Now, I wish the minister would take into consideration some of the things that we have been speaking about in this debate, but even more important—it does not matter that much that he listen to us—I wish he would listen to farm organizations who have the expertise and first-hand knowledge on all these issues. All we ask is that he listen to the farmers themselves. This to me, as I said before, seems to be a natural extension of democracy, a thing we should be doing in this House. Instead, we are getting further and further away from the people. I am sure that if the Liberal members of this House, as was pointed out last night, were to go out to the Prairies and talk to the farmers they would come back and say the same things we are saying, that farmers do not want this bill as it is.

I would like to ask in a very serious way that members, such as the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Cobbe), rise and speak in the House. I am sure that he knows the reaction of farmers to this bill. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Smerchanski) and several other members of this House should be in this debate also, but they are not. I wonder why? My suspicion is that they know what farmers think of this bill and because of that they do not want to participate in this debate.

I should like to mention one or two other matters before I sit down. All hon. members who know something about agriculture should rise and speak on some of the more important aspects of this bill, such as the need to include cost of production as a factor in working out a stabilization plan. In addition, rather than basing a stabilization plan on gross income, it should be based on net income because the farmer's gross income depends on the type of farm, the year, and other circumstances beyond his control. It is very deceiving at times because one may deduce from what a farmer has physically that he is a very wealthy man, but this is often not the case. There are intangibles, as I said, to be considered such as weather conditions, drought, insects such as the Bertha army worm in rapeseed fields, and so on. These factors must be taken into consideration by the minister if the plan is to be meaningful to farmers.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Last but not least, I hope that he will either delay this bill or agree with us to adjourn the debate until he has an opportunity to hear from the three prairie governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. If some changes are not made, in 20 years time there will possibly not be a rural prairie society left that is even recognizable because over two thirds of these people will probably not be on the farms. Communities which those farms support will become ghost towns, and many of them will desappear altogether. That is not what I want and that is not what farmers want. Farming communities should be preserved and encouraged by all of us, regardless of whether we come from large urban centres or from rural areas.

Once again I would ask the minister to seriously consider listening to the voice of the people and not quite as stubborn and adamant in what he thinks are his solutions to agricultural problems. I do not want to wait until the next federal election before the people make the decision. I would like the bill changed now. If it is not, it will be changed after the next election because the people will not tolerate such utter nonsense. With the Assiniboia by-election coming up, I hope that the minister will demonstrate to us some courage and show that he does come from the Prairies, that he knows the people and has sufficient sensitivity to listen to what they want. Then, he will either seriously amend the bill or withdraw it altogether to be reconsidered. In the meantime, let us send out the $100 million and make those payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act because this money belongs to the farmers. It is owing to them under the law of Canada, and it is payable every month. We should start paying it out now.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): The two amendments to Bill C-244 which are before us, both of which stand in the name of my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), attempt to do three things. First, they attempt to have stabilization payments, if any, added to the value of the grain sold by the producer for the purpose of calculating gross proceeds from sales. This would, over a period of time, raise the amount of the five-year average of proceeds from grain sales and thus increase the number of farmers eligible to receive payments from the stabilization fund. In addition, there would be an increase in the amounts they would be eligible to receive in years of low grain income. That is a provision with which I should think all members in this chamber would be sympathetic.

The second thing the amendment attempts to do is, by removing the provision in the bill that stabilization payments be based on only 90 per cent of aggregate grain sale proceeds of all producers for the crop year under review and relating it only to 90 per cent of the five-year average of aggregate grain sales, to have the computation based upon the total figure for the crop in question and the full figure for the five-year average. In so doing, one of the glaring defects of the bill, that of providing for proportionately low stabilization payments to be made at times when the drop in farm incomes is the largest, would be avoided. The merits of this action are so obvious that I do not think I need even argue them in great detail. Surely, it is obvious that in attempting to stabilize incomes in an area of the economy where, even including income in kind—that is what you grow and eat—incomes are marginal and it is essential to ensure that both the absolute and the relative figures of assistance be highest in the worst years, and it is in order to ensure this that the amendment has been submitted.

The third task which the amendments that we are considering attempt to accomplish is to have stabilization payments computed on the basis of net income rather than upon gross income. The amendment in question does so by providing that increased costs of production be deducted from the purchase price received for grain sold in the process of calculating the basis upon which to make stabilization payments.

In order to present accurately the case for a plan based upon net farm income rather than gross farm receipts, it is necessary to relate the shortcomings in the gross income approach to yet another defect in the bill, and I could do so in a couple of sentences. We in the NDP have two major reservations regarding the approach to stabilization taken in this bill. First, the plan starts from an aggregate basis, namely, total cash receipts for the marketing of prairie grains. Second, as I have already indicated, the plan works on a gross receipts basis without regard to costs of production.

We see a number of adverse effects resulting from the combination of these two techniques. First, because the plan is based on aggregate marketings of prairie grains there would be enormous pressure on the Canadian Wheat Board in slow years to make large volume sales regardless of price and while this might not be a bad policy in a marketing sense it would be disastrous for the individual farmer, especially the smaller farmer, because of the violence it would do to his net income position. Second, because the plan is based on gross income receipts from marketing rather than net farm income, the plan would do absolutely nothing to slow down or counteract the net income squeeze being experienced by farmers. I am referring to the pernicious phenomenon commonly referred to as the cost-price squeeze in which rising costs and reduced prices are combining to force more and more farmers out of business.

The third major defect we see in this approach, because of its being based upon gross income, is that the degree to which a farm unit participates in the plan depends upon the total grain marketing of that farm unit up to a limit of $10,000. In the chronic oversupply situation in which we find ourselves in the west, orderly marketing depends on quotas and quotas at present are related directly to total cultivated acreage, unfortunately. Thus, because the plan is based on gross receipts, the more successful the plan is, the more farmers would be forced to attempt to increase the size of their farms in order to obtain sufficient quotas to reach at least the limit of $10,000 in grain marketings so that they could participate fully in the plan. Obviously, this implies further rural depopulation because if the farmers participating are to have the acreage necessary, that means they are going to have to expand the size of their farms. In effect, this means that some farmers are going to have to be removed from the land to make room for others to expand. In brief, the current relentless competition amongst prairie farmers is bound to continue with the result that the number of farmers in the prairie region will continue its rapid decline. This may be the point at which the government is aiming, even though they will not admit it. If it is not their intention, I fail to see the reason for their resistance to the attempt to introduce net farm income into the plan.

The fourth adverse effect this bill would have upon the prairie economy would be to produce the anomalous situation of forcing up the price of land in a depressed farm economy, thus further raising the overhead which must be supported by the farmer whose costs are already too high. This effect would follow logically from the third result of the plan which I discussed just a moment ago and that is the tendency to force farmers to seek to increase the size of their farms in order to gain maximum benefits from the plan. The merit in the stabilization plan as proposed by the minister is the fact that the government of Canada has committed itself to long term expenditures in the interests of the western Canadian farmer. The flaws in the plan lie in its specifics and those specific flaws are such that they would effectively prevent the plan from doing what it purports to do, that is providing western farmers with some form of real income security.

The two amendments before us, submitted by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar attempt to remedy some of the specific defects in the plan in order to allow it to accomplish its expressed objectives. The key recommendation contained in these amendments is introducing the idea of basing the plan upon net farm income by deducting from grain receipts the increased cost of production.

We on this side of the House have not been alone in this contention. Farm groups appearing before the Standing Committee on Agriculture have made the same point. The minister of agriculture from Manitoba also made the point when he appeared before that committee. Now, all three prairie agriculture ministers have got together and written the minister telling him that is their position and they would like to discuss it with him. Surely, it would make good sense for the minister to take the time to listen to them since they represent the area that this plan is supposed to help.

I cannot understand why, having received unanimous representations from the three provinces involved in the plan, the minister would wish to proceed with the bill without hearing their representations. Nor can I understand why the minister is not content to take the suggestion offered on numerous occasions from this side of the House. If he is worried about the cash income position of the prairie farmer and wants to send out the acreage payments provided for in the bill, why does he not split the bill, make the acreage payments and then take time to discuss the other provisions of the bill with the prairie ministers? Surely a plan designed to be ongoing, designed to last for years with potentially profound effects upon the prairie grain economy, is important enough that the minister simply cannot deny the three prairie agriculture ministers the opportunity to discuss it. I hope that the minister will take my representations in the manner in which they are intended and will give some consideration to seeing the prairie agriculture ministers before he proceeds any further with this bill.

On this side of the House we are perfectly willing to allow passage of the acreage payments and, therefore if the minister sees fit, to split the bill. We will not allow it to go through in its entirety when we know it contains such serious defects.

Mr. Lang: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. Minister rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This can only be done if the hon. member who has the floor accepts the question. The Chair would ask the hon. member if he is ready to accept a question from the hon. Minister.

Mr. Rowland: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall try to answer it.

Mr. Lang: Of course, as I said earlier, I shall be glad to meet with the prairie ministers of agriculture, but I am not sure I have received any word from them yet about that. I wanted to ask the hon. member, when he suggests that his party would be agreeable to giving unanimous consent to splitting the bill, does that cover an agreement to split the bill so that clauses 32 and 33 might be passed immediately and more time taken over the balance of the bill?

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, the offer which my party has made repeatedly referred only to transitional payments. It would not apply to clause 33.

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult for one to understand the confusion that the people in the agricultural industry face these days in view of the number of agricultural bills and regulations that have been introduced in a short time. I refer to such items as the farm products marketing agencies bill; prairie grain stabilization bill; grassland incentive program; Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act amendments; Canada Grain Act and many others. Then, we get into the old numbers game—176, 177 and 244. It is very confusing to those in the industry who are trying to sort out the total programs, and it is even more difficult when we have some people who have done an outstanding job of mixing up those programs in the minds of producers. At times members have been forced to vote against legislation which they know is good. I do not like to see people playing politics with the livelihood of others. I do not think anybody would disagree that many changes are needed in the agricultural industry. If this industry is to keep up with the changes made in other parts of the world and other segments of our society, the changes we make must be practical.

Many suggestions have been made lately about what should be done with the money involved in this bill. It has been suggested that a payout of $100 million should take place immediately. Basically, this would mean separating the payment provision from the stabilization plan and a percentage of the $100 million going to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

Mr. Benjamin: Oh, no; oh no! It is different money.

Mr. Cobbe: This payment would have to be credited to wheat farmers and to wheat farmers alone. I can see that the producers of oats and barley would get very little. Once again, the producers who in the past made an effort to overcome the problems of surplus in some areas of agriculture, either voluntarily or through the Operation Lift program, get the short end of the stick. We have introduced many programs. Many bills have come before the House dealing with the production of wheat. In many cases it has been evident that little consideration has been given to other grain producers. The cash advance payments bill, for instance, really was not an equitable arrangement for those who were not growing wheat.

It has been suggested that if the stabilization bill were to pass, the government would no longer be overly concerned about the agricultural industry because it could be argued that the stabilization bill would be looking after the problems of the grain farmer. This is a ridiculous statement. I cannot imagine any government scrapping all the programs which presently deal with the agricultural industry. No bill is perfect in the opinion of all. Changes need to be made to bills at various times. If the controls and regulations do not do the job that they should do, they should be changed. I am a firm believer in that.

Months have been spent on this program, Mr. Speaker, and many, many people and organizations have been consulted. I agree that the farmers should ask for all they can get. Nobody disagrees with that. It was even suggested that the "Big 3" from western Canada should be heard. Some of their representatives have already been heard. Those people appeared before our committee, along with many other people. I am sure that they feel more money would improve this bill. Who does not feel that way about most things? More money would do wonders for many bills which have been presented and enacted into law. I am confident that more money will be put into this program as time goes on. It is very evident that the agricultural industry will require more assistance, if one considers world conditions. Speaking of more money, Mr. Speaker, reminds me of some Members of Parliament who spoke behind the curtains and in hallways in favour of an increase in their salaries and then, when the time came to vote, voted against that increase. The provision of more money will help almost anything, if you do not have to suffer the consequences.

I hope that following passage of this bill the government will undertake a continuing review of it and, hopefully, make changes to it, because this bill spells out a totally new concept for the agricultural industry. It is a new program introduced in an effort to stabilize income. The Standing Committee considered the problems of the agricultural industry and the need for stabilizing income.

It has been suggested that if farmers had not grown crops other than cereal crops in the past, many of them would be even worse off than they now are. Some hon. members feel that after this bill is passed we shall not hear any more about the stabilization program. They feel that way because there is a clause in the bill which requires a periodic review. They are afraid that the effects of this bill will not be reviewed until that time limit is up. I do not think this is true. I know that all members of this House are sincerely concerned about the agricultural industry and the effect economic conditions are having on it.

The suggestion that we should base contributions on net income as against gross income is very interesting. It is a suggestion to which I, personally, gave an awful lot of thought. However, I have never been able to determine what the net cost of production is in many segments of agriculture. I agree that methods are being improved and that we can get a better picture of what those costs are. Nevertheless, at present I suggest that there are very few producers who can give a definite figure as to how much it costs to produce various grains. This amendment suggests that deductions should be made on the basis of the net income of producers. The bill provides that the payments are to be based on grain sales proceeds. It has been suggested that we should change the bill and base the contributions on net income. We know, and it has been suggested many times in this House, that there are producers who have not had a net income in the past few years.

Mr. Benjamin: That's under Liberal governments.

Mr. Cobbe: That would mean, in those cases, that there would be no contribution to the fund which, in turn, according to the other parts of the bill, would mean, basically, that there would be no payments to those farmers from the fund since the payments are based on the amount contributed to the fund. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see that it is possible for me to support such an amendment to the bill. I say that because, basically, we would be helping only those who have enough income to contribute to the fund. Many, many producers in the immediate past would not have been able to contribute to the fund. There are some in that position even at present. Therefore, they would not be able to take advantage of this bill. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I personally cannot see how I can support this amendment.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cobbe: Certainly.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the hon. member was suggesting that the majority of farmers today are not keeping accurate records of their operating costs. Was he suggesting that a little while ago?

Mr. Cobbe: Mr. Speaker, I was not suggesting that. I know that in the immediate past there has been a tremendous effort on the part of producers to keep accurate figures covering all their operations. Nevertheless, it is still very difficult, in my opinion, to determine costs. You get different answers from many producers about the actual costs of producing various types of grain.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit another question? I am wondering if I heard the hon. member correctly. Did he say in his speech that since some farmers did not have a net income, they therefore would not be able to make contributions to the fund and would not be eligible to receive payments from the fund? If he is saying that, may I ask him whether he is not aware that if a farmer makes grain sales he will make contributions to the fund whether or not he gets a net income?

Mr. Cobbe: Mr. Speaker, may I say this in answer to that question. I was referring to the effect of the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I admit that I am not particularly well acquainted with all the technical consequences of Bill C-244. However, I must state my views and the comments of my constituents on that problem concerning grain producers, especially those of western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we must consider here the necessity of removing some prejudices among eastern and western producers. Some of those prejudices are sometimes kept alive by the government. I would not say wilfully, Mr. Speaker, but it amounts to the same thing. It is extremely unfortunate for the fellowship which should exist in the farming community of Canada, whatever the area concerned. It is also unfortunate for the Canadian consumer who at the present time cannot take advantage of the plentiful crops offered by the producer.

In a country where production is so easy, where enormous quantities of all sorts of good things and all sorts of food products are available, it is inadmissible that the consumer cannot really benefit by it. And he does not benefit by it. Why? For the very reason that there appear to be some basic difficulties in the matter of organization and procedure and because the principles that would promote distribution according to the needs of the Canadian people are not being applied.

I would like to give an example. The eastern producer, especially the one from Quebec, finds it absolutely impossible to understand why it is so difficult for him to obtain at a reasonable price products that are overabundant in the western part of his country, when he has an extermely hard time in making ends meet. Of course, he comes to the conclusion that the government favours the western producer. It is unfortunate that these producers should think so, but apparently they don't quite know what—

• (4:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but, having listened attentively from the beginning of his remarks I tend to feel he is wandering considerably from the subject. We are at the committee report stage and the two motions before us relate specifically to clauses 2 and 3. It is quite difficult, at this stage of the proceedings, to allow the hon. member to deal with the overall subject of the grain market, of marketing, of agriculture in the East and in the West. The Chair is quite willing to grant him a maximum of latitude but would invite him, as soon as he can, to arrive at a conclusion which will at least relate his remarks to the motions now before us.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your kind words. I may seem to be drifting away from the amendment as such, but the fact remains that to come to a conclusion, I had to draw a parallel between the western and the eastern producer. In passing legislation on grain production we, in Parliament, must strive toward fairness to all. That must be our prime concern, and I take part in this debate with that in mind.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, though the matter concerns more specifically the members from western Canada, I too wanted to add my grain to this debate on grain.

Mr. Roch La Salle: What grain?

Mr. Matte: I see the member for Joliette thought right away that he could put in his seed.

This amendment really deserves our undivided attention. Offhand I would say it is very adequate. As it was so aptly put yesterday by my colleague the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), who brought in this House a whole stack of letters received from western producers, it is necessary to say here what the producers themselves want.

Through this amendment, we will give satisfaction to these producers who have a first-hand knowledge of their real problems and are in a position to know what should be built into this bill to improve it and to do them justice. This is the reason why, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am in complete agreement with the content of the amendment. Western producers will be able to produce in a reasonable and viable manner and I hope that the East will benefit from it. In this way, we will do justice to everyone and really benefit from the tremendous advantages offered by our Canadian agricultural production.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would say "if I could get a little silence in the House . . .".

Notwithstanding the very important matter we are now discussing, during the question period earlier today it was revealed that a minister of the Crown, instead of coming before this chamber with an important report following his conversation with executives of the General Motors Corporation, decided to hold a press conference. That press conference has now come and gone, but the issues involved are still with us, namely the high and increasing level—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will admit that we are getting a bit far away from the motion before the House at this time.

Mr. Broadbent: I intend to move a motion, Mr. Speaker. I am explaining the reasons for it.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the press conference has come and gone, but the issue, namely the high and increasing level of unemployment in this country, specifically in the automotive industry, is still with us. I think the House should have the right to hear a report from the minister on the results of his conversation this morning with executives of General Motors. Therefore, I intend to move a motion after which I intend to move that we revert to motions to enable the minister to make a statement to the House on his conversation with representatives of General Motors. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose):

That the debate on the report stage, motions Nos. 1 and 2, of Bill C-244 be now adjourned.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair hesitates to put the question to the House at this time because it has some doubt as to the acceptability of the motion in its present form. First of all, in my opinion, the wording of the motion does not appear to follow the practice to which we have become accustomed, whereby such motions to adjourn are simple motions to adjourn the debate and do not relate to part of a debate only. In this particular case, the motion does not ask for the adjournment of the debate but merely for the adjournment of the report stage on motions Nos. 1 and 2. In the opinion of the Chair, the House has resumed the report stage of the debate on Bill C-244 in its entirety. The House might at this point be concentrating on motions Nos. 1 and 2, but if it is desired to adjourn the debate, a motion will have to be presented which would plainly ask for such an adjournment, and would imply adjournment for the day of debate on any sections of the bill we have in front of us, not only motions 1 and 2.

The Chair is ready to invite opinions from hon. members although I am not sure they will affect the ultimate decision. Does any hon. member wish to comment on the procedural aspect of the motion?

Mr. Horner: As I understand the motion put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, it is a motion to adjourn on the condition we would then hear from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce following his press conference with regard to the employment situation and his discussions with officials of General Motors. I do not believe one can move a motion to adjourn coupled with a condition; it has to be unconditional. Of course, the hon. member has the right to move another motion, but I believe the present motion is out of order because it seeks to impose a condition that we should then hear the report of the minister on his talks with General Motors.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two or three points have been raised in the last few minutes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I might deal first with the point raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot. It is true that my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby said that the reason he was moving his adjournment motion was in order that it would then be possible to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to come in to make a statement. But there is nothing in the motion to this effect. This often happens. Even the hon. member for Crowfoot sometimes moves a motion which says such and such, and then makes a speech telling us why he has put the motion forward. That is what my hon. friend has done.

With regard to the point Your Honour raised from the chair, I must say I have a good deal of sympathy with the position you have taken. It so happens that yesterday my hon. friend from Moose Jaw moved a motion in the same words:—"that the debate on the report stage of motions Nos. 1 and 2, Bill C-244, be now adjourned"—I am reading from page 8041 of Hansard for yesterday. That motion was allowed by the Chair, put to the House and voted on. There is no law which says the Chair cannot change its mind. In fact, I have spent a good many years trying to get the Chair to change its mind on a number of points. But I can see Your Honour's point that to move the adjournment of the debate just on the two amendments now before us does seem to be a direction as to what to do next, namely, to go on to other amendments to the same bill. I recognize that the Chair has ruled on various occasions that members who are not of the government do not have the right to make that kind of motion.

I suggest, therefore, that perhaps my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby might accept the thinking of the Chair and might be willing—because I believe he still has the floor—to change his motion to read simply that the debate be now adjourned. In other words, I am inclined to agree with the position Your Honour has taken and, if he will accept it, I will give that advice to my hon. friend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Unless hon. members have further comments to make, I would like to add a few observations. First, as to what was said by the hon. member for Crowfoot. Although the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby did say something about the effect of the motion on certain actions of the House afterward, as far as the Chair is concerned it only has before it a motion for adjournment with no such conditions attached. That point was well taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. On the other hand, the House is aware that it is the master of its own rules and, as has happened in the past, hon. members can by unanimous decision temporarily suspend any debate for a limited period of time and then return to the debate which was interrupted. However, this can only be done by unanimous consent, not by a motion of the kind we now have in front of us.

I am sympathetic to the position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He referred to the motion put forward yesterday by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, accepted by the Chair and voted upon. I must say that the Chair, in making its first observation on the motion which is before us took that circumstance into account and nevertheless came to a decision, after looking at the rules and practices of the House, that the motion before us is not in the proper form. Hon. members will observe at page 382 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition form No. 40 relating to adjournment of debate. The form reads:

That the debate do now adjourn.

The alternative form reads:

I move the adjournment of the debate.

• (4:40 p.m.)

According to past practices in this House, there has never been a condition attached to a motion to adjourn the debate. The hon. member who has put the motion might accept the suggestion that has been made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if he so wishes, and in that case the chair could accept the motion. Otherwise, it would have to refuse the motion.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made it clear that the motion was being moved without conditions; there were simply prefatory comments. However, I will accept that suggestion and adopt the revised wording proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose):

That the debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Now that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is in the House, I wonder if we can obtain the unanimous consent of the House to enable the minister to make a brief statement on the result of his conversations with the General Motors Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Mr. Speaker: The unanimous consent of the House is required for the purpose of reverting to motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I find that the amendment before the House is one of great importance to my constituents, even though I represent a relatively urban riding in Ontario. As hon. members know, the riding of Brant contains two of the largest farm implement manufacturing corporations in Canada, Massey-Ferguson and White Farm equipment. For the past two years both of these companies have been in a depressed condition, and the main reason that these industries have been depressed has been that western farmers, grain producers and wheat growers, have been unable to purchase farm machinery, mainly as a result of the policies of the government. I should like to suggest, in fact I urge, hon. members to consider that this amendment would create more cash for the western farmers and therefore dramatically demonstrates the relationship and the interdependence between western grain growers and the urban workers in eastern Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackburn: I would like to discuss for a couple of moments the very real problems in my city of Brantford. The North American Combine plant, when it was operating at peak, was employing between 1,300 and 1,400 workers on three shifts. At present there is one shift and about 200 workers in that huge, modern plant. To dramatize the situation even further, if one looks beside Massey-Ferguson and the North American Combine plant, one sees acres and acres of combines sitting there doing nothing, totally unproductive. They have been sitting there for two years, during which time the workers at the North American Combine plant have been on unemployment insurance and many of them, while waiting for unemployment insurance, have been forced to go on welfare. Some of those whose unemployment insurance benefits have run out are back on welfare. Brantford has become a depressed city to a large extent, mainly because of the government's economic policy in relation to the western farmers. White Farm Equipment, which at one time was the famous Cockshutt factory but is now an American corporation, has been in a depressed condition for two years as well. They have been in bad shape for a long time. There are men there who came back as veterans after the second world war who now have 22 and 23 years seniority, but who are unemployed. This is a disgrace to two major farm implement corporations, and I suggest once again that it is the result of the government's agricultural and economic policies in relation to the western farmers.

It makes very little difference whether the worker at the North American Combine plant is making 10 cents an hour, $2.50 or $4 an hour; the point is that there is no money in the west to buy anything from the North American Combine Plant. Very often our rural citizens are tempted to blame labour for raising the costs of farm equipment. This is a perfect example of the cost factor of labour having no bearing whatever. I suggest to you that unless the western farmer is able to get more cash, the eastern worker will continue to suffer. It was interesting to note that many of the Conservative opposition members who come from the west voted against this amendment.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Blackburn: I find that rather difficult to understand. Perhaps it is my naïveté as a very new member in this House, but it seems to me that every member of this House from a western constituency should have voted for this amendment. After all, the western farmers, the grain producers, have been suffering from a depression for the past two years, and this affects my constituency. The problem is that in a country the size of Canada, it is very difficult for the people in factories and for the farmers on the prairies to realize the interdependence and the relationship between the two. I hope that if my few brief remarks do nothing else, they will at least prove that there is a substantial interdependence. There has to be money to purchase the goods, and if the goods are purchased, in Brantford in this case, we will be able to put people back to work.

I should like to state that one of the main reasons Brantford voted NDP in the last federal election was the depressed state of the farm implement business. Yet, it seems to me that the government as yet has not recognized this. They still cannot understand that unless we can put people back to work—and this amendment would help put people back to work in the east as well as assist the western farmer—that unless we resolve this real problem of unemployment, this winter will prove disastrous. I should like to suggest that every possible attempt be made to put as much cash as possible in the pockets of the western grain producers as quickly as possible so that the demand for farm implements in eastern Canada, and specifically in the city of Brantford, will go up. Of course, then we will put people back to work and the situation in my community will be much improved. On a per capita basis, Brantford has an extremely high welfare rate. We have conflicts within the community; we have frustrations and we have very deep rooted social problems, most of which stem from our depressed economic position.

I should like to urge once again in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this situation be rectified so that if at all possible the economic interdependence between the west and the east will be dramatically brought home to the people, to the factory workers and to the farmers on the Prairies.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. gentleman a question before he resumes his seat?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member knows that he can ask a question only if he gets consent from the hon. member. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member if he is of the opinion that the effect of this amendment would be to allow the automobile workers in this area and those connected with the farm machinery industry to continue to operate on the strength of the money that will be added to the income of the western farmer?

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I would agree entirely with that question; it certainly would improve the economic situation.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very great interest that is being shown by members on the other side of the House in Bill C-244 and also because of the very great importance of this bill to western farmers, I now wish to move under Standing Order 6 (5) (a):

that the House agree to sit after six o'clock to continue consideration of the report stage of Bill C-244.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Hon. members have heard the motion just proposed by the hon. Minister, which corresponds to the provisions of Standing Order 6 (5) (a). Before putting the motion, the Chair will follow the practice that has been used in the past for such motions and read Standing Order 6 (5) (b) concerning the voting upon this question:

When Mr. Speaker puts the question on such motion, he shall ask those members who object to rise in their places. If ten or more members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

[Translation]

I have to suggest to the hon. member that before the motion is put, hon. members who are opposed to it must rise, and if ten members or more rise, automatically, the motion is deemed to be withdrawn; otherwise, it is passed.

[English]

Hon. members have heard the motion.

And more than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): According to the same Standing Order, more than ten members having risen, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for letting me have the floor at the report stage on Bill C-244, entitled "An Act respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes."

In this bill, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I should like hon. members to give the hon. member for Lotbinière the opportunity to proceed with his remarks. Private talks may be carried on outside the House.

Mr. Fortin: I am pleased to see, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members on the other side are once again being reasonable.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the basic problem which is raised by Bill C-244. First, part of the recommendation is on a certain amount. Here is an excerpt of this recommendation:

—of one hundred million dollars to actual producers resident in Canada and named in a permit book issued for the 1970-71 crop year before March 1, 1971;

Furthermore, there is in the same bill another problem which complicates the situation even more, and this is the definition given by the government for grain sale proceeds. This is why we have now an imbroglio in the House and we must participate in this debate in order to clarify the problem.

The expression "grain sale proceeds" is mentioned in section 2 (1)(c) and I will quote what follows:

—means the amount of the purchase price of grain produced on land described in a permit book and sold by a producer to a licensee, after the deduction from the purchase price of the grain of the lawful charges that are applicable to the grain on its sale to the licensee by the producer;

That is a definition grasping for accuracy. Now what the opposition and western wheat producers seek is a clear definition of "grain sales proceeds."

My colleague the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) made a speech yesterday which drew much attention and in which he defined the word "production." I believe that all hon. members will benefit from listening to it again, and I quote:

—the expression "costs of production" comprises many things which, of necessity, are involved in a production cycle; it includes not only seed grain, fertilizers and labour costs, but also capital investment, interest, depreciation on equipment and that resulting from weather conditions on the land being used. All these things must be taken into consideration if justice is to be done to the producer who devotes himself to agriculture, tilling the soil to extract from it what is required to feed mankind.

The government, by introducing Bill C-244, aims at legislation justifying grants to producers. Producers, however, rightly claim, as attested by the thousands of letters they have sent to the minister in charge, to my colleagues and to many hon. members, that the bill is unfair to them, depriving them of a stable and regular income and that the definition of what is to be supported is so vague that they are prejudiced thereby.

Mr. Speaker, that is why the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) contains the following words:

"and after the deduction of the increased costs of production, and including stabilization payments, if any;"

The amendment makes clear the wording of the bill so that producers may be sure to get justice. In order to illustrate what producers want, here is an extract of a letter sent to hon. members, and I quote:

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture or as a member of Parliament I ask you to take the following positions on Bill C-244.

Separate the payment of the $100 million from the rest of the legislation and refuse to consider Bill C-244 until the government has made such payment.

They are also asking that the meaning of that expression clarified.

Therefore, it is the duty of each hon. member to take part in the debate in order to legitimate the request of producers and make it known to the government.

Mr. Speaker, something in the recommendation accompanying the bill proves that the government is not very logical in its legislation and statements. I quote:

—the present measure respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds; to provide for the calculation, authorization and rate of stabilization payments—

Mr. Speaker, millions of dollars, not five or ten, are involved. We must find out how and to whom we shall distribute those $100 million, and what will be the basis for calculation. The recommendation is very definite. It deals with production and determination of sales proceeds.

With regard to calculating sales proceeds, it is clearly indicated that the production cycle must be included. And as my colleague from Bellechasse said, it is necessary to define what we mean by production.

If the minister responsible awards grants without taking into account the depreciation of machinery, interests on investments, bad weather—so many factors that make up the production costs—it could happen that the producer will receive less than what it has cost him. Therefore, at the end of the year, what would happen to him is what the eastern milk producers are experiencing, that is a loss.

For instance, in the province of Quebec, manufactured milk or fluid milk producers have to work, but they are hit with a surtax on their production if they produce more than their quota. They are penalized, why? Merely because the law is not clear, it does not give a clear definition of production and does not make any connection between a grant or assistance given by the government, the Canadian Dairy Commission or the Canadian Wheat Board and the real production cost.

In my view, this is not a political question, but an administrative one. However simple it may be, it could become very serious if the government is not willing to revise its positions and to accept the proposed amendment.

I do not want to take more of the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I felt that it was my duty to invite the government to revise its positions so that the difficulties faced by the milk producers in Quebec or in eastern Canada do not become the lot of the wheat producer in the West and that the government in its dealings with producers, be they from the East or from the West, be finally motivated by business-like principles and not by sentiment or politics.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, before taking part in this debate on a very important piece of farm legislation for western Canada, I have listened to the remarks of all the members on the government side as well as of the opposition and I have tried particularly to understand the position of the members opposite who since yesterday are strenuously objecting to the passage of the bill.

As for myself, I have been a member and vice-chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the same situation which exists today occurred last year at all the sittings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

It seems that each time we consider a farm bill, the same thing happens. When we try to help our farmers, those who claim to help agriculture constantly object to the government's bills.

I noticed earlier that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) stood and voted against the motion proposed by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson). So did the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. May the Chair remind the hon. member that usage forbids a member to pass remarks on votes taken in the House. These are decisions of the House, which has to accept them as a whole.

Moreover, I will take this opportunity to remind the hon. member that he is straying considerably from the subject, even if he has not started yet speaking to the two motions before us, and I will invite him to tie his remarks, as soon as possible, to the present debate.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I was just about to deal with the problem which concerns us at present. One can see the kind of cooperation we are now getting.

It is absolutely normal to ask for additional income. Farming has undergone changes and also, in a more rapid way perhaps, production standards. Productivity rates increased in that sector more rapidly perhaps than in any other industry. If we keep on producing regardless of market demand, it is perfectly logical and normal in that economic area. But, if we cannot find markets, the selling price goes down as well as the farmers' profits.

Following the discovery of new varieties of grain, of the rational use of fertilizers and improved farming methods, there has been in the western provinces, during the last few years, a production explosion as far as grain is concerned.

I do not think that situation happened only in the grain industry because broiler production and swine breeding also increased tremendously. If our production shows a 3 or 4 per cent excess over consumption, prices are directly influenced and the producers' income is affected accordingly.

I believe that voting a measure on the stabilization of prices based on an average excess of 5 years is a long-term solution in respect of farm production, and above all if we consider that when we reviewed our dairy policy, we set the production volume according to consumption.

Since then, while the dairy policy was being studied, the members of the Ralliement Créditiste and of the opposition parties to no avail have criticized the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for having managed to stabilize production in proportion to available markets.

Since then, under the dairy policy of the government, production had to be commensurate to market demand. Our dairy industry has been successful, and even if the dairy producers are not entirely happy, they have realized to what extent the government was serious and wished their production to be profitable.

The problem is not one of production. Whether it concerns grains, pork or poultry, the problem consists in establishing an orderly production plan related to marketing. That is the goal set by the present government.

I would urge hon. members—because some of them have stressed the importance of solidarity—to help producers. As regards Bill C-176, farmers are waiting for its adoption which would bring a measure of order in their farm production. They are waiting for it, and yet we are still debating a bill purporting to assist western producers whom we wish to help. We must provide this opportunity so that western and eastern producers alike may realize the importance and the seriousness of the present government in establishing an orderly production.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I implore the patience of the cavalier gentleman on the other side. I want to make a few comments. We intend to support the amendment which has been offered by the hon. member to my left. I will give some reasons for that later.

In view of Your Honour's admonition a while ago, I hope I will be able to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). He made a very good speech. He asked a question and wanted to know if he was being naïve in asking it. I have never had occasion to believe that any member of the party to my left could be characterized as naïve. I say this in the kindest possible way. The description might well be afforded to some of the people who voted for them and may live to regret this decision, but I am not able to answer for my colleagues.

We sometimes come to spontaneous decisions as to how we record our vote. I will try to answer the question asked by the hon. member. Today we felt that the circumstances of the situation and the precipitate actions taken by this government were such that we should record our opposition to them. We proceeded in this way and supported the motion, but that was defeated. The government was able to employ full use of its exceptionally obedient majority. I did not agree with or would not accept the decision that was made. The decision having been made, I was not inclined to support the amendment offered earlier.

An hon. Member: Now who is naïve?

Mr. Baldwin: I do not expect my friends to be naïve. I sometimes think members opposite exhibit far more characteristics of naïveté than the gentlemen to my left. There is no doubt that my friends on my left are socialists.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: We recognize that. We can deal with them. Years ago I attended a school in Vegreville which is well represented today. My teacher used to say "I know very well I smell a rat; I smell it in the air. I shall nip it in the bud."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: It is the near-socialists opposite that perplex us. By their refusal to support this amendment at the report stage, they have shown that they are more interested in bringing in a measure of socialism in this country than the members to my left. I am glad that this amendment has been moved. In the standing committee dealing with this issue, my colleagues from this party were probably very indefatigable and persuasive. I presume they persuaded the hon. member to move this motion at the report stage so they would not have to move it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: For that reason, I am glad to support it. There may be other reasons, but we intend to support it. I will give the reasons for supporting it shortly.

I think it absolutely repugnant to be requested, as we were a short time ago, by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) to sit well beyond the time of adjournment without any limitation as to when we would desist from the debate. Members opposite have the carriage of the proceedings of this House. For many weeks before the June recess they had every opportunity to bring forward this issue for debate, as well as other matters. Because of their incompetence, disorganization and incapacity to deal with a legislative program, they did not do so until two weeks before the time we were to recess. With precipitation and haste the minister proposed we sit for an unlimited time to deal with a matter in respect of which there are 14 amendments, including one in the name of the minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sixteen.

Mr. Baldwin: There are 16 amendments. It is this kind of action which makes us challenge the bona fides of this government and all the government ministers. Before we rise, I will be asking the government House leader what the government proposes to do on Friday and Monday, and whether they feel there is such importance attached to this bill that they will bring it back on those days. Are they going to refuse to deal expeditiously with Bill C-262 which the government thought was important enough to bring in on the first day of the resumed session. I will be asking those questions. With my usual courtesy, I am giving oral notice to the government House leader so that he will be prepared to reply.

With that little detour, I will now come specifically to the amendment. We intend to support the amendment. We in the opposition, including the members of the New Democratic Party, intend to see that the farmers of this country get a fair deal. Without this amendment, the proposed legislation will work a tremendous hardship on the farmers of western Canada. I was in my constituency during the recess, and I had an opportunity to speak to a great many farmers in the area. I spoke about this amendment and other amendments to Bill C-244, and I think it is fair to estimate that 90 per cent of those involved in agriculture at the producing end will find that this bill in its present form is repugnant to them. In the absence of an amendment of this kind, which has the effect of providing that the increased cost of production must be taken into consideration in establishing what will be the stabilization fund—

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lang: That is not what it says.

Mr. Baldwin: —the bill is an inequitable one, a monstrous bill.

The minister will have his opportunity to speak. If he wishes to speak again, I would be perfectly prepared to hear him. He could take the rest of the time available until six o'clock if he has anything useful to say.

Mr. Horner: Pay your bills.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Baldwin: I hope the House will give an additional opportunity to the minister to explain why he continues to be a lawbreaker. My hon. friend said "Pay your bills". Why does not the minister pay to the farmers of western Canada money which is owed to them under the terms of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member has taken advantage of the patience of the Chair. He should stick with the amendment as far as possible, in the short time which is available this afternoon and not go back to the subject of a debate which took place the day before yesterday.

Mr. Baldwin: I will ask for the unanimous consent of the House to allow the minister to speak, provided he deals with the questions I have raised.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member is aware that if the minister were to speak again at this time he would be in contravention of an established rule. However, as I said earlier, the House is master of its own procedure and the hon. gentleman could speak again if there were unanimous consent. I do not know what kind of precedent this would create, but I am prepared to ask whether there is unanimous consent. At the same time, the Chair is not sure whether the minister wishes to take part in the debate at this point.

Mr. Lang: I would be glad to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Would the House give unanimous consent to the minister to speak a second time?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No. I would be quite happy to give consent if, before the minister took the floor, we had an assurance that the bill would be divided into two parts so that the farmers could get the money which is available to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Taking into account the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena and some of the "nays" the Chair has heard, there does not seem to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Lang: Thanks, anyway.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): There is just a minute or two available to us before six o'clock. I wish the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) were here because I have something to say which relates to the position he took a while ago. I do not like commenting in their absence upon the attitudes taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. However, the minister chose to leave, and he must live with it. I refer to the attempt made by the government a few moments ago to get the House to sit past the normal hour of adjournment. This practice is followed occasionally and, in other circumstances, might have been an acceptable course. But in this case it amounts to an attempt by the government to legislate by exhaustion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Hon. members are aware that the rule of relevancy is very important. I do not see how the last remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) can be related to the two motions we have before us. He has referred to a completely different motion, one which might have been brought up during the debate. That motion did not relate at all to the debate upon which we are now engaged, and the Chair feels that at this time the hon. member should direct his remarks to the motions before us.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to abide by your ruling and admonition. Even though I might have been slightly out of order, I was right on the point.

Perhaps I should indicate at the outset that I intend to move an amendment to the amendment presently before us. I shall do so for the sake of greater clarity. This will provide hon. members of the House who have already spoken in the debate, and who have had a great deal to say, an opportunity to respond to some of the erroneous views which members on the Liberal benches have put forward.

The amendment I should like to place before you, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is as follows:

That the amendment be amended by deleting all the words after "deduction" and substituting therefor the following: "of the amount by which the costs of production for the crop year within which a levy under section 9 is deducted exceeds the cost of production for the crop year ending on July 31, 1970."

The purpose is very simple. It is to insert a base year upon which to measure increased costs of production. We felt that without this sort of clarification the amendment would have left wide open the question just what was meant by increased costs of production. Increased compared to what? The sub-amendment specifies a particular year. That would be the base, and the increased costs of production would be the increase over and above the costs in that particular year. The intention is to provide clarity.

When the debate resumes, I am sure I shall have an opportunity to expand upon the merits of the amendment I have just moved and perhaps to deal also with the major objection which every farmer and farm organization I know has raised to this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Skeena is probably aware that it is now six o'clock. The Chair would appreciate it if the hon. member would not expect an immediate decision on this motion. It is an amendment to a motion amending a clause in a complicated bill, and perhaps the Chair might be given an opportunity to consider its procedural acceptability. I should like to look further into the matter.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Might I ask the leader of the House what the business is to be for Friday, and for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week? We know what has been proposed for tomorrow. I ask this so that hon. members can prepare themselves in such a way as to facilitate the passage of whatever good legislation the government might be able to bring forward.

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate the interest of the hon. member. My dilemma is not unlike his. There are so many competing items of priority legislation that it might be difficult to choose among them.

The Minister of Justice mentioned today that we would, hopefully, arrange to deal with the Judges' Act on Friday afternoon. Subject to confirmation tomorrow, we shall call the Employment Support Act on orders of the day on Friday, then the Judges' Act and the tax bill. I am not quite certain when I can call the agriculture stabilization bill again.

An hon. Member: Don't bother.

Mr. MacEachen: I shall tell the hon. gentleman as soon as a decision is made.

• (6:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Was the hon. member for Skeena rising on a point of order?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No, Mr. Speaker; I was just going to say that I have complete confidence that Your Honour will make a favourable ruling on the sub-amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member should not prejudge the issue. It being six o'clock, the House will stand adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

TABLING OF LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copy of a letter dated September 17 which I sent to the Quebec premier in reply to the letter which he sent me on September 2 and which I tabled in the House on September 15.

