RUMORED FISHERIES AGREEMENT

Value of the Pope's Presents.

Ice-Gorge on the Mississippi

HALIFAX, N.S., Feb. 1. It is rumored that the Fisheries Conference has agreed that American vessels be allowed to fish in Canadian waters. The headlands question will be referred to arbitration. The Pope's presents value ten million dollars. The death of Professor Asa Gray is announced. [Asa Gray, M.D., L.L.D., was born at Paris, New York, Nov. 18, 1810. He graduated M.D. at Fairfield Medical College, in 1831, but soon relinquished the practice of medicine, and devoted himself, under Professor Torrey, of New York, to the study of botany. In 1834 he received the appointment of Botanist of the United States Exploring Expedition, but he declined it. In 1842 he was elected Fisher Professor of Natural History in Harvard College. In addition to his lectures at Cambridge, he delivered three courses of lectures before the Lowell Institute in Boston published in 1836 his "Elements of Botany," enlarged into the "Botanical Text-book;" and in 1838 commenced, with Dr. Torrey, "The Flora of North America." He published in 1848 the "Manual of Botany for the Northern United States," and the first volume of the "Genera Boreali-Americana Illustrata;" and the first volume of his " Botany of the United States Pacific Exploring Expedition, under Captain Wilkes," in 1854. He since published the following works, mostly text-books: "How Plants Grow;" "Lessons in Botany, with drawings from Nature;" " The School and Field-book of Botany;" " The Manual of Botany;" "Structural and Systematic Botany (new edition, 1879), a revised edition of the "Botanical Text-book," with 1,300 illustrations; "Flora of the Southern United States;" "Free Examination of Darwin's Treaties," 1861; "Darwiniana," 1876; "New Flora of North America," 1878; "Natural Science and

OLD-TIME SONGS

How many of the popular songs of twenty years ago can the old boys of to-day recall: How many of the old melodies that thrilled them in the days of their hot youth have found an abiding place in their memory? The evolution of the popular songs presents a striking illustration of the survival of the unfittest. The great sentimental success of the anti-war period was undoubtedly "Ben Bolt." The untimely death of something lovable and beautiful was the usual theme of the sentimental song of that period, though it varied occasionally in order to picture the heart havoc caused by the separation of slave-lovers. "Ben Bolt" was a splendid illustration of the prevailing theme. It was hummed, whistled, sung, and played on musical instruments for more than a decade. It was immensely popular with the young ladies, many of whom are now grandmothers. "Sweet Alice" was shrined in every sentimental female's heart, and the question of the day was :-

Don't you remember Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt, Sweet Alice with eyes so brown?
She wept with delight when you gave her a smile
And trembled with fear at your frown.

Sharing "Ben Bolt's" popularity during the same period were two songs widely sung by Dan Emmett, Dan Bryant, and other minstrels. These were "Nellie Gray" and "O, Susannah!" both depicting the sufferings of slavelovers. "Nellie Gray" swept the country like a cyclone:-

> 'My charming Nellie Gray, They have taken you away, And I'll never see my darling any more,"

was heard on every side and voiced by every tongue. "O, dear Susannah!" was built more in the comic way, and the request, "Don't you cry for me," was based on the consoling fact that "I'm going to Alabama with the banjo on my knee." The pessimistic strain in which the fate of a certain "old nigger," popularly known as "Uncle Ned," was bemoaned was well known before " Nellie Gray" or "Susannah" appeared. Dan Emmett's "Dixie" and Foster's "Swance River" have proven the most prominent of the antiwar melodies. A sentimental ballad called "Lorena" was a great favourite in the 60's, and for thirty years previous the appearance and philosophy of "Old Rosin the Bow" was known to everyone. A state of warfare has always proved conducive to song. The flourishing condition of minstrelsy in ages past was due largely to the warlike and adventurous spirit of the times. During the civil war both sides were prolific in song-making. The South made the first great hit with Randall's " Maryland, My Maryland." The "Bonnie Blue Flag" was the Southern national air, and was to the boys in gray what "Yankee Doodle" was to the boys in blue. The Southern women ardently took it up, and through every city rang the chorus-

'Hurrah! Hurrah! for Southern rights of war, Hurrah! for the Bonnie Blue Flag that bears the sin-gle star."

