The Everyday Bargain Store

Changing to Cash Basis

On and after October 1st no more merchandise will be sold on CREDIT in this store. We expect to sell fully as much as before—even more. But all the sales will be for CASH or PRODUCE.

We are going to make the change in your interest as well as our own. What you are interested in is the fact that under the new deal we are going to sell you things for LESS MONEY.

You see, when we get cash we can pay cash. This means a saving in our buying, and we shall pass the benefits along to you. We shall not, of course, get as much for our goods under the cash basis. But we shall get the money when the sale is made, and can afford to take less than if we had to wait thirty, sixty or ninety days for our money.

Why do we think this way? Why is it not just as good for a merchant to get his money at the end of the month as it is to get it day by day?

This is the reason: Every store that gives its customers lowest prices sells its goods on the closest margin. If we give you the benefit of these discounts we will have to get the discounts first. The way to get goods so they can be sold at the right price is to pay cash for them or at least discount the bills, which is the same as cash. When a merchant has to borrow money from his bank to discount his bills the banker gets a portion of the benefit in the form of interest—a benefit that under ordinary circumstances should go to the customer.

You will not be interested in a long drawn statement of the whys and wherefores of the cash system benefits. It is enough to say that where business in general is conducted substantially on a cash basis prices will be lower.

This is why we are going to adopt the cash system. No one need feel any sense of injury at being asked to pay cash.

The credit of most of our customers is good. It isn't the question of getting the money that worries us. It is merely a matter of getting lined up with the new way of doing things—the way that gets cash, pays cash and gives better values for less money.

You don't have to take our word for our ability to save you money as a result of the new deal.

COME IN AND SEE! ALL WE ASK IS A CHANCE TO SHOW YOU.

TWO CHILDREN ARE SLAUGHTERED

Demented Mother at South Knowlesville Batters Out Brains of Children

A horrible tragedy occurred at South Knowlesville Saturday evening when Mrs. Allan Boyd killed two of her children by beating them over the head with a big stick of hardwood. Their heads were crushed to a jelly.

After the family had finished supper (there are four other children) the father went to the barn to milk the cows and when he returned to the house and got ready to retire he asked "Where are Charlie and Myrtle?" His wife replied that they were in bed and that she was going upstairs to sleep in her husband's room. Previously the woman had slept with the children.

In the morning, after coming downstairs, the father looked in the room and saw both children in bed with their heads battered in. He sent for neighbors and his wife admitted to him that she had done the deed. Dr. M. H. Commins, of Bath, was sent for and Sheriff Foster with Deputy Sheriff Moore arrived on the scene shortly afterwards.

The sheriff empanelled a jury and an inquest was held, the jury finding a verdict that the children were killed by their mother. The woman was placed under arrest and is now in the Woodstock jail.

She gave Sheriff Foster a paper she had written and placed behind the clock. The paper read: "Made way with Charlie and Myrtle between 5 and 7 o'clock, was quite a time lying to Helena and Olive saw blood on my neck. Myrtle and a large amount of blood and Charlie a small spot or two."

The woman is apparently insane but is very quiet and talks freely. In her cell at the jail she said that the Prince of Wales was expected to come and murder them all and she put the children to death as it would be easier for them. She said that she intended to kill the other four children and herself in the morning and she would try and coax her husband to kill himself also.

Charles, the baby, three years old, was killed in his cradle and then placed beside his little sister in the bed.

The woman is of nice appearance, of medium height and dark complexion, and is thirty-two years old. Her father is John Kierstead who lives in the vicinity. They are respected people and the terrible tragedy has stunned the little community. The little ones were prepared for burial and the funeral was held Monday.

Mrs. Boyd was in the provincial hospital about eight years ago, having been taken there by Sheriff Foster who placed her under arrest today. She has been remanded for trial.

THOMAS L. LETSON

On Friday evening the death occurred of Thomas L. Letson at his home at Victoria. He had been helpless from paralysis for seven years, and on the Wednesday preceding his death he was seized with the third stroke and never rallied. Mr. Letson was a man of honor and integrity, and was 72 years of age. For a number of years he was engaged with J. W. Boyer & Co., and for a time he conducted a harness shop in Hartland. He was born at Chatham, but lived at Victoria for the past 35 or 40 years. Besides his wife he is survived by three sons, Roy, George and Blaket. Another son died several years ago. The daughters are Mrs. Andrew Lennan of McAdam; Mrs. George Harris of Smiths Falls, Ont.; Mrs. Frank L. Dickson of Hartland; Misses Minnie and Viola at home. He also leaves a brother, Robert A. of Halifax and a sister, Mrs. H. G. Murray of New York.

In his early youth Mr. Letson was confirmed a member of the Church of England. The funeral service was held at the home on Sunday, conducted by Rev. W. P. Haigh, and the remains were laid to rest in Greenwood cemetery at Hartland.

LITTLE GLEN DAY INSTANTLY KILLED

The community was shocked on Sept. 5 by the sudden death of Glen Allen Day, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Day of Upper Brighton. The little fellow was riding on the farm wagon with his father when the accident happened. In some way the little boy fell from the wagon; the rear wheel passing over his head, crushing the life from him instantly. Glen was a bright little fellow of 7 years, loved by all who knew him. He will be missed by his playmates and his brothers, Orrin and Wendell, and sister Helen, who with the parents are left to mourn for the little one. The family has the sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement. The funeral was held in the U. B. church at Hartland in conjunction with the service for Mrs. Sophie Shaw who was his grand aunt. Rev. H. V. Bragdon officiating, assisted by Revs. P. J. Quigg and E. A. Trites. Interment was in Greenwood.

GOOD WORDS FOR

J. M. FLEWELLING, M.L.A.

J. M. Flewelling, M. L. A., of St. Stephen, arrived in town on Saturday and attended the opening ceremonies of the international bridge on Monday. Jack, as he is generally known as here, spent several years in this town during which time he conducted a most successful insurance and mercantile business.

Having a warm feeling in his heart for the town he said he was forced to accept the invitation to be with us during the most important day in the town's history.