[English]

My letter indicates the readiness of the federal government to have discussions about the proposal Mr. Bourassa has advanced concerning the adjustment of family allowance payments to effect an integration of federal and provincial programs. Mr. Bourassa also mentioned questions relating to Manpower centres and the professional training of adults. I agree that they too should be discussed as well as other problems, especially in the area of social policy.

The letter indicates that if from such discussions it appears that arrangements can be made that will be satisfactory from both the federal and provincial points of view, they will be submitted to the cabinet for consideration. Provinces other than Quebec will, of course, be interested in any arrangements that might seem feasible and there would be discussion with them before any final decision was made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DELAY BY EMBASSY IN ROME IN NOTIFYING PARENTS OF SON'S DEATH—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 and in light of disturbing revelations of a serious failure on the part of a Canadian mission abroad to deal effectively with the aftermath of a tragedy affecting a Canadian citizen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence forthwith investigate the circumstances surrounding the role of the Canadian Embassy in Rome in reference to the delay in communicating with the next of kin of David Bagguley. That said committee also examine the general question of the present capacity of Canadian diplomatic missions to render meaningful, useful assistance to Canadian citizens travelling abroad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hillsborough. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not. The motion cannot be put.

PROPOSED AMCHITKA NUCLEAR TEST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I would like to move a motion because of urgent and pressing necessity which does not require elaboration on my part. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather):

The House of Commons of Canada extends its appreciation to the congress of the United States of America for the action it took in banning the nuclear device test scheduled to take place at Amchitka Island and expresses the hope that the President of the United States of America will also join us in banning the proposed test and that this decision of the House of Commons of Canada be communicated to the President of the United States forthwith.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not. The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I might raise a point of order which I would ask Your Honour to consider seriously. I know Your Honour has said on other occasions with respect to motions under Standing Order 43 that it is sufficient for Your Honour simply to hear a negative response, but I would ask that you consider seriously certain other factors. First, it might well be that an hon. member might say "No" but from behind the curtains rather than from his proper place. Or the dissenting voice might even come from the gallery.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Knowing Your Honour's powers of perception, I am not suggesting you would not be able to recognize the difference, but there might be other Speakers in the future who would not. To conclude the point of order, I want to suggest that Your Honour consider requiring any hon. member who objects to rise in his place and say so—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): —so there will be no question of doubt and so the record will be clear that there was a negative response and from whom it came.

Mr. Speaker: The point made by the hon. member is one of great interest. As he knows, the Chair is required to interpret the rules as they are drafted. If the rules are drafted in such a way as to indicate that an hon. member objecting to such a motion should rise and express his negative opinion, then, of course, the Chair would expect this to be done, but as long as the Standing Order is drafted in its present terms I think it should be sufficient for the Chair to hear negative response. I am not sure what the requirements are for a good Speaker, but I gather that among the more basic ones are that the Speaker should have good eyesight and good hearing.

Mr. Jerome: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, as one who has frequently been known to negative as loudly as possible motions put forward under Standing Order 43, simply in order that we may get on with important government business, may I say I found unanimous accord with the motion expressed on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously the hon. member will never be a Speaker. His hearing is not good enough.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member who has just spoken, sitting as he does among the government benches, is at all right in his statement, perhaps Your Honour would consider asking again whether there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure it would be very helpful if every day the Chair were asked to put the request for consent to a motion a second time. The request has been put and in my estimation it was negatived. It may be that, on reflection, some hon. members who said "no" feel they would not be prepared to say "no" again. I would be prepared to put the request a second time if there were unanimous consent that I be allowed to do so. I draw to the attention of hon. members that a motion having been put and decided by the Chair it cannot be put a second time unless there is unanimous agreement.

Is there unanimous agreement that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena be put at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I believe there may be unanimous agreement.

Mr. McIntosh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, once a motion has been put I think we should abide by the rules of the House. I said no and I suggest the motion should therefore not be put.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's point is well taken. This is what I feared. The motion was put and was negatived, and unless there is unanimous consent it should not be put a second time.

ASSISTANCE IN RETURNING BODIES OF ACCIDENT VICTIMS FROM SPAIN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, under Standing Order 43, to present a motion of extreme urgency.

My motion refers to the tragedy that occurred last Friday, September 17, at Valdepenas, Spain, causing the death of 17 Quebec citizens.

I was advised this morning, Mr. Speaker, by a person who lost two relatives in the tragedy, that next of kin cannot claim the remains of the victims without paying $2,000 per body to a foreign company operating in Montreal which, it would appear, has approached all the relatives of the victims to that effect.

I am also informed, Mr. Speaker, that several families have vainly tried to get help from the Department of External Affairs in this connection.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the following motion for humanitarian reasons and in order to help the stricken families to repatriate in short order the remains of their next of kin:

That in the opinion of this House, in view of the tragic situation and the difficulties encountered by families in repatriating the remains of the Valdepenas tragedy victims, the government should make available to the victims' relatives the required air transport, offer the full co-operation of the Department of External Affairs to assist the stricken families in their arrangements for repatriating the remains without delay, and investigate on the requirements imposed on the victims' families by the company involved.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the pressing necessity of this question and its humanitarian aspects, the House will give its unanimous consent to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade). As the hon. member knows, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before it may be put. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent so the motion cannot be put.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—MEASURES TO ASSIST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 in a case of urgent necessity.

The pulp and paper industry is experiencing a critical period due to soft market conditions and the implications of the floating dollar. Besides the resultant lay-off of some 4,000 of the work force in the past nine months across the country and continuing setbacks, a specific case of hardship has reached one city in Canada, Corner Brook, Newfoundland, which is almost completely dependent on the industry and where a partial close-down of production will tend to cripple the economy and affect some 30,000 citizens.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay Labrador (Mr. Peddle):

That the government take the initiative and hold immediate discussions with the Canada pulp and paper associations and the labour movement, to establish proposals to rehabilitate the industry and to provide measures to avoid further lay-offs and shutdowns.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1970—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

September 21, 1971—The President of the Privy Council:

That the Public Accounts for the year ended 31 March 1970, tabled in the House January 12, 1971, and the Auditor General's report thereon, tabled in the House June 4, 1971, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROVISION OF PROGRAMS TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT THIS WINTER—PRESENTATION AT MEETING WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which is based on the statement made in the annual review of the Economic Council of Canada that "the revival of such programs as municipal winter works and winter housing should be considered in formulating a more integrated and selective strategy for manpower policy". In view of this statement and in view of the urgent need for job programs for the coming winter, would the Prime Minister indicate if it is the government's intention to initiate action on such programs immediately for implementation this winter?

• (2:20 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition is referring to the report which I believe was made public just today, I must confess I have not read it yet and therefore am not in a position to comment on it.

Mr. Stanfield: I had assumed that, like myself, the Prime Minister would give urgent attention to the report of the Economic Council of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: A speed reader.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Would the hon. Leader of the Opposition kindly ask the question.

Mr. Stanfield: With regard to the meeting with the provinces about which the Prime Minister has told us on a couple of occasions, in all seriousness and with all due courtesy and respect I should like to ask whether he has assured the premiers whom he has invited to any such conference that the government will in fact present specific programs in connection with jobs for this winter, as has been requested by many of the premiers?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF MAURICE SCHUMANN, FOREIGN MINISTER OF FRANCE

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the right hon. Prime Minister replies to the question which has just been put by the Leader of the Opposition, may I announce to hon. members of this House the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a distinguished visitor, His Excellency Mr. Maurice Schumann, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the French Republic.

Mr. Minister, we appreciate your visit, which can but consolidate the traditional friendship between France and Canada. We, members of the House, are particularly gratified by your presence among us, as a token of your attachment and that of your government to parliamentary institutions.

On behalf of all hon. members, Mr. Minister, I welcome you most cordially.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROVISION OF PROGRAMS TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT THIS WINTER—PRESENTATION AT MEETING WITH PROVINCES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I answered this very question yesterday and said to the leader of the New Democratic Party that I had written to all provincial premiers, as of July, to suggest several dates when we could meet and discuss economic, tax and other matters.

I have repeated publicly that the federal government intends to discuss, then, mainly the problem of unemployment and economic matters in general. I must inform this House that since I gave this answer yesterday, it seems that we shall agree on a date which will be rather late in fall, but again I cannot say anything until the premiers agree with me concerning one of the dates which I have suggested to them, be it in October, November or even later. I am in no position to convene them myself.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the answer to my question is no.

[English]

In view of the fact that the suggestion box program as carried on within the Public Service has evidently been very successful in getting some right things done, again I ask with all respect and courtesy, would the Prime Minister consider extending this program to my colleagues and myself and hon. members to my left so that we could deal directly with departments and perhaps get some action with regard to the creation of jobs?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South on a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know whether it is exactly a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that perhaps other hon. members have supplementaries that are exactly such.

[Translation]

The House might allow the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Joliette who seems to have a supplementary.

OLD AGE SECURITY—LOWERING OF PENSIONABLE AGE TO PROMOTE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): That is a fact, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, who is searching for a solution to the unemployment of those under 25 years of age, if, when he meets with provincial ministers, he would consider proposing the creation of an old age security pension for which one would be eligible at 60, thus reducing present unemployment by more than 50 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: I have a feeling that the hon. member's question has already been asked yesterday or the day before.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT—PARTICIPATION WITH PROVINCES IN WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which a reading of Hansard of yesterday will clearly indicate was not answered by the Prime Minister. It is this. As a winter works program is by far the cheapest and easiest way to provide work needed by people in the winter period and as such a program requires planning now to make it effective at that time—

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Hees: I thought I heard the referee's whistle, Mr. Speaker. I guess it was just the usual noise from the other side. I will continue. Is the government now planning to advise the provinces that it intends to participate with them in a winter works program so that planning can start now and this program can be effective in the winter months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must again today, as I did yesterday, call for the co-operation of hon. members. The suggestion was made at the end of the question period yesterday that there were 20 members who were waiting for an opportunity to ask their questions. I recognize the same 20 members today. I hope that before the end of the question period I shall be given an opportunity to recognize them. I suggest to hon. members that if we spend half the question period on the question asked originally by one hon. member—on behalf of others, and I appreciate that—it becomes materially, physically and metaphysically impossible for the Chair to have all hon. members recognized before the end of the question period. I invite my colleagues to co-operate with the Chair and with their colleagues in this respect.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have an excellent supplementary but I will bow to your ruling and not ask it.

MANPOWER

POLICY STUDY IN LIGHT OF CRITICISM BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in the hope that perhaps he or his officials have at least skimmed through the annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. In view of the criticism of the manpower policy in this review, particularly that the policy is not achieving the goal of greater efficiency in manpower use in Canada, I wonder whether the minister has studied this problem and has some changes in mind in respect of the set-up of his department and the law governing it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this report deserves a much more thorough review than anybody could have given it at this point in time. We have noted the tremendous increase in employment on a year to year basis and in recent months in Canada. Despite a very impressive increase in terms of employment, there is still ongoing challenge with regard to unemployment. It is, of course, true so far as the manpower department is concerned that both its placement functions and its training and retraining function in respect of the training and retraining of individuals are bound to be less effective in periods where jobs are relatively more difficult for people to obtain. The record of the training programs, however, indicates a very significant improvement in the earning levels, in the performance levels and in the employment levels of those persons who have been trained compared with their record beforehand. We are, of course, studying this continually in an effort to see whether it can be improved even more.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, will the minister undertake to make a statement to the House indicating the results of the training as to what percentage of those trained have in fact obtained jobs, what percentage are still unemployed when they finish their training and the other factors which he mentioned?

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lang: I did that, of course, in the last portion of the session at the time the department's estimates were before the Committee. I will look at whether we have a further report at this stage and, if so, make it available in due course.

EFFECT OF U.S. IMPORT SURTAX—STATUS OF CONSULTATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering the 10 per cent surtax on imports entering the United States, has he any new indications that Canada will be protected against this measure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, and that is why the government proposed a special measure to the House. Indeed, in the next few days we shall probably ask the House to pass the bill on third reading.

[English]

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX ON AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ASSISTANCE TO PRIMARY PRODUCERS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he now in a position to announce details of the government decision to render assistance to primary producers of agricultural products who have been adversely affected by the United States surcharge, and what action are they required to take?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am not in a position to make that announcement today, but following the undertaking I gave to the House and the country in my comments about two weeks ago we have been working on some commodities and I hope that within the next few days I can give further details.

CORNWALL—ACTION TO AVERT FURTHER LAY-OFFS BY COURTAULDS—ASSISTANCE UNDER EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mine may be a related question, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that Cornwall is already suffering under a 20 per cent unemployment rate, is the government going to take any action? In view of the announced delay until we deal with other matters, has he any intention to take specific action to avert further lay-offs at Courtaulds Limited as a result of the loss of business with the United States and because of the very specific situation there? Would he also indicate to the House and to the people of Cornwall whether or not the employment support bill can be expanded or whether or not there is any action under that which the Prime Minister might pursue to ensure against these proposed lay-offs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is my understanding that the bill still before the House is one which will be applicable in all parts of Canada, and I am hopeful that the people of Cornwall and the industries in Cornwall will be able to obtain help under it.

POSSIBILITY OF SURTAX ON IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Would he say whether he or the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any of their officers indicated to the Japanese ambassador or any of his officials during the recent meeting in Toronto that unless Japan or other countries drastically reduce their exports to Canada, Canada would consider imposing a surcharge?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, but one of the things we have brought to the attention of the Japanese is that we certainly did not want to be subject to receiving goods which are diverted because of the surtax in the United States.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the government of Canada considering a surcharge or any other measure which would effectively control the import into Canada of goods from countries such as Japan?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE IN RETURNING BODIES OF ACCIDENT VICTIMS FROM SPAIN

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister in connection with the Valdepenas tragedy.

Is the Prime Minister considering the possibility of giving financial assistance for the air fares of persons whose relatives died in that tragedy, in order to enable them to bring back as soon as possible the remains of the victims, since they are unable to do so at the present time, in view of the considerable amount asked to send back the remains?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informs me that the matter is being considered for the moment.

I take the liberty of adding that I am strongly under the impression that the allegations made by the member a while ago concerning the behaviour of our embassy officials there are entirely gratuitous.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I must say, to correct the official report, that I have never claimed that the Canadian embassy in Spain had been remiss in its duty. I said that the next of kin of the victims had gone to the Department of External Affairs, here in Canada, and that no one had shown any interest in the matter.

I should like to put the question again to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does he intend to consider this matter and give the necessary assistance to the relatives of the victims, either through free air transport or some form of financial help, that the remains might be repatriated as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I be privileged to add a word to what the Prime Minister has said. We have been very conscious of this dreadful tragedy in Spain. Our embassy has been doing everything possible to help. I had under consideration whether there might be some way in which help might be given to bring the bodies of the victims home. I do not think it could be in the form of subsidization of air fares, but there are other things we have under consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

As the victims' relatives have asked me what the government could soon do to repatriate the remains, I would ask the hon. minister to specify—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena.

MANPOWER

ACTIVITIES OF CONSULTATIVE SERVICES IN ASSISTING LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the commitment he made yesterday to communicate to the House the activities of his manpower consultative services in areas where lay-offs have taken place, for example, General Motors in both Ontario and Quebec, is the minister in a position now to give us a full disclosure of what his department has been doing in these areas?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I will be glad to do so if the House will bear with me. In the case of General Motors at Ste. Thérèse—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister that the answer should be as short as possible. I have the impression that he is now launching into a statement which normally should be made on motions, and because of the fact that the question period is limited in time I would hope that answers to questions would be as short as possible.

Mr. Lang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I did suggest yesterday implicitly—

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Given the importance of this issue at this time, I wonder if we could obtain the unanimous agreement of the House to revert to motions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Lang: We have, of course, so many involvements with so many companies, and each lay-off is important. If I were to make a statement on motions each time, the House would be occupied with this at all times.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Muir: That is what happens under this government.

Mr. Hees: So many plants are closing down because of the maladministration of this government.

Mr. Lang: On the other hand, I would be delighted at any time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East rising on a point of order?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Surely the minister would want to correct the impression he has just left. If he is referring to the 90 per cent unemployed in Guysborough county in Nova Scotia, for example, then I suggest he owes those people an apology.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That of course is not a point of order. Again I caution hon. members that if we embark on points of order and questions of privilege during the 40 minutes there will be those celebrated 20 members left by the wayside at the end of the question period. For the moment the minister still has the floor.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, shortly after the first confidential notification of the lay-off in the case of the plant at Ste. Thérèse it was possible to have discussions with the company and with the union, as well as with the interested department in the province of Quebec, and to arrange for the setting up of an adjustment committee to consider in the usual way the many ways in which manpower services might be available to assist with the problems of the individual workers who were due to be laid off. The timing of the words was chosen in view of the plant's announcement as indicated at that time. All parties have agreed they will co-operate to assist the workers who will be displaced, and of course the usual investigation is taking place about supplementary benefits, and so on.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a supplementary question. In light of the great amount of information that he has there, obviously relating to a whole series of lay-offs, which does not bespeak very well the government's economic attitudes, would he be prepared to say to the House that on a certain day, say the first or second day of next week, he would be prepared to appear and make a complete statement on motions about the involvement of his department in those areas?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not select, from among lay-offs occurring, some as being more important than others. Each lay-off is of extreme importance to the people involved. Therefore I am willing to indicate to hon. members privately or in other ways the state of affairs that applies to each. I am willing to put these things down in writing from time to time as requested.

STE. THÉRÈSE, QUEBEC—POSSIBLE FURTHER LAY-OFFS BY GENERAL MOTORS—ASSURANCE OF MAINTENANCE OF PRODUCTION IN CANADA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could the minister tell us whether he has received from the General Motors authorities in Ste. Thérèse a statement to the effect that the employees in this plant would not abnormally suffer from adjustments being made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting yesterday with the officials of the company; they have shown me a number of opportunities offered to them in their effort to adjust their production. I am not in a position, of course, to share this with the House, but none of them indicates any shutdown at Ste. Thérèse. As a matter of fact, all possibilities considered at this time suggest maximum use of the GM plants in Canada. Since they invested more than half a billion dollars in the last five or six years, General Motors are surely not going to close down their establishments in Canada tomorrow.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has said that he cannot handle all the questions that are posed these days regarding the number of lay-offs taking place in Canada, would the Prime Minister give him a little help so that he can handle this problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could the minister inform the House whether or not the intended cessation of the production of Pontiacs at the Ste. Thérèse plant of General Motors was discussed with the General Motors officers and, if so, did the minister, on behalf of the workers involved in Canada, urge that corporation to ensure that if and when production of that car ceases at Ste. Thérèse, Quebec, the production will be picked up elsewhere in Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer I have given implies that very strongly. When I mentioned that the company had no intention of closing any of its establishments I was implying that the company, in readjusting its production, would see to it that all the plants presently in existence would be fully active. Of course I cannot say, and the company says it has not decided—I think it is still in contemplation—where that particular model will be built and where other particular models will be built. This is presently being studied by General Motors.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on one further supplementary and then pass on to another hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my one further supplementary is this: did the minister obtain a commitment from General Motors Corporation to inform him well in advance—by well in advance I mean several months in advance—of their intention to cease production of the Pontiac at Ste. Thérèse, if they so decide?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said yesterday, that usually department communications with these companies are very good. I think we have had an accident de parcours. I do not know how you translate that in English, but I think the company is now more fully aware or realizes better that it is not in its best interests not to provide information, and proper information, and in sufficient time for the government to use in answering questions such as the ones that were asked of me two days ago. There is no doubt that there were a number of aspects of this matter in which it would have been useful for me to have the information. I think the company realizes that now better than ever.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SUGGESTED INTERVENTION OF MINISTER IN STRIKE AT AMERICAN SMELTING AND REFINING COMPANY

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister advise the House if any approach has been made to his department by either the United Steel Workers Union or the American Smelting and Refining Company of Buchans, Newfoundland, or by the premier or government of Newfoundland, with regard to the possible intervention of the minister in the strike which has left 550 miners at Buchans idle since June of this year?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to serve me notice, and I have been unable to find any record of any request by the union, by the company involved, or by the Premier of Newfoundland or the government of Newfoundland for federal participation in this labour dispute. I would imagine the fundamental reason for this is that the dispute is within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Peddle: In view of the apparent impotence of the Newfoundland government in this matter and in view of the disastrous economic impact of this strike at Buchans, is there any way within the law by which the minister's acknowledged skill in such matters can be brought into play to affect a settlement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INTERRUPTION OF DEBATE ON INCOME TAX BILL TO INTRODUCE LEGISLATION EFFECTING TAX CUTS AND OTHER ECONOMIC MEASURES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is actually one that was left by the wayside yesterday and is relevant to the original question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. I direct it to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the government has reintroduced Bill C-244, has the Prime Minister backed down from or changed his insistence on Monday that new economic measures will not be considered until after passage of the tax bill? If so, will the government introduce legislation that will bring in tax cuts and other ways of stimulating the economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, we always attach the utmost importance to getting on with the debate on the tax bill. The country knows that if the bill is going to be effective and benefit millions of people from January 1 on we will have to have it adopted not too late in the fall. If there can be agreement among the house leaders on bringing other items of legislation in for very short periods, the government will not be absolutely rigid about this. The important thing is that all hon. members realize what ultimate deadline they are working against if the tax reform bill is going to become law in time to be effective as of January 1.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It arises from a number of complaints that I have received as I am sure many other hon. members have also. In view of the skyrocketing costs of welfare, what steps are the manpower offices across Canada taking to follow through on jobs that have been referred to suitable applicants but which have been refused because the persons involved wish to take welfare?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would want to prepare a full report in answer to a question of that magnitude involving as it does relations between the provincial authorities and the federal authorities.

Mr. Hales: Can the minister assure the House that he will make such a report very soon?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister.

On November 17, 1941, the government of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King decided to control prices and salaries. In view of the current economic situation in North America, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether there will be a new control of prices and salaries to celebrate this thirtieth anniversary?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we overlooked this anniversary, since the hon. member is reminding us that it is today. Instead of introducing such measures, the government believes that Canadians should ponder over the circumstances which made it possible for those measures to be successful during the last war, before asking that they again be invoked in peace time.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: As long as this government is in power, there will always be emergencies.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DELAY BY CANADIAN EMBASSY IN ROME IN NOTIFYING PARENTS OF SON'S DEATH

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns public confidence in the communications branch of his department. Will the minister explain to the House and to the family of the late David Bagguley of Ottawa the utter lack of communication in the Department of External Affairs in relation to his tragic and unexpected death in Italy on June 30 and about which his parents were not notified until August 6?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the department has been in touch with the relatives and has expressed our profound regret at the lack of communication. I can only say to the hon. member and to the House that a very serious mistake was made. It was made during a time when there was a tremendous load upon the embassy. I should like to assure the House that I do not personally believe that this is justification for a mistake like this, and steps are being taken to see that it does not occur again.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Will an investigation be made as to the efficiency of our embassy in Italy?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The implication of what I have been saying is that we do not think that the communications were adequate. It ought to have been impossible for a member of the staff to have been informed of the death of a Canadian and for this not to have been passed on to his superiors. I can only express my profound regret that such a tragic event should have happened.

TAXATION

REQUEST BY MUNICIPALITIES FOR EXEMPTION FROM SALES TAX ON ANTI-POLLUTION EQUIPMENT

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that manufacturers and producers will be granted blanket exemptions from federal sales tax on all anti-pollution equipment, can the minister give some indication that he intends to listen to the wishes of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities and grant municipalities the same exemption on anti-pollution equipment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have received communications from them and, of course, their representations will receive consideration.

SPORTS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO YOUTH RECREATION CENTRE, FLIN FLON, AND FOR INSTALLATION OF ASTROTURF, WINNIPEG

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises out of the reply I received from the minister recently concerning the request regarding the availability of federal financial assistance for a youth recreation centre at Flin Flon, Manitoba. The minister stated at that time that the department's limited funds have made it necessary to restrict assistance to national organizations and, under certain conditions, to the provinces. Would the minister tell us how he reconciles that answer with the donation of $50,000 recently to the stadium in Hamilton for Astroturf?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is an argument rather than a question. I do not think it is in order.

Mr. Hees: The stadium is in the minister's riding; that is the answer.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that a question asked in those terms is not a question but an argument. I have suggested before that when hon. members ask ministers to reconcile one statement with another they are debating the matter and a question should not be asked in those terms.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question. It is a related question. Is the minister in receipt of a request for assistance for Astroturf from the Criterion Athletic Club of Winnipeg?

Hon. John Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—LEGALITY OF PROPOSED SOLUTION TO CHICKEN AND EGG WAR

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inform the House if the proposed solution to the chicken and egg war now being worked out by various governments is in conformity with the British North America Act which allows free and uninterrupted trade across provincial boundaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously inviting the minister to express a legal opinion. A question in those terms is not in order.

YOUTH

INVESTIGATION OF USE OF GRANT BY STUDENTS AT TARBOTVALE, N.S.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Has the minister responded, and what action has he taken, to complaints regarding nudity and other activities being subsidized by a $6,000 grant to six so-called students to operate an establishment at Tarbotvale in the constituency of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Greene: Are you preaching for a call, Bob?

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, may I further ask the hon. gentleman whether part of the grant will be used to provide clothing for those students?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that such a matter has escaped my notice. I shall endeavour to find out and answer the hon. member.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC FOLLOWING VICTORIA CONFERENCE

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering the correspondence between himself and the Quebec premier which he has just tabled and his very encouraging answer to Mr. Bourassa, I wish to ask him if there is any hope for constitutional reform, taking into account the fact that social security was the stumbling-block in Victoria? May we hope—

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for my part, I am prepared to hope. I feel that the question should rather be directed to Premier Bourassa who, when he said no in Victoria, added that he needed further information. Perhaps he hopes to get this during those discussions and, in that case, everything should go well. But, once again, he is the one who should state publicly what kind of explanations and elucidation he mainly wants to obtain and what he is driving at.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RESPONSE TO COMPLAINT BY UNION RESPECTING OPERATION OF NEW GLASGOW OFFICE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Could he indicate to the House, particularly for the benefit of my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova, and myself, the response he has made, if any, to the telegram from Mr. Charles Wallace, President of Local 1231, United Steel Workers of America, with respect to the operation of the unemployment insurance office in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I received the telegram from this particular union complaining about service in the New Glasgow area. I asked for an inquiry and I find that the staff, contrary to what is said in the telegram, has not been cut. It consisted of 16 members before the new act came in and there are still 16 members there. There is no indication of delays in the Moncton-Halifax area in hearing appeal cases and there has been no difficulty in the New Glasgow area since the new act came into effect. I have asked the Unemployment Insurance Commission to get in touch with the union directly in light of conflicting versions.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST BY PRAIRIE PROVINCE MINISTERS FOR MEETING TO DISCUSS FEDERAL POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Has the minister received a request from any or all of the Ministers of Agriculture for Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba for a meeting to discuss proposed federal agricultural policy and in particular Bill C-244? If so, can he inform the House as to the nature of his reply?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram asking for a meeting with the prairie agricultural ministers. The telegram was addressed to me by the Minister of Agriculture for Alberta. I suggested specifically, the date of October 1. I think it should be possible for me to meet with them on that date.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF MONEY UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the impasse which has developed regarding Bill C-244 and the debate surrounding the administration of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, can the minister indicate if the cabinet has now given serious consideration to paying the $61 million due under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act as of August 1, 1970, of which amount $40 million is owing for the 1969-70 wheat pool? I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, in hopeful anticipation that the government will abide by the law of the land while at the same time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest again that the question period should not be used for the making or repeating of speeches which are normally made after the question period. The hon. member has asked a question and perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I might have an opportunity a little later today to reply at greater length than you might allow at this time.

STABILIZATION BILL—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT ON CONSOLIDATION OF SMALL FARM UNITS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. Can the minister say if, under the proposal for a prairie grain stabilization plan, any final report has been prepared on the consolidation of small farm units into units of more efficient size? If so, can the minister say whether this report will be made available to the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the paragraph in the statement to which the hon. member refers had reference to some plans being developed by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. Further details about these plans were subsequently issued by the minister, and I know that a full copy was distributed to all hon. members of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the government House leader about the business for the rest of this week and the beginning of next week, if he can direct his mind to that at this time.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, among the items that will be called will be the Judges Act. I hope to get consent later today to deal with it in a special way tomorrow. We will call the tax bill, the employment support bill and the agricultural stabilization bill. We will certainly call the employment support bill as the first item on Monday. I will probably call the agricultural stabilization bill as the first item tomorrow and, following that, the tax bill. For the moment, I reserve the opportunity to change the first item tomorrow if it seems desirable.

Mr. Baldwin: Can the minister indicate, for the benefit of members who want to participate in these important debates, whether that order will be preserved or is the minister reserving the right to change it from day to day?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I do not propose to change the item suggested for Monday. The only one that might change is the first item to be called tomorrow, and probably that will not be changed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It relates to a directive which Your Honour gave a week ago Monday at the conclusion of my speech and the point of order that I raised with regard to the regularity of Bill C-259. Your Honour indicated in very pointed terms that the House leaders should meet to discuss the nature of some procedure to cure apparent defects in Bill C-259. To date, no such House leaders' meeting has been called. The House is proceeding contrary to Your Honour's directive, with the consideration of a possibly imperfect bill which is contrary to the rules of the House. I hope the minister will be able to tell us when and if he plans to call such a meeting to produce some sort of solution to this situation.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that I have exactly the same interpretation of Your Honour's ruling as the hon. member. However, I propose to meet with my opposite numbers at an early date. I will be happy to discuss this suggestion along the lines put forward by the hon. member.

While I am on my feet, would it be possible to raise another item with respect to the business of the House? I understand that discussions have taken place between the Minister of Justice and members opposite, as a result of which some expectation exists that we might be able to deal with the Judges Act in an hour and a half tomorrow afternoon. I know this is a firm expectation, not a commitment. There might be agreement to have an order of the House to commence with the Judges Act at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon, so that regardless of what other business is before the House at that time we will deal with the Judges Act.

Mr. Baldwin: We are agreeable to that, Mr. Speaker. Within that period of one and a half hours, with the usual expedition that this party shows in dealing with bills, it should be through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are quite willing for the government to exercise its authority over the business of the House and to call this item at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon or even earlier. It is always possible that it might be through by four o'clock, but I hope it is not being assumed that there will be an order of the House that the bill is to be through all stages by four o'clock. This might happen, but I remind the President of the Privy Council that there are several report stage amendments and third reading. We do not mind when the bill is called, but we do not want to be tied at this moment to a cutoff point.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, our party has agreed to this proposal, although we were anxious to express our objections, namely, that it is not the usual procedure and it is difficult, as the previous speaker has said, to foresee the length of the debate. We are wondering why this was not discussed during the meeting of the House leaders of all parties.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It is the understanding of the Chair that the order agreed to now is that the item will be called at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon. These are the terms of the order now agreed to by the House.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For two days in a row I have tried to get a very important question before the Prime Minister. Unfortunately, as the government has been using every opportunity to turn Parliament into a time machine, I find it almost impossible to get matters of great urgency before the ministry which, after all, should be responsible to the elected representatives of the people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: I hear a lot of static coming from members opposite, Mr. Speaker, including the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene).

An hon. Member: He does not have any energy.

Mr. Hees: And he has very few resources left.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would indicate what the point of order is so that the Chair might be given an opportunity to rule thereon.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, there is so much noise coming from the other side that I can hardly hear myself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: In my 20 years in this House of Commons there has never been a time when it has been so difficult to get messages of concern through to the ministry. This is partly because of the fact private members have lost their privileges and also because of the catcalls from the trained seals on the government benches.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech. I suggest he is not making a point of order. He has the floor and I would like him to indicate the point of order on which he seeks a ruling from the Chair.

Mr. Dinsdale: I thought all members in this chamber were equal. I am wondering, in view of the fact that I have to be away on an important public engagement tomorrow in Manitoba, whether I could at least pose my question and if the government would deign even to take it into consideration and reply at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now asking that the Chair seek the unanimous consent of the House to return to the question period so that he may ask his question or that the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard the negative response which the Chair has received. I regret very much that the hon. member has been placed in the position where he was not able to ask his question. As he realizes, it is difficult for the Chair to try to give every member an opportunity. I did not realize the hon. member was unable to ask a question yesterday. My impression was otherwise, but if I am mistaken I apologize to the hon. member.

Mr. Dinsdale: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate Your Honour's difficulty. It is impossible for anyone to cope with the growing arrogance of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning Hansard and affecting the privileges of all hon. members. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) a question which is recorded at page 8067 of Hansard. He answered in English. I listened to his answer very carefully. In the last line but one of the answer there appears these words: "There is almost no unemployment there." The minister did not say any such thing. He has smuggled in the word "almost".

• (3:10 p.m.)

Again, on September 21 I asked a question of the parliamentary secretary to the same minister. The question and answer are recorded at page 8036 of Hansard. A whole phrase has been deleted from Hansard. He said in his reply: "As the hon. member knows, there have been consultations going on for two years." That whole phrase has been deleted.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: I believe this is a matter coming under Your Honour's jurisdiction and I suggest it be re-emphasized that the privilege of hon. members in altering Hansard does not extend to altering the sense of the language used, and certainly does not extend to the deletion of a whole phrase or the smuggling in of extra words.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has re-emphasized the position on behalf of the Chair. He has, of course, stated the situation correctly and I believe it should be known to all hon. members. Orders of the day. Order, please. I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition. We have a further point of order to consider before we call on him.

Mr. Marshall: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that since September 7, when the House resumed, I have been recognized once during the question period. I simply wish to announce that I represent 100,000 people and I am back in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO FOLLOW PROVISIONS OF TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House, conscious that the Government is bound by the laws of this Parliament as are the citizens of this country, condemns the Government for its deliberate flouting of the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and for the deliberate suppression of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act in the publication of and bringing into force of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1970.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are times in political life when a particular issue, no matter how important it may be in itself, suddenly takes on an added dimension and puts a spotlight, indeed, a pitiless spotlight, on the way of operation, on the way of thinking, on the whole philosophy of life of a particular government. There are times when a government exposes itself to the gaze of the people who elected it to office. There are times when it shows its real face, a face which it has succeeded in keeping hidden over a considerable period of time behind one of several masks it has at its disposal. But eventually the mask is torn off and eventually the reality is bared. In such a case, the government does not get charged with indecent exposure. If it does not die of shame, it will be buried anyway by the people who no longer recognize themselves in the reflection the government offers them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: That is putting it very straight.

Mr. Stanfield: In 1957, a little before my time here, it was the pipeline debate which showed the people of Canada that it was time to rid itself of a government which had lost everything but its own arrogance. In 1971, after a long series of inexcusable blunders and tragic miscalculations, we have the final touch of madness—the government's set refusal to pay to Canadian citizens money which is due to those citizens under the law of the land.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: In 1957—

Mr. Hees: In 1956.

Mr. Stanfield: In 1956—I am corrected by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees); I am always subject to correction—it was contempt for the rights of Parliament which led the Liberal government of that day to its destruction. In 1971 it is contempt for the very laws themselves, which the government feels secure enough to flout, in the face of this House and of the Canadian people.

I have no intention of denying the importance of the particular law in question. There are many thousands of farmers who are affected by the government's refusal to pay the money it legally owes to the Wheat Board. Whole communities, whole provinces, are affected by the action, or inaction if you like, of hon. gentlemen opposite in this respect. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board said the other night that he owed a great debt to many people. I say he does owe a great debt, and it is not to the backbenchers who applaud him and it is not to his advisors who tell him how to justify his negligence; it is to the people of Canada who have for too long trusted him and trusted the word of the government. It is a debt, in fact, to the people of Canada who have trusted the laws of Canada. That is the tragedy and that is the crime. It is a crime, because no government has the right to ignore the law, the very law which this or any other government swears to uphold. The government can ask Parliament to change the law, but the government has no right to flout the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is the case we wish to make, Sir. That is the case we wish to bring home to the Canadian people. A government is elected, among other things, on the basis of its intentions and its programs. I agree with that. But a government is not elected, at least in a democracy, to ignore the law which exists. A parliamentary democracy may not be perfect. Indeed, it is far from perfect. But any government which tries to claim its own perfection by ignoring democracy and ignoring the law is a government which does not deserve the trust of Parliament or the trust of the people who elected it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There are some—I have seen their observations and their comments—who believe that we in the opposition are not really serious when we attack the government on this point. They suggest we do not really mean it when we discuss the possibility of impeaching, for example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) for his part in this affair. Well, they are partly right, Mr. Speaker. We do not really want to separate the minister's head from his shoulders; we should be delighted if we could get the two together. What we do want is to point out to the Canadian people that we now have before us a government which is not only acting ineffectively and incompetently in a whole range of economic policies, we also have a government which is acting illegally.

There are a number of things which I find almost incredible about this government. But there is nothing I find more incredible than a former dean of a law school of a respected university in this country who is not only conniving at the breaking of the law, but is brazenly suggesting to the House that the law does not even matter. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board did not even try to justify himself before this House. He cited no precedent for his unheard of action. He offered no defence. All he did was to attack the opposition in this House for not jumping to the government's whip, and mildly and meekly passing any measure that this government in its wisdom might see fit to present to the House. At least the opposition was acting within its lawful rights, Mr. Speaker. At least the opposition was acting within the law. That is more than we can say for this government, and that is more than this government can say for itself.

Unable to deny that he had defied the law, the minister put on a bit of a show. He pretended that this flouting of the law was an act of bravery on his part. He said that he would be willing to go to jail in the interests of the farmers. I have a very strong stomach, Mr. Speaker, but I almost lost my supper in view of the posturing of the minister that night. What does the minister expect? Does he expect us to propose him for the Victoria Cross for breaking the law? It was a pitiful performance, and I should like to think that it was a performance that was unworthy of the minister. I leave that judgment in the final analysis for his own conscience.

They say that patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel. I say that self-righteousness is the last refuge of a man who has done wrong, who knows he has done wrong, who is at this moment still doing wrong, and who can see no honourable exit for himself. But I will suggest to the minister one honourable way out which will also make him feel better. It is to admit frankly to this House and to the Canadian people that he has done wrong. Such an admission, perhaps, will not do his judgment credit but it might at least do much to save his honour.

Mr. Bigg: His boss has run out on him.

Mr. Stanfield: No; in fairness to the Prime Minister may I say the Prime Minister did explain to me that he had to go, and I accept his very valid reason for leaving the House at the present time.

The unfortunate part is that particular minister is not alone in his guilt. The Minister of Finance is equally guilty. He is the minister who under the law is responsible for paying the moneys in question to the Canadian Wheat Board. It is not a matter of choice on his part; under the law he must pay the money, yet he has not done so. He has acted as though the law in question had been repealed, even though in fact it has not been repealed.

This brings me to a third member of this conspiracy, the—

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister.

Mr. Stanfield: We must not overlook the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) on the way to the Prime Minister. In spite of the fact that this law has not been repealed but remains as the law of this country, it is absent from the Revised Statutes of Canada for 1970. That is bad enough, Mr. Speaker, but what is worse, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already pointed out, is that there is a note in Appendix "A" to the Revised Statutes of Canada to the effect that this law has already been repealed. Certainly that Appendix is in no sense a legal document, but it is a document of information.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, what we have here is clearly an attempt to deceive the Canadian people as to what the real situation was and still is, and that, in turn, is part of this conspiracy, not merely by some of its members but by the whole government, to break the law of this country. So we have something more than a sin of omission: we have three members of the government—indeed, we have the government itself—conspiring to break the law of this country. I say that this could never have happened without the approval and authorization of the head of that government, the Prime Minister of this country, and he must accept that responsibility.

This is a serious charge, Mr. Speaker. The government has not denied the charge because it cannot deny it. The best it has done, so far at least, is to accuse the opposition of not co-operating with it in the passage of a new law. That, Sir, is the reasoning of arrogance. It is the reasoning of Louis XIV. Instead of it being Louis XIV saying "L'État, c'est moi," in this case it is the Prime Minister of Canada saying "La loi, c'est moi"—"The law is me". "I am the law", says the Prime Minister. That may have been acceptable in 17th century Europe, but it is not acceptable in Canada in the year 1971. At least, it is not acceptable to the Canadian people or their representatives in this Parliament, regardless of what some of the hon. gentlemen opposite may happen to think.

We are discussing here the guilt of the whole government, a government that is blinded by its own arrogance and indifference. We have known for some time that this government was contemptuous of Parliament. The members of the government have shown this in their words and their deeds. Hon. gentlemen opposite say they are in a hurry; they find parliamentary debate too slow and too uncertain for their liking.

In the past few years there have been some changes made in our parliamentary procedures designed essentially to expedite the business of the House—that is, the governmental business of the House—and presumably government opportunities for taking action. Under the old rules government estimates could be held up virtually indefinitely by members of the opposition. This situation had been changed before I arrived in this House. When I arrived here there was a limited time for discussion of estimates in the House, and I must say I was shocked to see one consequence of this, which was that ministers answered only those questions put to them on the estimates that they chose to answer, and to the extent that they chose to answer them. When ministers did not give a satisfactory answer there was absolutely no way in which members of the opposition could obtain one, because once time expired the motion was put and the estimates were passed.

I am not arguing today that we should go back to the old rules, though doubtless some members would be prepared to do so. But what I am saying is that since the estimates were taken out of the House—indeed, since a time limit has been put on even debating estimates in the House—the opposition has lost any method it had of compelling a member of the government to give information to this House. Obviously, the members of the opposition seem to have lost the capacity as well to compel members of the government and the government as a whole to obey the law of the land. There has been a vast reduction in the power of the House to hold the government responsible to the House.

Under the old rules, when there was virtually no limit on the extent of debate on estimates, no government of Canada would have dared to defy the law as this government has. No government would have dared to do what this government has done because if it had, it would have realized that it would never get its estimates through this House, Mr. Speaker. It would never have dared to do this.

This vast change in the relative strength of the two sides of Parliament, the government's side and the opposition's side, I say imposes upon us in the opposition a heavy duty to fight the clear breach of the law with which we are faced. On the other hand, the power of the opposition to force the government to comply with the law and behave properly, as a result of the changes in the rules to expedite business, has been reduced. Surely, this imposes a higher moral, institutional and parliamentary obligation on the government to obey the law and behave in a highly responsible manner toward the House.

