MABEL HOWARD,
OF THE LYRIC.

CHAPTER III.

"You have spoilt it, Felice," she said. "Your love of truth is greater than your desire to please me. Quite different—almost! That means I am more Italian than I think."

"The signorina has the beauty of the south; she has the Italian eyes, the Italian voice, but she has the English heart," said the woman, quietly; "and she is a daughter of a great English gentleman."

She paused for a moment, to see if Iris should speak again, then slowly glided from the room.

Iris sat beside the window for some time, then she got up and went to the easel. For a few minutes she worked at the charcoal sketch, then, dropping the charcoal with a little grimace, seated herself at the piano and began to sing. But, just as the young man's face had come between her and the sketch, so his face seemed to mingle with the air she was singing, and, with a gesture of impatience and a flush of annoyance on her face, she rose and shut the piano.

CHAPTER IV. A FRIEND FROM ITALY.

The day wore on, the candles were light in the drawing-room, and Godfrey Knighton sat with a book in his hand, waiting for the dinner-bell. Iris usually came down half-an-hour before it rang, and the squire looked at the door now and again, for to-night she was late. But presently she came in, and his face cleared somewhat as his eyes rested upon her with a glow of pride and admiration in them.

No wonder that Lord Montacute wanted to marry her! No wonder that half the men in the country were at her feet. Then he sighed, and, laying down the book, regarded her with the old, half-stern expression.

"You haven't told me about your ride this morning, Iris!" he said. She was standing, fastening a bracelet which had escaped Felice's keen eyes, and her lashes quivered a little. "Did you go far?"

"No; I was going to the Holt, but I did not even get as far as that," he said, and once again resolved to tell him all. She opened her lips, but at that moment there was the sound of carriage wheels on the drive, and the squire, whose ears were quick, looked up.

"Who can that be?" he said. "I don't know. Are you expecting any one?" she asked.

"No," he replied, still listening. "Perhaps it is one of the tradesmen's carts," she said, with a smile. "If so, I don't envy them the scolding they will get from Herrocks, the gardener."

As she spoke the door opened, and a footman entered. He looked rather confused and reluctant, and said, hesitantly:

"A gentleman, sir—"
"Permit me to announce myself!" said a voice behind him, and there came into the room, almost slipped in, so to speak, a tall, thin man, wrapped in a voluminous cloak.

At sight of him Godfrey Knighton rose to his feet, took a step forward, then, staggering slightly, let his hand fall upon the edge of the table, and clasping it tightly stood regarding the visitor with a white, set face.

Iris was too engaged in looking at the man to notice the effect his appearance had upon her father, and the man stood for a second regarding them with a smile upon his face, which, taken with the flash of teeth, produced a strange and unpleasant impression upon Iris.

It was by no means an ugly face, either. It was dark, almost swarthy, with eyes black and lustrous, too lustrous, indeed; a dark mustache, with pointed and waxed ends, hid his lips; but the smile revealed almost too conspicuously a set of white teeth that, in contrast with the blackness of the mustache and eyes, seemed to gleam.

As he stood for that half-minute of suspense, Iris noticed unconsciously that the ungloved hand was white as a sheet of paper, and long and shapely; the next moment he dropped the hat which it held, and came across the room with the hand extended.

"Ah, Knighton!" he exclaimed, in a low and not unmusical voice, and, with an accent which Iris knew at once to be Italian. "It is a surprise, is it not? You did not expect me! You are overjoyed—like me—at our meeting! My friend!"

Godfrey Knighton took the outstretched hand, and the visitor instantly laid his other on the top of his host's.

"It is a surprise," he said, and it was evident that, though he had recovered from the emotion which the sudden appearance of the man had produced, he was not overjoyed to see him. "No, I did not expect you."

"I said so!" remarked the gentleman, addressing the furniture. "I said those dogs of the post office would mislay my letter! I said 'Baptiste, your good friend Knighton will not have received your note—he will not expect you! But what matters? The more unexpected the pleasure, the greater the joy! Is it not?' and he flashed his black eyes upon Iris."

As he spoke, Godfrey Knighton made a movement almost as if he would step in between them, but he recovered himself in an instant.

"This is an old friend of mine, Iris," he said, slowly and distinctly. "Ah, yes! an old friend!" murmured the visitor, flashing his smile upon her. "Knighton, I am right in guessing that this charming young lady is your daughter? It is so? I am delighted! Do me the honor, Knighton, to introduce me! I loathe each moment that keeps us strangers," and he made Iris a swift, subtle kind of bow.

With stern, set face, Godfrey Knighton looked from one to the other, then he said:

"Iris, this is Signor Ricardo, an old friend, as I have said, from Italy."
"From the sunny south, from the land of beauty!" remarked Signor Ricardo. "From your land, Miss Iris! Yes, I am an old friend of your father's—"
"He paused and smiled sweetly upon the stern face of his host—"and your mother's."

Iris held out her hand, and the signor, taking it in his long, white fingers, bowed over it until his lips almost touched it.

Then he drew himself to his full height, flung his cloak open, and regarding Godfrey Knighton with a steady smile, said:

"My friend, you look admirable; Miss Iris is—ah, ha! I have no words, and your place—well, it is magnificent, princely! I cannot express the joy I feel at being with you! And you did not get my letter?"

"No," said Godfrey Knighton. "But I'm pleased to see you," he added, slowly. "Our dinner is almost ready. Will you go to your room?" and he moved toward the door, but the signor stretched out his hand and laid it on the sleeve of the squire's dress coat.

"No!" he said, with a smile. "You shall not incommode yourself! The servants shall show me my apartments! No ceremony, my dear Knighton; remember, I am an old friend!" The squire stood still and signed to a footman, and the signor, bestowing a smile and a reverential bow upon Iris, was ushered out.

Iris waited until the door had closed, then turned to her father.

"What a strange person!" she said, half-laughing, and yet with a singular feeling of uneasiness and dislike.

"What did you say his name was?"

"Ricardo! Ricardo," Godfrey Knighton replied, his eyes fixed on the door by which the visitor had gone.

"I never heard you speak of him," she said.

"No, I have not seen him, heard of him, for years!" he said, speaking slowly and gravely, his face set darkly and sternly. "I knew him years ago in Italy—a long while ago! He did me a certain service. I could not refuse to receive him."

Iris regarded him with surprise.

"Why, go, father! Why should you refuse to receive an old friend? And he knew my mother?" she added, softly and sadly.

The squire moved uneasily and turned his face still further from her.

"Iris," he said, and his voice sounded harsh and strained, "you have always been a good and dutiful girl."

"Father!" she murmured, surprised, and waiting.

"Yes! Always good, and dutiful, and loving. Listen to me. This man, Signor Ricardo—he may seem inclined to talk of—the past. You will not encourage him. You will remember that—that anything connected with—with your mother is painful—very and deeply painful to me, and you will not encourage him."

"There was a tone of such pain and anguish, almost, as it seemed, of fear, in her father's voice, that Iris turned to him and put her hand on his arm as she replied:

"You know I will not."

"Good, good!" he said. "Yes, I can trust you."

There was a silence for a moment, then Iris said:

"Will he stay long?"

"How can I tell! You would not have me send him away? He has come a long distance—from Italy, I expect."

"Send him away?" she laughed. As if anybody would be "sent away" from the Revels by Godfrey Knighton, whose hospitality was Arabian in its extent and thoroughness.

"No, no," he said. "I don't think he will stay long."

Then he went to the table and took up the book she had laid down, as if the conversation were concluded, and Iris stood and waited for the reappearance of the guest.

In a few minutes he came in. He was in evening dress, and short as the time had been he had evidently made his toilet with some care.

"I have kept dinner waiting! Pardon!" he said, spreading out his hands. "It is all the fault of your train! I thought English trains were always punctual! Miss Iris will extend her forgiveness to a traveler!"

The dinner gong sounded at this moment, and Godfrey Knighton advanced to offer his arm to Iris as usual, but the signor glided in between them.

"Not so!" he said, in a silky voice. "It is my privilege as a visitor! Miss Iris will honor her father's old friend with her arm."

Godfrey Knighton drew back, and Iris laid the tips of her fingers on the signor's arm, and he led her into the dining-room.

By the light which fell from the shaded lamp over the table, Iris regarded the signor with more curiosity than she had bestowed upon him in the drawing-room.

Certainly he was anything but ugly, or even plain. His dark hair was closely cut; there was scarcely a line in the clear, oval face. He might be of any age between five-and-twenty and forty. Looking at him carefully, Iris saw that he had a scar on the right temple, but it had not disfigured his face, and it only showed itself when he smiled.