Of the sentimental songs of the war period the most popular were "Fairy Bell," "Annie of the Dell," "Just before the battle, mother," "Toll the bell for lovely Nell," and "When this cruel war is over." In the North, "Wait for the Wagon" and "Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching" had a great success during the same period, and others that ran riot through the camp and fireside were " Mary Blane," " Old Cabin Home," " Fair, fair, with golden hair," and "Daisy Dean." Who has forgotten "Daisy Dean" and its wistful chorus?

" None knew thee but to love thee, Thou dear one of my heart, Thy memory is ever fresh and green; The wild flowers may wither And fond hearts be broken, Still I love thee, my darling Daisy Dean."

A beautiful song, truly pathetic, obtained great popularity in both North and South during the war. This was Florence Percy's "Rock me to sleep, mother." The South produced two war songs that evince genuine poetic talent, and have been accorded unstinted praise by the critics. They are the "Conquered Banner" and "All quiet along the Potomac to-night," the first-named by Father | tution in Ireland; 1,000%. to the Orphan Work-Ryan and the last by Lamar Fountaine. One of the most pathetic poems that appeared ham branch. The residue of his estate in the Union Bank of Newfoundland. during the war was "Somebody's Darling." is bequeathed to his brother, Alexander popular music during and just after the war. He was then in the full blaze of his glory. Since then the blaze has degenerated to a spark, and that is threatening to go out. But twenty years ago he was the biggest attraction in the ring, and his songs sold like shares in a wild-cat mining scheme. The war songs were succeeded by what might be termed the Billyemersonian epoch. These were the days when the "Big Sunflower" and "Love Among the Roses" were epidemic. The agile Billy was the pioneer of the genteel song-and-dance business, and when he sang

"I feel just as happy as a big sunflower That nods and bends to the breezes, And my heart is as light as the wind that blows The leaves from off the trees-es," he was pronounced unapproachable. Of the same date is that ridiculous composition. Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines." W. H. Lingard brought it over from London and first sang it in his lightning changes. Lingard has never been surpassed in his act of lightning changes, and while he maintained intimate relations with "Captain Jinks" he prospered. When he attempted something higher he got into trouble. "Pat Molloy," "The charming young man on the flying trapeze," " The dark girl dressed in blue," " The fellow that looks like me," " In the Bowery," and " The yellow girl that winked at me," were widely sung at the time. The invasion of Lydia Thompson and her British blondes in 1868 was followed by a deluge of English music-hall songs. About this time the topical song began to appear, Tony Pastor and his imitators preferring that sort of composition. In the early 70's the big successes were "Little Fraud," "I feel so awfully jolly when the band begins to play," " Champagne Charley," " The Mulligan Guards," "The Cottage by the Sea," "Killarney," "Good-bye, Charley," "Ten thousand miles away," and "Jennie, the pride of Kildare." Then came "My Gal," "Strolling on the Sands," " There's a Letter in the Candle," and since then the quantity has increased and the quality decreased in the same ratio.

A Degrading and Disgusting Spectacle. WHAT AN "INTERNATIONAL PRIZE

FIGHT" MEANS. On Sunday morning the vicar of Emanuel Church, Nottingham, made a sensation in his church by boldly denouncing the Prince of Wales and the newspaper press for their share in the revival of prize-fighting. He said it was a duty to speak out when the second person in the kingdom, after opening a church, shook hands with and patronized a pugilist whose object was a breach of the law. He would rather see the Church disestablished and himself go with it than receive the support of such cowardly papers. If this rev. gentleman had waited till next Sunday he would have found in the news papers very much more material for his sermon in the published accounts of the disgraceful prize-fight for the championship of the world, a diamond belt, and a stake for £2,000, which took place on Monday on a little island in the River Seine, between Jem Smith, who is described as the English champion, and Jake Kilrain, of America. These men are said to have fought 106 rounds in two hours and a half, and it was only when darkness closed in that the encounter was declared "drawn."