The government has shown its contempt for the House. The imposition of the roster system was bad enough; there is no justification for it under the rules. When, as happened yesterday, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) was not in the House to answer serious questions that he must have anticipated would be put to him that day, surely we have reached some kind of low point. I heard the Prime Minister's explanation that the minister in question had another engagement that was important. I think that in itself shows the relative priorities that the Prime Minister and the minister attach to parliamentary obligations compared to obligations outside the House. Surely, the least that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce ought to have done in the circumstances was to see that the Prime Minister or some other minister was fully briefed on the meeting that took place with representatives of General Motors in the morning and was able to fully answer the questions in the House rather than have the Prime Minister simply say that he did not have the information.

That is the point we have come to in this House, Mr. Speaker. There have been many occasions when this government has made light of the House of Commons and the rules of this House; there have been other occasions when the government has flouted the law. One example occurred when it produced the Blue Book of Estimates. If ignored an existing government department, the Department of Fisheries, because it was at that time the government's intention to abolish that department although the bill had not been passed making that change. Mr. Speaker, the law is not based on intentions; it is based on proper procedures. Changes in the law do not come about until the proper procedures have been followed. If those proper procedures have been ignored, we are no longer living under the rule of law in this country. That surely is one danger in the precedent.

This debate has a significance that goes far beyond this particular law, important as it is to the people concerned. We are going right to the heart of our parliamentary institutions; we are going right to the heart of political democracy. Mr. Speaker, this is the most dangerous single event or precedent that I have seen in Parliament in my day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is tragic that the precedent does not bother the minister. The attitude of these ministers is, in effect, to admit that they are lawbreakers but to deny that they have done anything wrong. If that is the case, by what right does this government presume to punish others who break the law, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: By what right does it pass judgment on individual Canadians who come before the courts? If the government can break the law why can others not break the law, Mr. Speaker? Surely, the government is giving an example to everybody in the country. It is what you can get away with that counts as far as this government is concerned. In acting as it has the government has not only downgraded the law, it has forfeited the respect of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I realize that this government does not like opposition. It finds opposition a nuisance. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is the opposition that today is preserving the honour of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This government would like to use Parliament as a sausage grinder to turn out its own legislation. I think we are showing today that as far as the opposition is concerned, we have no intention of allowing that to happen. Furthermore, we are here to defend Parliament and through Parliament the right of Canadians and we are here to defend the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If the government persists, it will have to answer to this Parliament and it will have to answer to all Canadians for the consequences. By its present attitude the government is endangering the orderly conduct of business in this House. That may not seem important to some members of this government, but I think it is important to the great majority of Members of this Parliament, whatever their party stripe happens to be.

Regardless, Mr. Speaker, of what some members of the present government may think and regardless of what the present Prime Minister may think, parliamentary democracy and the rule of law are bigger than any one or all of us sitting here now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is our purpose in bringing this matter forward; that is our purpose today and we intend to keep fighting until we succeed or until this government goes down the drain where it belongs.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is possible for the minister or the government to play with words about what is now before the House. It is possible to try to play things down—"we intended to repeal it so what are you making a fuss about?" I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has properly put to this House, what this House is now discussing is basic to our system of government and is basic to democracy anywhere in the world.

Mr. Stanfield: Right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I ask you to note Mr. Speaker that the Prime Minister of this country was a teacher of law, that the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) was a Dean of Law teaching law students the importance of observing the law, and they are now responsible for breaking it without conscience and without reason.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Everytime the Prime Minister has the opportunity to make a speech, particularly to young people in Canada, and I don't have to produce quotations, he tells them that our system is based on law and order. He boasts of the fact that Canada is a democracy where people are intended to obey the law; he boasts of the fact that he is strong enough to make people obey the law. However, when it suits this government's purpose, a purpose which is evil, then unhesitatingly they break the law and say to the opposition and the farmers of Canada, "If you don't like it you can lump it".

• (3:40 p.m.)

What the government is doing seems to me to be particularly reprehensible, unpalatable and unpleasant because it takes advantage of the fact that a particular act, the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, brings the money to the farmer in a roundabout way. The money initially goes to the Wheat Board. The party directly affected is the Wheat Board. Because the Wheat Board is under the jurisdiction of the Minister in Charge of the Wheat Board it is not likely to take action against the government, either by laying a charge under section 115 of the Criminal Code against the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) for failing to do his duty as an act requires him to do which might not land him in jail I suppose but in some place that the dean of law said he is ready to go, or to issue a writ and a statement of claim against the government to collect the money for which the Wheat Board has issued an invoice. The government knew perfectly well the Wheat Board would not do it or go to the court and ask for a mandamus.

The government knew that the person—I use the term "person" in the legal sense—to whom under the act the money was to go directly was the Wheat Board, and that it could therefore with impunity sit back and not pay it. That is a cowardly act because it is the farmers not the Wheat Board, not the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, not the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who suffer. It is the farmers who suffer. In the last few years, because of government policy, the farmers have been placed in the worst financial bind they have been in for years and are now denied the money this Parliament voted them under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The government keeps this money without even batting an eyelash and is brave about it, as the minister in charge of the Wheat Board wanted to be. It is possible that this government will get away with this in the long run. I hope not. I hope the Assiniboia by-election will be the first instance in which the government will learn its lesson, and that the voters in that constituency, for whomever else they may vote, will vote against the government candidate because of this kind of shabby action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: But it is possible that the government may get away with it. I am somewhat of a student of history, as all of us are, and I have seen governments get away with a great deal. As the Prime Minister once said in his preincarnation before his present position of arrogance and power—I am not quoting but this is a correct representation—everytime anybody is deprived of a part of his right the whole of society suffers. I say to the government that what we are considering now is action by a government which is in breach of the law, which can be described as defalcation, theft or contempt of the law, and when the government acts in that way it is an indication to every citizen in the country to look with less respect upon Parliament and with less respect upon government in general. The people of Canada should look with disrespect on this government. But that is not the issue. The painful fact about this kind of behaviour is that it does not hurt merely the government in power but throws a shadow over all democratic government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The painful fact about this kind of behaviour is not merely that one, two or three people were guilty of a misdemeanour but that when this behaviour is exercised by a government despite its attention having been drawn by Members of Parliament to the misdemeanour, a question mark is placed against democracy itself by the young people in Canada. Like young people all over the world, they have become disenchanted with the democratic process because it has been slow in producing peace, in producing justice, in producing human equality and in ridding us of the twists and turns that have beset our society. It has been slow in all these areas. We have to admit it has been slow, but we can still say, as I believe, that democracy is the best way even though a little slow. However, it has been slow in many of these areas and the young people in Canada in large numbers have become disenchanted with the democratic process because of its slowness, because of its failure, because of its rifts and its divisions.

What will the young people say when they read and hear what has been said, and realize that there is a law on the books requiring the Minister of Finance to pay monthly since August 1, 1970 an amount which has been requested by the Canadian Wheat Board and with respect to which the government has deliberately refused to pay a penny every single month since August 1, 1970. That law does not say the minister may; it does not set out any conditions or any circumstances. This section of the act contains as clear and forthright a statement as can be. It simply provides, without reading the whole of section 3:

> The Minister of Finance shall, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, pay to the Board for each day in that crop year an amount equal—

And later, it continues:

> (b) in respect of any subsequent crop year—

That is subsequent to August 1, 1955.

> —the total amount payable for the crop year shall be paid in equal monthly payments within such crop year.

I happen to be a lawyer by profession, but one does not have to be a lawyer to understand that clear language. For once, the people who drafted that particular law did not use legalese. It is almost English, as I read it. There is no doubt as to what it says. It says that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) shall pay out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund a certain sum of money, the calculation of which is also made clear. It says that the Minister of Finance shall pay each month in that crop year one twelfth of the amount of money. There is no doubt as to what it says. What possible reason can the government have for not paying it, except its absolutely unlimited self assurance and arrogance that it can do as it pleases and get away with it because it has those rows of men who are governed by their loyalty to a party and to the bag man of the party rather than any loyalty of conscience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member to withdraw the accusation he made by saying that we are supporting the government because of some loyalty to a bag man. I reject that entirely. I support this government because I support its policies.

Mr. Lewis: I was not talking in general about hon. members opposite supporting the government. I assume that members opposite support the government because they support its policies. I give them credit for at least that much. But I cannot understand how any person on the other side can with conscience permit the government which leads that party to break the law and yet not open his mouth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The combined opposition parties on this side form a minority in the House, but if the members on the other side, lawyers and others, who know perfectly well that there has been a breach of the law, that it is unforgivable and indefensible—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —showed the courage of their convictions and told their government that they would not stand for it, then the Minister of Finance and the ex-dean of law would have to do what the law tells them to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: There are some members of the House who suggest occasionally that I am a bit hard. I was told at lunch just today—

• (3:50 p.m.)

They say that I am hard, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I make no apologies for saying what I did, even though I regard with the greatest respect everyone on the other side whom I have met personally. However, I say to them that there are times in Parliament when this kind of party loyalty should take second place to a clear duty of every Member of Parliament to protect the law and to make the government observe it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I say that the government is guilty of defalcation and contempt of the law. They are guilty also of blackmail because the reason for all of this is that they have put $100 million into Bill C-244, and combined it with a stabilization plan which is unacceptable to the farmers. In this way they have put on the farmers of western Canada and on farm organizations a double squeeze. They say "you give us the stabilization plan or you will not get either the payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act or the payments under the stabilization act", and I say that that is clear blackmail which is unworthy of any government, unworthy of even the government under which Canada now suffers.

I suggest to you, Sir, that we can restore the place of Parliament, the place of government and the place of the law if the minister who speaks for the government in this debate does several things: first, if he has the sense of duty to admit that perhaps a mistake has been made, made in good faith originally I have no doubt. I do not question that. Originally, the government had a bill that was going to repeal the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and it thought it had a good bill. I remember when it was introduced with a paeon of praise as being the best kind of stabilization plan that had ever been conceived. The government may well have thought that therefore it would pass through the House quickly, and that the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act would take place, as a result of which payments for a month or two might be delayed. That may have been the idea of the government in good faith. But the minister now cannot hide behind that.

Fourteen months have passed since August 1, 1970, and for fourteen months the government has failed to obey the law. Therefore, the minister can no longer say "we intended that the act be repealed". Laws are not made by intentions; they are not repealed by intentions. Two or three months might be forgivable, but fourteen months of ignoring the law is surely indefensible. The minister should admit that originally it was hoped that in two or three months the law would be repealed and a new law would take its place. Even then, he would have been out a month or two. Now that he sees that a long time has gone by, that Bill C-244 has not yet passed this House let alone the other place, he should admit that an error was made and should undertake to pay the money out forthwith without any delay, not even the delay of a day. He should pay the money to the Wheat Board and enable the Wheat Board to make the money available to the farmers entitled to it.

Second, I again make a plea to the minister that he split Bill C-244, take the $100 million, the temporary transitional payment, as a separate item and put this to the House. So far as my party is concerned and I would be surprised if this were not true of the Conservative opposition, we would pass it without debate in half an hour, thus letting the farmers have the advantage of that money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Finally, a meeting is to take place, as the minister admitted during the question period, of the provincial ministers of agriculture of the three prairie provinces who have asked the minister to meet them on Bill C-244 so that they can make suggestions for its improvement. I suggest that it is indecent of the government to try to pass Bill C-244 without at least hearing what the provincial ministers of agriculture of the prairie provinces have to say. Therefore, it seems to me that the road is clear for the government. They should pay the money under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act without delay, all the money that is now payable, and if the government has the graciousness and generosity, they should split Bill C-244 so as to make the $100 million available as well.

I have had occasion to spend some time in the prairie provinces in the last few months. I have met many farmers and I know from personal observation, as do many hon. members, that the wheat farmers in western Canada in particular are in great financial distress. They deserve to get the money that is owing to them, not only under one act or the other but under both the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and under Bill C-244.

I regret to have to say that we cannot agree with the second part of the motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) because—and I say this with respect—it is simply inaccurate. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act has not been repealed, and the Revised Statutes do not claim that it was. In the schedule to the statute which sets out the acts which were repealed the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act does not appear.

I will therefore, without taking any more time, move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the words "the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act" and by substituting therefor the following words: "and this House calls on the government to pay forthwith to the Canadian Wheat Board the sums of money it is required to pay as specified in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the said act still being part of the law of Canada."

The amended motion would then read:

That this House, conscious that the government is bound by the laws of this Parliament as are the citizens of this country, condemns the government for its deliberate flout of the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and this House calls on the government to pay forthwith to the Canadian Wheat Board the sums of money it is required to pay as specified in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the said act still being part of the law of Canada.

In conclusion, may I plead with Parliament, hon. members opposite as well as hon. members on this side of the House, that what is in issue is the very status of Parliament in the eyes of the people of Canada, the very respect for government in the eyes of the people of Canada. As conscientious Members of Parliament we cannot allow the government to break the law with impunity and to continue to break it without a word from this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for introducing at this time a motion of utmost importance for western wheat producers, and may I also congratulate the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) for moving an amendment to clarify the situation from the legal standpoint and substitute the following words for certain others:

[English]

—this House calls on the government to pay forthwith to the Canadian Wheat Board the sums of money it is required to pay as specified in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the said Act still being part of the law of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have just come back from a trip out west where I had the opportunity of meeting farmers in northern Alberta and Saskatchewan, as well as the southern part of those provinces. In fact, I visited Weyburn, Radville, Regina, Calgary, High Prairie and Lethbridge. I met representatives of agricultural associations, among others those of the wheat producers. Everywhere, and I say this quite sincerely, I noticed that the people were not pleased at all with the government. This government is not very popular in western Canada because it does nothing concrete to help the farmers of that area.

I met farmers who are still waiting for the payments of the Canadian Wheat Board, people who have been forced to resort to banks and financial institutions to borrow rather considerable amounts at 12, 15, 18 and 20 per cent interest, while the Canadian Wheat Board is absolutely unable to help them because the government does not act on their behalf. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) blames the opposition. The latter demands that the $100 million referred to in Bill C-244 be immediately distributed to farmers. The government insists and answers that the opposition is to blame if western farmers are not paid. If we want to take the government at its word, in short if the government, which has a majority in the House, is really tired of the opposition, why does it not invoke Standing Orders 75A, 75B and 75C that were adopted last year and does it not impose a vote on Bill C-244? No! The ministers, playing politics, wander throughout the country saying: It is the opposition that is holding us back! It is the opposition that is hindering our work! Let the opposition adopt the bill, then we will be able to distribute the $100 million.

That is truly intimidation. And this intimidation, the government believes that it will be able to convince western farmers that they will be its victims, but they are merely disgusted. Western farmers are now disgusted with the government because it does not carry out its responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who always has something to say with regard to wheat, and I recall the time when he sat among the Créditistes here and spoke to us of the two-price system with regard to wheat for western farmers. His two-price system, today—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: He is not listening to you.

Mr. Caouette: I know he is not listening, and when he does he doesn't understand.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, as for his two-price system for farmers in order to help them sell their products, there has been no mention of it since he became Minister of Agriculture. When he was sitting on this side, he seemed to talk with logic but he does not have the right to do so any more and he says to farmers: Your business is good.

Mr. Speaker, when I met western producers last week, I found that the government or the Canadian Wheat Board were causing them a good many difficulties. A farmer had attempted for instance to sell wheat in another province and he was called a bootlegger. They threatened him with a heavy fine since it is forbidden to make transactions without going through the Canadian Wheat Board. When the same people ask the Canadian Wheat Board for assistance, the answer is: We cannot help you, we are waiting for instructions from Ottawa.

The people in Ottawa say: If nothing goes, the fault lies with the opposition. The aim is to make the opposition responsible and to play the political game, in order to attract farmers' votes in case there would have to be an election. I repeat what I said earlier: Farmers are not taken in by the troubles of the government. And, as it says in the motion, nothing prevents the government from using the existing legislation to give the Canadian Wheat Board the $100 million that will enable them, in turn, to make the necessary payments to farmers who are entitled to them and will then be able to meet their obligations and solve their problems.

Mr. Speaker, I also heard some farmers complain. Everywhere in Canada we hear the same old story! Out West, quite often we hear people say: If things are not going well, it is because Ottawa gives too much money to the East. And in the East, we hear people say: If things are going all wrong, it is because Ottawa is giving too much money to the West. There is enough money for all Canadians, and we can help the farmers from the East as well as those in the West.

Out West people say: The government is giving grants to the milk producers, textile manufacturers, butter and cheese producers and tobacco growers in the East. That seems rather funny. The government subisidizes tobacco farming in order to enable the growers to make ends meet, and then it pays for advertisements telling the people: Don't smoke, don't use tobacco because it is harmful to your health. Subsidies are granted to promote production and later comes the warning: Do not use tobacco. Is there anything more stupid than that?

Mr. Speaker, there was no granting of subsidies to Western Canada. Farmers were told three years ago that too much wheat had been produced in the West, that there was a surplus, in short, that the elevators were chock-full. The farmers had so much wheat they didn't know what to do. Indeed, wheat was under the snow throughout the winter months.

Then the Minister of Agriculture told the farmers to produce barley. There was a great demand for it on an important international market. Many farmers stopped producing wheat and began producing barley. This year, they were told we had too much barley. But it seems that the wheat market is getting stronger. They are told to start producing wheat again. Farmers have been taken in like that for many years.

Mr. Speaker, on many occasions we suggested that the government establish a global farm policy for wheat and dairy producers, etc. We must make them sure that they will sell their production. The point is to build silos for storing wheat that could eventually be used to assist underdeveloped countries. Why not?

During the war, we built warehouses with a view to storing armaments, in case we had to take part. We spent hundreds of millions of dollars to buy Bomarc missiles, in case we needed them. Today, we have to discard them because they are said to be obsolete and of no use.

However, wheat could serve a useful purpose, for instance, feeding two thirds of the human beings now starving. We could help those who hunger and thirst for justice, and this not only in Canada but also elsewhere in the world. And by helping these people, we would help our farmers and guarantee the sale of their entire production, not at ridiculous prices, but at prices which would enable them to live and enjoy the same standard of living as that of industrial workers and most other citizens.

It seems to me that no miracle is necessary to guarantee to the farmers the sale of their entire production; then western and eastern farmers would stop blaming one another. Not only would Canadian farmers be happier, but they would cease to always expect the government to adopt laws which quite often do not help them really.

It has been customary these last few years, to bring forward bills containing a lot of disparate and complex clauses.

Omnibus bills are introduced, because the government does not want to deal with a particular subject.

In this case, if we were to pass Bill C-244 providing for $100 million for the Canadian Wheat Board, we would also be passing a bill which provides for stabilization, which is unacceptable by and large. Therefore why not keep those provisions of the bill which provide for $100 million that the Canadian Wheat Board will give out to the western farmers who need it, if the government decides at last to abide by those provisions.

The government should take its responsibilities, which are not those of the opposition. I say this in closing: the opposition can be blamed, but there are means available to the government to secure passage of the bill it has introduced. The government could apply Standing Orders 75A, 75B and 75C which it adopted last year and which would oblige the government to call a vote on the bill within 48 hours. But it is afraid. It is pulling back and blaming the opposition. Insofar as we are concerned, I believe that in our capacity as members of the opposition, we can take our responsibilities, the first one of which is to tell the ministers what we expect from them, what the people expect from the government. And what the Canadian people expect from the government is that famous just society that was promised in 1968.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The minister knows that he may only ask a question if the hon. member agrees to accept it. Does the hon. member agree?

Mr. Caouette: Of course, I do.

[Translation]

Mr. Mackasey: If Bill C-244 were put, would the hon. member vote for it as it stands?

Mr. Caouette: With or without amendments, we will not support it, that is just what we are saying. We say: Give the Canadian Wheat Board the $100 million it is meant to get under the bill, and we will then debate the other provisions of the bill.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks this afternoon the Leader of the Social Credit party referred to something which I consider to be of utmost importance in this country. He said that in his travels in western Canada he heard the persistent theme that the government is doing everything for eastern and central Canada, and nothing for the west. I know that in the particular part of the country from which he comes, as well as in other parts, the reverse is shouted with tremendous volume. People say that we are doing everything for the west and nothing for the other parts of the country. I appreciate what the hon. member has said to this House because, in view of his own place of residence, his own interests in his constituency and so on, I find it extremely useful to be able to join with him in expressing concern about this and about its importance to this country. I have frequently found in western Canada that policies such as our textile policy are cited as examples of the help we give to eastern Canada. In Quebec, at the same time, these policies are considered to be inadequate for conditions there. That is a matter of serious consequence, because it is of fundamental importance for this country that we, as politicians on the national scene, should attempt to unite the country by helping people to understand the difficulties in each area of the country. I, in my turn, try to express the problems of Quebec to my constituents, and the hon. member in his turn, helps to explain to his constituents the problems which western Canada faces. I, therefore, appreciate the sentiments he expressed.

The government has been considering rapidly and thoroughly many aspects of the problems facing western Canada. Indeed, since mounting our special efforts almost two years ago, there are few aspects of the problems concerning the grain farmer with which we have not dealt or which we have not considered seriously from the point of view of attempting to make improvements and bettering the grain producer's position. Many more measures which are under consideration will come forward before long. They relate to improvements in the situation with which farmers are faced.

When the stabilization bill proposals were enunciated in their final form on March 15, I indicated at that time in statements I made that the whole question of the income position of the grain farmer, which we were concerned about, needed constant examination. I indicated I was convinced that we had not done enough on the sales side, that is on the marketing side, over the years in going after international markets. We had not stressed that side enough. It seemed to me that there were only two sources from which income for the producer could come. One source was the proceeds from the sale of his product and the other was the treasury, or the rest of the people of Canada. I indicated at that time that although we were optimistic about our sales position, and in fact, that year turned out to be a record year for the export of grain, that we would have to look at all times at the income position of the farmer. I also indicated in the context of proposals which we were moving forward, which have now emerged in part and only in part as Bill C-244 which is before this House, that the package or proposals we were talking about was designed to increase treasury support for the prairie farmer by something in the order of $100 million in 1970-71 and 1971-72 taken together over what would have been the case if no improvement in programs had taken place. That indicated our recognition of the serious cash position of the farmer. Nevertheless, we believed that there would be a record year in exports.

In the course of considering those proposals, we looked at existing programs and offered new ones. We looked in particular at the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, which had been fairly seriously criticized by farmers over the years because of the manner in which it offered assistance to wheat only as against other grains which the very same farmers might choose to grow. That act was criticized also because of the way it led to the congestion of elevators on August 1 just before the new harvest was to be taken off. It was criticized also because, in helping with regard to wheat and in leading to a per bushel payment for wheat, the act helped large farmers very significantly more than it helped small farmers,—taken as a group; because it was the large farmers, of course, who might have a very large number of bushels of wheat delivered. They would get the same benefit per bushel as the operator of a small farmer who might deliver a much smaller amount of grain.

It was certainly our belief that for all of these reasons that particular statute was inadequate and undesirable. It was our belief that because of the cash shortage we should try to take the money that was involved in that statute for the year 1970-71, which at that time was estimated at about $60 million, and add to that amount more money for a payment to be made that same year under the transitional provision of the stabilization act. But we proposed a payment to be made on an acreage basis so that producers of grain other than wheat would share. Payments were to be made with a limit on the size of the farm that would be able to claim. Looking at the interests of all Canadians and the needs of other interested groups at that time, we decided that more of the $100 million, which we felt was available at that time, would be paid to those with smaller farmers than if we had not put an acreage limit upon the plan. That was the proposal.

The proposal was very clear on March 15. It had been clear previously from discussions with producers that we thought this should be done for 1970-71 and a period beyond that time. Because the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was generally considered to be undesirable for those reasons, it was important that it be repealed and an improved method of payment be found as soon as possible.

In the debate on the bill, a number of hon. members opposite indicated their agreement with the view that the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was generally undesirable, inadequate or led to distortion. This simply confirmed the view that was commonly held. At that point we indicated what we intended to do and subsequently did in producing for first reading on April 29 Bill C-244. In that bill, the stabilization program was to be established. Under that stabilization program, future commitments by the federal government to the western farmer are made.

In the short time available, I will not argue why that was bound to be worth more to the farmer in the future than retaining the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act would have been. Rather, I want to make the point that at that time the government was introducing, as a proposal to the House, a package which we had discussed with producers, a package which we felt at that point, having adjusted it in significant ways as a result of producer representations, was a significant improvement over the law as it stood without these changes. At that time the bill clearly stated our intention, that we should propose in that way to Parliament the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act effective July 31, 1970.

It was surely clear to all members that when the bill passed, that clause would make the situation the same as it would have been had the act been repealed effectively and before that date in question. It was clear to the House that this was so. I gather from the remarks, in terms of timing, by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the leader of the New Democratic Party that they understood that, because under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act in fact some progress payments would have been made to the Canadian Wheat Board even before that point of introduction. In other words, it was the government's plan to test the will of Parliament on a substitution that we considered to be a better package, immediately adding approximately $40 million which is part of our total package, and adding a good bit more than that to the prairie farmers' income during the course of that two year period. That was introduced to test the will of Parliament.

It was clear to us from the consultations we already had with Members of Parliament that there would likely be substantial support in this House for that bill. It was never our intention to suggest that somehow neither the one set of benefits nor the other would be available to farmers. We were specifically discussing a new proposal more beneficial to farmers when compared to the law as it stood without these changes. We wanted this bill to progress through the House. I think the record on that is clear. Certain opposition members, when speaking with regard to agricultural legislation as many of them from the prairies do, take a tremendous amount of time to discuss matters irrelevant to a bill before the House and delay legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lang: The record in the committee also makes this clear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are being fatuous.

Mr. Lang: It is clear as well that the political fact that there was an election in Saskatchewan, and the fact that there is a pending by-election in Saskatchewan, has been in the consciousness of members of this House. At all times I asked members of this House and members of the committee to allow this issue, whether the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act should be repealed effective July 31, 1970 and there be substituted therefor this other package of proposals or the other part of the proposals composed of the stabilization bill, to come to a vote to test the will of Parliament on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lang: If the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act were to be fallen back upon in place of the measures now before the House, this would mean that the payments which ordinarily would have been made to the Wheat Board for transmission to the farmers would again be made. This would have amounted to something in the order of $62.1 million according to the most recent calculation of that figure. There have been other figures mentioned, but this one appears to be more certain. This is at the end of July. If this had been paid, $38.6 million would, in the ordinary course, have reached the farmers during the month of June. We recognize that if the House were not to approve that significant clause in Bill C-244 that we would certainly have an obligation with regard to this legislation and to this payment and, indeed, with regard to interest on it for the period during which this payment was delayed. It appears hon. members may have been following a different course, that is, talking endlessly without any intention of letting this question come to a vote.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Let me put the issue completely before Your Honour. The government has continued to give high priority to Bill C-244 as an item in its legislative agenda. It has called the bill despite the fact that the competing priorities are of great importance. We shall continue to seek the approval of the House for Bill C-244. Several hon. members have suggested we should use on or other technique to close off debate. But members of the government are very loath to do so, wishing normally to give the opposition a generous and full opportunity to speak. The hope is, though, that members will speak relevantly and to the point, and in due course allow a decision to be taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The question of the alternatives has been discussed before by members of this House. In the committee, questions were asked about what would happen if the bill were not passed as of the end of the earlier part of the session. I indicated then that if that were to happen the government would have to look again at its attempt to pass what it considered to be an improvement to the law, and consider reverting to the law as it stood, without changes being made. In other words, not to rely any longer on the passage through the House of a clause which had already been approved on second reading and in committee repealing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act as of July 1, 1970. Should the opposition continue to prevent the House coming to a vote on this issue—filibuster, my hon. friend says, and I agree with him—should the opposition prevent this issue coming to a vote in a reasonable period, we would have no alternative but to—

Mr. Benjamin: Obey the law.

Mr. Horner: Pay your debts.

Mr. Korchinski: Plus interest.

Mr. Lang: —say to the farmers that their spokesmen in the opposition have prevented us from enacting what we consider to be an improvement in the law and we, therefore, would have to consider that Bill C-244 in all its parts was a dead issue, and, of course, immediately, at that time make the payment under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act for that year and, indeed, for this. This would mean, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: More blackmail.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member says "More blackmail".

Mr. Faulkner: The experts are speaking.

Mr. Lang: The leader of the New Democratic Party is, of course, very conscious of the fact that an attempt will be made by his colleagues fighting the by-election in Assiniboia to picture their obstruction of beneficial legislation for farmers as a lack of attention by this government to the problems of farmers. Where is the blackmail?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to some tortuous sentences in my life, but never to one quite so tortuous as that.

Mr. Lang: To the farmers, I say as I said on March 15: We shall, of course, have to examine ways of seeking to improve the situation. We shall continue to try to bring additional measures forward to help them.

The lack of support for the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was emphasized by the fact that when the farm organizations came before the committee, though they were generally quite free to express criticisms of what the government was doing, or not doing, for the prairie farmer—

Mr. Peters: And did.

Mr. Lang: —and they did, because they were very conscious of the fact that as long as the prairie farmer is in a serious position he is not likely to be appreciative of things which were already being done; they were demanding, basically, that more be done. As leaders of farm organizations they might not have been willing to be satisfied with my undertaking to examine the over-all situation in which farmers find themselves. When they appeared before the committee they did not object to the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act as of July 1, 1970, except to the extent that they came forward with alternative proposals involving the payment of money to farmers from the treasury. Basically, though, there was no objection to the repeal of the act. None of the farm representatives said the act was inherently good legislation. That is significant.

Mr. Peters: They never even mentioned it, and I have been a member of the committee for 15 years.

Mr. Lang: Members opposite have tried to suggest that the bill before the House could somehow be dealt with in such a way that the parts which are very popular among the farmers, involving the simple payment of money, could be separated from the rest of the legislation. But the government is bound to come forward with packages of proposals which are intended to improve the farm situation. It is very easy for members opposite to say: We would like the good part of that, and the good part of this.

Mr. Baldwin: What part of C-244 is bad?

Mr. Lang: It is easy for them to say: We would like more money for the people in our region. But, as I suggested to the leader of the Social Credit party, members representing the province of Quebec or other parts of eastern Canada might complain that the government was doing too much for western farmers as compared with what was being done for farmers, say, in Quebec.

Mr. Horner: The government is robbing the farmers of money.

Mr. Lang: The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is agreed generally to be an inadequate piece of legislation.

Mr. Lewis: It is still the law.

Mr. Lang: With the greater emphasis on the production of barley and rapeseed, it was inevitable that a substitute for it be found. It was important, also, that the elevator system should not remain clogged with wheat as in the past. As a result of the fact that this year the elevators are no longer completely clogged with wheat, it has been possible for producers to market grain in larger quantities in the month of August and the first weeks of September than for a significant period of time. Indeed, during the first six weeks of the crop year until the week ending September 15, producers have marketed a total of 83.5 million bushels of grain compared with 46.3 million bushels in the previous year and 36.7 million bushels in the year before that. This means that almost as much has been marketed by producers this year as in the two previous years together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: At half the price.

Mr. Lang: This is partly due to the fact that in our attempts to help the farmer and our tremendous emphasis on marketing, marketing and more marketing, not only did we see the completion of a record year of exports last year but we are still seeing, on September 15, exports running significantly ahead of the same time last year. Last year, when we were on our way to a record year—hon. members opposite have been speaking of the poor years—90.7 million bushels of grain were exported. As at the same date this year 98.5 million bushels of grain have been exported.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I have explained the alternative that faces this House in terms of reaching the question on Bill C-244 and enacting a series of proposals that are a significant improvement in the situation facing the farmers on the Prairies. I hope that this improvement will soon be realized.

In addition, may I say that I will continue to work for improved and better programs for the farmers of the prairie provinces for whom, in my responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board, I have a special interest. I continue to hope that in presenting these proposals to the House they may gain the support of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Nielsen: Obey the law.

Mr. Lang: I also suggest to hon. members opposite that it is extremely difficult for the government to put forward and to implement laws that benefit the prairie farmers as long as—

Mr. Horner: You have made a tool out of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair wishes to bring the House to order and to ask the co-operation of all hon. members in letting the minister be heard and complete his remarks. I am wondering whether the minister has concluded. In any event, I think this rule should apply throughout this debate and all other debates.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, we would be glad to obey your request, but would you also remonstrate with the minister by asking him to be relevant and to speak to the motion before the House.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed for the House the decision taken by the government to offer the House a package of proposals affecting the prairie farmers that is better, in my opinion, than anything that existed before. Included in that package was the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act effective July 31, 1970. The bill containing these proposals will continue to be debated. That the repeal of this act was to be effective as at that date has been known to the House for many months. I ask the House, as I ask it each day that the bill is before it, to allow these issues to come to a vote in this House.

So that there is no misunderstanding about this, let me repeat that we would not feel, as I said to the committee on June 18, that we could necessarily go forward with these proposals, including the immediate payment of money to the prairie farmers, without the support of the House. We could not continue, without reviewing our position, to act as it would be proper to act, with the approval of the House, in repealing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act effective July 31, 1970. If that proposition is not in due and reasonable course permitted to come to a vote, if this filibuster grows and continues, then we would have no alternative but—

Mr. Peters: Go to the country.

Mr. Lang: —to accept that our attempt to improve the situation of the prairie farmers under Bill C-244 has not been possible. We would say to the people that we believe that responsibility for the delay, for the obstruction, was that of the opposition in not letting these matters come to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The minister knows that he cannot pursue his remarks unless he has unanimous consent to do so. Does the House agree to allow the minister to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): There does not seem to be agreement. The hon. member for Yukon.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite cry "Shame", but I have been sitting here, as we all have, listening to the minister for the past 30 minutes and expecting to hear some defence of the unlawful actions of the government. I have heard absolutely no defence. For 30 minutes the minister spoke of reverting to the law as it stood, an astonishing statement coming from a dean of law. He spoke of the legislation being bad. I should not have to point out to this dean of law that, whether legislation be bad or good, it is still the law of the land. I know that he cannot be an example of the product of the law school of which he was dean. I cannot bring myself to believe that he is the sort of graduate that that distinguished law school turns out.

The justice minister issued a news release dated today announcing a national conference on the law. The opening statement of that news release is as follows: "Our legal profession must respond promptly and creatively to the fact that society is our client".

Mr. Olson: Get back to wheat.

Mr. Stanfield: We are not on wheat, we are on the law.

Mr. Nielsen: If society is the client of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), this dean of law and this government, then I can only say it is deserving of much better counsel than it is getting.

The motion before the House states that the government is bound by the laws of this Parliament, as are the citizens of this country, and condemns the government for its deliberate flouting of the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I want to deal with some of the reasons that I believe have brought Parliament to its low level and to the low regard in which it is held by the people of Canada.

Mr. Hogarth: With your contribution you should know.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) is very fond of interjecting while seated, but if he would have the spine to get up and take part in this debate I would think a lot more of him. However, I shall have something to say generally about the courage of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Hogarth: I do not doubt that. You are a great man when it comes to courage.

Mr. Nielsen: I will compare my background and courage with that of any member on the opposite side, particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I have spoken before, Sir, of the concern which I have had for the transformations that are taking place in our form of government, a concern which is being shared by ever increasing numbers of Canadians throughout this country.

The subject matter of this motion of non-confidence is another manifestation of the wilful and deliberate destruction of responsible government as we have known it and the emasculation of this House of Commons which is supposed to be the instrument by which our democratic way of life should be protected. The process of erosion began under the previous Prime Minister. I thought then that matters were approaching the danger point and that an aroused public opinion was required in order to bring to a halt the objective of that government to arrogate all power unto itself. That did not come about. In the course of the last three years, however, the rapidity with which the present Prime Minister accelerated the process of destruction presents, in my view, the single most dangerous occurrence which is concerning Canadians today. This is being brought about by a man who, in my view, is the most dangerous Prime Minister in Canada's history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: To quote him, he is a man who believes it to be:

> . . . conceivable that a benevolent despot might rule wisely, establish a just order for all his subjects, and leave them enough freedom of expression.

The rub there is, by whose standards are we to determine whether his rule is wise? By whose standards are we to determine whether the order established by such a despot is just and by what and whose standards are we to determine if his subjects are left enough freedom of expression?

Mr. Mahoney: Read it all.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) interjects. He is the member who stood up the other day and said that everything about the economy of this country is beautiful, that we are getting along just fine. If the hon. member would like to borrow the publications—if he has not read them yet he is welcome to them.

Clearly this kind of philosophy and other Trudeau philosophies are transforming this House of Commons into a flabby, ineffective debating forum.

Mr. Jerome: Right on, now.

Mr. Nielsen: The forum is a flabby debating forum precisely because of that stupid collection over there, Mr. Speaker, the braying donkeys. It is a legislature which the Prime Minister barely tolerates and which he now uses as his own personal tool to accomplish his aims. This place is no longer the master, the master sits over there.

Mr. Boulanger: Don't point at me.

Mr. Nielsen: No longer does he account to Parliament for his actions.

Mr. Paproski: You may not believe it Boulanger, but wait until you get on the road.

Mr. Nielsen: Whatever the actions of his ministers, he must bear the ultimate responsibility. He is above the law, the Prime Minister who sits over there. Remember his promises? He did make a few.

Mr. Paproski: What promises?

Mr. Nielsen: One was the establishment of a just society. Another promise was to reform Parliament. Yet another was "the creative use of the law". We are certainly getting a reformation of Parliament. He has destroyed the cornerstone of the very essence of our system, the principle of accountability. The creative use of the law—he uses the law if it pleases him but if it does not please him or if he finds it inconvenient for his purposes, he ignores the law.

Mr. Hogarth: Erik, the only law you know is your mother-in-law.

Mr. Nielsen: I think the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) could join the class of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. They seem to be on the same intellectual level as far as the law is concerned. The Prime Minister ignores the law, safe in the knowledge that he has a sufficient number of what he has been pleased to refer to as "braying donkeys" behind him to support his decisions.

Creative use of the law indeed! He has used the law to incarcerate innocent citizens for actions which were not crimes at the time but which he made crimes in order to justify his own benevolent despotism.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order please, order please! Although hon. members may be enjoying this, it is the responsibility of the Chair to keep order in the House. I hope that hon. members would try as much as possible to refrain from shouting from one side to the other so that the Chair can hear what is being said.

Mr. Paproski: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is only fair—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is only fair that people on the other side of the House should have a little more respect for the Chair. I concur with you, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair appreciates the remark from the hon. member and welcomes it. The hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Greene: Get to the point.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) interjects. He tells me to speak to the point. He should have given that advice to his colleague, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: My observation to the minister is that he is a minister whith very little energy left and very few resources.

Mr. Greene: It is always nice to see you in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: We have a just society, a society in which the Prime Minister is the master, a society in which he is the government, a society in which he is accountable to no one and, now, not even to Parliament. He has made a fraud of this place. But there is still one feature of our system which requires his accountability, the people and the ballot. Once every four years, by tradition, he must account for his actions at the polls.

The most frightening aspect of all these events, however, is the woeful lack of knowledge on the part of the great majority of Canadians of what exactly has happened to their system of government under this Prime Minister since 1968. No one understands this more than he does and he uses that lack of knowledge, that ignorance, just as he uses this place. If every Canadian voter could see the open contempt that he displays for this place and with which he treats it, if they could see him shrug off his obligation to account for the actions of his ministers and himself during the oral question period, if they could hear his snide comments in reply to the questions of members—but this side of his character is not known to those Canadians who do not see him here. They only see him on television, a media which he uses as he does everything else.

Mr. Boulanger: What are you doing, your own biography?

Mr. Nielsen: I am criticizing the man who I think is responsible for the denigration of this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: He is quite another person on television and he knows precisely how to act in order to convey a superb television image. That is all it is, an image—cool, charming, articulate, wise—but it is still only an image. As one writer put it, television "may unmask one liar and transmit another as the very heart and soul of integrity. The results may have nothing to do with the real qualities of the man, only with his apparent qualities." This is his idea of accountability, to use television to charm people in their homes. But account to Parliament? He tolerates that as a necessary nuisance.

What of the rest, his cabinet ministers and his braying donkeys? No one in that cabinet dare speak out. Real freedom of expression does not exist. The ex-minister of communications knows whereof I speak. In an article in Maclean's magazine for July 1971, on page 32, the hon. member is reported to have said this:

> You were always listened to with great respect, but nothing would ever happen. . . . It was like a procession. You know, when the Pope gets down off the altar at St. Peter's and walks down the aisle the one thing you know is that he's going to get to the other end of the aisle. That's the way these things are. You can argue and argue and in the end the procession goes on its way.

So does the member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) know whereof I speak. These are two men of courage in my view, two men who were not prepared to adhere to the admonishment of the Prime Minister to "behave yourself and do as I think"; two men who dared to think for themselves and who were banished by a man who has taken absolute power unto himself.

Why, we ask, have we reached the point where Parliament enacts a law which is deliberately breached by the government headed by this Prime Minister? The people have a right to feel secure in the belief that such conduct could not possibly occur. Why? Because they say, "Parliament is there to protect us from that sort of thing and members in the House of Commons would not allow such conduct". As we have experienced, this House of Commons is powerless to do anything unless it be that some opposition members might hope to induce representatives of the media to attempt to arouse public opinion, as was done when the government attempted to muzzle the Auditor General.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: What could be more important a matter upon which to inform Canadians? If the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) would have the guts to get up on his feet and say things he might get a response from me.

What could be more important a matter to occupy the concern of all members of the House, not only we who sit in the opposition but all members? What could be more important a matter than for this House, acting in unison, to bring to a halt a Prime Minister and a government openly and brazenly violating the law of the land? Yet what action will be taken by the members of the so-called Liberal party who sit in this House? Will they, by their vote, express their disapproval of a government breaking the law? Will any of them have the courage to say that laws are meant to apply not only to the ordinary citizen but also to Prime Ministers, Cabinet ministers and governments? Or will those members display their usual cowardice and meekly do as they are told by the autocratic leader of their party? Strong words, you say?

Let me tell Liberal members here that even stronger terms were used by their leader in the April, 1963 edition of Cité Libre in an article written by him entitled "The Abdication of the Spirit":

> I would have to point out in the strongest terms the autocracy of the Liberal structure and the cowardice of its members. I have never seen in all my examination of politics so degrading a spectacle as that of all these Liberals turning their coats in unison with their chief, when they saw a chance to take power . . . The head of the troupe having shown the way, the rest followed with the elegance of animals heading for the trough.

