THE CHRONICLE.

St. John, N. Y., March 5, 1858.

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

LONDON, Feb. 5th 1858.

sought in chancery my good companion, to find relief from evil thoughts. Once, when she opened her eyes, looking about her, as if in quest of her former protector, she shuddered, and turned her face to me imploredly, as if she knew I had the power to save him yet; but at other times, even when conscious of my care—as when I wet some burnt into paste and put it to her lips—she seemed to have forgotten the horrors of the place.

"How by hours I felt an interest in the fate of this girl growing within me more deep than any feeling I had ever known! I regret to own share of my little store of food and water to the very lowest point, that I might sustain her a little longer. I watched her face as she lay sleeping, and it seemed to me so beautiful, that sometimes I would sit up and brighten upon her a sort of delirium, in which she would see visions which mock their horrible and hateful nature; at most times I clung to her with no thought but that of saving her from death. It seemed to me as if in hiding my store of provisions, I had had but successfully prepared a means of rescuing our captors. Sometimes indeed the idea would come upon me, that if she should escape, she would remember that I had the power to prolong her uncle's life—but I had marked her suffering, and it had withheld my hand. Would this induce her to leave the place? The thought was now more horrible to me than ever death."

"One night, having saturated myself with oilcloth—once upon with tending her—I dropt to sleep. I dreamed of warm and sheltered places; of walking in gardens in which the sunlight did not penetrate; of fruit trees whose fruits were ripening; and with me was my dear wife, who was my wife, and I no longer a poor hairy-humped serpent, but a gentleman, as I had thought to be before I ran from home. This, and many such places I dreamt of—with me in them all. I was now again awaked by a shriek, and started, found a hand at my throat. In an instant I felt a wound, from a knife, upon my arm; but grappled with my antagonist in the darkness, and cry that he uttered told me in a moment that it was old Eprain."

"The devil!" he exclaimed, as he struck at me with great force. "Why should I eat of vulture's food?"

"He was a man of great strength. I struggled hard. I had no weapon; and if I had not waded over his last blow, he had struck me dead. But the top was slippery with the misty night-dews, and I slipped over him again, and rolled over the rose and sail-clot in which I had been buried. Follwing up my advantage quickly, I threw him from me and he fell. I heard a dull splash in the water below. I slipped down the shroud some distance and listened, but could hear nothing—Old Eprain had perished."

"My light was dimmed, and the mist had cleared away, when I hastened up to my companion again, calling upon her by way; for her silence made me think she had fallen in a swoon. She gave no answer, nor did she speak as I raised her up, and found her hoar; that there was blood upon her face. My heart beat fast; but still some faintness remained. I had made a cringing place for her head, but it had been pulled out, and the sail-clot which covered her had been drawn aside. The madman or devil who had assassinated me, had raised her in endeavouring to rescue me, and had cut off the sail-clot which covered her. She was still warm and gave some slight breathing; but they grew fainter. I spoke her by name, calling aloud as I would call to some one at a distance; but she was already in the darkness of death."

"In all the wretched land, not one now was living but myself. Careless of all, and with a superstitious feeling that the bad had somehow visited this fate upon me, I arose and cast its contents to the wind, and sat down upon the edge of the top, with my feet hanging over, and with my hands clasped behind me."

"Loss of blood would quickly make me feel a drowsiness, in which it was strange that I did not fall from that height. Sometimes after this—like a man neither asleep nor awake, I heard a noise of voices below, and rousing myself with an effort, I looked down and saw a boat alongside with a man guarding it; and there, a boat alongside with a man guarding it; and there, a mile on our lashed side, was a large brig brought to a calm sea."

"When Thoresby reached this point in the narrative he paused. Though curious to know end of his strange story, I waited, determined not to press him to speak."

"They nursed me and brought me round," he continued; "but they did not seem to like me. They thought I was a spy, and my eyes were the bane of their protector; and that the woman I had got was received in the struggle. They had torn off their stock of food; and when they got into a French port they had no time for murder and hang, or sent us to prison. But they could not make a case against me, said I was free. And I was free!" Thoresby continued, clutching at my arm; "but the culprimes stuck to me. The old story has followed and come up against me many a time, forcing me sometimes to fly, and making me the laughing stock of men you have known me."

Such was the story Thoresby told me the night before he died, and left me here to die in his possession. Whether it was true, or whether it was but a sickly fancy of his mind as he lay there in the fever, I never knew. I alone followed him to the grave; and when the sickness had abated in Lima, I found myself happily untouched—got a ship again and sailed for England.

October 20.