THE WILL OF THE LATE SIR W M'ARTHUR.

THE will and two codicils of the late Alderman Sir Wm. M'Arthur, K.C.M.G., formerly M.P., for Lambeth, just proved shows the personal estate in the United Kingdom amounts to 120,937l. 2s. 5d. This sum does not, however, include any portion of the real and personal estate of the testator in the colonies of Australia and New Zealand, on which no probate duty is payable in this country. The will contains bequests to nephews and nieces, and other relatives and servants, amounting to over 100,000l., and also the following charitable legacies: -1,000l. to the London City mission, 1,000l. to the British and Foreign Bible society, 1,000l. to the Wesleyan Methodist church, Enniskillen, Ireland; the balance of a sum of 10,000l. (promised by the testator during his lifetime), amounting to 9,075l., to the Metropolitan Chapel Building fund. The testator also gives by his will 15,000l. towards the erection of a home for daughters of Wesleyan ministers in Ireland; also a sum of 15,000l. to be invested and the income applied for the support of such institution; 5,000l. to the Methodist college, Belfast; 10,000l. towards the erection of a Wesleyan Theological instiing school, of which the testator was treasurer; and 1,000%, to the Children's home, Birming-The circus clown was the great promulgator of M'Arthur, M.P.

Margarita bowed; she did not like this officious, shrewd-faced woman, who looked at her with such keen, calculating eyes.

'I will do my best,' she promised, stiffly. Soon afterward the interview, much to the relief of all concerned, ended. Adelaide was impatient to have madame's verdict as to her new friend.

'Since you ask me,' said madame, ceremonlously, 'I must reply. I agree with you that she is beautiful as an old Spanish picture, and not unlike one.'

'And you think her clever?'

'Yes,' replied madame, with some reserve; she is clever enough, I am sure, for anything.

But you do not like her. madame? Say so frankly. I feel sure of it,' said Adelaide, quickly.

'You are right, my dear,' admitted madame - I do not like her. I have three impressions about her.'

'What are they?' asked Adelaide.

'In the first place, I do not believe she is what she seems to be; there was a kind of constraint about her that was not natural. Then I am sure she is playing a part of some kind or other, I cannot tell what, and, lastly, am sure she does not like you.'

'I think you are mistaken,' rejoined Adelaide.

'My dear child, you are young, trusting, and generous. I am old, and perhaps too worldly wise, but I am shrewd and keen. It is seldom that I make a mistake as to character, or in my reading of women or men. I hope it may all be right, but I do not think it is. Remember my warning, if ever you are inclined to trust this Miss Avenel.'

But,' remonstrated Adelaide, ' what about

'My dear Adelaide,' said madame, impatiently, 'you make me rude. Lady Davenant is a social bat-neither more nor less.'

And with Adelaide's laughter the subject

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE change was effected. Mme. de Valmy, with many tears and many warnings, had gone, and Margarita Avenel occupied her place. Nothing could have equalled the young heiress' warm and kindly welcome.

'You must look upon my home as your light. home,' she said, ' and you must make yourself as happy as though you were living with your own sister.'

Margarita's face relaxed at the words.

'You are like sunshine,' she said; 'you warm every heart that comes near you. I do not think any one could help being happy with

And then Miss Cameron showed her the pretty rooms prepared for her. They afterward selected some books, Margarita's favorites, then dined, and then spent their first vening together.

Margarita suggested a promenade, but Adelaide did not care for it. She looked into her companion's face and smiled.

'I am not used to crying,' she said-' it is rather a rare event with me; but I cried very much when madame left me this morning, and it has made my head ache. I prefer to sit here. Perhaps you will sing to me. I can almost imagine what your singing voice is

Margarita looked very beautiful in her evening dress. It was of plain black net; and she wore no ornament save a deep crimson rose in her bodice and one in the coils of her black

Adelaide looked laughingly at her.