That is what their leader thinks of them, and that is the contempt he has for those members. So much for the myth of the integrity and independence of the Liberal members sitting in this place. Their own leader has described them far more accurately than could I and, I might say, his is an honest assessment and one that is still valid. They are a posturing, spineless bunch, making interjections, while seated, and attempting to make hypocritical speeches at home. Will any one of them have the spine to stand and defend the rule of law when this matter comes to a vote?

So, we have a cabinet composed of ministers afraid to speak their mind for fear they will follow the hon. member for Trinity and the hon. member for Duvernay, and we have Liberal members following their leader like animals to a trough, braying like donkeys as they go. What then is there left to protect the supremacy of Parliament against this one-man despotism. The effectiveness of the opposition has been drastically weakened by a series of rules changes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. I have listened for the last 15 or 20 minutes to the hon. member for Yukon—

An hon. Member: Twelve minutes.

Mr. Allmand: —perhaps for 12 minutes, slander Liberal members on this side of the House. He has questioned the motives on which we have voted in this House. He has suggested we have voted without using our consciences. I want to ask him to withdraw his remarks immediately. I wish to quote to you, Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne's Fourth Edition at page 98, section 108(3).

An hon. Member: Who is Beauchesne?

An hon. Member: You wouldn't know.

Mr. Allmand: It reads:

> Libels on members have also been constantly punished: but to constitute a breach of privilege they must concern the character or conduct of members in that capacity—

I suggest that the hon. member for Yukon has been questioning our character and conduct in our capacity as Members of Parliament and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to ask him to withdraw his remarks. As a matter of fact, I insist that he withdraw the remarks he has made in this House.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. What I was doing, Sir, was quoting from a publication by his leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is quite aware of the quotation from Beauchesne read by the hon. member, but must say at this time that although the Chair has found difficulty in following the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon because of the noisy House this afternoon, it did not seem to the Chair that in his remarks the hon. member went to the point of reflecting on the House or any individual member of the House. It is very difficult for the Chair to evaluate the importance of insinuations and accusations which can be made from one side of the House to the other. Unless the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce wants to make a charge and quote some definite remarks of the hon. member for Yukon, the Chair does not see how it can ask the hon. member to withdraw anything he said.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in that regard may I point out that the remarks—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair has rendered its decision and the hon. member for Peace River should not be allowed to add to what has been said unless he wants to bring in another question.

Mr. Baldwin: I just wanted to concur in the words of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, what then is there left to protect the supremacy of Parliament against this one-man despotism. The effectiveness of the opposition has been drastically weakened by a series of rules changes, again deliberately brought about by the leader of a government motivated by a lust for power. This is his promised reform of Parliament. He no longer has to worry about Parliament being an obstacle to his one-man rule. And the most astonishing reflection which may be made concerning the accomplishment of this emasculation of parliamentary strength is the fact that he has done it while leaving the impression that he has done it as an exercise in participatory democracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. I want to mention that the Chair has allowed the hon. member four extra minutes. Unless he receives unanimous consent he will not be able to continue.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

An hon. Member: Enough.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. Paproski: Now, we are going to get the truth from someone who knows nothing. It is nice to see him back in the House.

Mr. Osler: I am very glad to see that the hon. member is back in the House so that he can see I am in the House.

Mr. Peters: I am not sure I am happy about either one.

Mr. Osler: If I am allowed to speak, Mr. Speaker, I will not take long because I think the issue is a very simple one and there is not very much to say about it. What this country needs is action, not words, as I understand it.

An hon. Member: Man the barricades.

Mr. Osler: That is what some people are always saying, "man the barricades", and then they talk about the sanctity of Parliament from the other side of their mouth.

An hon. Member: Wait until they get you in Winnipeg.

Mr. Osler: I have a simple statement to make and it is simply this, that in my view the government has brought in a very sensible bill, Bill C-244, which is going through the normal process of passage in this House.

Mr. Paproski: Is the Wheat Board in your constituency?

Mr. Osler: Mind your own business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: The scene of the crime is in your constituency.

Mr. Osler: I thought that members of this House liked debate, the cut and thrust that takes place in this Parliament, which is supreme; but when somebody sets up to riposte a little cut or thrust, they shout him down. It is disappointing. I thought Parliament was supreme and the place where people were allowed to speak.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very sorry that I interjected and said that the Wheat Board was in the hon. member's constituency. I am sorry because it is in the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must rule on the interjection which definitely was not a point of order. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he may have the floor now.

Mr. Osler: It was a poor geography lesson. Most people who come from the west know where the Wheat Board is; they do not need to be informed of it and hon. members from eastern Canada do not care where it is. They know it is somewhere in Winnipeg.

My point is a very simple one. Bill C-244, by all the rights of logic, should pass through this House and should become law. It may have weaknesses, but by and large it is a good bill and it will benefit a great number of people. In anticipation of the passage of this bill, the government has taken certain action which leaves it at this moment, in my opinion, in default under the old act. As I understood the minister this afternoon, he made a solemn promise that he and this government would exert all pressure possible and reasonable to get this bill passed for the benefit of the farmers who need the money; and that if he failed to do so he would, in effect, give the farmers a promissory note that they would be reimbursed under the old act, and if the session stops and the new legislation is not through, that interest would be paid. In my opinion, I would rather take the promissory note of this minister than listen to all the b.s. to which I have had to listen up to this point.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Osler: I am absolutely certain that if, in spite of all logic and good sense, this bill does not pass before it dies on the order paper, the government will not renege on the farmers and will pay interest on whatever money it is owing.

Mr. Paproski: They have reneged already. Let the courts decide.

Mr. Osler: Why does not someone take it to a court, then?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Although the Chair said earlier that the House was in a good mood this afternoon, and although I have tried to be as lenient as possible, I think hon. members should remember that it is they primarily who are responsible for the good standing of this House. This can only be achieved by following as closely as possible the rules concerning relevancy and order, as well as other rules of this House. The Chair cannot be the sole person who has this responsibility, and I would ask for the co-operation of hon. members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Osler: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am almost finished anyway. As I understand the point, the farmers at this moment have a promissory note solemnly given to them this afternoon by the minister that they will be paid under the old Act, if the government is refused passage of the new bill. If it is unduly delayed, they will be reimbursed with interest. What can be fairer than that? Should one be legalistic and follow through by paying under the old bill, even though he would be putting in with one hand and taking out with another? This is not a businesslike way of doing things. It would be a stupid procedure. The one being followed is in no way contempt of Parliament, as these hon. members have been trying to say.

An hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Osler: If it were contempt of Parliament, I would be as concerned as anyone else. I join my colleague who spoke a moment ago on a point of privilege. Whether or not the point of privilege was allowed, loose accusations help no one. They do not help the mood of the country, and they do not get a nickel nearer to the pockets of the farmers.

Hon. members opposite are speaking as if members on this side were in contempt of Parliament. If farmers do not get their money, I will be as concerned as any hon. member on the other side of the House and I will certainly hold the government responsible, but I have enough confidence in this government to know that farmers will get their money.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you. You should know better. You are a phony grit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) would answer a question, since his time has not expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member knows that he can only ask a question if he gets the consent of the hon. member who had the floor.

Mr. Osler: Yes.

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask the hon. member a simple question to which he can respond probably by a yes or a no. I put my question sincerely. Does he think, regardless of all political arguments, that the government has the legal right to withhold these payments under the act before the act has been rescinded? Has the government that right, regardless of all political bartering, yes or no?

Mr. Osler: Even if I were a lawyer I do not suppose I would say that it has or it has not, yes or no. Lawyers make their living by making long, learned decisions.

Mr. Paproski: You are not a lawyer.

Mr. Osler: If you would just shut up, you would hear my answer. My answer is that if in a reasonable length of time the government did not pay out its obligation it would be held liable like anybody else, but the minister just told you that the money will be paid within a reasonable length of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: After the next election.

Mr. Nystrom: May I ask a supplementary question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Again it is not the normal practice nor is it in accordance with the rules of the House—although a question may be asked with the permission of the hon. member—to allow numerous questions. I am ready to allow one more question if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre accepts it. However, following that, we will go to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact that the hon. member referred to a reasonable length of time, and it is now 14 or 15 months since the payments were last made, could the hon. member tell us what he thinks is a reasonable length of time before he would act as we are acting on this side of the House?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it clear earlier. This session will come to an end and the bill will die on the order paper if it has not been passed. If the government has not persuaded the opposition by that time that it is serious about its agricultural legislation, then we have no recourse but to pay under the old act.

Withholding of Grain Payments

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not dwell at any length on the legal arguments that have been put forward so ably by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), because I think that part of this debate has been more than adequately dealt with, and has yet to be answered by any member on the government side. We may still get some kind of reply, and I will await with anxiety to hear if we do. But I do wish to say that as a layman, not versed in the law, I find it strange that not once in the minister's 30 minute address did he refer to the subject matter of the amendment before us.

I listened as carefully as I could to the minister's remarks, with some of which I shall deal. I only want to say about the legal aspects of the matter just what Mr. Bain said this morning in his column in the Globe and Mail, and I quote:

> And the point was, and is, that it is Parliament, and not the government, which makes the law and that a law is not made until Parliament makes it, and is not unmade until Parliament unmakes it.

The minister says that in his view, and in the view of the government, Bill C-244 is a package beneficial to farmers. But the farm organizations do not think so, and the farm organizations have said so repeatedly. They have submitted briefs; they have asked; they have pleaded; they have met with the minister, and they have met with his officials. The three prairie governments do not think so either and, Mr. Speaker, the Members of Parliament on this side of the House do not think so. What is even more important, Mr. Speaker, is that farmers themselves do not think so.

I spent a great deal of time during the summer calling on farmers trying to get their opinions. I called on some farmers in the minister's own constituency. I have yet to find a farmer who would say to me that he thought Bill C-244 was good legislation. I have yet to have one farmer say that he is prepared to accept that kind of legislation in order to get an acreage payment this year. I do not know how the minister feels about the views of his constituents, Mr. Speaker, but the farmers in my constituency have got their message through to me very clearly. I consider myself instructed by the grain growers in Regina-Lake Centre to fight this legislation until hell freezes over and, Mr. Speaker, I think I have some obligation to pay some attention to the views of the grain growers in Regina-Lake Centre. Not only have I an obligation but, as a matter of common courtesy if nothing else, I should pay attention to every single grain growers organization in western Canada.

The minister can choose to ignore the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Wheat Pool, the United Grain Growers, the National Farmers Union, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the three prairie provincial federations of agriculture, but I do not intend to do that, and no other conscientious member on this side of the House is going to ignore them. It is not too often that farmers and farm organizations are in full agreement on anything. It is a long time since I can recall an issue on which there was such unanimity by the farm organizations and grain farmers.

One sometimes wonders if the minister has read or even listened to the brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when it was being read to him. No one can call the CFA a bunch of wild-eyed, raving radicals. No one would suggest they are an irresponsible group bent on filibustering and obstruction. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture put the matter bluntly and very succinctly in one sentence in the brief which it presented to the government on May 7. Recommendation No. 2 of the Federation reads:

> Aside from the "transitional" payment, the bill is not acceptable as it now stands.

That view is held by all the other farm organizations that I have mentioned. As reported in the Winnipeg Free Press of September 21, the Manitoba Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Uskiw, said:

> —Mr. Lang's plan doesn't deal with the current crisis of low farm incomes, but establishes a fund which might be beneficial by 1980.

I emphasize those words "might be beneficial by 1980".

> "While the program would pay out $100 million to prairie farmers for this year only, he said, the government has held back nearly $90 million from the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the change amounts to "only a trade-off of programs."
> Mr. Lang's plan doesn't take any account of increasing costs of production, he said, and in fact worsens the cash shortage problem because it is withholding payments that would normally be paid to farmers.
> "It's like asking someone to open a savings account when his current account is far in the red."

I had hoped that today the minister was going to propose some improvements in the legislation. I had hoped he would say that payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, at least for the previous crop year, would be made for those 12 months; that the government still intended to press for the rest of the legislation, but that it was prepared to make some changes in it. Had that been done, the House could have moved rapidly on the legislation. But, Mr. Speaker, the minister still remains stubborn and intransigent. He will not listen to the people whom he claims the legislation is designed to help. But the very people he says the program is beneficial to are the ones who tell him and the rest of the members of this House that it is bad legislation, and that it is not acceptable. That cannot be made any plainer, but the minister will not listen.

Does the minister really think and expect that we will sit here and supinely accept something he says is beneficial but which the grain growers of western Canada and all farm organizations say is not beneficial? Does he expect us to abrogate our responsibilities as Members of Parliament? If he does, he has another think coming to him. About the only main thrust, and I suppose one could call it the climax of the minister's speech, was the threat that unless this package of his goes through in a reasonable time the government will have to withdraw the bill, make the payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, leave everything the way it was, and blame members in the opposition parties for preventing the farmers from getting acreage payments.

In case the minister has not heard it, I wish to point out that last May and June, and at other times during the summer, a number of Liberal members were saying that the opposition parties were delaying, obstructing and filibustering. In fact, I think it would be fair to say that the minister himself also said that. If the minister is right, and if the people of the prairie provinces believe him, then it is passing strange how they conducted themselves in Alberta and Saskatchewan on a couple of dates in June and August. I say this was an insult to the intelligence of the prairie farmers because they feel the same way we do, and we will not be blackmailed or bullied into passing legislation that the minister claims is beneficial.

If one of my duties as a Member of Parliament is to cave in because the fighting is going to be tough, then the best thing the voters can do in my constituency is defeat me the next time around. I will take my chances on that score, and I am sure the minister will, too. He will have quite a job.

An hon. Member: He is going to the Senate.

Mr. Benjamin: We shall miss him in the next Parliament. I should certainly like to see his figures. The minister claims that his package will provide more money than was provided under previous programs. I think the National Farmers Union says something about this in language that is polite for that organization. They allege that Bill C-244 as presently constituted is inadequate in the following respects, as set out on page 12 of their brief:

Bill C-244 is a vehicle enabling the federal government to abrogate a number of federal policies related to the expenditure of public funds for the support of agriculture without reciprocating its commitments to grain stabilization on a comparable basis.

The brief continues and the following reasons are given for that position:

(i) Ending its commitment to guarantee initial prices to producers for wheat, oats and barley . . . In 1968-69 this guarantee for wheat resulted in payment by the government of $17,675,888 to the Canadian Wheat Board.

That was a payment of almost $18 million. Keep that in mind, Mr. Speaker. Another reason relates to ending the support of storage payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act for wheat in commercial storage over 178 million bushels at the end of the crop year. That payment has averaged over $40 million a year, bringing the total to almost $59 million that the government will not need to pay. The brief continues:

(iii) Repealing the Prairie Farm Assistance Act—

That will do away with $6 million that has been paid out annually from the federal treasury, bringing the total to about $65 million. The brief also speaks of——the discontinuance of the policy requiring millers to purchase wheat entering domestic human consumption at the basic rate of $1.95½ per bushel.

This will result in an annual loss of between $12 million and $15 million to wheat producers at present price levels. All this adds up—I think my arithmetic is reasonably correct—to approximating $75 million that the government will not pay or require to be paid. Under this legislation the government will be committed to an annual amount of approximately $40 million. This legislation, Mr. Speaker, is introduced purely and simply, not for the purpose of introducing meaningful programs for the western grains industry but in order to save the federal treasury between $35 million and $40 million.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Benjamin: I believe the minister is sincere. He made some valiant efforts with his cabinet colleagues to get more for the farmers than is contained in the legislation, and they turned him down. I believe he fought a hard battle with them last February or March for a two-price system, and they turned him down. I appeal to him to take another run at his cabinet colleagues and try to obtain, again, a two-price system. More important than that, I ask him to do something meaningful with regard to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

The minister was perfectly right when he said that all farm organizations have spoken about the inadequacies of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. There has never been any argument about that. The minister has chosen to use the act as a façade behind which he can hide, because he needs an excuse for repealing it. There are some good points about the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. It has relieved farmers over 14 years of the burden of several hundred million dollars in storage costs. The money has been paid to the Wheat Board by the federal government. The act established a precedent, if not a principle. I think it established a principle. It established the beginning of a good principle, that the nation as a whole, through the federal government, would participate in sharing the costs of grain storage.

As I said in an earlier debate, we could find $120 million to pay for the storage of uranium. I did not object to that. That payment will protect thousands of jobs and help some communities which would otherwise die. We can find that amount of money for the storage of uranium, but it seems that we cannot find about one-third of that amount to share in the cost of storing grain, a commodity which I submit is much more useful and necessary than uranium.

Mr. Gilbert: Right.

Mr. Benjamin: Those are some of the good aspects of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The main thing is that that act has set a precedent. It has begun a good principle, namely, that the nation as a whole shall assume some financial responsibility for the cost of grain storage. What about aspects of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act that are not so good? It applied only to wheat, as the minister said. It is backward legislation. Since it is Liberal legislation dating from about 1956, I believe, one would expect it to be a bit backward. After 14 years the Liberals do not know how to turn it around and make it a forward-looking piece of legislation. They want to repeal the whole thing. The minister is aware of the good aspects of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and the bad, and his solution is to throw the whole act out or, as the old saying goes, to throw the baby out with the bath water.

I suggest that the minister consider the policy of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool regarding grain storage and listen to what has been said time and again by farm organizations and co-operative elevator companies. These organizations ask him to do something positive with regard to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I propose that he bring in new clauses to Bill C-244 that will make up what could be known as the Canada grain storage act and would include the six grains mentioned in Bill C-244. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government should reverse the procedure that has been followed under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and pay the cost of storing up to 178 million or 200 million bushels of grain, and anything beyond that amount should be the responsibility of the elevator companies and, eventually, of the grain producers. There is no doubt that the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act tended to place too much emphasis on storage and not enough on handling.

If the minister really wants to get the best out of Bill C-244, I suggest that he ought to propose the inclusion in it of a Canada grain storage act relating to a suggested 414 million bushels carryover. I have a breakdown of the figures and would be glad to provide them to the minister. I am referring to a sensible carryover of all grains. This is what you would need for a basic minimum stock, with reserves being instituted for variations in grade and for unforeseen or interim sales: 320 million bushels of wheat, 17 million bushels of oats, 48 million bushels of barley, 6 million bushels of rye, 8 million bushels of flax and 15 million bushels of rapeseed, for a grand total for all grains of 414 million bushels.

May I say a word regarding elevator capacity in Canada. The country elevators on the Prairies have a capacity of 396 million bushels, the interior terminals and those at Churchill, on the Pacific Coast, at the Lakehead and on the St. Lawrence have a capacity of 276 million bushels and those at the Atlantic ports have a capacity of 8 million bushels. Therefore we have a total storage capacity of 680 million bushels. If you take the carryover of 410 million bushels and say the government of Canada pays for the storage costs on the first 200 million bushels, or pays half the storage costs—one may take it whichever way one likes—you will be left with a working capacity in the country elevators and terminals of 270 million bushels. Mr. Speaker, the minister evades these figures.

I agree that the payment of storage costs by the federal government under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act tended to help clog the system, whereas a sensible kind of carryover such as I have mentioned would mean that our terminal and country elevator capacity would be used to the extent of about 62 per cent of capacity. In short, there would be working space available for 270 million bushels. This space could be used for emergencies such as those occasioned by wet or damp grains or the need for specific grades. This has been proposed by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the suggestion has been brought forward in this House a number of times. I do not claim credit for being the only one who has spoken about this matter in the House. Several other members have spoken of the concept under which the nation as a whole shares with the farmer the cost of grain storage. We all agree that no longer must we clog our grain handling system to such an extent that we cannot turn a wheel. We all agree we must utilize our storage capacity much more sensibly.

For the minister to attempt to repeal the act is wrong. It is one of the essential reasons why we are opposing, and will continue to oppose, this bill. His threats of political blackmail are not going to dissuade us from opposing it.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some measure of shame because in this House, our highest institution which is supposed to respect the law of the land, I have to ask a minister of the Crown to respect a law enacted by Parliament on another occasion. It is somewhat presumptuous of me to think that I can persuade the minister that he should live up to the law, but it is my duty and I must do it.

I am not sure the people of this country realize the consequences of this type of debate. Many people feel this is a weak debate which centres around the prairie farmers and does not concern anybody else. I say to them and this House that what is involved here is far more than a weak debate or merely something which pertains to the farmers. What is involved is the obligation of the government to live up to the laws of the land. It is not only the obligation of government supporters to back the government which says it intends to do certain things; the executive must realize that unless the laws of the land which have been fashioned by Parliament are held supreme, this Parliament should fold up. This Parliament should fold up if we are going to pass legislation and then have the Prime Ministre (Mr. Trudeau) or a minister responsible for a bill say that we must abide by the law as they see fit on a particular day.

I feel sorry for this minister. I do not think he is responsible for what is happening. I think he tries to carry out his ministerial duties. The fact is that the law is being broken by the executive which expects to pass legislation and then impose upon the country this or any other type of legislation. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether we serve any useful purpose in this House. If we pass legislation, does it mean anything? I could argue the pros and cons of why we should pay certain moneys, but what concerns me is the fact that there are two sets of laws in this country, one for the executive and one for the man on the street. This bill affects the farmer. The next will affect the labourer, the third will affect the manufacturer, the fourth will affect the school teacher, and so on.

This is supposed to be a democratic society. If the government feels it has the power and authority to withhold or apply certain laws to certain people at certain times as it suits their purpose, then after 13 years in Parliament I want to walk away from this institution because I am no longer useful here, there is nothing I can do. On September 8, as recorded at page 7623 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) whether the law was being flouted. I received no reply. Fortunately, my colleague the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) raised the issue. He said this question is far more serious. Since that time I have watched the proceedings of this House with interest.

As an observer, I admire the fact that somewhere in this institution there is hope. However, there cannot be any hope for an administration like the present one. There is only one thing wrong with this institution, that is, the executive. The executive is led by the Prime Minister who has only one thing in mind, dictatorial power. I do not know what the rest of the cabinet does.

Mr. Dinsdale: They say yes.

Mr. Korchinski: I do not have the opportunity to listen to their meetings. However, if the Prime Minister has the almighty power to tell a minister of the Crown that he has no business paying a sum of money which Parliament has authorized to be paid, what more can we do? What other recourse do we have? I can only make a speech. I cannot stomp across the floor of the chamber because Your Honour will call me to order. I am very capable of doing that, but of what value would it be?

There is only one thing wrong. The arrogance of this government is obvious through its actions. There is only one way for the people to react to that type of arrogance. The only appeal is the final appeal to the people. If the minister from Saskatchewan wants to be helpful, he should convince his cabinet colleagues of this. On his behalf I appeal to his cabinet colleagues to give him an opportunity to live up to the law. The minister is from Saskatchewan. He cannot do what the farmers of Saskatchewan have asked him to do, because of the Prime Minister and the rest of the cabinet.

What can we do in a situation like this? All we can do is appeal to the Prime Minister through speeches made in this House. I am very concerned. I feel sorry for the minister. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is in the chamber. I know that he is just as concerned. What else can I do but say to the Prime Minister that he is not a dictator yet. The law is the law and, by God, he has to live up to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: Why can the Prime Minister disobey the law? He can do so simply because his supporters far outnumber those in the opposition. But why should we assume they will all vote in favour of this legislation? Are all the members over there yo-yos?

An hon. Member: What is a yo-yo?

Mr. Woolliams: They are puppets.

An hon. Member: Pulled by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Korchinski: Since when has any minister the right to assume that every member of the party supporting him will in fact continue to do so? I remind Your Honour that it was once necessary to hold an election on the basis of one vote cast by a member of this House who reversed his position with regard to a particular issue. That is part of Canadian history. Why should we expect these members to be dum-dums, yo-yos, or whatever people want to call them? Are they yo-yos, or are they dum-dums? They are nobodies when they get 50 yards from the House, as the Prime Minister once told them. We accept that proposition.

In this Parliament there are 26 ministers, but the Minister of Agriculture cannot get his way because one almighty Caesar does not wish it. There is no way in which I can be convinced that even the cabinet has the right to flout the law. I raised this question early in September but it was shrugged off on that occasion. I do not feel slighted. I think it is a very good issue. I believed at that time it was important, and I couldn't care less whether it came up on that occasion or almost a month later. The issue is an important one, far more important than the $60 million due to the western producers although, by God, we could use the money. What is the use of voting one way or another on any measure if somebody in the administration can decide whether to live up to the law or not? The Prime Minister has been accused of being a dictator.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Korchinski: It is not as simple as that. But now we have positive proof. Because we in western Canada are smaller in number we are treated without the slightest consideration. The Minister of Agriculture just sits there and grins. If I were in the cabinet, if I were minister responsible for the Wheat Board, knowing that the law was in existence I would feel obliged to make this payment. So what about it? Let hon. members over there tell me they are not obliged to make the payment. I say to the minister, "Pay the $60 million for last year and we shall forget the interest on that amount. We shall forget the two months after that". From that point on, if the minister wants to stabilize farm income let him come through with a plan. I believe the minister is a reasonable man. I have had occasion to deal with him. I believe he wants to work it that way.

Mr. Haidasz: Why criticize him, then?

Mr. Korchinski: I wish you were in the cabinet. I believe you are also reasonable. You should be in the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member address his remarks to the Chair. Perhaps his use of "you" was rhetorical. However, the hon. member should address the Chair.

Mr. Korchinski: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I was carried away. But I am as adamant as I was before. There is only one thing left for the minister to do, that is to appeal to his colleagues in the cabinet to allow the payment of the $60 million which was due last year. We have already lost one year. He could then go through with his stabilization bill. We have given evidence of our co-operation, our willingness to help the minister along with his legislation.

The government has the right to introduce and amend legislation, but it certainly has no right to flout the law. If the government insists on taking its present course I would point out that everyone will have the right to go the wrong way on a one-way street. Everybody would have the right to abuse the laws of the country, the executive having already done so. To whom can one appeal, if not to the highest level, that is, to the cabinet itself? They will not tell me for one moment that I have the right to refuse to pay income tax.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the hon. member but I would bring to the notice of the House the fact that he has about a minute and a half left. Perhaps the hon. member could finish his remarks with the consent of the House, it now being six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: I shall not labour the point. If the executive has the right to break the law, I invite everybody in this country to break the law, which I suggest is a bad thing. If that is what the government wants, they are encouraging it by this type of legislation.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks we have had the opportunity of discussing on several occasions the subject matter to which this particular amendment is directed. I am just as sorry to see the performance of the minister speaking in this House on behalf of the Wheat Board on this occasion as I have been on previous occasions. Just as in the previous debate, the arguments on this occasion have not been, as they were when we were discussing Bill C-244, whether or not western agriculture is better served by the implementation of that bill but, rather, whether or not a minister of the Crown has the right to break the law, as it is contended is the case. During all this debate the minister has not stood in the House and declared that he did not break the law. However, he has said that if certain things happen it may be necessary after a certain period of time again to apply the law.

I suggest that this is the kind of issue that probably can be settled only by an election. Obviously we are building up to that. If we had a minority government, I presume that we would sit down and decide the merits of Bill C-244. But I suggest that some of the members on the opposite side who have been talking about a majority are advising the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he should fight an election over this issue. Once the opposition has decided that the government is not going to obey the laws of the land, once they believe that the government has decided to call on its backbenchers to support the government be it right or wrong—it has on a number of occasions since I have been here—the only way to settle the issue probably is to take it to the country.

We are not now debating any agricultural issue. The issue we are discussing is how the members of the government can justify allowing a cabinet member to break the law without themselves becoming concerned about it. There are many lawyers on the other side of the House. They have studied law and are well aware how the law as we know it has developed over the years. However, I do not think there would be one of them who, having taken even an elementary course in law, would not agree that anyone who has been trained in the law pledges himself to support that law. If he does not, then he is excommunicated, or whatever it is they do to lawyers who do not toe the line; and I suggest that a lot of excommunications can take place.

Mr. Boulanger: Come on, talk to us about Schreyer in Manitoba.

Mr. Peters: I would be happy to talk about my former room-mate, Ed Schreyer, but I do not see in what way he has anything to do with the issue we are discussing today or with the majority over there who have decided to break the law. If the Premier of another province breaks the law, I am sure the official opposition in the province would feel the same way I do, namely, frustrated knowing that the government cannot operate because the rules do not operate.

I do not understand this minister. He is sensitive, there is no question of that. He is well learned and highly educated, or is reputed to be so. But obviously he has gone along with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and several other cabinet members who have declared that this legislation is so important to agriculture, from their point of view, that it should be put through the House come what may. At one time a Conservative government tried to do this and got itself into serious trouble. The Liberals tried it once before and they, too, got into serious difficulty. Both occasions concerned tax legislation and in both cases the government had pretty well run the gauntlet of its particular Parliament and had reached the stage when the law and the supremacy of this institution were no longer important.

The House leader is well versed in the law. He sits in the cabinet. With his knowledge of the operation of Parliament I would be surprised if he does not see the dissolution of this Parliament as a result of the government's action in refusing to obey the law. If the opposition decides that nothing the government does is honest, forthright or legal, then we might as well face the problem right now.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: They want a one-party system.

Mr. Peters: This minister responsible for the Wheat Board is not only guilty of breaking the law and agreeing to break the law—

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hogarth: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. Hogarth: Where is it the responsibility of this minister to proceed under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, this minister being Otto Lang? Where is his responsibility under that act? Where did he break the law?

Mr. Alexander: You are nit-picking.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the operation of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is under the Wheat Board. Its operation provides that the money must be paid to the Wheat Board on a monthly, pro rata basis. This minister is responsible for the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board normally—

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. Unless the hon. member who has the floor wishes to receive questions we should allow him to proceed with his speech.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I shall answer the second question as soon as I finish answering the first. Monthly payments are made once the total in the system reaches 112 million bushels, and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) has the responsibility of billing the government for each of those additional bushels of wheat. That amounts to about 9 or 10 cents a bushel. These payments are pro rated and when due the request is made to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, by statute—not by his own decision but by statute—has the responsibility to rebate that money to the Wheat Board. Obviously, he gets the request from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Once the request is made, the responsibility lies with the Minister of Finance to administer the statute. I suggest there is a dual responsibility, one cannot operate without the other, but obviously the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is responsible to that body. Was there another question?

Mr. Hogarth: Yes. You have been talking about this minister breaking the law—

An hon. Member: It is the government he is talking about.

Mr. Hogarth: You have been talking for half an hour about this minister breaking the law—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Why don't you get up and make a speech?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I realize that the hon. member said he would receive a question, but the hon. member who is asking the question should ask it through the Chair.

Mr. Hogarth: My question to the hon. member is this: Where, under sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6, which are the sections of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, has this minister broken the law? The hon. member will have some support for his position if he can show where this minister, Otto Lang, from Saskatoon-Humboldt has broken the law.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should think two facts are obvious to the hon. member asking the questions.

An hon. Member: Don't count on it.

Mr. Peters: One is that when a decision is made in cabinet, all those who are involved in making the decision must be responsible. I have indicated that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)—this does not leave the other ministers blameless—will not make that statutory payment until this minister bills him for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Until this minister sends in the bill, the Minister of Finance will likely let the account pile up. It is quite possible, with the efficiency of the Minister of Finance, that he may not know that we have a bill of almost $92 million under this statute.

Mr. Hogarth: How much?

Mr. Peters: Ninety-two million dollars. Add it up and you will find that this is about the amount. Every day this debate continues, Mr. Speaker, the amount increases and the credibility of the government decreases.

As has been indicated by members who have already spoken and by witnesses who appeared before the agricultural committee, there has been a great deal of opposition to this piece of legislation. I have received about 2,800 or 2,900 letters and petitions from western Canada. I am quite prepared to say that the petitions were instigated by one or two organizations in western Canada. Most members will agree that farmers there are highly organized, they know exactly what is going on in their business and they know exactly what they will settle for.

Recently there have been elections in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta, the provinces faced with the problems of wheat and cereal grains. Their Ministers of Agriculture and the previous ministers representing different parties have said that they are not satisfied with the stabilization bill and have made arrangements to come to Ottawa around the beginning of October to discuss it.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that members who really believed that the farmers of western Canada should be given a break would be pressing the government to shelve this piece of legislation and to make the payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act as required by law. The minister can lie all he wants, but we are only talking about $15 or $16 million at the most—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Peters: —and, by my calculation, $7 million or $8 million. That is all the money we have to talk about in the arrangement that must be made in making this new bill operative and taking over from the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

Let me address a question through you, Mr. Speaker, to those members from Quebec who are interested in agriculture. Would they be satisfied to have the Minister of Agriculture or the minister responsible for farm operations in the province of Quebec make a decision on their behalf when their farm organizations were opposed to it? Of all the representations made before the agricultural committee, none supported the bill as it stands.

This bill has received a great deal of public attention and the government has flooded western Canada with propaganda about it. But if they are still of the opinion that it is the best bill possible and is acceptable to western Canada, they would be willing to wait for the representations of the Ministers of Agriculture of the prairie provinces. They would be as willing to listen to them as to the Ministers of Agriculture of New Brunswick, Quebec or Ontario talking about potato problems in those provinces.

I believe this cabinet has decided that they have a majority and that the law does not matter, that Parliament does not matter, that the people do not matter—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: —that they are supreme, and the only way they can be tested is with an election. If that is their desire, Mr. Speaker, let us not waste two or three months getting around to it; let's do it now.

• (8:20 p.m.)

It seems to me that no matter what proposition is put before Members of Parliament, it should be considered as being flexible. It should be amendable and it should be the kind of proposition that would be acceptable at least to the majority of the people who are to have it thrust upon them. From the information which comes across my desk and from the petitions and representations I have seen and heard, the farmers of western Canada do not buy it. They did not buy it at $100 million, and they sure as hell will not buy it now that $92 million is owed to them under this account.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) was here. I do not know what his role is in this matter. However, I believe all honourable men who are responsible for the administration of law—I do not mean only the cabinet ministers but every elected member of this House—should be concerned about this. More than that, all civil servants take an oath to uphold the law. Those responsible senior civil servants also have a responsibility to either see that the law is enforced or resign.

When speaking to a senior civil servant the other day he told me in a jovial manner that they had been giving bad advice. He was not only giving bad advice, he was giving advice that was dishonest, disloyal and illegal. We are not talking about something that happened just a few months ago. Here is a government which not only has not made the payment on this account this year but has not made it for a whole year.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is sitting here. He probably will be involved because this is a matter which may affect him. There will be an immense amount of unemployment this winter. The Minister of Labour will be faced, one of these days, with the proposition that there is no money in the unemployment insurance fund and he will find that people who have legitimately paid into that fund will ask for money out of it. The minister will have to make up his mind, not later but right then, whether he will ask Parliament to cancel the unemployment insurance scheme and go to another kind of welfare arrangement, or ask that the money from the treasury be paid into the unemployment insurance fund so that he can pay it out and honour the legislation for which he is responsible.

I have no question in my mind about what he would do. He would do just that: he would ask the government for the money, and if it were not forthcoming he would resign. I know it and I believe most members of this House know it. I believe the action of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board represents a dereliction of duty and makes him an immoral person and one whom I do not think is responsible in this Parliament or is a responsible cabinet minister.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long this evening because I know many members wish to participate in this debate. Also, I do not intend to be an apologist for the government. I decided to take part in this debate a few minutes ago and therefore do not have the volume of notes the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had. They seemed to read as though they were a collaboration of Patrick Walsh, Ron Gostick and Chiang Kai-shek.

Let me say that at this moment the government owes certain money to the Wheat Board but that under the circumstances this fact cannot be taken alone. I submit we cannot look at that fact alone but must look at all the circumstances. If we look at all the circumstances, I submit there are parties in this Parliament who are equally guilty or more guilty than the party in power. Let us go back to last fall when the prairie grain stabilization act was first proposed. It underwent a period of discussion and certain changes were made to it with the approval of many people in western Canada. At that time the intention of the government was well known: it intended to replace that act with an act that would greatly benefit farmers in western Canada.

What I want to know, and what I am sure our friends in the press gallery want to know—because they have not accepted all the phony arguments of my friends to the left—is where were these people at that time? If it was illegal in June for the government to do what it is doing today, why were no motions put in respect of impeachment then? The political positions taken by the opposition are those which are favourable to the Conservative party and the New Democratic party.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make any defence; I just wish to put a few points on the record. The other point I wish to make is that it strikes me that our friends in the opposition are the complainants in what they pretend here is a legal case.

An hon. Member: On behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. Sulatycky: Fine; on behalf of the people of Canada or on behalf of the Queen—it does not matter on whose behalf they complain. However, they are complaining and they are in the same position as a person who puts a gun to the head of the driver of a car, tells him to drive 100 miles an hour and break the law and then complains about his behaviour.

In May and June the opposition prevented the farmers of western Canada receiving $100 million, and today they accuse the government of doing this. I submit that for one to be guilty of a crime the intention to break the law is important. I believe it is very clear to all observers in this House, and certainly to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who is one of the most independent members in the House, that the government intended to benefit the farmers of western Canada and made that intention clear last spring. It intended to pass better legislation early this spring and was prevented doing so by the Conservative party and the NDP. The intention of this government throughout was most honourable. I submit it is the actions of the opposition which are dishonourable in this whole affair.

I wish to make one last comment. They relate to some comments made by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) during the extended debate that took place last Thursday evening. He referred to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) and the students of that minister. Since I am in the unique position of being the only person in this House who was a student of this former dean of law of the University of Saskatchewan, I can say I am very proud of it. I was privileged to be one of his students. We who were his students are proud of it. We are proud of him. What we need in this House of Commons is more people like the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and far fewer gutter politicians like those who sit in the opposition.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in the debate on this first non-confidence motion between now and December 10. It has been a very lively and interesting debate. I do not propose to take the time of the House to go over the points that have been covered by other hon. members, other than to say that during the evening of the debate which Your Honour granted to the House on Thursday, September 16, I asked the following question of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang):

I am not a prairie farmer but I wish to ask the minister this question. Does he not agree that legislation passed by this House and now on the statute books of Canada should be enforced until such time as it is amended or repealed by other legislation?

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) interjected:

That is the question.

The minister answered:

Mr. Speaker, that is an easy, general question to answer in the affirmative.

Then he went on to make some observations. From the minister's answer to that question I have convinced myself, as I am sure all hon. members on this side of the House have, that this is the issue and such is the minister's duty and obligation. Not only has this government failed to pay a bill but they have also paid some bills with moneys which were not authorized by Parliament. I hope that after I have illustrated this with some examples, members on the other side will say to the opposition, "Forgive us for the things that we have left undone and forgive us for those things we have done".

Let us reflect for a while on the responsibility of the government. I do not mean just this government but all governments. In our form of government, a democratic, responsible government, the government through the executive is responsible to Parliament. Parliament makes the laws, the government does not make them. I think this was very well expressed by George Bain in an article which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail when he said:

—it is Parliament, and not the government, which makes the law—and that a law is not made until Parliament makes it, and is not unmade until Parliament unmakes it.

Mr. Baldwin: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has not seen that.

Mr. Hales: This government or any government that we may have in Canada is bound by the laws of Canada, made for the citizens of Canada. This government in particular has been whittling away at the authority of Parliament in many ways. I propose to direct my remarks to the treasury benches or the Treasury Board who have been whittling away at the authority of this House. In the Financial Administration Act, which deals with all our financial matters and which is the bible as it were for these transactions, section 25 provides:

All estimates of expenditures submitted to Parliament shall be for the services coming in course of payment during the fiscal year.

That is very plain. But let us see what the government has been doing in this regard. In the 1969-70 estimates the following amounts were not required during the year and they did not lapse at the end of the year in compliance with section 35 of the Financial Administration Act which says that they must lapse at the end of the year. In the Agriculture vote 17b there was a reserve for wheat inventory reduction payments. That was money for the Lift program. It was put in the estimates for that year but never used; it was allowed to lapse.

Then there was the Secretary of State vote 30 for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which was for $11,993,000. That was never used; it was allowed to lapse and was left for them to spend in any way they saw fit. The same thing happened with Transport vote 80 for $2,036,000. Then there was the Treasury Board vote 5a, the contingency vote for $58,656,000. All these amounts were included as expenditures in the year under the several votes which I have listed, although they were not expended but were retained to meet obligations in future years. I could add to the list.

At March 31, 1970, all the items that were referred to in the report of the Auditor General added up to $296.6 million. That money which was in the control of the treasury was spent without Parliament's authority in any way that the government saw fit. This is a whittling away of the authority of Parliament. All we have to consider is the contingency vote. Members of this House know how important that was. A few years ago the opposition had interim supply which it could use against the government if the government did not fulfil certain obligations. That was taken away from us. We thought we had a real weapon to use, but interim supply was sidestepped by the government who dug into the contingency vote to pay government salaries. Everybody will remember the rumpus that broke out at that time.

How are these things brought about? They are brought about by the special wording which appears in the Appropriation Acts. Who puts in this special wording? It is the Treasury Board or the minister responsible for the Treasury Board. He must account to Parliament for the special wording that was put in. Parliament has not been told that a change was made, nor were the words underlined when there was a change. These are cases which illustrate the fact that parliamentary authority is being whittled away.

There is another example of the government's obtained money without coming to Parliament. Certain departments have revenues coming in. They estimate what the department will need and what their revenue will be and we appropriate the difference. In many cases the revenues are either higher than they expected or their estimate is low, so they have a great deal of money left over to spend in the department and they do not have to come back to the House for authority. Therefore, they are able to pay bills without the proper authority of this House.

Now let us consider grants in lieu of aid. In 1969 there were seven grants and $131,440 was paid by the treasury out of vote 5. Then they produced supplementaries before the House, which were passed, but we were not even told by the government that the grants had been paid. It was all covered up. The least Treasury Board can do is to see that when supplementaries come before the House for the payment of grants which have been paid, a notation is made saying that the grants have been paid and that they are asking for the authority of Parliament. But this is a left-handed, backward way of doing it.

I think, too, of the abuse of a grant that was paid, an illegal grant. I am talking of money that was paid to the Winnipeg games during Expo year. There was a deficit on those games and it was paid out of the contingency fund. The legislation setting up the Fitness and Amateur Sport Council stipulates that its expenditures should not exceed $5 million a year, yet the authority went ahead and paid money out of the continency fund instead of coming to Parliament and seeking our authority to pay it.

