$S$ PEECH, غoc。

Mr. Speaker,

IRife, in acquittal of my engagement to the houfe; in obedience to the ftrong and juft res quifition of my conftituents, and, I am perfuaded, in conformity to the unanimous wifhes of the whole nation, to fubmit to the wifdom of parliament, " A plan of reform in the conftitution of feveral parts of the public œconomy."

I have endeavoured, that this plan fiould include in its execution, a confiderable reduction of improper expence; that, it fhould effect a converfion of unprofitable titles into a productive eftate; that, it fhould lead to, and indeed almoft compel, a provident adminiftration of fuch fums of public money as mult remain under difcretionary trufts; that, it fhould render the incurring debts on the civil eftablifhment (which muft ultimately affect national ftrength and national credit) fo very difficult, as to become next to impracticable.

But what, I confefs, was uppermoft with me; what I bent the whole force of my mind to, was the reduction of that corrupt influence, which is itfelf the perennial fpring of all prodigality, and of all diforder; which loads us, more than millions of debt; which takes away vigou from our arms, wifdom from our councils, and every shadow of authority and credit from the moft venerable parts of our conttitution.
Sir, I affure you, very folemnly, and with a very clear confcience, that nothing in the world has led me to fuch an undertaking, but my zeal for the honour of this houfe, and the fettled, habitual, fyftematic affection I bear to the caufe, and to the principles of government.

I enter perfectly into the nature and confequences of my attempt; and I advance to it with a tremor that fhakes me to the inmoft fibre of my frame. I feel, that I engage in a bufinefs, in itfelf moft ungracious, totally wide of the courfe of prudent conduct; and I really think, the moft compleatly adverfe that can be imagined, to the natural turn and temper of my own mind. I know, that all parfimony is of a quality approaching to unkindnefs; and that (on fome perfon or other) every reform muft operate as a fort of punifhment. Indeed the whole clafs of the fevere and reftrictive virtues, are at a market almoft too high for humanity. What is worfe, there are very few of thofe virtues which are not capable of being imitated, and even outdone in many of their moft ftriking effects, by the wortt of vices. Malignity and envy will carve much more deeply, and finifh much more fharply, in the work of retrenchment, than frugality amd pre $\therefore$ dence. I do not, therefore, wonder that gentlemen have kept away from frech a tafk, âs well from good nature as from prudence. Private feeling might, indeed, be overborne by leginative reafon; and a man of a long-fighted and itrong-nerved humanity, might bring himfelf, not fo much to confider from whom he takes a fuperfluous enjoyment, as for whom in the end he may preferve the abfolute neceffaries of life.

But it is much more eafy to reconcile this meafure to humanity, than to bring it to any agreement with prudence. I do not mean that little, felfifh, pitiful, baftard thing, which fometimes goes by the name of a family in whicin it is not legitimate, and to which it is a difgrace;-I mean even that public and enlarged prudence, which, apprehenfive of being difabled from rendering acceptable fervices to the world, withholds itfelf from thofe that are invidious. Gentlemen who are, with me, verging towards the decline of life, and are apt to form their ideas of kings from kings of former times, might dread the anger of a reigning prince;-they who are more provident of the future, or by being young are more interefted in it, might tremble at the tefentment of the fucceffor; they might fee a long, dull, dreary, unvaried vifto of defpair and exclufion, for half a century, before them. This is no pleafant profpect at the outfet of a political journey.

Befides this, Sir, the private enemies to be made in all attempts of this kind, are innumerable; and their enmity will be the more bitter, and the more dangerous too, becaufe a fenfe of dignity will oblige them to conceal the caufe of their refentment. Very few men of great families and extenfive connections, but will feel the fmart of a cutting reform, in fome clofe relation, fome bofom friend, fome pleafant acquaintance, fome dear protected dependant. Emolument is taken from fome; patronage from others; objeets of purfuit from all. Men, forced into an involuntary independence, will abhor the authors of a bleffing which in their eyes has fo very near a refernblance to a curle. When officers are cemoved, and the offices remain, you may fet the gratitude of fome againtt the anger of others; you may oppofe the friends you oblige againtt the enemies you provoke. But fervices of the prefent fort create no attachments. The individual good felt in a public benefit, is comparatively fo fmall, comes round through fuch an involved labyrinth of intricate and tedious revolutions; whillt a prefent perfonal detriment is fo heavy where it falls, and fo inflant in its operation, that the cold commendation of a public advantage never was, and never will be, a match for the quick fenfibility of a private lofs: and you may depend upon it, Sir, that when many people have an intereft in railing, fooner or later, they will bring a confiderable degree of unpopularity upon any mean fure. So that, for the prefent at leaft, the reformation will operate againft the reformers; and revenge (as againit them at the leaft) will produce all the effects of corruption.

This, Sir, is almoft always the cafe, where the plan has compleat fuccefs. But how fands the matter in the mere attempt? Nothing, you know, is more common, than for men to wifh, and call loudly too, for a reformation, who, when it arrives, do by no means like the feverity of its afpect. Reformation is one of thofe pieces which mult be put at fome diftance in order to pleafe. Its greateft favourers love it better in the abftract than in the fubitance. When any old prejudice of their own, or any intereft that they value, is touched, they become fcrupulous, they become captious, and every man has his feparate exception. Some pluck out the black hairs, fome the grey; one point muft be given up to one; another point mult be yielded to another; nothing is fuffered to prevail upon its own principle : the whole is fo frittered down, and disjointed, that fcarcely a trace of the original fcheme remains! Thus, betnien the refiftance of power, and the unfyltematical procefs of popularity, the undertaker and the undertaking are both expofed, and the poor reformer is hified off the ftage, both by friends and foes.

Obferve, Sir, that the apology for my undertaking (an apology which, though long, is no longer than neceffary) is not grounded on my want of the fulleft fenfe of the difficult and invidious nature of the tafk I undertake. I rifque odium if I fucceed, and contempt if I fail. My excufe muft reft in mine and your conviction of the abfolute, urgent neceffity there is, that fomething of the kind fhould be done. If there is any facrifice to be made, either of eftimation or of fortune, the fmalleft is the beft. Commanders in chief are not to be put upon the forlorn hope. But indeed it is neceflary that the attempt hould be made. It is neceffary from our own political circumftances; it is neceffary from the operations of the enemy; it is neceffary from the demands of the people; whofe defires, when they do not militate with the ftable and eternal rules of juitice and reafon (rules which are above us, and above them) ought to be as a law to a Houfe of Commons.

As to our circumftances; I do not mean to aggravate the difficulties of them, by the ftrength of any colouring whatfoever. On the contrary, I obferve, and obferve with pleafure, that our affairs rather wear a more promifing afpect than they did on the opening of this feffion. We have had fome leading fucceffes. But thofe who rate them at the higheft higher a great deal indeed than I dare to do) are of opinion, that, upon the ground of fuch advantages, we cannot at this time hope to make any treaty of peace, which would not be ruinsus and completely difgraceful. In fuch an anxious ftate of things, if dawnings of fuccefs ferve to animate our diligence, they are good; if they tend to increafe our prefumption, they are worfe than defeats. The ftate of our affairs fhall then be as promifing as any one may choofe to conceive it: It is however but promifing. We muft recollect, that with but half of our natural ftrength, we are at war againft confederated powers who have fingly threatned us with ruin: We muft recollect, that whilft we are left naked on one fide, our other flank is uncovered by any alliance ; That whilft we are weighing and balancing our fucceffes againft our loffes, we are accumulating debt to the amount of at lealt fourteen millions in the year. That lofs is certain.

I ha e no wifh to deny, that our fucceffes are as brilliant as any one choofes to make them ; o::. refources too may, for me, be as unfathomable as they are reprefented. Indeed they are juft whatever the people poffers, and will fubmit to pay. Taxing is an cafy bufinefs. Any projector can contrive new impofitions; any bungler can add to the old. Dat is it altogether wife to have no other bounds to your impolitions, than the patience of thofe who are to bear tnem?

All I claim upon the fubject of your refources is this, that they are not likely to be increaied by waiting them.-I think I hall be permitted to affume, that a fyftem of frugality will not leffen your riches, whatever they may be;-I believe it will not be hotly difputed, that thofe refources which lie heavy on the fubject, ought not to be objects or preference; that they ought not to be the very firft cboice, to an honeft reprefentative of the people.

This is all, Sir, that I fhal! fay upon our circumbtances and our refources: I mean to fay a little more on the operations of the enemy, be-' caufe this matter feems to me very natural in our prefent deliberation. When I look to the other fide of the water, I cannot help recollecting what Pyrrhus faid on reconnoitering the Roman camp, "Thefe Barbarians have nothing barbarous in "their difcipline." When I look, as I have pretty carefully looked, into the proceedings of the French king, I am forry to fay it, I fee nothing of the character and genius of arbitrary finance; none of the bold frauds of bankrupt power; none of the wild ftruggles, and plunges, of defpotifm in diftrefs; -no lopping off from the capital of debt; -no fufpenfion of interelt ;-no robbery under the name of loan;-no raifing the value, no debafing the fubftance of the coin. I fee neither Louis the fourteenth, nor Louis the fifteenth. On the contrary, I behold with aftonifhment, rifing before me, by the very hands of arbitrary power, and in the very midft of war and confufion, a regular, methodical fyftem of public credit; I behold a fabric laid on the natural and folid foundations of truft and confidence among men; and rifing, by fair gradations, order over order, according to the juft rules of fymmetry and art. What a reverfe of things! Principle, method, regularity, œconomy, frugality, juttice to individuals, and care of the people, are the refources with which France makes war upon Great Britain. God avert the omen! But if we fhould fee any genius in war and oolitics arife in France, to fecond what is done in the bureau! -I turn my eyes from the confequences.

The noble Lord in the blue ribbon, laft year, treated all this with contempt. He never could conceive it peflible that the French minifter of finance could go through that year with a loan of but feventeen hundred thoufand pounds; and that he fhould be able to fund that loan without any tax. The fecond year, however, opens the very fame fcene. A fmall loan, a loan of no more than two millions five hundred thoufand pounds, is ta carry our enemies through the fervice of this year alfo. No tax is raifed to fund that debt; no tax is raifed for the current fervices. I am credibly informed that there is no anticipation whatfoever. * Compenfations are correctly made. Old debts continue to be funk as in the time of profound peace. Even payments which their treafury had been authorized to fufpend during the time of war, are not fufpended.

A general reform, executed through every department of the revenue, creates an amual income of more than half a million, whilft it facilitates and fimplifies all the functions of adminiftration. The king's boufebold - at the remoteft avenues to which, all reformation has been hitherto ftopped-that houfehold, which has been the ftrong hold of prodigality, the virgin fortrefs which was never before attacked - has been not only not defended, but it has, even in the forms, been furrendered by the king to the œconomy of his minifter. No capitulation; no referve. ©Economy has entered in triumph into the public fplendour of the monarch, into his private amufements, into the appointments of his nearef and higheft relations. EEconomy and public fpirit have made a beneficent and an honeft fpoil; they have plundered, from extravagance and luxury, for the ufe of fubitantial fervice, a revenue of near four hundred thoufand pounds. The reform of the finances, joined to this reform of the court, gives to the public nine hundred thoufand pounds a year and upwards.

The minifter who does thefe things is a great man-But the king who defires that they fhould be done, is a far greater. We muft do juftice to our enemies-'Thefe are the acts of a patrior king. I am not in dread of the valt armies of France: I am not in dread of the gallant fpirit of its brave and numerous nobility: I am not alarmed even at the great navy which has been fo miraculounly created. All thefe things Louis the fourteenth had before. With all thefe things, the French monarchy has more than once fallen proftrate at the feet of the public faith of Great Britain. It was the want of public credit which difabled France from recovering after her defeats, or recovering even from her victories and triumphs. It was a prodigal court, it was an ill-ordered revenue, that fapped the foundations of all her greatnefs. Credit cannot exift under the arm of neceffity. Neceffity ftrikes at credit, I allow, with a heavier and quicker blow under an arbitrary monarchy, than under a limited and balanced government: but ftill neceffity and credit are natural enemies, and cannot be long reconciled in any fituation. From neceflity and corruption, a free ftate may lofe the fpirit of that complex conftitution which is the foundation of confidence. On the other hand, I am far from being fure, that a monarchy, when once it is properly regulated, may not for a long time, furnifh a foundation for credit upon the folidity of its maxims, though it affords no ground of truft in its inftitutions. I am atraid I fee in England, and in France, fomething like a beginning of both thefe things. I wifh I may be found in a miltake.

This very fhort, and very imperfect flate of what is now going on in France (the latt circumflances of which I received in about eight days after the regiftry of the * edict) I do not, Sir, lay before you for any invidious purpofe. It is in * Edict, regiflered 29 Jan. 1780 .

order to excite in us the fpirit of a noble emulation. - Let the nations make war upon each other (fince we muft make war) not with a low and vulgar malignity, but by a competition of virtues. This is the only way by which both parties can gain by war. The French have imitated us; let us, through them, imitate ourfelves; ourfelves in our better and happier days. If public frugality, under whatever men, or in whatever mode of government, is national ftrength, it is a ftrength which our enemies are in poffeffion of before us.

Sir, I am well aware, that the ftate and the refult of the French œeconomy which I have laid before you, are even now lightly treated by fome, who ought never to fpeak but from information. Pains have not been fpared, to reprefent them as impofitions on the public. Let me tell you, Sir, that the creation of a navy, and a two years war without taxing, are a very fingular fpecies of impofture. But be it fo. For what end does Neckar carry on this delufion? Is it to lower the eftimation of the crown he ferves, and to render his own adminiftration contemptible? No! No! He is confcious, that the fenfe of mankind is fo clear and decided in favour of ceconomy, and of the weight and value of its refources, that he turns himfelf to every fpecies of fraud and artifice, to obtain the meer reputation of it. Men do not affect a conduct that tends to their difcredit. Let us, then, get the better of Monfieur Neckar in his own way-Let us do in reality what he does only in pretence-Let us turn his French tinfel into Englifh gold. Is then the meer opinion and appearance of frugality and good management of fuch ufe to France, and is the fubttance to be fo mifchievous to England? Is the very conititution of nature fo altered by a fea of swenty mike, that exconomy fhould give power on the continent, and that profufion fhould give it here? For God's fake let not this be the only fafhion of France which we refufe to copy.

To the laft kind of neceffity, the defires of the people, I have but a very few words to fay. The minifters feem to conteft this point; and affect to doubt, whether the people do really defire a plan of ceconomy in the civil government. Sir, this is too ridiculous. It is impoffible that they fhould not defire it. It is impoffible that a prodigality which draws its refources from their indigence, fhould be pleafing to them. Little factions of penfioners, and their dependants, may talk another language. But the voice of nature is againft them; and it will be heard. The people of England will not, they cannot take it kindly, that reprefentatives fhould refufe to their conftituents, what an abfolute fovereign voluntarily offers to his fubjects. The expreffion of the petitions is, that "before any new burthens are "c laid upon tbis country, effectual meafures be taken "S by this boufe, to enquire into, and correet, the "grofs abufes in the expenditure of public mokey."
This has been treated by the noble lord in the blue ribbon, as a wild factious language. It happens, however, that the people in their addrefs to us, ufe almoft word for word the fame terms as the king of France ufes in addreffing himfelf to his people; and it differs only, as it falls fhort of the French king's idea of what is due to his fubjects. "To convince," fays he, "our "" faithful fubjects of the defire we entertain not "c to recur to nero impoofitions, until we have firf "" exhaufted all the refources which order and " œconomy can poffibly fupply."-&c. &c.

Thefe defires of the people of England, which come far fhort of the voluntary conceffions of the king of France, are moderate indeed. They only only contend that we fhould interweave fome œconomy with the taxes with which we have chofen to begin the war. They requeft, not that you fhould rely upon ceconomy exclufively, but that you fhould give it rank and precedence, in the order of the ways and means of this fingle feffion.

But if it were poffible, that the defires of our conflituents, defires which are at once fo natural, and fo very much tempered and fubdued, fhould have no weight with an houfe of commons, which has its eye elfewhere; I would turn my eyes to the very ouarter to which theirs are directed. I would reafon this matter with the houfe, on the mere policy of the queftion; and I would undertake to prove, that an early dereliction of abule, is the direct intereft of government, of government taken abftractedly from its duties, and confidered merely as a fyitem intending its own confervation.

If there is any one eminent criterion, which, above all the reft, diftinguilhes a wile government from an adminiftration weak and improvident, it is this ;-" well to know the beft time and manner "of yielding, what it is impofible to keep."There have been, Sir, and there are, many who chufe to chicane with their fituation, rather than be inftructed by it. Thofe gentlemen argue againft every defire of reformation, upon the principles of a criminal profecution. It is enough for them to juftify their adherence to a pernicious fyitem, that it is not of their contrivance; that it is an inheritance of abfurdity, derived to them from their anceftors; that they can make out a long and unbroken pedigree of mifinanagers that have gone before them. They are proud of the antiquity of their houfe; and they defend their errors, as it they were defending their inheritance - afraid of derogating from their nobility; and carefully avoiding a fort of blot in their fcutcheon, which they think would degrade them for ever.