Jack was one of those instrumental in having the town incorporated and has in his possession a copy of the original list of incorporators headed by the late beloved Father Damour. After leaving here in 1909 he opened an insurance office in St. John where he remained a year after which he removed to his present location and has built up one of the largest fire insurance agencies in the province. He has been advanced to the position of general agent of the Hartford Fire Insurance Co. and has several agents in his employ amongst them J. B. Michaud of this town, who is always ready to sign his praises on account of the prompt and satisfactory settlement of his losses.

Jack's popularity in Charlotte county is shown by the fact that the first time he tried for political honors he was elected a member of the provincial legislature.

All in Edmundston wish him continued success.

MRS. SOPHIE SHAW

Mrs. Sophie Shaw passed away at the home of her nephew, G. A. Day, Upper Brighton on Sept. 3, after a long illness. The deceased who was 60 years of age was a daughter of the late Charles and Gloriana Day. She is survived by five brothers, Allan C. and Jarvis of Hartland, Daniel C. Waterville, Me., Ward E. Sanford, Me., and Wilmet Conway, N. H., one sister, Mrs. Sophronia Bubar of Enderby, B. C. Mrs. Shaw, a native of Carleton Co., had made her home in Conway, N. H., for the past fourteen years, coming to Hartland about a year ago in failing health. The funeral was held in the U. B. church at Hartland, Rev. E. A. Trites officiating, interment was in Greenwood cemetery.

Cards of Thanks

We want to thank our many friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy shown to us during the illness and death of our beloved wife and mother. Also for the beautiful flowers sent.

CUBAN BUYER AFTER POTATOES

Places Large Orders With Local Shippers and Shipments are Now Going Forward

On Sunday and Monday Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Hatfield had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. J. Palacios, his sister and son, and an interpreter, Mr. Frezandos, of Havana, Cuba. They were joined here by Guy G. Porter of Perth, and his guest, Mr. Suris, also of Havana, and by C. F. Gallagher. Sunday evening the whole party motored to Fort Fairfield and on Monday they took in the big celebration at Edmundston. Mr. Palacios is one of Havana's biggest business men, and the largest potato importer on the island. It will be good news to the farmers of the St. John Valley to learn that he placed an order for a cargo of potatoes to be shipped each week throughout the season by Messrs. Hatfield, Gallagher and Porter. The price is not enough for very great margin of profit, but the order furnishes an outlet where none has been in sight. The three gentlemen will send mixed cargoes and it is likely that about 60 carloads of potatoes a week will be shipped. The price at the first at the start of the week was 75 cents.

This is Mr. Palacios first visit to the mainland of North America. He travelled extensively through the United States but enthusiastically declared he liked the people of Canada much better and was enamored over the natural scenery.

Potato digging is becoming general. The crop in the river districts is not up to the average of production. While some fields are yielding 90 to 100 barrels there are more that do not average 40 or 50 barrels, and they are smaller than they were last year. On the north shore and in Prince Edward Island there is a bumper crop of excellent quality.

HORSE RACING ON MONDAY

At the races first day at Edmundston the park was packed with people, the grandstand overflowing. Never in the history of the town has there been such a crowd. The racing was of high order and everything went off according to schedule. The second days racing will be reported in next week's paper.

DISTINGUISHED NEWSPAPERMEN

Yesterday and today the editor of The Observer had the pleasure of entertaining the two most outstanding figures in Canadian weekly newspaper work. These were A. R. Brennan of Summerside, P. E. I., and E. Roy Styles of Toronto, the former the president and the latter the secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association, which now has a membership of 544 newspaper proprietors. They arrived yesterday and were taken to Woodstock to pay a fraternal visit to the Sentinel and Press, and the forenoon were taken again to Woodstock to catch the C. N. R. to Fredericton. They will call on all the maritime weekly publishers and on Sept. 19 will assist in the reorganization of the old Maritime Newspaper Association at Ydrou.

UNDESIRABLE SHOWS

The cases in the Police Court this week, in which two men were charged with conducting an immoral show only emphasizes how careful the city authorities should be in granting permission to companies to bring their carnivals here.

There is no doubt that hundreds of men and youths saw the demoralizing pictures which were seized by the police. The pictures were of such a nature that no youth could look upon them without his character being injured. They showed moral degeneracy in its worst form. The prompt action of Chief Savage is most praiseworthy. We have a Police Chief, we believe, who is the soul of honor, and again he demonstrates his efficiency in the town. His skill and prompt action on Wednesday and Thursday deserve the thanks of every citizen, for by it the morality of our youth in a very large measure was conserved. The defendant Hughes was entitled to the benefit of the doubt. It is possible that he was innocent of the fact that anything like the pictures seized were in the tent. The other defendant pleaded guilty, although still professing his innocence. He pleaded guilty in order that he might get out of town next day to carry on his business, but after he was free he remained until the rest of the show people left. His business was not so urgent. Mr. Hughes when questioned about this on the grounds on Saturday night replied that a message was received by their advance agent after the court trial which made his proceeding out of town until the rest of the company, unnecessary—and this may be true. In fairness, however, to Mr. Hughes we might say that he had a very great many letters from mayors of cities, and secretaries of societies saying that his shows were clean. Mr. Hughes is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, and he got it. Hamilton pleaded guilty; he was caught in the tent and admitted he was in charge of the tent, and we are of the opinion that the Magistrate could have been much more severe than imposing a mere fine, in order to protect the morals of the youth of our town. His promptness in the case when the information was laid leaves nothing to be desired, and his leniency was due, we believe, to the fact that the case held an element of doubt. The concessionaire, John Rogers, and his assistants were sharp enough to get away.

The people of the town are suffering from the world wide depression. It is an inopportune time to allow show folks to come here. They take a lot of money out and leave nothing behind but a bad impression and a nasty taste. There is also the question of the organization under whose auspices they came here. The G. W. V. A. is an association held in the highest esteem by every loyal subject, and they cannot afford to have their name linked with anything like the occurrence of last week. And again once the case was in the hands of the police, we believe that it was the duty of every man of the G. W. V. A. having anything to do with the World's Standard Shows to help the officers of the law arrest and bring to justice the men responsible for the most subtle and insidious crime against the youth of our land, for the pictures exhibited in the tent were far more deadly than any German bullet, and more poisonous than any German gas. And in some instances the G. W. V. A., or rather some of its members here, for lack of thought did not help, but tried to hinder the course of justice.

