Select Literature. BESSIE.

It was a warm, bright day, and pretty Bessie Willis looked longingly out from her window in the great hotel, with a homesick feeling at her heart.

Herbert was her brother, lodging in some remote room of that same big house, and sometimes she would scarcely see him for days together.

There had been a little property left them when their parents died, and as soon as Herbert was twenty-one years of age, he sold it, and taking the proceeds hurried away to London with his sister in charge, only too eager to make his fortune in the world.

He thought he could easily obtain some pleasant and lucrative situation. But situations were not so easily found, and prudent, practical little Bessie knew that their small fortune was wasting slowly week by week.

She knew it was useless to talk of this to Herbert. It only fretted and annoyed him, and he told her often what a paltry speck it would all be, compared with the wealth he was going to accumulate.

So she drew further away from him, and only answered his merry "Good morning, little pigeon," or careless "Good night, sis," with a pleading smile or a grateful nod.

But this Sunday she was so tired and lonely she wondered if she could not win Herbert's attention for a little while.

They did not even sit at the same table in the long dining room, for Herbert had grown intimate with a party of young gentlemen who boarded there, and there were no ladies at their table.

But thinking of the dear old home, and of how long it was since they had talked together, Bessie wrote her brother a little note and stealing down to the dining-room just before it was time for the bell, she laid it close beside his plate.

As she took her own place beside old Mrs. Vanders, she failed to notice that some of the people at the other table had changed places, and a strange gentleman, with a stern, pale face, had taken her note from under the edge of his plate.

He read the name on the outside—"Herbert," and looking very much puzzled, put it into his vest pocket.

While waiting for the dessert, he took the little missive out again, and screening it by an apparently careless arrangement of his napkin, read—

"DEAR HERBERT—I would like to see some of the churches, if you do not mind taking me in my winter dress. I will wait for you in the parlor. Please come up immediately after dinner, and I will have my hat on, and be all ready to start.

Yours, lovingly, "BESSIE."

"It is evidently a mistake," the man said to himself, "but how to rectify it I do not know."

So he went up to the parlor with a sort of guilty feeling.

There was the sweet-faced girl he had seen at the table, just fastening on her hat.

She did not notice him, but presently a group of young gentlemen came in, and the sweet face brightened visibly, as the girl stepped forward saying—

"Are you home, Herbert? Did you find my note?"

"Note!" one of the young men said. "I have seen no note."

"Allow me, please," suggested the stranger taking the note from his pocket.

"Mr. Herbert," said one of the young men in a respectful tone.

"I found this letter beside my plate, and as my name is really Herbert, the idea did not occur to me that any one else could bear the same name at the same table. Allow me now to deliver the perplexing missive to its rightful owner."

"And that is me, I take it," said Herbert Willis, laughing merrily. "Here, Bessie, you know my two friends, Wilson and Wasters, and this is Mr. Herbert; my sister, Miss Willis."

Mr. Herbert bowed, and Bessie said, his ambition had taken a tangible form, as Herbert twirled the note in his fingers—

"Can't you go with me, Bert?" "I'm afraid not to night, pigeon," was the slightly hesitating answer.

Bessie, and she tried to answer him with a steady voice; but she was thinking how long and lonely the evening would seem in her little room up stairs.

"You are disappointed," he said gently. "Oh, I am foolish, I know; but my brother is always so busy and happy with his friends, he does not think of me."

"There is a church near here," he said, referring to her note; "only the she drew up her shoulders again, and smiled gladly, not thinking if there was any lack of conventionalities in this proposal."

They went out like two children, and he offered her his arm.

The church was decorated, the sweet breath of flowers filled the air, and the deep tones of the organ seemed to invite them to enter.

It was early yet, and few people were there.

They went in quietly, and took a seat in a vacant pew.

Something in the hushed and holy charm touched Bessie's home-sick heart, and dropping her face upon her hands, she wept quietly.

It was a curious position for a grave and dignified bachelor to find himself in.

Sitting beside a strange young lady hearing her sob, and yet not knowing what comfort to offer her.

Presently she raised her head and smiled.

"Please let's go out," she said. "I do not want to stay here any longer."

So they went out again into the cool spring air, and Bessie talked of her old home; of her mother, who was one of the sweetest and kindest of women; of her present loneliness, and of by of Herbert, her handsome, cheery brother, of whom she was so proud.