It was thus that the unfortunate Charles the Firtt defended himfelf on the practice of the Stuart who went before him, and of all the Tudors; his partizans might have gone to the Planta-genets.-They might have found bad examples enough, both abroad and at home, that could have fhewn an antient and illuftrious defcent. But there is a time, when men will not fuffer bad things becaufe their anceftors have fuffered worfe. There is a time, when the hoary head of inveterate abufe, will neither draw reverence nor obtain protection. If the noble Lord in the blue ribibon pleads, " not guilty," to the charges brought againft the prefent fyftem of public œconomy, it is not poffible to give a fair verdict by which he will not ftand acquitted. But pleading is not cur prefent bufinefs. His plea or his traverfe may be allowed as an anfwer to a charge, when a charge is made. But if he puts himfelf in the way to obfruct reformation, then the faults of his office inftantly become his own. Inftead of a public officer in an abufive department, whofe province is an object to be regulated, he becomes a criminal who is to be punihed. I do moft feriounly put it to adminiftration, to confider the wifdom of a timely reform. Early reformations are amicable arrangements with a friend in power: Late reformations are terms impofed upon a conquered enemy; early reformations are made in cool blood; late reformations are made under a ftate of inflammation. In that ftate of things the people behold in government nothing that is respectable. They fee the abufe, and they will fee nothing elfe-They fall into the temper of a furious populace provoked at the diforder of a houfe of ill fame; they never attempt to correct or re-: gulate ; they go to work by the fhorteft wayThey abate the nufance, they pull down the houfe.

This is my opinion with regard to the true intereft of government. But as it is the intereft of government that reformation fhould be early, it is the intereft of the people that it fhould be temperate. It is their intereft, becaufe a temperate reform is permanent; and becaufe it has a principle of growth. Whenever we improve, it is right to leave room for a further improvement. It is right to confider, to look about us, to examine the effect of what we have done.-Then we can proceed with confidence, becaufe we can proceed with intelligence.-Whereas in hot reformations, in what men, more zealous than confiderate, call making clear work, the whole is generally fo crude, fo harfh, fo indigefted; mixed with fo much imprudence, and fo much injuftice ; fo contrary to the whole courfe of human nature and human inftitutions, that the very people who are moft eager for it, are among the firft to grow difgufted at what they have done. Then fome part of the abdicated grievance is recalled from its exile in order to become a corrective of the correction. Then the abufe affumes all the credit and popularity of a reform. The very idea of purity and difintereftednefs in politics falls into difrepute, and is confidered as a vifion of hot and inexperienced men; and thus diforders become incurable, not by, the virulence of their own quality, but by the unapt and violent nature of the remedies. A great part therefore, of my idea of reform, is meant to operate gradually ; fome benefits will come at a nearer, fome at a more remote period. We muft no more make halte to be rich by parfimony, than by intemperate acquifition.

In my opinion, it is our duty. when we have the defires of the people before us, to purfue them, not in the fpirit of literal obedience, which may militate with their very principle, much lefs to treat them with a peevif and contentious litigation, as if we were adverfe parties in a fuit. It would, Sir, be moft difhonourable for a faithful reprefentative of the commons, to take advantage of any inartificial expreffion of the people's wifhes, in order to fruftrate their attainment of what they have an undoubted right to expect. We are under infinite obligations to our conftituents, who have raifed us to fo diftinguifhed a truft, and have imparted fuch a degree of fanctity to common characters. We ought to walk before them with purity; plainnefs, and integrity of heart; with filial love, and not with navifh fear, which is always a low and tricking thing. For my own part, in what I have meditated upon that fubject, I cannot indeed take upon me to fay I have the honour to follow the fenfe of the people. The truth is, I met it on the way, while I was purfuing their intereft according to my own ideas. I am happy beyond expreffion, to find that my intentior.s have fo far coincided with theirs, that I have not had caufe to be in the leaft fcrupulous to fign their Petition, conceiving it to exprefs my own opinions, as nearly as general terms can exprefs the object of particular arrangements.

I am therefore fatisfied to act as a fair mediator between government and the people, endeavouring to form a plan which fhould have both an early and a temperate operation. I mean, that it flould be fubitantial; that it fhould be fyftematic. That it fhould rather ftrike at the firt caufe of prodigality and corrupt influence, than attempt to follow them in all their efrects.

It was to fulfil the fint of there objects (the propofal of fomething fubftantial) that 1 found myfelf myfelf obliged at the out-fet, to reject a plan propofed by an honourable and *attentive member of parliament, with very good intentions on his part, about a year or two ago. Sir, the plan I fpeak of, was the tax of 25 per cent. moved upon places and penfions during the continuance of the American war.--Nothing, Sir, could have met my ideas more than fuch a tax, if it was confidered as a practical fatire on that war, and as a penalty upon thofe who led us into it; but in any other view it appeared to me very liable to objections. I confidered the fcheme as neither fubttantial, nor permanent, nor fyftematical, nor likely to be a corrective of evil influence. I have always thought employments a very proper fubject of regulation, but a very illchofen fubject for a tax. An equal tax upon property is reafonable; becaufe the object is of the fame quality throughout. The fpecies is the fame, it differs only in its quantity: but a tax upon falaries is totally of a different nature; there can be no equality, and confequently no juftice, in taxing them by the hundred, in the grofs.

We have, Sir, on our eftablifhment, feveral offices which perform real fervice-We have alfo places that provide large rewards for no fervice at all. We have ftations which are made for the public decorum ; made for preferving the grace and majefty of a great people.-We have likewife expenfive formalities, which tend rather to the difgrace than the ornament of the flate and the court. This, Sir, is the real condition of our eftablifhments. To fall with the fame feverity on objeets fo perfectly diffimilar, is the very reverfe of a reformation. I mean a reformation framed, as all ferious things ought to be, in number, weight, and meafure.-Suppofe, for inftance, that two men receive a falary of $f .800$ a year each.In the office of one, there is nothing at all to be done; in the other, the occupier is oppreffed by its duties.-Strike off twenty-five per cent. from thefe two offices, you take from one man $\mathcal{L} .200$, which in juftice he ought to have, and yotl give in effect to the other $£ .600$, which he ought not to receive. The public robs the former, and the latter robs the public; and this mode of mutual robbery is the only way in which the office and the public can make up their accounts.

But the balance in fettling the account of this double injultice, is much againt the ftate: The refult is fhort. You purchafe a faving of two hundred pounds, by a profufion of fix. Befides, Sir; whilft you leave a fupply of unfecured money behind, wholly at the difcretion of minifters, they make up the tax to fuch places as they wifh to favour, or in fuch new places as they may choofe to create. Thus the civil lift becomes oppreffed with debt ; and the public is obliged to repay, and to repay with an heavy intereft, what it has taken by an injudicious tax. Such has bee:; the effect of the taxes hitherto laid on penfions and employments, and it is no encouragement to recur again to the fame expedient.

In effect, fuch a fcheme is not calculated to produce, but to prevent reformation. It holds out a Shadow of prefent gain to a greedy and neceffitous public, to divert their attention from thofe abufes, which in reality are the great caufes of their wants. It is a compofition to ftay enquiry ; it is a fine paid by mifmanagement, for the renewal of its leafe. What is worfe, it is a fine paid by induftry and merit, for an indemnity to the idle and the worthlefs. But I fhall fay no more upon this topic, becaufe (whatever may be given out to the contrary) I know that the noble lord in the blue ribbon perfectly agrees with me in thefe fentiments.

After all that I have faid on this fubject, I am fo fenfible, that it is our duty to try every thing which may contribute to the relief of the nation, that I do not attempt wholly to reprobate the idea even of a tax. Whenever, Sir, the incumbrance of ufelefs office (which lies no lefs a dead weight upon the fervice of the flate, than upon its revenues) thall be removed; -when the remaining offices fhall be claffed according to the juft proportion of their rewards and fervices, fo as to admit the application of an equal rule to their taxation, when the difcretionary power over the civil hitt canh fhall be fo regulated, that a minifeer fhall no longer have the means of repaying with a private, what is taken by a public hand-if after all thefe preliminary regulations, it fhould be thought that a tax on places is an objeck worthy of the public attention, I fhall be very ready to lend my hand to a reduction of their emoluments.

Having thus, Sir, not fo much abfolutely rejected, as poltponed, the plan of a taxation of office, - my next bufinefs was to find fomething which might be really fubftantial and effectual. I am quite clear, that if we do not go to the very origin and firft ruling caufe of grievances, we do nothing. What does it fignify to turn abufes out of one door, if we are to let them in at another? What does it fignify to promote oconomy upon meafure, and to fuffer it to be fubverted in the principle? Our minifters are far from being wholly to blame for the prefent ill order which prevails. Whilf inititutions directly repugnant to gond management, are fuffered to remain, no effecu: lating reform can be introduced.

I therefore thought it neceffary, as foon as I conceived thoughts of fubmitting to you fome plan of reform, to take a comprehenfive view of the ftate of this country; to make a fort of furvey of its Jurifdictions, its Eitates, and its Eftablifhments. Something, in every one of them, feemed to me to ftand in the way ot all œconomy in their adminiltration, and prevented every poffibility of methodizing the fyftem. But being, as I ought to be, doubtful of myfelf, I was tefolved not to proceed in an arbitrary manner, in any particular which tended to change the fettled ftate of-things, or in any degree to affect the fortune or fituation, the intereft or the importance, of any individual. By an arbitrary proceeding, I mean one conducted by the private opinions, taftes, or feelings, of the man who attempts to regulate. Thefe private meafures are not ftandards of the exchequer, nor balances of the fanctuary. General principles cannot be debauched or corrupted by intereft or caprice; and by thofe principles I was refolved to work.

Sir, before I proceed further, I will lay thefe principles fairly before you, that afterwards you may be in a condition to judge whether every object of regulation, as I propofe it, comes fairly under its rule. This will exceedingly fhorten all difcuffion between us, if we are perfectly in earneft in eftablifhing a fyitem of good management. I therefore lay down to myfelf, feven fundamental rules; they might indeed be reduced to two or three fimple maxims, but they would be too general, and their application to the feveral heads of the bulinefs, before us, would not be fo diftinct and vifible. I conceive then,

Firf, That all juridictions which furnilh more matter of expence, more temptation to oppreffion, or more means and inftruments of corrupt influence, than advantage to juttice or political adminiftration, ought to be abulifhed.
Secondly, That all public eftates which are more fubfervient to the purpofes of vexing, overawing, and influencing thofe who hold under them, and to the expence of perception and management, than of benefit to the revenue, ought, upon every principle, both of revenue and of freedom, to be difpofed of. Thirdly, That all offices which bring more charge than proportional advantage to the ftate ; that all offices which may be engrafted on others, uniting and fimplifying their duties, ought, in the firft cafe, to be taken away; and in the fecond, to be conlolidated.
Fourtbly, That all fuch offices ought to be abolifhed as obftruct the profpect of the general fuperintendant of finance; which deftroy his fuperintendancy, which difable him from forefeeing and providing for charges as they may occur; from preventing expence in its origin, checking it in its progrefs, or fecuring its application to its proper purpoles. A minifter under whom expences can be made without his knowledge, can never fay what it is that he can fpend or what it is that he can fave.
Fifthly, That it is proper to eftablifh an invariable order in all payments; which will prevent partiality; which will give preference to fervices, not according to the importunity of the demandant, but the rank and order of their utility or their juttice.

> Sixtble

Sixtbly, That it is right to reduce every eftablifhment, and every part of an eftablifhment (as nearly as potiible) to certainty, the life ot all order and good management.
Seventbly, That all fubordinate treafuries, as the nurferies of mifmanagement, and as naturally drawing to themfelves as much money as they can, keeping it as long as they car, and accounting for it as late as they can, ought to be diffolved. They have a tendency to perplex and diftract the public accounts, and to excite a fufpicion of government, even beyond the extent of their abufe.
Under the authority and with the guidance of thofe principles, I proceed; wifhing that nothing in any eftablifhment may be changed; where I am not able to make a ftrong, direct, and folid application of thofe principles, or of fome one of them. An œeconomical conftitution is a neceffary bafis for an ceconomical adminiftration.

Firlt, with regard to the fovereign juriddictions, I muft obferve, Sir, that whoever takes a view of this kingdom in a curfory manner, will imagine, that he beholds a folid, compacted, uniform fyltem of monarchy; in which all inferior jurifdictions are but as rays diverging from one center. But on examining it more nearly, you find much excentricity and confufion. It is not a Monarchy in ftrictnefs. But, as in the Saxon times this country was an heptarchy, it is now a ftrange fort of Pentarchy. It is divided into five feveral diftinct principalities, befides the fupreme. There is indeed this difference from the Saxon times, that as in the itinerant exhibitions of the ftage, for want of a complete company, they are obliged to caft a variety of parts on their chief performer; fo our fovereign condefcends himfelf to act, not only the principal, but all the fubordinate parts in the play. He condefcends to diffipate the royal character, and to trifle with thofe light, fubordinate, lackered fceptres, in thofe hands that fuftain the ball reprefenting the world, or which wield the trident that commands the ocean. Crofs a brook, and you lofe the king of England; but you have fome comfort in coming again under his majefty, though " fhorn of his beams," and no more than Prince of Wales. Go to the north, and you find him dwindled to a Duke of Lancatter; turn to the weft of that north, and he pops upon you in the humble character of Earl of Chefter. Travel a few miles on, the Earl of Chefter difappears; and the king furprifes you again as Count Palatine of Lancafter. If you travel beyond Mount Edgecombe, you find him once more in his incognito, and He is Duke of Cornwall. So tiat, quite fatigued and fatiated with this dull variety, you are infinitely refrefhed when you return to the fphere of his proper fplendor, and behold your amiable fovereign in his true, fimple, undifguifed, native character of majefty.

In every one of thefe five Principalities, Dutchies, Palatinates, there is a regular eftablifhment of confiderable expence, and moft domineering influence. As his majefty fubmits to appear in this ftate of fubordination to himfelf, fo his loyal peers and faithful commons attend his royal transformations; and are not fo nice as to refufe to nibble at thofe crumbs of emoluments, which confole their petty metanorphofes. Thus every one of thefe principalities has the apparatus of a kingdom, for the jurifdiction over a few private eftates; and the formality and charge of the exchequer of Great Britain, for collecting the rents of a country 'fquire.

'fquire. Cornwall is the beft of them; but when you compare the charge with the receipt, you will find that it furnimes no exception to the general rule. The dutchy and county palatine of Lancafter do not yield, as I have reafon to believe, on an average of twenty years, four thoufand pounds a year, clear to the crown. As to Wales, and the county palatine of Chefter, 'I have my doubts, whether their productive exchequer yields any returns at all. Yet one may fay, that this revenue is more faithfully applied to its purpofes than any of the reft; as it exifts for the fole purpofe of multiplying offices, and extending influence.

An attempt was lately made to improve this branch of local influence, and to transfer it to the fund of general corruption. I have on the feat behind me, the conititution of Mr. John Probert; a knight-errant, dubbed by the noble lord in the blue ribbon, and fent to fearch for revenues and adventures upon the mountains of Wales. The commiffion is remarkable; and the event not lefs fo. The commiffion fets forth, that " Upon a report of the deputy au"ditor (for there is a deputy auditor) of the "، principality of Wales, it appeared, that his " majefty's land-revenues in the faid principality, " are greatly diminibed;" -and " that upon a re"" port of the furvejor general of his majetty's land " revenues, upon a memorial of the auditor of his " majeity's repenues within the faid principality, " that his mines and foreits have produced very " little profit either to the public revenue or to indi" viduals;"-and therefore they appoint Mr. Probert, with a penfion of three hundred pounds a year from the faid principality, to try whether he can make any thing more of that very little which is ftated to be fo greatly diminifhed. " $A$

"begsarly account of empty boxes." And yet, Sir, you will remark - that this diminution from littlenefs (which ferves only to prove the infinite divifibility of matter) was not for want of the tender and officious care (as we fee) of furvey.ors general, and furveyors particular ; of auditors and deputy-auditors; not for want of memorials, and remonftrances, and reports, and commifions, and conftitutions, and inquifitions, and penfions.
Probert, thus armed, and accoutred,-and paid, proceeded on his adventure; - but he was no fooner arrived on the confines of Wales, than all Wales was in arms to meet him. That nation is brave, and full of firit. Since the invafion of king Edward, and the maffacre of the bards, there never was fuch a tumult, and alarm, and uproar, through the region of Prefatyn, Showden hhook to its bafe; Cader Edris was loofened from its foundations. The fury of litigious war blew her horn on the mountains. The rocks poured down their goatherds, and the deep caverns vomited our their miners. Every thing above ground, and every thing under ground, was in arms.
In fhort, Sir, to alight from my Welfh Pegafus, and to come to level ground; the Proux Cbevalier. Probert went to look for revenue, like his mafters upon other occafions; and like his matters, he found rebellion. But we were grown cautious by experience. A civil war of paper might end in a? more ferious war; for now remonftrance met remonftrance, and memorial was oppofed to memoriel. In truch, Sir, the attempt was no lefs an affront upon the underftanding of that refpectable people, than it was an attack on their property. The wife Britons thought it more reafonable, that the poor, wafted, decrepit revenue of the principality, fhould die a natural than a violent death. They chofe that their ancient mofs-grown caftles, fhould moulder into decay, under the filent touches of time, and the flow formality of an oblivious and drowfy exchequer, than that they fhould be battered down all at once, by the lively efforts of a penfioned engineer. As it is the fortune of the noble lord to whom the aufpices of this campaign belonged, frequently to provoke reffiftance, fo it is his rule and his nature to yield to that refiftance in all cafes whatfoever. He was true to himfelf on this occafion. He fubmitted with fpirit to the fpirited remonftrances of the Welch. Mr. Probert gave up his adventure, and keeps his pen-fion-and fo ends " the famous hiftory of the "' revenue adventures of the bold Baron North, " and the good Knight Probert, upon the moun" tains of Venodotia."

