them. I get the feeling that nobody has ever read either of those reports or that very little attention was paid to them. I hope that, in view of all that is going on and has brought us back here tonight—and I believe it was called for—the people concerned will feel compelled to read, if not the entire reports, at least their recommendations. In fact, I think that it is all in there.

I am very happy to welcome our new colleague. I am not the official opposition, but a member of the opposition. Let it be known again that I am a member of the opposition. I think it is fitting for a senator from the opposition to bid him a hearty welcome.

As for my honourable friend, Senator Simard, I would like to tell him that I for one am not only talking about the train, because I see him very often on the train between Montreal and Ottawa. Every one knows that I have never taken the plane to Montreal in 30 years. Over these 30 years, I no doubt have been the member of Parliament who has used the train the most often. And now that I am a senator I am not about to stop using it, especially since I do not own a car.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FIFTY-SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Chairperson of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

FIFTY-SECOND REPORT

Your Committee has re-considered its recommendation respecting the recently established policy to reimburse Senators up to $6,000 annually for reasonable travel expenses for their personal accommodation while on travel status in Ottawa. The original recommendation, approved by a majority of the members of this Committee, was presented to the Senate in the Fifty-first Report of the Committee on June 21, 1993, and adopted by the Senate on June 23, 1993.

Your Committee now recommends that the policy be cancelled effective July 1st, 1993.

Respectfully submitted,

THÉRÈSE LAVOIE-ROUX
Chairperson

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Lavoie-Roux: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(g), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government in the Senate): Honourable senators, by invoking rule 17(1), I started the process that has brought us back here tonight. The reasons that motivate this decision are well known, so there is no need to enumerate them.

I would like to point out, however, that the recall of the Senate this evening was supported by a very broad consensus among Conservative senators, and from my consultations with the Leader of the Opposition I have every reason to believe that the same consensus exists among Liberal senators.

The vote on June 23, by which the fifty-first report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration was adopted, provoked a very negative response from Canadian public opinion.

As I bring this matter before you again, I may say that, first of all, the results on June 23 were very close — 26 to 24, with 8 abstentions — and, second, that the vote was held while nearly half the members of this House were absent.

In the circumstances and considering public opinion, it is not surprising that during the past two weeks, many senators have spoken out in favour of a recall of the Senate and of revoking the decision made on June 23.

I do not intend to offer a lengthy analysis of public opinion this evening. Nevertheless, there are three aspects we should consider in this debate on the report tabled by Senator Lavoie-Roux.

First of all, there is the question of timing. The Canadian economy, which went through the painful experience of a cyclical recession, is also being forced to cope with global restructuring, a process that is only partially completed. In the course of restructuring, jobs, companies and entire industries may disappear, not temporarily, as during a cyclical recession, but permanently. There will of course be some very positive aspects for Canada, but the transition is difficult for thousands of our fellow citizens. The need to relieve the public debt burden has led to numerous cuts in funding for services, and for federal, provincial and municipal programs.

Parliament has imposed a wage freeze on collective bargaining in the Public Service, and many provinces, including Ontario, have had to resort to even more drastic policies in the public sector.

All international experts may be saying that in the near future, Canada will experience prosperity and growth unequalled by any G-7 country, and all the figures may support this forecast, but the prevailing psychology in Canada today is one of economic insecurity. Nowhere is this psychology more obvious than in the slow recovery of consumer spending, something that baffles many economists.

People who feel insecure about the future are upset when parliamentarians exercise the right to improve their own living and working conditions. Their protests are impervious to any argument, justification or logic. That is pretty clear.

In addition to the current state of the economy and the less than confident attitude of Canadians, there is a second aspect of the question of timing, to which I referred in my speech on June 23.

It is a matter of dealing separately with only one aspect of allowances and expenses, namely accommodation expenses. I know that the House of Commons set a precedent in 1990. I also know that this initiative, as well as the recommendation approved by the Senate on June 23, was the result of the fact that Parliament has not addressed the global issue since 1981. Nevertheless, this is not the traditional way, nor the most logical one, of dealing with these issues, especially since we know that after the general election expected this fall, the government will have to appoint an independent commission to review all the allowances and expenses of parliamentarians.

[English]

As I pointed out in my intervention in the debate of June 23, the independent commission will have the benefit of a technical study of overall remuneration of senators and MPs announced on May 12 by the then President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Gilles Loiselle. The study is to examine pensions, salaries, allowances and benefits. Information will be gathered on equivalent jobs in public life in Canada and abroad. The views of current and former members of both houses will be sought and the report will outline options for adjusting the pay and benefits package.

This is important documentation that will be ready for the commissioners who must be appointed after the election. The mandate of this technical study is obviously broad enough to encompass all the issues discussed over the past several weeks in connection with the remunerations and expense allowances of MPs and senators.

[Translation]

Thirdly, honourable senators, the vote held on June 23 triggered, or should I say revived, the oldest debate in our history, namely the one surrounding the role and the very existence of the Senate. Never has there been such support in favour of abolishing the Senate. Some commentators are demanding that a referendum be held on that particular issue during the next federal election.

I do not think it would be feasible to reopen the constitutional package in the near future. Whatever the results of such a referendum, a constitutional amendment to abolish the Senate would have to be approved by eleven governments and their legislatures. We have to be realistic. As soon as the eleven premiers got together, constitutional negotiations would be reopened.

The Senate does exist. The Senate will continue to exist in the foreseeable future, with all the powers it has been granted by the 1867 Constitution. That is the dilemma we have to resolve. As far as I am concerned, I still think it would be inappropriate in a modern democratic society to have a Senate with all the same legislative powers a House of Lords enjoyed in the 19th century.

I continue to support our former colleagues, especially senators Hayden and Croll, who have suggested pre-study of government bills and various special royal commissions to study important public policy issues.

[English]

• (2030)

The policy studies that special Senate committees conducted did not gather dust. Many of them provided the impetus for important reforms in social policy, tax policy, economic and regional policy, and foreign policy. The analyses and the recommendations of such studies under Senators Croll, Hayden, McGrand, van Roggen, Everett and others are truly impressive.

I am sure there are other approaches to the role of the Senate in today's society. The point is that we have to accept our individual responsibilities as office holders and our collective responsibility as an institution to serve the national interest. I continue to believe that while the powerful nineteenth century Senate is an anachronism in a modern democratic society and that we must therefore exercise considerable restraint in the exercise of our power, senators, individually and collectively, can make a constructive contribution to and have a positive influence on the parliamentary process and the democratic process.

Senator Robichaud: You bet!

Senator Murray: The country does not lack for problems to engage the attention, the talents and the experience of members of this place. Between now and the opening of a new Parliament, we have an opportunity to reflect on this and to lay some plans for the future.

Meanwhile, let us tonight acknowledge that the Senate made a mistake on June 23 and that public opinion on a matter of this kind must always be respected.

A number of those who abstained on June 23 immediately regretted their abstentions. A great number of the 45 senators who were absent wished they had remained in Ottawa for the vote. The important thing now is for the Senate, with a large attendance tonight — and I hope by a large majority — to undo the decision of June 23 by adopting the report now before us. In doing so, we will affirm our respect for public opinion on this matter.

In a democracy, honourable senators, this is surely never a humiliating thing to do, but rather always the right thing to do — the proper and responsible course for all who hold public office.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, a poet might describe tonight's session of the Senate as the "Session of the Charred Lightning Rods", but this is a night not for poets but for pragmatists.

Senator Murray made many appropriate and important points: I quarrel with very few of them.

Honourable senators, I believe Canadians welcome the reconsideration of our earlier decision. After all, they have asked us to be here. Unfortunately, in the square miles of newsprint and tank cars of ink and electronic energy spent on this subject, I never saw the report itself — the one we adopted — reproduced. So many may have formed their judgment on the basis of an interpretation of the report rather than on the wording of the report itself.

For anyone interested, for the record and, perhaps, reflection or M.A. theses, the actual report can be found at page 2242 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of June 23, 1993.

As Senator Kenny, a member of the committee, told us on the day of the vote, a four-member bi-partisan steering committee — Senators Hébert, Kenny, Doody and Kelly — had been looking at a way to reimburse out-of-town senators for accommodation expenses in Ottawa. The report we adopted here in the Senate on June 23 last represents the consensus reached by the committee.