A HOSPITAL

It stands to reason that a building however well equipped, however skilled the physicians may be, and however well trained the nurses are, if located miles away from the centre of population, cannot be adequate as a hospital for a town with a population of five thousand people. And no matter how skillful one may argue that it is sufficient, the cold logic of facts reply that it is not. If the people of Edmundston had to travel four miles to catch a train, or had to journey three or four miles to church, or had to get their groceries several miles away, there would soon be steps taken to bring the railroad to the town, or to establish a church, or to interest a merchant. If this is true then is it not much more necessary that there should be in the centre of the town an institution to care for the desperately sick, or the seriously injured, or the case requiring immediate surgical aid?

We require a hospital here, because the need is here, because the people are here, because every week, almost every day, there are people who need the care which can be given in a hospital. St. Basile is a splendid institution, but unfortunately for us, and fortunately for the people of St. Basile it is not in Edmundston.

We need a hospital in Edmundston for Edmundston people.

WHERE THE MONEY GOES

Editor Observer: Having been asked by many of the taxpayers of the Parish of Brighton what is being done with the money collected, and not having been able to supply the information in detail on the tax notice, with your permission I will now do so through your valuable paper. In giving this information I can not do better than to duplicate the information supplied to me by the county secretary-treasurer, as follows:

Woodstock, Aug. 23.

Frank Hagerman.

Dear Sir: I have procured the information which you wished and am enclosing the estimates for the two years 1921 and 1922. You will notice that in 1922 the assessment for the county school fund is two and one-half times the amount assessed in 1921. The reason for this is that in 1921 the Legislature passed an act making the assessment for the county school fund 60 cents per head of population instead of 30 cents which was the amount for many years. This just doubled the county school fund assessed at the old rate because we did not know at the time that I made up the warrant that any change had been made; but the government put the act passed in April in force so that it commenced to operate on the first of July, 1921. That made the school drafts just double what they were previously and it thus left the assessment for 1921 short $3,500 on this one item. When it came to the assessment for 1922 I had not only to double the amount assessed for school fund but had also to add $3,500 which had not been paid.

BRIDGE OPENING BIG SUCCESS

Fifteen Thousand People Witness Historic Ceremony

The work of months bore fruit this week. Preparations which have been in progress since the earliest part of the summer came to an end with the reality on Monday. The New International Bridge between this town and Madawaska, Me., has been thrown open to the public to use. The people of Madawaska, Me., and Edmundston, N. B., people who come from a common stock, but who to-day bear allegiance to two different countries, met as one to express their pleasure in an achievement which is going to bind the two countries and the two peoples closer together. No longer is the old ferry necessary; it belongs now to the things that are past; it is relegated to the limbo of History. It was useful whilst it lasted, and it lasted a long time, but now it is no more to us than a curiosity. The celebrations on Monday leave nothing to be desired. From the moment when the parade, led by Aaron Lawson mounted on a white horse acting as Marshal, crossed the bridge, until the last song was sung at the banquet at two o'clock the following morning, there was not a dull moment or anything lacking to make the day in the words of the song sung by a United States officer "A perfect day." The procession started from the Maine side of the bridge soon after ten o'clock and it was miles long—consisting of floats and historic representations. The Fraser Companies plant was well represented with floats depicting the pulp industry. A representation of the mill itself with smoke stack and tank complete, the screening room, a fire engine and a number of others. L. A. Dugal, J. F. Rice, R. W. Hammond, The Smythe Bros., Green River, J. J. Daigle, J. W. Hall, The Hartford Fire Insurance Co., represented by Police Magistrate Michaud, and other merchants on both this side of the St. John River and the other side were owners of floats. One float, or rather exhibition, was that of an automobile, driven by horse power. The horse was hidden under canvas and pushed an old buggy steered by a big buggy wheel, the driver and his passengers being made up to represent men of well over a hundred years.

Then there was a representation of a woolen mill, which came from the Madawaska, Me., side. An old spinning wheel with the wool being spun, in sight of everyone, the loom and the weaving, ladies representing this being evidently past masters in the art. A blacksmith shop, old ways of washing and a new electric washer along side. The sowing of seed by hand and the modern seeder. A potato digger, a haymaker, a float with men threshing by hand and a modern threshing machine. These and many others which space does not permit us to mention. The automobiles, too, and there were hundreds of them beautifully decorated, should be mentioned. One owned by Mr. Pelletier was a work of art, splendidly done in evergreen, having mottoes worked in flowers. It bore on the hood of the radiator an American Eagle. This was undoubtedly the master piece of the parade and won comment from every spectator. The Red Cross car also was noticed with commendation. The parade was aided by a great many returned soldiers in uniform, and had the benefit of three bands, one from Riviere du Loup, one from Fort Fairfield and our own excellent one "The Harmonie" with Bandmaster LaPorte in charge. The parade came to an end at LeVite Cyr's field where addresses of welcome were made in French and English by Mayor Max D. Cormier and Hon. Pius Michaud of Edmundston and Hon. Remi Daigle of Madawaska, Maine.

Next came the formal opening of the bridge and here the real historic part of the ceremony took place. From the American side proceeded the Hon. R. W. Shaw, attorney general of Maine, Commissioner Daigle, and Colonel Hume of Houlton, and from the Canadian side Pius Michaud, M. P., federal member; Hon. P. J. Veniot, Minister of Public Works; Hon. D. Mersereau, Minister of Agriculture; Hon. J. E. Michaud, member of the executive council of Province, and Monsignor Dugal of St. Basil. Each party was accompanied by a band, each playing the National Anthems of their country, and when the middle of the bridge was reached, across a silk rope the Hon. R. W. Shaw, representing the United States, and Hon. Pius Michaud, representing Canada, shook hands and declared the bridge opened to the traffic of the two lands. After this ceremony the party adjourned to the Court House where speeches were made by representative men including the Very Rev. Monsignor Dugal. In the early afternoon the Catholic clergy to the number of eleven led by Father Conway proceeded to the bridge and solemnly blessed the structure.