Civic Commission.

WEEKLY MEETING.
The weekly meeting of the Municipal Commission was held on Thursday evening last; Mayor Merris presided and Councillors Vincombe, Peet, Collier, and Hallett were present. After confirmation of the minutes of the previous meeting, the following matters were given attention.

The Minister of Agriculture and Mines wrote in reference to leasing Crown Lands, Duckworth Street. Application of the American Boot & Shoe Store to replace sign over their door, Water Street, was referred to the City Engineer.

Pope's Furniture Company drew attention to the condition of side drain, George St., and suggested that the present cobble stones be removed and replaced by concrete. In this case the Council is willing to place concrete curb and gutters along the street, if the property owners are prepared to pay their proportion of cost—according to frontage—for these improvements.

Mr. H. Hutchings asked that attention be given the numbering of Freshwater Road; same was referred to City Engineer.

A petition was received from the residents of Freshwater Road, also from Mr. J. Hillier, Warbury Street and G. Macklin, Macklin Place, asking that lights be placed in these localities. The Council this year has done its best to improve lighting conditions, but regrets that its finances do not warrant further improvements in this direction.

Residents of the south side of Mundy Pond Road, understanding a certain portion of their land is to be taken for street improvements, asked that the Council reconsider same, and that the land be taken on the north side of the road; Council will visit site.

Applications were read from Messrs. Gillingham and Davis, Golf Avenue, for water and sewerage connections; request acceded to. A communication was received from the residents of LeMarchant Road West, whose houses project on the street line, stating they were prepared to open up negotiations with the Council in connection with this matter; deferred for consideration.

Enumerators engaged in taking the Voters' Lists for the forthcoming elections, asked that the amount usually allowed for their services be increased; deferred for consideration.

Plans submitted by the following were passed, subject to the approval of the Engineer: Joseph Drudge, dwelling, Cook St.; Andrew and Geo. Butt, dwelling, Mundy Pond Road; Capt. Kennedy, annex, Patrick St.

Application of J. J. Miller to erect dwelling, LeMarchant Road, was referred to the City Engineer. The City Engineer submitted report of work done in connection with Venturi Meter Survey, of the East End, between August 8th and September 13th last, which showed a waste of water of 1,822,080 gallons a day, of which 1,280,280 gallons were wasted by house services. Reports of the City Engineer, Plumbing Inspector, Health Officer, were read, accounts presented and passed, after which the meeting adjourned.

One of the best known guides in Nova Scotia gives this testimonial of MINARD'S LINIMENT:

"I have used Minard's Liniment in my home, hunting and lumber camps for years, and consider it the best white liniment on the market. I find that it gives quick relief to minor ailments, such as sprains, bruises and all kinds of wounds. Also it is a great remedy for coughs, colds, etc., which one is liable to catch when log driving and cruising during the winter and spring months. I would not be without MINARD'S LINIMENT and cannot recommend it too highly."

A DINNER IN THE OPEN.

The scenery between Holyrood and Salmonier is charming, and the seclusion of the entire road adds to the serenity of the route. Especially is this the case from the Halfway house to Salmonier, and almost from the Peak house. The place where we really began our closest observations was at that point where the river is first seen at the left as one tours along toward Salmonier. The river itself is worth a visit to the locality, it runs for so many miles towards the sea, and presents so many meanderings, and has such lovely open grassy banks, and is so comparatively remote from the intrusion of society; that one is amply repaid by rambling its banks or by watching its rapids.

It was by one of these spots and not far from where we saw one of the crosses of which we have written, that our party pitched their tent, or rather spread their cloth. The river and the foliage, and the tall spruce, with the birds twittering and the insect world buzzing, supplied both furniture and music. Nature, animate and inanimate, was grand, it was great, it was big. There was no smallness—unless it were that we ourselves felt our insignificance, and saw our littleness. Nature was at its best. We, at least, tried to be at our best; for, it was a spot to draw out one's best, and a time to feel one's best. The deep forest, the majestic river, the clear sky, the surging brook, and the primeval stillness, so impressed us that we wanted to be worthy of our surroundings and worthy the name of men and women.

Our party had all that the world could give. Health, peace, harmony and good will prevailed. The kettle, hanging in the tripod added its quack to the charm of the spot, as it hissed and spattered its music to the tating of the cover. The white cloth was the little world around which our party centered, and was the reminder of civilized life. Beyond this we forgot the city; and had thrown off its etiquette and discarded its formalities. The attitude of the party varied very much. One sat on a log. Another stretched at ease on the grass. Other others appeared quite dignified though perched upon a stone, and others knelt and lounged to suit themselves in the open.

A Chapter of Tragedies.

Fire which destroyed four buildings, seven autos and one horse, broke out in Charlottetown Saturday night, causing a loss of nearly $20,000. The losses consisted of workshop and contents also barn, of John McLeod and Co., tailors; barn and contents, including seven automobiles of Daniel O'Brien; stable and a horse of George Mutch; and barn of J. Chibbons. Four of the automobiles were owned by J. S. Wedlock, who only recently sustained a heavy loss by the burning of his garage. The same afternoon a double drowning fatality occurred a short distance from the city, when Thos. Lafferty, 17, son of John Lafferty, and Joseph G. Geland, were drowned at Glenfenning Lake, ten miles from Charlottetown this afternoon. The boys with two companions were in a leaky punt. It started to sink and one of the boys jumping overboard, capsized the craft. The double drowning occurred in eight feet of water.—North Sydney Herald, Oct. 3.

Our Growing Rival.

In South America, Canada has a rival in grain growing upon which Canadian eyes must be kept. Argentina possesses considerably over a million square miles of territory, a great proportion of which consists of a plain much resembling our prairies and in many places quite as fertile—the Pampas. The Argentine population is also rapidly increasing and is fully equal to that of Canada today. The European immigration being very largely rural Italians who are probably the best workers among Caucasian peoples. In one important matter the Argentine Republic has an advantage over the Dominion namely, that her great grain fields come right down to the banks of the La Plata where steamers can load within sight of the farms where the wheat was grown. The country, always noted for its cattle ranches, first attracted attention as a grain exporter in 1893 when a crop of 55,000,000 bushels was harvested on an area of 3,095,000 acres. These crop figures were not exceeded until 1899, when 105,000,000 bushels were gathered from 7,900,000 acres and 93,000,000 bushels were exported mostly to Britain. From that date the increase was rapid and in 1905 the acreage sown passed the fourteen million mark. In 1912 a record was made, when 17,100,000 acres were sown—an acreage again surpassed five years later. In 1920, a crop of 200,000,000 bushels was reaped. During the past five years the crop has averaged about 160,000,000 bushels and the average export, 95 millions. While the aggregate is impressive, the yield per acre is low being only ten bushels, a figure somewhat lower than has ever been the case in our own country. Like the Canadian Northwest, the Argentine wheat fields have to a large extent been merely scratched to grow the grain, but the time is coming when better farming methods will have to be adopted unless the country is willing to see her best soils exhausted within a generation and an otherwise source of inexhaustible wealth is depleted. Patagonia, which was formerly a "No Man's Land" and the very personification of coldness and sterility, is now an integral part of Argentina and is known to be a vast and fertile agricultural area as well as a sheep run, even the island of Terra Del Fuego being now a great sheep-raising country.—Acadian Recorder.

Noises Which Cannot be Explained.

On the evening of June 23rd last a noise of slight earth tremors were felt along the north coast of Devon, and at Ilfracombe a loud rumbling noise was heard. This a resident described as resembling that of a big gun fired at sea. He says that the windows rattled, but that he felt no movement of the earth.

From other parts of the world also come many records of similar and more or less inexplicable sounds. The best known of these are the so-called "Barisal Guns" which are frequently heard in the delta of the Ganges. The detonations which resemble those of guns occur only in the clearest and driest weather, never when the barometer is low. They seem to come from the upper air.

Ghostly Warnings.
Between the Garo Hills, in Assam, and the River Brahmaputra, similar sounds are frequently heard, and have been from time immemorial. The Hindu legend is that they are caused by the gods constantly celebrating the marriage of the Brahmaputra with the Ganges.
In 1879 detonations were heard during the whole of the month of December in the district of Umbria, in Italy. They were quite distinct from ordinary earthquake sounds, being prolonged crashes, somewhat resembling thunder. Here again they occurred in clear weather only. In the Middle Apennines such sounds are so frequently heard that the natives have a special name for them. They are known to them as "Bombie."