Though this is the report, I am not so naive as to forget what we are constantly told: The facts are not the reality of politics; perception is. It is this maxim that transformed the reality of a $6,000 limit on reimbursement for some senators into the perception of a $6,000 "raise", "bonus", "tax-free allowance" for us all.

On the merits, honourable senators, I believe it is a good thing for us to yield to public opinion, particularly where that opinion is as widespread and adamant as the one based on those perceptions. The official opposition in the Senate, even when enjoying a majority in this chamber, never embarked on a course of action in the face of, or the teeth of, public opinion. At this time, there is certainly no reason to change that approach. If anything, there is good reason to faithfully adhere to it.

On June 23, the Senate accepted a proposal from the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. Many in this chamber, including the slim majority present that day, believed the recommendation had merit. Canadians, however, disagreed. Whether their disagreement is based on information or misinformation is irrelevant. Frankly, if I, as a non-senator, had relied solely on some of the reports that have appeared on this matter, I too would be outraged and would have joined in this latest outbreak of anti-Senatism just as fiercely as they have.

The reality we face is a public which vehemently opposes what was done. The time for explanations and justification has passed. Our duty is to make the right decision, and Canadians have made clear what they consider to be the right decision. I intend to respect their wishes and vote for adoption of the new report.

One added point: Personally, and because public attention is now focused on the subject, I believe Canadians' rage would be better directed to the now obsolete tax-free expense allowance of $10,000 for senators and $20,000 for members of the House of Commons. That tax-free allowance is something we politicians have that other Canadians do not. Most Canadians think it reasonable to be reimbursed for their out-of-pocket expenses, but not to have a tax-free expense allowance lump sum which they — average Canadians — do not get.

Politicians, whether in the Senate or the House of Commons, should be reimbursed for legitimate expenses on the same basis as any other Canadian. Canadian taxpayers, I believe, support reasonable compensation for everyone and reasonable expense reimbursement for anyone, including law makers. What they object to is special perks for politicians that other Canadians do not receive and cannot award themselves, as can lawmakers.

Honourable senators, I certainly hope that after the election one of the first things the new government does is review the whole subject of expenses and reimbursement for parliamentarians to bring them in line with the system that applies to average Canadians. Until that happens, the potential for highly charged public reaction, like the one that brought us here tonight, will be a dangerous and unnecessary threat.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, being the odd person out is nothing new for me. I voted in favour of the report presented by the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. I must say that the reimbursement would be of no great benefit to me. God willing, in two-and-a-half years or a few more months, I will be out of here. I voted in favour of the report because I believed — and I still believe — it was the right thing to do. If you check what I said that evening, you will read that I said that the media and the people of Canada would make an issue out of it.

• (2040)

I do not hold anything against the media.I believe that they reported by and large what they heard and what they have been hearing for a number of months. But let us be honest. No one can quarrel with or question the statement made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, or the statement made by my leader. I know where the leader of my party stands on this. But the leader of my party has not been sitting here for 13 years.

I ask myself: What is it that we want? Who do the people of Canada want to have representing them in this house? Do we want a system in which only the wealthy can afford to be senators?

The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate has stated his position regarding the tax-free allowance. I agree with him. I believe that politicians and legislators have to be forthright. The Canadian people want their representatives to be paid in a manner in which they can perform their duties.

Since June 23, when I went back to my home province, I have accepted invitations from radio stations and TV stations to explain my position. I do not mind telling my colleagues that not all the calls I received were kind and approving. However, I have had a number of calls and letters stating that the position I was taking, while not popular, should be understandable.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate have just said that there was almost a revolt in Canada. I do not think we should get carried away. I criss-crossed this country with the Senate committee dealing with UI and the prices of drugs and I received thousands and thousands of letters — in fact, boxfuls of letters — supporting our position on that subject, opposing what the government was doing. But the government proceeded. They had a majority. They had the legal right to do it and they did. In this case, I have had calls from Vancouver to St. John's, Newfoundland. In the last 13 years I did not get many of those — I only received calls when I served on two of those committees.

In my office this afternoon I counted 43 letters I received from Canadian taxpayers. I was surprised. I know that there is nothing I can say that will change the minds of the people who are here and who will vote, which is your right. You feel that it is your duty to reverse the decision that was taken by a majority of senators present on June 23. I am sorry, but I felt in my conscience on June 23 that the way I voted was the proper way to vote. I have seen nothing in the last two weeks that has caused me to change my mind.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I appreciate the remarks made by the Honourable Senator Thériault, who has just resumed his seat, when he referred to his participation in a CBC radio program. I heard that program. The questions were designed to be awkward for him, but I thought that he handled them fairly and honestly. I ended up with a great deal of respect for the way he handled himself and answered the questions. Had we started out that way, perhaps we would not be in this situation today.

When the vote occurred on the committee report, I voted against it. It was not that I felt senators did not need it. I know there are those in the Senate who do not even need their paycheque.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Thank you, Senator Phillips!

Senator Phillips: But then there are others who are feeling the financial pinch. I have a great deal of sympathy for them and can understand their request.

My main reason for voting against the report was the fact that parliamentary salaries, expense allowances and perks are to undergo review immediately following the next election.

I was pleased to hear Senator Murray refer to that review in his remarks. If I understood him correctly, Senator Murray indicated that people would be brought in from outside and the review committee would not be composed of defeated members of Parliament, as has been the practice in the past.

Senator MacEachen: Do not ask him; ask someone over here!

Senator Phillips: If it makes you feel any better, Senator MacEachen, I will be glad to ask for the same assurance from you.

I felt rather annoyed and then angered that, even though I did not vote for the measure, I got tarred with the same brush as everyone else. That includes our party leaders — all parties, not just my party. They all jumped on the band wagon to condemn us. The members of the other place are really hypocrites in the way they condemned the allowance. I must be careful, as I am beginning to use the media term, "pay-raise". It is an expense allowance. I would point out to honourable senators that this action was carried out in the House of Commons in secrecy on October 1, 1990, whereas our efforts were carried out in an open committee. One of the members of the NDP, Mr. Riis, who loves to criticize the Senate, has criticized us for this action, yet he was the sponsor of that motion in the other place.

While none of the leaders or members of the other place referred to the fact that they have been drawing $6,000 a year since 1990, I was also surprised that they did not mention the fact, which I was unaware of until I read the article by Mr. Westin in, I believe, last Saturday's Ottawa Citizen entitled, "If you are fed up with Senate spending, fax your M.P.". They have voted themselves $770,000 to provide bedside faxes, both at home and in Ottawa.

It is rather strange that the amount of money voted by the Senate will destroy the Canadian economy but the $770,000 for bedside fax machines has no effect whatsoever on the economy. They remind me of two- or three-year-old children who like to take a favourite toy, probably a teddy bear, to bed with them to comfort them when the lights are turned out. The members down the hall seem to need fax machines to replace teddy bears. Perhaps they look on the fax machine as an electronic teddy bear.

I am sure all honourable senators will be pleased to hear that I am attempting to abbreviate my notes.

However, I would like to refer to the dinner attended by the Prime Minister and the premiers in Vancouver last weekend. A Challenger jet flew three Atlantic premiers to Vancouver. A Challenger jet costs approximately $6,500 an hour to operate. In other words, the return trip of the three premiers was about $72,000. Throw in the limousines and the hotel suites and that figure would reach $78,000. If we include the costs of transporting the other premiers you could easily conclude that the dinner cost $1 million or $100,000 a plate. That is a pretty expensive meal.

Senator Perrault: It was tasty though.

Senator Phillips: Small business firms who complain of high taxes would have held a telephone conference call. Surely some of the premiers have heard of telephone conference calls. They could have accomplished the same thing with a telephone conference call because they came out with the same old announcement we have been hearing for the past 15 to 20 years: That the Canadian economy needs to pick up and we must provide more jobs. That could have been done by a telephone call.