FINED FOR SHOWING OBSCENE PICTURES

On Wednesday afternoon the editor of the Observer laid information before the Police Magistrate against certain parties connected with the World's Standard Shows which opened here on Tuesday of that week, for exhibiting an indecent show on the grounds which were rented from LeVite Cyr. As a consequence William Hamilton was arrested that night and spent the night in gaol, and next morning Joseph H. Hughes was arrested on the same charge, the latter man being secretary and vice-president of the company. The Shows were advertised as coming here under the auspices of the G. W. V. A. They appeared before Police Magistrate Michaud on Thursday morning, and the case took up most of the day. The crown prosecutor was Aaron Lawson, and the defendants had as their lawyer C. J. Dionne. Chief of Police Savage, who made the arrest, gave his evidence, and before other witnesses were called Hamilton decided to plead guilty and was fined $50 and costs and was released. The case against Hughes was adjourned until the following Saturday. Witnesses called by the prosecution on this occasion were Chief of Police Savage, the editor of the Observer and High Sheriff Daigle. The pictures seized which were of the most revolting character, pictures of moral degeneracy unspeakable in their villainy, and totally too filthy to describe, were exhibited. The Chief and the High Sheriff told of their efforts to censor the pictures, and of how every time they went to that tent the machines were said to be out of order, making it impossible for them to see or have any knowledge that there was anything of an immoral nature there, and the Chief also told of the seizure of the machine and later the arrest of Hughes. The defendant testified that the tent and picture machines in it was a concession sold to a man of the name of John H. Rogers, and that this man had made his get-away. He also said that he personally had no knowledge that there was anything of an immoral nature in the tent. And defendant further stated that this particular concession would not travel with his show again. After the evidence he offered the Magistrate decided to dismiss the case against him with costs. His bail of $500 was returned. The case took up almost the whole day.

In another part of this paper the editor has some comments on these two cases, and on shows of this character.

"DAY" by a United States officer. The menu cards were perfect little gems showing on the cover a view of the bridge. On the inside were shown the officers in charge of the celebration as follows: General Committee—J. W. Hall, Dr. E. Simard, J. E. Michaud, M. L. A., Rev. J. Hardwick, A. J. LeBlanc, C. M. Rideout, R. W. Hammond, N. P. Leger, Dr. Kay, Max D. Cormier, Mayor, T. M. Richards, Jr., D. M. Martin, J. Frank Rice, Remi A. Daigle, F. W. Pelletier, H. P. Franchette. Vocal entertainment—Miss Jeanne LaPorte and Dr. Simard. Publicity and Housing—W. R. Belyea, E. J. Vanier, C. N. Begin, H. P. Franchette Parade—Joseph Clarkson, Aaron Lawson, Fortina Gagnon. Sports—Gordon Lawson. Consulting engineer—R. S. White. Banquet—Miss Helen Stevens. Office staff—Miss Yvonne Belanger, Miss Ludres Bernhe, General Managing—Martin Theriault. Other interested parties—Miss Roberta Hammond, Rev. N. Franchetti, J. W. Landry, Lloyd Sinclair, Albert Theriault, David Moscovitz, George Larlee, Bruce Pincombe, LeVite Gagnon.

In another part of paper an account of Horse Races and Sports are given. Conservative estimates says 15,000 people present.

AN APPRECIATION OF CHAUTAQUA

A lady of the town writes the following for readers of The Observer:

"Just a word in appreciation of Chautauqua may not come amiss since we hear so much in depreciation. Have not quite got over the wonder that real, educated talented geniuses have been in our midst. We should be proud that our little old town is broad-minded enough to invite these people here. Some say they are taking large amounts of money out of the place, but if they do surely our returns are more than mere money. We had the privilege of listening to the best lectures by cultured men and an opportunity to laugh together at good, clean, wholesome fun. Some say it is no harm to go. If that were all it would scarcely be worth while at all. The entertainment all through was educational, broadening and inspiring.

"The only pity is that for a year our young people will have few opportunities to listen to anything of this kind. We all need something 'to keep our souls alive with noble discontent.'"

"Why do so few of our boys and girls go beyond Grade VIII in school? Just because no one beckons and says 'Come up higher.' Not having either precept or example, they are content to settle down to the commonplace when they might attain to higher things.

"We are glad Chautauqua is coming again and as a result expect to see some of our boys preparing for college and our girls looking forward to something more than attaining the latest in hair dressing and wandering the streets with a beau."

TRUSTEES RESPOND

The crime of being absolute failures and mentally dead which has with such vehemence been charged upon the trustees of Hartland School District we shall neither attempt to palliate or deny, but content ourselves with hoping that we may be among that number whose follies have ceased with the passing years and not of those who in spite of accumulated wisdom build without first counting the cost.

We might say for the enlightenment of our friends that we now have a competent man drawing plans for the new school house and finding out the cost of the different material that shall enter into its construction. We are also arranging a date on which Fletcher Peacock can come to our village and give us a public talk on what he thinks would be the proper kind of a building for our future needs. Now if we find we cannot construct a suitable building for twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars we will not start it unless a majority of the rate payers say go on with it.

We are not going to saddle on this district a yoke of taxation they or their children are unable to bear.

THOS. BOWES AND WIFE BOTH ENDORSE IT

When a medicine produces results its praise is sure to be heard. That is why Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bowes, of 27 Clarence St., St. John, as well as hundreds of other people throughout New Brunswick, so rapidly speak up for Tanlac.

"Tanlac is such a grand medicine and has done so much for me," said Mr. Bowes, "that I want to tell everybody I can about it. I suffered from indigestion and had an awful time with gas on my stomach. I was tired, nervous and half sick all the time and could not sleep. Two bottles of Tanlac has done me a world of good. I eat and sleep so much better and am so much stronger that my housework is a pleasure to me."

"Yes," said Mr. Bowes, "I could see that Tanlac was helping my wife and, being all run down myself, I began taking it, too. My appetite had left me, my stomach was out of fix and a day's work would simply wear me out. I have such an appetite now that I can get up in the middle of the night and eat. My stomach don't bother me any more. I sleep like a top and feel fine all over. There's no medicine equal to Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

DEDICATION OF NEW CEMETERY

During the past week or two a great many people have visited Greenwood Cemetery and one and all are most favorably impressed with the good work which has been carried through by the Association committee. The actual work has been under the direction of William Curtis, who, for his public spiritedness deserves every credit and the grave yard itself will be a monument to his cheerful and willing service.

