RUSRIA DOUBTS THE FORMATION OF ANGLO AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 31. — The Russian papers are beginning to discuss the British and continental reports of an alleged Anglo-American alliance, but consider that they have not any solid foundation and that they represent more British anxiety to have it appear that such an alliance is in prospect than the actual intention of the United States to abandon her traditional policy which renders a lasting agreement impossible. One paper remarks: "It is a touching sight to see Jonathan stretching across the sea to John, but both indulging in mephistophelian laughter which seems to have escaped European observers."

H. Leger of Ottawa has registered with the department of agriculture a design for a Canadian national flag. It is in three colors, the blue being next the pole. On the blue field is the jack, and below it a tree, the confederation tree, each twig bearing the name of a province. Below the tree, and in a colored circle is a beaver, and below it clasped hands. Above are the letters in L. D. C., meaning honor, liberty, defence, country. On the red or outside field is an eye, very mild and human in appearance, representing the eye of God.

Their name is a misnomer, for they are not temperance but total abstinence societies. As long as they re-main within the circle of moral persuasion they do well. I state two good reasons for total abstinence.

THE TEMPERANCE PROBLEM

Temperance Sermon in Unitarian

In the Unitarian church last evening

Rev. A. M. Walker explained his position in regard to the temperance ques-

First, the use of liquors as a beverage is economic waste. Money can be spent to better advantage. This argument refers as well to cigars, soda water, candy, etc., but more especially to liquors. To spend wisely is half the battle in rightly enjoying life.

The most potent reason against the use of liquors is that it lays bare a temptation to possible dissipation. say possible, for no one knows today what a present act will lead to tomorrow. Every drunkard has had a beginning. Many people have used liquors many years without evil results, yet there is a great risk involved. The question arises, is the risk a necessary one? Those who favor total abstinence say no, and they do so wisely. Since there is a great risk involved and nothing to gain, I can see no reason for any one beginning the habit. I should strongly warn against it and in no way

Under this system a company was formed, and a manager placed in each saloon at a fixed salary. Out of the profits dividend of 5 per cent was paid to the company, a reserve fund was established on a small scale, and the rest devoted to public improve-

Intoxicating liquor was not display ed, and tea, coffee and soft drinks were all to be obtained in the saloons, while reading rooms, billiard and recreation rooms were attached. The manager gained nothing by the sale of intoxicants, and the plan had been found to work admirably. When a license of one of the saloons expired, it was granted to the trust, and a manager put in to carry on the business on the lines laid down. The masses were conservative and did not believe in extremes, for that reason they regarded prohibition with an evil eye, and the strict enforcement of plain practical laws was the only method that was likely to check the

CHAPTER X.

"I hope you are for law and the king against riot and rebels?" "Ye see, Traquair, I'm not just a faction man, but am standing clear, to give both sides fair play."

"The crisis is this, William," said Traquair. "There are papers that we must get through to King Charles at Oxford. Then, what is much more important, we must get his signed warrant back to us before we can act to any real purpose in this ploy. The victorious rebels pretend that they are fighting for certain so called liberties, but we have reason to know that their designs run much deeper, that they aim at nothing less than the dethronement and possible murder of the king. It is necessary to get proof of this to the king and to obtain his sanction to certain action on our part, for if we move without his written commission and our plans fail we are like to get abort shout from Oromwell, who will deny us the right of belligerents. Whether the king believes this or not, the documents we wish to send him are less to the purpose than that you should bring back to us his commission, so you will know that your home-coming is much more vital to us than

"I are. Still, if they kill me on the road there, it is not likely I will win my way back, so both journeys are equally vital to me."

Brave as you are, Will, it is on the smooth tongue rather than on the sharp sword that you must depend, for, however many silent triends we may have along the route, there are too many outspoken enemies for even you to fight your way. through. Have you a good horse?"

"The pick of my stables is at your choice. Had you not better take a spare animal with you?"

No. That would be advertising the artance of my journey. If I can through at all, it must be by dawnering along as a cannie drover body anxious to buy up cattle and turn an honest penny by selling them to those who want them worse than I do, a per-fectly legitimate trade even during these exciting times. They all know the desire of a humble Scotsman to make a little money, though the heavens and kings be falling." "That's an admirable idea, and you until about two years ago, when he suddenly disappeared with his step-daughter, and action for divorce was instituted by Mrs. Crane. On the ground that "It bore the earmarks of Vice-President, Len. Lord, J. E. Cowan, collusion." Supreme Court Justice Scott refused the decree in New York. Mrs. Crane then took her suit to South Dakota and she was rewarded with a decree about a month ago.

The former Mrs. Crane has expressed herself as being well pleased with the marriage, and says that she will now devote her time to the stage. The funeral of the late Michael

Murphy took place this morning at 8.30 o'clock from his late residence, 94 Harrison street, to St. Peter's church, where requiem high mass was sung by Rev. Father White. Interment was in Sand Cove cemetery. Relatives acted