The most uncanny visitation of the sort was in Louisiana, in the year 1722. In that year the valley of the Mississippi was visited by one of the worst storms in human records. For eight days before the storm broke the people living along the river heard strange sounds, "muffled yet powerfully distinct," which seemed first to ascend the river, along one bank, and then to come back along the other.
This happened at least once on each of the eight days preceding the storm. The hurricane itself lasted three days, and did appalling damage, flooding the whole river valley, and blowing flat almost every tree and house for nearly a thousand miles.

Fishermen! Here's the Boot for You—"Excel"!

"EXCEL"

The Fishermen's Friend

"EXCEL"
Made 'All in One Piece'

All fishermen know from experience what happens to ordinary boots when used in fishing. You've seen how salt water seems to take the life out of rubber and how the uppers crack and the soles wear through in a surprisingly short time.

The "EXCEL" is a different and better kind of boot. It has been made especially to stand up under the unusually hard use a fisherman's boot gets.

The rubber and fabric in "EXCEL" boots are of the very highest quality. But it is the special method of curing, under tremendous pressure, that makes the "EXCEL" so wear-resisting. The pressure forces the layers of rubber and fabric together so that they are actually "one-piece", without losing the least bit of the life or resiliency of the rubber. Salt water has practically no effect on "EXCEL" boots. The UPPERS remain pliable and weatherproof, and resist the drying-out action of sun, heat and extreme cold far longer than other boots. Consequently they don't crack anywhere near so quickly. The SOLES are almost wear-proof, because they are made like an Auto Tire, with 8 plies of rubber and fabric welded by tremendous pressure into a "tire-tread" sole that rivals an automobile tire for toughness and durability.

These are exclusive features of "EXCEL" boots.

The picture, at the right, of an "EXCEL" boot cut apart, with every detail of construction visible, shows how "EXCEL" boots are reinforced at every point of strain. There is not a single feature but what has been proved necessary and desirable by tests of severe use. Your own experience will tell you that a boot with these features simply must be a better boot.

Study this picture. Learn these features. Remember them when you compare "EXCEL" boots with ordinary boots. And remember, too, that very important point which the picture cannot show, namely, that "EXCEL" boots are cured under tremendous pressure, which leaves the rubber pliable, weatherproof and wear-resisting. It is only by the use of this tremendous pressure combined with highest quality materials that the best results are obtained.

Pliable Uppers. Weatherproof and Wear Resisting. Tough Tire Tread Soles. Made "All in One Piece."

"EXCEL" Boots are sold by all reliable dealers from Coast to Coast.

Historical Society

The First White Child of America --The Way the Vikings Went in the Long Ago.

(H. F. SHORTIS.)

Now that John Anderson's Baylight Scheme is over, and the days are getting shorter and the nights longer, the members of the Historical Society are making arrangements to continue their meetings for the coming winter. There were many applications for membership last season, but the winter was so severe and the snow so deep, that several important meetings had to be abandoned, and the Secretary has been asked to start these meetings earlier this year. There are many subjects to come up for discussion, but at the present time, I will refer to the great excitement paid Mr. W. A. Munn by the Editor of "My Magazine," of London, England. This refers to an article published here one year ago on the "Vineland Voyages of the Norsemen," about one thousand years ago. Noted historians of Canada are now convinced that Mr. Munn has located the place where the sons of Eric the Red erected their booths. An American archaeologist has written that he intends visiting Newfoundland very soon to search for Norse Runic Stones as he is certain they will be found in the localities mentioned, and he hopes to be the lucky one to make the discovery. It all goes to prove that Newfoundland is the most historical spot on this continent.

The following is the article referred to which appeared in the columns of "My Magazine," of London:—

THE FIRST WHITE CHILD OF AMERICA.

The Way the Vikings Went in the Long Ago.

Who can exaggerate the tremendous significance of trifles? The existence of monkeys on the Rock of Gibraltar—the only monkeys in Europe—is a proof of an old connection between Europe and Northern Africa, the original home of Gibraltar's "four-handed folk."

The absence of frogs, toads, and snakes from certain islands shows these islands to have been for millions of years oceanic, and not parts of former land-systems, for amphibians cannot cross sea-water.

A bird, a branch of a tree, and a piece of carved wood floating, told Columbus he was approaching the land now called America.

And now a good reader of this magazine, Mr. W. A. Munn, of St. John's, Newfoundland, arrays the evidence of botanical authorities to prove that certain wild grapes that came into history a thousand years ago were really berries; that these berries could then, as now, be distilled for wine; and that these berries, and not grapes, inspired the Vikings to give the name of Vineland, or Wineland, to that part of America in which they landed. To know where the first white men from Europe lived in America, five centuries before Columbus, we have to decide whether Vineland derived its name from the berries of which the Vikings made their wine.

It seems a trifle, and yet around it centres one of the grandest adventures of human ardour and endeavour, the romance of men and women in little open boats, sailing unknown seas, in constant peril of tempest and reeling icebergs, to possess an unknown continent which they were to find, and which the world was to forget when they were dead. The Vikings were blown in their little boats from our Scottish islands to Iceland; they were blown from Iceland to Greenland, and from Greenland to America, and they colonized America! Mighty men were the Vikings!

But where in America did the Vikings land, and the? Common tradition says that the parts they called Stoneland, Woodland, and Vineland are to-day represented by the land lying between Massachusetts and Rhode Island. But tradition reckons without Mr. Munn and his unwarred researches into the subject for many years past.

He has examined the bulk of the evidence available, the best translations of the Icelandic sagas which enshrine the history of these marvellous Vikings in opening up the New World, and his verdict is that Newfoundland and Labrador were the scenes of the Vikings' immortal adventures. He rules out all land south of that area.

It is impossible to summarise his long and closely reasoned arguments, but he seeks to establish the identity of places described in the Icelandic sagas with places in Newfoundland which closely answer to them. The scenes represented in the country where white Arctic foxes were found could apply only to Labrador; he urges; the land of flat stones, which they called Helluland, or Stoneland, was the rocky tableland known today as Hamilton Inlet. The old French name of this place was Grand Bay of the Eskimos, and the hostility of Eskimos in Newfoundland and Labrador was one of the causes which led to the abandonment of the colony early in the eleventh century.

The mystery area has always been Vineland, Woodland, many authorities agree, may have been Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, but Mr. Munn holds that Vineland was Newfoundland. Wild grapes do not grow there, but further south, and wild grapes are commonly supposed to have been the fruit from which the district obtained its name. Mr. Munn, however, has been at great pains to show from expert evidence that there has been a mistranslation of an old-Icelandic word, and that the word grapes should be "wine-berries." Those wine-berries he declares to be the common "squash-berries" of Newfoundland, and these are the berries, he says, which the Vikings used. They still grow wild to-day in Newfoundland, in places exactly matching the Viking description of the places where they found their wine-berries. So do wild currants, which the old Vikings called vinber.

There is little doubt that Newfoundland, the oldest British Colony, was the first part of America ever visited by white men. It is an extraordinary story of the 149 men and five women who set out in their little boats from the Old World to colonize the New World. Some of the characters live in literature to-day like characters in Shakespeare. One of them was Gudrid, beautiful, good, beloved, a devout Christian, who, widowed early in life, married the intrepid Thorvald Karlsefne, leader of the colonists. She scorned pagan practices, and refused to take part in practices which later generations would have called witchcraft. She was lovely and of great comfort to the colonists, and when she sang "she sang so sweet and well that no one remembered ever before to have heard the melody with so fair a voice." So says the ancient tale.

Perhaps the Gudrid's blood survives in the Arctic still, for a little son was born to her in Vineland, the first white child born in America of whom we have any record. He was taken to Greenland when nearly three years old, and the ancient northern sagas tell us that "from him descended three bishops and many other great people."

So the first American-born boy founded an aristocracy. That is fitting for his grandfather, Eric the Red, was a sovereign, who went out from Norseland into the mist and night of frigid seas rather than submit to restraints of freedom at home.

A Surprise Party.

Mrs. Albert Mann was given a great surprise on the 4th inst. when a number of her lady friends called at her home 61 Spencer Street, and presented her with a beautiful piece of fancy work. After wishing her many happy returns of the day, tea and refreshments were served and a most enjoyable time was spent until 12.30.

Fish Advanced.

The market for Shore fish appears to be firmer, and yesterday $7.00 per quintal for a cargo of No. 1 article was paid by an East End firm. This exceeds the price being paid in Nova Scotia, where the highest the fishermen are receiving is $4.50 to $4.75 per quintal. Whether this will hold or is being paid for a special cargo to make up a shipment remains to be seen. In any case it bears out the general belief that the market outlook is one of hopefulness.

Trade Improving.