Not only has the government failed to pay a bill that it is obligated to pay under the statute, but it has whittled away at the authority of this House until it can be said that it has paid some bills without the proper authority to do so. My time has almost expired. I just wish to say that as an elected representative in a democratic country where the government is responsible, through the executive, to Parliament, it is my solemn obligation and the solemn obligation of all hon. members to see that the government of the day is held responsible for its actions. I do not care what party forms the government. I am here to defend the law in the highest court in the land. This is basic to our system of government. Therefore, I have no hesitation whatsoever in supporting this vote of non-confidence in a government that does not obey the will of Parliament.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Will you close the debate?

Mr. Olson: No, I will not be closing the debate. I understand it will be continuing until 9.45 tonight. There are two aspects of the motion before the House with which I would like to deal. One is the allegation that the government has done something wrong or immoral or illegal. The other aspect concerns the consequences to the people affected whether or not this bill is passed, whether the payments are made in accordance with its provisions or whether the opposition prevents the government and the House making a decision on the bill, thus requiring the government to revert to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and make the payments under the provisions of that act.

Dealing with the first aspect, Mr. Speaker, it was no secret to the members of this House nor to the farming community that the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was part of Bill C-244. On October 29, 1970, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) sent details of a proposal to members of this House and to the farming community at large in western Canada in which was included the stabilization bill—generally the provisions that are now in this bill—and, in addition, the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. What happened following that?

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board invited the farm organizations and everyone interested to make representations to him and to Members of Parliament respecting the proposal in that document. Many representations were received. There were some who expressed disapproval of the general proposal and there were others who expressed approval in principle that government had finally come to grips with the over-all problem of rationalizing the totality of the grain handling and marketing systems, but they had some reservations about certain details. We admit that.

A lengthy period of time was provided for such representations to be made through the proper channels and, as I say, representations were made. Following all the discussion that the responsible minister had with those organizations, that I had with many of the organizations and, indeed, that other members of the House had, we introduced Bill C-244. There was debate in the House on it. The minister candidly and freely admitted that some suggested amendments had come in even following all that, which he was prepared to consider in the standing committee when the bill received second reading.

There were some amendments made in the standing committee. But the point that I think is essential in the context of the want of confidence motion now before us is that all through this procedure which went on for months it was known, well known, that the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was part of the proposition. There was no secret about that.

As a matter of fact, when witnesses from the Canadian Wheat Board appeared before the standing committee they were asked how much would be paid out under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act if the proposal incorporated in this bill were not acted upon. For anyone to say in this debate that there was something immoral, secretive and deceptive about all this procedure is most ridiculous.

In the remaining, brief time at my disposal I would like to speak about some of the consequences to grain producers in western Canada if the opposition forces us to abandon this bill.

Mr. Horner: Pay your bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, despite all their squealing and screaming, if the opposition refuses to pass this bill the government will be paying—as the minister said, with interest—about $40 million less than it would be paying for the farmers' benefit under Bill C-244. What is even worse is that hon. members from western Canada, particularly those from grain growing areas, who know how this money is distributed know that the main burden of the loss of that $40 million will fall on the smaller producers.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Olson: The proposal under Bill C-244 is to pay out about $1.45 per acre, up to 640 acres, to all producers equally on that basis. Without Bill C-244 it means that farmers are going to be paid on a per bushel basis. Those who have not delivered a large quota during the 1970-71 or 1969-70 years, or for any reason have not had enough grain to fill their quota, or indeed had a small quota, will get proportionately much less than the larger producers.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: But that is the law.

Mr. Olson: Now, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: —the responsibility for the disappointment of thousands of small farmers across western Canada who are not getting $1.45 times their acreage lies squarely on those people who have prevented this bill from passing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The responsibility lies squarely on the government.

Mr. Olson: Not only that—

An hon. Member: Pay up.

Mr. Olson: —but, as was stated by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, we were prepared to pay it last May.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you?

Mr. Olson: We were prepared to pay last June.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you pay?

Mr. Olson: Why? That is the most asinine question I have heard in all the arguments that have been advanced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: It is asked, why didn't we pay it? After the speech of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), that is the most asinine question I have ever heard. We do not have any authority to pay it unless the bill passes through this House.

Mr. Ricard: Surely the minister admits that the law is there.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hales: No, to ask a question. I ask the minister, is the statute passed by this Parliament not his authority to pay the bill?

Mr. Baldwin: When is the minister going to stop breaking the law?

Mr. Olson: Regarding the question that was asked a moment ago, I am sorry if the hon. member's hearing is defective and he did not hear why we cannot pay the $100 million under this bill.

An hon. Member: No, that is not the question.

Mr. Olson: The reason we have not paid it is that we have not the authority to pay it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I hope—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I hope that hon. members—

Mr. Korchinski: You are a liar and a crook. You are a damn liar and a crook.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

Mr. Korchinski: You are a damn liar and a crook.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members will contain themselves because I am going to be giving them the facts of life for only four more minutes.

Mr. Baldwin: Why doesn't the minister start?

Mr. Horner: The minister calls them the facts of life.

Mr. Olson: The opposition may get a great deal of fun out of this matter because they may think they have made some political hay, but the sad part is that there are thousands of farmers, I think something like 170,000—

An hon. Member: Pay up.

Mr. Olson: —in western Canada who are expecting, and who have every right to expect, the distribution, based on an acreage calculation, of $100 million. They have been waiting for it since May. They waited in June. We brought this measure on again, notwithstanding pressure to get other legislation through, when we came back and the opposition still continues the filibuster. It is a sad state of affairs, Mr. Speaker. I would appeal again, in conclusion, to the opposition to set aside some of these political, partisan considerations and think for a minute about those small farmers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: —who are expecting distribution of this $100 million.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Keep a straight face.

Mr. Olson: Because unless they lift the filibuster and pass this bill we simply cannot pay the $100 million that we as a government are committed to pay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to ask a question. The question is very simple. I will repeat what I asked the minister last summer, before that part of the session ended. Will the minister, on behalf of the government, bring in an estimate for $100 million? It will pass this House in half an hour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there is no need to bring in another $100 million supplementary estimate, since we already have a request for the statutory payment of $100 million.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: Any bills that pass here are not worth anything.

Withholding of Grain Payments

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my first remark is that what I am about to say should not be said by anybody in this House.

An hon. Member: Don't say it, then.

Mr. Horner: The situation has become so deplorable under this government that I feel these words have to be said. I noticed today in a news release which came across my desk that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has announced a national conference on the law. It is high time.

Mr. Stanfield: It is too late.

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Justice has failed to uphold the law of Canada in more than one instance. He failed to uphold the British North America Act, as a result of which a province was forced to take a case to the Supreme Court. That was the result of a despicable action by a completely despicable government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: This conference is to be held from February 1 to February 4, 1972.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It's too late.

Mr. Horner: I suggest that one more topic ought to be added to the subjects to be discussed in the plenary sessions and workshops, namely, "Government and the law".

Mr. Baldwin: Or "How to break the law without really trying".

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack), who has carried out research into these matters, pointed out to me what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on September 27, 1968, as reported at page 498 of Hansard. The Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, the estimates which were tabled the other day obviously make it clear that expenses which are not controllable by the government have risen beyond any expectation. It is obvious that we cannot break a statute or an agreement which has been reached with the provinces, and that these expenses have exceeded everyone's expectations.

He went on to say that the government had tried to compensate for that "by cutting very seriously into all the controllable expenditures." Clearly, when the Prime Minister took over in 1968 he had retained enough of his legal learning to know that we ought to keep within the law and obey statutes passed by Parliament. There is no doubt that the Temporary Reserves Act calls on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to pay money. Section 4 of the act reads as follows:

> 4. The moneys payable to the board by the Minister of Finance under this act shall be paid as follows:
> (a) in respect of the crop year commencing on the 1st day of August, 1955, one-half of the total amount payable for the crop year shall be paid forthwith upon the coming into force of this act and the balance shall be paid in equal monthly payments for the remainder of the crop year; and
> (b) in respect of any subsequent crop year, the total amount payable for the crop year shall be paid in equal monthly payments within such crop year.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

That is clear. Now, how much is really owing? There seems to be some doubt about the figure. Many figures were bandied about. On page 15, issue No. 58 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, Mr. Treleaven of the Canadian Wheat Board is reported as saying:

> The $60 million was due as of August 1, 1970, of which $40 million would be applied roughly against the 1969-70 pool account, and the other $20 million applied against the 1970-71.

Since that time another $26 million is to be applied against the 1970-71 pool. We are now in what is commonly called the 1971-72 crop year and the payments to go up by $2.5 million a month. By February of next year there will be $92.5 million owing to western Canada.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Pass the bill.

Mr. Horner: There is one unmistakable fact that these people who holler "Pass the bill" are forgetting. I said that under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act this year the amount payable goes up at $2.5 million per month. Next year it may go up at a different rate. Will there be $100 million available for the government to send out next year? There will not be any money. It is a bribe. It is a one-shot goal using the farmers' own money.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) spoke about the conditions in agriculture. Let us look at that situation. I refer to the July Dominion Bureau of Statistics' index of farm prices for agricultural commodities based on 1961 equalling 100. In 1967 the index for farm prices in the province of Saskatchewan was 106.9, almost 107. It is now 89.7. Farm prices in the province of Saskatchewan are now down to 89.7.

What about the revenue? One can look at the farm cash income. Yesterday I showed these figures to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang). He said, "Yes, that is true; but net income has dropped." In 1968 the farm income in Saskatchewan was $582 million. Last year, 1970, it was $194 million. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board said, "Jack, those figures are not really accurate. They fail to take into consideration the amount in storage." That is quite right, but the realized net income does not fail to do that. That picture is no better. In 1966 the realized net income in Saskatchewan was $464 million. In 1970 it was $193 million. By grouping the three prairie provinces, the realized net income is down 44 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Horner: Isn't it shameful what this government does? The government talks about prices. On January 1, 1970, wheat at Vancouver went down 5-7/8 cents a bushel. At Thunder Bay it went down 7-1/8 cents a bushel. Prices are down. The minister quoted glowing figures to show that grain deliveries are improving. Because there was talk of a fall election the elevators were being emptied, and now they are attempting to fill them. Referring to fiscal and monetary policies, on March 2 the Prime Minister said:

> The member knows that in recent budgets we did in effect apply fiscal policies on a regional basis, and we intend to continue to apply these tools in the future in one form or another.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Prairies are getting the short end of the stick. Western Canada is getting the short end of the stick. The government can have all the regional fiscal policies it likes, but I wonder why the Minister of Finance is not paying these bills.

Mr. Stanfield: He is breaking the law.

Mr. Horner: He is breaking the law. Also, he does not like the Prairies. In front of 40 other people last June the minister told me that he did not give an s-h-i-t about the Prairies.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Horner: In front of 40 other people in the room he said loudly that he did not give an s-h-i-t. Is there any doubt about why he does not make payments, with that kind of attitude? If that attitude continues there is no recourse for western Canada but to separate. I do not want to separate. I am a Canadian. The roots of the Horner family are well founded all across Canada. They are well founded in the province of Quebec and there is a member of my family in nearly every province. How can you expect to have a vibrant, growing, industrious, energetic part of Canada when it is not being treated fairly by Ottawa? What can you expect, when the Minister of Finance makes remarks like that to me in front of 40 other people? How can western Canada be expected to absorb that? This bill deliberately flaunts the law.

Mr. Deachman: The word is "flout".

Mr. Horner: I ask every member of this House to answer this question. If the Temporary Wheat Reaserves Act had anything to do with money for the province of Quebec, would the government not be paying it? I ask every member to answer this question from his heart. I have to say yes, the government would be paying it or bringing in another act to make another payment. Let us be truthful.

Mr. Lang: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Horner: When I am through you may ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to know if I could ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It does not seem the hon. member will permit a question.

Mr. Horner: A surcharge was recently placed on goods entering the United States. What did the government do? It made available $80 million for industry, most of which is located in central Canada. It has not brought in any measure for the agricultural industry. The minister made a great speech. He said the government is going to do something with the stabilization board. The government has not done anything with the stabilization board since it took over. They dropped the demands on the steel and ship industries. They have not done anything for the agricultural industry to meet the surcharge. The effect of the surcharge upon the agricultural industry are well known.

Mr. Stanfield: They are stabilizing poverty.

Mr. Horner: They are stabilizing poverty and they are stabilizing the growth of western Canada. They are not helping it in any way, shape or form. There is no doubt that the government is oriented to helping eastern Canada. It does not give one hoot about western Canada. The government does not even care about the lumber and timber industry in British Columbia. It has made no attempt to help out the pulp industry today which is mainly centered in the two extremities of Canada. It has been concerned about the niceties.

As a Canadian taxpayer, I can honestly say that the amount of money that the government is pouring into Quebec is paying off. There is some levelling of unemployment in that province. I hope they can sustain that situation. In 1968 the government said to the people of Canada that unity was the question confronting our country. It then came forward with a regional fiscal policy and deliberately flaunted the law and did not put money into any region.

Mr. Deachman: "Flout", not "flaunt".

Mr. Horner: Flout. You fellows do not pay any attention whatsoever. The government deliberately breaks the law. The insult of all insults was when the Minister of Finance, who has a responsibility to obey the law, told me in front of 40 people that he did not give an s-h-i-t for the Prairies.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: You have already said that.

Mr. Horner: I may say it several more times. I am going to Assiniboia next week, and I will also say it there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The time has come for stool-pigeons like the Minister of Agriculture. He is just a "stoolie" running around trying to please the Prime Minister. I was disappointed in the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Sulatycky). He made a speech tonight in which he said nothing, really. I suppose he is vying for a job as parliamentary secretary.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I feel sorry for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). He just sits there looking like a good boy, probably because he thinks the mantle of power will be assigned to him as long as he keeps his hands clean. Why does he not defend the law? He calls for a great seminar on the law. He outlines the plenary sessions and the workshop sessions which are to be held—"Sex and the family and the law", "The media and the law". Purely seeking publicity for himself, that is all he is doing. He does not really mean to accomplish anything. If he did, there would be one other subject there—"Government and the law."

The chicken-and-egg war was the result of the government's failure to uphold the law. The government is making every chicken producer and every egg producer battle the law for them. The British North America Act is the constitution of this country. It is the duty of the Minister of Justice to see that the law is upheld. But he sits there with his hands folded and tries to remove himself from the scene. Mr. Speaker, he is part and parcel of this situation and he has to take his share of the responsibility.

I feel sorry for the members of the Wheat Board because there is not enough strength in the cabinet to demand fair and equal treatment for all parts of Canada. The Minister of Agriculture is finished. They have no respect for him in Western Canada because they cannot believe his word any more, and once a man's word is no good he is no good himself. I still have faith in the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson) and in the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang). They are fighting. But they must have help, and if the Minister of Justice, as a prospective leader of his party, does not help now, his silence will be well remembered in western Canada when he starts his campaigning. He ought not to think that just because he attended university and danced with Princess Margaret in Vancouver this will get him much support in western Canada. He must get up and defend the law. He ought to get up and force this government into obeying the law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. In the opinion of the Chair, the noise in the chamber has increased while the hon. member has been speaking. We are talking about law and order and respect for the law. I wonder if we could have a little respect for the rules of this House and for the rules of order and relevancy.

Mr. Horner: I thought I had the attention of the House and I do not for one moment believe I was not paying attention to the rules. I did not complain about a certain amount of heckling.

Mr. Mahoney: Holy, holy, holy.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) is making remarks again. In my opinion this is the most serious debate upon which the House has entered. The Canadian Wheat Board has long been upheld as an independent body serving the farmers. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board did something the like of which I have never seen done, even in the days of Jimmy Gardiner.

The Wheat Board, undoubtedly with the minister's approval, sent out a notice to every farmer telling them how much money they would receive under the government's proposals according to the acreage on their books, if the bill passed through Parliament. This was a deliberate use for political purposes of a body which has long been upheld as a farmers' body. In fact it was never that. The appointments were always political and there are no farmers on it. Charlie Gibbings is one, if you like, but he is not, in my eyes, any more. He has been working for advancement. He was very disappointed that he did not get the chairmanship, and I suppose he still wants it.

In any case, this is a glaring example of abuse. The Wheat Board has been made use of and in my opinion, as well as in the opinion of many farmers, the board will never regain the statute it previously enjoyed in western Canada. Its machinery, its mailing services, its knowledge of farm acreage were all used for political purposes involving the passage of a particular piece of legislation. This is one more aspect of the efforts of the Liberal party to hold power by any means. Power is what the Liberal party seeks and its supporters will stop at nothing to get power and maintain it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is a tough act to follow, but I will do the best I can in the circumstances. I really did not expect to speak in this debate and I might not have done so had it not been for the attitude taken by the news media, which is that the government is not really interested in the farmers. Let me assure the news media that this is not the case. We are just as concerned for the farmers as anyone else in the House.

As I understand the stabilization bill, its primary objective is to stabilize the flow of cash receipts in the prairie provinces from the six major grains by establishing a fund, sustained by contributions from the federal government and grain producers, from which payments will be made to producers in years when cash receipts fall below an average based on the cash receipts for the previous five years.

The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, which the government proposes to repeal, applies only to wheat. What were the reasons for bringing in Bill C-244? Prairie grain farmers have historically been subject to sharp and substantial swings in the level of cash receipts from grains. Receipts from the six major grains have varied from $377 million in 1945-46 to $1,353 million in 1966-67. Severe liquidity crises arise from the combination of high investment inventory and low cash receipts. These affect not only the producers but many other major sectors of the Canadian economy. Basic market factors outside Canadian control have been the major cause of this instability in the past. Coupled with this has been the fact that Canadian producers are competing with heavily subsidized producers in other countries.

Unless action is taken to counteract these factors the Canadian grain industry will not be in a position to compete in world markets. Thus, the multi-million dollar Canadian grain industry and, in particular, the producers, will continue to be subject to the severe effects of market swings upon stocks and income. What could be more clear as to why we need such a bill?

We have heard a lot about the legal position. To me it appears that the intent and purpose is the important thing. The purpose has not changed and the intent has not changed. Believe me, the money will be paid to the farmers as soon as the opposition ends its filibuster and agrees to let the bill go through. We on the government side want to help the farmers and I ask members of the opposition; "Why don't you?" The issue is not the question of legal or illegal acts on the part of the government; it is a question of providing the farmers the help they need.

Mr. Alexander: If the shoe fits, steal it.

Mr. Robinson: I have listened to a filibuster by the opposition for a long time and have witnessed the delay this has caused. I have observed the apparent disregard of the members of the opposition for the farmers they represent. I think this is a very important point to make. The members who are objecting to the bill are the very ones who represent the farmers. I have been a member of the agriculture committee for some months and recall that when Bill C-176 was first introduced members of the opposition said, "Let us travel around the country and we will pass the bill".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: We have all heard of "Have gun, will travel". Well, we travelled and it cost the taxpayers of this country a lot of money.

Mr. Horner: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: I wonder whether Your Honour would call to the hon. member's attention the fact that he should be relevant to the subject under debate.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) talks about being relevant. Let me just suggest to him what the facts are. On many occasions in the agriculture committee I was required to stand on a point of order and point out that the hon. member for Crowfoot, who I am sure will recall this, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and other opposition members were being irrelevant, repetitive and not material to the issue. That is exactly what the position was. They filibustered the bill all through the committee, and even now the bill has not been passed. If they have their way, it never will pass and the only people who will suffer will be the farmers.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Robinson: I heard the hon. member for Mackenzie say, "Pay out the money and we will pass the bill". I am wondering to what extent we can believe what they say on the opposition side. I am wondering to what extent we can believe what the hon. member's party says. We know what they said and did with regard to Bill C-276, and we have no reason to think they will do otherwise with this bill. They just do not want to help the farmers, and that is all.

Mr. Horner: A lot you know about the farmers.

Mr. Robinson: I have listened to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), the hon. member for Crowfoot, the hon. member for Mackenzie and many other big, fat-cat farmers and wondered just who they represent. Who is it who gains the most from this bill? I suggest to the opposition and their fat-cat farmers that the people who gain most from the first bill are the little farmers, and that is why they do not want to pass it; they will not get much out of it. I suggest that these big, fat-cat farmers should try to help the little farmer instead of helping themselves, as they are trying to do at the present time.

Mr. Forrestall: Call him to order.

Mr. Robinson: The other day I heard the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) make an impassioned plea and he buttressed his remarks by saying that, if necessary, he would go to jail for the farmers. I think many of us feel the same way. If necessary, I would be prepared to go to jail for the farmers too. I think the farmers need help and we on the government side want to help them. So to the opposition I say, "For heaven's sake, why won't you help the farmers?"

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Forrestall: Now we are going to listen to a farmer for a few minutes.

Mr. Peters: To a big, fat farmer.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) and others talk about the value of things the farmers need, about the value of Bill C-244 and what it would do for the farmers. I am a farmer, and it seems odd to me that we have a former dean of law drawing up plans for farmers. But I am only a farmer. If I were a dean of law I think I would use as a classic case, when teaching a group of students in class, Bill C-244, one of the bills introduced by the government to break its own laws. I can see law classes of the future being told just that.

I do not want to talk about the law. I should like to talk for a moment about the motion before the House and talk as a farmer because I know a little about farming. I feel somewhat sorry for the minister over this bill. He reminds me of the United States President who finds himself caught up in the war in Viet Nam. He cannot win, he cannot afford to lose and he does not know how to get out of the situation. The minister has been unable to sell this bill, or the conditions that go along with it, to farmers or farm organizations. Let me read what one farm organization had to say to emphasize this point. The Federation of Agriculture said in its brief:

> The "transitional" payment must be made immediately and not be made conditional either upon acceptance of the rest of the bill as it stands or upon its rapid passage.
> Aside from the "transitional" payment, the bill is not acceptable as it now stands.

If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is able to tell me which farm organizations accept the provisions of Bill C-244 and some of the conditions laid down therein—apart from the $100 million payment—I should like him to give me chapter and verse what they say. He made a speech this evening but did not name one organization that supported the bill. If the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) could tell me which farm organization accepted and endorsed the principle of Bill C-244 and its conditions, then I would be happy to hear him. In fact, I would be quite happy to give him some of my time.

I sat in the Committee on Agriculture and heard the testimony given by various farm organizations, such as the Federation of Agriculture, the wheat pools, the National Farmers Union and others. I should like the minister to point out to me which of these organizations accept the conditions laid down in Bill C-244.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted you to note my difficulty in attempting to rise, having already spoken. But I would be glad, if I have general consent, to make a comment on the hon. member's challenge.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take up all my time until a quarter to ten, and would be glad to hear the minister. May I just say something about Bill C-244. As a farmer, the bill will cost me $300 a year, assuming that I am able to grow 10,000 bushels of grain a year. In a ten-year period I could have five more crops yet receive nothing from the bill, assuming that the crops and the income on the Prairies were adequate in that ten-year period and that no payment was made. We could use for example the Peace River area of British Columbia and Alberta, where they have had several poor crops and resultant low income. These people would be charged, but in the last three or four years they might not have received anything although the rest of the Prairies had a good income. That is the best example I can give.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board complains because we do not give him credit for some of the good things he has done. I would be prepared to give him credit, but because he has done some useful things—

An hon. Member: Like what?

Mr. Thomson: —does not mean he has the right to force on us something that is unacceptable to the agricultural community. When the prairie governments, the farm organizations concerned and the Members of Parliament who know something about the problem all say it is not adequate, then I suggest to the minister that he should at least listen. I do not think he has.

Mr. Speaker, let me mention three or four items in the bill which I find objectionable and then I will be happy to listen to the minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Although the Chair has been quite lenient in this debate, I would hesitate to allow the hon. member to open up a debate on the details of Bill C-244 which is not before the House at this time. The Chair does not mind the hon. member referring to the bill and generally touching upon aspects of the bill related to his opposition to the existing legislation, but I would ask the hon. member not to open up a debate on the bill itself and certain provisions of the bill.

An hon. Member: Everybody else did.

An hon. Member: The minister did.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I am not going into detail on the bill; I just wanted to mention two or three points in passing. I am sure everyone else in this House has spoken in this context. I feel that this bill, related to the fact that the payment has not been made, has some objectionable features. Speaking as a farmer, I do not think it will work. That is why we on this side of the House have filibustered, if that is the right term. We have objected because we do not feel that the bill is an adequate solution to the problems.

In the first place, the bill is too expensive. For it to work adequately there would have to be an adequate crop insurance program. And it is not 2 per cent as the minister suggested; it will cost 4 per cent, 5 per cent or 6 per cent for an adequate crop insurance program. With agriculture in its present position, we cannot afford that. There is no cost of production feature in the bill, but I will not go into that question. It pays only on a complete Prairies basis. As I indicated earlier, it is a little like unemployment insurance being paid only when all Canada is suffering a depression, or all Ontario, or if the whole automobile industry is suffering unemployment. I am sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) can appreciate that. If a factory closes down the people in that factory receive unemployment insurance. That is not the way this bill will work. It will work only if all factories close down. It will work on a different principle. I am sure the Minister of Labour would not find it acceptable in industry. We as farmers find it unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the minister to tell us which farm organizations support the principle and conditions inherent in this bill.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I feel our debate of today has given us an opportunity of explaining to the Canadian people that our present government has really assumed its responsibilities and that the problem of agriculture has indeed been one of those given priority.

All kinds of unfounded accusations have been brought forward this afternoon. The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) has even taken advantage of the situation, Mr. Speaker, to tell us about the omnibus bill.

Many examples demonstrate how well the present government has assumed its responsibilities. I have here the report submitted on March 23, 1969 by the Standing Committee on Agriculture, which gave committee members the opportunity to travel specifically to consider the problems of western grain producers. We met more than 18,000 farmers in the western provinces, and we were made aware of their problems. It is certainly this proves that the government wants to know about the problems and solve them.

The bill now before us is one solution, in my opinion, and I believe that all the associations that appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture have agreed in principle on the merits of this legislation. I want to recall here that this committee held 19 meetings to consider Bill C-244. At those meetings, we heard all the associations that wanted to submit brief. I have here several members of the proceedings and evidence of that committee. During those sittings, the minister made constant appeals to the co-operation of all members, stressing the urgency of passing this legislation so that the Western farmers may get their due.

I have in hand the proceedings of June 15, in which can be seen in what terms the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) appealed to the committee members. I quote from page 26 of this report:

I really urge members of the Committee to get on with the work of approving this bill and let us get this money out into the farmers' hands and get the stabilization plan in place for the future.

Unfortunately, all those requests have been refused. We have continuously had to face filibustering with regard to all bills deferred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) mentioned earlier some of the difficulties that exist in agriculture; we are trying to establish a planning policy aimed at the future. It is regrettable that we cannot get the co-operation of the opposition. In order to show how much members of the Committee on Agriculture and the present government wish to establish farm legislation capable of solving problems, I shall point out that the committee sat until 7:30 on the morning of March 23 last, for the very purpose of facing the systematic opposition of the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). The latter did their utmost to hinder the progress of the committee that wanted to adopt a bill establishing a national marketing board. That legislative proposal has not yet been adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the commitment made by this government to the farmers was made on April 29 last, when motion for first reading was moved. And it is since that date that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has been appealing to the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, after having met with all agricultural organizations, in order to have that bill adopted.

I shall not dwell on the subject any longer, but I wonder what interests some of the members of the committee mean to fight for. Those of the producers or those of the grain elevator owners? It would appear that their sympathy lies with the latter.

The present policy of the government promotes the sale rather than the storage of grain. Today, the minister alluded to the increase in our export markets this year as compared to last year's. Our exports improved considerably last year, more specifically by 10 per cent, over past years. This proves to what extent we do not encourage the storage of our grain in elevators, but want to adopt a dynamic policy that the farmers' grain might be sold to allow them to reap the benefits to which they are entitled.

This bill must be passed without further delay. It is the government's wish. When we vote in a few minutes the whole of Canada will know who the true friends of the farmers are.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the one minute left I want to say that I have never heard so much whining, whimpering and screaming about a filibuster. The debate, until this bill came back, had taken just over 12 hours in the House. There are 16 amendments before the House. These amendments are wanted by the farming community of this country and we intend to debate them.

Some day hon. members and the government opposite, if they do not do something about the economic conditions in this country, will have a filibuster which is recognized as such. This is not a filibuster. These are amendments offered on behalf of the farmers of this country, and it is about time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) recognized this fact.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was challenged to enter this debate and was more than happy to do so. Only the expiration of time prevents my answering the nonsense of the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Section (9) of Standing Order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the questions necessary to dispose of the motions now before the House.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Lewis) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

At 10.16 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, September 24, 1971

The House met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF VICTOR BODSON, PRESIDENT OF INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FRENCH-SPEAKING PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I call the attention of the House to the presence, in the Speaker's gallery, of a distinguished visitor, Mr. Victor Bodson, President of the International Association of French-speaking Parliamentarians.

Mr. Bodson has come to Canada, upon an invitation from the Canadian Parliament, in order to chair the General Assembly of the Association which, this year, is taking place in Montreal, Quebec and Ottawa. Mr. Bodson's presence here is an honour for us. On behalf of all hon. members, I extend to him and to Mrs. Bodson a most cordial welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. OLSON—WORDS USED IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR MACKENZIE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I would like to draw your attention to Hansard, page 8127, the righthand column, where the hon. member for Mackenzie is reported as having said while I had the floor: "You are a damn liar and a crook." I did not hear the hon. member say that or I would have raised the matter immediately. However, the remark is reported in Hansard. I am not sure of the procedure, but perhaps I should give notice that I wish to raise this question and ask the hon. member to withdraw those words when he is in the House. He is not here now.

Mr. Speaker: The minister is, of course, doing the right thing in raising the matter at this time. I am sure that the hon. member concerned would want to withdraw the remarks which unfortunately got on the record in Hansard. I am sure that all hon. members will agree that words of this kind are unparliamentary and no hon. member, even in the heat of debate, would want to be reported as having said them. For the moment, however, the matter will not be pursued further.

MR. CAFIK—STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice to you under Standing Order 17(2) of my intention to raise a question of privilege today arising from a statement made by the hon. member for York South yesterday. In view of the fact that the hon. member for York South is not present in the chamber this morning—I found out he would not be here after I had given notice of my intention to raise this matter today—I should like to ask your permission to defer this question of privilege until such time as the hon. member is present.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

September 10, 1971—Mr. Howe:

That the second report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House, Wednesday, April 7, 1971, be concurred in.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that discussions are continuing with regard to this motion, I would ask that it be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

FINANCE

SMALL BUSINESS AND FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 in a case of urgent necessity.

The latest reports concerning small business loans and fisheries improvement loans reflect a dereliction of the duty of Canadian banks to support the government by injecting impetus into the small business sector of the Canadian economy. In spite of the extra effort required of Canadian banks to increase this support, the figures disclosed indicate a reduction in the number of loans granted and in the amounts granted. Further indications are that Canadian banks are steering applicants away from government guaranteed loans at preferred rates of interest in order to take advantage of the higher conventional bank rates.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the government investigate these bank practices, demand an accountability of loans under government guarantee, and report to the House at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. Under the terms of the Standing Order this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTION THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET PRESIDENT NIXON CONCERNING UNITED STATES ECONOMIC MEASURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In referring last evening to the economic program instituted by President Nixon and its effects on Canada the Prime Minister said that "I would certainly want to make sure that President Nixon is aware of the dilemma that he is creating for Canada in terms of our future orientation in this North American continent". In view of that statement, will the Prime Minister now undertake a personal meeting with the President of the United States, indeed perhaps an ongoing series of meetings if necessary, to bring such awareness home directly to the President from whom the thrust of United States policy obviously is emanating?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has made that suggestion before and my answer is the same as previously. If it is necessary to meet the President to make sure, as the quotation says, that he is aware, then I will, of course, envisage doing so. But the statement means exactly what it says, that I want to make sure that he is aware. There are divers methods of ensuring this.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my previous suggestion related particularly to the surtax and this much broader question that the Prime Minister has opened up. Was the Prime Minister expressing doubt as to how the United States administration itself sees the future of U.S.-Canada trade relations, and this being the period during which United States policy toward Canada may jell and become firmly set, is this not the time for discussions with the President rather than after the event?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that the supplementary asked by the Leader of the Opposition is perhaps more in the form of an argument. However, the Prime Minister might be allowed to reply if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with respect, Your Honour, it was not an argument; my question was not phrased in those terms. I simply directed a question to the Prime Minister, a very important question at this time, asking whether, this being the period during which United States policy may be set, this is not the appropriate time for the Prime Minister to see and discuss these matters with the President of the United States rather than after that policy becomes set. I think that is a serious question that deserves a serious answer from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the observation is correct that it would be important to make sure that the President is aware before, as the Leader of the Opposition said, his policies are set and have jelled. But I repeat that this only leads one to the conclusion that it is important that the President be made aware, and there are many ways of making him aware of our position. It can be done by a phone call, it can be done by correspondence, it can be done by meeting, it can be done by representations to his ministers, it can be done by diplomatic exchange. There is a whole series of ways of making representations, as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition knows.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the emphasis the Prime Minister himself has placed upon the serious consequences and high cost for Canada should the United States adopt, hypothetically at least, certain attitudes about which the Prime Minister has expressed concern, is there anything more important as far as Canada is concerned at this particular juncture than for the Prime Minister, as head of the government of Canada, to leave no stone unturned in making certain that the President understands these concerns?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister inform the House whether in his educated opinion the increase in unemployment as reported the other day by Statistics Canada is caused by United States protectionist policies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting the Prime Minister to express an opinion and I would not think the question in those terms is in order.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister either telephoned or written the President of the United States to make sure he understands how Canada feels about the economic policy announced by President Nixon on August 15, and has he learned from the President the United States attitude in regard to the Canadian employment support bill?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is no to both questions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Would the Prime Minister then screw up his courage and either telephone or write to the President to make known Canada's views on this very important matter?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Watch your language, George.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course that supplementary question is not in order.

UNITED STATES ECONOMIC DECISIONS—STRUCTURE FOR PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH CANADA

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister which relates to a supplementary question I asked a week or two ago concerning the likelihood of the United States taking more decisions that would have a detrimental effect on our economy. Given the close interrelationship that exists between the economies of our two countries, will he indicate to the House today whether he, the Minister of Finance or any other minister has had conversations with representatives of the United States government in respect of establishing some kind of consultative machinery with the United States government allowing us some opportunity to discuss any decisions that might be taken which would have a detrimental effect on our economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, such consultative machinery does exist, as I am sure the House is aware. We have a continuing committee at the ministerial level with United States and Canadian representatives which studies various matters. They meet to look at the over-all concerns of both governments in respect of immediate and less immediate affairs. The fact that there is machinery in existence does not mean we do not require special ad hoc meetings, as we had in August and in September, at the ministerial and official level to discuss specific events such as those which occurred after the President's announcement. Therefore we are using both standing and ad hoc committees.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister did indicate that the usual machinery we have used has not been sufficient to indicate to the United States government the extent of the impact these decisions will have on our economy, I am wondering whether there has been formulated and hopefully proposed some further structure for ongoing consultations which might remove the possibility of further very bad decisions being taken?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have had all manner of delegations and representations, and speeches have been made in the United States on this matter by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Woolliams: That speech should do a lot of good.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite on the one hand want us to make representations, but when we do they jeer at them and say they do not do any good. They must make up their minds. Do they want us to talk to the Americans or not?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member in a moment.

[Translation]

Does the hon. member for Compton wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Compton, which I shall do in a moment—

[English]

I will recognize the hon. member for Egmont who is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the Prime Minister heard my question. In addition to the normal procedures that have been used, has he not taken the time and the trouble to formulate new approaches which might have some success, considering the impasse we are presently facing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I suppose new approaches become old the day after one has used them, but we have been using what the hon. member would call new approaches for the past month. Apart from the ministerial and official meetings I have talked about, there was a meeting this week between the United States commerce minister, Mr. Stans, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

There is present now in Canada a NATO delegation which will be listening to a very important speech by the member for Calgary—where is he from—Calgary South. So, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the day after any new and special measure has been taken to communicate with the Americans the member opposite will say, but what new thing have you done since this morning?

[Translation]

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF NEW STABILIZATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the decrease in international trade and the lagging of Canadian exports, would he tell the House whether this government intends to implement different programs so as to ensure a certain stability to the Canadian economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes.

[English]

ESTABLISHMENT OF MONITORING AGENCY TO ENSURE THAT U.S.-OWNED BRANCH PLANTS OPERATE IN BEST INTERESTS OF CANADA

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of statements by both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs expressing concern that if the United States surtax remained in effect for a lengthy period it would result in the export of jobs from Canada to the United States, and in light of the statement by the President of the United States that it would remain in effect for longer than the initial 90 days, is the government considering the establishment of a monitoring agency similar to that suggested to the government by the Standing Committee on External Affairs to ensure that branch plants of United States corporations operating in Canada operate in the best interests of our economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not that particular recommendation in mind, but I can answer generally that the government is considering all manner of possible responses to the United States surtax and other measures if and when they are brought in.

IMPLICATIONS OF ECONOMIC INDICATORS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Last night the Prime Minister stated that all our economic indicators indicate a significant expansion of the economy. Was the Prime Minister aware of such indicators as the July figures on real domestic production that revealed a 0.3 per cent decline, that manufacturing output off one-tenth of 1 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is perhaps a statement more than a question.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: I trust it will not be a supplementary statement. The hon. member might indicate if he has a question to ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, in light of the Prime Minister's optimism about the economic growth, can he say in just what month his views on "Encounter" were taped?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO POTATO GROWERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture.

I recently told the Minister of Agriculture about the enormous difficulties encountered by potato growers in Quebec as well as throughout the country and I want to ask him if he is now in a position to make a statement ensuring potato growers that they will get help since their products are sold at extremely low prices at the present time?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the details of the program to the House today, but I can advise the hon. member that some relief for this particular commodity is under active and urgent consideration.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question sought by the hon. member for Malpeque is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Joliette. I must say that when I recognized him I was under the impression that he was going to ask a supplementary to the previous line of questioning. Maybe we should now pursue the line of questioning initiated by the hon. member for Joliette. I recognize the hon. member for Malpeque on a supplementary.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Agriculture at an early date make a statement on motions with regard to government policy in an attempt to relieve the unsatisfactory financial situation in which the potato growers and small fruit growers find themselves so that the growers and the provincial governments can be fully aware of the proposed government policy at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to do that. I should advise the hon. member and the House, however, that yesterday afternoon and even this morning we were attempting to arrange a meeting with Mr. MacDonald, the Minister of Agriculture for Prince Edward Island, and Mr. Stairs, the Minister of Agriculture for New Brunswick, to discuss this matter. I think it would not be wise for me to try to make a statement until some time after that meeting.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary.

I notice that the Minister of Agriculture seems to have had contacts with two provincial ministers surely concerned with this problem. Will he invite his counterpart from Quebec to the meetings?

[English]

Mr. Olson: I should say that my senior officials have had contacts with some senior officials in Quebec, but I have not had a request from the Minister of Agriculture for Quebec. This has come from the other two provinces earlier this morning and yesterday afternoon.

DUMPING OF POTATOES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—EFFECT ON ALBERTA PRICES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): My supplementary question has to do with the dumping of potatoes in British Columbia, which is having a very depressing effect on the price of potatoes in Alberta. Would the minister also look into that problem?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, we have been looking at it for quite a long time. I understand that the situation has deteriorated—

Mr. Horner: The minister should do something more than look.

Mr. Olson: Well, there was a significant improvement in that market during the latter days of August and we were hopeful, as I am sure the producers were too, that the situation would correct itself. It is apparent now that it has not. The hon. member used the word "dump". If any potatoes are being dumped in British Columbia there is immediate action we can take.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on the last supplementary question on this subject.

COMMODITY STUDY OF EFFECT OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the statement to the House by the Minister of Agriculture that the effect of the surcharge on agriculture would be handled commodity by commodity, is there under way a study commodity by commodity of how the surcharge is affecting Canadian agricultural production, and may we be advised very soon in the House of what the policy will be and how these specific instances will be taken care of?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes to the first part of the question, and as soon as possible to the second part.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—EXPECTED LEVEL THIS WINTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that he is reported as having said last night on "Encounter" that unemployment should be lower this year, does the Prime Minister expect unemployment this winter to fall below 6 per cent and, if so, what steps is he taking to achieve that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I would be able to give a specific statistic. In the program last night I was talking about trends. I repeat what I said: I think it will be lower. As to the specific steps, I have nothing to announce for the time being.

Mr. McGrath: Can the Prime Minister tell the House on what he bases his prediction that unemployment will be lower this winter? Also, what in the view of the government would be a tolerable level of unemployment this winter? Would it be 6 per cent, 5 per cent?

Mr. Trudeau: In answer to the first part of the question, I based it on the general economic indicators—the rate of growth of the gross national product in the first half of the year, the number of housing starts in the first half of the year, which was the greatest ever in our history, the fall of inventories, the increase in consumer demand. I did not go into every detailed indicator, but I used the broad ones which showed that the trend was in that direction. I am sure the hon. member on the backbenches would say that his waistline has not gone down, and probably this is an indicator in a certain direction.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair, of course, will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary but I hope that very soon we will provide an opportunity to other hon. members so they may ask different questions.

Mr. McGrath: I rise really to remind the Prime Minister that he did not reply to the second part of my question. What does the government consider to be a tolerable level of unemployment for the country this winter?

Mr. Trudeau: Slightly better than the opposition would be able to manage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest that we should try to give other hon. members an opportunity to ask their questions and return to this matter later.

SENIOR CITIZENS

CONSIDERATION OF OPPORTUNITIES FOR AGED PROGRAM

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can he indicate whether he, the government, or any of its ministers are giving consideration to the feasibility of initiating what might be called an opportunities for aged program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think those words can mean many things. We are considering programs which will help all age groups in the economy.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—ADVANCING OF EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT TO ASSIST JOBLESS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact the Prime Minister indicated last night that those who would be unemployed—there is no question about the gravity of the situation—could resort to unemployment insurance, and in light of the fact that under the new legislation one million odd will not be able to take advantage of the Unemployment Insurance Act until January 1, 1972, is the government going to bring in an amendment covering these people so that they will be able to take advantage of the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act earlier than January 1, 1972?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT—PROGRAM TO SUPPORT TRAINING AND RETRAINING WITHIN INDUSTRY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In light of the fact that most of the government's money is geared to institutionalized training and that only 5 per cent is devoted to in-industry training compared with 80 per cent in the United States, is the government going to introduce a further program to support in-industry training and retraining in order that more jobs will be available?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will study that suggestion, Mr. Speaker, although I understand it is something that is already under consideration by the government.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS AND HOUSING PROGRAMS RECOMMENDED BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the government has had an opportunity to review the report of the Economic Council of Canada, can the Prime Minister say whether the government agrees in principle with the recommendation that such programs as municipal winter works and winter housing should be considered in manpower strategy this winter and, if so, will a statement be made this month or at least before the premiers' conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If a statement has to be made, Mr. Speaker, it will be made as soon as possible.

