CAPTAIN JOE AND JAMIE

A STORY OF THE TANTRAMER TIDES.

[By Charles G. D. Roberts.]

How the wind roared in from the sea over the Tantramer dyke!

It was about sunset, and a fierce orange-glow thrusting itself through a rift in the clouds that blackened the sky, cast a strange glow over the wide desolate marshes. A mile back rose the dark line of the uplands, with small, white farm-houses already hidden in shadow.

Captain Joe Bouthouse had just left his wagon standing in the dyke-road, with his four-year-old boy on the seat. He was on the point of crossing the dyke, to visit the little landing place where he kept his boat, when above the rush and whistle of the gale he heard Jamie's voice. He hurried back a few paces before he could make out what the little fellow was saying.

"Pap," cried the child, "I want to get out of the wagon. 'Fraid Bill going to run away!"

"Oh, nonsense!" answered Captain Joe. "Bill won't run away. He doesn't know how. You stay there, and don't be frightened, and I'll be right back."

"But, pap, the wind blows me too hard," piped the small voice, pleadingly.

"Oh, all right," said the father, and returning to the wagon he lifted the child gently down and set him on his feet. "Now," he continued, "sit'st you out on the other side of the dyke. You run over and sit on that big stick, where the wind can't get at you, and wait for me. And be sure you don't let Bill run away."

As he spoke the captain noticed that the horse, ordinarily one of the most stolid of creatures, seemed to-night peculiarly uneasy; with his head up in the air he was snuffing nervously, and glancing from side to side. As Jamie was trudging through the long grass to the seat which his father had shown him, the captain said, "Why, Bill does seem scary, after all, who would have thought this wind would scare him?"

"Bill don't like it," replied Jamie; "it blows him too hard." And, glad to be out of the gale, which took his breath away, the little fellow seated himself contentedly in the shelter of the dyke. Just then there was a clatter of wheels and a crash. Bill had whirled sharply about in the narrow road, upsetting and smashing the light wagon.

Now, utterly heedless of his master's angry shouts, he was galloping in mad haste back toward the uplands, with the fragments of the wagon at his heels. The captain and Jamie watched him flying before the wind, a red speck in the lurid light. Then turning away once more to see to his boat, the captain remarked, "Well, laddie, I guess we'll have to foot it back when we get through here. But Bill's going to have a kicking for this!"

Left to himself, Jamie crouched down behind the dyke, a strange, solitary little figure in the wide waste of the marshes. Though the full force of the gale could not reach him, his long, fair curls were blown across his face, and he clung determinedly to his small, round hat. For a while he watched the beam of light, till the jagged fringe of clouds closed over it, and it was gone. Then, in the dusk, he began to feel a little frightened; but he knew his father would soon be back, and he tried to like to call him again. He listened to the waves crashing, surging, beating, roaring, on the shoals beyond the dyke. Presently he heard them, every now and then, thunder in against the very dyke itself, upon this he grew more frightened, and called to his father several times; but of course the small voice was drowned in the tumult of wind and wave, and on the working margin of the other side of the dyke, he heard no sound of it.

Close by the shelter in which Jamie was crouching there were several great tubs, made by sawing pole-ends hogwashed into live staves. These tubs, in fishing season, were carried by the fishermen in their boats, to hold the shad as they were taken from the net. Now they stood empty and dry, but highly favored with memories of their office. Into the nearest tub Jamie crawled, after having shouted in vain to his father.

To the child's loneliness and fear the tub looked "cozy," as he called it. He curled up in the bottom and felt a little comforted.

Jamie was the only child of Captain Joe Bouthouse. When Jamie was about 2 years old, the captain had taken the child and his mother on a voyage to Brazil. While sailing at Barbadoes the young mother had caught the yellow fever, and she had died, and was buried. After that voyage Captain Joe had given up his ship, and retired to his father's farm at Tantramer. There he devoted himself to his child and the farm, but to Jamie especially, and in the summer, partly for amusement, partly for profit, he was accustomed to spend a few weeks in drifting for shad on the wild tides of Chignecto Bay.