There was a meeting of the committee on Tuesday evening, presided over by chairman R. J. Potts and at which there were present, H. H. Hatfield, J. E. MacCollom, G. B. Nixon, W. B. Nixon and the secretary, Fred. H. Stevens. Upwards of $1500 have been expended and this sum will be increased to $2000 by the time the work in view is carried out. So far the money has been raised by loan, backed by the members of the committee. There are as yet no donations and this is the only manner by which the cost of improving the property can be met.

Commencing September 18, collectors will solicit funds, and for this purpose H. N. Dickinson and W. B. Nixon are appointed to collect in Goodwin ward, F. A. Alton and S. S. Miller in Bradley ward, J. E. MacCollom and J. F. Murdoch in McMullin ward.

While there may be several contributions at $100 each any sum will be acceptable, no matter how small, and every citizen in the town should have a share in the beautification of this splendid cemetery.

On Sunday, September 17 at 3 p.m., there will be a religious dedication service at the cemetery when all the clergymen of the town are expected to participate. This service will be both beautiful and solemn, and is calculated to inspire all the people of the town and surrounding country with the respect for the hallowed dead—the place where most of us will eventually take our last long sleep, and where already hundreds of our loved ones are entombed. The most cordial invitation possible is extended to every interested person—and every resident of the town and the nearby vicinity should have a deep interest in this work. We should get a feeling of honor and regard for those who have passed before us and through this inspiration have a greater care and honor for those who are nearing the tomb, but are yet alive.

Nervous exhaustion leads to disturbance for food. The nerves of the stomach are weak. Digestion fails and you become generally upset and out of sorts.

The secret of complete restoration is in getting the nervous system fully built up.

"I was troubled with indigestion, which caused me many sleepless nights. I would not be able to eat at times, and would get no relief for two or three hours. For seven weeks I was unable to eat. I had tried many remedies, but I did not get any relief. I had heard of Dr. Cass's Nerve Food, so I bought a box. THE RIPPLED POOL

A story in University Monthly by C. Miles Murray, Class of '23

The grey mist of early morning was quickly rising and dispersing under the influence of the glorious mid-August sun. Its rays dazzlingly reflected off the surface of the water in the western lake, casting its ruddy beams over the rippled surface of Lake Temagami. The canoe slipped past the wooded point, veered to the left, and passed into the cool shadows. A sandpiper ran along the shore giving vent to his surprise in a few piping notes as the party advanced noiselessly under the masterly guidance of Denis. Some twenty feet in front of the craft a large toad described an arc through the air as it came to the surface for one of the many brilliant colored flies while the ripples of the succeeding splash waned gently against the sides of the canoe. A kingfisher swooped, struck the water with a splash and arose amid a flutter of wings with his evening meal. A sign from the professor Denis stopped paddling; not a word was spoken as they drifted from a stray patch of sunlight to a deeper shadow. Fairly light from across the lake came the gentle tolling of the angolin. Denis made the sign of the cross. The canoe drifted. The guide extracted his pipe, filled a stubby black pipe, made a sweeping motion with his right hand to the back of his neck and muttered: "Ah, le petit maudit, does 'quitos bite damn hard, perhaps you like some oil I make myself last winter professor. Damn good stuff too, just rub him on an' you're no more 'quitos they don't like." This latter remark as he passed his companion a bottle of black oil of a very repulsive odor. A welcoming hand was extended for the small flask as the professor tossed a bottle of highly advertised "fetter kill" into the lake. Applying the new remedy he now found the mosquitoes of a decided unfamiliar state of mind.

The course of the canoe had again been changed. The professor noted they were crossing the bay, the bow of the canoe headed straight for a large boulder which seemed particularly suited for a guide post for across its face there were displayed two wide quartz veins which formed a large cross. As they proceeded, with the canoe in line with the guide-boulder the professor noticed that at the very centre of the bay the water took on a peculiar appearance, for within a circle of some twenty feet in radius it was of a choppy nature covered with hundreds of little wavelets or ripples, while the surrounding waters were perfectly calm and reflectingly glassy. Although their course would have led them directly over this circular area of ripples, Denis, with a dexterous twist of the paddle again changed direction making a detour of the spot. As the professor was about to question this new move he caught the guide in the act of crossing himself—again the canoe veered to the left and they had resumed their original course in a straight line with the boulder. Wonderingly the professor asked: "Just why did we avoid the spot, Denis?"

"Oh, he's had lucky m'sieu. Never cross that place for if you do you sure drown on de lake some time!"

Immediately the professor sensed a story, but further questioning brought forth only shrugs or nods from the guide, who at length declared: "No, not now, m'sieu, this phantom mebbe hear. I tell you all sometime at de camp."

As the canoe pressed forward over the glassy surface a rippled reflection of the professor revealed a puzzled look as he felt an exploring eye to the approaching shoreline. Some minutes later they arrived at the end of the bay, the canoe pushed through the clumps of lily pads and finally came to rest upon the soft mud bottom. As Denis attended the craft the professor laden with many luxurious inconspicuous things stepped out upon a partly submerged log, performed a miraculous balancing stunt, succeeded in reaching the shore without so much as making a single square inch of his two hundred pound person. Denis nodded towards the edge of the clearing in which they found themselves and declared, as they came in sight of a log cabin: "Guess it best for pitch tent, professor, ver' likely some bug in de shack." Wily the professor nodded approval then wandered off to acquaint himself somewhat with his immediate surroundings. He followed a tote-road for some distance investigating a few minor trails while the guide busied himself with making camp. As the professor, seated on a large boulder, stared out over the lake at seemingly nothing, the twilight faded—he watched for a time the evening star. Finally the darkness fell and with it came the many little woodland sounds, then the crackling of the camp-fire, the sizzling of the bacon, the odor of the coffee and at last Denis' pleasant patois announcing the evening meal.