UNEMPLOYMENT—DEVELOPMENT OF WINTER WORKS PROJECTS BY MANPOWER DEPARTMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister developing or co-ordinating within the government a program of projects related to additional winter works, either within the government of Canada's field or in co-operation with the provinces or municipalities?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, considering the breadth of the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, that I can give any very simple answer. Of course, as is well known, we are looking very intensively at the whole problem of employment in Canada, and when decisions are made about government policy announcements will be made.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the government seems to be very busy looking at a lot of things. I would like to ask the minister a very simple question. Is he developing himself or co-ordinating the development of such a program at this time? That is a very simple question.

Mr. Lang: My problem, Mr. Speaker, is that I am doing a great number of things, some of which come close to that kind of description and some of which do not. I am not sure to what the hon. member refers, but perhaps I could have a discussion with him about my duties on some occasion.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—REPORT OF COMMISSION ON SHIRT MANUFACTURING

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell us whether the Textile and Clothing Board report is completed and, if so, will it be made public soon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the report is completed. I have received it and we are now winding up intergovernmental discussions on the subject. If all goes well, I hope to be able to announce the government's decision as a result of the Board's recommendation around the middle of next month.

[English]

PULP AND PAPER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH BOWATERS' REPRESENTATIVES—INITIATIVES TO REVIVE MARKETS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister advise if he can report on meetings held between his trade mission people in London and representatives of Bowaters Pulp and Paper Mills regarding the partial shutdown of their mill at Corner Brook, Newfoundland?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The meeting took place, Mr. Speaker. It was purely informational, and I understand that nothing of practical application came out of it. I am sorry about that.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the critical situation in the pulp and paper industry, would the minister advise what recent new initiatives are being taken by his department and by other departments to revive markets and to prevent a continuing deterioration of this industry?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned we are doing all we can to develop markets. The provinces—Quebec in particular—now seem to be willing to do a number of things that could be useful to the industry at this time. I read in the Financial Post that some plans were being developed for the creation of marketing consortiums. There is plenty of activity and I am very keen to contribute to it in the coming weeks.

Mr. Marshall: Would the minister look into the fact that the Canadian government is continuing to give loans to other countries to build pulp and paper mills which are destroying our markets, and would he put a stop to this type of thing?

Mr. Pepin: This is a popular line, Mr. Speaker, but everybody knows that if the government of Canada had not contributed directly in most cases in the building of these newsprint plants somebody else would have, and Canada would have lost the industrial advantages in supplying equipment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—PROJECTS TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of his persistent statements in the House and on television recently that the present high unemployment is caused solely by unemployed younger people and that the rate of their entry into the labour force could not have been predicted and was unknown to him, can the Prime Minister tell us if he is aware that these young people were born many years ago and that their presence today should not come as any surprise?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that a question asked in those terms is not in order.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I will try something else, Mr. Speaker. With respect to younger people who are unemployed—this phenomenon—and with respect to the unplanned Opportunities for Youth program last summer and its relative disaster—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): —has the Prime Minister any plans or projects specifically designed and selected so that younger people can be employed on particular projects, taking into account their concern about the environment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, both questions were completely wrong in their premises and therefore I do not feel obliged to answer the conclusions.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): May I ask one further supplementary. Why, when the Prime Minister is on the defensive about something, does he have to be so insulting?

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There cannot be a supplementary to the question we have just had. I suggest to hon. members that the question was not in order. From the procedural standpoint, a supplementary to a question which is not in order cannot be asked. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Abitibi.

IMPROVEMENT OF RURAL MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

Since Canadians living in rural areas pay the same price for postal services as city dwellers, would he tell the House whether he will take steps to improve rural mail delivery in the near future?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): New measures have been taken to improve this service, Mr. Speaker, and from the latest accounts I have received, the service has greatly improved.

TRADE

ACTION TO FULFIL COAL CONTRACTS WITH JAPAN

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I do not know what that applause is for, Mr. Speaker. Maybe it is on account of my patience and persistence as I have been trying to get the floor for about four days. I direct this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact contracts with Japan call for the annual shipment of nine and a half million tons of coal and we are falling short by about three million tons per year, is the government taking any action to encourage the fulfilment of these annual contracts, especially in view of the unemployment situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have not taken a personal interest in these particular difficulties. My understanding is that this industry has grown very rapidly in a very few years. It has these contracts and it is now experiencing teething problems. If I can make a contribution I will gladly do so.

Mr. Noble: In view of the fact Canadian mining companies are forced to look outside the country for experienced miners, will the government take the necessary action to ensure that Canadians will be trained to fill these positions?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I shall pass this question on to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who has more to do with this than I have.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—DISCUSSION WITH FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER OF BILATERAL AGREEMENT AFFECTING OFFSHORE RIGHTS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In the course of his talks this week with the French Foreign Minister, can the Prime Minister tell the House if he or any of his ministers raised the matter of a bilateral agreement affecting the traditional offshore rights of France off our east coast with particular emphasis on the status of St. Pierre and Miquelon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not raise this question but I am informed that it was raised by our ministers and officials.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—DISCUSSION WITH FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER OF AGREEMENT RESPECTING CANADIAN WATER POLLUTION LAWS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport who participated in the talks with the French Foreign Minister. Has an agreement been worked out with the French government with respect to our pollution laws off the south coast of Newfoundland with regard to the jurisdiction of France over the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon and adjacent waters?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I do not think it would be appropriate to outline in detail the content of the discussions, Mr. Speaker, as I believe it is traditional that this not be done. However, I do not think it is disclosing any confidence to say that progress is being made on the matter of negotiating an arrangement not only with the government of France but with most of the Atlantic countries along the lines that the hon. member has mentioned. I would hope that some bilateral arrangement, particularly relating to St. Pierre and Miquelon, would be possible in the immediate future.

DISCUSSION WITH FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER OF POSSIBILITY OF SPECIAL RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CANADA AND EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister in connection with the visit yesterday of the Foreign Minister of France and the discussions that took place. Was there any discussion concerning the possibility of any kind of special relationship between Canada and the European Common Market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, here again I did not discuss this subject with the Foreign Minister of France but I do know that the subject of the Common Market and commercial relations with Europe and France were very much discussed by some of our ministers.

Mr. Stanfield: By whom?

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE BY ARMED FORCES IN EVENT OF STRIKE BY QUEBEC PROVINCIAL POLICE

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Has the Quebec Minister of Justice or some other authority requested help from the Armed forces should the Quebec police force go on strike over the weekend?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, personally I have received no request from the Quebec Minister of Justice, but I can state that officers of the Quebec police force have contacted their counterparts at general headquarters for mobile forces with regard to the possibility of a strike.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED INFILTRATION OF FLQ BY UNITED STATES CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the Solicitor General an important question which deals somewhat with security. Did the Canadian government have any knowledge that the CIA had infiltrated the FLQ last fall or is still infiltrating that organization in the province of Quebec, and was this done with the Canadian government's acquiescence?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am totally unaware of the allegations contained in that question but I will certainly ask for information.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary. I wonder if the minister would take a look at the matter over the weekend and make a full report because of the statements that are now being made and the knowledge that appears possessed by the media and others as far as this infiltration is concerned?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, if the reply is no the report will not be very long.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a further supplementary?

Mrs. MacInnis: My question is to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North later.

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF DAY-CARE CENTRES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): My question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Can the minister inform us if officials of his department are meeting with provincial officials in order to determine the best method of providing day-care centres as recommended in the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and by the Canadian conference on day-care?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is an examination of the whole question of day-care centres, some within, as the hon. member described it, my department, some within CMHC and some within the secretariat that is examining the whole question of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. In the course of this examination, many consultations are taking place, but in any formal sense consultation with the provinces has not started.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask the minister when we may expect the initial report of this secretariat which is inquiring into the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women?

Mr. Andras: As soon as I get time to digest the very voluminous reports that are flowing in and get some structure into it, I will be delighted to try to convey the information.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary to a previous question.

NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In light of the Solicitor General's answer which was not clear and in view of the sensitivity of relations with the United States at this time, as has been discussed earlier, would the Prime Minister as the head of the government make a statement with reference to this alleged infiltration indicating whether there was knowledge on the part of the government and whether government acquiesced in the action of the CIA and is still acquiescing and handing over the security of our nation to another country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Like the Solicitor General, I made some preliminary inquiries and like him I repeat that it would be important to make further inquiries. The preliminary inquiries, in which I have confidence, are to the effect that there are no CIA agents in Canada. Certainly if there are some they are not here with Canada's knowledge and acquiescence.

Mr. Paproski: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take the liberty of reminding hon. members that we will very soon run short of time. The hon. member will be allowed one supplementary.

WHEREABOUTS OF PIERRE VALLIÈRES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I would direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister advise the House of the whereabouts of Pierre Vallières?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of question which I think it is not in the public interest to answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to be facetious. I know that the Prime Minister—

An hon. Member: You just can't help it.

Mr. Paproski: —is full of information and I am told that he is a fountain of wisdom, but maybe this kook is working in the east block and maybe the Prime Minister is going to appoint him to the Senate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, September 22, consideration of Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 of Mr. Gleave (page 7252).

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, when the debate concluded the other evening, I just had a brief moment or two to make a few preliminary comments and to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), an amendment to the amendment. Because this is a fresh day, it might be worthwhile for me to read the amendment. It is as follows:

That the amendment be amended by deleting all the words after "deduction" and substituting therefor the following "of the amount by which the costs of production for the crop year within which a levy under section 9 is deducted exceeds the costs of production for the crop year ending on July 31, 1970."

In debating this particular subamendment, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recall that when he gave notice of his intention to move the amendment, the Chair expressed some doubt about the procedural acceptability of the amendment. Before the hon. member proceeds to debate the substance of the motion, I wish to point out that the Chair still has a reservation about whether it can accept the amendment. If the hon. member and other members can assist the Chair, it might be the consensus of members of the chamber that we now hear argument on that point. I might indicate the Chair's concern. I am just making a preliminary comment and I will certainly listen to argument with an open mind.

It seems that in his proposed amendment the hon. member is substituting another method of determining the particular matter dealt with in the section; in other words, he is substituting one thing for another. At this stage, where there are amendments to motions at the report stage, the Chair must be very sure that the amendment does not go beyond the four corners of the motion it is purported to amend. With those preliminary observations, I will appreciate any assistance hon. members can give to the Chair.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I did not, as has been suggested, give notice the other evening of moving a subamendment. I, in fact, moved it. I have reiterated it today because this is a fresh day. I wanted it to be clear in the minds of hon. members.

With regard to the point of order raised by Your Honour, it is not a substitution of a different method, but a question of amending the amendment to put in a particular floor from which certain things are measured. If we look at what clause (c) of subclause (1) says and then proceed to the amendment and subamendment, I think Your Honour will find they are all connected and relevant. Subclause (c) interprets and defines grains sales proceeds. I quote:

"grain sale proceeds" means the amount of the purchase price of grain produced on land described in a permit book and sold by a producer to a licensee,—

Boiled down, I think the meaning of this clause is that grain sales proceeds are the purchase price of the grain after the deduction of certain charges. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) sought to add, after the definition in the bill, the phrase "and after the deduction of the increased costs of production and including stabilization payments, if any." That amendment was in order. It was accepted and it has been under debate for a while. That amendment sought to add another item which would be deductible from the purchase price of the grain. There would be, then, the purchase price of the grain from which would be deducted certain lawful charges as mentioned in the bill itself and, additionally, the increased cost of production. The amendment being in order, the purpose of my sub-amendment, which has been read, is as follows—perhaps I should read it again because it does make an alteration in the words of the amendment by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. Its intention is to deal with the words after the word "deduction" in the amendment by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, and then to rephrase certain other parts to clarify what is meant by increased costs of production.

The amendment would provide that those increased costs of production shall be the difference between costs in the crop year in question and in the crop year which ended on July 31, 1970. In other words, the sub-amendment is connected with the amendment and with the original clause, proceeding as follows: There is the purchase price of the grain, less lawful charges as set out in the bill, less increased costs of productions, as set out in the amendment by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar; and this is clarified to say that these increased costs of production shall be measured on the basis of the crop year ending on July 31, 1970. The whole thing is a matter of clarification and being more precise than the wording originally proposed.

In the light of what Your Honour said the other evening when I moved the sub-amendment originally, and the thought which was expressed about its admissibility, I took occasion to read the references in Beauchesne to amendments and sub-amendments. As Your Honour knows, they are voluminous and many of them are not applicable in this case because they deal with matters which are not dealt with here. I should like to refer to two citations. One is Citation 203(1). I believe my sub-amendment meets the requirements set out here. The citation reads:

It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

I submit my amendment meets the test of relevance. It simply identifies the base year from which costs of production are to be measured. I wish to read the whole of Citation 203(1) because sometimes it is possible for hon. members to select only parts which are favourable to the position they are taking.

Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the House the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I submit that if this sub-amendment of mine is accepted, and if the amendment is accepted and the bill is amended accordingly, it would be intelligible and consistent with itself. It would be intelligible because it defines and inserts a base year upon which increased costs of production shall be measured. I submit that without such a base year being defined the increased costs of production which might have to be taken into account in any subsequent crop year could not be calculated accurately because there would be no base upon which they could be measured. The purpose is to establish a time from which increased costs of production can be measured in order to make the amendment intelligible and consistent with itself.

Another paragraph in Beauchesne reads:

The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject as the original motion they are admissible.

That is the law on the relevancy of amendments. I submit that this sub-amendment is on the same subject matter as the amendment. It talks about increased costs of production, which is a fundamental part of the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar, and it talks about a point in time from which those increased costs of production are measured. It is not, to use a phrase which Beauchesne uses a little later on, foreign to the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. We read that exceptions to this rule are amendments going into supply or ways and means. This is not applicable now.

Further, in Citation 202(3), we read as follows:

Since the purpose of a sub-amendment is to alter the amendment—

Which is what the sub-amendment seeks to do, —it should not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment.

I submit it does not enlarge upon the scope of the amendment. It merely specifies a point in time from which certain things should be measured. The citation continues:

—but it should deal with matters which are not covered by the amendment.

The amendment of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar does not deal with the matter of establishing a point in time. It deals with costs of production, yes, but it does not deal with the question of a base period. I submit my sub-amendment meets that requirement, too, in that it deals with a matter which is not covered by the amendment itself. Beauchesne adds:

If it is intended to bring up questions foreign to the amendment, the hon. member should wait until the amendment has been disposed of and move a new amendment.

This is not germane to the particular question before us.

Let me sum up my reasons for believing Your Honour should accept the sub-amendment. First, the bill itself states that grain sales proceeds shall be the purchase price of the grain less certain lawful charges. The amendment which was accepted by the Chair and debated at some length the other day says an additional factor which should be deducted from the purchase price relates to the increased costs of production. My sub-amendment simply says that in order to determine what those increased costs of production might be, a point in time shall be established, namely, the crop year ending July 31, 1970. It says that upon this basis increases in costs of production shall be measured. I submit that without the amendment proposed there could be arguments in another direction. But in view of what Beauchesne has to say about relevancy when dealing with the subject matter of an amendment, and bearing in mind the other points to which I have referred in the citations from Beauchesne, I submit I have proceeded logically, sensibly and intelligibly from the bill, to the amendment, to the sub-amendment. I hope Your Honour will be persuaded by that process of argument and reason that the sub-amendment is in order.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has proposed the amendment has raised arguments about its relevancy and as to whether it logically follows the motion that has been put forward. I do not think there is much doubt about either of those questions. There is no doubt about the relationship of the amendment that has been put forward to the motion under discussion. Similarly, there is no doubt about its relevancy to the original clause and to the motion itself. It follows logically, and presumably in the opinion of the hon. member who put it forward qualifies as intelligible, to use his expression. I am sure he feels that it does or he would not have put it forward.

I submit that the reason that this amendment is not in order and is not procedurally acceptable has nothing to do with either of those questions. I should say at the outset that in these technical arguments in which we become involved in dealing with procedure there are times when the charge is levelled that we are being picayune, and so forth. There are times when the government seems to brush aside or to ignore obvious technical difficulties in clauses of bills in order to incur the goodwill of the House and get on with the debate of the subject matter at hand.

I do not think that anyone interested in this subject would seriously question that that is exactly what has taken place respecting the motion which is under discussion and which the hon. member proposes to amend. Whatever the motivation was in ignoring the obvious procedural shortcomings of the amendment itself—which I think will come to light in Your Honour's discussion of the matter—I think it can be seen that when the House relaxes its guard procedurally with respect to one particular step, the all too frequent result is that it invites further relaxations of our procedure, to the correctness of which we should adhere in this chamber if no other place.

Certainly, it is not a sensible step further to encourage that relaxation or aberration from the rules by introducing to a regular motion what I submit is an irregular amendment. In this respect I believe there are two very clear arguments against the procedural acceptability of this amendment, and they are as follows:

The first is that it relates to the interpretation clause. It is evident from the precedents on this point that the interpretation clause of any bill enjoys a special sanctity as far as amendments or sub-amendments are concerned. In this regard I would refer Your Honour to two rulings of the Chair. The first is reported in the Journals of the House for 1969-70 at page 835, under date May 21, 1970. There, in ruling on a number of proposed amendments to Bill C-144, the Canada Water Act, the Speaker said as follows:

—in the opinion of the Chair amendments of a substantive or declaratory nature should not be proposed to an interpretation clause. If such amendments were accepted the clause would not then be an interpretation clause.

I am sure hon. members realize the difficulty of accepting substantive amendments or proposals under the general classification of interpretation.

I suggest to hon. members with respect that it is not the place to make proposed amendments or motions which are of a substantive nature.

Clearly, therefore, this amendment, which really proposes not just to alter the motion that has been put forward but to replace it entirely with a totally different formula, thereby getting at the definition clause itself, is out of order.

As a further example of the strength of that ruling, on October 28, 1970, when the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) had put forward a proposed amendment which is to be found at page 660 of Hansard for that date and which sought to change the definition of "federal court" in the federal court bill so as to include the Supreme Court in each province, Mr. Speaker cited the ruling to which I have just referred and ruled the amendment out of order because it sought to effect a substantive change in a definition clause. I submit there is the clearest example before us here of an attempt to do just that kind of thing without giving the notice required, thus attempting to amend the bill itself. However, I will come to that point in a moment. Therefore, the first argument against this proposed amendment is that it proposes to effect a material change in a definition clause, and there is clear precedent for holding that this cannot be done.

The second argument that I have against it is this. In view of the provisions of Standing Order 75 pertaining to notice which must be given at report stage of any motion, it is clear that any amendment to that motion for which notice is required under that Standing Order must not in itself seek to amend the bill but must simply be an amendment to the motion itself for which notice has been given. In this regard, even the most cursory examination of the proposed amendment indicates that what it seeks to do is entirely to replace the motion by deleting everything after the word "deduction", replacing what follows with a different formula, thereby getting at the bill itself by way of amendment, the appropriate notice under Standing Order 75 not having been given.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit on both those grounds that procedurally the amendment is unacceptable. By way of reference to the latter argument, the remarks of Mr. Deputy Speaker on April 29, 1969, as reported at pages 8146 and 8147 of Hansard, in connection with amendments proposed to Bill C-150 at that time, are pertinent. I should like particularly to quote the Speaker's remarks at page 8147, the right-hand column:

I must point out to the hon. member for Shefford, as I said earlier, that his proposed subamendment is not in order for at least one reason.

I suggest to the hon. member that this amendment is of the kind which could have been proposed under standing order 75, that is to say by giving notice of it before the motions are considered in the house. Once the motions have been proposed—there are 43 or 44 of them I think—the house must consider particular amendments or specific motions proposed by the members and only such motions can be the subject of a subamendment under standing order 75(8).

What the hon. members can do now is to propose a subamendment to the motion of the hon. member for Gatineau, because they cannot introduce an amendment to change section 18 of the bill under consideration. I suggest to the member for Abitibi and to the other members that the motion of the member for Abitibi is in fact intended to amend clause 18 of Bill C-150 and not the motion of the hon. member for Gatineau.

In fact, the motion of the hon. member for Gatineau is so simple that it would be difficult I think to imagine an amendment which could be in order. Therefore under the circumstances, I find it impossible, even if I wanted to be as tolerant as the rules allow me, to accept the subamendment proposed by the member for Abitibi.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the amendment is out of order for two reasons. First, it attacks the definition clause of the bill very directly and the Standing Orders indicate that this cannot be done at this time. Second, it goes entirely beyond the scope of the motion and attacks the bill itself, which again is against the clear precedents of this House. Consequently, I submit argument should not proceed on the amendment.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I found the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) very interesting. He started out to explain why he thought the amendment was relevant and intelligent but the premise of his whole argument was based mostly on the fact that he felt the amendment, as tabled and put before the House, was out of order. That is a very weak case, because surely the main purpose of tabling a motion 24 hours before the subject matter comes up for debate in the House is to give Your Honour and your staff time to look over the motions and contact the mover, if necessary, to suggest that it should be altered or changed. One can only assume that these motions were looked over. It might have been considered at the time that the motions were weak or should have been made more clear, but one can only assume that they have passed the acid test and received your approval, because that is why we find ourselves in a debate on these motions.

These motions were brought forward on Wednesday, September 22, and it is regrettable we have not yet had a ruling. I am inclined to believe this fact supports the suggestion that the amendment is clear and has merit. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) suggested that we cannot move an amendment to a definition clause. This is the interpretation part of the bill. If an amendment to the interpretation clause is in order, then a subamendment which clarifies the original amendment and sets out a base year should be in order and welcomed by hon. members.

The motion moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) suggests that after the word "producer" the following words should be added:

and after the deduction of the increased costs of production, and including stabilization payments, if any;

Clause 2(c) reads in part:

—after the deduction from the purchase price of the grain of the lawful charges that are applicable to the grain on its sale to the licensee by the producer;

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is including another deduction he believes should be added, that is the deduction of the cost of production. Many hours have been spent during agriculture debates in this House in an attempt to determine the cost of production and on what it should be based. If one looks at the debates of the United States legislature, he will find that they have for years debated the matter of parity and the year on which it should be based.

The motion moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar may be very difficult to implement. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has moved an amendment, which I think should be welcomed by the House because it goes a long way to clarify the situation. The words of the amendment to some extent, deal with the cost of production. It reads:

of the amount by which the costs of production for the crop year within which a levy under section 9 is deducted exceeds the cost of production for the crop year ending on July 31, 1970.

It is quite obvious what the hon. member for Skeena is attempting to do. He is trying to set July 31, 1970 as the base year. Many farmers will not be very happy with that date because the cost of production based on the year 1970 would be low as profits that year were low. They would like a year which would be more favourable. In any event, this is a concrete suggestion that clarifies the interpretation part of the act. How can we have good legislation unless the intent outlined in the interpretation clause is clear?

In my opinion this amendment is in order and should be welcomed by the House because it clears up any doubt there may be in the minds of people reading the original motion, and I would urge Your Honour to rule that it is in order. The debate during the past two days has convinced me that in Your Honour's wisdom you feel there is merit to this motion. If you did not believe that, I should think you would have ruled it out of order automatically. I should think we could have a ruling on this matter now and get on with the debate. The House of Commons spends too much time on procedural issues. I should like to see more time spent debating conditions of agriculture rather than procedure.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, as the mover of the original motion, I find the amendment very acceptable. It clarifies or brings into sharper perspective the manner by which these production costs are to be arrived at. There has been some question raised as to whether the original motion is in order. Of course, that matter was decided after the motion was debated for some time. I must say I feel the original motion was in order. The essence of the bill before us is that there is to be a relationship established between the gross proceeds of the sale of grain over a five-year period and the individual income of a farmer in a particular year in which certain payments are to be made. Therefore, the manner in which we arrive at the basis of income of an individual farmer in that particular year is relevant to the discussion we have had.

Various clauses of the bill go to some length to set this out quite clearly. The bill sets out the lawful charges which may be taken into account by those administering the measure. I have put before this House one of the factors which is to be considered as part of the calculation in arriving at the farmer's income in a particular year relative to the five-year period set out in respect of gross income on the six grains. The amendment simply goes a little further for the purposes of clarification. It says that such and such a year shall be the base year for which we arrive at the cost of production. That is the objective of the amendment. I suggest to you that the amendment simply clarifies the motion and brings it into sharper focus. It does not substantially change the motion, because the essence of the motion we have been discussing is that the cost of production should be a part of those factors used in arriving at an individual farmer's claims. Indeed, it affects his right to claim against the stabilization fund as and when it is set up. This is what the original motion does. The amendment as offered simply says that in the mechanics of arriving at this those responsible shall take a certain year as a basis for making their calculations.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the points raised by hon. members. I think these, involve additional problems for you, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the rules we are now using are relatively new and the procedures we are using are relatively new. Certainly, the amount of reference material to guide Your Honour is rather out of date or of very limited use because of the changes in the rules. Part of the difficulty is illustrated in the motion and the amendment. I sat on the Agricultural Committee, as did the mover of the motion. We were well aware of the discussion that had taken place over a long period of time in very great detail. When we moved the motion and presented it to the Chair in the way we did, we did so with knowledge of the discussions which had taken place and the knowledge we had of the subject. We were well aware of the deductions, for instance, that take place in connection with the movement of grain. We were also aware of what was meant by the inclusion of stabilization payments.

All Members of Parliament have the right to make a decision on every piece of legislation before us. They also, it seems to me, have the right to suggest changes in the wording or motions so that what the mover and seconder mean to say is said in a manner which is acceptable and understood. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) asked me what the costs of production were and how we arrived at what we considered to be a net return rather than a gross as is mentioned in clause 9 of this bill. I was able to tell him from my knowledge what the costs were that were involved in establishing the difference between the gross and the net. After we had discussed it for some time he gave his interpretation of it and asked if that was what I meant. I agreed that that was what it meant, although it was said in a different way.

I think the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) is wrong if he believes the system we use can be successful if we are willing to waive the time limits that are necessary for the Chair to make the decision. I think he is wrong if he believes that, under those circumstances, the Chair will be very successful for long in making a decision concerning whether or not the motions that are presented from the committee by individual members are acceptable in the form in which they are presented. It may well be that the Speaker will have to confer with members of the House who move the motions, particularly where language and interpretation is involved, because there may be a difference of opinion about what is being said by the motion. Unless the member is to have some way of clarifying what he says, and of putting it in better language so that it is made intelligible to other members who are involved, then it seems to me this system will not succeed. Previously, when a member wanted to move an amendment to a bill, he moved the amendment as the bill was being discussed clause by clause, and the clauses which were acceptable and which members considered to be amendable were amended. They were amended in the House as each clause was called. However, we changed the system. I do not think we should use the old precedents or follow Beauchesne and the decisions made by previous Speakers under a previous system and apply them to the system we are using now. We should forget about the old system and find other ways to do this.

A member who moves an amendment may not say in the amendment what he intended to say or he may not put it in the best language. Certainly, I have heard the suggestion that two heads are better than one. If you use 264 heads you probably are adding something to what any member or any two members had in mind in respect of these amendments. From my point of view, the amendment is a clarification of the original motion moved. It is not inconsistent with what we were trying to do. It does not add anything to what we were attempting to do with the exception of the base period. In the act that is to be repealed by this legislation there is exactly the same dateline and we have this in mind. I am sure that anyone looking at this act would agree that there must be a starting and closing point in the crop year and that when you talk about the cost of production you take it from one point to another point. In most cases it has not been a calendar year which has been used, but rather it has based on the crop year. Under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the date of July 31 was the ending of the crop year and I see nothing inconsistent in this, although it was not in the original motion.

Obviously, this was in the mind of the mover and seconder. If not exactly that date, certainly a calendar date would have to be implemented. I suggest if the new rules are to succeed, now that we are using a report stage to replace the committee stage, we will have to supply machinery to enable a member to develop an amendment which will say exactly what he wants it to say in language which is acceptable to the Chair, and to enable the Chair to assist in the development of that amendment. The government cannot complain about the original motion and cannot blame the Chair for accepting the original motion, whether or not it stands on all fours on the basis of the previous rules. The minister responsible for this bill on a number of occasions attempted to obtain the co-operation of the House to move this bill forward. If he is asking for immediate attention to this bill, then the Parliamentary Secretary will have to waive to some extent his right to argue that the decision of the Chair to allow the motion was made on the condition that the Chair was not giving it endorsement. But obviously when the minister rose in his place and spoke on the motion without questioning more than the number of motions, he was giving his endorsement to that motion, so I suggest that we are going to be in a procedural hassle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but what I have to say may be of assistance to the chamber. I can advise the hon. member that I am in accord with his argument and the argument put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I do not accept the argument of the parliamentary secretary on that point. I think the motion is properly before the House, and I mention this so that the hon. member need not take longer in his speech to convince me. I am convinced.

Mr. Peters: The point that I really wanted to bring to Your Honour's attention was that, in moving the amendment, consideration should be given to the changes that we have made in the rules and to what is really the purpose of allowing an amendment. I suggest that when the purpose of an amendment is the clarification of an original motion—there may be other amendments which achieve other purposes—and when it is worded in language which is somewhat more easy to understand by those who will be administering the law so that the amendment is really a refinement of the original motion, we should be fairly lax in the fine interpretation of the application of the amendment to the motion if, in the opinion of the majority of members it is acceptable. I make the suggestion only in the light of the rule changes that we have made and our inability, which has become obvious, to find time to develop proper amendments under the report system that we are now using.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself in the main to the question that Your Honour raised and to the portions of the argument put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) which still stand after your interjection of a moment ago. The interjection that you have made does make it unnecessary to argue that the amendment is properly before us, but perhaps I might be permitted to put on the record standing order 75(8) which reads:

> When the Order of the Day for the consideration of the report stage is called, any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment.

That of course is the situation. The motion moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) was properly before the House under subparagraph (5) of Standing Order 75 and therefore under subparagraph (8) it is under debate and it is open to a member to move an amendment thereto. Although 24 hours notice is required in the case of an original motion, no notice is required in the case of an amendment moved under subparagraph (8). However, one concedes without argument that the mere right to present an amendment does not mean that any amendment that one presents is necessarily in order. There are other rules that have to be met, most of which have been placed on the record by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) in his initial presentation.

However, it seems to me that the main question which Your Honour feels you must cope with is whether this amendment is a substitution for something that is already before us, or whether it is new material, something that is so different from what is already before us that it should itself have been a motion by notice as provided under Standing Order 75 (5).

I should like to support those who have already taken the position that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Skeena far from being a substitution, far from being something new, is simply a clarification of what the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar asked for in his motion. In fact, I might say that all the hon. member for Skeena has done has been to respond to a request made by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board when he spoke on the motion on June 22 as reported at page 7259 of Hansard for that day. He asked his supporters to vote against the motion that was before us, because, he said:

—there is no possibility of an accurate determination.

I do not quarrel with that suggestion of the minister. That, in fact, is what he had said about the motion moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, that as it was worded it did not provide the possibility of an accurate determination. The hon. member for Skeena has responded to the plea of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and has offered an amendment that makes possible an accurate determination of what it was that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was requesting.

Therefore, I submit to Your Honour that what is before us now is not a new motion; it is not something that is a substitution for what the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar asked for, but is simply a clarification of the request made in the original amendment. I hope that Your Honour has had time to think about that phase of the matter and to study both the original motion and the amendment so that you can come to the realization that, as I say, it is not something new but just a point of clarification.

Now, may I address myself to one or two other remarks that were made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. We need not spend any time on his questioning whether the motion was properly before us because Your Honour has indicated that you are satisfied on that point. I do think that Your Honour should take into consideration the fact that much of the argument advanced by the parliamentary secretary was argument against the validity of main motion, not argument against the amendment. He contended that the amendment is to a definition section, that there are rulings that say that one cannot, by amending the definition section, import new ideas of substance into a bill and that on that ground the whole attempt should now be ruled out of order. I think that if the matter were open for argument, we could argue that the original motion was not making substantial law but was itself a clarification of a definition in that section. But in any case, the motion is before the House. It was put forward on June 22 of this year, was debated on that day, and has been debated since. Although Mr. Speaker said there were some doubts about some of the other motions that were on the order paper, nevertheless this one has been put and has been under debate. To suggest now that it is out of order is hardly in keeping with the ruling that in effect the Chair has already made by putting this motion to the House.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) goes on to say that what the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is seeking to do is to get around the amendment and back to the bill, that he is trying to bring in an amendment to the bill itself. It seems to me that in that situation one is up against the same point that I was trying to answer when I dealt with Your Honour's questioning. Surely, if the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena is simply clarifying what is already before us, then it is pretty hard to argue that it is an amendment to the bill itself.

The bill itself has a definition clause as to what the phrase "grain sale proceeds" means. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar sought to amend that definition of the phrase "grain sale proceeds." The hon. member for Skeena is not trying to go back to the bill. He is not trying to amend anything in clause 2(1)(c). He is simply trying to clarify the definition as the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has tried to suggest it to the House. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that the arguments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council fall to the ground and all of those precedents he read had to do with the validity of the main motion. The Chair having put the main motion and having allowed it to be debated, I do not think it can now be called into question.

If the main motion is in order, then I submit that it is in order to try to clarify it. I quite agree with the statement that the parliamentary secretary made that it is improper to use this device to get around an amendment back to the bill, but I do not think that this is what this amendment does, and I hope Your Honour so finds. In other words on both points the answer, I suggest, is one that has been made by everyone who has been on his feet on this side, that the amendment before us is simply an attempt to clarify the main motion. Therefore, I hope Your Honour will accept it as being in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) is seeking the floor on a question of privilege and I will recognize him in a moment. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) also seeks the floor. It occurred to the Chair that if there are other hon. members who want to argue the procedural aspect of the point of order, then I might recognize the hon. member for Mackenzie on his question of privilege first, but I would like an indication from the groups in the House on whether they would want the Chair to make a decision, at this point, on the procedural argument. I would be prepared to do so, but it would mean an extension of time. Could I have an indication on this point?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, because of the desire of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and of yourself to proceed on another matter I will not do it at this point, but I do think there is a necessity to expand further on the point of order in trying to deal with the arguments raised by the parliamentary secretary, and in particular his reference to the Journals of May 24. I think there was a great deal left out of that that should be brought before the House, that would show it in a different context, and I wish to bring it out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for giving me an opportunity to say with respect to the comments that I made yesterday, whether within the chamber or from behind the curtain, that they were not meant personally in so far as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was concerned. I apologize to him if in any way I inconvenienced him, or if in any way I inconvenienced the government, or if in any way I inconvenienced any member or supporter of the government.

I hold strong sentiments, Mr. Speaker. I think all of those who have been associated with me must realize that I express my attitudes forcefully, and sometimes I am carried away. I think that yesterday I was carried away, and I apologize very sincerely to the Minister of Agriculture. I know that he can be a very good minister.

I find myself in a very difficult position. I am as sincere as possible in pushing my convictions, just as sincere as I am in opposing some of the convictions held by the government. But if there was anything personal in what I said yesterday, I apologize. I do this humbly and with sincerity. I do not mean any malice towards the minister.

I repeat that I am sincere in my convictions in opposing government policies and that sometimes I can be carried away. But as humbly as I can on this particular occasion, I apologize if I expressed any attitude that personally affected a member of the House. That is not my intention here. I believe that I attempted to support the viewpoint of my constituents. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to convey my apologies to the Minister of Agriculture because I, personally, do not have any malice towards him.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I accept the apology and I hope it will be noted that the reference was to those comments which appear on page 8127 of Hansard and which are now withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If it is the unanimous wish of hon. members I am prepared to make a ruling now. With respect to the hon. member for Skeena seeking the floor, I would point out that he did argue the point of order well and forcefully, and at some length. I would think he has no right, unless there is unanimous consent for him to do so, to speak further on that point of order. Is there unanimous consent that the Chair make a ruling at this point?

Mr. Peters: No. One o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. Pursuant to the arrangements made earlier today this debate is now interrupted. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

JUDGES ACT AND FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING JUDGES' SALARIES AND ANNUITIES, AUDITOR GENERAL'S SALARY

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-243, to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. For the purpose of considering the study of report stage of Bill C-243, I should like to make the following comment as to the procedure of debate. It is suggested by the Chair that motions Nos. 1 and 5 be grouped together for deabte but each would be voted upon separately afterwards if necessary. It is also suggested that motions Nos. 2 and 3 be grouped for debate, and again they would be voted upon separately, and finally, that motion No. 4 be disposed of separately. If the House agrees, we could follow this procedure and the Chair would accept any comments or suggestions from hon. members.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we can agree to that. I might just say on that point that motions Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 come as unanimous recommendations from the committee. The reason that the committee could not dispose of those amendments was that they involve the balance of ways and means and needed the recommendation and the approval of this House. Motion No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was not considered in committee and should be dealt with by the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Woolliams: Just before we start, I wonder if I could speak for a moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Skeena and will then come back to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Woolliams: This is a point of order with reference to what you are saying and should be made now to keep chronological order. I think your recommendation or suggestion is an excellent one. These are short amendments; there is not a lot to them in the sense of changing the details of the measure. You are either for them or against them. I would hope that we would be able to finish this bill today because it was held up last June.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, that obviously was not a point of order that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) had but just a device to get the floor.

The grouping suggested by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is acceptable and if he would just say that motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 are acceptable to the government, perhaps they could be disposed of without a great deal of lengthy debate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, all motions except No. 4 are acceptable to the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Following the remarks just made by the hon. member, the Chair at this time will put motions Nos. 1 and 5 and call upon members interested to participate in the debate. The minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) moves motion No. 1 as follows:

—That Bill C-243, An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, be amended

(a) by striking out line 1 on page 3 and substituting therefor the following:

"(e) Ninety puisne"

(b) by striking out line 30 on page 3 and substituting therefor the following:

(c) by striking out line 26 on page 5 and substituting therefor the following:

(d) by striking out line 9 on page 6 and substituting therefor the following:

"(b) Ninety-seven judges"

(e) by striking out lines 17 and 18 on page 6 and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) One chief judge of the County Court—27,000.00

and relettering paragraphs (e) to (k) as paragraphs (f) to (l), respectively.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) moves motion No. 5 as follows:

• (2:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Motion No. 5:

—That Bill C-243, An Act to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, be amended

(a) by striking out paragraph (e) of section 9 in Schedule A and substituting therefor the following:

"(e) Ninety puisne judges of the Superior Court, each—30,500.00"

(b) by striking out paragraph (d) of section 11 in Schedule A and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) Six other judges of the Queen's Bench Division, each—30,500.00"

(c) by striking out paragraph (d) of section 16 in Schedule A and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) Thirteen Justices of the Supreme Court of Alberta, each—30,500.00"

(d) by striking out paragraph (b) of section 19 in Schedule A and substituting therefor the following:

"(b) Ninety-seven judges and junior judges of the County and District Courts, each—22,000.00

(e) by striking out paragraph (d) of section 19 in Schedule A and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) One chief judge of the County Court—23,000.00

(e) Five County Court judges, each—22,000.00"

and relettering paragraphs (e) to (k).

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, these two amendments were approved in committee, but the committee was unable to deal with them because they dealt with the balance of ways and means. The amendments are made necessary by requests from various attorneys general for additional judges after the bill had received first reading in the House of Commons. The attorney general of Quebec is applying for extra judges of the Superior Court and Court of Queen's bench in the province of Quebec; the attorney general for Alberta is asking for additional judges for the Supreme Court of Alberta; the attorney general of Ontario is asking for additional county court judges for Ontario and the attorney general of New Brunswick is asking for the designation of one of six county court judges as chief judge of the county courts.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I endorse what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said in this regard. At the time this matter came before the committee, he properly suggested we could move a recommendation but we could not move an amendment to the act because the changes dealt with ways and means. At the time these changes came before the committee, the Minister of Justice was in Vancouver dealing with constitutional changes, and we had to wait until he returned. The recommendation by the committee was then made. We agreed at the committee level that we would agree to these amendments in the House. I do so now.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is an opportunity to express some views, as has been done on earlier occasions, about the judiciary, members of it, the court structure and attitudes of the court. Right after this Parliament began, we had a bill to amend the Judges Act to allow for additional appointments and so on. At that time we had a discussion about the method of appointment, the criteria to be followed and the like. I do not wish to go into that aspect at this time.

At that time we also discussed other matters. From the facial expressions and nodding of the minister, I understood that he was generally in agreement with what we were saying about judges and dispensing of justice by the courts. I thought because the minister had at least indicated superficial agreement although no verbal commitment, we would be moving in a different direction as far as the judges and the bench were concerned. I would like to go over that ground again because it is even more valid today than three years ago as a result of the additional judges that are being sought.

The courts have a tremendous amount of additional business to conduct in cases before them. This makes us wonder what is taking place in our judicial system, the operation of courts and the so-called justice they are supposed to be dispensing to the citizens of this country. We must realize that we do not necessarily get justice or truth from a court. The court is not primarily seeking the truth in cases before it, but seeking to accept that which might be credible. Credibility of witnesses and credibility of cases do not always marry completely with truth and justice. With that attitude toward our court system and criminal law, people do not always obtain justice in the courts of this land.

The matter of money is also involved. It has been mentioned in this House by gentlemen who are learned in the law and have appeared before the courts that a rich person appearing before the court receives one type of consideration. A poor person will likely receive another type of justice. In other words, the amount of money which the individual has bears directly on the action that the court is likely to take on a particular case.

I wish to point out something which exists in my province. If a person charged with an indictable offence is found guilty in the lower courts and wishes to appeal the decision, his appeal must go to the appeal court of British Columbia. The case will not go to the supreme or county court. This may be all right if the individual lives in Vancouver where the court of appeal sits. If an individual from my part of the province, the interior or the far north has been found guilty of an indictable offence and desires to appeal, he will have to spend a minimum of $1,000 to appeal. He and his lawyer will have to go to Vancouver. It will also be necessary to bring witnesses, if any are involved, to Vancouver. This structure denies individuals in the lower income groups the opportunity of proper and full access to the courts of appeal. I am only reciting what lawyers in my area have told to me. I am not a lawyer. I have not been involved in cases of any sort.

