BODY BLOW TO COMMISSION; REDMOND POND IS VALUELESS

At Least, 'Tis Said That Water Is Tainted and Unfit for Domestic Purposes.

It was stated at the city hall today by a gentleman who claims to have secured inside information on the subject, that the water of the Redmond pond, upon which Chairman Darch and Commissioner Saunders have been relying to increase the city's water supply by 500,000 gallons per day, will be found valueless, as it is tainted with algae and rotten wood, centuries old, and is a wine color.

which would drive the people of London mad if it were turned into the mains. If this information is reliable, it will prove a body blow to the commission, as already about $1,000 has been spent on testing the pond, and it was thought that it would replenish right away the falling supply of the springs now in use.

A NAME THAT IS FAMILIAR IN EVERY PART OF THE GLOBE

New Man at the Helm Gives Prominence to Lloyds—An Insurance Institution That Is Over Two Hundred Years Old—Humble Beginning of a Great Concern.

Lloyds is a name known in every corner of the globe. But there are probably few outside the shipping trade who if asked "what is Lloyds?" could give an intelligent answer to the question.

The commission is instructed by the crown to report on the following questions: First—Whether it is desirable that the state should undertake to make good to shipowners and traders losses incurred through the capture of shipping by the enemy in time of war.

Second—If so, whether such indemnity should be granted gratuitously or should be coupled with the payment of premiums calculated to recoup the state, either wholly or in part, for the cost to be incurred. Third—What conditions should be attached to the grant of the indemnity and what arrangements should be made for the proper working of the same.

While it is difficult to predict the findings of the commission yet the very fact of its organization by the Government shows clearly that the state is imbued with a sense of its responsibility for the proper protection of shipping in time of war.

Moreover, the war is invariably made by the state, and the shipping trade is therefore, probably that the commission, after due deliberation, will recommend some form of national insurance against loss from capture or destruction by the enemy at sea in time of war.

Lloyds was originally a coffee house in Tower street, London, kept by a very enterprising and wide-awake man, whose establishment was very much frequented by merchants engaged in the shipping and underwriting trade.

The shipping and underwriting trade Marine insurance had been first introduced into England by the Hanse merchants and by the Lombards, who enjoyed for a considerable time a practical monopoly thereof.

The merchants and brokers engaged in this branch of commerce used to meet in the various coffee houses of the city, and by the end of the seventeenth century Edward Lloyd's establishment had become their favorite meeting place.

By 1692 his business had prospered to such an extent that he moved to the corner of Lombard street and Abchurch Lane, all his customers following him, while in 1696 he went so far as to produce a news sheet called "Lloyd's News," containing all sorts of information particularly relating to shipping.

AS CORPORATION GREW. The next half century saw the gradual crystallization of the Society of Underwriters and Merchants, which had its headquarters in Lloyd's coffee house into a clearly defined corporation.

This step was immediately followed by an immense expansion of insurance business due in a measure to the succession of wars in which England was at that time involved.

LIFEBOAT SYSTEM. Indeed, for a quarter of a century the entire lifeboat service of the United Kingdom was maintained by Lloyds until it was taken over by the National Lifeboat Institution.

Indeed, the movements of some 100,000 crates are chronicled in these volumes from hour to hour by a large staff side by side with the "Index" is "Lloyd's Captains Register," a biographical dictionary of all certificated masters of the merchant service.

PRESENT ORGANIZATION. Finally, in 1871, Queen Victoria affixed her sign manual to an act of parliament providing for the organization of Lloyds in its present form.

CLASSIFICATION MARKS. In classifying and registering ships Lloyds use various marks and signs. Thus, ships in the first class are noted by the distinctive marks "A 1."

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE. It is especially for this latter undertaking that Lloyds is admirably equipped. It has thousands of agents spread over the seaports in every quarter of the globe who are in constant communication with the office in London.