As the weather was too rough for Jamie, Captain Joe stayed at home. As for the child, he pined with being spoiled, he was growing up, and upon the captain's face, the gladness died out as quickly as it had come. When the two men met, the elder put out his hand in silence, and the younger clasped it. There was no room for words. Side by side the two walked slowly homeward. With restless eyes, ever dreading lest they should find that which they sought, the father and the son looked everywhere except in a certain old fish-tub which they passed. The tub stood a little to one side of the road. Just at this time a sparrow lit on the tub's edge, and uttered a loud and startled chirp at sight of the cowering child. As the bird flew precipitately, Jamie opened his eyes, and gazed up in astonishment at the blue sky over his head. He stretched out his hand and felt the rough sides of the tub. Then, in complete bewilderment, he clambered to his feet. Why, there was his father, walking away somewhere without him! And grandpapa, too! Jamie felt aggrieved.

"Pap!" he cried, in a loud but fearful voice, "where you go to?"

A great wave of light seemed to break across the landscape, as the two men started and saw the little golden head shining, dishevelled, over the edge of the tub. The captain caught his breath with a sort of sob, and rushed to snatch the little one in his arms; while the rough sides of the fish-tub in the road, and his trembling legs moved silently.

anguish of apprehension. Leaving the boat behind in breathless haste out on top of the dyke, shouting to Jamie as he did so. There was no answer. Where he had left the little one but a half-hour back, there he found him three or four feet deep over the grass.

Dark as the night had grown it grew blacker before the father's eyes. For a moment his heart stood still with horror, then he sprang down into the flood. The water boiled up nearly to his arm-pits. With his feet he felt the great timber, fastened in the dyke, on which his boy had been sitting. He peered through the dark, with straining eyes grown preternaturally keen. He could see nothing on the wide, swirling surface save two or three dark objects, far out in the marsh. These he recognized as his fish-tubs gone afloat. Then he ran up the dyke toward the point. "Surely," he groaned in his heart, "Jamie has climbed upon one of the floating tubs, and is being carried away by the water coming, and I'll find him along the top here, somewhere, looking and crying for me!"

Then, running like a madman along the narrow marsh, with a band of iron tightening about his heart, the captain reached the point, where the dyke took its beginning.

He signs of the lifeless one, but he saw the marshes everywhere laid waste. Then he turned round and sped back, thinking perhaps Jamie had wandered in the other direction. Passing the now deserted landing place, he saw a curious distinctness, as if in a picture, that the boat was turned bottom up, and as it were, glued to the side of the dyke.

Suddenly he checked his speed with a violent effort, and threw himself upon his face, clutching the short grasses of the dyke. He had just saved himself from falling into the sea. Had he had time to think, he might not have tried to save himself, believing as he did that the child who was his very life had perished. But the instinct of self-preservation had asserted itself bravely, and just in time. Before his feet the dyke was washed away, and through the chain the waves were breaking furiously.

Meanwhile, what had become of little Jamie?

The wind had made him drowsy, and before he had been many minutes curled up in the tub, he was sound asleep.

When the dyke gave way, some distance from Jamie's queer retreat, there came suddenly a great rush of water among the tubs, and some were struggling floated off. Then others a little further followed, one by one; and last of all, the heaviest, that containing Jamie and his fortunes.

The water rose rapidly, but back here there came no wave, and the child slept as peacefully as if at home in his crib. Little the captain thought, when his eyes wandered over the floating tubs, that the one nearest to him was freighted with his nearest treasure! And well it was that Jamie did not hear his shouts and wails! Had he done so, he would have at once sprung to his feet and been tipped out on the flood.

By this time the great tide had reached its height. Soon it began to recede, but slowly, for the storm kept the water gathered, as it were, in a heap at the head of the dyke. All night the wind raged on, wrecking the smacks and schooners along the coast, breaking down the dykes in hundreds of places, flooding the marshes, and drowning many cattle in the salt pastures. All night the captain, hopeless and mute in his agony of grief, lay clutching the grasses on the dyke-top, not daring to leave his post, lest the waves should sweep him with their spray. All night, too, slept Jamie in his tub.

Right across the marsh the strange craft drifted before the wind, never getting into the region where the waves were violent. Such motion as there was—and at times it was somewhat lively—seemed only to lull the child to a sounder slumber. Toward the head of the dyke, at the foot of the uplands, not far from the edge of the road, the waters gradually slunk away, as if ashamed of their wild vagaries. And still the light broke over the bay, coldly pink and desolately gleaming. Captain Joe got up and looked about him. His eyes were tearful, but his face was gray and hard, and deep lines had stamped themselves across it during the night.