"He ought to be very happy to have a sister so devoted to him," said the man.

"Everybody loves him," was the enthusiastic reply. "But, oh, and her voice fell again, 'he does not know anything about money. He is paying out all we have, and making no provision for the future. He pays now more than three pounds every week for our board, and he ought not to.'

"But what can he do?" asked Mr. Herbert.

"I want him to take two or three rooms unfurnished, and let me keep house. It would give me something to do, and be ever so much cheaper for me."

The man smiled at her womanly plans, and said—

"You are right, child, very very right. Meanwhile, what is your brother doing?"

"I do not know," she said, in a very low voice. "I am afraid not much of anything."

"Well, we will see about that," was the reply; "but there is a house in Fort street where the people are going abroad on the first of May, and some one must stay there during their absence. There is a good housekeeper there, and you and your brother can have whatever rooms you please—"

"Oh, sir," interrupted Bessie, "are you as earnest? Can we really have a home?"

"Certainly, child; and I do not wonder you long for a home after your isolated life in that hotel. But to tell the truth, I went from the Fort street house down to board because I was so overwhelmingly tired of parties and receptions and flummery that I did not care a straw for it. I will go back and take a small room for the summer."

"Can you? Will your friends be willing?"

"The man laughed.

"My friends never dictate to me," he said; "but we are talking too much business for Sunday."

The girl grew thoughtful again, but when they went up the steps together, and parted at the door, her face was radiant with a new light. She was going to have a home, she and Herbert. The great house was beautiful to look upon, but the upper story had never been furnished.

"But what do they propose to do with their house?"

"Well, they don't own it. To tell the truth, Bessie, I own it, and I purpose to give it to my wife for a bridal present."

"To your wife?"

Bessie's face grew white as she spoke. "Yes, if she would like it. Tell me little woman—it is you I want for my wife—would you like the house?"

"I don't think—I care much about the house," said Bessie, her color coming back again.

"But you would like the owner? Oh! Bessie, darling, don't flatter me so much, say you would like me—"

"I do like you now," whispered the happy girl, blushing more and more. "I always have."—N. Y. World.

FEEDING WILD ANIMALS.

"We feed all our carnivorous animals," said the superintendent of the gardens, "about six times a week. We try to follow nature. None of these animals in their wild state succeed in finding food every day. The Bengal tiger is the heaviest eater. We are giving the tiger more than the lion. His allowance is sixteen pounds of meat per day. The hyenas eat very little meat. We give them plenty of bones which they munch and crunch and grow fat on. See how sleek they look. All the animals require more or less bones food for the lime therein contained. Now the birds we feed regularly every day. All the seed eating birds have enough set before them each day to last twenty-four hours. The monkeys we feed twice a day. For breakfast they get bread and milk, and for dinner they get vegetables, bread and milk. Then, you know, the visitors are especially fond of sweet potatoes. As for the snakes, we hardly know when they die at. We have to keep offering the food, and when it suits them they take it. And when it does not they leave it alone. Sometimes they'll feed once in two or three months, and sometimes have been known to do without for six months. We generally give them rats, rabbits, guinea pigs, pigeons, frogs, mice, and small birds. The pigs and rabbits we give to the boys. All are given to the alive. They wouldn't think of touching anything dead. The pheasants we feed on hay, beet, and potatoes. The hens we feed principally on bread. The sea-lions and fish-eating birds we feed on fish. To the eagles we give meat. The griffins, elephants, camels, deer, and all hay-eating animals are fed twice a day on hay and grain. We commence feeding in winter, at three o'clock in the afternoon, and in summer an hour later."

GEMS OF GOLD.

SELF-EDUCATION.—We all of us have two educations, one of which we receive from others; another, and the most valuable, which we give ourselves. It is this last which fixes our grade in society, and eventually our actual value in this life, and perhaps the color of our fate hereafter.

HOPE OF DEATH.—It will afford sweetest happiness, in the hour of death, to have wiped one tear from the cheek of sorrow that has possessed the wealth of John Jacob Astor, to have ruled an empire, to have conquered millions, or to have enslaved the world.

As the rays of the sun, notwithstanding their velocity, injure not the eye, by reason of their minuteness, so the attack of any notwithstanding their number, ought not to wound our virtue by reason of their insignificance. Rats and conquerors must expect no mercy in misfortune.