'You must be of Spanish extraction, Miss Avenel, she said. And Margarita told her, as she had told Lord Rylestone, that she inherited her dark face from a Spanish ancestor.

'Will you sing to me now?' asked Adelaide. That is, if you feel no disinclination. If at any time I ask you to do anything that is unpleasant to you, you must be sure to tell me.'

'There is nothing I like better than singing,' said Margarita, as she went to the piano.

there was on the water a golden tinge which came from the setting sun, a faint odor of them by heart.' sweet flowers in the air. Margarita sat down to the piano; the soft dreamy spirit of the hour HEAVY possessed her-the music that stole from her fingers was sad and sweet. She sung in a low rich voice that was full of passion and tenderness-sung so sweetly and sadly of love and absence and sorrow that the tears came to Adelaide's eyes. If they could but have known that the music meant the same for both, that the thoughts of each had gone over the sea, that the sadness and the tenderness were all for one object! When she could bear it no longer, Adelaide said, gently-

'You are making my heart ache-you make me feel as though I had lost all I ever loved. What power there is in your music!'

'Perhaps you like gay songs best?' said

' Not as a rule; but to-night, yes—the music you are playing is so sad. Did you ever, Miss Avenel, read one of Browning's ballets begin-

"'Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead -Sit and watch by her side an hour'?"

'No, I do not remember to have seen it replied Margarita.

'There are two lines in it that strikes me as being very applicable to you,' said Adelaideand they are pretty lines, too-

"'The good stars met in your horoscope, Made you of spirit, fire, and dew."

' I do not think good stars met in my horoscope,' observed Margarita, sadly; but Adelaide seemed bent on pursuing the idea.

'It is a beautiful idea,' she said-' one of Browning's best. It is of a young girlbeautiful Evelyn Hope "-lying dead, and the man who comes to sit by her side for an hour is the man who loves her. Listen to this last verse, Miss Avenel-

"I loved you, Evelyn, all the while-My heart seemed full as it could hold;

There was space and to spare for the frank your And the red young mouth, and the hair's young gold.
So hush! I will give you this leaf to keep;
See—I shut it inside the sweet, cold hand.
There—that is our secret; go to sleep—
You will wake and remember and understand.

Is it not beautiful, Miss Avenel? Can you not fancy the lover gathering the rich crimson geranium leaf, and placing it in the dead

'It is beautiful, but unreal,' said Margarita; and the idea, though so poetical, is more heathenish than Christian

'Why?' asked Adelaide, looking at her in

'Ah! Miss Cameron, I cannot explain myself. I have not the gift of many words; but I begin to think human love has in it as much of pain as of happiness; and when we have been through it-through its fire and its sorrow-when we have slept the long sleep of death-we shall not awaken to human love

'Would you not like so to wake?' asked Adelaide, in a low voice. The dark troubled eyes had in them a strange

'No, I think not,' she replied. 'We shall not wake to the memories that a crimson geranium leaf can recall. Your ballad is pretty, but it is unreal, Miss Cameron.'

"Do you think all love is full of pain?' asked Miss Cameron, slowly.

' Seeing that it is human, one feels inclined to assert that it must be so. It cannot be perfect-it must have in it as much of pain as of happiness.'

'But of what pain?' asked Adelaide.

'The pain of misunderstanding, of jealousy, of wrong-the pain of finding that the whole rich treasure of a loving heart has been given in vain—the pain of finding that where we have given perfect trust and implicit confidence we have not met with them in return.'

'I should say the pain of loving in vain was greater than any other,' said Adelaide, slowly; and yet your melancholy vein cannot be the correct one. Listen to what Browning says

Is great to grant, as mighty to make, And creates the love to reward the love: I claim you still for my own love's sake.'

Moreover, he a great poet, does not seem think human love dies; he sings-

· Delayed it may be for more lives yet; Through worlds I shall traverse, not a few; Much is to learn, and much to forget, Ere the time be come for taking you."

You see Miss Avenel he thinks that after long ages have passed we may renew this human love that was broken by death.