There is a tendency towards an improvement in all branches of trade during the past few days and there seems every chance of business being fairly brisk this fall. Whilst it would be idle to anticipate that the fall trade will approach in any degree the amount done during the fat years immediately preceding the armistice, nevertheless it is satisfactory to know that the existing depression will, at least temporarily, be lifted. There is at present a ready sale for fish and while the prices obtained are not so remunerative as in former years, there seems to be every likelihood that they will remain stationary. As a natural sequence, those who have been fortunate enough to make big catches will be enabled to purchase necessary supplies. These purchases will, of course, be restricted to necessities, but even this will tend to brighten up trade considerably. Anything that causes the silver lining in the dark clouds which are still overhanging to become apparent, even temporarily, will be a great relief. Recovery from financial depression is bound to be slow and everything that helps to hasten us towards better times is indeed welcome and keeps alive the spark of optimism.

Increasing Tourist Traffic.

Of all the propositions which have been suggested in the hope of materially benefiting the country and helping us through our period of financial depression, not the least feasible is that of a large hotel for the purpose of attracting wealthy tourists to the city. In the opinion of a great many influential citizens, the hotel proposition is the only solution to our existent economic distress. The scenery of Newfoundland, even within a few miles from the city itself, is unrivalled for its natural and often, salvage beauty, whilst our trout and salmon streams are innumerable and game is abundant. In fact, this is an ideal country for the tourist and sportsman and were it not for the lack of hotel accommodation, we should be overrun with visitors from the United States and Great Britain all of whom would be prepared to pay well for the vacation which they would spend here. A syndicate has been formed to undertake the erection of a million dollar hotel here with a chain of smaller hotels in the various localities in which fish and game abound. They have in their possession letters from many of the most prominent men in the community commending the project and they claim that they have been assured a steady stream of wealthy tourists from the time that they open for business. In their first year of operation, they state that there will be at least one thousand tourists here who will spend nothing less than $100 per capita. The syndicate, however, are desirous of obtaining a Government guarantee for their first year of operation. This is a question which requires a great deal of careful consideration. Apart from this, the hotel proposition seems a sound one and would undoubtedly be productive of much good if it should become an accomplished fact, for there is no denying that in the future we shall be much more dependent on tourist traffic than heretofore.

Flour Declining.

The flour market during the past week shows considerable weakness, and since Thursday last quotations have dropped by ten points. A well known dealer informed us a few days ago that No. 1 flour will shortly be retalling for $10.50 per barrel.

Falls Over Wharf.

DRUNK HAS MIRACULOUS ESCAPE. William Fitzgerald, a retired seaman who has only one leg, fell over Franklin's wharf early this morning whilst inebriated into a boat, missing the water by a hair's breadth. Watchman Tobin, who was on the premises, did not see or hear Fitzgerald until a note near the outer breastwork attracted his attention and caused him to investigate. He found the unfortunate man lying in the bottom of a boat which was moored to the stern of the schooner "Sordello". The police were informed and two constables of the night watch soon appeared on the scene, and with some difficulty contrived to get Fitzgerald on the wharf. They afterwards took him to the Police Station.

Flagship Leaves.

With the Red Ensign fluting at her stern, s.s. Lobelia, flagship of the Newfoundland Navy, sailed under sealed order to-day for the Labrador. As she steamed out of the Narrows with the sun's rays gleaming on her polished guns and brass work, and on the reflector of her searchlight, she presented a most imposing appearance. This is the first time the Lobelia has been commissioned since her arrival in these waters. How true it is we do not know, but it is rumored that the ship is looking for the whale that swallowed Jonah.

Last Night's Concert.

Despite the many counter attractions, the C.C.C. Promenade Band Concert in the Prince's Rink was attended by over 1000 people. The concert, which surpassed all previous efforts, the floor was in excellent condition, having been thoroughly washed during the last week, which fact was taken advantage of by some 600 people. The floor presented a happy spectacle as the merry couples swung on to the lit of the snappy tunes of the One-Stop, the dreamy lullaby of the waltz, and the measured glide of the Fox-Trot as played by Captain Bulley and his talented assistants. The value of these entertainments is unlimited, as they come between seasons when it is too warm to dance in a close hall and too cool for open air concerts. By securing the Prince's Rink, Captain Bulley has showed another proof of his desire to cater to the wants of the public generally. Beginning next Monday concerts will be held three times a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Surrendered by Bondsman.

The young man from St. John, N.B., who whilst out on bail on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences, attempted to take possession of the money, was surrendered by Mr. Sutherland, his bondsman, in the Police Court this morning. Under the circumstances Mr. Sutherland could not continue the bond. The defendant was remanded to the Penitentiary for eight days or until the Crown is prepared to proceed with the case.

A Suspicious Character.

An Englishman, who stowed away some time ago on the Sable I, was found on the street at an early hour this morning and as he was unable to give a good account of himself he was taken to the Police Station. In court, this morning he was very impertinent and when asked where he lived said he could find the place but he knew neither the street nor the number. A constable was ordered to accompany him on his search for his home, and if he fails to find it, he will have to spend 30 days in a temporary hostel.

Laid to Rest.

The funeral of Margaret Skinner the victim of Thursday's accident on the Torbay Road, took place from the home of her parents Cove Road this afternoon and was largely attended. Prayers for the dead were recited at the R. C. Cathedral after which interment took place at Fairview.

Generous Business.

There is posted in the Board of Trade Rooms to-day an enquiry from a Boston firm for a large quantity of fish. The message as follows was directed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who evidently wished to share the business with the trader. BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 5. Commissioner of Fisheries.

Wrecked at Lamaline.

The Sub-Collector at Lamaline has notified the Marine and Fisheries Department that the schooner, coal laden from Sydney, had gone ashore at the Lories and would likely prove a total loss. The crew, so the report states, landed safely. The schooner sailed from Catalina and was owned by F. Templeman. She is a schooner of about 120 tons.

"Road Being Repaired."

On several country roads the sign "road being repaired. Drive slowly" is still to be seen but repairs have either been effected or stopped by completion as no labourers seem to be in sight. We would suggest to the Road Commission or whoever is responsible that these signs be altered to "road has been repaired. Drive slowly" or otherwise, judging from the condition some of them are now in, it is difficult to know whether the roads have been repaired at all.

Church Parade.

To-morrow afternoon the C.L.B. Cadets will attend divine service at the C. of E. Cathedral and a very large turnout of all ranks is expected. The Old Comrades will parade with the Battalion as will also a detachment of the Spencer College Giff Cadets. If the weather permits a short route march will be held after the service.

Schooner Caught in Gale.

MINARD'S LINIMENT CURED BY

"Long Live Good-Humored Gossip."

The other day I read an account of a contractor building a lot of houses without "front doors". When remonstrated with, his reply was, "All the better. No front doors, no gossiping." This caused utterings in many dovecots. When I read it, I couldn't help leaning back in my chair and smiling. After all, there are various kinds of gossip and good-humored gossiping is surely one of the chief pleasures of life.

What Miner Says.

Dear Sir—Some time ago the writer availed of your columns to comment on and arouse interest in the various mineral discoveries that are now being made, particularly with reference to the recent development in the district of Bay-De-Verde.

When we contemplate the tremendous commercial possibilities that lie in the discovery and ultimate development of a superior mineral deposit, it is a pleasure rather than a labor to eulogize and encourage the laudable efforts of those whose indefatigable labors in disclosing the latent riches of our country are destined one day to raise its commercial standard to a pinnacle unsurpassed in the realm of commerce.

With your permission, then, I would further avail of your columns to record still another discovery made recently in this particular section, the analytical examination of which bears indubitable evidence to the fact, that Bay-De-Verde is fated to rival the far-famed Kibbik in ultimately becoming the leading industrial centre of Newfoundland.

Mr. Colford, whose enthusiasm and energy has led him into every unexplored avenue in quest of its hidden treasures, is, I feel sure, adequately compensated by the fact that each successive test of his reputedly analyzed samples adduce indubitable evidence in favor of its intrinsic qualities. Nor have subsequent tests disclosed the slightest blemish that could be employed in successfully refuting the facts already submitted. Nothing extraneous whatever, has been found to exist in the composition, the knowledge of which I am sure affords him more satisfaction than the united praises of the universe.

Uniquely situated as a shipping centre, its mineral possessions varying from the manganese to the superior hematite, Bay-De-Verde might well justify the most optimistic prophecy concerning its future. Recently the writer had the opportunity of examining samples discovered in other portions of the island, but that the samples possessed by Mr. Colford are superior, both in appearance and commercial value, is a fact that cannot be impugned.