In fuch a ftate is the exchequer of Wrales at prefent, that, upon the report of the treafury itfelf, its little revenue is greatly diminifhed; and we fee by the whole of this ftrange tranfaction, that an attempt to improve it, produces refiftance; the reliftance produces fubmifion; and the whole ends in penfion *.

It is nearly the fame with the revenues of the dutchy of Lancafter. To do nothing with them is extinetion; to improve them is oppreffion. Indeed, the whole of the eftates which fupport thefe minor principalities, is made up, not of revenues, and rents; and profitable fines, but of claims, of pretenfions, of vexations, of litigations. They are exchequers of unfrequent receipt, and conftant charge; a fyftem of finances not fit for an cconomift who would be rich ; not fit for a prince who would govern his fubjects with equity and juftice.

It is not only between prince and fubject, that thefe mock juriidictions, and mimic revenues, produce great mifchief. They excite among the people a fpirit of informing, and delating; a fpirit of fupplanting and undermining one another. So that many in fuch circumitances, conceive it advantageous to them, rather to continue fubject to vexation themfelves, than to give up the means and chance of vexing others. It is exceedingly common for men to contract their love to their country, into an attachment to its petty fubdivifions; and they fometimes even cling to their provincial abufes, as if they were franchifes, and local privileges. Accordingly, in places where there is much of this kind of eftate, perfons will be always found, who would rather truft to their talents in recommending themfelves to power for the renewal of their interefts, than to incumber their purfes, though never fo lightly, in order to tranfmit independence to their pofterity. It is a great miftake, that the defire of fecuring property is univerfal among mankind. Ganning is a principle inherent in human nature. It belongs to us all. I would therefore break thofe tables; I would furnifh no evil occupation for that fpirit. I would make every man look every where, except to the intrigue of a court, for the improvement of his circumftances, or the fecurity of his fortune. I have in my eye a very flrong cafe in the dutchy of Lancafter (which lately occupied Wcftminfter-halt, and the houfe of lords) as ny voucher for many of thele reflections*.

For what plaufible reafon are thefe principalities fuffered to exift? When a government is rendered complex (which in itfelf is no defirable thing) it ought to be for fome political end, which cannot be anfwered otherwife. Subdivifions in government, are only admillible in favour of the dignity of inferior princes, and high nobility ; or for the fupport of an ariftocratic confederacy under fome head; or for the confervation of the franchifes of the people in fome privileged province. Such, for the two former of thefe ends, are the fubdivifions in favour of the electoral, and other princes in the empire; for the latter of thefe purpofes, are the jurifdictions of the imperial cities, and the Hanle towns. For the latter of thefe ends, are alfo the countries of the States [Pais d'Etats] and certain cities, and orders in France. Thefe are all regulations with an object, and fome of them with a very good object. But how are the principles of any of thefe fubdivifions applicable in the cafe before us?

Do they anfwer any purpofe to the king? The principality of Wales was given by patent to Edward the Black Prince, on the ground on which it has itood ever fince.-Lord Coke fagaciounly obferves upon it, "That in the charter of creating " the Black Prince Edward prince of Wales, " there is a great myftery - for lefs than an ef" tate of inheritance, fo great a prince could not " have, and an abfolute eftate of inberitance in fe "c great a principality as Wales (this principality " being fo dear to him) he foould not have; and

" ${ }^{\text {" }}$ therefore it was made, fibi et beredibus fuis regi-
"6 bus Anglic, that by his deceafe, or attaining to "t the crown, it might be extinguifhed in the crown."
For the fake of this foolifh myftery, of what a great prince could not have lefs, and bould not have fo much, of a principality which was too dear to be given, and too great to be kept-and for no othem caure, that ever I could find -this form and fhadow of a principality without any fubftance, has inftance (and it ferves for the reft) of the difference between a great and a little œconomy, you will pleafe to recollect, Sir, that Wales may be about the tenth part of England in fize and population; and certainly not a hundredth part in opulence. Twelve judges perform the whole of the bufiners; both of the ftationary and the itinerant juftice of this kingdom; but for Wales, there are eight judges. There is in Wales an exchequer, as well as in all the dutchies, according to the very beft and moft authentic abfurdity of form. There are in all of them, a hundred more difficult trifes and laborious fooleries, which ferve no other purpofe than to keep alive corrupt hope and fervile dependence.

Thefe principalities are fo far from contributing to the eafe of the king, to his wealth, or his dignity, that they render both his fupreme and his fubordinate authority, perfectly ridiculous. It was but the other day, that that pert, factious fellow, the duke of Lancafter, prefumed to Hy in the face of his liege lord, our gracious fovereign ; and affociating with a parcel ot lawyers as factious as himfelf, to the deftruction of all law and order, and in cominitices leading directly to rebellion prefumed to go to law with the king, The object is neither your bufinefs, nor mine. Which of the parties got the better, I really forget. I think it was (as it ought to be) the king. The material point is, that the fuit coft about fifteen thoufand pounds. But as the duke of Lancafter is but a fort of duke Humpbrey, and not worth a groat, our fovereign was obliged to pay the cofts of both. Indeed this art of converting a great monarch into a little prince, this royal mafquerading, is a very dangerous and expenfive amulement; and one of the king's menus plaifirs, which ought to be reformed. This dutchy, which is not worth four thoufand pounds a year at beft, to revenue, is worth forty or fifty thoufand to influence.

The dutchy of Lancafter, and the county palatine of Lancafter, anfwered, I admit, fome purpofe in their original creation. They tended to make a fubject imitate a prince. When Henry the fourtb from that fair afcended the throne, high-minded as he was, he was not willing to kick away the ladder. To prevent that principality from being extinguifhed in the crown, he fevered it by act of parliament. He had a motive, fuch as it was; he thought his title to the crown unfound, and his poffeflion infecure. He therefore managed a retreat in his dutchy; which lord Coke calls (I do not know why) par multis regnis. He flattered himfelf that it was practicable to make a projecting point half way down, to break his fall from the precipice of royalty; as if it were ponible for one who had loft a kingdom to keep any thing elfe. However, it is evident that he thought fo. When Henry the fifth united, by act of parliament, the eftates of his mother to the dutchy, he had the fame predilection with his father, to the root of his fae mily honours, and the fame policy in enlarging the fphere of a pofible retreat from the nippery royalty of the two great crowns he held. All this was changed by Edward the fourth. He had no fuch family partialities; and his policy was the reverfe of that of Henry the fourth and Henry the fifth. He accordingly again united the dutchy of Lancafter to the crown. But when Henry the feventh, who chofe to confider himfelf as of the houfe of Lancalter, came to the throlle, he brought with him the old pretenfions, and the old politics of that houfe. A new act of parliament, a fecond time, diffevered the dutchy of Lancafter from the crown; and in that line things continued until the fubverfion of the monarchy, when principalities and powers fell along with the throne. The dutchy of Lancafter muft have been extinguifhed, if Cromwell, who began to form ideas of aggrandizing his houfe, and raifing the feveral branches of it, had not caufed the dutchy to be again teparated from the commonwealth, by an act of the parliament of thofe times.

What partiality, what objects of the politics of the houfe of Lancafter, or of Cromwell, has his prefent majefty, or his majefty's family? What power have they within any of thefe principalities, which they have not within their kingdom? In what manner is the dignity of the nobility concerned in thefe principalities? What rights have the fubject there, which they have not at lealt equally in every other part of the nation. Thefe diflinctions exift for no good end to the king, to the nobility, or to the people. They ought not to exift at all. If the crown (contrary to its nature, but moft conformably to the whole tenor of the advice that has been lately given) fhould fo far forget its dignity, as to contend, that thefe jurifdictions and revenues are eftates of private property, I am rather for acting as if that groundlefs claim were of fome weight, than for giving up that effential part of the reform. I would value the clear income, and give a clear annuity to the crown, taken on the medium produce for twenty years.

If the crown has any favourite name or title, if the fubject has any matter of local accommodation within any of thele jurildictions, it is meant to preferve them; and to improve them, if any improvement can be fuggefted. As to the crown reverfions or titles upon the property of the people there, it is propofed to convert them from a fnare to their independance, into a relief from their burthens. I propofe, therefore, to unite all the five principalities to the crown, and to its ordinary jurifdiction, to abolifh all thofe offices that produce an ufelefs and chargeable feparation from the body of the people, - to compenfate thofe who do not hold their offices (if any fuch there are) at the pleafure of the crown, - to extinguifh vexatious titles by an act of fhort limitation, to fell thofe unprofitable eftates which fupport ufelefs jurifdictions, and to turn the tenant-right into a fee, on fuch moderate terms as will be better for the fate than its prefent right, and which it is impoffible for any rational tenant to refufe.

As to the Dutchies, their judicial œconomy may be provided for without charge. They have only to fall of courfe into the common county adminiftration. A commiffion more or lefs made or omitted, fettles the matter fully. As to Wales, it has been propofed to add a judge to the feveral courts of Weftminfter-hall; and it has been confidered as an improvement in itfelf. For my part, I cannot pretend to fpeak upon it with clearnefs or with decifion ; but certainly this arrangement would be more than fufficient for Wales. My original original thought was to fupprefs five of the eight judges; and to leave the chief jultice of Chefter, with the two fenior judges; and, to facilitate the bufinefs, to throw the twelve counties into fis diftricts, holding the feffions alternately in the counties of which each diffrict fhall be compole But on this I fhall be more clear, when I cone io the particular bill.

Sir, the houfe will now fee whether, in praying fo: judgment atrainft the minor principalities, I do noi act in conformity to the laws that I had laid down to myfelf, of getting rid of every jurifdiction more fubiervient to oppreffion and expence, than to any end of juftice or honeft policy; of abolifhing offices more expenfive than ufeful; of combining duties improperly feparated; of changing revenues more vexatious than productive, into ready money; of fupprefling offices which ftand in the way of œconomy; and of cutting off lurking fubordinate treafuries. Difpute the rules; controvert the application; or give your hands to this falutary meafurc.

Moft of the fame rules will be found applicable to my fecond object - the londed eftate of the crown. A landed eftate is certainly the very worft which the crown can poffefs. All minute and difperfed poffeffions, poffeffions that are often of indeterminate value, and which require a continued perfonal attendance, are of a nature more proper for private management, than public admi-niftration.-They are fitter for the care of a frugal land fteward, than of an office in the fate. Whatever they may poffibly have been in other times, or in other countries, they are not of magnitude enough with us, to occupy a public department, ncr to provide for a public object. They are alteady given up to parliament, and the gift is not of greas value. Common prudence dictates, evera in the management of private affairs, that all difs perfed and chargeable eftates, fhould be facrificed to the relief of eftates more compa&i and better circumftanced.

If it be objected, that thefe lands at prefent would fell at a low market; this is anfwered, by fhewing that money is at high price. The one balances the other. Lands fell at the current rate, and nothing can fell for more. But be the price what it may, a great object is always anfiwered, whenever any property is transferr'd from hands that are not fit for that property, to thofe that are. The buyer and feller muft mutually profir by fuch a bargain; and, what rarely happens in matters of revenue, the relief of the fubject will go hand in hand with the profit of the exchequer.

As to the foreft lands, in which the Crown has (where they are not granted or prefcriptively held) the dominion of the foil, and the vert and venifon; that is to lay, the timber and the game, and in which the people have a variety of rights, in common of herbage, and other commons, according to the ufage of the feveral forefts;-I propofe to have thofe rights of the crown valued as manerial rights are valued on an inclofure; and a defined portion of land to be given for them; which land is to be fold for the public benefir.

As to the timber, I propofe a furvey of the whole. What is ufelefs for the naval purpofes of the kingdom, I would condemn, and difpofe of, for the fecurity of what may be ufeful; and to inclofe fuch other parts as may be moft fit to furnifh a perpetual fupply; wholly extinguifhing, for a very obvious reaton, all right of renijon in thofe parts.

The foreft rights which extend over the lands and poffeffions of others, being of no profit to the srown, and a grievance, as far as it goes, to the fubject ; thefe I propofe to extinguif withour charge to the proprietors. The feveral commons are to be alloted and compenfated for upon ideas which I hall hereafter explain. They are nearly the fame with the principles upon which you haveacted in private inclofures. I fhall never quit precedents where I find them applicable. For thofe regulations and compenfations, and for every other part of the detail, you will be fo indulgent as to give me credit for the prefent.

[ $3 \ddagger$ ]

The revenue to be obtained from the fale of the foreft lands and rights, will not be fo confiderable, I believe, as many people have imagined; and I conceive it would be unwife to crew it up to the utmoft, or even to fuffer bidders to inhance, according to their eagernefs, the purchafe of objects, wherein the expence of that purchafe may weaken the capital to be enployed in their cultivation. This, I am well aware, might give room for partiality in the difpofal. In my opinion it would be the leffer evil of the two. But I really conceive, that a rule of fair preference might be eftablifhed, which would take away all fort of unjuft and corrupt partiality. The principal revenue which I propofe to draw trom thefe uncultivated waftes, is to fpring from the improvement and population of the kingdom; which never can happen, without producing an improvement more advantageous to the revenues of the crown, than the rents of the beft landed eftate which it can hold. I believe, Sir, it will hardly be neceflary for me to add, that in this fale I naturally except all the houles, gardens, and parks. belonging to the crown, and fuch one foreft as fhall be clofen by his majefty, as beft accommodated to his pleafires.
By means of this part of the reform, will fall the expenfive office of firvegor general, with all the influence that attends it. By this, will fall two chief jiuftices in Eyre, with all their train of dependents. You need be under no apprehention, Sir, that your office is to be touched in its emoluments. They are yours by law ; and they are but a moderate part of the compenfation which is given to you for the ability with which you execute an office of quite another fort of imporrance: it is far from overpaying your diligence; or more than fufficient for fuftaining the high rank you ftand in, as the firft gencleman of England. As to the duties of your chief jufticefhip, they are very different from thofe for which you have received the office. Your dignity is too high for a jurifdiction over wild beafts; and your learning and talents coo valuable to be watted as chief juttice of a defert. I cannot reconcile it to myfelf, that you, Sir, fhould be ftuck up as a ufelefs piece of antiquity.

I have now difpofed of the unprofitable landed eftates of the crown, and thrown them into the mafs of private property; by which they will come, through the courfe of circulation, and through the political fecretions of the ftate, into our better underftood and better ordered revenues.
I come next to the great fupreme body of the civil government itfelf. I approach it with that awe and reverence with which a young phyfician approaches to the cure of the diforders of his parent. Diforders, Sir, and infirmities, there are fuch diforders, that all attempts towards method, prudence, and frugality, will be perfectly vain, whilft a fyftem of confufion remains, which is not only alien but adverfe to all œconomy; a fyitem, which is not only prodigal in its very effence, but caufes every thing elfe which belongs to it to be prodigally conducted.

It is impolfible, Sir, for any perfon to be an œconomift where no order in payments is eftabliohed; it is impoffible for a man to be an œconomilt, who is not able to take a comparative view of his means, and of his expences, for the year which lies before him; it is impoffible for a man to be an œconomift, under whom various officers in their feveral departments may fpend, -even juft what they pleare, -and often with an emulation of expence, as contributing to the importance, if not profit, of their feveral departments.Thus much is certain; that neither the prefent, nor any other firft lord of the treafury, has been ever able to take a furvey, or to make even a tolerable guefs, of the expences of government for any one year; fo as to enable him with the leaft degree of certainty, or even probability, to bring his affairs within compafs. Whatever fcheme may be formed upon them, muft be made on a calculation of chances. As things are circumftanced, the firft lord of the treafury cannot make an eftimate. I am fure I ferve the king, and I am fure I affift adminiftration, by putting œeconomy, at leaft in their power. We muft clafs fervices; we muft (as far as their nature admits) appropriate funds; or every thing however reformed, will fall again into the old confufion.

