the Spanish colony of Rio Muni. Air raids were a conspicuous feature of the week, Paris being the point of attack of two of them. In the first raid over twenty people were killed or seriously wounded, and a number of buildings were destroyed. Little damage was done in the second raid. A fleet of Zeppelins raided the north and east of England on the night of Jan. 31, and 59 people were killed, including 26 women and children and 101 were injured, including 50 women and children. Of submarine activities and casualties resulting from mines, an account is given in "News of the Sea:" but the event of greatest interest in the sea operations was the depredations caused by the daring German ocean raider, the Moewe, of which a pretty full account is given elsewhere The vessel appears to be a specially constructed pirate cruiser that has escaped the vigilance of the British fleet; but it is hoped that her career of destruction and piracy will soon terminate. Political and diplomatic events received a good share of attention during the week.

The British Parliament was prorogued on Jan. 27, after the compulsory service bill had been passed by the House of Lords and received the Royal sanction. Already the bill has been made effective. In the United States President Wilson began his Campaign to impress upon the citizens of the country the necessity far preparedness. The Lasitania incident was said to be in a fair way of settlement to the satisfaction of America. Great Britain and the Allies had not replied to the American notes on the interference with commerce the detention of mails, and the regulation of submarine warfare. A further diplomatic difficulty between Britain and America may arise over the Appam affair; and it is altogether likely that it was with that object in view that the German raiders took her to an American port. matter the United States is always, prepared, and is a match for all the world.

GOLD SUPPLY OF ENGLAND

Responding to a Parliamentary question, the Chancellor of the British Exchequer lately stated that the amount of gold coin held by the banks, including the Bank of England, was on June 30, 1914, £82,800,000; on June 30, 1915, £110,200,000. No precise statistics were available as to the amount of gold in the hands of the general public, but the best estimate which the Mint was able to make was: On June 30, 1914, £78,000,000; June 30, 1915, $75,000,000.

he recommended the talisman of the melancholy Indian king, "This too will pass."

At the close of his address Mr. Blackall said that each and every individual must now, in the present time, get ready to effect the breaking down of religious barriers, and the abolition of graft; and to propagate that truer civilization for which our gallant men are giving up their lives.

FEAR AND THE SOLDIER

A hundred years ago no officer, unless he was a famous general, would never have confessed that he was frightened in battle. Now every one confesses it; in a letter about the taking of Kut, for instance, an officer wrote that he had been more expenses which is no more with an attack of grip.

Miss Branscombe has returned from a officer wrote that he had been more excited, more frightened, and more tired visit in New York and Boston. than ever before in his life. The old convention of fearlessness and fearless bewas an and poston.

The modern soldier does not tell lies to himself about himself, in the hope that he may make himself, in the hope that he may make him true. He does not say to himself,
"I am not afraid. I do not know what "I am not afraid. I do not know what "I am not afraid. I do not know what fear is. It would be disgraceful in me to feel fear." Rather he says, "I am afraid, but I will not allow my fear to affect my spent a day last week in St. Stephen.

are not afraid when we are; nor can we convince ourselves that others are not afraid when they are. Our method, therefore, is not to deny the facts about our selves, but to face them; and in this matter of fear it seems to work better than the old method, for soldiers now are certainly less liable to panic than they used to be. In the past, we may take it, panic came when soldiers could no longer conceal the truth about themselves from themselves or each other. It was assumed that none of them was feeling fear, that it are not afraid when we are; nor can we was a recent visitor in town. themselves or each other. It was assumed that none of them was feeling fear, that it would be disgraceful in any of them to feel it; and then suddenly the assumption broke down; the disgraceful thing had evidently happened; they were no longer brave like soldiers, but cowards like common men. They could not trust each other, and so they ran away. Now the assumption is rather that soldiers are common men, the fear in each one's mind is not a guilty secret that he hides from the rest. It is not disgraceful to be afraid, but only to yield to fear. The truth is known from the first; and so the common knowledge of it does not produce panic.