"'What would you do with me, in fine.
In the new life come in the old life's stead?"

quoted Adelaide, and then she laughed. What a gulf of sentiment we have fallen into! It is all the fault of Evelyn Hope. Browning's ballads have one peculiar effect on me-they haunt me. I took up a book with The sapphire light was dying out of the sky, "Evelyn Hope" in it this morning, and the words have returned to me, until now I know

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK An Effort to Reconstruct the Party PROPOSALS AND COUNTER PROPOSALS A Few Words of Warning.

Now that the great sensation of the seasonthe Governor's lecture—is over, and while we are awaiting the Volunteer Committee's report of their interview with the Executive, it may not be amiss to turn our attention for a short time to the political outlook. A remarkable reticence, with respect to public matters, has prevailed here during the past few weeks-so remarkable, indeed, that the casual observer would almost be inclined to think people had The geographical probabilities are all in favor lost all interest in politics.

Is such really the case? Have the different classes in this community been so imposed upon and bamboozled by Government after Government, that they now cease to care who our rulers are, or to what extent the public treasury is being plundered? No, no! We are certain this is not the case. The people still take some interest in the concerns of the Commonwealth, and are still anxious that existing abuses should be reformed and the public service performed in an honest and efficient be much more difficult to discredit their manu-

But while such is the case with respect to the people generally, it is, at the same time, very obvious that the political and politicomercantile sections take another view of the situation altogether. These were never more deeply interested in political matters than they the candid reader will admit, on more extendare at this very moment. Some of them, especially the last mentioned section, are no longer able to earn an easy living in their "natural occupation"—the fish-buying and fishexporting business. Hence their anxiety to have sufficient influence with the governing party to secure subsidies and other " considerations" as aids to their legitimate trade.

It may be truthfully said of this class that they take no stock at all in principle. With them it is a matter of very little importance Executive is constituted, denominationally or otherwise, so long as they control both and are sure to have their claims allowed, no matter how exorbitant these may be. Business men who are at present in receipt of subsidies having them withdrawn; while those who are not so bountifully blessed by the Commonwealth, and who still languish for access to the public treasury, stand around the offices of the Colonial Building, "with hat in hand," ready a share of the spoils.

Such, then, are the environments of the Opposition to-day, and such are some of the difficulties with which the Leader thereof has now to contend. It is not our intention here to dictate to him as to how he should act under these circumstances. He is a gentleman of large experience in politics, and the people of Newfoundland are sufficiently acquainted with his general conduct to feel warranted in placing more confidence in him, as a leader, than in any other man at present in public life here.

Sir William Whiteway, too, knows perfectly well by this time how to discriminate between 1885 while their kisses were still warm upon his too-confiding lips, have not yet sufficiently repented of their sins of ingratitude to justify him in restoring them to favor. It is, therefore, unreasonable, as well as unjust, to suppose that he could ever again believe in their sincerity-at any rate, until their new professions of friendship have been put to a rigid and searching test.

Some of the latter sternly opposed him for years; but they did so on principle, not be- the fight which ensued, however, the superiorcause of jealousy and personal spite. If Sir William, feeling assured that his choice Greenland. will be a prudent and popular one.

In our first paper on this subject we briefly traced the successive steps which led to the discovery of America by the hardy inhabitants of Northern Europe, showing that Iceland and Greenland were these "successive steps" by which descent upon the New World was made from the north by the maritime Norsemen who inhabited Norway and Sweden. That this theory is a correct one, not only the contents of the Icelandic manuscripts recently given to the world attest, but it is also a reasonable one bearing all the marks of truth that circumstantial evidence can afford. All history attests that the Norsemen were venturesome and explorative; their occupation of the two great northern islands we have named is indisputable, and the probabilities are all in favor of such an accidental discovery of the New World, as Biron, in search of his father, and on the way to Greenland, reputedly made. of the claim, as the map shows us, for the nearest point of America to Greenland is not more distant than Greenland from Iceland, or Iceland from Norway. To suppose that men like these early adventurers, who were always looking for new fields to raid and conquer, would think anything of a three or four days' sail from one land to another, is not consistent with what we know of their analogous history, tendencies and career. In fact, as some one has already said on this subject, it would script claims than to admit and believe them.