Coming upon this ground of the civil lift, the firt thing in dignity and charge that attracts our notice, is the royal boufebold. This eftablifhment, in my opinion, is exceedingly abuffe in its conftitution. It is formed upon manners and cuftoms, that have long fince expired. In the firft place, it is formed, in many refpects, upon feudal principles. In the feudal times, it was not uncommon, even among fubjects, for the loweft offices to be held by confiderable perfons; perfons as unfit by their incapacity, as improper from from their rank, to occupy fuch employments. They were held by patent, fometimes for life, and fometimes by inheritance. If my memory does not deceive me, a perfon of no night confideration, held the office of patent hereditary cook to an earl of Warwick-The earl of Warwick's foups, I fear, were not the better for the dignity of his kitchen. I think it was an earl of Gloucefter, who officiated as iteward of the houfehold to the arclibifhops of Canterbury. Inftances of the fame kind may in fome degree be found in the Northumberland houfe-book, and other family records. There was fome reafon in ancient neceffities, for thefe ancient cuftoms. Protection was wanted; and the domertic tie, though not the higheft, was the clofeft.

The king's houfehold has not only feveral ftrong traces of this feudality, but it is formed alfo upon the principles of a Body-corporate. It has its own magiltrates, courts, and by-laws. This might be neceflary in the antient times, in order to have a government within itfelf, capable of regulating the valt and often unruly multitude which compofed and attended it. This was the origin of the antient court called the Green Clotb - compofed of the marthal, treafurer, and ocher great officers of the houfehold, with certain clerks. The rich fubjects of the kingdom, who had formerly the fame eftablifhments (only on a reduced fcale) have fince altered their aconomy; and turned the courfe of their expence, from the maintenance of vaft eftablifhments within their walls, to the employment of a great variety of independent trades abroad. Their influence is leffened; but a mode of accommodation and a ftyle of fplendour. fuited to the manners of the times, has been encreafed. Royalty itfelf has infenfibly followed; and the royal houfehold has been carried away by the refiftlefs tide of manners : but with this very material difference.

Private men have got rid of the eftablifhments along with the reafons of them; whereas the royal houlehold has loft all that was ftately and venerable in the antique manners, without retrenching any thing of the cumbrous charge of a Gothic eftablifnment. It is fhrunk into the polifhed littlenefs of modern elegance and perfonal accommodation. It has evaporated from the grofs concrete, into an effence and rectified fpirit of expence, where you have tuns of antient pomp in a vial of modern luxury.

But when the reafon of old eftablifhments is gone, it is abfurd to preferve nothing but the burthen of them. This is fuperfitioully to embalm a carcals not worth an ounce of the gums that are ufed to preferve it. It is to burn precious oils in the tomb; it is to offer meat and drink to the dead, -not fo much an honour to the deceafed, as a difgrace to the furvivors. Our palaces are vaft inhofpitable halls. There the bleak winds, there, "Boreas, and Eurus, and Caurus, and Argeftes loud," howling through the vacant lobbies, and clattering the doors of deferted guardrooms, appal the imagination, and conjure up the grim jpectres of departed tyrants-the Saxon, the Norman, and the Dane; the ftern Edwards and fierce Henrys-who ftalk from defolation to defolation, through the dreary vacuity, and melancholy fucceffion of chill and comfortlefs chambers. When this tumult fubfides, a dead, and ftill more frightful filence would reign in this defert, if every now and then the tacking of hammers did not announce, that thofe conftant attendants upon all courts, in all ages, Jobbs, were ftill alive; for whofe fake alone it is, that any trace of ancient grandeur is fuffered to remain. Thefe palaces are a true emblem of fome governments ; the inhabitants are decayed, but the governors and magiftrates ftill flourifh. They put me in mind of Old

Sarum, where the reprefentatives, more in number than the conftituents, only ferve to inform us, that that this was once a place of trade, and founding with " the bufy hum of men," though now you can only trace the ftreets by the colour of the corn; and its fole manufacture is in members of parliament.

Thefe old ef:ablifhments were formed alfo on, a third principle, ftill more adverfe to the living economy of the age. They were formed, Sir, on the principle of purveyance, and receipt in kind. In former days, when the houfehold was vaft, and the fupply fcanty and precarious, the royal purveyors, fallying forth from under the Gothic portcullis, to purchafe provifion with power and prerogative, inftead of money, broughit home the plunder of an hundred markets, and all that could be feized from a flying and hiding country, and depofited their fpoil in an hundred caverns, with each its keeper. There, every commodity, received in its raweft condition, went through all the procefs which fitted it for ufe. This inconvenient receipt produced an œconomy fuited only to itfelf. It multiplied offices beyond all meafure; buttery, pantry, and all that rabble of places, which, though profitable to the holders and expenfive to the ftate, are almoft too mean to mention.

All this might be, and I believe was neceffary at firft ; for it is remarkable, that purveyarce, after its regulation had been the fubject of a long line of ftatutes, (not fewer, I think, than twenty-fix) was wholly taken away by the twelfth of Charles the fecond; yet in the next year of the fame reign, it was found neceffary to revive it by a fpecial act of parliament, for the fake of the king's journies. This, Sir, is curious; and what would hardly be expected in fo reduced a court as that of Charles the fecond, and in fo improved a country as England might then be thought. But fo it was. In our time, one well filled and well covered ftage-coach, requires more accommodation than a royal progrefs; and every diftrict at an hour's warning, can fupply an army.

I do not fay, Sir , that all thefe eftablifhments whofe principle is gone, have been fyftematically kept up for influence folely: neglect had its fhare. But this I am fure of, that - rerteration of influence has hindered any one attempting to pull them down. For the purpuies of influence; and for thofe purpofes only, are retained half at leaft of the houfehold eftablifhments. No revenue, no not a royal revenue, can exif under the accumulated charge of antient eftablifhment; modern luxury ; and parliamentary political corruption.

If therefore we aim at regulating this houfehold, the queftion will be, whether we ought to œconomize by detail, or by principle? The example we have had of the fuceefs of an attempt to œcanomize by detail, and under eftablifhments adverfe to the attempt, may tena to decide this queftion.

At the beginning of his majefty's reign, Lord Talbot came to the adminiftration of a great department in the houfehold. I believe no man ever entered into his majelty's fervice, or into the fervice of any prince, with a more clear integrity, or with more zeal and affection for the intereft of his mafter ; and I muft add, with abilities for a ftili higher fervice. ©conomy was then announced as a maxim of the reign. This noble lord, therefore, made feveral attempts towards a reform. In the year 1777, when the king's civil lift debts came laft to be paid, he explained very fully the fuccefs of his undertaking. He told the houle of lords, that he had attempted to reduce the charges of the king's tables, and his kitchen.-The thing, Sir, was not below him. He knew, that there is nothing interefting in the concerns of men, whom we love and honour, that is beneath our atten-tion.-" Love," fays one of our old poets, "ef"teems no office mean;" and with ftill more fpirit, " Entire affection fcorneth nicer hands." Frugality, Sir , is founded on the principle, that all riches have limits. A royal houfehold, grown enormous, even in the meanelt departments, may weaken and perhaps deftroy all energy in the higheft offices of the ftate. The gorging a royal kitchen may fint and famifh the negotiations of a kingdom. Therefore, the object was worthy of his, was worthy of any man's attention.

In confequence of this noble lord's refolution, (as he told the other houfe) he reduced feveral tables, and put the perfons entitled to them upon board wages, much to their own fatisfaction. But unluckily, fubrequent duties requiring conftant attendance, it was not polfible to prevent their being fed where they were employed-and thus this firft ftep towards œconomy doubled the expence.

There was another difafter far more doleful than this. I fhall fate it, as the caufe of that misfortune lies at the bottom of almoft all our prodigality. Lord Talbot attempted to reform the kitchen; but furch, as he well obferved, is the confequence of having duty done by one perfon, whilft another enjoys the emoluments, that he found himfelf fruftrated in all his defigns. On that rock his whole adventure fplit-His whole fcheme of œconomy was dafhed to pieces; his department became more expenfive than ever;-the civil lift debt accumulated-Why? It was truly from a caufe, which, though perfectly adequate to the effect, one would not have initantly gueffed; -IIt was becaufe the turnfpit in the king's kitchen swas a member of parliament The king's domeftic fervants were all undone; his tradefmen remained unpaid, and became bankrupt-becaufe the turnSpit of the king's kitcben was a member of parliament. His majefty's numbers were interrupted, his pillow was ftuffed. with thorns, and his peace of mind entirely broken,-becaufe the king's turnfpit was a nember of parliament. The judges were unpaid; the jultice of the kingdom bent and gave way; the foreign minifters remained inactive and unprovided; the fyftem of Europe was diffolved; the chain of our alliances was broken; all the wheels of government at home and abroad were ftopped; -becaufe the king's turnfpit was a member of parliament.

Such, Sir, was the fituation of affairs, and fuch the caufe of that fituation, when his majefty came a fecond time to parliament, to defire the payment of thofe debts which the employment of its members in various offices; vifible and invifible, had occafioned. I believe that a like fate will attend every attempt at œeconomy by detail, under fimilar circumftances, and in every department. A complex operofe office of account and controul, is in itfelf, and even if members of parliamerit had nothing to do with it, the moft prodigal of all things. The moft audacious robberies, or the moft fubtle frauds, would never venture upon fuch a wafte, as an over careful, detailed guard againft them will infallibly produce. In our eftablifhments, we frequently fee an office of account, of an hundred pounds a year expence, and another office, of an equal expence, to controul that office, and the whole upon a matter thit is not worth twenty fhillings.

To avoid, therefore, this minute care which produces the confequences of the moft extenfive aeglect, and to oblige members of parliament to attend to public cares, and not to the fervile offices of domeftic management, I propofe, $\mathrm{Sir}_{\text {, }}$ to acsnomize by princiole, that is, I propofe, to put affairs into that train, which experience points out as the moft effectual, from the nature of things, and from the conftitution of the human mind. In all dealings, where it is poffible, the principles of radical ceconomy prefcribe three things; firft, undertaking by the great ; fecondly, engaging with perfons of fkill in the fubject matter ; thirdly, engaging with thofe who fhall have an immediate and direct intereft in the proper execution of the bufinefs.

To avoid frittering and crumbling down the attention, by a blind unfyftematic obfervance of every trifle, it has ever been found the beft way, to do all things, which are great in the total amount, and minute in the component parts, by a general contract. The principles of trade have fo pervaded every fpecies of dealing, from the higheft to the loweft objects; all tranfactions are got fo much into fyftem; that we may, at a moment's warning, and to a farthing value, be informed at what rate any fervice may be fupplied. No dealing is exempt from the poffibility of fraud. But by a contract on a matter certain, you have this advantage-you are fure to know the utmoft extent of the fraud to which you are fubject. By a contract with a perfon in bis own trade, you are fure you fhall not fuffer by want of kill. By a bort contract you are fure of making it the intereft of the contractor to exert that ikill for the fatisfaction of his employers.

I mean to derogate nothing from the diligence or integrity of the prefent, or of any former board of green-cloth. But what ikill can members of parliament obtain in that low kind of province? What pleafure can they have in the execution of that kind of duty? And if they fhould neglect it, how does it affect their intereft, when we know, that it is their vote in parliament, and not their diligence in cookery or catering, that recommends them to their office, or keeps them in it ?

I therefore $r^{\prime \prime}$ pofe, that the king's tables (to whatever number of tables, or covers to each, he fhall think proper to command) fhould be claffed by the fteward of the houlehold, and fhould be contracted for, according to their rank, by the head or cover;-that the eftimate and circumftance of the contract fhould be carried to the treafury to be approved; and that its faithful and fatisfactory performance hould be reported there, previous to any payment; that there, and there only, fhould the payment be made. I propofe, that men fhould be contracted with only in their proper trade; and that no member of parliament fhould be capable of fuch contract. By this plan, almoft all the infinite offices under the lord fteward may be fpared; to the extreme fimplification, and to the far better execution, of every one of his functions. The king of Pruffia is fo ferved. He is a great and eminent (though indeed a very rare) inftance of the polfibility of uniting in a mind of vigour and compars, an attention to minute objects, with the largeft views, and the moft complicated plans. His tables are ferved by contract, and by the head. Let me fay, that no prince can be amarned to imitate the king of Prufia; and particularly to learn in his fchool, when the problem is-" The " beft manner of reconciling the ftate of a court " with the fupport of war?" Other courts, I underftand, have followed him with effect, and to their fatisfaction.

The fame clue of principle leads us through the labyrinth of the other departments. What, Sir, is there in the office of the grcat wardrohe (which has the care of the king's furniture: that may not be executed by the lord chamberlain himfelf. He has an honourable appointment; he has time fufficient to attend to the duty; and he has the vice chamberlain to affift him. Why fhould not he deal alfo by contract, for all things belonging to this office, and carry his eftimates firft, and his report of the execution in its proper time, for payment, directly to the board of treafury ittelf? By a fimple operation (containing in it a treble control) the expences of a department, which for naked walls, or walls hung with cobwebs, has in a few years cott the crown $\mathrm{f} .150,000$, may at length hope for regulation. But, Sir, the office and its bufinefs are at variance. As it ftands, it ferves, not to furnifh the palace with its hangings, but the parliament with its dependent members.

To what end, Sir, does the office of removing wardrobe ferve at all? Why fhould a jerwel office exift for the fole purpofe of taxing the king's gifts of plate? Its object falls naturally within the chamberlain's province; and ought to be under his care and infpection, without any fee. Why fhould an office of the robes exift, when that of groom of the fole is a finecure, and that this is a proper object of his department?

All thefe incumbrances, which are themfelves nufances, produce other incumbrances, and other nufances. For the payment of thefe ufelefs eftablifhments, there are no lefs than three ufelefs treafurers; two to hold a purfe, and one to play with a ftick. The treafurer of the houfehold is a mere name. The cofferer, and the treafurer of the chamber, receive and pay great fums, which it is not at all neceffary they fould either receive or pay. All the proper officers, fervants. and tradefmen, may be inrolled in their feveral departments, and paid in proper clafes and times with with great fimplicity and order, at the exchequer, and by direction from the treafury.

The board of works, which in the feven years preceding 1777 , has coft towards $£ .400,000$ *; and (if I recollect rightiy) has not coft lefs in proportion from the beginning of the reign, is under the very fame defcription of all the other ill-contrived eftablifhments, and calls for the very fame reform. We are to feek for the vifible figns of all this expence.-For all this expence, we do not fee a building of the fize and importance of a pigeon-houfe. Buckingham-houfe was reprifed by a bargain with the public, for one hundred thoufand pounds;-and the fmall houfe at Windfor has been, if I miftake not, undertaken fince that account was brought before us. The good works of that board of works, are as carefully conceated, as other good works ought to be. They are perfectly invifible. But though it is the perfection of charity to be concealed, it is, Sir, the property and glory of magnificence, to appear, and ftand forward to the eye.

That board, which ought to be a concern of builders, and fuch like, and of none elfe, is turned into a junto of members of parliament. That office too has a treafury, and a paymafter of its own; and left the arduous affairs of that important exchequer fhould be too fatiguing, that paymafter has a deputy to partake his profits, and relieve his cares. I do not believe, that either now or in former times, the chicf managers of that board have made any prifit of its abufe. It is, however, no good reafon that an abufive eftablifhment fhould fubfift, becaufe it is of as little private as of public advantage. But this eftablifhment has the grand radical fault, the original fin, that pervades and perveris all our eftablifhments; -The apparatus is not fitted to the object, nor the workmen to the work. Expences are incurred on the private opinion of an inferior eftablifhment, without confulting the principal; who can alone determine the proportion which it ought to bear to the other eftablifhments of the ftate, in the order of their relative importance.

I propofe, therefore, along with the reft, to pull down this whole ill-contrived fcaffolding, which obftructs, rather than forwards our pub licworks; to take away its treafury; to put the whole into the hands of a real builder, who fhall not be a member of parliament ; and to oblige him by a previous eftimate and final payment, to appear twice at the treafury, before the public can be loaded. The king's gardens are to come under a fimilar regulation.

The mint, though not a department of the houfehold, has the fame vices. It is a great expence to the nation, chiefly for the fake of members of parliament. It has its officers of parade and dignity. It has its treafury too. It is a fort of corporate body; and formerly was a body of great importance; as much fo, on the then fcale of things, and the then order of bufinefs, as the bank is at this day. It was the great center of money tranfactions and remittances for our own, and for other nations; until king Charles the firft, among other arbitrary projects, dictated by defpotic neceffity, made him withhold the money that lay there for remittance. That blow, (and happily too) the mint never recover'd. Now it is no bank; no remittance-fhop. The mint, Sir, is a manufacture, and it is nothing elfe; and it ought to be undertaken upon the principles of a manufacture ; that is, for the beft and cheapeft execution, by a contract, upon proper fecurities, and under proper regulations.