A NATURAL EMOTION

The fact is that men are less afraid of fear itself than they used to be. They do not regard it as a kind of madness that might evergoging them and disgrace them that none of them was feeling fear, that it guished.

SAINT JOHN, THE AGED

The following anonymous poem appeared about 1876 in a magazin published in Philadelphia:

I 'Magrowing very old. This weary head

That hath so often leaned on Jesus breast, in days long past that seem almost a dream, is bent and hoars with its weight of ware. Is bent and hoary with its weight of years.

These limbs that followed Him—my master From Galilee to Judah; yea that stood Beneath the Cross and trembled with His groans Refuse to bear me even through the streets To preach unto my children. E'en my lips Refuse to form the words my heart sends forth. My ears are dull; they scarcely hear the sobs
Of my dear children gathered round my couch;
My eyes so dim they cannot see their tears. God lays His hand upon me-yea, His hand, And not His rod—the gentle hand that I Felt, those three years, so often pressed in mine, In friendship such that passeth woman's love. I'm old, so old! I cannot recollect The faces of my friends, and I forget The words and deeds that make up daily life; But that dear face, and every word He spoke, Grow more distinct as others fade away, So that I live with Him and holy dead More than with living.

I was a fisher by the sacred Sea. It was at sunset. How the tranquil tide Bathed dreamily the pebbles! How the light Crept up the distant hills, and in its wake Soft purple shadows wrapped the dewy fields And then He came and called me. Then I gazed For the first time on that sweet face. Those eyes From out of which, as from a window, shone Divinity, looked on my inmost soul, And lighted it forever. Then His words Broke on the silence of my heart and made The whole world musical. Incarnate love Took hold of me and claimed me for His own; I followed in the twilight, holding fast

Oh! what holy walks we had Through harvest fields and desolate, dreary wastes; And oftentimes He leaned upon my arm. Wearied and wayworn. I was young and strong And so upbore Him. Lord! now I am weak, And old and feeble. Let me rest on Thee! So, put Thine arms around me. Closer still! How strong thou art! The twilight draws apace; Come, let us leave these noisy streets and take The path to Bethany, for Mary's smile Awaits us at the gate, and Martha's hands Have long prepared the evening meal. Come, James, the Master waits, and Peter, see, Has gone some steps besore.

That this is Ephesus, and Christ has gone Back to His kingdom? Ay, 'tis so, 'tis so. I know it all; and yet, just now, I seemed To stand once more upon my native hills And touch my Master! Oh! how oft I've seen The touching of his garments bring back strength Up! bear me once more to my church-once more There let me tell them of a Saviour's love : For by the sweetness of my Master's voice Just now, I think He must be very near-Coming, I trust, to break the veil which time Has worn so thin that I can see beyond And watch his footseps.

How dark it is. I cannot seem to see The faces of my flock. Is that the sea That murmurs so, or is it weeping? Hush! My little children! God so loved the world He gave His Son; So love ye one another; Love God and man, Amen. Now bear me back My legacy to an angry world is this.

I feel my work is finished. Are the streets so full? What call the folk my name? The Holy John? Nay, write me rather Jesus Christ's beloved, And lover of my children.

Lay me down Once more upon my couch, and open wide The eastern window. See 1 There comes a Light Like that which broke upon my soul at eve, When, in the dreary Isle of Patmos, Gabriel came And touched me on the shoulder. See! it grows As when we mounted towards the pearly gates, know the way! I trod it once before. And hark! It is the song the ransomed sang Of glory to the Lamb! How loud it souds! And that unwritten one! Methinks my soul Can join it now. But who are these who crowd The shining way? Say!-joy, 'tis the eleven! With Peter first; how eagerly he looks? How bright the smiles are beaming on James' face! I am the last. Once more we are complete To gather 'round the Paschal feast. My place Is next my Master. O, my Lord! my Lord! How bright Thou art, and yet the very same