With regard to the degree of their heroism, and the extent of their hardships, in discovering the new world, we think, on examination; these will compare very favorably with those of the late Southern navigator, Columbus, as ed examination. The ruling motive in both cases was that curiously mixed one which animates, and has animated, men to make discoveries from the earliest ages, namely, a desire to acquire new possessions. That Biron was fairly entitled to the credit of his discovery, though an accidental one, few will be disposed to deny; for any man engaged in original research is always fully entitled to any accidental discoveries he may happen to make within the paths of legitimate investigation. who occupies the office of Premier, or how the It is thus generally conceded in connection vard; and the firth would probably be Buzzard with experiments in chemistry and the allied sciences. Much more so then when a man voyaging to a new land is driven out of his course by providential causes, and undergoes whatever privations this involuntary deviation would do anything rather than run the risk of involves. But apart from that, it must be quite evident to the intelligent observer that even if Biron had not made his accidental discovery in the year 1,000, the cumulative and aggressive researches of his wandering tribe would inevitably have led them to America to accept any compromise that would give them | within a few years at the latest. This will be made clear as we proceed with the narrative.

After wintering (as is supposed) on the coast of Massachusetts or Rhode Island during the winter of 1,000, as already described, in the spring Leif returned to Iceland; and the accounts of his discoveries had the result of stimulating others to prosecute the work of exploration. Another expedition sailed in the year 1004, under the care of Thorwald, who seems to have profited by his predecessor's experiences, and steered a more direct course for the American coast. Coming to a peculiarly shaped headland, opposite to another with a fine bay between, he named it Keel those who may be safely trusted and those who | Cape. This is supposed to have been Cape may not. Doubling this, Thorwald continued his course until he arrived at a fine promontory, beautifully wooded, which so charmed him that he resolved to found a settlement there. Or landing, they found three canoes, under each of which were three Indians, or Skraellings as they called them, the latter being the name for the Eskimos. This was the first meeting of Europeans and the aboriginal inhabitants of North America, and its result was a foretaste On the other hand, there are honest, sturdy of the many bloody encounters destined to occur in after years between the settler and the savage. The winter season was already come when they succeeded in reaching the western coast of Greenland, where they were obliged to remain. Here Thornstein died; and in the following spring his widow brought the ship back to Ericsflord. The object of this expedition was to recover the body of Thorwald and bring it home to Greenland; but instead of succeeding in his purpose, poor Thornstein found a grave himself far from his home and kindred.

In the summer of the following year (1006) much more important expedition was fitted out for the further investigation of the new continent. The expedition was under the command of Thorfinn, surnamed the Hopeful. He was a man of wealth, and was descended from illustrious ancestors, some being of royal rank. However, if the old manuscripts are correct, his blood must have been anything but pure, as among the more worthy of his " forebears" are said to have been Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Scottish, and Irish persons of high and powerful station! When the festival of Yule arrived, the customary festivities were observed in true Scandinavian fashion. Thorfinn was captivated by the charms of Gudrida-Thornstein's widow-and she, having atmosphere unfavourable to the growth of evidently forgot her sorrows, became his wife justice. before the expedition sailed. It consisted of three ships and one hundred and forty men. An attempt was to be made to found a permanent colony, and all sorts of necessaries were taken on board ship, including live-stock and domestic animals of every description. At last, everything was in readines, and the expedition set sail. Hellaland was the first touched at, then Woodland, where abundance of wild animals were met with. At these places, however, they did not delay, but pressed southwards to more favoured lands. Keel Cape was sighted and passed, after which they coasted along a great tract of sandy beach till they came to where a fiord of firth ran a great way inland. At the mouth of the firth was an island, and both here and farther up the estuary strong currents were encountered, which considerably retarded their progress. The island they called Straumey, or Stream-island; and the firth. Straum-fiord. The island is conjectured to have been that now known as Martha's Vine-Bay. Here they remained for some time, exploring the country round about, and found it to be of a very fine description. To men accustomed to the bleak shores and unkindly climate of Greenland and Iceland, the magnificent summer climate and luxuriant vegetation of this southerly latitude must have been charming in the extreme.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE war-fever is still epidemic at the Commercial Rooms. There was another meeting of the "immortal few" yesterday, when Field-Marshal Outerbridge's plan of the first campaign was discussed and finally adopted. Splendid tributes were paid to the unrivalled military genius of the Field-Marshal, some of the "warriors bold"-including our own inimitable "Rupert"-regarding him as equal in that respect to even Count Von Moltke himself. We hope there'll be no harm done!