The meal over, the dishes shining from their scouring in the sand of a nearby brook, Denis deposited an armful of firewood at the edge of the tent, filled and lighted his pipe, squatted himself at the edge of the fire while the professor reclined on a bed of pine boughs, within the tent gazing into the cherry flames at the door. There is at this time of evening as one sits and gazes into a campfire a rather inexplicable desire to recline and dream into the fire. Again at other times one feels inclined to listen to narratives and stories ranging from the ridiculous to the mysterious. The pro-

"Ah, bon jour monsieur et bienvenu a notre village."
"Good-day, my man, is there no hotel hereabouts?" replied the stranger.
"Sire!" vous etes anglais. Yes, sir, come with me for de hotel up dis way. "Where you stranger here at come for a row mebbe?" continued Pierre with a shove of his shoulders to settle the newly arrived mail bag in a more comfortable position. The stranger followed Pierre through the lane leading to a small hotel of a bright red color, entirely surrounded by a grove of poplars; up the path bordered with white-washed stones, into the office of The Hotel Tariff. From the kitchen came the squalling of an infant and the rattle of crockery, but of other signs of life than these the house seemed devoid. Pierre rested his mail on a chair and raising his voice called to the unseen proprietor "Jee, Jee, voila un stranger, un anglais, arrivez vite l'express!" His appeal was answered almost immediately by the appearance of the landlord, a jovial old chap who was broad as he was long, and who came waddling into the room, pipe in one hand while with the other he thoughtfully rubbed his chin, which was adorned with a week's growth of beard.

essor was in the latter mood—in a physical state of enjoyment and con-fort, the flames casting weird and flickering shadows over the walls of the tent, his favorite brier drawing cooly, and well he remembered Denis promised story.

"Wal professor, dis is de time for tell stories. Dere's stories told for fun and den dere's true stories too—an' you know dat of course. But dis is de way ma fadder told de story to me and also like his fadder told him." As Denis continued in his homely patois the grave faced professor puffed at his pipe and gazed blindly into the fire unconsciously translating the narrative from the patois and broken English as the guide related it.

"Many years ago when this great land of our fathers was in its infancy a well-to-be-remembered date stands forth in the legendary and traditional history of Lake Temiscouata. The winter of 1812 was one which was well to be remembered, for even in the early autumn the foxes had burrowed deeply, the bees had stored much honey and were well protected for sensed approach of a long cold winter. Along the wooded slopes of the lake directly opposite Grande Bale nestled the cabin of a veteran trapper Michael Levesque, who with his granddaughter Jeanne, a maiden of nineteen summers, with black hair, black eye and cheek all rose, like one fam-use in de fall, were the only settlers au pied du lac. In the summer time the lake formed a link in the waterway which connected and served as a means of communication between Canada and l'Acadie; so in winter it formed the natural white trail for the raquettes of the traders and trappers.
As winter entered upon its second month it was indeed well aware that the traditional indications of the previous autumn were justified. The snowfall was particularly great with frequent windstorms of great violence, accompanied by a dry frosty temperature that defied comparison even with the memory of the oldest trappers, habitants and Indians of the surrounding district. Not infrequently that memorable winter were small flocks of partridge found frozen stiff in the cedar swamps which in former years had provided a safe refuge from the storms and cold.

On a bitterly cold night in midwinter, a storm raging with the fury of a thousand devils had heaped in huge burying drifts the snow to the eaves of the little cabin of Michael the trapper. On the lake and down the Magawaska river trail all was a great blinding blast of wind driven snow. Within the snug cabin a log fire roared in the comparatively huge proportioned fireplace. Bruno, a large rough coated dog, lay stretched comfortably on the hearth. The grandfather, seated

in his favorite position, puffed at his old clay pipe, gazed lovingly at Jeanne, who seated at her spinning wheel, deftly maneuvered the several operations, singing softly and sweetly snatches of song, apparently quite unmindful of the furlous storm without.
Suddenly the dog lifted his head, his ears went up and a puzzled frown creased his forehead, but almost at once he again relaxed and his head came up with a start and his ears assumed once more the questioning attitude as he gazed toward the door.
Slowly he arose, crossed the floor and listened attentively, a low whine not at all unlike a moan escaped him, as he leaped up and fumbled the latch.
The grandfather called to him to be still, remarking to Jeanne that Bruno was getting nervous and easily deceived by storm sounds in his old age.
The dog had gone to the girl, his head in her lap, his soft brown eyes gazing devotedly into hers he emitted a low howl—he had taken the hem of her dress in his teeth and was now urging her to follow him. Acting upon impulse she accompanied him and opened the door. Immediately with a loud bark Bruno sprang out into the storm and dashed through the drifts on down the trail leading to the river.
The girl gazed wonderingly after him, but as the storm continued with increasing vigor she slammed the door shut and awaited the dog's return.
Vainly she attempted to discern his approach from the small window, when finally he bounded upon the door and was scratching his paws for admittance. Jeanne opened the door sufficiently for his entrance. With a bound and a leap he had gained the chair of the rudely awakened grandfather, dropped an object at his feet and executed several movements to the accompaniment of several sharp barks. Michael stooped to secure the object at his feet—a fur gantlet—and on such a night!

The old man and girl donned their homespun wraps, fur caps, quickly attached their raquettes and were soon following Bruno down the trail, to the accompaniment of his atavistic yelps. At length they realized that his superior sense of hearing had detected a faint cry or call of some nature above the tempest. They were now in the full fury of the wind and storm; it tore at them endeavoring to crush and overcome them; it snatched their breath and shrieked in their ears as a very bedlam of demented creatures. Struggling over immense drifts, stumbling blindly they finally reached the bank of the river, there to find Bruno stretched beside the object of their search. Together they raised the huddled form, Jeanne beat her head over the breast and was frowned in hearing the faint flutter of the heart beats. Next came the seemingly endless struggle of transporting their limp burden over the three hundred yards of snow-drifted and wind swept space that intervened between them and the cabin.