Not content, however, with this phenomenal success, Mr. Colford determined to dig still deeper, confident that it harbored 'neath its time-stained bosom greater commercial value than he was yet aware of, that his expectations were justified, is the fact that ranks it mineralogically and commercially with the famous industrial centres of the west. Not only is this particular section of the district teeming with mineral wealth, but its immediate economical advantages for the development of these resources is its chief characteristic. Not the least of these is its unrivalled possibilities for the introduction of irrigation, a factor which plays no small part in the success of such enterprises, and altogether as a commercial asset Bay-De-Verde is to-day without peer in the industrial annals of this country.

In thus emulating his pioneer predecessors, Mr. Colford has not only enjoyed well-earned success but has unconsciously, perhaps, reared a monument that will perpetuate his memory so long as posterity continues to enjoy its benefits.

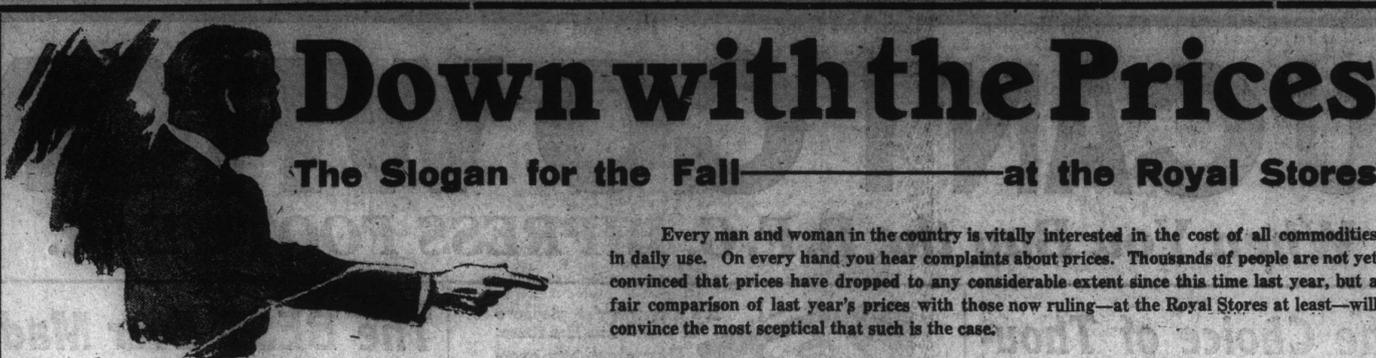

Sincerely yours,
MINER.

Testimonial to Captain.

Shortly before the arrival here of the "Roseland" on Thursday a deputation of passengers waited on Captain Mitchell, her popular commander, and presented him with the following testimonial:—

Dear Capt Mitchell—Allow us to express our deep appreciation of your untiring kindness and courtesy to us during the voyage now ending, and particularly let us bear testimony to the skillful seamanship displayed by you during last night's storm. Recognition of the outstanding ability which has so marked your career, especially as Captain of this ship, has come to us under many similar circumstances, but in no truer spirit or with more sincerity than are expressed in this slight testimonial, and that, we trust, you by the undersigned friends and sincere admirers of yours. (Signed) Mrs. Shima, E. J. Burgess, John W. Rowe, M. F. Edwards, Mrs. E. R. Burgess, Rev. Jos. F. Pippy, M. F. Atwood, J. C. and Mrs. Mewa, Jennie E. McMahon, John Herder, A. W. and Mrs. Kennedy, A. J. and Mrs. Fox, E. Chinch, P. Wadden, Elizabeth Wadden, Mary A. O'Hara, Mrs. W. O'Connell, E. G. O'Connell, Margaret St. John, H. and Mrs. Blacher, Captain Mitchell in a few short words thanked the deputation for their good wishes, and assured them that he would always have kindly remembrance of the trip just completed.

Down with the Prices

The Slogan for the Fall at the Royal Stores

Every man and woman in the country is vitally interested in the cost of all commodities in daily use. On every hand you hear complaints about prices. Thousands of people are not yet convinced that prices have dropped to any considerable extent since this time last year, but a fair comparison of last year's prices with those now ruling—at the Royal Stores at least—will convince the most sceptical that such is the case.

We here at this Store have been constant in our efforts to hasten the drop in prices. We feel sure that our policy has been in line with public interests at all points. For some time past we have been collecting evidence and it all serves to confirm our deliberate opinion.

Manufacturers are now offering goods at prices well below those generally assumed to be prevailing. We have accepted a lot of these offers and the buying public get the benefit.

To prove beyond a doubt that prices are much lower, we have compiled a price list of goods that are in daily demand, and compared the present prices with those prevailing at this time last year.

Life of Service.

FROM CADET TO ADMIRAL OF THE FLEET.

Louis Alexander Mounthatten, Marquis of Milford Haven, who died on September 11th, was born at Graz, Austria, on May 24, 1854, the eldest son of Prince Alexander of Hesse. From very early years tales of the sea fascinated him, and the yarns of Marryat and other writers of sea-faring fiction were his chief delight. They set him, as they have set millions of boys, dreaming of a sailor's career, and in his case the dream came true. In 1868, when he was just 14, he was naturalised as a British subject and entered the Royal Navy as a cadet.

That was the beginning of long years of service to the country of his adoption, the country he was so proud to serve. Step by step he climbed the ranks of the Navy, and it is only three weeks since his final promotion, to be an Admiral of the Fleet on the Retired List, was announced. And every advancement which he gained was won by sheer merit, by the unceasing labour of a fine brain and grand character which delighted in its chosen task and asked for nothing better than the right to labour. The Navy knows the worth of that service, and his finest memorial is the affectionate admiration of the men who served with and under him.

He might, if he had chosen, have been a King instead of a British naval officer. When his brother Alexander ruled in Bulgaria, his subjects disapproved of him so sincerely that they asked the young naval officer, who was then known as Prince Louis of Battenburg, to take his place. A deputation went to his ship to make the offer.

Many years later a sailor who was present on that occasion wrote his own account of what happened. "He brought them all out on the quarter-deck," he said, "and pointed to our apology for an ensign and said, 'I'd sooner serve under that rag than be the Kaiser of Germany, so chuck fuggin' about your beastly little country.' What he actually said was,

"I would rather serve under that than wear any crown you or anyone else could offer me," but the sailor guessed what he meant.

His service afloat lasted practically without a break from 1868 until 1911, when he was made Second Sea Lord, to become a year later, the youngest First Sea Lord the Admiralty had ever known. For he was, above all things, a practical seaman, never happier than when he was on the water, engaged on the daily work of the Navy.

A scientist of repute and an expert in mechanics, he was for ever working at the mechanical problems of his trade, and many of his inventions are in daily use in the Navy today. "When 'Batts' goes to heaven," a petty officer said of him once, "the first thing he will do will be to invent something useful."

A strict disciplinarian, he was one of those just men under whom men delight to serve. He explained his ideas of discipline to the boys of the National School at Portishead some years ago. "There are two ways of keeping discipline," he said. "One is the 'slave-driver's method, by force of the whip. The other is when every person in a ship realises that he has to do his share." And the man who served with "Batts" knew beyond all doubt that his share would always be done, and done supremely well.

Director of Naval Intelligence, Commander of the Second Cruiser Squadron, Second in Command in the Mediterranean, Commander-in-Chief of the Atlantic Fleet—the list of his appointments reads like the index to the Navy List, through the honourable years his service moved on to what was at once its climax and its tragedy.

His greatest hour came on July 26, 1914. The Home Fleets had recently undergone a test mobilisation and were about to disperse from Portland. Mr. Churchill, who was then First Lord of the Admiralty, was on holiday at Cromer, and the First Sea Lord was in charge in Whitehall. No one dreamed of war—but Austria had sent her ultimatum to Serbia. Prince Louis telegraphed without hesitation for the Fleet to stand fast. "The first step which secured the timely concentration of the Fleet, was taken by you," Mr. Churchill wrote to him after. Others have put it more roundly and declared that that order saved England.

THE TRAGEDY.

Three months later came the tragedy. Prince Louis of Battenburg was Austrian-born, and rumour became busy with his name. He resigned. The day for which he had prepared himself through the long years had come; the Navy he had served so finely was to be put to the supreme test—and he was to have no part in the labour.

One consolation was left to him. "The Navy of to-day, and still more the Navy of to-morrow, bears the imprint of your work," Mr. Churchill told him. And there was another consolation—his sons were permitted to fight, even if he might not. His heir was in the battles of the Dogger Bank, Heligoland, and Jutland. And his daughter, Princess Louise, was not hindered from going as a nurse to France.