Seeing that the marshes were again uncovered, save for great shallow pools here and there, he set out to find the body of his boy. After wandering aimlessly for perhaps an hour, the captain began to study the direction in which the wind had been blowing. This almost seemed to lead him to his home on the uplands. As he noticed this, a wave of pity crossed his heart, at thought of the terrible anxiety his father and mother had all that night been enduring. Then in an instant there seemed to unroll before him the long, slow years of the desolation of that home without Jamie.

All this time he was moving along the seeping road, scanning the marsh in every direction. When he had covered about half the distance, he was aware of his father, hastening with feeble eagerness to meet him.

The night of watching had made the old man haggard, but his face lit up at sight of his son. As he drew near, however, and upon the captain's face, the gladness died out as quickly as it had come. When the two men met, the elder put out his hand in silence, and the younger clasped it. There was no room for words. Side by side the two walked slowly homeward. With restless eyes, ever dreading lest they should find that which they sought, the father and the son looked everywhere except in a certain old fish-tub which they passed. The tub stood a little to one side of the road. Just at this time a sparrow lit on the tub's edge, and uttered a loud and startled chirp at sight of the cowering child. As the bird flew precipitately, Jamie opened his eyes, and gazed up in astonishment at the blue sky over his head. He stretched out his hand and felt the rough sides of the tub. Then, in complete bewilderment, he clambered to his feet. Why, there was his father, walking away somewhere without him! And grandpapa, too! Jamie felt aggrieved.

"Pap!" he cried, in a loud but fearful voice, "where you go to?"

A great wave of light seemed to break across the landscape, as the two men started and saw the little golden head shining, dishevelled, over the edge of the tub. The captain caught his breath with a sort of sob, and rushed to snatch the little one in his arms; while the rough sides of the fish-tub in the road, and his trembling legs moved silently.

CLAD TIDINGS.

Beligion and the World's Fair. A committee of seven—denominations, with Rev. Dr. J. H. Barrows at their head, have taken the initiative of the religious side of the Chicago Exposition. It is proposed to invite representatives of all faiths and countries to a general conference and discussion with reference to the relation of religion to education, the labor problems, temperance reform, the Sabbath question, and, in fact, to the whole life of man. Besides these general sessions, the different denominations will meet separately for conference. Gatherings of Sunday schools and Young People's Societies, of missionary organizations and of the Evangelical Alliance will also be held. The plan is to have a liberal and Christian. We may best describe its intent by quoting from a personal letter written by Dr. Barrows. He says: "It is the purpose to hold a Fair of Religion, something which has hitherto been held, which will promote international fellowship. It is not the least to compromise Christianity or to offend the faith of any one. It is to open up frankly and positively what truths have been hitherto hidden from the eyes of the world. We are inviting men of the most diverse faiths to meet at the Fair for the purpose of discussing the problems of the hour, the problems of the future, and the problems of the present. We believe it will be a blessing to the world, and that it will be a blessing to us to see and hear them. Then we hope to have a larger representation of the world of Christianity than has ever before been secured; meetings, for the purpose of worship, but for conference, we may hope to give the assistance of ecclesiastics who have not usually been seen with 'heretics' and 'infidels' in the same place. Our intention is not to discuss religious questions, but to see and hear them. THE WEATHER PROPHET.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 11-12 p.m.—The north wind depression is to-night central near Winnipeg, and the highest pressure now covers the middle Atlantic coast. Some showers have occurred in the Northwest Territories; elsewhere in Canada the weather has remained fine.

Minimum and maximum temperatures: Calgary, 32-40; Buffalo, 48-54; Appleton, 49-63; Minneapolis, 62-70; Winnipeg, 62-72; Toronto, 51-70; Montreal, 58-74; Quebec, 62-72; Halifax, 46-70.

Local temperatures—Highest, 78; lowest, 62.

FOUR DAYS' PROGNOSTICS.

Toronto, Sept. 12-1 a.m.—The indications for the next 24 hours for the lower lakes region (covering the peninsula and as far east as Belleville) are: South and east winds; fair and warm during the day, followed by some showers.

Additional cases of typhoid fever are reported on Alma street, South London, and on Dufferin avenue. The only place in the city where a number of cases are located together, however, is on Craig street, where residents in house after house are affected, many of them seriously.

The fifth ward is far from being at a standstill. Mr. Anderson's two new stores will soon be completed. Mr. Brooks has built a new brick store for himself on Dundas street. Hewitt street, which was opened recently, has four new cottages on it and in other parts houses can be seen going up.