The artillery is a far greater object; it a military concern; but having an affinity and kindred in its defects with the eftablifhments I am now fpeaking of, I think it beft to fpeak of it along with them. It is, I conceive, an eftablifhment not well fuited to its martial, though exceedingly well calculated for its parliamentary purpofes. - Here there is a treafury, as in all the other inferior departments of government. Here the military is fubordinate to the civil, and the naval confounded with the land fervice. The object indeed is much the fame in both. But when the detail is examined, it will be found that they had bette: be feparated. For a reform of this office, I propofe to reftore things, 10 what (all confiderations taken together) is their natural order; to reftore them to their juft proportion, and to their juft diftribution. I propofe, in this military concern, to render the civil fubordinate to the military; and this will annihilate the greateft part of the expence, and all the influence belonging to the office. I propofe to fend the military branch to the army, and the naval to the Admiralty : and I intend to perfect and accomplifh the whole detail (where it becomes too minute and complicated for legiflature, and requires exact, official, military, and mechanical knowledge) by a commiffion of competent officers in both departments. I proFofe to execute by contract, what by contract can be executed, and to bring, as much as poffible, all eftimates to be previouny approved, and finally to be paid by the treafury.

Thus, by following the courfe of nature, and not the purpofes of politics, or the accumulated patchwork of occafional accommodation, this valt expenfive department may be methodized; its firvice proportioned to its neceflities; and its payments fubjected to the infpection of the fuperior miniter of finance; who is to judge of it on the refult refult of the total collective exigencies of the ftate. This laft is a reigning principle through my whole plan; and it is a principle which I hope may hereafter be applied to other plans.

By thefe regulations taken together-befides the three fubordinate treafuries in the leffer principalities, five other fubordinate treafuries are fuppreffed. There is taken away the whole eftablifbment of detail in the houfehold; the treafu-rer;-the comptroller (for a comptroller is hardly neceffary where there is no treafurer) the cofferer of the boufebold; - the treafurer of the cbamber; the mafter of the bousebold;- the whole board of green cloth; -and a valt number of fubordinate offices in the department of the feward of the boufebold; - the whole eftablifhment of the great wardrobe; - the remoring wardrobe; - the jewel office;--the robes;--the board of works; almolt the whole charge of the civil branch of the board of ordnance, are taken away. All thefe arrangements together will be found to rehieve the nation from a vaft weight of influence, without diftrefling, but rather by forwroding every public fervice. When fomething of this kind is done, then the public may begin to breathe. Under other governments, a queftion of expence is only a queftion of ceconomy, and it is nothing more; with us in every queftion of expence, there is always a mixture of conftiturional confiderations.

It is, Sir, becaufe I wifh to keep this bufiners of fubordinate treafuries as much as I can together, that I brought the ordnance-office before you, though it is properly a military department. For the fame reafon 1 will now trouble you with my thoughts and propofitions upon two of the greateit mader treafuries, I mean the office of paymafter of the land forces or treafurer of the army; and that of the treafurer of the navy. The former of thefe has long been a great object of public fufpicion and uneafinefs. Eavy too has had its fhare in the obloquy which is call upon this office. Put I am fure that it has no fhare at all in the reflections I flall make upon it, or in the reformations that I hall propofe. I do not grudge to the honourabie gentieman who at prefent holds the office, any of the effects of his talents, his merit, or his fortune. He is refpectable in all thefe particulars. I follow the conftitution of the office, withour perfecuting its holder. It is neceflary, in all matters of public complaint, where men frequently feel right and argue wrong, to feperate prejudice from reafon; and to be very fure, in attempring the redrefs of a grievance, that we hit upon its real feat, and its true nature. Where there is an abufe in office, the firft thing that occurs in heat is to cenfure the officer. Our natural difpofition leads all our enquiries rather to perfons than to things. But this prejudice is to be corrected by maturer thinking.

Sir, the profits of the pay office (as an office) are not too great, in my opmion, for its duties, and for the rank of the perton who has generally held it. He has been generally a perfon of the higheft rank; that is to fay, a perfon of eminence and confideration in this houfe. The great and the invidious profits of the pay-office, are from the Bank that is heldoin it. According to the prefent courfe of the office, and according to the prefone mode of accounting there, this bank mult nectitirily exift fomewhere. Money is a productive thing; and when the ufual time of its demand can be tolerably calculated, it may, with prudence, be fafely laid out to the profit of the holder. It is on this calculation, that the bufinefs of banking proceeds. But no profit can be derived from the wie of money, which does not make it the interen of the holder to delay his account. The proce?s of the exchequer colludes with this intereft. Is this collufion from its want of rigour, and ftrictnefs, and great regularity of form? The reverfe is true. They have in the exchequer brought rigour and formalifm to their ultimate perfection. The procefs againft accountants is fo rigorous, and in a manner fo unjuft, that correctives muft, from time to time, be applied to it. Thefe correctives being difcretionary, upon the cafe, and generally remitted by the barons to the lords of the treafury, as the beit judges of the reafons for refpite, hearings are had; delays are produced; and thas the extreme of rigour in office (as ufual in all human affars) leads to the extreme of laxity. What with the interefted delay of the officer; the ill-conceived exactneds of the court ; the applications for difpenfations from that exactnefs, the revival of rigorous procefs, after the expiration of the time; and the new rigours producing new applications, and new enlargements of time, fuch delays happen in the public accounts, that they can farcely ever be clofed.

Befides, Sir, they have a rule in the exc'equer, which, I believe, they hare founded upon a very ancient flatute, that of the stit of Henry III. by which it is provided, "That when a therif or " bailiff hath becran his account, none other " Mall be received to account, until he that was " firft appointed hath clearly accoonted, and that " the fum has been received *." Whether this claufe of that fatute be the ground of that abfurd practice, I am nor quite able to afcertain. But it has very generally prevailed, though I am told that of late they have began to relax from it. In confequence of forms adverfe to fubitantial account, we have a long fucceffion of pay-mafters and their reprefentatives, who have never been admitted to account, although perfectly ready to do fo.

As the extent of our wars has fcattered the accountants under the pay-mafter into every part of the globe, the grand and fure pay-maiter, Death, in all his frapes, calls thefe accountants to another reckoning. Death, indeed, domineers over every thing, but the forms of the exchequer. Over thefe he has no power. They are impaffive and immortal. The audit of the exchequer, more fevere than the audit to which the accountants are gone, demands proofs which in the nature of things are difficult, fometimes impoffible to be had. In this refpect, too, rigour, as uftual, defeats itfelf. Then, the exchequer never gives a particular receipt, or clears a man of his account, as far as it goes. A fimal acquittance (or a quictus, as they term it) is fcarcely ever to be obtained. Terrors and ghofts of unlaid accountants, haunt the houfes of their children from generation to generation. Families, in the courfe of fucceffion, fall into minorities; the inheritance comes into the hands of females; and very perplexed affairs are often delivered over into the hands of negligent guardians, and faithlefs ftewards. So that the demand remains, when the advantage of the money is gone, if ever any advantage at all has been made of it. This is a caule of infinite diftrefs to families; and becomes a fource of influence to an extent, that can farcely be imagined, but by thofe who have taken fome pains to trace it. The mildnefs of government in the mployment of ufelef's and dangerous powers, furaifhes no reafon for their continuance.

As things fand, can you in juftice (except perhaps in that over-perfect kind of juftice which has obtained, by its merits, the title of the oppopofite vice *) infilt that any man fhould, by the courfe of his office, keep a bank from whence he is to derive no advantage ? That a man fhould be fubject to demands below, and be in a manner refufed an acquitiance above; that he fhould tranfmit an origimal fin, and inheritance of vexation to his pofterity, without a power of compenfating himfelf in fome way or other, for fo perilous a fituation? We know, that if the pay-mafter thould deny himfelf the advantages of his bank, the public, as things ftand, is not the richer for it by a fingle fhilling. This I thought it neceflary to fay, as to the offenfive magnitude of the profits of this office; that we may proceed in reformation on the principles of reafon, and not on the feelings of envy.

The treafurer of the navy is, mutatis mutandis, in the fame circumftances. Indeed all accountants are. Intead of the prefent mode, which is troublefome to the officer, and unprofitable to the public, 1 propote to fubititute fomething more effectual than rigour, which is the worft exactor in the world. I mean to remove the very temptations to delay; to facilitate the account ; and to transfer this bank, now of private emolument, to the public. The crown will fuffer no wrong at leatt from the pay offices; and its terrors will no longer reign over the families of thofe who hold or have held them. I propole, that thefe offices fhould be no longer banks or treafuries, but mere offices of adninififration.-I propofe, firft, that the prefent paymatter and the treafurer of the navy, thould carry into the exchequer the whole body of the vouchers for what they have paid over to deputy paymafters, to reginental agents, or to any of thofe to whom they have and ought to have paid money. I propofe that thofe vouchers thall be admitted as actual payments in their accounts; and that the perfons to whom the money has been paid, thall then ftand charged in the exchequer in their place. After this procets, they thall be debited or charged for nothing but the money-balance that remains in their hands.

I am confcious, Sir, that if this balance (which they could not expect to be fo feddenly demanded by any ufual procefs of the exchequer) thould now be exacted all at once, not only their ruin, but a ruin of cthers to anextent which I do not like to think of, but which I can well conceive, and which you may well conceive, might be the confequence. I told you, Sir, when I promifed before the holydays to bring in this plan, that I never woukd fuffer any man, or defcription of men, to fuffer from errors that naturally have grown out of the abulive conititution of thofe offices which I propofe to regulate. If I cannot reform with equity, I whil net reform at all.

For the regulation of patt accounts, I hall therefore propofe fuch a mode, as men, temperate and prucient, make ufe of in the management of their private affairs, when their accounts are varicus, perplesed, and of long fanding. I would therefore, after their example, divide the public debes into three forts; goad; bad; and doubtfiul. In looking orer the puthic accounts, I fhould never dream of the bilind mode of the exchequer, which regards things in the abzrad, and knows no diference in the qualicy of its debts, or the circumftances of its debtors. By this means, it fatigues itfelf; it vexes others; it ufen crufhes the poor; it lets efcape the rich; or in a fit of mercy or careleffinfs, declines all means of recovering its juit demands. Content with the eternity of its claims, it enjoys its Epicurean divinity with Epicurean languor. But it is proper that all forts of accounts fhould be clofed fome time or other-by payment; by compofition; or by oblivion. Expedit reipublica ut fit finis litiun. Conftantly taking along with me, that an extreme rigour is fure to arm every thing againf it, and at length to relax into a fupine neglect, I propofe, Sir, that even the beft, foundeft, and the moft recent debts, fhouid be put into inftalments, for the mutual beneht of the accountant and the public.

In proportion, however, as I am tender of the paft, I would be provident of the future. All money that was formerly impretted to the two great pay-offices, I would have imprefted in future to the benk of England. Thete offices fhould, in future, receive no more than cafh fufficient for imall payments. Their other payments ought to be made by drafts on the Bank, expreffing the fervice. A cheque account from both offices, of drafts and receipes, thould be annualiy made up in the exchequer, charging the bank, in account, with the calh-balance, but not demanding the payment until there is an order from the treafury, in confequence of a vote of parliament.

As I did not, Sir, deny to the paymafter the natural profits of the bank that was in his hands, fo neither would I to the bank of England. A fhare of that profit might be derived to the public in various ways. My favourite mode is this; that, in compenfation for the wie of this money, the bank may take upon thembelves, firf, the charge of the 2nint; to which they are already, by their charter, E 4 obliged obliged to bring in a great deal of bullion annually to be coined.

In the next place. I mean that they fhould take upon themflues the charge of remittances to our troops abroad. This is a fpecies of dealing from which, by the fame charter, they are not debarred. One and a quarter per cent. will be faved infantly thereby to the public, on very large fums of money. This will be at once a matter of ceconomy, and a confiderable reduction of influence, by taking away a private contract of an expenfive nature. If the bank, which is a great corporation, and of courfe receives the leatt profits from the money in their cuftody, thould of itfeif refufe, or be perfuaded to refufe, this offer upon thofe terms, I can fpeak with fome confidence, that one at leatt, if not both parts of the condition would be received, and gratefully received, by feveral bankers of eminence. There is no banker who will not be at leaft as good fecurity as any paymafter of the forces, or any treafurer of the navy, that have ever been bankers to the public: as rich at leaft as my lord Chatham, or my lord Holland, or either of the honourable gentlemen, who now hold the offices, were, at the time that they entered into them; or as ever the whole eftablifhment of the minkt has been at any period.

Thele, Sir, are the outlines of the plan I mean to follow, in fupprefing thefe two large fubordinate treafuries. I now come to another fubordinate treafury; I mean, that of the paymafter of the penfions; for which purpofe I re-enter the limits of the civil eftablifhment-I departed from thofe linits in purfuit of a principle : and following the fame game in its doubles, I am brought into thofe limits again. That treafury, and that office, I mean to take away ; and to transfer the payment of every name, mode, and denomination of penfions, to the exchequer. The prefent courfe of ulverfifying the fame object, can anfwer no good purpofe; whatever its ule may be to purpofes of another kind. There are alio other lifts of penfions; and I mean that they fhould all be hereafter paid at one and the fame place. The wholes of that new confolidated lift, I mean to reduce to f. 60,000 a year, which fum I intend it thall ne ver exceed. I think that fum will fully anfwer as a reward to all real merit, and a provifion for all real public charity that is ever like to be placed upon the lift. If any merit of an excraordinary nature fhould emerge, before that reduction is completed, I have left it open for an addrefs of either houfe of parliament to provide for the cafe. To all other demands, it muft be ${ }_{6}$ anfwered, with regret, but with firmnefs, " the " public is pcor."

I do not propofe, as I told you before Chriftmas, to take away any penfion. I know that the public feem to call for a reduction of fuch of them as fhall appear unmerited. As a cenforial act, and punimment of an abufe, might anfiwer fome purpofe. But this can make no part of my plan. I mean to proceed by bill ; and I cannot itop for fuch an enquiry. I know fome gentlemen may blame me. It is with great fubriffion to better judgments, that I recommend it to confideration; that a critical retrofpective examination of the penfion lift, upon the principle of merit, can never ferve for my bafis.-It cannot anfwer, according to my plan, any effectual purpofe of cconomy, or of future permanent reformation. The procefs, in any way, will be entangled and difficult; and it will be infinitely How: There is a danger that if we turn our line of march, now directed towards the grand object, object, int. this more laborious than ufeful detail of operations, we fhall never arrive at our end.

The king, Sir, has been, by the conftitution, appointed fole judge of the merit for which a penfion is to be given. We have a right, undoubtedly, to canvafs this, as we have to canvafs every act of government. But there is a material difference between an office to be reformed, and a penfion taken away for demerit. In the former cafe, no charge is implied againtt the holder; in the latter, his character is flurred, as well as his lawful emolument affected. The former procefs is againft the thing; the fecond againtt the perfon. The penfioner cerainly, if he pleafes, has a right to ftand on his own defence; to plead his poffelfion; and to bottom his title in the competency of the crown to give him what he holds. Poffeffed, and on the defenfive as he is, he will not be obligedto prove his fpecial merit, in order to juftify the act of legal difcretion, now turned into his property, according to his tenure. The very act, he will contend, is a legal prefumption, and an implication of his merit. If this be fo (from the natural-force of all legal prefumption) he would put us to the difficuit proof, that he has no merit at all. But other queftions would arife in the courfe of fuch an enquiry ; that is, queftions of the merit when weighed againft the proportion of the reward; then the difficulty will be much greater.

The difficulty will not, Sir, I am atraid, be much lef's, if we paif to the perfon really guilty, in the queltion of an unmertited penfion; the minifter himfelf. I admit, that when called to account for the execution of a trut, he might fairly be obliged to prove the affirmative; and to ftate the merit for whicis the penfon is given; though on the penfioner himfelf, fuch a procefs would be hard. If in this examination we proceed methodically, and fo as to avoid all fufpicion of partiality and prejudice, we mult take the penfions in order of time, or merely alphabetically. The very firtt penfion to which we come, in either of thele ways, may appear the moft grofsly unmerited of any. But the minifter may very poffibly fhew, that he knows nothing of the putting on this penfion - that it was prior in time to his adminiftration-that the miniiter, who laid it on, is dead; and then we are thrown back upon the penfioner himfelf, and plunged into all o'r former difficulties. Abufes, and grofs ones, I doube not, would appear ; and to the correction of which I would readily give my hand; but, when I confider that penfions have not generally been affected by the revolutions of minittry; as I know not where fuch enguries would ftop; and as an abfence of merit is a negative and loote thing, one might be led to derange the order of families, founded on the probable continuance of their kind of income. I might hurt children; I might injure creditors. I really think it the more prodent courfe, not to follow the letter of the petitions. If we fix: this mode of enquiry as a bafis, we thall, I fear, end, as parliament has often ended under fimilar circumftances. There will be great delay; much confufion; much inequality in our proceedings. But what preffes me molt of all is this; that though we frouk trike off all the unmerited penfions, while the power of the crown remains unlimited, the very fame undeferving perfons might afterwards return to the very fame lift: or if they did not, other perfons, meriting as little as they do, might be put upon it to an undefinable amount. This I think is the pinch of the grievance.