Gravesend, that usually dull town, wore an aspect of great gaiety, and the Prince and Princess Frederic William embarked from the Terence Pier amidst an end of flower-swinging, municipal congratulations, bowings, scrapings, bell ringing, and shoutings. May long life and much communal happiness attend the youthful pair!

London, February 12.

Parliament at its meeting last week, plunged immediately into the Budget question, and continuing a slight hope that business may yet improve. The amount of gold in the Bank, and the low rate of discount too, stakes money easier of access. All that is wanting now is restoration of confidence; but this is more difficult of success than money. A pause may be replenished, but a loss of character never replaced. Government should once legislate upon this matter. Let us have accommodation bills declared forgeries, and political confidence will soon reappear. Trade will once more flow into legitimate channels, and the name of England will again assume the pre-eminence. Some say, even think that Lord Palmerston will bring in a bill with some such object as that name; but looking at his Lordship's antecedents and looking at the amount of business on hand, we have but little hope of it for the present; and if it cannot be done at the moment, we know full well that it will require the presence of another party to rouse the Government to a sense of its duty to the commercial world.

The Examiner has a scurrilous article to defend Louis Napoleon from the charge brought against him of having repressed all liberty of speech—the recent incendiary address presented by the military, and published in the Moniteur, are cited in proof of this odd position. One traitor Colonel de Persigny has been instructed to express the regret of the Emperor at their publication. But we later than Friday a precisely similar address figures in this newspaper, and the value of the excuses previously made may therefore easily be surmised. Lord Palmerston will certainly lose caste by his advocacy of this measure among those who have been accustomed to look upon him as beyond the influence of foreign depredations, and as peculiarly an English minister, notwithstanding his alliance with the Clergy of the City; and each of the Visiting Committees shall be formed without delay; it shall be to undertake all such works of mercy and charity within their power, as may be requested of them by the Clergy of the City; and each of the Committees shall be entitled to a sum of £1000 a year, to be assessed by the Church Warden.

The

Post Office.—What is the reason the Circles cannot be delivered with some degree of regularity on the route supplied by Burgess' Office, Mill Street? Complaints long and loud have been made since the establishment of this route, and we have frequently entered complaints at the Post Office on account of the non-delivery of the paper. The bundle is sent regularly from the office, each paper under envelope, directed "Way Office, Mill Street." The bundle must be opened at Burgess' and the fault must lie there and the delivery to the subscribers. However, we shall see to the matter.

MEMORANDA.

MIRROR Mantles and Register

The Subscribers would call the attention of the public to those miniature MIRROR MANTLES with REGISTER GRATES and Summer Pictures to match, now manufactured by them, which for elegance of design and beauty of finish cannot be surpassed. They are preferable to the Marble Mantle as they are not so easily injured, cannot be stained, are more elegantly ornamented, very highly polished, and cost a minimum. Specimens can be seen at No. 17, Water Street, or at the old establishment on Portland Bridge.

Several New and Elegant patterns of REGISTER GRATES, Fronts just completed, and for sale by FORTITUDE.

Faint not poor traveller, though thy way
Be rough, like that thy Saviour trod;
Though cold and stormy lower the day,
This path of suffering leads to God.

Never sink not; though from every limb
Are stinging drops of oil and pain;
How dost thou share the lot of him
With whom his followers are to reign.

The friends are gone, and thou alone,
Must bear the sorrows that assail;
Look upward to the eternal throne,
And know a friend who cannot fail.

Dear friends! yet a few more days,
And thy hard trial will be past;
Then wrapt in glory's opening blaze,
Thou'lt rest with saints on heaven's last.

Christian! thy Friend, thy Master pray'd;
When dread and anguish shook thy frame,
Then met his suffering undismay'd;
Who can try to do the same?

O! think of them that his Father's love
Should sound him then with fainter rays;
Then now, when thronged all bright above,
Uescending voices hymn his name!

Go, sufferer! calmly meet the woes
Which God's own mercy bids thee bear;
Then rise as thy Saviour rose,
Go! his eternal victory share.

THE TRUTH DOETH NEVER DIE.
Though kingdoms, states, and empires fall,
And despots decay;

Though cities crumble into dust,
Though gorgons towers and palaces

Are torn in ruins,

Which ones were proudest of the proud,
The truth doth never die!

We'll grieve not o'er what earth has lost,
Its glories are not lost;

Although its men of high renown
Be numbered with the dead.

We'll grieve not o'er what earth has lost,
It cannot claim a sigh;

For the wrong alone hath perished,

And the truth doth never die!