So through the years of conflict he stood quietly aside, living for the greater part of the time at East Cowes, where everybody knew and loved him. For occupation he had his books and his writing—someone said of him once that he handled a pen as well as he did a fleet. He was the leading authority on medals, and wrote the authoritative book on the subject.

In 1917, when the King swept the German names from the Royal Household, Prince Louis of Battenburg became Marquis of Milford Haven, and his heir the Earl of Medina, Mount Batton—the name of that little headland which watches Plymouth's eastern harbour; Medina—the name of that little river of the Isle of Wight which has seen the building of so

Moros Cling to Old Ways

Major-General Leonard Wood and a party of United States officials have been making an investigation in the southern group of the Philippine Islands, where the natives are continuing to live in the same manner and with the same customs as they did hundreds of years ago.

On one occasion the general and his aide were invited to the home of Chief Anai Manablang. The chief met his guests and led them into his two-story wooden house on the shore of Lake Lanaso, in Mindanao province. As the party entered the house the chief never even glanced at his ten wives, who sat or lay on the slightly raised floor or were peering out of the narrow windows at the school next door, from which came voices of children reciting the Koran.

The general was taken to the room of state where the chiefs of the Lake district had gathered for a pow-wow with the United States officials. He might have stepped back a thousand years into Arabia or Persia. The walls and ceilings of the room were covered with costly rugs. Large brown treasure chests, worn with age, were scattered around the room. Many of the objects exhibited were looted taken in old wars. Spears and bolts were suspended from the walls, but there were no rifles. Arranged on various stands were gold and silver swords, precious stones, silks, bracelets, betel nut boxes richly carved, costly bowls and shields of all sizes.

"How many children have you?" asked General Holliday as he heard the wail of an infant and saw a dusky bare shouldered woman in a corner by a window rocking a baby asleep.

"About forty," replied the Moro chief.

This country is the heart of Moroland, where all efforts of United States civilization have failed and the men and women have the same habits they had centuries ago.

In the school, the teacher, wearing a long black robe and hood, walked back and forth among the little boys, who wore the sons of chiefs and nobles. Each held a big Arabic Bible from which he read verses in a singing tone at the top of his voice. This is all that is taught in the schools. The girls are not taught the much as it is held that they do not need an education.

"How many wives have you?" was asked of a young vendor of rings outside the chief's house. He looked with envy at the house of many women and said he had none, but he hoped to buy one when he had 1,000 pesos. That tells the story of why fathers want to retain their daughters in ignorance. The feeling is so bitter on the subject that General Wood and Mr. Forbes have advised going slow in forcing the Moros to send their girls to school.

The Moros refuse to pay taxes and there are more Moro schools than Christian. They are somewhat afraid of the Christians as they call the Filipinos, as the latter make good soldiers.

HEAD McMURDO'S LANE.

St. Frances of Assisi.

(A.D. 1228.)

St. Frances of Assisi, one of the most beloved of all the saints, was born in the quaint little town of Assisi, in the Duchy of Spoleto, in 1182.

His father, Peter Bernardone, was a merchant. His mother, Pica, of good family.

The Franciscans, in their eagerness to establish a close uniformity between their founder and the Saviour of the world, have a legend to the effect that he was born in a stable, which is now a chapel, dedicated to Saint Francisco.

Another of the many legends connected with his birth is that when he was being baptized in the church a mysterious and venerable stranger appeared, who took the child in his arms and acted as his godfather at the font, and then vanished in the direction of the Cathedral of S. Rufinus.

According to a second version of this story, the old man was an angel, who took the child up in his arms, signed his right shoulder with the cross, and uttered a canticle which was poor copy of the "Nunc Dimittis."

During the war between the cities of Perugia and Assisi, Francis was taken prisoner and kept for a whole year in Perugia.

Shortly after this, he had a dream in which he heard a voice ask him, "Francis, whom does it profit most to follow, the master or the servant?"

"The Master," answered Francis. "Why then," asked the voice, "do not leave the Master for the servant, the prince for his subject? 'Lord what wilt thou have me to do?'" asked Francis. "Return to thy country," answered the voice, "and then it will be told thee what thou must do."

In spite of this dream Francis kept on at his military duties, but they had lost zest.

His mind seems to have become unsettled and when visiting Rome, seeing the steps of St. Peter's crowded with beggars, he pulled off his own clothes, changed them with a beggar for his rags, and seated himself for the rest of the day on the steps of the cathedral, begging with the squalid crew.

Upon his return to Assisi, the current of his life gradually changed, and he became pious instead of gay and reckless. Soon he had forgotten himself in his love for his Saviour. In a cave situated in a wood, not too far away, he daily spent hours in devotion and contemplation. Early in his career Francis spent two years restoring churches. It was in the year 1208, when hearing mass one day in a little church a text in the Gospel struck him as it never had before.

The words which suddenly struck on his conscience were these: "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves, and as ye go, preach, saying, 'The kingdom of Heaven is at hand.'"

This was what Francis had long wanted. Leaving the church, he divested himself of his shoes, cast away his staff, loosed the leathern girdle from his waist, and supplied its place by a piece of cord, the first thing that was ready at hand. His mouth was now open to preach the Gospel to the poor.

Soon St. Francis had a following and as soon as the disciples had reached the number of seven, St. Francis sent them out to preach by numbers of two, as our Lord had sent his disciples.

The love of St. Francis for birds and all dumb creatures is well known. Lambs were the special objects of his regard. On one occasion, while walking silently along the road on one of his many journeys, he saw a lamb feeding among a herd of goats. It was like our Lord among the Pharisees, he thought; and he could not bear to leave the emblem of his Master in the midst of the rude bearded flock. But Francis had no money to offer for it. A merchant coming up, and hearing his difficulty, bought the lamb and presented it to Francis, who took it with him to Germo, where he was going to preach. The lamb was made the subject of his sermon and he set forth the divine story so as to win all hearts. The lamb was left at a convent and the sisters, later made the saint a gown of its wool, which he received with unfeigned delight.

In 1219 a chapter of the whole order of Franciscans was held at Assisi, which was attended by some 5,000 members. And as soon as the chapter was over St. Francis set out on his long-cherished mission to the East. He sailed for Egypt, but it was not long before he returned home.

About the year 1225 St. Francis wrote to a friend: "I would thou shouldst know, dearest friend, that the blessed Christ hath by His grace, revealed to me that the end of my life is near at hand."

He called all the brethren to sup with him; the night before he died; broke bread, after blessing it, and distributed among them. He died on Saturday, October 4th, and was buried at Assisi, in the Cathedral, on the following day.

According to tradition, his body lies under the high altar, but no one knows the precise spot of his grave. The one dominating passion of his life had been to be like Christ. He is represented in art, in the habit of his order, bearded, with the stigmata (five wounds of the cross), or receiving them from a flying six-winger crucified cherub.

GIVE BELL A SQUARE DEAL!

Without entering into the discussion of the merits or demerits of last Monday's celebration in honor of our athletes' home-coming from Halifax, isn't it only fair that the treatment accorded one section of the team should be accorded the other? Bell is now in Halifax undergoing the last stages of his final training for the most grueling contest that ever a Newfoundlander was called upon to enter. He knows that the eyes of the whole country are watching him, and the strain on his nerves must be terrific. Acrimonious discussions concerning a matter with which he is connected will only weaken his morale, and thus lessen his chances of victory.

Play the game, Sports, and those who are not. Give Bell a chance, citizens, and defer such discussions until the outcome of next Saturday's race is known.

ANOTHER LONG DISTANCE RUNNER.

Jim Jacobs, of the Reid Nfld. Co. leaves by to-morrow's express for Halifax on his vacation. His friends are inducing him to enter the Road Race on next Saturday, and it is very likely he will. It will be remembered that Mr. Jacobs was a good third in the Guards' Road Race for his first attempt at this distance. As there were twenty-two prizes Jimmy should easily capture one of them. This makes the third entry from Newfoundland, viz. Bell, Eyle and Jacobs, and between them they have a good chance of carrying off the special team prize for the event.

BELL THE FAVORITE.

Visitors from Halifax declare that Newfoundland's entry—John Bell—is easily the favourite out of over 49 runners entered to date. Provided everything goes well, the only man to be feared is MacAnisay, the noted Windsor runner. He holds the record for the 10 mile road race, but as it is now some years since he has completed it, it is doubtful if he can duplicate his 54 minute record this day week.

HAD BRASS BAND READY.