For thefe reafons, Sir, I am obliged to wave this mode of proceeding as any part of my plan. In a plan of reformation, it would be one of my maxims, maxims, that when I know of an eftabiihment which may be fubfervient to ufeful purpofes, and which at the fame time, from its diferetionary nature, is liable to a very great perverfion from thofe purpofes, I would limit the quantity of the power that might be fo abufed. For l am fure, that in all fuch cafes, the rewards of merit will have very narrow bounds; and that partial or corrupt favour will be infinite. This principle is not arbitrary; but the limitation of the fipecific quantity muft be fo in fome meature. I therefore ftate $£ .60,000$; leaving it open to the houfe to enlarge or contract the fum as they fhall fee, on examination, that the difcretion I ule is fanty or liberal. The whole amount of the penfions of all denominations, which have been laid before us, amount, for a period of feven years, to confiderably more than $f_{0} .100,000$ a year. To what the other lifts amount, I know nor. That will be feen hereafter. But from thofe that do appear, a faving will accrue to the public, at one time or other, of $f .40,000$ a year, and we had better in my opinion to let it fall in naturally, than to tear it cructe and unripe from the ftalk. **

There is a great deal of uneafinefs among the people, upon an article which I mult clafs under the head of penfions. I mean the great patent offices in the exchequer. They are in reality and fubfance no other than penfions, and in no other light fhall I confider them. They are finecures.

[ 6i ]

They are always executed by deputy. The duty of the principal is as nothing. They differ however from the penfions on the lift, in fome particulars. They are held for life. I think with the public, that the profits of thofe places are grown enormous; the magnitude of thofe profits, and the nature of them, both call for reformation. The nature of their profits which grow out of the public diftrefs, is itfelf invidious and grievous. But I fear that reform cannot be immediate. I find myfelf under a reftriction. Thefe places, and others of the fame kind, which are held for life, have been confidered as property. They have been given as a provifion for children; they have been the fubject of family fettlements; they have been the fecurity of creditors. What the law refpeets'fhall be facred to me. If the barriers of law fhould be broken down, upon ideas of convenience, even of public convenience, we fhall have nu longer any thing certain among us. If the difcretion of power is once let loofe upon property, we can be at no lols to determine whole power, and what diferetion it is that will prevail at laft. It would be wife to attend upon the order of things; and not toattempt to outrun the flow, but fmooth and even courfe of nature. Thereareoccafions, I admit, of public neceflity, fo vaft, fo clear, fo evident, that they fuperfede all haws. Law being only made for the benefit of the community cannot in any one of its parts, refilt a demand which may comprehend the total of the public intereft. To be fure, no law can fet ittelf up againft the caule and reaton of all law. But fuch a cale very rarely happens; and this moft certainly is not fuch a cafe. The mere time of the reform is by no means worth the facrifice of a principle of law. Individuals pafs like fhadows; but the commonwealth is fixed and frable. The difference therefore of to-day and to-morrow, which to private people is immenfe, to the flate is nothing. At any rate it is better, if poffible, to reconcile our œconomy with our laws, than to fet them at variance; a quarrel which in the end mutt be deftructive to both.

My idea, therefore, is to reduce thofe offices to fixed falaries, as the prefent lives and reverfions fhall fucceflively fall. I mean, that the office of the great auditor (the auditor of the receipt) flall be reduced to $£ .3,000$ a year ; and the wuditors of the impreft and the reft of the principai officers, to fixed appointments of $£ . \mathrm{I} .500$ a year each. It will not be difficult to calculate the value of this fall of lives to the public, when we thall have obtained a juft account of the prefent income of thofe places; and we fhall obtain that account with great facility, if the prefent poffeffors are not alarmed with any apprehenfion of danger to their freehold office.
I know too, that it will be demanded of me, how it comes, that fince I admit thefe offices to be no better than penfions, I chofe, after the principle of law had been fatisfied, to retain them at all ? To this, Sir, I anfwer, that conceiving it to be a fundamental part of the conftitution of this country, and of the realon of itate in every country, that there muft be means of rewarding public fervice, thofe means will be inccmplete, and indeed wholly infufficient for that purpofe, if there fhould be no further reward for that fervice, than the daily wages it receives during the pleafure of the crown.

Whoever ferioufly confiders the excellent argument of Lord Somers, in the banker's cafe, will fee he bottoms himfelf upon the very fane maxim which I do; and one of his principal grounds of doctrine for the alienability of the comain in England*

* Before the flatute of Queon isnae, which limited the alienation of land.

contrary to the maxim of the law in France, be lays in the conftitutional policy, of furnifhing a permanent reward to public fervice; of making that reward the origin of families; and the foundation of wealth as well as of honours. It is indeed the only genuine unadulterated origin of nobility. It is a great principle in government; a principle at the very foundation of the whole ftructure. The other judges who held the fame doctrine, went beyond Lord Somers with regard to the remedy, which they thought was given by law againtt the crown, upon the grant of penfions. Indeed no man knows, when he cuts off the incitements to a virtuous ambition, and the juft rewards of public fervice, what infinite mifchief he may do his country, through all generations. Such faving to the public may prove the worft mode of robbing it. The crown, which has in its hands the truft of the daily pay for national fervice, ought to have in its hands alfo the means for the repofe of public labour, and the fixed fettlement of acknowledged merit. There is a time, when the weather-beaten veflels of the ftate, ought to come into harhour. They muft at length have a retreat from the malice of rivals, from the perfidy of political friends, and the inconftancy of the people. Many of the perfons, who in all times have filled the great offices of flate, have been younger brothers, who had originally little, if any fortune. Thefe offices do not furnifin the means of amailing wealth. There ought to be fome power in the crown of granting penfions out of the reach of its own caprices. An intail of dependence is a bad reward of merit.

I would therefore leave to the crown the pofibility of conferring fome favours, which, whitit they are received as a reward, do not operate as corruption. When men receive obligations from the crown through the pious hands of fathers; or of connections as venerable as the paternal, the dependences which arife from thence, are the obligations of gratitude, and not the fetters of fervility. Such ties originate in virtue, and they promote it. They continue men in thofe habitudes of friendfhip, thofe political connections, and thofe political principles in which they began life. They are antidotes againft a corrupt levity, inftead of caufes of it. What an unfeemly fectacle would it afford, what a difgrace would it be to the commonwealth that fuffered fuch things, to fee the hopeful fon of a meritorious minifter begging his bread at the door of that treafury, from whence his father difpenfed the œconomy of an empire, and promoted the happinefs and glory of his country? Why fhould he be obliged to proftrate his honour, and to fubmit his principles at the levee of fome proud favourite, fhouldered and thruft afide by every impudent pretender, on the very fpot where a few days before he faw himfelf adored ?-obliged to cringe to the author of the calamities of his houfe, and to kifs the hands that are red with his farher's blood?-No, Sir, -Thefe things are unfit-They are intolerable.

Sir, I fhall be afked, why I do not chufe to deftroy thofe offices which are penfions, and appoint penfions under the direct title in their ftead? I allow, that in fome cales it leads to abufe; to have things appointed for one purpofe, and applied to another. I have no great objection to fuch a change: but I do not think it quite prudent for me to propofe it. If I fhould take away the prefent eftablifhment, the burthen of proof refts upon me, that fo many penfions, and no more, and to fuch an amount each, and no more, are neceffary for the public fervice. This is what I can never prove; for it is a thing incapable of definition. I do not like to take away an object that I think anfwers my purpofe, in hopes of getting it back again in a better fhape. People will bear an old eftablifhment when its excefs is corrected, who will revols at a new one. I do not think thefe office-penfions to be more in number than fufficient : but on that point the Houfe will exercife its difcretion. As to abufe, I am convinced, that very few truts in the ordinary courfe of adminiftration, have admitted lefs abufe than this. Efficient minifters have been their own paymafters. It is true. But their very partiality has operated as a kind of juftice; and ftill it was fervice that was paid. When we look over this exchequer lift, we find it filled with the defcendants of the Walpoles, of the Pelhanns, of the Townhhends; names to whom this country owes its liberties, and to whom his majefty owes his crown. It was in one of thefe lines, that the immenfe and envied employment he now holds, came to a certain duke *, who is now probably fitting quietly at a very good dinner directly under us; and acting bigh life below ftairs, whilt we, his matters, are filling our mouths with unfubftantial founds, and talking of hungry œconony over his head. But he is the elder branch of an ancient and decayed houfe, joined to, and repaired by the reward of fervices done by another. I refpect the original title, and the firt purchafe of merited wealth and honour through all its defcents, through all its transfers, and all its affignments. May fuch fountains never be dried up. May they ever flow with their original purity, and refrefh and fructify the common wealth, for ages !

[ 66 ]

Sir, I think myfelf bound to give you my reafons as clearly, and as fully, for ftopping in the courfe of reformation, as for procceding in it. My limits are the rules of law; the rules of policy ; and the fervice of the fate. This is the reaton why I am not able to intermeddle with another article, which feems to be a fpecific object in feveral of the petitions; I mean the reduction of exorbitant emoluments to efficient offices. If I knew of any real efficient office, which did pofiels exorbitant entoluments, I thould be extremely defirous of reducing them. Others may know of them. I do not. I am not poffeffed of an exact common meafure between real fervice and its reward. I am very fure, that ftates do fometimes receive fervices, which is hardly in their power to reward according to their worth. If I were to give my judgment, with regard to this country, I do not think the great efficient offices of the ftate to be overpaid. The fervice of the public is a thing which cannot be put to auction, and ftruck down to thole who will agree to execute it the cheapeft. When the proportion betwcen reward and fervice, is our object, we muft always confider of what nature the lervice is, and what fort of men they are that muft perform it. What is jult payment for one lind of labour, and full encouragement for one kind of talents, is fraud and difcouragement to others. Many of the great offices have much duty to do, and much expence of reprefentation to maintain. A fecretary of ftate, for inftance, muft not appear fordid in the eyes of the minifters of other nations; neithes ought our minifters abroad to appear contemptible in the courts waere they refide. In all offices of duty, there is, almoit neceffarily, a great neglect of all domeftic affairs. A perfon in high office can rarely take a view of his family-houle.

If he fees that the fate takes no detriment, the ftate muft fee that his affairs fhould take as little.

I will evengo fo far as to affirm, that if men were willing to ferve in fuch fituations without falary, they ought not to be permitted to do it. Ordinary fervice mult be fecured by the motives to ordinary integrity. I do not heitate to fay, that, that fatic which lays its foundation in rare and heroic vir. tues, will be fure to have its fuperfructure in the bafeft profligacy and corruption. An honcurable and fair prolit is the beft fecurity againft avarice and rapacity; as in all things elfe, a lawful and regulated enjoyment is the befl fecurity againf: debauchery and excefs. For as wealth is power, to all power will infallibly draw wealth to itfelf by fome means or other: and when men are left no way of afcertaining their profits but by their means of obtaining themr, thofe means will be encreafed to infinity. This is true in all the parts of adminiftration, as well as in the whole. If any individual were to decline his appointments, it might give an unfair advantage to oftentatious ambition over unpretending fervice; it might breed invidious comparions; it might tend to deftroy whatever little unity and agreement may be found among minifters. And after all, when an ambitious man had run down his competitors by a fallacious fhew of difintereftednefs, and fixed himfelf in power by that means, what fecurity is there that he would not change his courfe, and claim as an indemnity ten times more than he has given up?

This rule, like evcry other, may admit its cxceptions. When a great man has fome one great object in view to be atchieved ia a given time, is may be abfolutely neceffary for him to walk out of all the common roads, and if his fortune permits it, to hold himfelf out as a fplendid example. I am told, that fomething of this kind is now doing in a country near us. But this is for a fhort race; the training for a heat or two, and not the proper preparation for the regular ftages of a methodical journey. I am fpeaking of eftablifhments, and not of men.

It may be expected, Sir, that when I am giving my reafons why I limit myfelf in the reduction of employments, or of their profits, I fhould fay fomething of thofe which feem of eminent inutility in the ftate; I nean the number of officers who by their places are attendant on the perfon of the king. Confidering the commonwealth merely as fuch, and confidering thofe officers only as relative to the direct purpofes of the ftate, I admit that they are of no ufe at all. But there are many things in the conftitution of eftablifhments, which appear of little value on the firft view, which in a fecondary and oblique manner, produce very material advantages. It was on full confideration that I determined not to leffen any of the offices of honour about the crown, in their number or their emoluments. Thefe emoluments, except in one or two cafes, do not much more than anfwer the charge of attendance. Men of condition naturally love to be about a court; and women of condition love it much more. But there is in all regular attendance, fo much of conftraint, that if it were a mere charge, without any compenfation, you would foon have the court deferted by all the nobility of the kingdom.

Sir, the moft ferious mifchiefs would follow from fuch a defertion. Kings are naturally lovers of low company. They are fo elevated above all the reft of mankind, that they muft look upon all their fubjects as on a level. They are rather apt to hate than to love their nobility, on account of the occafional refiftance to their will, which win be made by their virtue, their petulance, or thei: pride. It muft indeed be admitted, that many of the nobility are as perfectly willing to act the part of flatterers, tale-bearers, parafites, pimps, and buffoons, as any of the loweft and vileft of mankind can poffibly be. But they are not properly qualified for this object of their ambition. The want of a regular education, and early habits, and fome lurking remains of their dignity, will never permit them to become a match for an Italian eunuch, a mountebank, a fidler, a player, or any regular practitioner of that tribe. The Roman emperors almoft from the beginning, threw themfelves into fuch hands; and the mifchief increased every day till its decline, and its final ruin. It is therefore of very great importance (provided the thing is not overdone) to contrive fuch an eftablifhment as muft, almoft whether a prince will or not, bring into daily and hourly offices about his perfon, a great number of his firft nobility ; and it is rather an ufeful prejudice that gives them a pride in fuch a fervitude. Though they are not much the better for a court, a court will be much the better for them. I have therefore not attempted to reform any of the offices of honour about the king's perfon.

There are, indeed, two offices in his ftables which are finecures. By the change of manners, and indeed by the nature of the thing, they muft be fo; I mean the feveral keepers of buck-hounds, ftag-hounds, fox-hounds, and harriers. They anfiver no purpofe of utility or of fplendor. Thefe I propofe to abolifh. It is not proper that great noblemen fhould be keepers of dogs, though they were the king's dogs. In every part of my fcheme, I have endeavoured that no primary, and that even no fecondary fervice of the flate, hould fuffer by its frugality. I mean to touch no offices but fuch as I am perfectly fure, are either of no ufe at all, or not of any ufe in the leaft affignable proportion to the burthen with which they load the revenues of the kingdom, and to the influence with which they opprefs the freedom of parliamentary deliberation; for which reafon there are but two offices which are properly ftate offices, that I have a defire to reform.

The firt of them is the new office of ibird fecretary of fate, which is commonly called fecretary of ftate for the colonies.

We know that all the correfpondence of the colonies had been, until within a few years, carried on by the fouthern fecretary of ftate; and that this department has not been fhunned upon account of the weight of its duties; but on the contrary, much fought, on account of its patronage. Indeed he muft be poorly acquainted with the hitory of office, who does not know how very lightly the American functions have always leaned on the fhoulders of the minifterial Atlas, who has upheld that fide of the fphere. Undoubtedly, great temper and judgment was requifite in the management of the colony politics; but the official detail was a trifle. Since the new appointment, a train of unfortunate accidents has brought before us almoft the whole correfpondence of this favourite fecretary's office, fince the firft day of its eftablifhment. I will fay nothing of its aulpicious foundation; of the quality of its correfpondence; or of the effects that have enfued from it. 1 fpeak merely of its quantity; which we know would have been little or no addition to the irouble of whatever office had its hands the fulleft. But what has been the real condition of the old office of fecretary of ftate? Have their velvet bags, and their red boxes, been fo full, that nothing more could ponibly be crammed into them?