Had Talleyrand's enmity to Napoleon manifested itself in opposition, it would have been fatal, not to his master, but himself; he maintained, therefore, a friendship that not only aggrandized himself, but opened a door for the consummation of that advice that eventually enabled him to ruin his master.

How to TREAT CROWS.—It is very gratifying to see that the poor crow which only a few years ago everybody's hand was against, turns out to be one of the most valuable birds for the farmer we have. Their only sin is in eating the newly-planted grains of corn; but this can be wholly obviated by taking half a peck of corn for a field, soaking it well and scattering it over an adjoining field. Crows never eat any hard grain, but will bury it until it becomes soft, as we have often seen them do. But they at all times prefer worms, beetles, &c., when they can be obtained, and devour immense numbers of them.

Let us love little children; they are the delicate flower gods of a soon falling Eden.

BRIDGETOWN, OCTOBER 18, 1876.

THE EXHIBITIONS.

The recent Fruit Show at Wolfville and the Provincial Agricultural Exhibition at Truro have caused quite a sensation in the principal farming districts of the Province.

The Olympic games of Greece had no higher object in view than the enjoyment of popular games, and indulgence in exciting sports.

The chief importance of such exhibition, however, is not the winning of prizes, but the impartation and diffusion of knowledge.

The comparing of notes as respects experience—the interchange of thought—and the personal examination of the items which make up the aggregate of these proofs of our country's capability, all tend to valuable results.

The tone of Colonel Laurie's admirable address at the opening of the Exhibition at Truro last week, is calculated to impart a new impulse to the minds of farmers, respecting the necessity of improvement, and to impress them with a proper sense of the dignity of their calling.

but rather by example, as well as by persuasion, to inspire the agricultural portion of our provincial community with a love for their vocation, and to lure them forward in the pathway of improvement.

THE TRURO EXHIBITION.

We regret that it was not in our power to be at the Truro Exhibition last week; and we have no other knowledge of it than the descriptions furnished by some of our contemporaries.

The Exhibition gave abundant proof of Nova Scotia's agricultural capabilities. The show of cereal roots, vegetables in variety, fruits, dairy products, cattle, horses, sheep, swine, homespun cloths, implements of farming, and many other productions pertaining to the farm, was highly satisfactory.

We have not room to give a full list of the prizes. Those awarded to our own country, however, we subjoin.

Agricultural.

PASTURES.—Dig enough for winter use, and store in earth; the rest leave in the ground until spring.

RUBBERS.—Divide old plants and reset in fresh soil, which has been previously heavily manured. A root or two may be put in the cellar and then started in the hot-bed early.

Tripods may be left in the ground until hard frosts, when they must be pulled, topped and stored in bins in the root cellar. The rutabaga sorts are best for family use, especially the White French; pack these in earth, as directed for beets.

Harvesting the remaining crops, and preparing for those of next season, will take up and store in a cool cellar, such as all intended for vegetables. This fall turning under a heavy coating of manure, is not too late to do, and it is not probable there will ever be a time when it can be done more cheaply, materials and labor being low.

CARRIAGES.—Leave the winter sorts in the ground until freezing weather is at hand; then take up and store in a cool cellar, such as all intended for vegetables. This fall turning under a heavy coating of manure, is not too late to do, and it is not probable there will ever be a time when it can be done more cheaply, materials and labor being low.

FALL WEEDS.—Spring weeds stand a chance of being eradicated. There is the plowing, and the cultivating, and the hoeing, which leave the fields so clean at the commencement of the hay season, that hardly a weed is left to grow.

DOMESTIC ITEMS. COUGH AND SORE THROAT.—Take one cup honey-half cup pepper, one small teaspoonful Cayenne pepper.

FEVER SORE THROAT.—Put a lump of honey in a plate and surround it with vinegar (not the very sharp vinegar we sometimes meet with, but good vinegar). Let the sick eat as much as they can at the time, and the throat will soon be well.

FRUIT CAKE.—Three eggs, two cups brown sugar, one cup sour cream, one cup butter, five cups flour, one teaspoon soda, two and one-half cups raisins, one cup chopped fine, one teaspoon cinnamon, one of cloves. This is excellent.

TO MAKE COCOONRY CAKE.—Peel off the brown coat, then grate the nut with a bread grater; add half the weight of the nut in a collar to drain, removing all hard and insoluble portions.