I was pleased to see that a committee of the Ottawa City Council introduced a motion asking for the abolition of the Senate. One councillor who voted for that motion was Councillor O'Neill, who, I believe, is deputy mayor. Honourable senators might be interested to know what her tax free expenses are. As a city councillor, she receives approximately $10,000, and for serving on Regional Council, she receives over $7,000, for a total of $17,250. I presume she lives in the city and has no outside expenses.

Of course, we have had the usual Senate bashing from the premiers. Although it was my intention to mention various premiers, for the sake of brevity I will omit doing so. However, I would state that the Senate costs $50 million per year to run, or approximately $2 per capita. If the premiers are of the opinion that saving $2 per capita by abolishing the Senate will revive the Canadian economy, I do not think they are being very helpful.

Senator Thériault: The poor will stay poorer for a longer time.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators I had intended to move an amendment but, in view of the statement made by my leader about the coming review, I will not do so.

I would, however, draw a comparison between the tax-free allowance received by a member of the House of Commons and that received by a senator. I must say that this is over a five-year period, which is the life of this Parliament and that some of the figures are my own calculations and probably "guesstimates", because the House of Commons refuses to supply the information. I found that conduct rather surprising. The body that is supposed to be responsible for supervising the public purse has refused to provide any information on the operation of its own chamber. The tax-free allowance for a member of the House of Commons over the past five years has been $131,000. For each senator it has been $48,500. For payment of their meals, I estimate they have received $43 per day for the past 150 days, for a total of $6,900. Senators have received nothing.

• (2100)

In April, 1990 they introduced $1,000 a year miscellaneous, and that amounts to $4,000. Senators received zero.

We then come to the item that has caused such an uproar throughout the nation when it came to the Senate. The House of Commons has been receiving that since October 1, 1990; $6,000 multiplied by four is $24,000. This totals $165,000, and senators have received $48,000.

If anybody pauses and compares these figures, they will see why the occasional senator is feeling the pinch.

I would also point out to you that the same document gives their expense accounts for their offices. An urban/rural member gets $177,600 per year, and that totals in excess of $800,000 and makes a total in excess of $1 million during the five years.

Honourable senators, is it any wonder that a few of us on this side are beginning to get a little tired of the criticism originating down the hall?

The public concensus is that we do not do any constituency work. I would point out that Senator Marshall has an active file of 1,200 to 1,400 veterans who have appealed to him. Most of them have already gone to their MPs and failed, and then, because of his excellent work in Veterans Affairs, they have applied to him for assistance. You would be surprised, honourable senators, how often they do receive pensions.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to the rules, Senator Phillips has run out of time. As usual, if there is unanimous agreement for him to carry on —

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Phillips: If I had not spent so much time trying to be brief, I would have already finished my remarks.

I would like to ask a few questions and hope that someone in the House of Commons will answer them, or maybe even some of the media may ask the members of the House of Commons. I would like to know how many of them took the $6,000 travelling allowance. I would like to know how many of them took advantage of the $43 a day for meals. I would like to know the total cost of that.

Our expenses, including our salary, our travelling expenses and our one secretary, are published each year. Is there any good valid reason why the same practice should not be followed in the House of Commons? I hope it will be.

In the last Conservative leadership, all of the candidates were committed to deficit reduction. Opposition party leaders have said they are committed to deficit reduction. It is my firm belief that they must lead by example. There are thousands of people out there who are worried about their jobs. They are facing salary roll-backs. Members of my own family are facing that difficulty, so I can understand that feeling. I hope that the leaders of the three parties and the members of the other place will feel some moral obligation to give some thought to rescinding, if not totally, at least on a voluntary basis, that $6,000 travelling allowance.

There is too much difference between the expenses allowed to senators and members of the House of Commons. I would ask my leader to make those figures known to the commission. The last time the two commissioners were appointed by the government to review the salaries and expenses, they did not even want to visit the Senate and discuss that with us. I can recall that we had to extend an invitation to them on several occasions. I would not want that to happen again with this committee, and I hope you will be able to give us an assurance that it will not.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I will make some very temperate remarks, and I will not be long and prolonged.

The last time I spoke on this, I noted that some members of the Press Gallery were here for the first time, and we were glad they came. I have been informed that a number of the media representatives are from out of the city. I only hope that their employers provided them with a liveable per diem in order to survive here in Ottawa and a budget that covers their expenses.

I support rescinding the action taken the other day. The message which I predict will be sent this evening will be very clear: In view of the economic situation of the nation, honourable senators, at least most of them, do not believe that the time is right to establish accommodation allowances even though, unlike Commons allowances, they would have been only for senators actually present and working and would require receipts.

There was a big difference between the Commons plan and this proposed Senate plan. We would have had to be here and working to qualify for accommodation allowances. In the other chamber, that is not the case.

The decision which will be taken by the Senate in a few minutes does not mean these allowance are not needed by any senators. Indeed, the whole question of pay allowances and services for Parliamentarians in both houses should be addressed by the next Parliament. I am reassured tonight, as I think all of us are, by the eloquent statement by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Perhaps we need input from a citizens' committee. I think that was something touched upon by the leader; the possibility of having some outside and independent advice as far as parliamentary allowances and services are concerned.

Honourable senators, I will not get into the detail of vaious programs because the subject was covered very well by Senator Phillips, but you will recall that on April 1, 1991, all members of the other place were awarded this $6,000 tax-free amount to help cover their accommodation costs in Ottawa. They told the Commons they could not survive unless they got the $6,000 in addition to the $22,000. They said it was becoming impossible. Whether they report for work or whether they are absent, they get the money.

Interestingly enough, the measure was discussed and approved by representatives of all parties in the committee, closed to the media and closed to the public. The representative on the committee from British Columbia was Nelson Riis of the New Democratic Party, who these days condemns the Senate in an outrageous fashion. During the GST debate, Mr. Riis used to come over every afternoon like a friendly spaniel and say, "You senators are doing a marvellous job in your fight on the GST." I don't know what happened on the way back to Kamloops.

When their accommodation allowance was established, there was no debate in the other place, unlike the Senate debate which took place a few days ago, a debate which has precipitated this sitting. Significantly, all members of the Commons have received this $6,000 amount. Since April 1, 1991, it is estimated that almost $2.2 million has been transferred from the taxpayers' pockets to members of the other place to cover their accommodation costs, dollars which the members of the other place say they urgently require if they are to survive in Ottawa. Try surviving on the tax-free allowance available to senators.

Accounts of the meetings held to take the decision in the Commons make for fascinating reading. One member of the Internal Economy Committee of the Commons, when criticized for the secrecy surrounding the increase, said this about the Board of Internal Economy, and I quote his exact words:

> The board operates like the Treasury Board...We oversee the parliamentary staff and much of it is personnel related. You wouldn't ask the Treasury Board to open their meetings, would you?

Another member of the Internal Economy Committee said:

> There's a great amount of negotiating and bargaining going on...You get a lot of posturing and image-protecting when meetings go public...

In effect, he is saying, "Keep the press out." Something the Senate did not do. They brought the press in.

I have searched the records diligently and it appears that all members of the other place have been able to restrain their anger and their outrage at being awarded this $6,000. At the very least, they have succeeded rather well in muting their protests.

I must say that I was particularly surprised to note that one of the eager and grateful recipients of this accommodation allowance is the leader of one of Canada's national parties who, like Joan of Arc, announced yesterday that she is heading a crusade against the "greedy" Senate for daring to claim a much more modest amount for their accommodation needs in Ottawa for working senators. Her personal representative on the Internal Economy Committee of the House of Commons was one of the prime architects for getting the $6,000 passed by that committee with little media attention.

By contrast, senators are in a much more difficult position. They are left with a $10,000 tax-free allowance which must cover everything. They have no offices in the areas in which they represent. I am sure that 80 per cent of the media do not realize that, unlike members of the House of Comons, there are no office facilities for senators in the various provinces which they are supposed to represent. Senators have only 37 per cent of the amount made available for Commons' members for their living costs. Let us put this matter before the committee which is being contemplated and have them come with their report.

Members of the other place, some of whom have expressed in moving terms their concerns regarding the poor, the unemployed and the dispossessed, have a real opportunity now. They have been writing letters to many people in the Senate saying how outraged they are about the idea that the senators had voted themselves up to $6,000 extra for Ottawa accomodations.