A coreefpondence of a curious nature has been lately publifhed $\dagger$. In that correfpondence, Sir, we find, the opinion of a noble perfon, who is thought to be the grand manuffacturer of adminiftrations; and therefore the bet judge of the quality of his work. He was of opinion, that there was but one man of diligence and induftry in the whole adminiftration-it was the late earl of Suffolk. The noble lord lamented very juftly, that this ftatefman, of fo much mental vigour, was almoft wholly difabled. from the exertion of it, by his bodily infirmities. Lord Suffolk, dead to the ftate, long before he was dead to nature, at laft paid his tribute to the common treafury to which we muft all be taxed. But fo little want was found even of his intentional indultry, that the office, vacant in reality to its duties long before, continued vacant even in nomination and appointment for a year after his death. The whole of the laborious and arduous correfpondence of this empire, refted folely upon the activity and energy of Lord Weymouth.

It is therefore demonftrable, fince one diligent man was fully equal to the duties of the two offices, that two diligent men will be equal to the duty of three. The bufinefs of the new office which I hall propofe to you to fupprefs, is by no means too much to be returned to either of the fecretaries: which remain. If this duft in the balance fhould be thought too heavy, it may be divided between them both; North America (whether free or reduced) to the northern fecretary, the Weft Indies to the fouthern. It is not neceffary that I hould: fay more upon the inutility of this office. It is burning day light. But before I have done, I hall juft remark, that the hiftory of this office is too recent to fuffer us to forget, that it was made for the mere convenience of the arrangements of political intrigue, and not for the fervice of the itate; that it was made, in order to give a lour to an exorbitant increafe of the civil lift; and in the fame act to bring a new acceffion to the loaded compoft heap of corrupt influence.

There is, Sir, another office, which was not long fince, clofely conneefed with this of the American fecretary; but has been lately feparated from it for the very fane purpofe for which it had been conjoined; I mean the fole purpofe of all the feparations and all conjunctions that have been lately made - a job. - I fpeak, Sir, of the board of trade and plantations. This board is a fort of temperate bed of influence; a fort of gently ripening hot-houfe, where eight members of Parliament receive falaries of a thoufand a year, for a certain given time, in order to mature at a proper feafon, a claim to two thoufand, granted for doing lefs, and on the credit of having toiled fo long in that inferior laborious department.

I have known that board, off and on, for a great number of years. Both of its pretended objects have been much the objects of my ftudy, if I have a right to call ?ny purfuits of mine by fo refpectable a name. I can affure the houre, and I hope they will not think that I rifk my little credit lightly, that, without meaning to convey the leaft reflection upon any one of its members paft or prefent,-it is a board which, if not mifchievous, is of no ufe at all.

You will be convinced, Sir, that I am not miftaken, if you reflect how generally it is true, that commerce, the principal object of that office, hourifhes moft when it is left to itfelf. Intereft, the great guide of commerce, is not a blind one. It is very well able to find its own way; and its neceffities are its beft laws. But if it were poffible, in the nature of things, that the young fhould direct the old, and the inexperienced inftruct the knowing; if a board in the the ftate was the beft tutor for the counting: houfe; if the defk ought to read lectures to the anvil, and the pen to ufurp the place of the Shuttle-yet in any matter of regulation, we know that board mult act with as little authority as fkill. The prerogative of the crown is utterly inadequate to its object; becaufe all regulations are, in their nature, reftrictive of fome liberty. In the reign indeed, of Cbarles the firft, the council, or committees of council, were never a moment unoccupied, with affairs of trade. But even where they had no ill intention (which was fometimes the cafe) trade and manufacture fuffered infinitely from their injudicious tampering. But fince that period, whenever regulation is wanting (for I do not derry, that fonetimes it may be wanting) parliament conftantly fits; and parliament alone is competent to fuch regulation. We want no inftruction from boards of trade, or from any other board; and God forbid we fhould give the leaft attention to their reports. Parliamentary enquiry is the only mode of obtaining parliamentary information. There is more real knowledge to be obtained, by attending the detail of bufinefs in the committees above ftairs, than ever did come, or ever will come from any board in this kingdom, or from all of them together. An affid ous member of parliament will not be the worfe inftructed there, for not being paid a thoufand a year for learning his leffon. And now that I fpeak of the committees above ftairs, I muft fay, that having till lately attended them a good deal, I have obferved that no defcription of members give fo. little attendance, either to communicate, or to obtain inftruction upon matters of commerce, as the honourable nembers of the grave poard of trade. I really do not recollect, that I have ever feen one of them in that fort of bufinefs. Poffibly, fome members may have better memories; and may call to mind fome job that may have accidentally brought one or other of them, at one time or other, to attend a matter of commerce.

This board, Sir, has had both its original formation, and its regeneration, in a job. In a job it was conceived, and in a job its mother brought it forth. It made one among thofe fhewy and fpecious impofitions, which one of the experi-ment-making adminiftrations of Cbarles the fecond held out to delude the people, and to be fubftituted in the place of the real fervice which they might expect from a parlianent annually fitting. It was intended alfo to corrupt that body whenever it fhould be permitted to fit. It was projected in the year 1668 , and it continued in a tottering and rickety childhood for about three or four years, for it died in the year 1673 , a babe of as little hopes as ever fwelled the bills of mortality in the article of convulfed or overlaid children, who have hardly flepped over the threfhold of life.

It was buried with little ceremony; and never more thought of, until the reign of King William, when in the ftrange viciffitude of neglect and vigour, of good and ill fuccefs that attended his wars, in the year 1695, the trade was diftreffed beyond all example of former fufferings, by the piracies of the French cruifers. This fuffering incenfed, and, as it fhould feem, very juftly incenfed, the houfe of commons. In this ferment they ftruck, not only at the adminiftration, but at the very conftitution of the executive government. They attempted to form in parliament a board for the protection of trade ; which, as they planned it, was to draw to itfelf a great part, if not the whole, of the functions and powers, both of the admiralty, and of the treafury; and thus, by a parliamentary delegation of office and officers, they threatened ablolutely to feparate thefe departments from the whole fyltem of the executive government, and of courle to veft the moft leading and effential of its attributes in this board. As the executive government was in a manner convicted of a dereliction of its functions, it was: with infinite difficulty, that this blow was warded off in that feffion. There was a threat to renew the fame attempt in the next. To prevent the effect of this manocuvre, the court oppofed another manœuvre to it; and in the year 1696 , called into life this board of trade, which had flept fince 1673 .

This, in a few words, is the hiftory of the rege-: neration of the board of trade. It has perfectly antfwered its purpofes. It was intended to quiet the minds of the people, and to compofe the ferment: that then was itrongly working in parliament. The courtiers were too happy to be able to fubftitute a board, which they knew would be ufelefs; in the place of one that they feared would be dangerous. Thus the board of trade was reproduced in a job; and perhaps it is the only inftance of a public body, which has never degenerated; but to this hour preferves all the health and vigour of its primitive inftitution.

This board of trade and plantations has not been of any ufe to the colonies, as colonies; fo little of ufe, that the flourifhing fertleinents of New England, of Virginia, and of Maryland, and all our wealthy colonies in the Weit Indies, were of a date prior to the firft board of Charles the fecond. Penfylvania and Carolina were fettled during its dark quarter, in the interval between the extimetion of the firt, and the formation of the the fecond board. Two colonies alone owe their origin to that board. Georgia, which, till lately, has made a very flow progrefs; and never did make any progrefs at all, until it had wholly got rid of all the regulations which the board of trade had moulded into its original conftitution. That colony has coft the nation very great fums of money; whereas the colonies which have had the fortune of not being godfathered by the board of trade, never coft the nation a fhilling, except what has been fo properly fpent in lofing them. But the colony of Georgia, weak as it was, carried with it to the laft hour, and carries, even in its prefent dead pallid vifage, the perfect refemblance of its parents. It always had, and it now has, an eftabilifment paid by the public of England, for the fake of the influence of the crown; that colony having never been able or willing to take upon itfelf the expence of its proper government, or its own appropriated jobs.

The province of Nova Scotia was the youngeft and the favourite child of the board. Good God! What fums the nurfing of that ill-thriven, hard-vifaged, and ill-favoured brat, has coft to this wittol nation? Sir, this colony has ftood us in a fum of not lefs than feven hundred thoufand pounds. To this day it has made no repayment -It does not even fupport thofe offices of expence, which are mifcalled its government; the whole of that job ftill lies upon the patient, callous fhoulders of the people of England.

Sir, I am going to fate a fact to you, that will ferve to fet in full funithine the real value of formality and official fuperintendance. There was in the province of Nova Scotia, one little negiected corner; the country of the neutral French; which having the good fortune to efcape the fortering care both of France and England, and to have been fhut out from the protection and regu:lation of councils of commerce, and of boards of trade, did, in filence, without notice, and without affiftance, increafe to a confiderable degree. But it feems our nation had more fkill and ability in deftroying, than in fettling a colony. In the laft war we did, in my opinion, moft inhumanly, and upon pretences that in the eye of an honeft man are not worth a farthing, root out this poor innocent deferving people, whom our utter inability to govern, or to reconcile, gave us no fort of right to extirpate. Whatever the merits of that extirpation might have been, it was on the footteps of a neglected people, it was on the fund of unconftrained poverty, it was on the acquifitions of unregulated induftry, that any thing which deferves the name of a colony in that province, has been formed. It has been formed by overflowings from the exuberant population of Now England, and by emigration, from other parts of Nova Scotia of fugitives from the protection of the board of trade.

But if all of thefe things were not more than fufficient to prove to you the inutility of that expenfive eftablifhment, I would defire you to recollect, Sir, that thofe who may be very ready to defend it, are very cautious how they employ it; cautious how they employ it even in appearance and pretence. They are afraid they hould lofe the benefit of its influence in parliament, if they feemed to keep it up for any other purpofe. If ever there were commercial points of great weight, and moft clokely connected with our dependences, they are thofe which have been agitated and decided in parliament fince I came into it. Which of the innumerable regulations fince made had their origin or their improvement in the board of trade? Did any of the feveral Eaft India bills which have been fucceffively produced fince 1767, uriginate there? Did any one dream of referring them, or any part of them thither? Was any body fo ridiculous as even to think of it? If ever there was an occafion on which the board was fit to be confulted, it was with regard to the acts, that were preludes to the American war, or attendant on its commencement : thofe acts were full of commercial regulations, fuch as they were; -the intercourfe bill; the prohibitory bill; the fifhery bill? If the board was not concerned in fuch things, in what particular was it thought fit that it fhould be concerned? In the courfe of all thefe bills through the houfe, 1 obferved the members of that board to be remarkably cautious of intermeddling. They underfood decorum better; they know that matters of trade and plantations are no bufinefs of theirs.

There were two very recent occafions, on which, if the idea of any ufe for the board had not been extinguifhed by prefcription, appeared loudly to call for their interference.
When commiffioners were fent to pay his majefty's and our dutiful refpects to the congrefs of the United States, a part of their powers under the commiffion were, it feems, of a commercial nature. They were authorized in the moft ample and undefined manner, to form a commercial treaty with America on the fpot. This was no trivial object. As the formation of fuch a treaty would neceffarily have been no lefs than the breaking up of our whole commercial fyttem, and the giving it an entire new form; one would imagine, that the board of trade would have far day and night, to model propofitions, which, on our fide, might ferve as a bafis to that treaty. No fuch thing. Their learned leifure was not in the leaft interrupted, though one of the members of the board was a commiffioner, and might, in mere compliment to his office, have been fuppofed to make a fhew of deliberation on the fubject. But he knew, that his colleagues would have thought he laughed in their taces, had he attempted to bring any thing the moft diftantly relating to commerce or colonies before them. A noble perfon, engaged in the fame commiffion, and fent to learn his commercial rudiments in New York, (then under the operation of an act for the univerfal prohibition of trade) was foon after put at the head of that board. This contempt from the prefent minifters of all the pretended functions of that board, and their manner of breathing into its very foul, of infpiring it with its animating and preflding primciple, puts an end to all difpute concerning their opinion of the clay it was made of. But I will give them heaped meafure.

It was but the other day, that the noble lo d in the blue ribbon carried up to the ho if of peers, two acts, altering, I think much for the better, but altering, in a great degree, our whole commercial fyftem. Thefe acts, I mean, for giving a free trade to Ireland in woollens and in all things elfe, with independent nations, and giving them an equal trade to our own colonies. Here too the novelty of this great, but arduous and critical improvement of lyftem, would make you conceive that the anxious folicitude of the noble lord in the blue ribbon, would have wholly deltroyed the plan of fummer recreation of that board, by references to examine, compare, and digett matters for parliameat-You would imagine, that lrifh commiffioners of cuftoms and Lingifh commifioners of cuttoms, and commiffoners of excie, that merchants and manufactureas of every denamination, had daily crowded their their outer rooms. Nil borum. The perpetual virtual adjournment, and the unbroken fitting vacation of that board, was no more difturbed by the Irifh than by the plantation commerce, or any other commerce. The fame matter made a large part of the bufinefs which occupied the houfe for two feffions before; and as our minifters were not then mellowed by the mild, emollient, and engaging blandifhments of our dear fifter, into all the tendernefs of unqualified furrender, the bounds and limits of a reftrained benefit naturally required much detailed management and pofitive regulation. But neither the qualified propofitions which were received, nor thofe other qualified propofitions which were rejected by minifters, were the leaft concern of theirs, or were they ever thought of in the bufinefs.

It is therefore, Sir, on the opinion of parliament, on the opinion of the minifters, and even on their awn opinion of their inutility, that I thall propofe to you to fupprefs the board of trade and plantations; and to recommit all its bufinefs to the council from whence it was very improvidently taken; and which bufinefs (whatever it might be) was much better done and without any expence; and indeed where in effect it may all come at laft. Almoft all that deferves the name of bufinefs there, is the reference of the plantation acts, to the opinion of gentlemen of the law. But all this may be done, as the Irifh bufinefs of the fame nature has always been done, by the council, and with a reference to the attorney and folicitor general.

There are fome regulations in the houfehold, reIative to the officers of the yeomen of the guards, and the officers and band of gentlemen penfioners, which I Aall likewife fubmit to your confideration, confideration, for the purpofe of regulating eftas blifhments, which at prefent are much abufed.

[. 8 r ]

I have now finifhed all, that for the prefent I fhall trouble you with on the plan of reduction. I mean next to propofe to you the plan of arrangement, by which I mean to appropriate and fix the civil lift money to its feveral fervices according to their nature ; for I am thoroughly fenfible, that if a difcretion, wholly arbitrary, can be exercifed over the civil lift revenue, although the moft effectual methods may be taken to prevent the inferior departments from exceeding their bounds, the plan of reformation will ftill be left very imperfect. It will not, in my opinion, be fafe to permit an. entirely arbitrary difcretion even in the firft lord of the treafury himfelf: It will not be fafe to leave with him a power of diverting the public money from its proper objects, of paying it in an irregular courfe, or of inverting perhaps the order of time, dictated by the proportion of value, which ought to regulate his application of payment to fervice.

I am fenfible too, that the very operation of a plan of œconomy which tends to exonerate the civil lift of expenfive eftablifhments, may in fome fort defeat the capital end we have in view, the independence of parliament; and that in removing the public and oftenfible means of influence, we may increafe the fund of private corruption. I have thought of fome methods to prevent an abufe of furplus cafh under difcretionary application; I mean the heads of fecret fervice, Special Service, various payments, and the like; which, I hope, will anfwer, and which in due time I fhail lay before you. Where I am unable to limit the quantity of the fums to be applied, by reafon of the uncertain quantity of the fervice, I endeavour to confine it to its line; to fecure an indefinite application to the definite fervice to which it belongs; not, to ftop the progrefs of expence in its line, but to confine it to that line in which it profeffes to move.

But that part of my plan, Sir, upon which I principally reft, that, on which I rely for the purpofe of binding up, and fecuring the whole, is to eftablifh a fixed and invariable order in all its payments, which it fhall not be permitted to the firt lord of the treafury, upon any pretence whatfoever, to depart from. I therefore divide the civil lift payments into nine claffes, putting each clafs forward according to the importance or juftice of the demand, and to the inability of the perfons entitled to enforce their pretenfions; that is, to put thofe firft who have the moft efficient offices, or claim the jufteft debts; and, at the fame time, from the character of that defcription of men, from the retirednefs, or the remotenefs of their fituation, or from their want of weight and power to enforce their pretenfions, or from their being entirely fubject to the power of a minifter, without any reciprocal power of aweing him, ought to be the moft confidered, and are the moft likely to be neglected; all thefe I place in the higheft claffes: I place in the loweft thofe whofe functions are of the leaft importance, but whofe perfons or rank are often of the greateft power and influence.

In the firft clafs I place the judges, as of the firt importance. It is the public juftice that holds the community together; the eafe, therefore, and independence of the judges, ought to fuperfede all other confiderations, and they ought to be the very laft to feel the neceffities of the ftate, or to be obliged either to court or bully a minifter for their right: They ought to be as weak folicitors on their owen demands, as itrenuous affertors of the the rights and liberties of others. The judges are, or ought to be, of a referved and retired character, and wholly unconnected with the political world.