Some time later within the sheltering walls of the small cabin the youth lay upon a rude cot while Jeanne employed the various means known to her in reviving that meagre spark of life which but a few minutes before nearly its last sparkle on the cold lake shore. Assuredly it was le Bon Dieu who had trained the ears of Bruno to catch that faint sound which resulted in their quest and its reward! Long after the grandfather had retired the girl watched silently at the bedside of the golden haired youth, bestowing little caresses, brushing back the ruffled locks, smoothing the pillow. Undoubtedly he was an angel—the fair hair asserted this and as he lay there seemingly in his abject helplessness the mothering instinct of the girl went out to him; tenderly, softly she gathered his head to her breast, her dark eyes brushing his cheek; slowly she beat her head and kissed him full upon the lips. As though awakened to a new life in a new world the angels opened his eyes, a faint smile played upon his lips then the eyelids closed as he sank contentedly to sleep.
So it was that within the trappers lonely cabin the angels was nursed back to health and strength. His was a mission to fulfill—the carrying of a military message from Fredericton to Quebec. A week before, he and a companion had set out upon the white trail. When within half a day's journey of LePetit Sault, at the mouth of the river Madawaska, his companion, burning with a fever had sunk exhausted, to die in the snow upon the wind swept flat before they could reach the trader's shack at the sault.
Alone, the angels followed the river trail, when half way up the valley

Made Strong and Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Veg-

St. Paul, Minn. — "I took Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a tired, worn-out feeling and painful periods. I used to get up with a pain in my head and pains in my lower parts and back.
Often I was not able to do my work. I read in your little book about Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I have taken it. I feel so well, and strong and can do every bit of my work and not a pain in my back now. I recommend your medicine and you can use this letter as a testimonial." — Mrs.
PAUL MARRER, 801 Winslow St., St. Paul, Minn.

Just another case where a woman found relief by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Many times these tired, worn-out feelings and pains about the body are from troubles only women have. The Vegetable Compound is especially adapted for just this condition. The good results are noted by the disagreeable symptoms passing away—one after another.

down upon him. For two days he was forced to seek protection of the forest.
The bitter cold added to his misfortunes. When on the morning of the third day of the storm a giant spruce had crashed to earth in his very path bearing him down crushing and stunning him. Later recovering his sense he had plodded on as best he could, resting at frequent intervals but ever onward, westward towards Quebec.
Then as dusk came on and deepened into night with the fury of the storm unabated he struggled ever onward, he dare not stop for well he realized that to stop meant a fate like that of his companion. An intangible something urged him onward, he must follow, he stumbled, fell, in the loose evening snow, vainly he struggled to arise. He cried out a faint dying cry —from that cry he knew the extent of his ebbing strength—he called again!
Hours later, it seemed, a short sharp sound aroused him, a warm tongue on his face.... God was good.... yet it was a dog!

A week later on a bright morning two youthful figures were to be seen making their way, slowly, westward, along the trail on Lake Temiscouata.
The angels was taking his departure, Quebec his goal, but long was the delay in parting at the lone tree of its point of crisis. For in that week of regeneration there had grown up within the boy's heart a great love, a great yearning for the future companionship of the little daughter of the wilds.
The bright sunlight at the point seemed just a little warmer, it held a faint hint of spring, it held promises of new life, new undertakings, new ventures, new successes, a new meaning of life for these two. For a long time the angels held her in his arms, her head on his breast, her soft breath on his cheek. Childlike she clung to him as he gazed westward out over the snow blanketed lake, a new dancing light in his eyes; joy, resolution and determination in his very poise.
Softly, in a few phrases of French that he had gleaned in his childhood, he whispered his plans and promises in her ear, his lips touching the mass of curly black tresses. Her long dark lashes brushed his cheek, his arms enfolded her, crushed her to him in the long kiss of parting. Alone, with the dog at her side Jeanne watched his progress along the trail until he was a mere dark speck against the white snow. A hundred times she win-pered in Bruno's shaggy ear—the angels would return when his mission was completed.

On the evening of a day early in the following June, as the twilight shadows were deepening into darkness a lone traveller paddled his canoe d'ecorce swiftly, silently down the lake. As the last crimson tint was disappearing in the west he approached an inviting beach, his canoe grated softly upon the sharp sand, he leaped ashore, pulled the craft up on the beach and soon a campfire was burning brightly with a steaming pot of tea brewing. Seated in front of his small fire he finished his supper, extracted a pipe from a convenient pocket, filled it with natural tobacco, lighted it with a brand from the fire, and reclined to his pipe dreams to await the rise of the moon. The Angels had returned. In a few short hours he would once more enter the old trapper's cabin au pied du lac, Jeanne would be watching in the moonlight. The traveller smiled, yes it was good to be alive and young!
As the great copper colored disc appeared over the edge of the virgin forest the angels once more dipped his paddle with steady strokes as he faced the east.

Approaching the small beach where the moonlight revealed Michael's caroe upon the sand, a dog came bounding down the trail from the cabin

THE RIPPLED POOL

Madawaska the great storm swept greeting him with joyous barkings and the accompanying wag of his tail. No sooner had the light craft touched the shore and was bounding up the path bestowing a few hasty caresses to Bruno the overjoyed. Arriving at the edge of the small clearing that encircled the cabin he quickened his pace, for there awaiting him in the moonlight was Jeanne, the maiden of his pipe dreams.

Denis stopped for a moment in the narration of his story to knock the ashes from his pipe and re-arrange the campfire which had burned low. For the first time the professor was having revealed to him another phase of the life of the French-Canadian trapper and guide—the stories and traditional history. He settled himself comfortably, contentedly on the bed of fir boughs as the guide continued:

"They were married these two—the angais and Jeanne—at the small mission at Rivière du Loup, and after having received the blessing of the cure returned with Bruno to the grandfather's cabin au pied du lac. The summer passed quickly to wondrous Canadian autumn and the little household lived in love and happiness. The angais learning from the book of Nature with the grandfather as his teacher. With the approach of the cold season came the preparations for the winter's trapping and hunting. And with the first snow and the freezing of the lake, the establishment of lines of traps through the forest adjoining the Grande Baie. As the days passed, more and more the grandfather remained at home mending the traps, the racquets and advising while the angais brought the trap lines, baited and brought home the catch. In the evening Jeanne, accompanied by Bruno, would snowshoe across the lake to meet her returning lover. On a night in midwinter when the Northern Lights were dancing and snapping the girl and dog crossed the bay to meet the angais. He was late this evening and these two followed the trail of the racquets far into the forest before they met the trapper returning. The wind had risen, the treetops moaned and snapped as the trio came to a cleared spot on the trail, the sky was overcast with clouds; the Northern Lights had disappeared and a flurry of snow besprinkled them. Tramping arm in arm along the protected trail memories came flooding back. It was the first anniversary of the night when Bruno had discovered the huddled heap on the lake shore.