PLAIN WOMEN.—We like homely women, we have always liked them. We do not carry the air of vanity far enough to include the hideous or positively ugly; for since beauty and money sit

the very capital of the world will recognize in woman
the truest and most admirable of all creation.

We never saw one who was not modest and unassuming, and sweet tempered, and seldom came across one who was not virtuous, and had not a kind heart. Made away easily in life of the world, ready by the slightest attentions of the opposite sex, and in the hope of greater attractions which a capricious nature has denied, they cultivate the graces of the heart instead of the person, and give to the mind those accomplishments which would so rarely appreciate a woman but who are very rare indeed. The eyes of men of sense, more highly educated than all personal beauty. See them in the street, at home or in the church, and they are always the same; and the smile which ever lies upon the face is not forced there, but, as it were, spontaneous sunbeams from the soul, and gleams from the lips, inspiring respect instead of passion. Plain women make good wives, good mothers, cheerful homes, and happy husbands, and we never see one but we thank heaven that it has kindly created

women of sense as well as beauty, for if indeed

a female is found possessing both.

CHILDREN'S TEMPER.—Bad temper is often the result of unhappy circumstances than of an unhappy organization; it frequently, however, has a physical cause, and a peevish child often needs dieting more than correcting. Some children are more pionate to show temper than others, and sometimes on account of qualities which are valuable in themselves. For instance, a child of active temperament, sensitive feeling, and eager purpose, is more likely to meet with constant jars and rubs than a dull passive child; and if he is of an open na-

nature, his inward irritation is imminent shown in bursts of passion. If you repress these afflictions by scolding and punishment, you only increase the evil by changing passion into sulks.

A cheerful, good-

tempered tone of your own, a sympathy with his trouble, whenever the trouble has arisen from no ill conduct on his part, are the best antidotes; but it would be better still to prevent badness, as much as possible, all sources of annoyance. Never scold children by making them too unhappy.

Happiness is the atmosphere in which all good affections grow—the wholesome and necessary to make the heart-blood

circulate healthily and freely; unwholesome

the chilling pressure which produces here

an inflammation, there's an excrecence, and worst of all, "the mind's green and yellow sickness—ill-temper."

Note on TRAFALGAR.—Lord Nelson's well-known value, Tom Alton, has for some time past been holding a seat in the House of Commons, and is now almost every day in my office, and often late at night with him about his home master, Lord Nelson. Among other things, I spoke of his wearing his decorations at Trafalgar. Now Tom, who had been in him

for many other engagements, was by some accident presented to him, having left London after his hardship, and not arriving till the battle was over,

and his master's career of glory brought to a brilliant close. But it may be amusing to record

Tom's opinion and observations. He said, "I haven't a doubt that if I had been there, I would not have been killed, but that I have said and say again, that if I had been there he should not have put on that coat. He would mind me like a child; and when I found him bent upon wearing his Navy before a battle, I always repeated to him, 'Tom, you would say,'

"What would you say?" "What may we say, that the battle was, and then I'd dress you in all your stars and garters, and then you'd look something like this." This poor old father

Tom Alton gave himself credit for having saved

his master's life by his valiant discharge in the battle.

He was a man of great worth, and we were surprised that he should have saved it were more of us. Tom's accounts of other numerous acts of valor, and the rewards conferred on him, will be rendered comfortable in Greenwich Hospital, where he held this office

before his death. Note and Quere.

People turn up their noses at this work as if they were not in the habit of keeping company with a bitter man.

The happiest man in the world is the man with but just enough to keep him in spirits, and just children enough to make him industrious.

Said, being rebuked for not keeping a lecture

engagement at Albany, recently, wrote an apology.

"I had no motive to break the engagement, and every motive except a too-motive, to keep it."

Have you got a sister? Then love and cherish her with holy friendship. If you have no sister, we advise you to take somebody else's sister.

HEALTH OR SICKNESS!
CHOOSE BETWEEN THEM.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

The blood furnishes the material of every bone, muscle, gland and fibre in the human frame. When pure, it secures Health to every organ; it removes all morbid disease, and cures every disease. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS operate directly upon the elements of the streams of life, neutralizing the principle of disease, and thus radically curing the malady, whether located in the nerves, the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the muscles, the skin, the brain, or any other part of the system.

USED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are equally efficacious in complaints common to the whole human race and in disorders peculiar to certain classes and localities.

ALARMING DISORDERS.

Dyspepsia, and derangement of the liver, of the source of infinity and suffering, and the cause of innumerable deaths, yield to these curatives in all cases, however aggravated, acting as a mild purgative, alternative and tonic; they relieve the bowels, percolate the fluids, and invigorate the system and the constitution of the same.