Now these members have a great opportunity. After this evening, I know they will wish to take parallel action in their chamber, in concert or as individuals, by relinquishing their accommodation allowances at least for the time being and, most certainly, until a review of parliamentary salaries and benefits can take place. The savings realized would amount to something like $1.5 million a year. Perhaps we could use the money to help good causes like battered spouses and food banks. Goodness knows there are enough good causes out there.

We would then have both houses working together in a symbolic and, yes, a practical gesture to the people of Canada that members of both houses understand some of the problems besetting Canadians in all parts of the nation.

I urge all national party leaders, including my own, the leader of the Liberal Party, by example, to be the first to come forward to make this sacrifice, to come forward in support of this proposed parallel action of restraint. To those MPs who have written to members of this caucus and members of the caucus opposite expressing their outrage and concern with the Senate action of a few days ago, may I urge them, too, to take leadership roles in the restraint campaign. Indeed, some of them may be willing to give up more than their $6,000 tax free accommodation allowance.

Even with their sacrifice of $6,000, our friends in the other place should still be able to scrape by with their minimum $22,000 tax-free allowance which would remain, together with prime ministerial, party leader, ministerial, and other additional benefits for certain parliamentarians. There is a great opportunity now for the other chamber to act.

Before this evening is over, I can only express the hope — and it may be impossible — that there will be unanimous consent for a resolution that I have drafted. It states:

> THAT, in recognition of the real economic distress being suffered by many Canadians in all provinces at the present time, and considering that there is a special need for those who serve in Parliament to demonstrate their concern practically and symbolically, and considering that, in response to these considerations, the Senate of Canada has cancelled the proposal to pay some Senators up to a maximum of $6,000 per annum as a tax-free travel allowance upon presentation of receipts, a message be sent by the Senate to the House of Commons inviting that House to rescind the tax-free accommodation and living allowance of $6,000 per annum which, since April 1, 1991, has been available to all members of that House.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before we hear Senator Jessiman, I must tell Senator Perrault that we are now debating a motion to adopt the report. I know that he has not moved an amendment but, rather, suggested the text of a resolution which, I think, should properly be proposed under Notice of Inquiries.

Senator Perrault: I will be pleased to move it at the appropriate time.

Hon. Duncan J. Jessiman: Honourable senators, when this matter of the $6,000 expense allowance was discussed on June 23, I said in this chamber that, if it came to a vote, I would abstain. I also said that I thought that the $6,000 should be paid only to those senators who have expenses in excess of $10,100, and to no one else.

Unfortunately, my suggestion was not considered and the motion was passed unamended, much to the embarrassment of us all. Whether or not my amendment had passed that day and we would have had the same results, I cannot say.

I will explain later in my remarks why the $6,000 motion, as passed, was in fact a money grab for some honourable senators. I do not think they understood that or appreciated it at the time, and they may not even now. I hope when I am finished they will understand.

I will also explain that for those senators who have expenses in Ottawa that exceed $10,100, this $6,000 of extra expense allowance would save them from their pocket $2 for each dollar of expense that their expenses exceed $10,100.

Was I correct in abstaining? Some have written me and said that those of us who abstained and those of you who chose to be absent when this vote was taken are worse than those who stood up and were counted, even those who voted for the motion. Notwithstanding what others have said, my conscience is clear in what I did in abstaining. At the time, I did not fully understand the implications of the motion.

I certainly was told that it was costing some senators for their expenses in Ottawa more than the $10,100 given as an expense allowance. I was particularly impressed with Senator Graham's remarks. I also knew at that time that this was being perceived as a money grab by all senators. There was more to this than I really understood. I therefore abstained. I am glad I did.

It gave me the opportunity to look into this matter. What I found is most revealing.

This sitting of the Senate to reconsider the granting of the $6,000 expense allowance is not a matter that should be dealt with lightly. Although I say at the outset that I shall vote to rescind the present $6,000 expense allowance as it presently stands, I also want to explain how the present $10,100 tax-free expense allowance is generous to some of our honourable senators and extremely costly to others.

Since the vote was taken on June 23, 1993, I have read a list of material respecting the role of senators in Canada. I have perused the applicable sections of the Parliament Act of Canada respecting sessional allowances and expenses for senators and members of Parliament. I have read reports of the two commissions held by virtue of section 68 of the Parliament of Canada Act dealing specifically with the adequacy of payment to members of the House of Commons and to senators, namely the report of the commission to reduce salaries of members of the House of Commons and senators, chaired by William C. Clark and Colleen Campbell, the former members of Parliament referred to by Senator Prud'homme. Then the commission to review allowances of members of Parliament was chaired by Honourable Gerry St. Germain, now an honourable senator. Also sitting on that commission was the Honourable Francis Fox. Their report was tabled in the House on October 13, 1989.

I compiled a summary of what the members of the House of Commons and senators received by way of sessional allowances and expense allowances from 1974 to 1993 inclusive and also referred back to 1945 as well. In this summary, I have included the special $6,000 accommodation allowance recommended by the St. Germain commission and given to the members of the House of Commons by their board of internal economy in October 1990.

I attempted through the Library of Parliament to get copies of the minutes of that Commons board of internal economy respecting the $6,000. The answer I received was that the Library does have minutes of the board of internal economy of the Senate, but although the Library has asked the Commons for such minutes from their side, the minutes have never been received.

I did not include in this summary of expenses a per diem allowance of $13.50 given to members of the House of Commons on April 1, 1993, as I just learned of that today.

I re-read Hansard in respect of the comments of those honourable senators who spoke on the matter on June 23. I perused editorial comments respecting the Senate from the Globe and Mail and other publications since June 1, 1993, the day after I was sworn into this honourable chamber.

I considered the Supreme Court of Canada reasons for judgment in the case entitled, In the matter of a reference by the Governor General in Council concerning the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada in relation to the Upper House, which case was heard in late 1979 and reported in 1981 Supreme Court Reports at 54. There were nine judges, and the decision was unanimous. I will refer to it again later.

Let me say this. I know, we all know, that if a referendum were taken today and such referendum had the authority to abolish the Senate, the vote would be substantially in favour of abolition. Why? I will tell you why. Because we are perceived by the public, thanks mostly but not entirely to the press, as being 104 individuals who get paid far too much for contributing far too little — and some may say nothing — to the workings of the government of Canada.

You also know, and I much better than I did a month ago, that this chamber, as long as it continues to exist in its present form, will perform a very useful and valuable service to this great country of Canada. The Senate has the same powers as the House of Commons, except that financial legislation must originate in the Commons.

While the Senate has the authority to veto legislation from the House of Commons, this power was seldom used until just the last few years. To my mind, it should never have been used and should never be used until senators are elected for specific terms or appointed by persons independent of government for specific terms.

I endorse the Globe and Mail editorial of June 5, 1993, which, in part, reads:

> After each general election, all senators should endorse a resolution indicating that, because they are appointed, they will not unduly delay and will never seek to overturn a bill passed by the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Senators: Never! Never!

Senator Jessiman:

> This would bleed the Senate of much of the partisanship that can poison its relationship with the government. As a consequence, the Senate could then pursue a much more useful role as policy laboratory, returning to the thoughtful examination of public issues and initiating legislation that, under existing constitutional law, could be sent to the House of Commons for consideration. If we cannot change the Constitution regarding the Senate, we can certainly change the assumptions by which it lives. Then maybe the net for appointments could be cast a little wider and the public value of the chamber increased.

The Senate has in the past made amendments to Commons bills which at times have been substantial; for example, the bankruptcy bill of 1975 and the Maritime Code Act of 1977.

Through the bankruptcy bill, the Senate committee suggested 139 amendments. In 1978, 1979, and 1980, the government brought into the Senate new legislation embodying most of the amendments suggested by the Senate committee. The study of the Maritime Code resulted in a report proposing 80 amendments. These amendments not only rectified technical errors, such as unclear definitions, contradictions in terms, and incorrect translations, but also included substantial changes. The bill subsequently died on the Commons Order Paper after being reported with amendments from the Senate. Legislation incorporating amendments were introduced in the next session and passed by both houses.