Passing through the last fringe of forest along the shore of the bay they encountered the storm at its height. The lake was swept by a dark blinding mass of wind and snow. With bowed heads they followed the trail as best they could for a few minutes, the faithful Bruno at their heels. Then of a sudden it was lost—the trail. Onward they stumbled seeking to gain the shore of the bay and the protection of the forest. In that confusing mass of snow they stumbled, it seemed, for hours. At their feet loomed a fresh trail rapidly filling with drifting snow—a flood of realization—their own trail of a few minutes ago! On they stumbled in the raging darkness when, clearly outlined by the surrounding snow there appeared directly in their path, a large bluish circle. The crash of this ice! Mon Dieu! The angais! The splash of three bodies. The whimpering of a dog.

The storm abated as suddenly as it had swept down upon the lake. The wind ceased. The snow stopped falling. The Northern Lights flashed and chased and spread in great wings of many brilliant tints covering the whole sky and flashing up to the zenith, casting a pale unnatural light upon the scene. On the lake, all was a perfect blanket of snow, not a single track, not a trail was visible, but at the centre of the bay the cold waters spread in silent ripples over the surface of the great blue circle dimly in the pale light.

Since that tragic event of over a century ago, the rippled pool of the Grande Baie of Lake Temiscouata has always remained. In summer, spring or autumn when the other portions of the lake are calm and peaceful the pool is always troubled. Always it has its circles of ripples. And on a night of mid-winter when, after a storm, the Northern Lights cast their pale ghastly light on the unfrozen rippled surface of the pool there may be seen at its centre the phantom figures of the lovers. Jeanne in the arms of the angais and beside them the phantom dog Bruno."

A year and a half after Denis had told his story, on a day early in December, Professor Ainsworth arrived a second time at the small station of Notre Dame du Lac. As he lighted from the train his first disappointment greeted him, for a boy of the village was handling the mail bags in the place of old Pierre, who, he was informed, had died the previous summer. Alone, he made his way to the hotel to be confronted not by the jovial landlord but by a stranger who told him that Joe had removed from the village some eight months since. A search for Denis revealed another disappointment, for early the previous winter he had died of pneumonia in his cabin by the lake shore. So, with a new guide, a toboggan load of provisions and equipment, with racquets they followed a trail across the lake and took possession of the old cabin in the clearing. That evening there was no story-telling around the fireplace. The new guide was a silent morose sort of a chap who would not even attempt to carry on a conversation with the professor. Early in the evening the latter retired to his bunk and was soon in a sound sleep. It seemed but a few minutes when he awoke with a start, aroused by the sensed approach of something. In the dim light from the fire he discerned the form of a large dog coming towards him. It came silently to the bunk, then emitted a low peculiar whine, arose on its hind paws, its front ones resting on the side of the bed, seized the sleeve of the silent professor in its teeth, gave a few short, sharp tugs then made its way to the door, casting glances back at the man and whining. The second time it returned to the bunk and went through the same performance. Unable to resist longer the professor rose, donned his coat and followed to the door, through it down the lone lake trail. Although there was no moon the night was bright. The man glanced back over his shoulder northward; there were the Northern Lights dancing and chasing each other over the sky. Immediately he recalled Denis' story—yes, he felt sure he had seen the phantom dog! As he glanced forward again the dog came bounding towards him, turned and raced away again down the path. The professor followed, increasing his pace until he broke into a run, looking around everywhere for the dog, but it had disappeared. Disappointed and tired the professor at length returned to the cabin. On the morrow he said nothing to the guide of his midnight experience, but during the day he found dog tracks on the trail down near the lake shore. The second night of his stay in the cabin he was again aroused by the visitor of the previous night. Again he followed the dog, but as he reached the frozen bay again occurred the same strange disappearance. The third night the professor remained smoking his pipe before the fireplace long after the guide had gone to his bunk. The fire burned low, a pipe clattered to the floor. The professor dozed; when a low whine announced the approach of his canine visitor. The man awoke with a start and attempted to reach the dog's side, but to no avail, the latter managing to keep just out of reach. On went the chase down the trail to the bay. Now the dog was several feet ahead of the professor. Now the latter could almost touch his bushy tail. Away from the trail through the light snow the man followed vainly attempting to grasp some part of the brute's body, but always just a hair out of reach the dog continued over the frozen surface. Often he would turn sharply and dart off in a new direction to the discomfiture of his pursuer. Now the dog missed his footing in the loose snow. The professor grasped at the shaggy coat only to miss his own footing and fall sprawling, the dog scampering free. So for minutes the chase continued, the man growing more and more impatient, making quicker lunges, when suddenly the dog disappeared; the man heard a sharp report; the thin ice breaking under his weight! He half turned and found himself on the very edge of the rippled pool. The ice gave way all around him; his sharp cry of fear rang out, arrested by the appearance of the phantom figures of the lovers, smiling and reaching out their hands to him from the centre of the pool, while there at their side lay the dog. A shiver and quiver; the grinding of the thin ice and cold waters were closing in over him; a rush, a hum and a roar in his ears; when the waters changed suddenly to the bed of pine boughs, the snow melted into the canvas walls of the tent. Denis thrust aside the flap and emitted a lusty "Good morning M'sieu Ainsworth!" then in a jollier tone: "Breakfast is ready. I think perhaps you have a bad dream after dat story, eh?"

LOCAL AND PERSONAL ITEMS

The photo-drama "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," was full of thrills for the large crowd of interested patrons. The hero was kept stepping from start to finish to keep one jump ahead of the villain. On Saturday evening "A Master Stroke" was also greatly enjoyed. A good film of comedy on each occasion enlivened the bill.

The weekly fairs at this time of year are catching the usual number of devotees. The day, in each town, on which the free-for-all is pulled is an especially attractive one, although people from other towns are treated most unfairly in respect to grand stand reservations. The seating capacity, which is none too liberal anyway, is sold out locally several days before the race, thus depriving out-town enthusiasts, whose money should buy just as much from enjoying the main attraction at the fair. In deterrence to Woodstock, the management there does its best by standers a little chance, by not allowing parking space inside the oval, thus affording a view of the track to anyone standing outside the fence. The other fair committees do not given the patrons even this little consideration.

The local Agricultural Association will hold their fair here on their grounds on Sept. 19 and 20.