Last Sunday was known in Gower and Cochrane Street Methodist Churches as Thanksgiving Sunday, when the people were asked to give a thank-offering to God for His past mercies. The people gave willingly, and when the various sums put on the plates were added, the handsome sum of six hundred and forty-one dollars and seventy-three cents ($641.73) was announced as the offering for the day. The sums in which this amount was reached clearly showed that the people enjoyed "the luxury of giving."

THE friends of Queen's Road Congregational Church are arranging for a "Sociable" in the basement to-morrow (Thursday) evening, commencing at 7.45. The object of the interesting affair is to obtain funds for the pur chase of a new school organ. In addition to an excellent tea, members of the choir and others have prepared a charming programme of songs, solos, &c., for the occasion. So. you see, a very pleasant and profitable evening may be anticipated.

The Cobbler Reigns Supreme. PROBABLE EFFECT of the BALLOT ACT Dwarfed Condition of the Merchant, OTHER MATTERS OF GENERAL INTEREST.

It was Charles Lamb who once observed that the birth of a new year is of interest too wide to be pretermitted by either king or cobbler. That may be true in a general sense, so far as England is concerned, but if outward observance count for anything, the saying applies with peculiar force to Newfoundland, the king and his government may be said to have entirely disappeared and "the cobbler reigns supreme."

A diminished and diminishing income is not a thing that presents itself wholly in the light of a blessing, even to the most ascetic mind. We can see now the economic disadvantage, rather than the moral beauty of the new position, in which it has pleased the present Gov ernment to place us. We share, to our misfortune, the fate of all who breathe an ushers in a new era in Newfoundland politics. By his unfortunate relationship to the fisherman, the merchant, originally, it may be, of promising human material, has been dwarfed and rendered incapable of perceiving what things are really lovely in life. He has identified virtue with his own desires, thus making confusion of right and wrong. The fishermen have too often and too long stood to him in the evil light of tardy payers-men lazy by nature, and grumblers by profession, who of late years have added to their sins by forgetting the respect due to the lords of pork and pound-cotton. Now, however, is the day of the merchant's moral regeneration. As his virtue could not be made to shine by force of its inner light, it has been kindled from without. In declaring that he must not interfere with the franchise of the fisherman, the law is touching the long disused springs of his higher impulses. For a space they will be unused to it, possibly recalcitraut; but the ultimate result will be sanative.

known the uses of adversity and experienced to the uttermost the pride and tyranny of power perverted. They have protested time and again against the injuries inflicted upon them, but without avail. Instead of securing that attention from constituted authority which the justness of their claims merited, they have been assailed with abuse and pestered with gratuitous advice not only by the mercantile body in whom selfishness had the plea of habit, but by their representatives and writers holding with well advertised cautiousness to a cast-iron theory of economics, or moved by a natural instinct of resistance to change. And the daily-increasing evils, were materially assisted into life and warmly defended until death, by a press guided on the one side by practical holiness and modulated ethics on the other. In connection with this matter a retrospection far from agreeable must ensue. Surely a sense of shame will visit men who have abused the power which the arrangements of society permitted them to usurp; and if those who delayed the passage of the "Ballot Act," and finally helped to emasculate it, are now proud of their past, they must be peculiarly graceless and conscienceless. It is easy to talk of the sanctity of the law, and to take shelter behind the obdurate walls of a system that must be good because, forsooth, it exists. But the knowledge of suffering, and the moral sense quickened thereby, ultimately break through even these. There are, however, forces at work less subject to the legislative contract-forces that may be, as yet, only imperfectly discerned.