—Ed T. Allen, a member of King Street Presbyterian Church, left Thursday on the C. T. R. for Persia, via New York and England. He is about 20 years of age and has entered the missionary work for eight years. A large crowd of intimate friends and relatives were at the train to see him off. He was a beloved church member and comrade and his departure is regretted by many.

—A South London ratepayer, who contributes about $20 a year school tax, asked in Principal McQueen, of Ash street school, one evening this week: "Well, may I send my boy to school to-morrow?" The answer he received was: "No use; I really can't find room for him. We are already too much crowded." If people who pay heavy taxes can't be accommodated with schooling for their children, what satisfaction will they ever get for their money?

—At the recent annual meeting of London West Missionary Society Auxiliary in the lecture room the programme consisted of reports, reception of members, readings, music, etc., and was very interesting. After a few kind and congratulatory remarks by the pastor, Rev. W. Godwin, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Rife; vice-presidents, Mrs. Heritage and Mrs. Minton; secretary, Miss E. Leake; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Douglas, and treasurer, Mrs. Green.

Death at the Hospital. Jane Quait, a domestic who had been in the employ of John Beattie, Wootley road, South London, died at the hospital Thursday of typhoid fever. The case was a malignant one and all the efforts of the physicians failed to effect a cure. Deceased was the daughter of Wm. Quait, West Nisour, and was buried yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Walton-Burnham. Several Londoners attended the wedding the other day of Harry G. Walton, G. T. R. telegraph operator, well known in this city, to Miss Jennie Humphrey, Esqueving township, Halton county, W. R. Walton, city, and Miss Madie Humphrey assisted the groom and bride, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. Jas. McAllister, Paisley. The happy couple go on a trip to Montreal and Orchard Beach.

Lady Victoria Social. Lady Victoria Orange Lodge, No. 2, held a social and assembly in the Orange Hall Thursday. The room was crowded and enjoyment and fun were not wanting. Aid. W. W. Fitzgerald occupied the chair and ably discharged his pleasant duties. The assembly Thursday night served as an introduction to the meeting which was held to-night, when a lodge of the Ladies' Orange Benevolent Association was organized by Miss M. Cullum, worthy mistress, and Mrs. J. T. Tuck, deputy mistress of Hamilton Lodge, No. 1, Hamilton. Three years ago a lodge of this society was organized in that city, and despite strong opposition they have met with marked success. Mrs. Tuck addressed the meeting on the aims and objects of the association and at a later period on woman's rights. Both addresses were alike full of spirit and sentiment and obtained well-merited applause. The remainder of the program was as follows: March, Miss McWhiney; song, Mr. Emery; recital, Mr. Bradley; Scotch dance, Misses Robinson and Geary; song, Mr. Roberts; song, Miss Hodgins; song, Miss Carter; Phillips; song, Miss M. Cullum, Hamilton; song, Miss L. Phillips; address, E. T. Esary; Irish jig, C. Bowland; refreshments; dance; banjo, guitar and mouth-organ selection by Masters Short and Kipp. The ladies will organize No. 3 in Toronto next week, and No. 4 in Chatham in about two weeks.

Personal Register.

The ill condition of a single organ, the liver for instance, may bring in the most disorders, which would surely have been obviated by the use of Dr. Sillard's remedy.

<To nearly all men a good cigar is an inalienable custom, and a bad one is intolerable. The latter may be easily avoided by procuring a brand that is recognized by the smoking public as above reproach. The leading favorite in the face is the Highland Lassie, a 5-cent cigar, and one of the choicest makes on the market. H. McKay & Co., this city, are the manufacturers, and their shipments extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

organized in that city, and despite strong opposition they have met with marked success. Mrs. Tuck addressed the meeting on the aims and objects of the association and at a later period on woman's rights. Both addresses were alike full of spirit and sentiment and obtained well-merited applause. The remainder of the program was as follows: March, Miss McWhiney; song, Mr. Emery; recital, Mr. Bradley; Scotch dance, Misses Robinson and Geary; song, Mr. Roberts; song, Miss Hodgins; song, Miss Carter; Phillips; song, Miss M. Cullum, Hamilton; song, Miss L. Phillips; address, E. T. Esary; Irish jig, C. Bowland; refreshments; dance; banjo, guitar and mouth-organ selection by Masters Short and Kipp. The ladies will organize No. 3 in Toronto next week, and No. 4 in Chatham in about two weeks.