In the fecond clafs I place the foreign minifters. The judges are the links of our connections with one another; the foreign minifters are the links of our connection with other nations. They are not upon the fpot to demand payment, and are therefore the moft likely to be, as in fact they have fometimes been, entirely neglected, to the great difgrace, and perhaps the great detriment of the nation.

In the third clafs I would bring all the tradefmen who fupply the crown by contract, or otherwife.

In the fourth clafs I place all the domeftic fervants of the king, and all perfons in efficient offices, whofe falaries do not exceed two hundred pounds a year.

In the fifth, upon account of honour, whichought to give place to nothing but charity and rigid juftice, I would place the penfions and allowances of his majefty's royal family, comprehending of courfe the queen, together with the ftated allowance of the privy purfe.

In the fixth clafs, I place theie efficient offices of duty, whofe falaries may exceed the fam of two hundred pounds a year.

In the feventh clafs, that mixed mafs, the whole penfion lift.

In the eighth, the offices of honour about the king.

In the ninth and the laft of all, the falaries and penfions of the firft lord of the treafury himfelf, the chancellor of the exchequer, and the other commiffioners of the treafury.

If by any pofible mifinanagement of that part G 2 of the revenue which is left at difcretion, or by any other mode of prodigality, cafh fhould be deficient for the payment of the loweft claffes, I propofe, that the amount of thofe falaries where the deficiency may happen to fall, fhall not be carried as debt, to the account of the fucceeding year, but that it fhall be entirely lapfed, funk, and loft; fo that government will be enabled to ftart in the race of every new year, wholly unloaded, frefh in wind and in vigour. Hereafter, no civil lift debt can ever come upon the public. And thofe who do not confider this as faving, becaufe it is not a certain fum, do not ground their calculations of the future on their experience of the paft.

I know of no mode of preferving the effectual execution of any duty, but to make it the direct intereft of the executive officer that it fhall be faithfully performed. Affuming, then, that the prefent vaft allowance to the civil lift is perfectly adequate to all its purpofes, if there fhould be any failure, it muft be from the mifmanagement or neglect of the firft commiffioner of the treafury; fince, upon the propofed plan, there can be no expence of any confequence, which he inot himfelf previounly to authorize and finally to control. It is therefore juft, as well as politic, that the lofs fhould attach upon the delinquency.

If the failure from the delinquency fhould be very confiderable, it will fall on the clafs directly above the firft lord of the treafury, as well as upon himfelf and his board. It will fall, as it ought to fall, upon offices of no primary importance in the ftate ; but then it will fall upon perfons, whom it will be a matter of no night importance for a minifter to provoke-it will fall upon perfons of the firft rank and confequence in the kingdom ; upon thofe who are neareft to the king, and frequently frequently have a more interior credit with him than the minifter himfelf. It will fall upon mafters of the horfe, upon lord chamberlains, upon lord ftewards, upon grooms of the ftole, and lords of the bedchamber. The houfhold troops form an army, who will be ready to mutiny for want of pay, and whole mutiny will be really dreadful to a commander in chief. A rebellion of the thirteen lords of the bedchamber would be far more terrible to a minifter, and would probably affect his power more to the quick, than a revolt of thirteen colonies. What an uproar fuch an event would create at court! What petitions, and committees, and afociations would it not produce! Blefs me! what a clattering of white ficks and yellow fticks would be about his head-what a ftorm of goil keys would fly about the ears of the minifterwhat a fhower of Georges, and Thiftles, and medals, and collars of S. S. would affail him at his firf entrance into the antichamber, after an infolvent Chriftmas quarter. A tumult which could not be appeafed by all the harmony of the new-year's ode. Rebellion it is certain there would be; and rebellion may not now indeed be fo critical an event to thofe who engage in it, fince its price is fo correctly afcertained ;-afcertained at juft a thoufand pound.

Sir, this claffing, in my opinion, is a ferious and folid fecurity for the performance of a minifter's duty. Lord Coke fays, that the ftaff was put into the treafurer's hand, to enable him to fupport himfelf when there was no money in the exchequer, and to beat away importunate folicitors. The method, which I propofe, would hinder him from the neceffity of fuch a broken ftaff to lean on, or fuch a miferable weapon ror repulfing the demands of worthlefs fuitors, who, the noble lord in the blue ribbon knows, will bear many hard blows on the head, and many other indignities, before they are driven from the treafury. In this plan, he is furnifhed with an anfwer to all their importunity; an anfwer far more conclufive, than if he had knocked them down with his ftaff-" Sir, (or my Lord), you "، are calling for my own falary-Sir, you are "c calling for the appointments of my colleagues "s who fit about me in office-Sir, you are going "، to excite a mutiny at court againft me-you "، are going to eftrange his majelty's confidence "from me, through the chamberlain, or the " mater of the horfe, or the groom of the fole." As things now ftand, every man, in proportion to his confequence at court, tends to add to the expences of the civil lift, by all manner of jobs, if not for himfelf, yet for his dependents. When the new plan is eftablifhed, thofe who are now fuitors for jobs, will become the moft ftrenuous oppofers of them. They will have a common intereft with the minitter in public œconomy. Every clafs, as it ftands low, will become fecurity for the payment of the preceding clafs; and thus the perfons, whofe infignificant fervices defraud thofe that are ufeful, would then become interefted in their payment. Then the powerful, inftead of opprefling, would be obliged to fupport the weak; and idlenefs would become concerned in the reward of induftry. The whole fabric of the civil oconomy would become compact and connected in all its parts; it would be formed into a well organized body, where every member contributes to the fupport of the whole; and where even the lazy ftomach fecures the vigour of the active arm.

This plan, I really flatter myfelf, is laid, not in official formality, nor in airy fpeculation, but in real life, and in human nature, in what ". comes ts comes home (as Bacon fays) to the bulinefs " and bofoms of men." You have now, Sir, before you, the whole of my fcheme, as far as I have digefted it into a form, that might be in any refpect worthy of your confideration.-I into ad to lay it before you in five bills*. The plan confifts, ind 1, of many parts; but they ftand upon a tew plain principles. It is a plan which takes nothing from the civil lift without difchar 'ng it of a burthen equal to the fum carried to tue public fervice. It weakens no one function neceffary to government; but on the contrary, by appropriating fupply to fervice, it gives it greater vigour. It provides the means of order and forefigl to a minifter of finance, which may always keep all the objects of his office, and their ftate, condition, and relations, diftinctly before him. It hrings forward accounts without hurrying and diftreffing the accountants: whilft it provides for public convenience, it regards private rights. It extinguifhes fecret corruption almoft to the poffibility of its exiftence. It deftroys direct and vifible influence equal to the offices of at leaft fifty members of parliament. Laftly, it prevents the provifion for his Majefty's children, from being diverted to the political purpofes of his minifter.

Thefe are the roints, on which I rely for the merit of the plan: I purfue œconomy in a fecondary view, and only as it is connected with thefe great objects. I am perfuaded, that even for fupply, this fcheme will be far from unfruitful, if it be executed to the extent I propofe it. I think it will give to the public, at its periods, two or three hundred thoufand pounds a year; if not, it will give them a fyitem of ceconomy, which is itfelf a great revenue. It gives me na little pride and fatisfaction, to find that the principles of my proceedings are, in many refpects, the very fame with thofe which are now purfued in the plans of the French minifter of finance. I am fure, that I lay before you a fcheme eafy and practicable in all its parts. I know it is common at once to applaud and to reject all attempts of this nature. I know it is common for men to fay, that fuch and fuch things are perfectly right-very defirable; but that, unfortunately, they are not practicable. Oh! no, Sir, no. Thofe things which are not practicable, are not defirable. There is nothing in the world really beneficial, that does not lie within the reach of an informed underftanding, and a well directed purfuit. There is nothing that God has judged good for us, that he has not given us the means to accomplifh, both in the natural and the moral world. If we cry, like children for the moon, like children we muft cry on.

We muft follow the nature of our affairs, and conform ourfelves to our fituation. If we do, our objects are plain and compaffable. Why fhould we refolve to do nothing, becaufe what I propofe to you may not be the exact demand of the petition; when we are far from refolved to comply even with what evidently is fo? Does this fort of chicanery become us? The people are the mafters. They have only to exprefs their wants at large and in grofs. We are the expert artifts; we are the fkilful workmen, to fhape their defires into perfect form, and to fit the utenfil to the ufe. They are the fufferers, they tell the fymptoms of the complaint; but we know the exact feat of the difeafe, and how to apply the remedy, according to the rules of art. How fhocking would it be to fee us pervert our kill, into a finifter finifter and fervile dexterity, for the purpofe of evading our duty, and defrauding our employers, who are our natural lords, of the object of their juft expectations, I think the whole not only practicable, but practicable in a very fhort time. If we are in earneft about it, and if we exert that induftry, and thofe talents in forwarding the work, which I am afraid may be exerted in impeding it-I engage, that the whole may be puc in complete execution within a year. For my own part, I have very little to recommend me for this or for any talk, but a kind of earneft and anxious perfeverance of mind, which, with all its good and all its evil effects, is moulded into my conftitution. I faithfully engage to the houfe, if they choofe to appoint me to any part in the execution of this work, which (when they have made it theirs by the improvements of their wifdom, will be worthy of the able affiftance they may give me) that by night and by day, in town, or in country, at the defk, or in the foreft, I will, without regard to convenience, eafe, or pleafure, devote myielf to their fervice, not expecting or admitting any reward whatfoever. I owe to this country my labour, which is my all; and I owe to it ten times more induftry, if ten times more I could exert. After all I dhall be an unprofitable fervant.

At the fame time, if I am able, and if I hall be permitted, I will lend an humble helping hand to any other good work which is going on. I have not, Sir, the frantic prefumption to fuppofe, that this plan contains in it the whole of what the public has a right to expect, in the great work of reformation they call for. Indeed, it falls infinitely fhort of it. It falls fhort, even of my own ideas. I have fome thoughts not yet fully fully ripened, relative to a reform in the cuftoms and excife, as well as in fome other branches of financial adminiftration. There are other things too, which form effential parts in a great plan for the purpofe of reftoring the independence of parliament. The contractors bill of laft year it is fit to revive; and I rejoice that it is in better hands than mine. The bill for fufpending the votes of cuftomhoufe officers, brought into parliament feveral years ago, by one of our worthieft and wifett members, * (would to God we could along with the plan revive the perfon who propofed it.) But a man of very real integrity, honour, and ability will be found to take his place, and to carry his idea into full execution. You all fee how neceffary it is to review our military expences for fome years paft, and, if poffible, to bind up and clofe that bleeding artery of profufion:: but that bufinefs alfo, I have rearon to hope, will be undertaken by abifities that are fully adequate to it. Something muft be devifed (if poffible) to check the ruinous expence of elections.
Sir, all or moft of thefe things muft be done. Every one muft take his part.
If we fhould be able by dexterity or power, or intrigue, to difappoint the expectations of our conftituents, what will it avail us? we fhall never be ftrong or arfful enough to parry, or to put by the irrefilitible demands of our fituation. Thit fituation calls upon us, and upon our conftituents too, with a voice which will be heard. I am fure no man is more zealounly attached than I am to the privileges of this houfe, particularly in regard to the exclufive management of money. The lords have no right to the difpefition, in any fenfe, of the public purfe; but they have gone further in + felf-denial than our utmont jealonfy could have required. A power of examining accounts, to cenfure, correct, and punilh, we never, that I know of, have thought of denying to the Houfe of Lords. It is fomething more than a century fince we voted that body ufelefs: they have now voted themfelves fo. The whole hope of reformation is at length caft upon us; and let us not deceive the nation, which does us the honour to hope every thing from our virtue. If all the nation are not equally forward to prefs this duty upon us, yet be affured, that they all equally expect we fhould perform it. The refpectful filence of thofe who wait upon your pleafure, ought to be as powerful with you, as the call of thofe who require your fervice as their right. Some, without doors, affect to feel hurt for your dignity, becaufe they fuppofe, that menaces are beld out to you. Juftify their good opinion, by fhewing that no menaces are neceffary to ftimulate you to your duty. - But, Sir, whillt we may fympathize with them, in one point, who fympathize with us in another, we ought to attend no lefs to thofe who approach us like men, and who, in the guife of petitioners, fpeak to us in the tone of a concealed authority. It is not wife to force them to fpeak out more plainly, what they plainly mean. -But, the petitioners are violent. Be it fo. Thofe who are leaft anxious about your conduct, are not thofe that love you moft. Moderate affection and fatiated enjoyment, are cold and refpectful; but an ardent and injured paffion, is tempered up with wrath, and grief, and thame, and confcious worth, and the maddening fenfe of violated right. A jealous love lights his torch from the firebrands of the furies.-They who call upon you to belong wbolly to the people, are thofe who wifh you to return to your proper home; to the fphere of your duty, to the poft of your hotiour, to the manfion-houfe of all genuine, ferene, and folid fatisfaction. We have furnifhed to the people of England (indeed we have) fome real caufe of jealoufy. Let us leave that fort of company which, if it does not deftroy our innocence, pollutes our honour : let us free ourfelves at once from every thing that can increafe their fufpicions, and inflame their juft refentment: let us calt away from us, with a generous fcorn, all the love-tokens and fymbols that we have been vain and light enough to accept;all the bracelets and fnuff-boxes, and miniature pictures, and hair-devices, and all the other adulteroustrinkets that are the pledges of our alienation, and the monuments of our fhame. Let us return to our legitimate home, and all jars and all quarrels will be loft in embraces. Let the commons in parliament affembled, be one and the fame thing with the commons at large. The diftinctions that are made to feparate us, are unnatural and wicked contrivances. Let us identify, let us incorporate ourfelves with the peopie. Let us cut all the cables and fnap the chains which tie us to on unfaithful fhore, and enter the friendly harth ar, that fhoots far out into the main its moles and jettees to receive us. - War with the world, and peace with our conftituents." Be this our motto and our principle. Then indeed, we Shall be truly great. Refpecting ourfelves, we fhall be refpected by the world. At prefent all is troubled and cloudy, and diftracted, and full of anger and turbulence, both abroad and at home; but the air may be cleared by this ftorm, and light and fertility may follow it. Let us give a faithful pledge to the people, that we honour, indeed, the crown; but that we belong to them ; that we are their auxiliaries, and not their talk., mafters; the fellow-labourers in the fame vine.yard, not lording over their rights, but helpers, of their joy : that to tax them is a grievance to ourfelves, but to cut off from our enjoyments to forward theirs, is the higheft gratification we are capable of receiving. I feel with comfort, that we are all warmed with thefe fentiments, and while we are thus warm, $I$ wih we may go directly and with a chearful heart to this falutary work.

"Sir, I move for leave to bring in a Bill, "For "" the better regulation of bis Majefty's civil "" eftablibments, and of certain' public of"fices; for the limitation of penfions, and "the fupprefion cf fundry ufelefs, expenfive, "and inconvenient places; and for applying "the monies faved thereby to the public " fervice."
Mr. Fox feconded the motion.

Lord North ftated, that there was a difference between this bill for regulating the eftablifhmente, and fome of the others, as they affected the antient patrimony of the crown; and therefore wifhed them to be poftponed, till the King's confent could be obtained. This diftinction was ftrongly controverted; but when it was infifted on as a point of decorum only, it was agreed to poftpone them to another day. Accordingly, on the Monday following, viz. Feb. 14, leave was given, on the motion motion of Mr. Burke, without oppofition, to bring in 1ft," A bill for the fale of the foreft and otber crown lamds, rents, and bereditaments, with certain exceptions; and for applying the produce thereof to the public fervice; and for fecuring, afcertaining, and fatisfying, tenant-rights, and common and otber righls." 2d, "A bill for the more perfecily uniting to the crown the princifality of Wales, and the county "palatine of Cbefter, and for the more commodious "adminiftration of jufice witbin the Same; as alfo, "for abolijbing certain offices now appertaining bereto; for quieting dormant claims, afcertaining and fecuring tenant-rights; and for the

"t tenements, and bereditaments, and forefts, within
"t the faid dutcloy and county palatine, or either of "them; and for applying the produce thereof to
"the public fervice." - And it was ordered tbat
Mr. Burke, Mr. Fox, Lord John Cavendif, Sir George Savile, Colonel Barrè, Mr. Thomas Townthend, Mr. Byng, Mr. Dunning, Sir Jofeph Mawbey, Mr. Recorder of London, Sir Robert Clayton, Mr. Frederick Montagu, the Earl of Upper Offory, Sir William Guife, and Mr. Gilbert, do prepare and bring in the fame.

At the fame time, Mr. Burke moved for leave to bring in-4th, "A bill for uniting the dutchy

But fome objections being made by the furveyor geieral of the dutchy concerning the rights of the Prince of Wales, now in his minority, and Lord North remaining perfectly filent, Mr. Burke, at length, though he ftrongly contended againft the principle of the objection, confented to withdraw this latt motion for the prefent, to be renewed upon an early occafion.