The Senate can and does ease the legislative burden of the Commons by introducing all private bills. Private bills — to be distinguished from private members' public bills — confer particular powers or benefits on an individual or body of persons including corporations or charitable organizations; for example, the name change of the Canadian Medical Association.

The Senate in the past has achieved much of its prominence through its investigative work. I agree with Senator Prud'homme when he said on June 23 in this chamber as reported at page 3713 of the Debates of the Senate as follows:

> Only the Canadian public can decide about the future of the Senate. When Canadians decide that the Senate should be abolished, should be elected, or should be transformed, then we shall abide. In the meantime, I do not see why anyone should have any objection if we do something concrete.
> I am a senator...if the Senate is attacked, I feel personally attacked and I shall defend until I decide to be something other than a senator...I will not duck...There are many more things that the Senate can do very well. We shall see that in the months to come. The press should take notice that many more senators are ready now to stand up and say, "Here are the things that can be done."
> Some members of the Lortie Commission called me. They were upset that I said the Lortie Commission cost $20 million. How many Canadians know that $20 million represents 40 per cent of the Senate budget in one year? We could have done what the Lortie Commission did. How many other commissions could we have conducted? Within a year, you can spend less money than what the Senate costs, just by the work that can be done.

Honourable Senator Prud'homme, I say to you, sir, that you may add my name to the list of senators who have agreed to work with you to better serve this honourable institution.

Some examples of issues which could be considered are the use of drugs in the schools; the expansion of gambling in Canada and on the North American continent; the problem of unemployment resulting from opening up trade on a global basis; improving education for Canadian children with a view to convincing all provinces that there should be national standards.

My remark regarding the fairness of the press towards the Senate is illustrated, in particular, in regard to work that this Senate did on the 1971 tax reform legislation. This is what happened. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce spent three months examining the preliminary White Paper, received 443 briefs, heard 118 witnesses, and suggested over 40 changes in the proposals. The government embodied most of these changes in the bill introduced in the House of Commons. The Senate committee then subjected the bill itself to the same meticulous scrutiny for another three months and recommended another nine amendments, all of which were adopted by the House of Commons.

When the bill came to the Senate, therefore, that body had already, in effect, put six months' work into it and secured most of the changes it thought necessary and was able to dispose of the matter in a few days. The press, noting only these few days, attacked the Senate and its committee for shirking its duty on one of the longest, most complex and most important bills in the history of the country. So much for fair reporting.

The fact that we are not elected and not responsible to the electorate for retaining our seats as senators surely does not mean we cannot perform our duties as senators, just as judges, who are also appointed, perform their functions as judges. I know many judges in Canada and I have a great deal of respect for the bench. I also know a lot of senators and I have a great deal of respect for the Senate. As for ability and expertise as a body, the present members of this honourable Senate, on both sides of this chamber, are equally as talented, able and conscientious in serving Canada as senators as are our honourable judges in serving the judiciary.

At best, we should strive to produce better legislation for Canada. It is my strong view from what I have read to date, and it is the view of many thinking Canadians, that as long as we are appointed by the Governor General in Council and not elected we should never defeat bills passed by the House of Commons. I know there are contrary views in this chamber, but if we continue to work independently and try to exercise all the powers the present legislation gives us, we will just be hurrying the day when this institution, which started with Confederation in 1867, will be abolished.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Jessiman, according to our rules, your time is up unless there is unanimous agreement to extend it. Is there unanimous consent to extend the time, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am in your hands.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Jessiman: I did mention at the outset that I would be some time.

Earlier I mentioned a Supreme Court case of 1980. In short it was found that the Senate could not be abolished by the House of Commons. That is my understanding. Senator Murray said that he believes such a move would require a resolution of the House of Commons and all ten provinces.

The Hon. the Speaker: I am sorry, Senator Jessiman. I understand that there is not unanimous agreement. I would suggest that you table the remainder of your speech so that it may be on the record.

Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(g), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Lavoie-Roux, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaudoin, that this report be adopted now.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators to adopt the motion?

Senator Murray: Mr. Speaker, I think I would be correct in stating that there is a desire on both sides of the Senate for a standing vote on this matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: How long a bell would you like, honourable senators?

Senator Kelly: A 15-minute bell, honourable senators.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Robichaud: Two minutes.

The Hon. the Speaker: I understand, Senator Kelly, that you have been out-voted. There will be a five-minute bell.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I would like to insist on a 15-minute bell. All interested senators want their vote to be recorded. I want to be sure that every senator has an opportunity to be in the chamber. We would ask for a 15-minute bell with the vote to be held at five minutes to ten o'clock.

The Hon. the Speaker: Call in the senators.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John Lynch-Staunton (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(h), I move:

THAT when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, September 28, 1993, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

THE ECONOMY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SEND MESSAGE TO HOUSE OF COMMONS INVITING RESCISSION OF TAX-FREE ALLOWANCE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, July 13, 1993, I will move:

THAT, in recognition of the real economic distress being suffered by many Canadians in all provinces at the present time, and considering that there is a special need for those who serve in Parliament to demonstrate their concern practically and symbolically, and considering that, in response to these considerations, the Senate of Canada has cancelled the proposal to pay some senators up to a maximum of $6,000 per annum as a tax-free travel allowance upon presentation of receipts, a message be sent by the Senate to the House of Commons inviting that House to rescind the tax-free accommodation and living allowance of $6,000 per annum which, since April 1, 1991, has been available to all members of that House.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENTS—NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO UNDERTAKE STUDY

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 59(1)(f), I move:

THAT the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered to undertake a study of the broad public-interest implications of rail line abandonments, with particular reference to the possible impact on Atlantic Canada and on the applications filed by the Canadian Pacific Limited (C.P. Rail) to abandon operations on the main line east from Sherbrooke, Quebec, to Saint John, New Brunswick; and

That the Committee present its Report no later than September 30, 1993.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to note a point of order on that motion.

I have nothing to say about the merits of the motion, because I do not know anything about it. Senator Simard, anticipating that today would be a one-day sitting, wanted to bring forward this motion and to say something about it. Therefore, under Senators' Statements, he gave what amounted to an introductory speech on his Notice of Motion.

Honourable senators, that is a practice that ought to be discouraged, because the purpose of a Notice of Motion is to give senators an opportunity to study the subject matter of the notice and prepare themselves to intervene when the returnable date of the motion arrives. If the precedent is set of making a speech under Senators' Statements and proposing the Notice of Motion later, senators who may wish to intervene will be preempted in their preparation.

I note that point of order for the record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Hastings: No.

Senator Simard: You do not want to hear an explanation?

Senator Hastings: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, leave is not granted.

SENATE REFORM

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROVISIONS OF CHARLOTTETOWN ACCORD—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

• (2210)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, I will call the attention of the Senate to the advisability of implementing certain provisions in the Charlottetown Accord as they refer to Senate reform, specifically clause 15, which stipulates that key appointments made by the federal government be ratified by the Senate, among others, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the National Film Board, the Canadian Radiotelevision and Telecommunications Commission and Telefilm Canada.

QUESTION PERIOD

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—LEGALITY OF TRAVEL LEVY

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Vancouver International Airport was recently turned over to a group of highjackers who have set up tollbooths where you enter security. They now are charging $20 to leave Vancouver Airport. That does not affect us because we get our travel paid for, but a family from the Yukon, for example, who are going to Disneyland, have to pay $20 to get out of the Vancouver Airport, which is, for six people, $120.00; and then, when they go back to the Yukon, it is $60.00 because it is $10.00 per head to get back into the Yukon.

Senator Perrault: Shame!

Senator Lucier: That is $180.00 for a family to travel in and out of the Vancouver Airport. If they want to charge a toll for airport improvement, which is what they are calling this, that is fine. Build the airport improvement and then charge the people who use it. That is how toll roads work. That is how everyone does it.

Senator Perrault: Good statement!

Senator Lucier: Build the road and then charge the toll on it. You do not have to charge the people who have already paid for the airport. Canadians have bought that airport and built it. Surely they do not have to go through the exercise of paying for it again. I do not see why that should be occurring. This borders on having a bunch of thieves standing there. You cannot go through security unless you have this money to pay before you get to your airplane.