It would be wilful blindness to ignore the fact that the question of bettering the condition of Newfoundland is not entirely dependant upon either her Legislature or Executive councils. By whatever means it is to be brought about, improvement must primarily lie in the direction of considerable enlargement of the fishing interests in the out-harbors; and the mode in which this is to be obtained, with due regard to a developed sense of justice and reasonable foresight, may well call for the patient thought of the ablest amongst us. This earned the reputation of getting up a first-class | fast and furious conflict between labor and capital: this strain between despondent hunger mean to excel themselves. Better, far, that the party of progress should accept temporary exclusion from political power, and content itself with the task of educating the newly-enfranchised masses to a fuller knowledge of their responsibilities and their rights, than that it should obtain an insecure control of the legislative and administrative functions of the state, through the adhesion of half-hearted allies, and then attempt to deal with the great problems of the time by inadequate or timorous measures of reform. All practical legislation is the result of compromise; but a compromise of essential principles can never be fruitful of real good. (To be continued.)

DROWNING ACCIDENT. Arrival of S.S "Falcon." SEALING PROSPECTS FAVORABLE. Ten Taken in Nets Yesterday.

(Special to the Evening Telegram.) GREENSPOND, This Afternoon.

A sad accident occurred near here on Tuesday night last, by which one young man named Joseph Gill lost his life by drowning and another narrowly escaped. They were going from Inner Islands to Pinchard's Island, a distance of about a mile on ice, and, the night being thick and stormy, they went astray, and Gill fell through the ice. His companion made several attempts to rescue him, but each time as he was within his reach the ice sank beneath him and he barely escaped with his own life. Gill's body has not yet been re-

A man named John Taylor of Gooseberry Islands has had his hand badly shattered by As for the fishermen, they have too long an explosion of a gun. He is here for medical

The Falcon arrived here at noon yesterday. She had a smooth time and met no ice. The wind to-day is N.N.W., moderate, and weather very fine. Several seals were captured here during last week, and ten were taken in nets

LOCAL VARIETIES.

" Music and the dance" will hold sway in the T. A. Hall to-night.

THE mail steamer Newfoundland is on her way here, having left Halifax at 5 o'clock yesterday evening.

THE barquentine Corisande, in salt, having made the quick run across from Cadiz in twenty days, is the only arrival here since yesterday. THE coastal boat Curlew will leave on her route Westward after receiving her mails from the S.S. Newfoundland, due here on Friday forenoon. THE tug Ingraham towed the schooner Zeoho to Brigus last night. The expiration of insurance on crafts renders this precaution A CORRESPONDENT at the Harbor Grace Junction writes as follows: "The past two days over one hundred men are returning home, being used up and discharged. THE ladies and gentlemen taking part in the Benevolent Concert Chorus are requested to meet for practice to-morrow (Thursday) evening, at 7.30, in the Methodist College. "CAPTAIN KYD" is a melodrama of the most sensational description, that never fails to interest the multitude; and the probability is that, with the superior cast from the T. A. Troupe, who will delineate it on Friday night, it will draw a crowded house. THE banking schooner Delight, Captain M. Boland, got in yesterday morning with a general cargo of American goods from Boston. She was fifteen days out; to Scatterie she met head winds and stormy seas, thence hither she came since Saturday morning last.

THE following are some of the characters that will be represented at the Skating Carnival which takes place at the Parade Rink on tomorrow (Thursday) evening, ice permitting:-Terra Nova, Italian Flower Girl, Shepherdess, Haidie's Beau, Masher at the Rink, Fresh from School, Court Lady (Queen Elizabeth Period), Hibernian Minstrel, Lord Dundreary, Lady of Fashion, The May Queen, Dawn, and a great many others too numerous to mention -about 150 in all.

MARRIED.

On the 31st of January, by the Rev. G. Boyd, Richard Grant, of Bird Island Cove, to Susannah Porter, of St.