On many occasions people from the working class, people who do not have a lot of money, just sufficient to live, are found guilty by the courts. They may feel they are not guilty or, in fact, are not guilty. Because they do not have $1,000, $2,000 or whatever is involved, they throw up their hands and say they cannot appeal. Such a person will have a criminal record the rest of his life as well as having to meet the punishment set out by the court, either a fine or a jail sentence. That sort of structure does not lend itself to dispensing justice. It denies the full availability of the courts and the court system to individuals because of their economic situation.

By contrast, if a person is fairly well off, has friends and is able to raise the necessary money, he has access to the appeal court in such a situation. I do not know the extent to which this is duplicated in other provinces, but this is what I have been told happens in most cases in my province. This certainly requires correction. It may be necessary to have the appeal court sit in different parts of the province. That would be better than the existing situation. Possibly there could be an extension of the appeal court. Technically, I do not know how this would have to be done. Somehow or other individuals must have the opportunity to go to the appeal courts or the appeal court must go to the individual so that he will not be disadvantaged by the mere fact that he is not able to raise sufficient funds to launch an appeal.

To a large extent, our courts are involved with the criminal law. I do not know the division of the courts between civil and criminal, but the courts are involved in dealing with the criminal law, alleged infractions of it and meting out sentences where individuals are found guilty or discharging those found not guilty. On a number of occasions, judges are ignorant of the full force of what may happen to an individual if he is found guilty and sentenced. Judges, to a large extent, and this is borne out by newspaper accounts and by conversations I have had with individuals currently lodged in our penitentiaries, will sentence an individual to a term in a penitentiary because he needs psychiatric help. The judge who does this is completely ignorant of the situation in penitentiaries. In fact, they are the last place in which a person can find psychiatric help. There are psychiatrists attached to the penal system and if an inmate is lucky he might be able to get a ten-minute interview with a psychiatrist once a month, but that is a pretty hopeless situation as anyone acquainted with this subject knows.

Likewise, judges often sentence an individual to a federal penitentiary, as distinct from a gaol, on the grounds that he will be able to learn a trade while he is there. That is a fallacy. It expresses a lack of knowledge on the part of the judge as to what takes place in our penitentiaries. It is true there are some types of semi-trades which an individual can learn there. He can learn, I imagine, how to make licence plates in some places, but once he gets out, the opportunity he has to earn a living in that field is minimal. In some institutions he can learn to stitch, repair and sew up mailbags for the Postmaster General. But once out of prison his chance of finding employment as a mailbag sewer is pretty limited—about the only place in which he will find such an opportunity is back in a penitentiary.

There are similar types of employment available in penitentiaries but they are not geared to teaching an individual any trade or skill which he might be able to employ outside; they revolve around the penitentiary itself and are designed to keep it operating. There are, of course, some skills which people learn in gaol such as cooking, for example, which have application outside. But for a judge to say he is sending an individual to a penitentiary so that he can learn a trade there and become a more useful citizen exhibits a lack of comprehension of what is involved. In those cases where an individual might be able to learn some skill or technique he can apply once outside, there is not one iota of training given in gaol as to how to get a job, how to fit into society, how to adjust, how to co-operate. What I am getting at is that, to put it mildly, there is a lack of understanding as to what is involved when sentencing a person to gaol.

The other aspect, one which is much more complex and much broader in scope, has to do with the orientation of the court in terms of sentencing, in terms of criminal activities, in terms of finding people guilty of offences against the law. What does the court generally think about? What the court thinks about is predicated generally by the criminal law, the whole of which is oriented toward sending a person to gaol if he is found guilty. The channel runs into gaol and this is what is in the minds of judges whether it is for punishment reasons or whether it is for the theoretical deterrent reason, which in 80 per cent of all cases has been found wanting. The general concept of the court, which, I think, is carrying out the social orientation of government, is to take a chap and put him into gaol. This has to be completely altered. Penitentiaries, we have found over the years, have failed miserably in a social sense and in a rehabilitative sense. They have succeeded in a punishment sense, they have succeeded in a security sense to the extent that they keep an individual out of society's way for a stated period of time. But they have failed in a social sense and in a humanitarian sense.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is purported to be progressive although many times one would not know it from the legislation he introduces. Certainly, no one would reach that conclusion on the basis of the kind of advice he gives to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) in connection with the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Generally, though, he is considered to be progressive. We cannot tell by the company he keeps, either, but he has no choice about that; it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who chooses who he has to work and live with. I should like the progressive attitude the minister exhibits to be reflected in some concrete approach so that the force and direction of the courts would be toward keeping people out of gaol and trying, as far as possible, to involve communities, private families, organizations such as the Excel Foundation, which operates out of Vancouver and, more recently, out of Winnipeg, in an arrangement whereby the authority of the court would not always fall upon an individual by way of sending him to gaol. The conscience of the government should be directed to involving the community so that individual families would be prepared to accept for a probationary period individuals who had broken the law, in order that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Unless he obtains unanimous consent he will not be able to complete his remarks.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Finish.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair apologizes. I have just realized that the hon. member still has five minutes left to him and, of course, he may continue his remarks if he wishes.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I had almost concluded, anyway. These thoughts have been expressed to the minister before. I believe they are valid both from a practical and humanitarian point of view. I hope we can develop a situation in this land where we shall not be spending $30,000 or $40,000 a year on keeping one individual in gaol, counting the police costs, the staffing of penitentiaries, the cost of the supplies and materials required, the cost of operation of the social welfare agencies with respect to families whose father or husband is in gaol, and the like. We have heard it estimated that it costs between $30,000 and $40,000 a year to keep one person in gaol. And we fail, too, in 80 per cent of the cases because there is a recidivism rate of about 80 per cent. In other words, out of every five who are currently in our penitentiaries, four have been in gaol before. This is a sad commentary, remembering that we are paying, say, $35,000 a year with respect to each of the 6,000 or 7,000 inmates of penitentiaries at the present time.

So, there is a strong case for reform on practical grounds. In addition, of course, there is the humanitarian aspect. We tend to lose an individual once he is sentenced to gaol. It is an apprenticeship course he is on, no doubt about that, and little attempt is made to save the individual concerned. I would prefer to see the courts operating in the area of probation. If we look for them, we shall find families who will say: Yes, we will take a chance with this young person, with this young man, with this young girl, we will take them into the home and try to work out within a family structure, through affection, love and understanding, a means of saving this individual from the agony of prison life, from a system under which he will end up serving a life sentence by bits and pieces. If we had that sort of orientation and attitude we would, I think, have less trouble in the nation and would certainly save ourselves a great deal of money that is otherwise wasted.

There are other jurisdictions in the world where this concept applies. I am not one of those who says that because a certain thing works in one country it will necessarily work here. But we should look at the experiences of other countries and see what is being attempted, and we should be able to adapt certain aspects to our way of life.

However, it takes a conscious, deliberate approach on the part of government to set the tone for this sort of activity, to establish an idea and push it toward fulfilment. I think part of this calls for the involvement of judges, courts and the criminal law. I exclude the penitentiaries services because it is the objective of that service to keep people in gaol once they get there. We reserve our gaols and penitentiaries for cases where there is failure at the start. But let us not give up on any individual at his first, second or even third offence. Let us continue to try, in what I hope is a socially acceptable sense, to involve the community, individuals and families in corrective work, in probationary work and in humanitarian work. Let us put offenders on the road where their ideas are compatible with those of society so they will not cause themselves and other people grief and trouble. But first, the government must consciously adopt an attitude. I hope the minister will be able to respond favourably to these thoughts.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we have heard some rather interesting comments from the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) concerning his theory of criminal punishment. I would have hoped to have that sort of debate in its proper setting. At the moment, we have before us an amendment to appoint extra judges at a certain pay level. It is somewhat inhibiting to get into a discussion with the hon. member; all I shall say is that he advanced one theory that society is not at the present time prepared to accept. It is a theory that seemed to dwell upon one side of crime only. Society also looks to the victim of crime. I think you will find at the present time that there is a very strong reluctance on the part of society to step into this other world of handling criminals without also concentrating upon the victims of criminal acts. All too often this point is lost by those people who seem to have a predeliction to concentrate upon the individual who has committed a transgression against the rules of society. Society will not put up with it.

So far as judges are concerned, they are bound by the law that is before them. They are also bound by the views of society regarding these matters. Undoubtedly, there may be judges who share some of the views of the hon. member for Skeena, but they are powerless to act in any way in that direction because society is not prepared or equipped to accept his particular theory of criminal punishment.

The matters I want to talk about are two in number. First of all, it seems to me that I heard it noised about this summer that this bill had been deferred as a result of action by the opposition. Let me put the record straight once and for all: this bill comes before us now because the government had certain priorities in June and this bill lost out to Bill C-176. That is all too clear. I think everyone should know that Bill C-176 had higher priority at the crucial time in late June. However, I am directed to say on behalf of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that this party at that time did give an undertaking that this bill would be considered and passed within a certain time, as there is today, and we are adhering to that undertaking.

The other matter I wish to talk about is this. Unfortunately, I have to hang my remarks on this particular clause rather than on clause 14 of the bill since that clause is not before us on report stage. I want again to make a plea to the government to remove forever from the members of this House, members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the disadvantage they suffer and have suffered since anno domini, it seems, regarding any pension they might have arising out of service to the public.

For example, if these people go to another position in the public service, they cannot carry their pensions with them. As far as Members of Parliament are concerned, we recently have had the cases of the hon. member for Brant and prior to that of the then Solicitor General. I know of two former colleagues of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) who are presently in the public service of Canada. One of them has had many years' service in this House, but unfortunately he has not been entitled in any way to enjoy that which he had earned and to which he had contributed.

If he had been in private industry, then he would have been able to contribute to a pension or retirement plan of his own, take up his position with the public service of Canada, and thus benefit from his own contributions to and participation in a pension plan. But we have this anachronistic and hoary rule that says that a Member of Parliament cannot enjoy or take with him his pension entitlement should he take a position in the public service of Canada, whether as judge or to an appointment on a government commission. The exception is service with a provincial administration.

This is where the whole thing breaks down. He has a pension from the Crown in the right of Canada, and if he becomes a provincial judge or, say, head of the civil service commission, or even an ombudsman, as the former commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police did in the province of Alberta, he can draw his full pension to which he is fully entitled on his retirement from the federal service. He can then take up this other position because he is qualified to do so and discharges the duties of his office with efficiency and competence.

The point I want to make is this. Some of the members of this House will in the future be appointed to the bench, and it is for these people that I make this plea. As I understand it, any member of the House who is a lawyer and is appointed to the bench—there have been many instances of this in the past and these members have made extremely competent and good judges—receives the return of his contributions to the pension plan. In this bill there is some slight relief. Although they personally will not enjoy this relief, it is possible that there might be a residuary passing to their estate after these members die, and this certainly is a halfway step. I have talked to a great number of members on both sides of the House as well as to the minister's colleagues, and they share this opinion.

I have spoken to the minister but I am not going to suggest what he thinks. I will tell him what some of his colleagues think. The point I am trying to make is absolutely justified. We must wipe away this rule. A man in the armed services who has put in his full time and retires with the rank of Warrant Officer first class is entitled to keep his full pension should he go into the Public Service of Canada. The man who has been in for the same length of time and retires with the rank of Major or Lieutenant-Colonel can avail himself of the allowance up to the category of Warrant Officer first class. The difference between the W.O. 1's pension and the pension of a Lieutenant-Colonel is subject to reduction under that formula should he accept civilian employment with the government of Canada. I think out of sheer enlightened self-interest, it would be more than worth while for the government of Canada to employ these men who have been trained at great expense. Many of these senior officers have taken extensive staff courses and have valuable administrative experience and capability. They should be placed in the Public Service of Canada. They will not build up any additional pension during the next 12 or 18 years.

Provincial administrations are getting the entire benefit of these trained men at this time. It seems the whole purpose of this rule is out of keeping with the situation today. Let me conclude by saying very briefly that if a man is going to go to the Bench he should be allowed to keep whatever pension he has earned. If we want top men on the Bench we must increase the pay scale. A judge is not allowed to participate in business and will have to sacrifice a higher income. Some people ask how that can be the case, but that is a fact of life. Many men in this country who are competent in their fields, including lawyers, engineers, architects and others who are not professionals can make much more money than is now offered judges. Many lawyers who are prudent make certain investments. Judges can enjoy the results of such investments while they are judges. A lawyer who has become a Member of Parliament and serves for a long time must sacrifice a legal practice. That is the situation in at least nine cases out of ten. His capital disappears. Surely, they should be compensated in some way. If a man has served for some time in this House and is appointed to the Bench, he should be entitled to receive as a judge any pension he has earned or is entitled to.

The law says that after a man has served a certain length of time as a Member of Parliament he has an entitlement, just as though he had purchased an investment policy, and he should be entitled to receive that while he is a judge, just as a man who is appointed to the Bench right from a legal practice is entitled to receive the benefits of any investment he has made. It seems to me the positions have to be equated. We must do away with this nonsense rule. We have people appointed to the Immigration Appeal Board. They have had to put aside their business dealings, and that is wrong.

That is all I want to say on this particular point, but let me reiterate this plea to the government to make the necessary changes.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, breathes there a lawyer whose soul is so dead he does not aspire to a judgeship? I think a judgeship is as important to some as a home or nationalism is to others. We can almost use citation No. 11 of the Standing Orders to object to too many people participating in this debate. However, that is not the reason I am rising today.

The minister has asked for 90 puisne judges, 13 more judges, six more judges, 97 judges, one chief judge of the county court and five more county court judges. Do we really need all these extra judges?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member in stating those numbers should recognize he is speaking globally rather than additionally, because the 90 judges really means an addition of five judges over the 85 now already in office.

Mr. Peters: I appreciate that correction because, quite frankly, I did not realize we were not getting 90 more judges, and I would not have been surprised had that been the case.

Mr. Hogarth: He is unencumbered by the facts.

Mr. Peters: Every time I get caught speeding in any part of the country there is always a judge immediately available. I have never noticed any lack of judges.

The previous speaker indicated that we must appoint these judges now to clear up the great backlog. I understand the province of Alberta requires more judges. It is interesting to note that when the minister asked for first reading of this measure, at least three provinces made application for an increase in their judiciary.

The reason I refer to a relationship between Members of Parliament and lawyers, and lawyers and judges, is that we really are not in a position of deciding whether we have enough judges in Alberta or in any other province. Perhaps the lawyers can make such a judgment, but they have a very close interest.

I do not begrudge paying judges more money. If money keeps them honest we should increase the amount. Many good lawyers in this country have turned down a judgeship because the money offered is not sufficient to keep them in the manner to which they have become accustomed. In order to maintain this standard as judges, they would have to engage in outside practice and that may be detrimental. I am not opposed to increasing the salaries, but I should like the minister to tell us whether increasing the number is really necessary. He has listened to the attorneys general of the provinces who have asked for more judges. The minister must go along with such a request, because he is the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada, and he has a responsibility. It seems to me that we, as Members of Parliament, are not in a position to decide whether the requested increase in the number of judges is valid. Will the minister indicate what machinery he contemplates to ensure that the increase is necessary?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I would be surprised if one judge I know works more than a 10-hour week. He has lots of time for everything and anything, and this extra time is not doing him any good physically or any other way. It seems to me that a little more work in this case would be beneficial. No one really supervises these judges. They do not punch clocks or turn in time cards.

We had an interesting case in my area not long ago involving a young fellow who had to appear before a judge, even though he had elected trial before a judge and jury, simply because there were so few cases to be heard before a jury that the jury was not called. They talked him out of having a jury trial. He appeared before a judge and received a sentence of two years, whereas the other two young fellows who were involved appeared before a jury and got off. I do not know how justice works, but if this person had elected to be tried by a judge and jury perhaps the trial should have been proceeded with in that way. I think in many cases judges do put in very long hours. In many instances when they hear a case it takes so long for a judgment to be delivered that the person has served the time involved in his sentence even before the judge gets around to deciding what the sentence should be. It may be that we do not need more judges but need more clerical help. The time lapse in obtaining court records sometimes is so great that the judge probably has forgotten what the case was all about.

The point I am trying to make in respect of this bill is we are not really being informed what the need is. We do not know whether the Attorney General of Canada is to exercise some kind of control over the requests which come from the provinces or, for example, if the province of Alberta asks for five judges does it get five judges and is that the end of his responsibility. Do we just vote this money year after year as a matter of course? I am interested not only in this initial instance but also in how we exercise control over this problem in each year's estimates.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing two report stage motions at the present time, No. 1 and No. 5. I gather that No. 1 deals mainly with increasing the number of judges to be provided under this legislation and that No. 5 deals mainly with the proposed new salary levels. Like the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) I feel I must say that we have to take it on the word of the minister that the increased number of judges is really necessary. That message has been put through to us from most of the lawyers in this House during recent weeks. As I say we have no direct evidence, but I suppose we must believe it is necessary and therefore I shall not object to report stage motion No. 1.

Although I have said things in this House which were more popular than this, it is still my view that we are raising the salary levels too high and, Mr. Speaker, when you put report stage motion No. 5 I shall record my objection by saying "on division". It seems to me the pleas that are made for these higher salaries just do not jibe with the pleas that are also made for people to hold their desires in check, to put off their demands for higher wages and so on.

There is mounting unemployment in this country. There are many people who must live on unemployment insurance or on low levels of welfare and we have the problems of our pensioners trying to make both ends meet. We are told that these people must wait and wait and wait. The process grinds very slowly for them. In this bill, however, there is one increase in the salaries of judges which is to be retroactive to January 1, 1971, and there is another increase which is to come into effect on January 1, 1972. This is not a bill which is picayune in character. When it is all through, as I understand it, the salary range will be from $22,000 to $50,000. The highest salary specified is $47,000 but the $47,000 judge receives an extra $3,000 for things he might be called upon to do. I know that lawyers are not the highest paid people in the country according to taxation statistics made public a few days ago. They are second. Doctors come at the top. I still suggest that in this Parliament, where we have to do something about people who are unemployed, who are in poverty, who are on pensions and so on, we are going a little too far and too fast in respect of salary levels in the upper brackets. I know the mood in this House and the arguments we have had before, but just as I objected to the increases we made earlier in this session in respect of our own salary levels I object to these increases.

The other word I intended to say I could have held for the next debate, namely on motions No. 2 and No. 3, but perhaps since reference has been made to the matter I might do it now and not have to do it again. One of the perquisites, of course of being a judge is the pension arrangement. This pension is being increased by virtue of this bill and let it never be forgotten that these are non-contributory pensions. The judges receive them without putting one nickel into them. They are very good pensions. They are not the kind we vote for other people. I think one must consider this in light of the salaries. For these reasons, I feel I must indicate my objection.

I want to say at the same time, as one who has long been concerned—and I think that concern has been amply demonstrated—about the pension arrangements which apply to public servants generally, that, there are a number of improvements which need to be made in the pension arrangements particularly for widows and dependants. The minister knows, or at least I assume he knows, that in some cases widows of judges long since deceased have been appealing to him as strongly as they can to do something about the level of their pensions. These are widows of judges who served the courts years ago. Therefore, the pensions these widows have are still very low because they were fixed a long time ago. When we reach report stage motions No. 2 and No. 3, we will be providing for a certain amount of retroactivity. This I suppose is mainly because of the fact that it has taken so long to get this bill through. This retroactivity, however, dates back only to January 1, 1971, and therefore does not affect the widows of judges whose pensions date back before that time. I feel the minister should still give some consideration to these people and do something for them at this time.

While I am on my feet perhaps I should say a word about the point raised by my friend the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). As I have already said, I believe there are vast improvements which still have to be made in public service pensions generally and that others need to be made with regard to judges, but I must say I cannot go along with the hon. member in his request that a certain principle be abandoned, namely the principle that when a person goes from one public service job to another, from being a Member of Parliament to being a judge, or from being a Member of Parliament to being a Senator or a member of the Immigration Appeal Board or what have you, that that person should not receive both the pension he had earned up until that point and the salary he would get in the new job. Generally speaking, that principle is a valid one. We have provisions which take care of public servants up to certain levels, where they move from one area of service to another, but I think the notion that one can stand up in this House and say that a person has earned a pension according to law and should get it even though he receives a salary from the federal treasury, does not follow.

This pension that Members of Parliament earn according to the law is just that. The law that sets up our pension provides that if a retired Member of Parliament goes to the Senate or goes to some job to which there is attached a salary from the federal treasury, that pension is suspended. One of the reasons that our pensions can be as generous as they are is that we have that kind of arrangement.

This is no day to go into all of this in great detail, but my friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I often have these differences. We disagree, and we not only disagree in our seats but we put our disagreements on the record. Even so, I think that not so much for judges but particularly for judges' widows and their dependants there are improvements that could be made, and I hope that even yet the minister will respond to some of the strong pleas that were made to him in that connection. As for these new, higher salaries for judges, I believe we should say no.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have never known whether the rules under 75—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister is finding out now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It seems that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is seeking the floor at this time. The interpretation of the Chair of Standing Order 75(9), to which the minister was just about to refer, does not allow him to speak again. The mere fact that he put the motion in his name, even if he only spoke a few words and even if he had not spoken at all, prevents him from speaking a second time unless he obtains unanimous consent of the House, and I imagine that this is what the minister was about to ask.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I expected more men of law to deal with this question in the current debate but the contrary seems to be happening. I am not a lawyer, but I feel I can interpret quite accurately the general public whose opinion men who have a degree in law are called upon to judge. It is common knowledge that all judges have made a thorough study of all the laws in Canada as well as their application.

The amendment and the bill now before us provide for an increase both in the number of judges and in their remuneration.

Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of the public and of some judges with whom we have had an opportunity to converse from time to time, it is not so much the possibility of applying the law that is lacking as the possibility of preventing infractions.

Mr. Speaker, we have dealt with an act on juvenile delinquency, and will do so again. There also, judges are able to punish juvenile delinquents. The same situation prevails in all courts of justice. However, it would seem that ways and means of preventing crime and ensuring rehabilitation of former inmates are lacking and apparently there is not enough concern with this problem. In fact, as a thorough study of their cases reveals, they are not fully responsible for their misdeeds. They have been rejected one way or another by a society that does not openly give them the opportunity of adapting themselves to it. They are rejected through laws whose administration requires too much time or laws that do not now fit in the social climate, the development of our society.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the gaol we must pursue is not so much to award judges higher salaries or appoint a greater number of them, although I believe they have to deal with too many cases, since the crime rate is rising continually. I do not object too much to the salary increase but I feel that selected candidates should be more competent. I don't think that salary increases will bring that about.

As for the increase in judges' salaries, some objective will have to be reached. Some high officials are paid as much as $75,000 per year; soon increases will have to be granted to them as they are granted to all the others, but where will this end? Is the one receiving $75,000 annually more competent than the one who gets $25,000 or $30,000? I do not think so.

So, considering that the government does not appear to be interested in anything else but the payment of higher salaries to those who are responsible for the administration of the law, we must oppose this amendment.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I feel that I cannot let this motion go without saying a few words in connection with the bill. It is an important bill but one which is moving in a direction which I think is leading us deeper and deeper into trouble in this country because it is widening the gap between the people who have a great deal of income and those who have very little. When we have in Canada a situation where about 20 per cent of the people have 40 per cent of the income and 7 per cent of the people at the bottom have about 20 per cent of the income, we find therein the cause of a great deal of our difficulty. To single out groups of people and give them higher incomes at this time, particularly groups in the upper echelons with a high income, is in my view to compound our difficulties. I said so on an earlier occasion concerning Members of Parliament. I believe that the same thing is true for the judges.

I know that this is regarded as a highly treacherous thing to say because you are supposed to pay judges well to keep them on the straight and narrow track, and apparently they have to be paid more now than ever before so as to ensure that they do not go off the track under the pressure of circumstances. I just want to point out that if judges have to be paid to keep them on the straight and narrow, it might be a good idea, instead of raising judges salaries at this time, to consider using some money to help the people who make the clients for so many of the judges, people without incomes or with very low incomes. They are the ones whom I think we should be helping to keep down the need for so many judges whose numbers we are being asked to increase at this time.

I do not know why we have to have this large increase in the number of judges. I think we should be told a little more about the reasons for the increase. But I do think it is a great mistake to have people who are very comfortably insulated dealing with the lives of others who are not so well situated. Since the pressures on those not comfortably insulated are partly responsible for the crimes they commit, I think it is a bad thing to increase the disparity in income between those who have, namely, the judges, and those who appear before the judges.

From the standpoint of people on low incomes, this sort of measure will not raise the judiciary in their estimation. It will not give them more confidence in the judiciary. It will make them feel that if they infringe the law they will be brought before people who do not know what it is like to live under the tremendous pressure of tough economic circumstances.

I do not think we should be doing this sort of thing in this Parliament. If we feel it necessary to increase the income of people in higher brackets, people like judges, I say let us wait until we have provided the necessary increases to people in the lower income brackets. There is no need to enumerate the latter; we all know who they are. Why should they always have to take a back seat and wait and wait for necessary increases to meet the rise in the cost of living?

I wish to place myself on record as being opposed to this measure at this time. I believe it should wait until we have shown that we know where the real priorities are. We should see that all people have bread and butter before some people are given cake and champagne. This bill does not meet that situation. Consequently, I wish to register myself as opposing this increase in judges' salaries at this time.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I usually admire the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), but her rhetoric on this occasion does not meet the issue. It is not a matter of priorities or that anyone, including the minister, is not anxious to look after those who comprise that large segment of our population who find themselves in difficult circumstances. After all, the state has an obligation to those who serve it. The judiciary is in this category. Members of the judiciary are servants of the state. Leaving aside any philosophy regarding their independence, which is not the subject of this debate, they are the servants of the state in the very broadest use of that expression.

I share the hon. lady's aspiration for a narrowing of the gap, as she said, between those who have cake and champagne and those who seek bread and butter and, hopefully, this Parliament will deal with with that matter. The government has a responsibility to provide adequately for those who seek bread and butter, but that is not the issue before the House in this bill.

The minister will not be surprised if I take just a minute on a cause that is not very popular, because here I speak for only two people—not a very large pressure group—who were in the category of servants of the state. They are judges who have retired since January 1, 1971, and because they did not have 120 months, or ten years', service they find themselves without a pension at age 75. I am not going to belabour the point but I want it on the public record because I was unable to get the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to accept what I thought was a rather fair and straightforward amendment that would cover the case of the former Chief Justice of Manitoba, Rhode Smith, who has a very long record of public service both in the legislature of Manitoba and on the Manitoba bench. The problem that Rhode Smith faces is that none of his periods of service was long enough to give him an adequate pension, if, in fact, any pension at all is payable to him.

In another, more modest judicial capacity was H. N. Jonah, of Sussex, New Brunswick, who retired after serving about nine years on the county court bench. The formula I evolved—I evolved it because this bill is retroactive in its payment provisions to last January—was such that these two gentlemen would be able to get a pension prorated according to their years of service as against a ten-year period, in other words, nine-tenths of a pension in one case and a little over nine-tenths in the other. I regret to say that this was not acceptable to the government. I hope that the other place, where I have had some discussions with people who are interested, in particular in the case of Rhode Smith, will find some way to correct this clear unfairness. They are two gentlemen who have served this country well and to whom a very simple amendment of the bill could have been applied.

I had the record searched by the minister's own departmental officials and was assured that only two people were involved in this particular aspect of the bill, and apparently because they are without power and do not have many people to speak for them their cases have not been sympathetically received by the government. That is all I will say about the matter now.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) touched a rather personal nerve with me when he spoke of the widows of judges. I know something of what they have had to put up with through long years of neglect under succeeding governments within recent times. As a matter of fact, before this issue was faced by Parliament the technique used to be for widows of judges, including, if I am correct, the widow of the Chief Justice of Canada, to work in one or other department of government, in the parliamentary library or somewhere of that sort, so that they could have, not cake and champagne but bread and butter.

I will conclude my remarks by saying that I hope the minister, when he presents the philosophy behind this bill to the Senate, might be moved to consider the cases of Rhode Smith and Harry Jonah. A very simple amendment, requiring very little change in philosophy because of the retroactive provisions of the bill, could meet these cases in the way I have suggested both before the committee and, in a very peripheral way, before this House.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I know that the House is anxious to pass this bill this afternoon. However, I wish to take a moment to reply to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). One of the things I want to state is that the demand for the increase in the number of judges in British Columbia is coming directly from the court itself and not from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) or from members of this side of the House because they want to become judges.

The fact is that on July 2, 1971, Chief Justice Wilson of the Supreme Court of British Columbia wrote to the president of the Bar Association in my riding and advised him that a bill had been introduced to provide for three much needed judges to be appointed to his court. He said that the bill went as far as second reading and then became bogged down in the summer recess, making it necessary to plan the rota—that is to say, the trial list—for this fall and that many cases would not be heard and many people, as he put it, would go without the obligations of the bar and the bench to the public. This is exactly what happened. It is all very well to talk about problems such as lawyers wanting to become judges, and all this nonsense that seems to be so popular among many lay people. The fact is that modern society has become increasingly complex, our population has increased and therefore we need good members of the judiciary to handle the litigation coming before the courts.

When we were in law school there was an old adage that the brilliant law student makes a good judge and the stupid law student makes good money. Now the brilliant law students are realizing that they can make good money too. If we are to have good judges capable of carrying out their duties and feeling that they are properly recompensed for the tremendous responsibility involved, we have to pay them well.

It is not a popular thing among members of the bar to seek a judgeship. Many lawyers have been approached by the Minister of Justice. I am well aware that there are good lawyers who do not want to sit on the bench, not because of the money but because of the work involved. You have no idea what it is like for a trial judge to sit for two months on assizes. You have no idea what it is like redirecting a jury at half past four in the morning after they have come back for further direction. You have no idea what it is like to be concerned with the poor people that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) was discussing, or what it is like to be concerned about clearing the jails so that trials can be held and people put back on the street or into suitable institutions. The hours are extensive and the responsibilities tremendous.

It appears to me that we had better start looking at ourselves. Only three judges are requested for British Columbia, with modest increases in pay and some other changes. We have been debating this bill over six or seven months. Perhaps we should be asking ourselves whether it is the judges who are not serving the public, or the Members of Parliament. I think we should get going on this bill and the other legislation before the House.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a question if the hon. member who has the floor will allow it.

Mr. Hogarth: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: I did not refer to British Columbia because I am not too familiar with conditions there. The hon. member is very learned in the law. He obviously knows the law, the operations of the bar in British Columbia and the requests that go to the Attorney General. He has an obligation, I have an obligation and all hon. members have an obligation in respect of the appointment of judges and the salaries they are to be paid. I should like to ask the hon. member how the Attorney General of Canada protects us. How are we to know if a request for three judges in that area is reasonable? In other words, as I understand it the request has to be honoured by the Attorney General, and my complaint is that we really have no knowledge of whether it is a reasonable request.

Mr. Woolliams: Read the committee reports.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, the question should really be directed to the Attorney General. It would appear that he would take into consideration complaints from people concerned; he would look at the trial rota, find out how much time is being taken and then make a decision on how many judges are required. If he is wrong, complaints such as those of the hon. member will be heard.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 1?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt motion No. 5?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I understand it has been agreed that motions Nos. 2 and 3 should be grouped for debate. Again, the motions called separately. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) moves motion No. 2 as follows:

That Bill C-243, an act to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, be amended by

(a) adding to clause 5 on page 7, immediately after subsection (2) thereof, the following subsection:

"(3) Where a judge resigned, ceased to hold office or died while holding office after December 31, 1970 and before the coming into force of this act and the Governor in Council granted to him or to his widow an annuity under the Judges Act, the Governor in Council may increase that annuity, effective as of the day it was granted, by an amount not exceeding the difference between the amount of the annuity so granted and the amount of the annuity that could have been granted to that judge or his widow under the Judges Act if this act had been in force at the time he resigned, ceased to hold office or died." ; and

(b) renumbering subsection (3) of clause 5 as subsection (4).

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) moves motion No. 3 as follows:

That Bill C-243, an act to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, be amended by

(a) striking out subsections (1) and (2) of clause 10 on page 11 and substituting the following:

"10. (1) Section 27 of the said act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (1) thereof, the following subsections:

"(1a) Subject to subsection (1b) where, after the coming into force of this subsection,

(a) a judge dies while holding office, or

(b) a judge who was granted an annuity after the coming into force of this subsection dies, the Governor in Council may grant to each child of such judge an annuity equal to one-fifth of the annuity granted to the widow of that judge pursuant to paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1), as the case may be, or if the judge died without leaving a widow or such widow is dead, two-fifths of the annuity that otherwise could have been granted to the widow of the judge.

(1b) The total amount of the annuities paid under subsection (1a) to the children of a judge described in that subsection shall not exceed four-fifths of the annuity granted to the widow of that judge pursuant to paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1), as the case may be, or if the judge died without leaving a widow or the widow is dead, eight-fifths of that annuity.

(1c) For the purposes of subsection (1a) and (1b), "child" means a child of a judge who

(a) is less than eighteen years of age; or

(b) is eighteen or more years of age but less than twenty-five years of age, is unmarried, and is in full-time attendance at a school or university having been in such attendance substantially without interruption since he reached eighteen years of age or the judge died, whichever occurred later." ; and

(b) renumbering subsection (3) of clause 10 on page 12 as subsection (2).

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, these two amendments were adopted by the committee but came before the House at the report stage because they again dealt with an imbalance of ways and means. Amendment No. 2 is made necessary because it readjusts pensions granted to either retired judges or widows since the beginning of the year because of increases in salary. It was felt that because the salary increase was retroactive to January 1, the pension should also be retroactive. This amendment was made because I feared someone might say that the rights were crystalized by the granting of the original pension and could not, therefore, be adjusted.

Amendment No. 3 will correct a deficiency in the bill because as presently drafted it would enable pensions to be given to judges' children only if the judge died while holding office. It became obvious that we would have to take care of the case where a judge retired because he was striken by a calamity, or retired and then died. It is a technicality, and the committee dealt with it on that basis.

I think there may be some agreement if in speaking to these two amendments I address myself briefly to some of the remarks made on the two earlier amendments. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) said that it might be useful if the courts of appeal of the provinces were to go on circuit so that it would not be necessary for people from smaller communities to go to the larger centres. I am in substantial agreement with that, except that it really lies within provincial jurisdiction because they determine how the circuits of their courts of appeal will be set up.

The federal court of appeal is a circuit court; it goes anywhere in the country, to the major centres, to meet the wishes of litigants. The court of appeal in the Northwest Territories now goes to Yellowknife. It did not go there before. The court of appeal for the Yukon goes to Whitehorse and it is substantially made up of the courts of appeal of Alberta and British Columbia with an interlocking of the two judges between the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. There is a great deal of merit in the idea, but Parliament does not have jurisdiction in the matter.

With regard to sentencing, we are reviewing the guidelines in this respect in the same way as for arrest and bail. There will be some statutory content in regard to sentencing, for guidance and for limiting the control of magistrates, judges and others connected with that phase of the administration of justice. I might say also that the subject of sentencing has been considered by the Canadian judicial conference which was set up three years ago and is conducting continuing education courses for judges. I believe that the whole process of the administration of justice is one continuum, and what is done from the bench should be done in contemplation of what may happen after custody is assumed by others. On the question of what penalties should be applied under criminal law, that matter will be referred to the law reform commission and considered in their review of criminal law. A year ago we had a meeting with all Attorneys General and as a result a uniform statute has been drafted by the uniformity commission. I hope that will open the way to some sort of federal participation.

With respect to the comments of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the administration of justice in the courts is a provincial responsibility under the British North America Act. Strictly speaking, it is up to the Attorney General of a province to advise Parliament, and he has to fulfil that responsibility under the British North America Act. Strictly speaking, I would not have any discretionary power nor, if I might say, would Parliament.

I made it a practice to ask the Attorneys General to give to me statistics of the rolls, the number of judges currently sitting, and so on, in order that I could justify to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, as I attempted to do province by province, that they are necessary.

The comments of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) were pertinent. I agree that the number of judges is only part of the problem. There are also the matters of better administration of the courts, postponement arrangements by lawyers, and certain types of cases that might be taken away from the courts and subject to arbitration such as the automobile cases which now take up to approximately 70 per cent of the courts' time. The hon. member has a point.

The remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) were answered to some extent by the hon. member for New Westminster with regard to the payments to widows of judges who died prior to enactment of the statute. I agree. The hon. member will recall that three years ago we raised this to a maximum of 40 per cent, the same as in the case of a retired civil servant. Widows of judges are treated in the same way. There is no way they can be covered by this bill without a review of the entire situation of the public service.

I cannot say anything more to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) than I said in committee. I stated it very fully then. I understand his concern.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What can you do about it?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Will the minister permit a question? The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) stated that we have spent seven months considering this bill. It has been a long drawn-out affair. Does the minister agree that the prime responsibility for that rests with his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who on the last day before the summer recess insisted on bringing forward another bill in spite of the fact we had offered to expedite the judges bill?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member has his own opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister not have an opinion?

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt motion No. 3 moved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) moves motion No. 4 as follows:

That Bill C-243, an act to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, be amended by adding to clause 11 the words "and five lay persons to be appointed by the minister" at the end of line 22 at page 12.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the reason for moving this very simple amendment to add lay persons to the Canadian judicial council is very obvious. Members of Parliament should not judge themselves. They do not. It does not seem that any other group should be a law totally unto itself. This is becoming more and more acceptable in a great many circumstances where professional people are involved. The government of Ontario is not satisfied with the medical profession policing itself. It has stated on a number of occasions that an advisory council will be appointed to investigate the rates being charged by doctors.

What judges do affects society to a degree. They do not have the right to decide in their own club what they should do. If an individual felt that he was being put down by a judge, he could appeal to the Minister of Justice who would say, "I will investigate it, but do not count on anything because I cannot do anything about it."

A judge is appointed for life, provided he is of good behaviour. He keeps this appointment unless he does something which constitutes bad behaviour. There is the case of a judge who became mixed up in a situation involving speculating. After a considerable time he was put into a position where he resigned. We did not do anything about it. The attitude he presented to the general public was very distressing to lawyers and all those connected with the judiciary.

I presume that judges, like everyone else, make mistakes. The Canadian judicial council is going to correct those mistakes.

Mr. Woolliams: We have courts of appeal for that.

Mr. Peters: There are courts of appeal to deal with mistakes made in certain situations. The Canadian judicial council will have a number of objectives, one of which is——to promote efficiency and uniformity, and to improve the quality of judicial service—

Another object is—

—the establishing from time to time of a conference of chief justices—

The purpose is to have uniformity of law which is sadly lacking at the present time. A very worthwhile object is as follows:

—the establishing from time to time of seminars for continuing education of judges—

(c) subject to section 32, the making of the inquiries and the investigating of any complaint or allegation described in that section.

If we are trying to achieve uniformity of sentences, to establish what judges will do and the role they will play in the situation referred to by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), the public should be involved. I think the hon. member is perfectly correct in his allegation that judges really do not know what they are doing: they do not have any idea of the results of their sentences.

There is a considerable difference of opinion in Ontario as to the right of a judge to sentence someone to two years and a day, or two years less a day, and the results that flow therefrom. I do not believe they know what the results will be. They may know what the end result will be. I would like to give a couple of examples. I know of a case where a man charged with impaired driving appeared before a judge. Instead of the judge putting this man in jail, he was put on probation. His driver's licence was automatically taken away. The judge knew the man was a truck driver; he said he would not lose his driver's licence but it would be specified that his licence would cover him only when driving a truck on the job.

I found out that the judge had no right to do that. The judge, in passing sentence, made it mandatory for the Department of Highways in Ontario and the Department of Transport to prohibit this man from having any kind of driver's licence for a period of time. The recommendations of the judge, which hinged on whether the man should be in jail or out of jail, involved whether he could work or not, and the fact that he had lost his driver's licence meant he could not work because he could not drive a truck. So the judge was sentencing him to what he considered to be a lenient sentence but the man obviously was not able to meet the conditions because laws otherwise were opposed to him.

I will give another example. I am sure every hon. member has heard of judges being very lenient when they send someone to a penitentiary where they can be treated for drug abuse or alcoholic problems. Part of the sentence is supposed to be spent in an institution for the treatment of these persons, and this includes psychiatric care. Then it is found that the direction the judge gave has absolutely no influence as far as any department of government is concerned. If the recommendation is that a person be sent to an institution for the treatment of alcoholism or for the treatment of drug addiction or a mental condition, the prisoner finds it is not honoured and that the judge has no right to make it. There are a number of fields where the judge is out of touch. He does not really know what is going on.

We have recently encountered a number of problems in penitentiaries. This reflects on judges who have sent people to penitentiaries, not for punishment but for correction. They have sent people to penitentiaries to learn a trade. They have said, "Rather than two years less a day we will give you a stiffer sentence so that you can go through a trade course in a penitentiary." We have found in some cases that these people have been inducted into the penitentiary system and years later they are still involved, and the judges have not done their jobs.

I believe that if people were really concerned about rehabilitation and the operations of institutions, the problems of society, if we were to appoint lay people from various agencies and authorities a good deal could be done to re-educate judges and make them aware of what is going on today as contrasted with the day when they were first appointed or when they quit practising law. This would result in a much better judicial service for Canada.

We have been very impressed by people like Des Morton and Arthur Martin over the years. These people are far superior to most of the judges in Canada. Their moral fibre is probably considerably better than that of most of the judges in Canada. For a number of years they have been dealing not only with the law in the way it affects people but with the relationship between the law and people and the relationship between individuals and society at large. They have had many advantages which have not been afforded to judges. The judge has often been, like Caesar's wife, above reproach and above everything else. He has been totally divorced from society.

Judges have even stayed out of country clubs because they do not want to be influenced. They have sat on a high pedestal. It is a lonely pedestal. Many of them by doing so have been able to retain a terrific impartiality, but they have lost touch with much of reality, a reality which is available to a number of very competent people in this country, including intelligent people in the university service.

I am almost scared to mention this. We have seen one of the deans of the university service, and in no circumstances would I want him advising any judge in any place. He himself does not believe in the law. Most of these people have an ivory tower approach which is usually an idealistic one. Young people also come into the world with an idealistic approach. Some of that will rub off on the judges who will sit around in these seminars and kick around the question whether Parliament has been kind enough to them in this bill or whether it should have done more in its provisions for them or their widows and dependants. After all, these are the subjects which are kicked around in seminars, or at least in many of those I have attended. We are at least as interested in our own welfare as we are in anything else, and I do not think judges are very different.