I question the legality of this, as have others who have sent letters to the Vancouver papers questioning the legality of charging this fee. Would the minister be interested in contacting the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Transport to find out what the situation is. This is an absolute insult. It is a despicable act by the people who have taken over the Vancouver Airport.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will be glad to ask for a report from my cabinet colleague, Mr. Corbeil, on the situation described by the honourable senator.

TELEFILM CANADA

PROPOSED FILM ON OCTOBER CRISIS—EXCULPATION OF TERRORISTS ON FRENCH CBC RADIO

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate be kind enough to ascertain why CBC French radio chose Canada Day, July 1, at 5 p.m. to broadcast a program on how the terrorists involved in the Laporte and Cross kidnappings were poor, martyred fellows, who were badly treated by Canada?

Secondly, I have heard from sources who have been informing me that Telefilm Canada and the National Film Board are at the stage now where they have indicated to Pierre Falardeau and his producer, Bernadette Payer, that they will go ahead with the funding of a film glorifying the kidnappers, sequesters, torturers and assassins of Pierre Laporte.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, although the Senate will not be sitting for several months, I will ask my cabinet colleague, Madam Landry, to obtain a report on this matter immediately and I will send a copy of it to the honourable senator.

ELECTIONS ACT

LORTIE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: Honourable senators, I wish to ask a question for those of us who worked hard on the Elections Act, which was referred to us by the House of Commons in reference to the Lortie Committee, which recommended strongly that the House of Commons should take a position on third-party advertising. The committee recommended that the House of Commons do so. We passed a new election act. The Senate passed it and it is now law, but again to my shock, but not surprise, a group of Canadians from central Canada went to attack the law in Calgary by coincidence again. A judge of the first court decided that this is totally against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

My question to you, contrary to what we did not do in 1984 — and we all agree we erred by not launching an appeal when a judge in Calgary in 1984 decided that a certain part of the election act was illegal. We did not appeal that decision. I am not partisan in this; in fact, I am on record in the House of Commons as having said that I regret that we did not launch an appeal at that time.

Now the same group of Canadians, who pretend not to be political in any way, are attacking a law of Parliament. This will lead to the total Americanization of our Canadian institution, where money will be what counts to be elected. They declared that part of the law illegal.

I was in Edmonton when this took place. I questioned some other judges of the higher courts. I listened to the discussion that took place. I regret that no action was taken at the time. To be practical now, for those who may not have participated in that committee, any third party can now spend any amount of money during the next coming election while members of the House of Commons would be highly limited to dollars and pennies. This is totally against the wishes of the Lortie Committee and the House of Commons and the Senate when we passed the law.

Even though it is partisan for some at this time, the best way to eliminate an appeal would be to ask the Government of Canada — and I see a constitutionalist who will indicate to me whether or not I am wrong — to make a reference to the Supreme Court to render an immediate judgment before the election takes place so that we will not have the first step towards the total and absolute Americanization of our political institution, where third-party advertisement will be in a position to spend any amount of money, while those who run for political office will be limited by the actual act. I would have thought that the Honourable the Leader of the NDP last night in Calgary would not have jumped to another horse. The first horse was that she would ask for an inquiry on members' pensions but, knowing how unpopular that was with the rank and file in the house, she is now on a horse advocating the abolition of the Senate. I was expecting her to say that the Government of Canada of today should ask for a reference so that the matter could be settled. In 1984 we did not ask for an appeal. We came back again when it was the wish of Canadians that there be a limit. It is being attacked again in the lower court in Calgary. The judge has decided that it is totally illegal. I believe that the next Parliament will again revise the Elections Act to include limits for third parties, as was highly recommended by the Lortie Committee.

• (2220)

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate at least consider putting my wish to the government to make an immediate reference to the Supreme Court?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a decision on whether to appeal the judgment of a lower court is one that is taken by the Attorney General of Canada on the basis of best advice available to him on the legal merits. I presume that the Minister of Justice now has this matter under advisement and will make a decision in due course.

Meanwhile, I will see that the policy considerations, which I am sure are familiar to the minister, as raised by the honourable senator, are brought to the minister's attention.

FISHERIES

VALUE OF SENATE REPORT—IMPORTANCE OF CONTENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have quite a different kind of question. Some years ago a committee of the Senate, headed by Senator Marshall, presented to the Senate an extremely important report with regard to the conduct of North Atlantic fisheries. If the content of that report had been taken into account properly, some of the distressing, even catastrophic, circumstances now prevailing in certain of the Atlantic provinces would have been avoided. Of course it was neglected and ignored.

On June 23, 1993, another report was presented to the Senate, this time by Senator Rossiter. Absolutely no attention whatsoever has been given to this matter by the media. Indeed, the media seems to have been captivated, possessed, by the matter of the accommodation payment vote which took place on that very same day. To assure that the same sort of neglect does not occur with regard to the Rossiter report that took place with regard to the Marshall report, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate personally undertake to ensure that his new colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, is seized of the report, is impressed by the importance of the content of the report, and gives the Leader of the Government in the Senate a strong assurance that he will examine the evidence which supports the important recommendations in the aforesaid report?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for reminding me of this matter. I will be glad to bring it to the attention of my colleague.

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS ON SIDE AGREEMENTS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have another question on a quite different matter. On that famous day, June 23, 1993, some honourable senators may remember that the Senate gave third reading to a bill to approve the North American Free Trade Agreement. Since that event, there have been developments in the United States. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell the house where the negotiations on the side agreements stand, and what progress we can anticipate in view of the decision of the court in Washington D.C. with regard to the environmental study which that judge said ought to have taken place?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not sure there is a great deal I can say about the court judgment in the United States, except to observe that members of the administration of that country continue to express confidence that this is another hurdle that can be quickly overcome.

With regard to the negotiations on the side agreements, I will place on the record a brief statement that has been given to me by the Department of External Affairs and International Trade under today's date. It says that the chief negotiators concluded a round of formal talks in Mexico on July 8 and 9. This is the fourth time negotiators have met since talks began March 17 and 18 in Washington, D.C. All three parties agreed from the outset that NAFTA itself would not be reopened. The fifth meeting is now planned for the week of July 19 in Canada. All parties wish to take advantage of the momentum and accelerated efforts gained at the last meeting. It is hoped that this will be the last session before a full ministerial meeting to finalize the additional agreements.

Canada's approach during these negotiations is unchanged. We believe strong, effective side agreements are in the interests of all three countries and are achievable.

While there has been a recent change in the Canadian ministry, there is no change in Canada's position on the place of trade sanctions, a matter on which we have had several exchanges during the Oral Question Period here. While Canada wishes to see effective side agreements, Canada continues to take a strong position that trade sanctions are not constructive and would detract from the main goal of NAFTA, the liberalization of trade. Other constructive proposals are now actively being considered. A broad measure of agreement has been reached in several areas, such as the establishment of trilateral commissions on the environment and labour comprised of cabinet-level representatives and supported by secretariats.

At the last meeting, held on July 8 and 9 in Mexico, progress was achieved on structural and procedural aspects of this agreement for both environment and labour. That the three sides will continue to meet indicates that they believe there is the prospect of making real progress. The federal government is continuing to consult closely with the provinces, business, labour and environmental, nongovernmental organizations in preparing for the next meeting.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

REESTABLISHMENT OF EMBASSY IN BEIRUT

Hon. Marcel Prud'homme: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is always a delicate matter and a cause for great frustration for one of our largest and most prosperous communities — I am referring to the Lebanese community — and for the Lebanese people in Lebanon, to have to go to our embassy in Damascus. I know the minister is very much aware of this, and that is why I did not give him notice. I know he has all the facts.

It is a real problem and extremely frustrating for anyone who is interested in international politics to see that the Lebanese have to go all the way to Damascus to get a visa or an immigration permit. In fact, it is extremely dangerous. Nowadays, the situation is becoming extremely difficult, and this is a matter of tremendous concern to the Lebanese community in Canada and to all the political parties. The Lebanese community, which plays a substantial economic role in this country, has asked me to find out whether the government would agree it is time to announce or reconsider — politically speaking, this is the right time to do so just before an election — the opening of an embassy like the one we had before in Beirut. The community would of course appreciate such action. We all know how dangerous it is now for some communities. For one, the Christian Lebanese community is often very reluctant to go through the various check points before getting to Damascus. Of course, I am not criticizing our embassy in Damascus. However, the Department of External Affairs should be able to reorganize our embassies in the Middle East to at least accommodate these extraordinary Canadians who only want what they had before.