Of Interest to Every Woman

FASHIONABLE GOODS FOR AFTERNOON DRESSES

BROADCLOTH heads the list of fabrics this fall as it did last winter for the dressier sort of suits—those you wear to afternoon receptions and teas, and for anything else that calls itself a daytime affair. Plenty of the whole costumes, which Paris has decreed for this winter, are made of it; more of them, though, of marquisette—that wonderful stuff that is like a grenadine etherialized. Marquisette, by the way, came in last spring, but so late that it practically missed the season, and so starts off this fall like something brand new.

All the treatments possible to grenadine, and, on the other hand, to chiffon (over which Paris has waxed so enthusiastic as to raise serious doubts in the minds of other nations as to her sanity in dress), are possible with marquisette, and a few others which are practically impossible with any other material. Voile-chiffon—or chiffon-voile, for they're alike, in spite of pretended differences—is another material that promises well for this winter. It has just a little more body than has chiffon-voile, and consequently, the beautiful drapings and lines, into which it falls, last better. It is another of the all-silk dress stuffs which take on a curious, shimmering effect, unlike silk in that it seems to hold the light instead of reflecting it in the slightest degree. The open mesh which stamps it as voile half blurs the color, but makes it only the more mysteriously beautiful.

Hand-embroidered robes—almost magnificent in the lavish way embroidery is applied—are of broadcloth, or of eolienne, or of the softest of messaline, with lace, dyed to tone in exquisitely with the foundation let into the design. Eolienne, by the way, holds its own this fall, every grade of it, from the inexpensive cotton stuff that makes up into interesting little gowns at nominal cost, to the all-silk kinds, with many a stop in between at all-wool and silk-and-wool varieties.

A new stuff, somewhat like poplin, but as much lighter than poplin as chiffon is than silk, comes by the name of camise. But the list of new names and new stuffs is formidable. Several characteristics mark them all, though: an adaptability that is like chiffon—is derived from chiffon, in fact, and a softening of color everywhere.

Not that the good, rich shades are abolished—far from it. These are the days when garnet and wine and dahlia shades are brought mightily to the fore, each in new shades. Wine, for instance, may mean anything from the deep, soft red note that has gone by that name for years and years to a beautiful purplish tint, dignified by the title of "Bordeaux."

And the dahlia shades are even more varied and more elusive. In fact, the color range of those three alone is almost kaleidoscopic in its many changes.

But gray—the silvery shade known as "argent," on through the whole shadow-world of shades to the deep, strong street colors—is more interesting than ever, and as popular as it was last spring, when, for a little while, it looked as though nothing else would be worn.

Of course, such stuffs as marquisette, and voile-chiffon, and the rest of 'em, must be made up over silk—almost everything is insistent in its demands for silk. And silk linings add one more shimmering touch of enchantment to them.

Lace Keeps Its Popularity

LACE shows no decline in popularity, in spite of the dire prophecies of failure made by certain depressing mortals. And the old rule of imitations affecting the popularity of the real has been proved as false in its way—never has anything been so imitated and travestied as has Irish lace. Yet it holds its own, and promises this winter to be even more extravagantly used than it was last year.

THE "SCOTCH CRAZE" HOLDS SWAY OVER PARIS FASHIONS

PARIS, Sept. 30. THIS is the season dear to the heart of the great Paris designer—days that find Paris transformed by travelers to an American city, and when good, wholesome American English comes as natural to the car in a promenade on the boulevards as it would on Broadway.

It is many years now since the tailor and hatter first began to share windows devoted to costumes for the French hunting season with styles appropriate for an autumn voyage; so many years, indeed, that the hunting costume is now frequently relegated to a very small corner. And mounting the steps to those "chic" couturieres of the Rue de la Paix, who would scorn the publicity of a shop window, one finds the salons crowded with Americans, for whom these winter models have been prepared so much in advance of their season.