We understand from Manager Goodland, of the Halifax Track Team, that a number of Newfoundlanders residing at North Sydney had the city band engaged on Saturday morning to play them from the train to the hotel. The team arrived at North Sydney, however, on Friday's train, so as to make positive connections with the KYLE, so that all preparations had to be cancelled. Nevertheless they wish to express to Mr. A. W. Shano and his committee their appreciation for this and their many other kindnesses which made their trip so delightful; and also to Mrs. Ireland and to Mr. C. H. Hayward of Grand Falls for their kindly gifts of cigars and fruit on the homeward journey.

PRESENTATION TO ATHLETE.

Harvey Skirving, our youngest representative at the Halifax sports, was visited by a number of friends at his home, Pleasant Street, on Thursday evening and was presented with a gift in appreciation of his splendid showing in the one mile race. Mr. Skirving made an appropriate reply, after which an impromptu musicale was held and a very pleasant evening was spent before the gathering dispersed.

CANT LOSE!

Dear Sir,—Jack Bell—our champion has friends, and they are legion, representing all classes and creeds. They are proud of his prowess, and that is why he was sent away to represent us. Win, lose, or draw, when he comes home they are going to turn out in his honour whether the National Sporting Committee is scared of the man or not through newspaper criticism by sore-heads. The majority of the people is never wrong, and just as we turned out to do Skirving, Butler, and Pichan proud, are we going to do the same for Johnny Bell, Newfoundland champion long distance runner. Thanking you for space,

Yours truly,
ADMIRER.

St. Lawrence O'Toole.

(A.D. 1180.)

Lorcan O'Tuathal, or as he is generally called Laurence O'Toole, was the youngest son of Muriartach (Murtough) O'Tuathal, prince of Inisby in what is now the present County of Wicklow. His mother was of the equally great family of the Hy, Brinn.

When ten years old Lorcan was given, by his father, as a hostage to Dermot MacMurrough, king of Leinster, a notoriously brutal prince.

Many are the tales of Dermot's cruelty. In 1185, to please one of his followers, he took the Abbess of Kildare from her convent. When the people of Kildare refused to her rescue one hundred and fifty of them were killed by Dermot's soldiers, who further put out the eyes of Murtketch, chief of Wicklow, and seventeen other lords.

Lorcan, he sent to a barren boy without sufficient food. When Murtough O'Toole heard of it he seized twelve of Dermot's soldiers and threatened to put them to death if his son were not restored to him. Dermot then gave Lorcan into the care of the Bishop of Glendalough, who eventually gave the boy back to the father.

When Lorcan was twelve years of age Murtough took Lorcan with him to call upon the bishop, whom he asked to determine, by casting of lots, which of his sons should be devoted to the ecclesiastical estate.

Lorcan, laughing said that it was not necessary to cast lots as he wished to become a clergyman. So his father gladly allowed him to remain with the Bishop of Glendalough and receive training for the priesthood.

Some time later Murtough O'Toole was put to death by Dermot.

At the age of twenty-five Laurence was elected Abbot of the Monastery of Glendalough, and some years later when the Bishop of Glendalough died and the office was offered to Laurence he refused it.

He devoted himself to the care of his diocese and was noted for the generosity of his charity as well as the frugality of his own life. From thirty to sixty poor people were fed daily by his bounty. When the Archbishop of Dublin died, Laurence was forced, against his will, to accept the Archiepiscopal See.

Meantime the cruelty of Dermot led to his being driven out of the country by a league of princes and chiefs under Roderic O'Connora the King of all Ireland.

Dermot fled to Henry II. of England, but Henry was too much occupied with his own troubles to be able to help Dermot.

Eventually Strongbow agreed to help Dermot recover his kingdom on condition that he, Strongbow should be allowed to marry Eva, Dermot's daughter, and should succeed him on the throne of Leinster. Their combined efforts met with success, and when in 1171, Dermot died of a painful disorder, Strongbow and Eva succeeded to the throne.

The chiefs continued to fight against each other until Bishop Laurence and other leading men finally sent and asked Henry II. of England to come to the rescue of distracted Ireland.

Accordingly, in October, 1171, Henry landed in Ireland, with five hundred knights and four thousand men-at-arms, to take over the kingdom. The Irish princes unable to resist him, and recognising the folly of mutual warfare, submitted without a blow, and took oaths of allegiance to the English King.

In 1175 Laurence went to Windsor on affairs, concerning his church, and while there witnessed the closing of the efforts met with success, and when in 1171, Dermot died of a painful disorder, Strongbow and Eva succeeded to the throne.

My stomach was in bad condition all the time and after every meal I would have a awful pain just below my breast bone and feel as if I was going to choke."

"Tantic was certainly the making of me. It gave me an appetite, toned up my stomach, and entirely rid me of the rheumatism. I never expected to be well again, but here I am feeling as fine as I ever did in my life."

Germany's Secret Assassins.

How "Undesirables" Are Got Rid Of. (The assassination of Herr Erzberger, which the Socialist and Republican press of the Fatherland attributes to the Conservative party, not only robs Germany of perhaps her most able politician—the man who saw that, reconstruction was possible only on a basis of reconciliation with the Allies—but also draws fresh attention to the persistence of secret societies on the Continent, and makes the following article by Mr. R. L. Hadfield particularly topical.—Glasgow Weekly Herald.)

"Secret societies are springing into being throughout the whole of Germany." The authority for this statement is none other than Herr Stinnes' own newspaper, the "Halle Zeitung," and reports from various Allied Commissions are strongly corroborative. An officer attached to an important Commission, now in England, states that an alarming number of secret assassinations have taken place lately, about which it has been impossible to obtain evidence. The offenders are German subjects who have had relations of a more or less friendly character with Allied officers and French officials. "Investigation shows," says this officer, "that there is a vast underground movement employing secret and mysterious methods against all foreigners."

The "Chouans" who indulged in robbery and murder disguised under the best of intentions.

In the Middle Ages Germany was honeycombed with a powerful secret organization known as the "Vehmeh." This society was started with high ideals, its object being the righting of wrongs and the punishment of criminals too lightly dealt with by the law. So powerful did they become that they were far more dreaded than the established authority; they captured criminals, tried them with a rough sort of justice, and punished them with severity. It is apparent that there is now in Germany, struggling in the aftermath of war, a revival of the "Vehmeh." The secret brotherhood now at work is punishing all those who, according to the ideas of the "Vehmeh," the secret brotherhood try, and are thereby giving considerable trouble to their own authorities and the British and French Commissions. Many French soldiers have fallen victims to the secret assassins, the method of dealing death—whatever it is—being always the same. The bodies of the victims are almost invariably found in every case full of knife wounds and floating in the Rhine and other rivers.

"The Iron Virgin."

This finding of floating bodies full of wounds is a most significant fact, and its importance has hitherto escaped notice in the examination of the victims of the "Vehmeh." In earlier days it was the "Vehmeh" of Germany that invented the diabolical instrument of death known as the "Iron Virgin." This was a life-size statue constructed in a most cunning manner for the execution of offenders, and it stood in a secret dungeon in a castle on the Rhine. The condemned would be led into the dread chamber, and there ordered to "kiss the Virgin." On his approaching the statue it opened, and, grasping him firmly, drew him within. But the hollowed-out interior of the statue was filled with knives, and the eyes of victim thus embraced. After a few minutes, the "Virgin" released the victim, a trap-door opened in the floor, and his body was dropped into the Rhine, and carried swiftly away.

It is a significant fact that the victims of the new "Vehmeh" are being discovered dead under circumstances that point to a similar punishment, and there are much greater improbabilities than that the reign of the "Iron Virgin" has been resurrected. Many of to-day's victims show unmistakable signs of her terribly rending embrace.

(Erzberger's end, of course, was by shooting, but the anti-militarists of Germany are convinced that it was the work of a "national murder" centre, which has systematically prepared a long series of murders of inconvenient adversaries, and the fact that blood-hounds have failed to get on the track of the assassins, while a £5000 reward for their arrest still waits a claimant, goes far to confirm the suspicion. Whoever were the assassins, robbery was clearly not the object, for nothing was taken from the body, and even a diamond ring fell from the dead statesman's finger, was found lying in the grass beside the body.)

Troubles of An "Uplifter."

(Commerce and Finance.)

Representative Paul Burney Johnson of the Sixth Mississippi district, forty-one years old and married, is an intrepid young man with a mission. He has introduced a bill to prohibit women in Washington from smoking cigarettes. Mr. Johnson has smoked in his time as city and circuit judge. He abhors the vamp and has evidently acquired the habit of viewing with alarm.