As the Minister is well aware, the situation inside Lebanon is improving considerably. It would be an encouraging sign from the Canadian government, if it were to consider this request, which is not a personal one, I may add, but is endorsed by all Lebanese communities of all denominations in Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think it has been almost ten years since Canada closed its embassy in Beirut and our representatives were relocated to Damascus because of what happened at the time. The most I can say this evening is that I will take note of the question and refer it to my colleague, the Honourable Perrin Beatty, and I will report back to my honourable friend as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SOMALIA—INCIDENTS BETWEEN CITIZENS AND MEMBERS OF CANADIAN FORCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

• (2230)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, there have been allegations in the media about reports by the armed forces on incidents involving members of the Canadian Forces and Somali civilians. There have been allegations that the reports have been misleading.

Would the honourable Leader of the Government care to tell us if there is any information on this topic which he could give us to clear up the confusion?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am sorry, but I am not in a position to do so tonight. I can and will ask for a report and let the honourable senator have it as soon as I have received it.

RESIDENCE OF PRIME MINISTER

SALE OF FURNISHINGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: There has been unfortunate and I hope unwarranted discussion in the media about the issue of the sale of furniture from 24 Sussex Drive to the National Capital Commission. There have been questions raised in some of the media as to whether this furniture had been bought with funds donated by the Conservative Party of Canada, funds that stem from contributions by taxpayers and therefore tax deductible funds. It has been an ugly issue.

Is the government planning a report to clear this up?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must say I do not know any more about that than the honourable senator does. He has referred to some media reports as to who paid for what in furnishing the official residences. I have seen other reports in the same media on that matter.

The government is not, so far as I am aware, considering making any report on the matter. The Chairman of the National Capital Commission had the furniture in question appraised by two independent appraisers, and on that basis made a proposal to the Mulroneys on the matter. He has already met the media and made a full statement of the circumstances under which all this was done. I do not know if there is anything I can usefully inquire into or add.

Senator Gigantès: The point of my question was not whether the appraisals were or were not suitable appraisals; the point of my question was what funds were used to buy these items. The question is whether these were funds donated by the Conservative Party and therefore funds contributed to the Conservative Party by taxpayers, under tax deductible contributions to political parties. The point is to elicit whether such funds were used to buy these items which have now been bought back by the National Capital Commission.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as a minister of the Crown, I am not privy to whatever arrangements may obtain as between the PC Canada Fund, for example, and the national leader of the party, as to whether whatever moneys were advanced for a particular purpose were advanced by way of grant or loan or what it was. Again, I have seen information in the media to the effect that this was done by way of loan, but, in any case, I am not privy to that information.

I make the point, as one who was been around here in my own political party for a good many years, in opposition and in government, that there are arrangements existing in all political parties, as the honourable senator must know, under which the national party fund assists leaders with legitimate expenses related to the activities of those leaders and their expenses, both in and outside Ottawa, including, I believe, expenses related to their lodgings.

Senator Gigantès: That still is not an answer to my question. My point is a serious point. It is painful for all Canadians. There is an allegation that these items were not bought with personal money of the Mulroney family, but were bought with money of the Conservative Party of Canada. In that case, the proceeds from the sale of those items should go to the Conservative Party of Canada and not to the Mulroney family.

If these allegations are untrue, they should be dispelled. They fall upon the person of someone who has until very recently been the head of government of this country. Surely we should not allow the office of the head of government of this country to be besmirched.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: You can say that after listening to your leader for three weeks?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator refers to allegations. What allegations? Who makes them? On what basis? Even if these matters came from my administrative responsibilities as minister of the Crown, I do not think it would be appropriate or proper to ask me to comment on allegations which are really, so far as I can gather from what the honourable senator has said, hypotheses put forward here and there. I am not aware of any allegation or any basis for any allegation made by any particular person on this matter. The world and the media are always full of scuttlebutt and speculation, but I am sure the honourable senator does not expect me to investigate and comment on all these things.

Senator Gigantès: Surely the government could come out with a categorical statement that these items were not bought with funds provided by the Conservative party, funds contributed by taxpayers, but were bought with personal funds of the Mulroney family. That would clear the issue.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Are you making a statement? Are you making an accusation here?

Senator Gigantès: I am not making an accusation.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: Why do you keep repeating it?

Senator Gigantès: I am making a suggestion.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: No, you are not. You are following in your leader's footsteps. Chapter what? Is this an appendix to Senator Frith's diatribe?

Senator Frith: He is getting so twitchy. There must be something in the air.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: It fits. It matches. We could talk about the swimming pool.

Senator Frith: There is a lot of twitching going on. Why not let the leader deal with it?

Senator Murray: Again, there is no call whatsoever for a statement from the government or any minister thereof.

If it is of any assistance to the honourable senator in regard to these hypothetical allegations, what I would call speculation and scuttlebutt, it is a matter of general information that the PC Canada Fund has said publicly that they do not own nor have any interest in furniture sold to the National Capital Commission by Mrs. Mulroney.

• (2240)

Senator Gigantès: Am I to understand from what you are saying, sir, that these were gifts from the PC Canada Fund to the Mulroney family?

Senator Murray: No.

Senator Lynch-Staunton: He never said that.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is not what I said. What I said is that the fund does not own, has no interest in —

Senator Lynch-Staunton: And never did.

Senator Murray: — the furnishings, or whatever they were, drapes and so forth, that were sold to the NCC by Mrs. Mulroney. I do not think anything could be clearer than that.

Again, this is not a matter for which I should be answering as minister. I am telling you something I happen to know, a statement that was made by the PC Canada Fund. Perhaps that information will complete the record as far as we are concerned and as far as this evening's discussion is concerned.

Senator Gigantès: My last question, and then I will drop the matter: When you say that it does not own, do you mean that they gave it away and therefore they no longer own it? Or do you mean that their funds were not used by the Mulroney family to acquire these items?

Senator Murray: I ask the honourable senator to reflect on the statement that was made. There may have been more to it, but that is as much as I recall of the statement.

They do not own it. They have no interest in it. What that would mean to me is that it is not theirs and that Mrs. Mulroney was at liberty to respond to the request of the National Capital Commission that they buy this stuff from her so as to keep it for succeeding prime ministers in those official residences.

That is really all I know about the matter. I do not think there is really anything that I can or should be asked to add.

AGRICULTURE

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS IN URUGUAY ROUND—EFFECT OF MEETING OF GROUP OF SEVEN IN TOKYO

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask one question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the recent Tokyo Round of the G-7. There was a report that there was some progress made on the negotiations in GATT and that there were further developments in the Uruguay Round, but that whatever agreements were made depended on whether there was to be further agreement on the disagreement, or lack of agreement, on agriculture products that are involved. There was no progress at all made on the lack of agreement for the past seven years on agriculture products between the leaders of the G-7.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not sure I can help my friend very much with that. The information I have on agriculture, in terms of the agreement made by trade ministers and G-7 leaders in Tokyo, is that, although agriculture was not the main focus for these negotiations, it has been agreed that access for agriculture products is an essential component of a global and balanced Uruguay Round deal.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, according to rule 23(7), Question Period is over.

Senator Olson: Saved by the bell.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THE VALOUR AND THE HORROR—BEHAVIOUR OF CBC—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, last year as the Senate Sub-Committee on Veterans Affairs prepared to launch its investigation of the CBC war series, The Valour and The Horror, I received a letter from one of Canada's most distinguished military historians, Professor Desmond Morton of the University of Toronto. While Professor Morton wished the subcommittee luck in its coming battle with the CBC over the film's inaccurate portrayal of Canada's soldiers and airmen in the Second World War, he also sounded a cautionary note. In particular, he reminded me of Sir John A. Macdonald's famous dictum, "Never wrestle with a skunk."