SWEET PICKLED GREEN TOMATOES.—Slice one peck green tomatoes into a jar, sprinkle a little salt over each layer, let stand twenty-four hours, drain off the liquor; put the tomatoes into the kettle with a teaspoonful of each of the following spices: ground ginger, allspice, cloves, mace, cinnamon, twelve large and three small red peppers, one teaspoonful scraped horse radish, one teaspoon brown sugar, vinegar enough to cover all. Boil slowly three hours.

GRAPE JELLY.—Pick the grapes from the stems, simmer them till soft in just water enough to cover them, pour into a jelly bag and drain. Measure the clear liquor, pour it back into the kettle and boil twenty minutes, skimming constantly. Then add for every pint of juice, as measured, a pound of white sugar, and boil till it is hard when cold. Heat the glasses and pour it into them while hot. Cover with egg paper.

RICH APPLE PUDDING.—Pare, core and chop five or six apples, or enough to make half a pound; shred a quarter pound suet; blacken and pound one dozen sweet onions; half a pound of currants, a small cup of sugar, half a nutmeg, equal quantity of bread crumbs and four, teaspoonful of salt; the whites of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth; just milk enough to mix; a wine-glassful of brandy the last thing. From ten to twelve ounces of bread crumbs and flour make a good sized pudding, but if more flour is added a teaspoonful of baking powder stiffed dry in the flour.

BAKED BEANS.—All working men are fond of a nicely baked dish of beans, but no dish is more susceptible of skillful handling in the preparation. The beans should be washed after careful picking and put to soak over night. Parboil early in the morning in plenty of water put on cold, parboiled separately. Then put pork and beans together and boil till the skin of the beans begin to crack. Put in your baking pan, a deep milk pan or crock, with the second surface of a good sized pudding, but if more flour is added a teaspoonful of baking powder stiffed dry in the flour.

Jobbers' Corner.

NOTHING LIKE COMPARISON. Jim was hoeing in a garden on Cass avenue the other forenoon. That is, he had his back against a cherry tree and was lazily chopping at weeds and vines together, hitting one when he missed the other.

What! you working? Yes, was the sad reply. Hoeing up weeds with the thermometer at 90 degrees in the shade? Yes.

After a short period of astonishment the boy indignantly inquired: Jim, how can Christian parents expect a boy to hoe and dig and rip up the soil with the thermometer way up high? But I've either got to hoe or get licked, protested Jim.

Then, Jim, come on and let's go fishing, and you take the licking. Fishing will last half a day anyhow, a licking does't last over ten minutes. It hurts, though, mused Jim. Yes, it hurts a little, but just think we'll sit on the wharf and mind the fish while the thermometer way up high! Can't you stand as much as a fish? Jim thought he could, and he hung his hoo on a limb, crawled through the weeds and the weeds knew him no more.—Detroit Free Press.

A MEAN ADVANTAGE. There was a score or more of women gathered together at Mr. Johnson's house. Mr. Johnson is a good-hearted man and a respectable citizen, though he is rather skeptical about some things. The women had just organized "The Foreign Benevolent Society" when Mr. Johnson entered the room. He was at once appealed to on a few dollars as a foundation to work on, and Mrs. Graham added:

It would be so pleasant in after years for you to remember that you gave this society its first dollar and its first kind word!

He slowly opened his wallet, drew out a ten-dollar bill, and as the ladies glanced at their bills and clasped their hands he asked: "Is this society organized to aid the poor of foreign countries?"

"And it wants money?" "Yes—yes." "Well, now," said Johnson, as he folded the bill in its tempting shape, "I've twenty married women here. If there are fifteen of you that can make oath that you have combled your children's hair this morning, washed the dishes, blacked the cooking stove and made the beds, I'll donate this ten dollars."

"I have," answered two of the crowd, and the rest said: "I have." "Now, Mr. Johnson!" "If fifteen of you can make oath that your husbands are not wearing socks with holes in the heels the money is yours," continued the wretch.

"Just hear him!" they exclaimed, each one looking at the other. "If ten of you have boys without holes in the knees of their pants this 'X' goes to the boys!" said Johnson. "Such a man!" they whispered. "If there are five par of stockings in this room that don't need darning I'll hand over the money to the first of them!" said Mr. Johnson. "I'd like to see you!" said Mrs. Graham, with great dignity. "The rules of the society declare that no money shall be contributed except by mothers, and as you are not a mother I beg you will withdraw and let us proceed with the routine business!"