"The very best man in the country is as helpless as a child when in the hands of a woman," declares Mr. Johnson. "Why, the so-called smart set are because they are smart enough to cover up their devilment and not get caught."

The crusading Congressman gave a committee hearing on his pet bill. His face glowed as he saw the room packed with women. "Now," he said, "we shall hear the voice of the pure womanhood of America in favor of my great measure of reform."

You may tempt the upper classes. With your devilish dem-tasses; But heaven will protect the working-girl.

Alas! the women proceeded one after the other to pour hot shot into Johnson and his bill. "The women of this country are sick and tired of this senseless agitation about legislating as to what women can do," declared Mrs. J. B. Cassidy, wife of an army colonel, who stated she herself had never smoked a cigarette in her life. "Some want to fix the style of Johnson's crusading blood was roused within him, and he said that what he really wanted was a nation-wide anti-cigarette-for-women law. He said cigarettes for women were driving our country on the rocks and he felt he must do something.

Up rose kind, genial, sensible Miss Alice Robertson, the only woman in Congress.

"Paul," she said, "is that all that's troubling you? Come down to the restaurant and I'll wipe off your forehead with some nice cold lemonade." So the irate Congressman was let away, somewhat quieter but still proclaiming his theory of the rocks.

Napoleon and the Post.

The Morning Post recently recalled a little-known incident of the Napoleonic wars—the attacks made by Coleridge in that paper on Napoleon, and the latter's attempt to arrest the poet when he was in Rome.

France and Rome.

The writer in the Morning Post says of Coleridge's articles:— He instituted a comparison of France under Napoleon with Rome under the first Caesars—a comparison which he followed up a few days later with a striking contribution on the probable final restoration of the Bourbons. In these sketches, in which he showed a wonderful intimacy with the history of Ancient Rome and with the state of France in his own time, he carried his contrast heavily against Napoleon, who read the articles, and it is recorded, "deeply resented their tone and spirit."

In 1806 Coleridge was living in Rome, and it is suggested that Napoleon, hearing of this, issued a warrant for his arrest. James Dyke Campbell in his "Life of Coleridge," declares that the poet gave some accounts of this event, "which are not altogether consistent." He considers that it is more probable that Napoleon issued an order for the arrest of all the Englishmen in Rome, Coleridge included.

Saved by a Monk.

On the other hand, the Morning Post gives the following account of the episode:—

In 1806 it came to his knowledge that his great English critic was sojourning in Rome, and he at once issued from Paris a warrant for his arrest. "But from that danger," writes Coleridge, "I was rescued by the kindness of a noble Benedictine and the gracious connivance of that good old man the present Pope. The tyrant's vindictive appetite was," he adds, "omnivorous, and reposed equally on a Duc d'Enghien and the writer of newspaper articles." The Duc d'Enghien, a son of the Prince of Conde, had been arrested, summarily tried, and shot, solely to strike a blow at the Bourbons. There was thus every reason why Coleridge should be circumspcct. The "French torrent rolled down on Naples" before he had been ten days in Rome.

Coleridge escaped and took ship for England from Leghorn. The vessel was chased by a French man-of-war and Coleridge, was forced by the terrified captain to throw his papers overboard.—John O'London's Weekly.

RICHES.

"If I had loads of money existence would be sunny," the poor fish sadly moans; "I'm certainly disgusted with it, but I'm always hustled, when other men have bones. The rich man has no sorrow; if he should try to borrow a grief 't would be in vain; for money is the basis of all the joy that chases around this mundane plain." But when a man has riches his wails, in dismal pitches, assail the gates of morn; of all men who have anguish, he seems the most forlorn. All kinds of gratters fret him, the tax collectors get him, and leave him sick and sore; his pet investments fizzle, his tears fall in a drizzle, and life becomes a bore. The people tire and irk him, because they try to work him, and send him from his kale; he has no friends to cherish, all his affections perish, and all his longings fall. Of all the idle dreamers, and all the ruthless schemers he is the proper prey; the robbers make him tremble, and gold brick men assemble around him on his way. The hates of men revolt him, the eyes of envy jolt him, and everywhere he wends he meets the whining needy, the covetous and greedy, but seldom meets with friends. And when we envy riches, while digging useful ditches or sowing helpful seed, our taste must be lamented; so let us be contented, and labor and be good.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

ON WEARING UNBECOMING COLORS.

Of all the foolish obsessions which take possession of us mortals from time to time, it seems to me that few are more foolish than the obsession that when a certain color becomes the style of the season, it thereupon becomes becoming to anyone who wants to wear it. I use the strong word "obsession" because I think the quality of the irrationality of this idea is very like that of the Fashion Hat Waved Her Wand.

Last year I had a dress that was hideously unbecoming. I am sure anyone who knew nothing about stylish colors should see me in it, he or she would say at once, "Take it off. You can't wear that shade of brick red" (which it was). But when fashion waved her wand last year, ever brick red and made it hence, she was in the mind of those who let fashion do their thinking for them. I showed this dress to two women will not find it unbecoming (to him that hath shall be given). But the all-most-pretty girl, the woman who is on the edge of looking a trifle faded and haggard, what is black going to do to them. Why push them over the edge into the plain or the faded and haggard class, of course.

"It isn't As Bad As It Were Twice As Bad." Well, there is one thing to be thankful for, black can't do as much harm as the vivid colors. I am glad for my own sake who would have to see it and for those who would feel they had to wear it, that it wasn't a bright greenish yellow or a screaming-crimson that fashion decided was becoming to everyone this year.

Ocean Race for $10,000 is Likely.

Lunenburg Skipper Now in Port Says The Yankees Can be Accommodated.

In talking to Capt. Roger Conrad, commander of the Lunenburg schooner Gilbert Walters, which competed in the international ocean race last year, a Herald representative was told yesterday that there was every chance of the Boston-owned schooner Mayflower and the Bluenose, the crack Lunenburg, coming together in a real ocean race, providing the Yankees mean business.

The Gilbert Walters came into port Saturday to load coal for a port in Newfoundland, from where she will carry fish to Brasil. When her skipper landed on the wharf he was met by a Herald reporter, who enquired about the coming fisherman's race, said he was sorry the Mayflower was not a contender, because she certainly did not come up to the requirements contained in the deed of gift.

However, Capt. Conrad says there are $10,000 down in Lunenburg that say the Bluenose can outfoot the boasted Yankee in a real honest-to-goodness ocean race—a jaunt of say 2,000 miles where you meet all kinds of weather, and where the best craft tells. According to the skipper of the Gilbert Walters, this is an excellent opportunity for the Boston men behind the Mayflower to prove their faith in the yacht-like fisherman—North Sydney Herald, Oct. 5.

TWO CLERKS. Two there were in the Self-same store Side by side on the busy floor, Each with ribbons and silks to sell, But one of them rose while the other fell; One moved up while all year long The other was merely a part of the throng.

Here's the story, so oft retold In the busy shops where life's wares are sold— One sold silk from a crowded shelf, And quite forgot he must sell himself; One was cheered and liked his work, The other gloomy and just a clerk.

The cheerful one with his ready smile Had people flock to his crowded aisle; They'd ask for him, and thus advertise That he was patient and also wise; For this was his plan, to the long day's end, To make a sale and to make a friend.

It wasn't long ere the chief found out He had a clerk being talked about; He heard it from women but poorly dressed, He heard it, too, from the city's best; And he learned it from something which never fails The glowing sum of the young man's sales.

Oh, boy, whatever your job may be Go to it bravely and cheerfully; Over the counter and from the shelf Remember always to sell yourself; Be at your best till the long day ends For that is the secret of making friends.

Nfld. Journalist Here.

Mr. C. T. James, the brilliant editor of the newsy St. John's, Nfld. Telegram, was a passenger arriving here by the Kyle this morning. Here's an easy way to save $5, and you have the best cough remedy you ever tried.

You've probably heard of this well-known plan of making cough syrup at home. But have you ever used it? When you do, you will understand why thousands of families, the world over, feel that they could hardly keep house without it. It's simple and cheap, but the way it takes hold of a cough will quickly earn it a permanent place in your home.

Into a 16-oz. bottle, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex; then add plain granulated sugar syrup to fill up the bottle. Or, if desired, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, never spoils, and gives you 16 ounces of better cough remedy than you could buy ready-made for $2.00.

It is really wonderful how quickly this home-made remedy conquers a cough—usually in 24 hours or less. It seems to penetrate through every air passage, loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough, lifts the phlegm, heals the membrane, and gives almost immediate relief. Sore throat, throat tickle, hoarseness, croup, bronchitis and bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and has been used for generations for throat and chest ailments. To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded.