I have never for a moment regretted my decision to defend the honour and reputation of Canada's veterans. However, I cannot deny that at times Morton's advice has haunted me. Throughout the debate over The Valour and the Horror, the Canadian media have adopted a siege mentality and stopped at nothing to defend their professional credibility. In doing so, they have lashed out in all directions with not a thought for principle or fair play. They have even given the public the misleading impression that the Senate subcommittee did not have the authority to carry out its mandate to examine the series of films and to call witnesses.

The behaviour of the CBC in particular has been hypocritical and dishonest. It has been over a year and a half now since the film series was first broadcast, and this behaviour shows no signs of abating. I should like to take this opportunity to relate the latest in a long series of shameful incidents.

In the May issue of Saturday Night magazine, Anne Collins wrote a long, in-depth article entitled, "The Battle Over The Valour and the Horror". Ms Collins is a well-respected journalist. Granted, she has a definite bias in favour of the media, which is her right, but unlike many other journalists who have written about The Valour and the Horror, she at least makes an attempt to explore both sides of a complicated story. For that reason, I believe she wrote a reasonably well balanced and intelligent piece.

Mr. Robert Pattillo, CBC's Vice-President of Communications disagrees. This is not especially surprising given that the CBC and Mr. Pattillo himself emerge from Ms Collins' article with their credibility in tatters. Mr. Pattillo has decided to defend himself, which is his right, and in a letter published last week in Saturday Night he not only challenges the author's description of his role in the debate, but questions the veracity of the subcommittee documents on which that description is based.

Quite frankly, I have grown accustomed to the lies habitually propagated by the CBC and its senior management, and I would just as soon have ignored them. But when my integrity and that of the Senate Sub-committee on Veterans Affairs is called into question, I feel I have no choice but to respond.

Honourable senators, permit me to lay out the facts. Last fall, Mr. Pattillo visited my office on two separate occasions, on September 4 and October 2. It was clear from the outset at the first meeting that the CBC was concerned over the intense reaction of the veterans and the effect the subcommittee's investigation was having on the whole affair.

• (2250)

Mr. Pattillo seemed prepared to disregard the series' writer-director team of Brian and Terence McKenna and to cut a deal. He promised to circulate the CBC Ombudsman's report on The Valour and the Horror before its release which, at the time, was expected in a few weeks. He offered that the CBC would likely be willing to give veterans equal air time to respond to allegations made in the film. Remember, that was September 4.

At the next meeting on October 2, this strategy became even more apparent. Mr. Pattillo informed myself and two committee staff members that a draft of the ombudsman's report had been completed and that he circulated a draft press release that would accompany the report when it was made available to the public.

The press release noted that the ombudsman had concluded that The Valour and the Horror contained considerable material that could not be supported by the available evidence and that the use of dramatic sequences had detracted from the producer's claim that this was a serious documentary based on historical fact. CBC President Mr. Gerard Veilleux stated in the press release that, in future, the corporation, while not shying away from controversial subjects, would take greater care in ensuring the accuracy of its research. Mr. Veilleux also promised that the vice-president of news and current affairs would undertake an in-depth examination of CBC procedures for ensuring the authenticity of their productions.

As it turned out, this draft was remarkably similar to the communiqué that was released at the same time as the ombudsman's report on November 10. While I examined the document, Mr. Pattillo added his own comments. He conceded that, if some of the figures portrayed in The Valour and the Horror were alive today, being the soldiers and the leaders, they would be in a very strong position to win libel suits. He also informed me and staff members that the ombudsman's report recommended that Brian and Terence McKenna be asked to make substantive changes to the film and that it not be shown in its present form again on the CBC network. Mr. Pattillo also made reference to the possible removal of video cassettes available in homes, public libraries, and high schools. He made the analogy of an unsafe automobile which the manufacturer has no alternative but to recall.

The CBC was clearly distancing itself from the McKennas. Mr. Pattillo informed me that the film makers had already seen a draft of the report and had indicated their displeasure by hiring a lawyer — not surprising given that Mr. Pattillo suggested that the report could possibly ruin Brian McKenna's career as a journalist. At the same time, he thought it unlikely that either of the brothers would agree to any changes. Mr. Pattillo remarked that the entire issue might become bogged down in the courts for years.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Pattillo was very anxious to learn what the subcommittee would do now, clearly hoping that it would dispense with the hearings planned for November. He indicated that, if the proceedings went ahead, the CBC would only appear in camera. The ombudsman's report, in other words, would be their final word. However, if, during the in camera meeting, the subcommittee were to ask the CBC to give veterans an on-air forum to respond to the film's allegations, Pattillo was optimistic that some arrangement could be made.

Before asking for the return of all copies of the draft press release, Mr. Pattillo suggested that we schedule another meeting for October 13, at which time I would be permitted to see a copy of the ombudsman's report. In the meantime, I would consult the members of the subcommittee and seek their advice. I also said their advice would have to be sanctioned by the veterans of Canada.

As it happened, the meeting never took place. Mr. Pattillo told one of the committee staff there had been a glitch. The McKennas learned soon afterwards of Mr. Pattillo's visit to my office, and CBC in-fighting delayed the release of the ombudsman's report until November 10. By that time, the subcommittee had resumed its hearings and the CBC had changed its mind and decided not to appear.

Senator Frith: November 10 of what year?

Senator Marshall: That was 1992. It is this version of events, with some minor changes, which appears in Ms Collins' article. Mr. Pattillo states in his letter that the description of his role is riddled with mistakes. This response was to be expected, honourable senators. Ever since our meetings took place, Mr. Pattillo has used a highly selective memory and outright lies to fabricate his own account. For example, he has consistently failed to mention that there were, in fact, two meetings, not one. The meeting of September 4 is never mentioned as it demonstrates just how determined the CBC was to come to an arrangement with the subcommittee.

Mr. Pattillo alleged in the Globe and Mail of November 19, 1992, that he told me that the hearings were:

> ...stupid and served nobody. I was quite strong on that point.

Honourable senators, at no time at either of our meetings did Pattillo utter those words or make such a suggestion. There are two witnesses to back that up.

Mr. Pattillo also claimed in the same newspaper article that I was "quite outraged" that we were not treating my committee properly. Again, I never made such a suggestion. I did inform Mr. Pattillo that the veterans, many of whom are prominent in Canadian public life, were incensed with the CBC. Mr. Pattillo maintains that he said the following words in response:

> I believe that and two bucks would get you on the subway.

I certainly do not remember such a statement, and I should point out that Mr. Pattillo was anything but cavalier during our meeting.

However, Mr. Pattillo's most outrageous statement, repeated in his recent letter to Saturday Night, is that he had not seen the ombudsman's report before our meeting of October 2 and that he did not circulate a draft press release because one did not exist at the time. This, honourable senators, is a total corruption of the truth. In fact, he passed the press release around the room and then insisted on its return at the end of the meeting.

Finally, Mr. Pattillo states in his letter that Ms Collins' account of the October 2 meeting relies on the subcommittee aide-memoire:

> ...that seems to have been written long after the event and apparently from bad memory (but powerful, imaginative capabilities).

He is seriously mistaken. The aide-memoire was written on November 20, and much of it is taken from a memorandum written by a committee staff member on the same day as our second meeting with Mr. Pattillo. This individual was in the room with Mr. Pattillo and wrote his memo immediately after Mr. Pattillo's departure. Both I and the staff member who was there fully confirmed the substance of the document. Throughout the subcommittee investigation, staff were instructed to keep detailed notes of all meetings and phone calls.

In reality, it is Mr. Pattillo's powerful imaginative capabilities which stand out. He has followed in the footsteps of other CBC executives who have consistently twisted the truth over the last 18 months. In a desperate attempt to save their credibility, they have in fact produced the opposite effect. CBC seems to have taken pride in sacrificing not only our veterans, the real victims in this tragic episode, but also the truth itself. They are now questioning my honesty and integrity.

Your Honour, if you rule in favour of my question of privilege, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion to call Mr. Pattillo before the Bar of the Senate to answer these allegations at the earliest possible opportunity.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I will take the point of privilege under advisement.

Senator Stewart: Are we to adjourn with that question pending?

Senator Lynch-Staunton: The speaker has decided.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, September 28, 1993, at 2 p.m.

The Thirty-fourth Parliament was dissolved by Proclomation of His Excellency the Governor General on Wednesday, September 8, 1993.