Last news of all, the Scotch craze. Hats, turbans for women and caps for boys and girls; raincoats of Scotch check; separate kilted skirts of Scotch plaid, and, finally, the Highlander's entire costume—not for the littlest boy, as we have grown accustomed to seeing it in London, but for grown women—always very slender ones, for the jaunty charm would easily become ridiculous with any but the freshest type of face and figure.

When properly worn, it is best described by that beloved Parisian word which in plain English is ravishing. Not only can this be asserted upon the proof of a pretty mannequin tripping across an Empire salon, but by a more substantial test, for the very legitimate chance of which a slim little brown-haired girl blessed Jupiter Pluvius with all her big American heart.

It was a cool, rainy night, and every eye in the Cafe de Paris was turned to the very delightful fall costume, whose quiet tones and general outlines were anything but unusual: a round kilted green and blue plaid skirt, that fitted smoothly over the hips, with a flat, double box-pleat in the back; a black velvet Eton jacket and a narrow toque trimmed with two daring quills painted in Scotch colors that had lost all their hardness when seen through that misty atmosphere in which great Paris designers—like their artist Viellier—take such a delight. The whole thing, indeed, was so artistic that the theatrical effect, so dangerously near, was not even suggested. Original it was, and, above all, distinguished—this twentieth century version of "bonny Prince Charlie."

For the rank and file it is narrow stripes for street wear, sometimes in Scotch coloring, but oftener in more neutral grays or browns. Dressier street costumes again find an appropriate medium in broadcloth.

But for afternoon and really elegant occasions there is the most fascinating idea of all: Brussels net gowns made over things of chiffon and taffeta! They are so combined with broadcloth, which gives them their proper suggestion of season, that such an idea as inappropriate never enters your head. These nets are dyed in all the new shades, including dark green and a wonderful dark shade of Russian blue—storm blue, from its gray tone that suggests tempestuous clouds.

In evening shades there is peach pink, which is temptingly reminding of peach ice cream, and a new coral that is wonderfully soft and rich. And let us rejoice to say, white is to the fore again; everything touched with filmy lace in dull, suffused tones of gold. Short waists are a feature of many beautiful models, though the perfectly round waist line, pointing neither in back nor front, is newer, and, to most people's way of thinking, much lovelier.

TOQUES AND TURBANS FOR MORNING WEAR

TOQUES and turbans and well-fitting small hats that, with all their smallness, are a far cry from the tiny, tip-tilted things that took us so long to get used to, are all in high favor for morning wear. And certain adaptations of the sailor—chiefly when trimmed with the tartan plaids that have taken the world of fashion by storm—make mighty trifles to a smart walking-suit.

Mushroom shapes are in, but will probably only last a short while, although the drooping brim they introduced has found its way to many another radically different "creation."

Instead of the trimming at the back of the hat, forcing it up at an absurd angle, there is very little permitted at all, the trimming, which still remains well-massed at the back under the brim, being brought down over the hair in a way as becoming to the average

Plumes are as good as ever they were—and better even than that, if that be possible, but they are almost invariably the uncurled kind. Buckles share in the trimming honors of every sort of hat, from the smartest of little hats to the large hats—almost picture-types, which seem so much more dressy in that very difference of size from walking-hats. One stunning little hat was a simple black felt sailor, simply "made," by the way wide plaid ribbon was drawn through a great jet buckle, crushed round the crown, and tied in a great, swishing bow low on the hair.

The wonderful dahlia and wine shades, which have come back into favor in dress-stuffs, and a dozen new reds to boot, find their prettiest expression in hats, trimmed with plumes and roses—perhaps kept to a simple tone, or to a succession of shades that deepens from the coolest imaginable shade to rich, woman as that tilt was trying. Felt, trimmed with velvet—an old combination, and velvet with felt—a new one—nine out of ten hats show the combination, often the two materials matching exactly; but some wonderfully interesting effects are obtained by almost daring contrasts.

And fruits trim some of the prettiest hats, one bunch matching the felt, another the velvet, softening and harmonizing the contrast without ridding it of its definiteness.