We are faced in this country with a number of young people who are drug oriented. We are also faced with an adult population which is cocktail oriented. It seems to me that our law does not take into consideration these two new societies. It may well be that every kid under 15 today will be on drugs when he reaches the age of 20, though I hope not. But if we depend upon the judiciary to make it not so, I am afraid we shall be disappointed. It may be that society ten years from now will look on drugs as we look on social alcohol today. Mr. Speaker, you would not be popular if you invited us to have a social afternoon and there was no alcohol—

Some hon. Members: Why not?

Mr. Peters: It may be that in future people going to a social gathering will be popping pills of some kind. Whether they do or not, a large portion of our society is involved. It will not be good enough for an old judge who is just getting over a hangover to say to a young guy with long hair, "You will get the maximum sentence. You should be put away. I would hang you if I could; enforce the law to the limit" and believe that will get rid of the problem. There are people in the academic world who have studied this problem and they agree this is not the solution. There may be a solution, but this is not it. There will have to be understanding and uniformity in sentencing. The judge who has a hangover may have something in common with the young fellow before him who has taken a hallucinatory drug the night before.

There are lay people who could give the judiciary some advice. It will be good advice. It will be learned advice, highly educated advice. I am not suggesting that the Minister of Justice should go out and solve the unemployment problem by calling on the Unemployment Insurance Commission and getting four or five people and appointing them to the judiciary. He has available to him the very best people in four or five categories in Canada, a cross-section of the most progressive thought in our communities. These people would be available as an advisory council. I am not sure that the minister is right when he says the judiciary will not allow him to do this. The argument is always used by the judiciary that if they do not get what they want, they will quit. At $35,000 most of them can afford to quit, and someone will take their place.

I believe that this minister is a progressive minister and talks progressively. But he listens to advice from his department which is anything but progressive. Since I have been here I have found this true of justice ministers such as Mr. Favreau and others; their advice has been anything but progressive. I strongly urge the minister seriously to consider this amendment. In my opinion it is not dangerous. He will have control over those he will appoint. If he wishes to amend the motion to appoint them for a period of one year or five years, then I would be quite happy to agree.

I should like to see uniformity of judicial decisions established across Canada. I should like to see the members of this council improve our judicial system. I think that when the council meets there should be available to its members the advice of those who are not directly interested in day to day operations of the legal system and who can put forward ideas for change which can be translated in terms of improving our judicial system.

Although I have 40 minutes, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk the bill out. I am not angry at the members of the judiciary; I merely want to appeal to the minister to give consideration to tempering the decisions that will be taken by this council with the views of those who are representative of modern society, those who work in the fields of parole, social work, women's liberation and in the realm of the public defender. This is important if we are to find a solution to the problems of drugs and alcohol.

In this regard I think we can look to the John Howard Society for a parallel. I suppose John Howard was lucky to have made it. The officials in the gallery who advise the minister, learned though they are, really have not had any new ideas for a long time. John Howard did much to rehabilitate prisoners and this does not seem to have got him into any trouble. He is dead now and he may have died before they set up the John Howard Society; I do not know.

I should like the minister to examine the case of a man who has caused the justice officials a lot of trouble over a number of years, Gaston Nicholas. He lives in the province of Quebec and has set up an organization to handle criminals. He has been thus occupied for a year and a half or two years now and still has not been sent to jail, which I think is in itself an accomplishment. In the province of Quebec they have started a building program for ex-cons. A restaurant has been staffed with ex-cons and a rehabiliation job is being done. But it is something that the department will not support. Although the minister's officials will not take a chance on it, this program has been in existence for several years, a lot longer than other organizations which have been set up to help this kind of person.

There are many avenues of advice the minister can seek, but one of these days he will have to answer a lot of people who consider him to be a progressive minister. I can safely tell him that he has not presented any legislation to date that has been anywhere near as progressive as I am sure most of his generation would like.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the motion moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) I think we have to ask ourselves two questions at the outset. Does this bill attempt to exercise some control and discipline over the judiciary and, if so, how does it do that? Under the British North America Act, as all hon. members know—indeed, Mr. Speaker, there was a motion recently before Your Honour on this point, though I say so sadly—it is necessary to get a resolution passed by the two Houses of parliament, the House of Commons and the other place, in order to impeach a judge. That is the term that is used but it refers to the removal of a judge from the bench.

Clause 32 of this bill is designed to give guidance, I assume to the Minister of Justice and the cabinet, when a matter like this comes before the government. This motion seeks to amend proposed section 31 which would establish a Canadian judicial council. This council is to consist of the Chief Justice of Canada, the chief justices of each superior court of the provinces, who will be 10 in number, and judges may be substituted by appointment in the case of illness or vacancy.

This amendment seeks to appoint five laymen to the council and has nothing to do with the appointment of judges. The council will have some control and discipline over the judiciary in line with the terms and conditions of our constitution. What the honourable and distinguished member wants to do is to add five laymen to that body as a whole. At the outset—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member at this point and bring to the attention of hon. members that normally at this time we would be going on with private members' business. I wonder whether there is disposition on the part of hon. members for the Chair not to see the clock for the time being?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a feeling in the House that we should dispense with private members' hour, the debate to proceed no longer than five o'clock, or earlier if the matter is dealt with.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): And the House then adjourn?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we agree.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad we have agreed to do that, Mr. Speaker, because it is one way of cleaning up this legislation this afternoon. What the hon. member for Timiskaming is doing is asking that laymen be added to this council. What is the function of the council? I would briefly refer to the relevant clause of the bill because I think it must be read to understand the functions of the council and what the hon. member is trying to do. I refer to clause 33(2) which provides in part:

• (4:00 p.m.)

Where, in the opinion of the council, the judge in respect of whom an inquiry or an investigation has been made—

[Mr. Peters.]

In other words, where there has been a complaint about the judge. The hon. member referred to a criticism in respect of a judge's action regarding a driver's licence. I do not know the facts of that case, but if the charge was one of impaired driving under the Code, or one of a number under the highway traffic acts of the provinces, the judge has no alternative but to take the licence. He has no discretion at all. If he did not take the licence, the court of appeal or somebody else would correct the situation. A judge making that kind of error would be corrected by the court of appeal or by the Supreme Court of Canada, if the case went that far. That type of thing is not something, as I see it, which would be considered by the council. The function of the council is set out in the clause which provides:

Where, in the opinion of the council, the judge . . .has become incapacitated or disabled from the due execution of his office by reason of

(a) age or infirmity—

We know there is an age limit in respect of judges, being 70 years of age in some jurisdictions and 75 years of age in others. We all know that a person could have a stroke here in the House or in any vocation and could no longer perform his duties because of infirmity. As the law exists we would have to bring forward a resolution, unless the judge voluntarily resigned. I presume the Minister of Justice is asking for some direction in this regard. Paragraph (b) states:

having been guilty of misconduct—

This would not be judicial misconduct such as a mistake in interpreting the law or even a mistake in a finding of fact. Such errors are judicial and are corrected in our judicial system by our appeal courts or by the Supreme Court of Canada. This would refer to flagrant misconduct of another type. I could refer to some of the things that would fall within this category but I do not think one has to go beyond what I suggest the words mean. The next paragraph states:

having failed in the due execution of his office—

In other words, perhaps a judge refuses to write any judgments. Having heard the case, he may reserve his judgment and refuses to write such judgment. That is the kind of thing which would be reported to this council made up of the Chief Justice of Canada and the superior judges of the provinces. They would be chief judges. They would then call the judge in and suggest that he get back on the job and write these judgments. We have had judges like that. If a judge did not follow the suggestion, the matter would be reported to the minister who would then take the matter to the cabinet. The cabinet would then bring in a resolution to be considered by the two Houses of Parliament. The law has not been changed in that regard.

The next paragraph states:

having been placed, by his conduct or otherwise, in a position incompatible with the due execution of his office—

He may have done something that was not judicious. In our system we have separate democratic institutions, one is Parliament, one is the judiciary and the other is the executive. Each plays a different part. Judges are supposed to be above politics. During the lunch hour I was reading "Law Courts, Lawyers and Litigants," by Frederick Payler. This is what one distinguished judge said as quoted at page 92:

I thank God I am in a position which puts me above politics.

Those were the words of the Earl of Clonmel, an Irish chief justice, nearly a century and a half ago. The judiciary must always be above politics or you will not have an independent judiciary. With the greatest respect, that is why I take a position of opposition to the appointment of laymen, whatever a layman is. Perhaps it means people other than those trained in the law. But I would be concerned if the Minister of Justice appointed five laymen to this council. Any one or all five of those laymen might be members of a political party. As long as I am here as a member, I will oppose that idea. I feel that the judiciary at any level must always be free from the infiltration of politicians.

We will never have puritanism of human behaviour, but I believe we in Canada have one of the finest judiciaries in the world. I have practised in the criminal courts probably to a greater extent than the minister. I am a member of the bar and have practised in two provinces. I now belong to the bar of a third province. I am convinced that our judiciary is as good as any in the world.

I always remember something the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) once said when I was associated with him in a lawsuit. The judge had been a Member of Parliament associated with a different party. The right hon. member said, wasn't it wonderful that the judge had the position, when only a short time ago he and the judge were adversaries on different platforms? He said that under our system the judge had been appointed as an individual, independent of the people who appointed him. He said he was now in the judiciary and would make the kind of decisions the citizens of Canada wanted. That is the kind of experience I have had before the bar. I have always found that when individuals leave this institution or any political party to sit on the bench, they exercise their functions in a judicious and independent manner.

I should like to support the hon. member's motion because I feel he has put it forward in an effort to assist the courts to do a better job, but I must oppose it because it involves the possibility of five laymen being appointed to the council all of whom may belong to the same political party and may not be independent.

Let me say something in reference to the legislation we are amending. As the opposition critic in respect of justice I felt it was my duty to talk with various chief justices to ascertain their feelings about this action. Some are not as keen about it as others, and some view it with a sense of anxiety. They have some doubts about any form of discipline in respect of judges. It is not everyone who can make a decision. Some men appear to have all the characteristics required to make a good judge but still cannot make decisions. One cannot always expect perfection. In my experience, we have a good judiciary but things go wrong once in a while.

In the event of flagrant misconduct on the part of a judge, a complaint can be made to this council which in turn will make a recommendation to the minister. I am concerned about any kind of control over the judiciary, even among the judges themselves. This could be a very dangerous thing. We seem to be entering an era of little or no discretion. Sometimes mistakes are made. But most of our judges are well acquainted with the common law; they interpret it in such a way that generally proper findings are made. If they make mistakes, the courts of appeal will correct them.

I suggest that judges should be left with some discretion. We should not legislate in respect of everything. We need a little flexibility in our society. Under the principle of stare decisis the rule is apparent, and if a mistake is made it can be corrected. The previous speaker referred to a great trial lawyer in this country. We all hold him in great respect. He is one of very many who in all parts of the country are speaking on behalf of the citizens.

If the courts have made a mistake or if the trial judge makes a mistake, it will probably be corrected by the court of appeal. I come to one last note in reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I raised this matter in the committee and the Minister of Justice was very sympathetic to it because in his position he is well aware of it. The judges of the Supreme Court of Canada are very overworked. However, they bend over backwards, in my experience, to grant leave to appeal where there has been a miscarriage of justice. I saw this demonstrated recently in a case which went to the Court of Appeal of Alberta. Thirteen persons, mostly under age 21, were tried for murder and were convicted. The court of appeal granted a new trial to 11, acquitted one and refused one. Leave was granted to appeal one case to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The Minister of Justice said we are to have supernumerary judges. These, I suppose, would be judges who would have retired perhaps four or five years earlier and who would be available to help clear up the large backlog of cases. Why should we not have the same system for the Supreme Court of Canada? The answer to this question is like the answer of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who found that you cannot break through the bureaucracy. The constitution says you can have nine judges, but there is nothing in the constitution which says that you could not have nine judges sitting full time and three who had retired prior to age 70 taking two-thirds of their salary by way of pension and hearing chamber applications.

If we had three supernumerary judges they could relieve the other nine judges who would be free to clear the backlog of cases. I think this is a reasonable suggestion. I know the suggestion has been made indirectly to the Department of Justice by the Supreme Court of Canada. What is wrong with it? Eigher it was not thought about or it was not accepted by the group. I suppose every minister becomes imprisoned by his own department because of the size of the job, but I am sure the minister would find the legal people in his department very helpful. Over the years they have been most helpful to Members of Parliament. We have had the finest men in the department of Justice. They are always ready to give answers to Members of Parliament. If a member asks about a rule of law they will take the trouble to refer him to an authority. They do an excellent job. I ask the minister to call them in.

These judges are overworked. When they are overworked the people of Canada are not served. The only way one can get into the great red chamber is by leave. I think there are certain cases where one should always be able to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. We know that decisions of certain provincial courts are reversed continually. I hear one of my friends nearby laughing. These courts should not always be reversed in this way. We should have the strongest possible courts of appeal in every province. Then I would be prepared to buy this suggestion. But the answer is to get rid of the problem now. We should establish two or three supernumerary judges to relieve the pressure.

On behalf of my clients I always want to be able to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. However, it is necessary to ask for leave. This is always another step to climb. I have been there. I know the rule of law which governs leave. You do not argue the whole case but just the very cream of it on a question of law. I hope we do not get into the bind where the minister will say a matter goes to that court by leave.

We object to the amendment on the ground that we do not want the judiciary to be subjected to political influence. This is what the amendment would do. I will not vote against this council. I have spoken to certain judges who think it might be an asset. I will look at it over a period of time. I may have to question the minister if it does not work out or if it in any way seems to be interfering with the judiciary, because that body must be independent.

I hope we can complete this legislation because last June it was introduced by the minister. It went before the committee, where there were two or three amendments, and then there was a very short debate. It is the government's business to set up priorities for legislation, and I shall not get into the question of whether it was the fault of the NDP or of the government that the bill did not come up again until now. But this party said to the minister by letter that we wanted the bill brought in because this institution should do something about the problem and only if the judiciary are paid a fair amount of money can we get the degree of independence and the kind of judgments that will assist the citizens of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the minister, but I notice the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) is also on his feet. It might be preferable if I were to recognize the hon. member for Moose Jaw first.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I happen to be one of those laymen to whom the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) referred when he wondered who qualified as a layman. I do not plan to wander all around the subject in respect of the amendment introduced by my colleague. I cannot understand how the hon. member for Calgary North can even consider the amendment introduced at this time having anything to do with the control of the judiciary.

The objects of the council are well spelled out in the bill. There is no question, in my humble opinion, that if we were to add five people to this Canadian judicial council we would get a cross-section of opinion that could be of great benefit to the council. I have seen too many cases where young people have been sentenced to indefinite terms. These young people have been in contact with social workers. This is the type of person, I am sure, to whom my colleague is referring when he talks about lay people being put on this council.

It amazes me to think that anyone would be concerned about having an outside opinion in respect of certain action taken by the council. There should be established from time to time a conference of chief justices and seminars for the continuing education of judges. Surely in today's structured society education should be a continuing process. If an individual or group of individuals within a structured society cannot continue their education in their field, the whole of society will suffer.

I see nothing wrong with the appointment of five laymen by the Minister of Justice. It seems to me that under this permissive type of legislation he would be able to pick out the very people who would know what structured society is all about, who would know the concerns of people of this nation and particularly our younger people to whom consideration must be given. To allow the Canadian judicial council to hold seminars in order to examine themselves, without any outside consultation, I do not believe is the way to fulfil the needs which the minister has in mind.

It seemed very strange to me to hear the hon. member for Calgary North express some doubt with regard to these appointments. He suggested that they may be political appointments. I know of very few law firms which do not have both Liberals and Conservatives on their staffs. This is done for obvious reasons. Situations exist throughout this country where appointments are made in various departments of government which require lawyers, as the hon. member well knows.

I think of the farm improvement loans administration and similar situations. Surely no one in this House would suggest that once a person is appointed to the bench he loses all interest in the politics of this country. If he did this he would cease to be a true Canadian. I think everyone, no matter what his walk of life is, must be concerned with politics. People need not wear it on their shoulders or wear a badge saying what their affiliation is, but deep down they are concerned about the political structure of our nation, otherwise we would not have a democracy as we know it.

It seems to me that even to suggest that a man should set himself apart from the democratic process because he has been appointed a judge is mere speculation. If we were to accept the amendment for the appointment of five laymen to the council we would have a situation where judges could sit down and examine the many areas of our social life. But I suggest that it is not the judges who should be led by exaggerated public opinion but, rather, public opinion should be lead by the judges. I have seen too many editorials appearing in newspapers before a case is dealt with by a court and where it is evident that the editorial has influenced the decision of the court.

I would suggest that if five laymen were to be appointed to the Canadian judicial council, the council would have some meaning. This would be preferable to the judges examining themselves, which would be the case under this bill. We all know that if people who have trust in each other could sit down together and examine the entire structure of Canadian society and the areas of concern to all of us, so that not only the judges would be rendering the decisions and examining that structure, the council would have more credibility among the youth of this nation.

I am concerned about the low credibility of the judicial system among the young people, in fact not only the young people but many of the older people. If there is one thing we in this House should do, it is build up the credibility of our judiciary and not to allow a situation to develop where it could be undermined. The appointment of social workers and such people to the council would be a clear indication that the judges themselves are prepared to allow outside people to be involved in day to day decisions affecting society.

I do not see any reason why the minister should not at least accept a small amendment that would provide for the appointment of laymen to the council. I would hate to think that there has been any type of pressure brought to bear which would prohibit this type of amendment, because I am a firm believer in industrial democracy and I think that people who are affected by the law or any change in conditions throughout the country should have a say in the matter. The people who would be appointed to the council could then express their opinions regarding changes which they believe are necessary. Under those conditions I see no reason why this type of amendment should not be accepted. In fact, this amendment would do much to bring about a saner approach to some of the problems with which we have been confronted.

I am firmly of the opinion that some check of the judiciary is necessary, and with this amendment such a check would be provided. We are all alike. We travel in certain circles, we accumulate friends in the same walk of life, and the same thing applies to judges and lawyers. People in factories move in the same circle and discuss the things that affect them only. All too often we do not accept the experience of people outside our circle which would benefit all of us collectively.

Being a layman, I sincerely hope that favourable consideration will be given to allowing five laymen to be appointed to this council, because I think it would be very strange if an amendment giving the minister discretionary power to appoint these people were not approved. The minister could consult the judiciary in looking for the best people in our country to serve in this capacity and to play a useful part in so far as the social needs of the country are concerned.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I want to deal first of all with the last part of the argument of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) relating to the Supreme Court of Canada. He has seen, as have other members of the House, statistics showing that the roll of the Supreme Court is heavily charged. As a matter of fact, some of the effects of the amendment which this House passed a year or so ago have not yet had time to take effect because the new law applies only to those cases that are instituted at their beginning, in the first instance, after the date on which the act received approval by Parliament.

I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. member that supernumerary judges of the Supreme Court of Canada would solve that problem. The difficulty is that the Supreme Court of Canada is not only a final court of appellate jurisdiction but is also a constitutional court. As a matter of fact, if further progress is made in the constitutional discussions between the federal government and the provinces, that court will be, under the constitution of Canada, not merely a federal body. Even as the legislation is set up at the moment, it calls for six judges from the common law provinces and three from civil jurisdiction in Quebec, recognizing two systems of law and recognizing the special position of the civil code system in Canada. That is a deliberate balance set by Parliament, and recognized by all the provinces and by the federal government, at Victoria.

Moreover, there is a convention to the effect that among the other six judges—I do not think this is necessarily a fixed convention; it might well change as population trends change—three are ordinarily chosen from Ontario, two from western Canada and one from the Atlantic provinces. As I said, I do not think that is a fixed convention. With the population moving to western Canada I can conceive of more judges coming from western Canada. But in any event, that regional, geographical balance, and also the balance of the two legal systems, is one that the appointment of supernumerary judges from time to time might well upset.

That was the issue that was foremost in my mind and, as the hon. member has suggested, I rejected it for that reason. I want to say that it might seem strange to him that I arrived at that conclusion on my very own. I appreciate his sympathy and that of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) in protecting me against the officers of the Department of Justice, but I have not come up with too many scars these last 3½ years.

Mr. Peters: Because you give in every time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think I can assure the hon. member and the House that the decisions represented in these bills that are brought forward for the scrutiny of Parliament are, in the final analysis, mine.

When I asked the Canadian Bar Association to strike an ad hoc committee on the Supreme Court the last time that act was before Parliament, they set up a committee under the chairmanship of Mr. J. J. Robinette, Q.C., of Toronto. It was that committee's recommendation that it was inevitable that some day the Supreme Court would have to have control of its roll, which would mean, as in the case of the United States, that the Supreme Court would be reached only by way of leave to appeal. The Committee reporting to me at that time said that they did not think the country or the bar was then ready for that step. I accepted that judgment. Certainly the debate in this House reflected that view. I very well recall the words of the hon. member for Calgary North at that time. But, Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my mind. This is something that Parliament will have to deal with and it is something to which I have been invited to direct my attention.

Returning to the specific issue raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming, the purpose of the Canadian judicial council is not to superimpose itself on the regular court procedures or decisions of the courts. There is a regular appeal procedure to the Supreme Court. The objects of the council are set forth in clause 31(2). They are:

—to promote efficiency and uniformity, and to improve the quality of judicial service, in the superior, district and county courts, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing

the establishing from time to time of a conference of chief justices—

That conference has been in effect for the last two or three years. In fact, the chief justices of all the provinces and of all trial superior courts will be meeting in Regina this coming Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, so the Canadian judicial council would merely be an umbrella over an existing practice. I continue reading the clause:

—the establishing from time to time of seminars for the continuing education of judges—

We now have a Canadian judicial conference that has been meeting every year for the past few years, funded by the federal Department of Justice with money supplied on the authority of Parliament. This seminar lasts ten days. It is going to be extended, so that I hope every judge of every high court will in effect go back to school at least once every five years and perhaps more frequently. I have also arranged that the judges of the Northwest Territories and of the Yukon alternate, because they need a more general association with the bench than their brethern in the south who are in daily association with other judges. There is nothing new in this. In that continuing education process we have set up a faculty. It consists of judges and laymen. In fact its first dean was Allan Leal, chairman of the Ontario Law Reform Commission.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Beware of law deans!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There are many people who contribute to those seminars, and I recognize the fact that some seminars should be conducted by people off the bench. The part of the clause to which I direct my attention is 31(2(c), which provides:

—subject to section 32—

Which is the section under which the Minister of Justice may set up an inquiry and have eventual recourse to both Houses of Parliament for the removal of a judge.

—the making of the inquiries and the investigating of any complaint or allegation described in that section.

I have been searching for some time for a way in which allegations and complaints against the bench can be dealt with in such a manner that one will not bring the bench unduly into ridicule and contempt and yet will not deprive the judiciary of that independence which under the British parliamentary system it is entitled to and which, I believe, has been one of the strongest points of the British, Canadian and Commonwealth judicial systems.

I discussed the terms of the bill, not as a bill but as terms of reference, with all the ten Attorneys General of the provinces in Halifax on July 13, 14 and 15, 1970, a year or so ago. They agreed with me that the best way of obtaining discipline within the judiciary, of ensuring that judges were pulling their weight, of analysing whether judges had become handicapped by age, infirmity or conflict of interest was to leave it with the judiciary, and that it was not up to the legislature to have daily supervision over the judiciary and it not was up to the executive and the Attorneys General to impose their will on the judiciary.

Because of the principles so eloquently expounded by the hon. member for Calgary North—the absolute independence of the judiciary free from any threat of public opinion or outside influence—I have to reject the amendment of the hon. member for Timiskaming. These terms of reference bear the approval of all ten provincial Attorneys General. They bear the approval of the conference of chief justices. They have also been discussed by the Canadian Bar Association. I want to say further that under clause 32(4) the Canadian judicial council has the power of a court of record. I felt that a court of record was something that should be limited to members of the bench.

Where is the ultimate control? If the commission, on referral of an allegation by the Minister of Justice, by a provincial Attorney General or by an ordinary citizen, feel that as a result of their inquiry a report should be made to the Minister of Justice, they do that. Then the matter is in the hands of the Attorney General of Canada, subject to his responsibility to Parliament. If the Canadian judicial council were to fail to act, if the situation were of such gravity that Parliament was concerned, then the power of inquiry under the Inquiries Act and the Judges Act would still be retained. The Attorney General still has the duty and the power to refer that matter to an inquiry conducted by a judge or members of the bar, and the ultimate responsibility in serious cases still remains with him for report to Parliament and to the people.

Primarily for the reason of the independence of a system whereby the judiciary is immune from pressure, either from public opinion, short-term public opinion—although I have argued that it should respond to the movement of society and I have spoken openly, even before the Supreme Court, of a creative judiciary responding to social direction—free from the pressures of Attorneys General, free from the pressures of a legislature, in fact free from every type of public pressure, I decided to achieve the type of discipline I wanted by entrusting it to the Canadian judicial council made up of the chief justices of the country, of course subject always to the overriding authority of Parliament.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, apropos the minister's final remarks about conducting inquiries under the Judges Act and the Inquiries Act, may I ask what action was taken with respect to Bernie Isman, a judge in Vancouver who was guilty of gross misconduct? What did his department do about that case?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I did not have jurisdiction. That is a provincial judge.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): But you knew about it, and you might know about it with federal judges too.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On division.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Peters) negatived.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-243, to amend the Judges Act and the Financial Administration Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to delay the final decision on this bill any longer, but before it is passed I should like to say once again that I think in matters of this kind we are working at the wrong end of the scale. Instead of widening the gap in the incomes of our people we should be narrowing it by being concerned about those at the bottom rather than by increasing the incomes of those at the top. Once again I wish to state my objection to the salary increases provided in this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is the understanding of the Chair that hon. members are now prepared to call it five o'clock. It being agreed that it is five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m.

At 4.44 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 27, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL—ISSUANCE OF REVISED NOTICE PAPER CONTAINING PROPOSED REPORT STAGE AMENDMENTS

Mr. Speaker: On Friday last the hon. member for Annapolis Valley filed, in the usual manner and before the prescribed hour, a notice of motion to amend Bill C-262, an act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect. Inadvertently, that notice of motion was omitted from today's order paper.

As hon. members will notice, a revised notice paper in regard to this bill has been prepared and placed on all desks. I wish to apologize to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. I can assure him it is my hope that the action that has now been taken will repair any difficulty which may have resulted from this inadvertent omission of his notice.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAFIK—STATEMENTS MADE BY MEMBER FOR YORK SOUTH

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Ontario rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 17 I rise on a question of privilege. Notice of this question was given to you last Friday morning to fulfil the conditions of Standing Order 17(2).

My question of privilege relates to statements made on Thursday in the House of Commons by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I realize, Mr. Speaker, that such a question must be raised at the first available opportunity. At the time these statements were made in the House I had left the chamber for a brief period to attend an important meeting in the government lobby to discuss possible lay-offs in the automobile industry, which is a matter of deep concern to myself and to the people I represent. Consequently it was impossible to raise my objection at that time. Last Friday the hon. member for York South was not present in the chamber, and as my question related to his statements I felt that the honourable thing to do was to ask for a deferment.

The hon. member for York South is reported in Hansard at page 8106 as having said:

—because it has those rows of men who are governed by their loyalty to a party and to the bagman of the party rather than any loyalty of conscience.

Such a statement is clearly unparliamentary, untrue and highly insulting, and as such should be withdrawn and an appropriate apology given.

A question of privilege was raised at the time by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). However, in his response the hon. member for York South said: "I was not talking in general about hon. members opposite supporting the government". But this implies, Mr. Speaker, that in this specific case he still meant what he said. I find this kind of explanation unacceptable.

Equally important is the fact that such intemperate outbursts degrade the House to a level which I think all of us would find far too low. Such a statement would be more understandable if it came from an inexperienced parliamentarian in the early part of his career as opposed to an inexperienced parliamentarian in the latter part of his career.

I cite May's 17th edition, page 448, which says in part:

A member, while speaking to a question, may not introduce matter which is irrelevant to that question . . . speak offensive and insulting words . . . make personal allusions to Members of Parliament—

His statements are irrelevant, offensive, insulting, certainly constitute personal allegations in respect of Members of Parliament, and on these counts alone I respectfully submit they should be withdrawn.

In Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, citation 134 further states that members are not permitted to impute to any member or members unworthy motives for their action in a particular case. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's statement clearly imputes motives of the highest possible kind in the lowest possible way to Members of Parliament which I feel, in justice, should not even be made in the streets, never mind in the House of Commons.

Further, in Bourinot's Fourth Edition at page 363 it is made clear that one cannot say or state that any member of the House of Commons is a servile servant of the government itself, a point which is implied in the statement of the hon. member for York South. As an individual Member of Parliament I am sure that all other members of this House consider our first obligation and primary loyalty is to our own consciences, and I believe we are entitled to an apology.

The second point I wish to raise, Mr. Speaker, stems from a statement in that same speech as recorded on page 8107 of Thursday's Hansard, in which the hon. member said:

They are guilty also of blackmail—

Later he repeated this allegation when he said:

—I say that that is clear blackmail which is unworthy of any government—

Statement by Member for York South

In Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, citation 136 cites a case which took place in the House on July 24, 1944, in which a member declared that a measure before the House was a bribe. The Speaker ruled this accusation to be unparliamentary and asked the hon. member to withdraw. When this was not done the member was suspended for the balance of the day's sitting. The hon. member's allegation of blackmail is equally as unparliamentary as the case cited in Beauchesne and as such should be withdrawn.

Citation 138 states that the House of Commons will insist upon all offensive words being withdrawn and upon an ample apology being made which shall satisfy both the House and the member to whom offence has been given.

I believe I have cited a prima facie case of privilege affecting members of this institution itself. I request through you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for York South withdraw his offensive remarks and make an appropriate apology. In the event the hon. member does not wish to do so and you rule that I do in fact have a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move a motion to send this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario did give notice last week of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege. This has given the Chair an opportunity to give the matter serious thought. The hon. member knows that the Chair does not take lightly a question of privilege. I have on numerous, perhaps even countless, occasions suggested to hon. members that it is not easy to establish a prima facie case of privilege. In fact, such a case has not been established for many, many years. I am inclined to reach the same conclusion in respect of the case brought to my attention by the hon. member for Ontario.

I think one of the most important aspects of privilege is that the matter should be raised at the first opportunity. The hon. member says he was outside the House when the words to which he takes exception were spoken. With respect, I suggest to him that is not a sufficient explanation. What he proposes now is that members who do not happen to be in the House at the time words are spoken could receive Hansard the next day and then take exception to the words by way of a question of privilege. If an hon. member happened to read Hansard three days later he could then say that was the first opportunity he had of bringing the matter before the House. I do not think that in this regard the explanation of the hon. member is quite satisfactory.

What is relevant and important in this case is that when the words to which the hon. member takes exception were spoken in the course of debate, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce took exception to them and rose by way of a question of privilege. I was in the Chair at the time and my impression was that the hon. member for York South explained what he had in mind when he made the statement. Whether his explanation was satisfactory to all hon. members and whether it was satisfactory so far as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce or the hon. member for Ontario are concerned is perhaps another matter. What I had to be satisfied about was whether improper motives had been imputed. The hon. member for York South explained what he had in mind and the way he had intended to apply the words he had spoken. I did not think he was addressing his remarks to any particular member individually.

If hon. members will consult the authorities they will note that words which are addressed to one member or two members individually which might be considered unparliamentary are not judged unparliamentary when addressed to a group of members or to a party. I cannot say that I consider there is a question of privilege or a prima facie case of privilege when a member accuses another party of blackmail. It seems to me I have heard that accusation levelled by one party against another very often toward the end of a session. We hear the suggestion that the government is introducing legislation and using blackmail to get its legislation adopted before the end of the session, and the opposition is accused of blackmail because they refuse to have the House recess until certain legislation is adopted. It seems to me that this kind of accusation is part of the political life of the House. I must say it has never scandalized me and does not at this time. I doubt that this is a question of privilege which ought to be considered by a committee of the House. On that basis I would suggest that the matter should not be pursued further.

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 and in relation to pressing and urgent circumstances which are so well known to the House as to be notorious, I would ask leave to put the following motion:

It is the opinion of this House that if the government does not forthwith comply with the law as set out in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and purge its contempt of Parliament and the people, it is not fit to govern or to have the confidence of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The motion of the hon. member requires the unanimous consent of the House. I shall now inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is some dissent and the motion cannot be put.

WHOLESALE HOMES LIMITED—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I should like to put a motion and ask for unanimous consent that it be accepted. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerns a particular company, Wholesale Homes Limited. This company, which has either had payments made to it by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or is in receipt of an offer to make payments, attempted to coerce its employees to work two particular days without pay and then issued each of them a notice under date of September 24 telling each employee that his employment with that particular firm would be terminated on Friday, October 1, 1971. I request, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), consent to move the following motion:

That the subject matter of payments of money and any offer of payment by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to Wholesale Homes Limited of Blind River, Ontario, the use to which such money was or may be put, and the employment practices of the said company be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know that this motion can be put only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DESIGNATION OF PLACENTIA, NFLD. AS SPECIAL AREA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns the desperate social and economic conditions prevailing in the Placentia area of Newfoundland where unemployment is now near 70 per cent.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The chief cause of the problem is the phasedown of the United States naval base at Argentia, also the government's obvious reluctance to deal effectively with the problems resulting therefrom. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House urge the government to take immediate steps to designate the Placentia area as a special area under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and that the government immediately undertake a crash program to alleviate the situation in that area.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair must inquire whether there is unanimous consent to the putting of the motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*ROBIN AUSTIN AND COMPANY LIMITED—DENIAL OF RIGHT TO OBTAIN SUGAR

Question No. 1,547—Mr. Southam:

Has the government received complaints from Robin Austin of Robin Austin and Company Limited of Montreal, Quebec, and from his attorney, John Fetherstonaugh to the effect that his firm has been denied the right since 1965 to obtain sugar and, if so (a) what action has the government taken to investigate the complaints (b) what remedial action has been taken (c) what is the basis of the denial?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The government has received a number of communications from Robin Austin and John Fetherstonhaugh, Q.C., concerning sugar. (a) An inquiry has been commenced pursuant to sections 7 and 8 of the Combines Investigation Act. (b) and (c) See answer to (a).

CANADA PENSION PLAN—PROCESSING OF MEDICAL CASES

Question No. 1,620—Mr. Fairweather:

1. How long does it take to process medical cases under the Canada Pension Plan?

2. Are district offices of the Department of National Health and Welfare advising applicants that cases may take up to six months to process?

3. Are procedures being studied with a view to decreasing waiting periods?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. It is difficult to give a precise answer since the processing time varies considerably, depending on the circumstances of each case. Every effort is made to obtain the essential information, including medical reports, as quickly as possible.

2. In cases where delay is anticipated, applicants are so advised.

3. Yes.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS AND RUNWAYS, COLD LAKE

Question No. 1,627—Mr. Rowland:

1. Is a new runway being constructed at CFB Cold Lake or are old runways being extended and, if so, what is the total cost of the project?

2. What has been the cost of (a) refurbishing (b) renting (c) constructing accommodation for the additional servicemen and their dependants appointed to CFB Cold Lake?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. No, however normal maintenance work is being done on existing runways and taxiways at an estimated cost of $495,000.

2. No additional accommodation has been provided for servicemen and their dependants.

Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PURCHASE OF HOMES AS A RESULT OF CLOSURE OF CFB, GIMLI.

Question No. 1,628—Mr. Rowland:

What is the total cost, actual and projected, to the government, of purchasing private dwellings and compensating for early termination of long-term rental agreements resulting from the closure of CFB Gimly?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): The purchase of 44 private dwellings at CFB Gimli was approved in the amount of $419,000. It is anticipated that the cost to the Crown will not exceed $200,000. Sale of the properties through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation also will reimburse the Crown in part for the purchases. A long term rental agreement will be assigned or terminated when negotiations with the owner have been completed.

POST OFFICE—PARRSBORO, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,634—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the present staff, permanent and part-time, at the Post Office at Parrsboro, Nova Scotia?

2. Will the staff be increased when the new Post Office is operative and, if so, by how many?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. (a) Permanent, 4; (b) part-time, 1.

2. No.

DEFENCE RESEARCH BOARD GRANTS TO PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,649—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What programs of the Defence Research Board provide grants, subsidies and other cash incentives to private industry?

2. What amount was provided to industry through each program in each of the past five years?

3. What amount, by program, has gone to each of the five major regions of Canada in the same years?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Defence Research Board provides contributions to private industry under the terms and conditions of the Defence Industrial Research Program.

2. 1966-67, $4,689,452; 1967-68, $4,483,705; 1968-69, $4,285,-618; 1969-70, $4,012,722; 1970-71, $4,479,251.

CANADA MANPOWER CENTRES—JOB PLACEMENTS

Question No. 1,670—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many job placements were made by the Canada Manpower Centres (excluding casuals) in 1966-67, 1967-68, 1968-69, 1969-70 and 1970-71, in each province and territory?

2. How many job placements were made by the former National Employment Service or its successor (excluding casuals) in 1964-65 and 1965-66, in each province and territory?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The attached table provides Department of Manpower and Immigration statistics on placements, excluding casuals, by province for the fiscal years 1970-1971, 1969-1970, 1968-1969, 1967-1968, 1966-1967 and National Employment Service statistics for the fiscal years 1965-1966 and 1964-1965. Placement data for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are listed for the years 1970-1971 and 1969-1970. For the fiscal years prior to 1969-1970, the Northwest Territories are consolidated with Alberta and the Yukon is consolidated with British Columbia.

PROPOSED AGRICULTURE ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 1,682—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Have any meetings been held by the Minister of Agriculture or his officials with groups interested in the proposed Agriculture Adjustment Program and, if so (a) how many were held (b) on what dates (c) at what locations (d) what were the names of the participating organizations?

2. In each case, were alternative programs proposed and, if so, does the government intend to bring in legislation to cover these proposals and, if so, by what date?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Two meetings took place between the Minister of Agriculture and the provincial ministers of agriculture, one on March 26, 1971, at Ottawa, and one on July 21, 1971, at Edmonton. The Minister of Agriculture met with the representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Famers' Union on April 21, 1971, in Ottawa. Officials met with representatives of the provincial departments of agriculture on April 14 and 15, in Ottawa, and with the provincial deputy ministers of agriculture on April 28 in Ottawa.

2. At meetings with members of the provincial departments of agriculture alternative methods for the administration of the program proposed by the federal Government were put forward, together with changes in the program details. Decisions concerning legislation will be announced in the usual manner.

NEWCASTLE DISEASE IN POULTRY FLOCKS

Question No. 1,700—Mr. McCutcheon:

Has Newcastle disease been discovered in poultry flocks in Southern Ontario and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what municipality (c) what remuneration has been paid to producers whose birds have been destroyed in clean-up attempts?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Newcastle disease has been diagnosed in eight poultry flocks in the Chatham area of Southern Ontario. (a) The first diagnosis was made on July 30, 1971, in a flock located in the Township of Orford, Kent County. (b) The initial outbreak spread to five additional premises in Orford township, Kent County; to one premises in Chatham township, Kent County, and to one premises in Mosa township, Middlesex County. (c) Compensation in the amount of $15,885.66 has been awarded to the owners of poultry flocks which had to be ordered destroyed as a disease eradication measure.

AGRICULTURE STABILIZATION ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 1,702—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Who are the members of the Agriculture Stabilization Advisory Committee?

2. How many times did the Committee meet in 1969, 1970 and 1971?

3. What were the topics for discussion at each of the meetings?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Mr. Kenneth Carr, Prince Edward Island; Mr. Frank E. Lutes, New Brunswick; Mr. Lionel Sorel, Quebec; Mr. R. Pigeon, Quebec; Mr. Gordon L. Hill, Ontario; Mr. Jack A. Ferguson, Ontario; Mr. J.A. McCallister, Manitoba; Mr. E.A. Boden, Saskatchewan; Mr. L.R. Stephens, British Columbia; Mr. D.J. McKinnon, Alberta.

2. 1968-69, two meetings; 1969-70, two meetings; 1970-71, two meetings.

3. 1968-69: Eggs, poultry, potatoes, oilseeds, corn, dairy and hogs. 1969-70: Dairy, eggs, oilseeds, sugar beets, and marketing legislation. 1970-71: Dairy, eggs, poultry, hogs, wool, apples, potatoes, sugar beets and grains.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

POSSIBLE MODIFICATION OF UNITED STATES-CANADA AUTO PACT AND CONDITION FOR WITHDRAWAL OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the reported remarks of the United States Secretary of the Treasury expressing his anticipation that some of the tariff restrictions and restraints built into the U.S.-Canada auto pact agreement will be modified. Has the government of Canada received any indication from the U.S. administration that modification of some of these restrictions and restraints is part of the goal of the U.S. administration before withdrawal of the U.S. import surcharge of 10 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that a condition was attached to the representations, but it is my understanding that at some of the meetings which were held in Washington earlier with our ministers and officials the Americans did raise the question of the auto pact and claimed that it was working too favourably for the Canadian side.

Mr. Stanfield: At that time I think it is correct that our Minister of Finance indicated that this was not a condition and the U.S. authorities were not at that time attaching much importance to this. In view of this most recent statement to the press by the Secretary of the Treasury Connally, is the Prime Minister prepared to say that this is no longer a precondition which the Americans attach to the removal of the 10 per cent surtax?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the Leader of the Opposition says it is no longer a precondition.

Mr. Stanfield: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition did say that, with respect, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that it was never a precondition and that the Americans never indicated that if we modified the auto pact in some way they would take off the surcharge.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether his government is suggesting any modification of the restraints now contained in the Canada-U.S. auto trade pact or whether, on the other hand, it is the policy of the government to insist on the retention of such restraints and safeguards?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe it has been said repeatedly in the House by the Minister of Finance and by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the matter was under negotiation, that the auto pact itself was being brought up by the Americans as a subject for discussion, and that we indicated we would gladly sit down and discuss the subject with them.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports that it was the Canadian government which initiated discussion of the possible abandonment of the auto pact safeguards as a quid pro quo or as one concession in order to get exemption from the American surcharge legislation, could the Prime Minister inform the House if in fact this was the case? Was this a proposal put forward by the Canadian government?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, there was never any question of a quid pro quo on this subject, and I do not know from where the hon. member is inventing that.

POSSIBLE MODIFICATION OF UNITED STATES-CANADA AUTO PACT—REQUEST BY UNITED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS FOR MEETING WITH CABINET

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I want to ask the Prime Minister another question. It is my understanding that the Canadian director of the United Automobile Workers has already sent a telegram, or will be shortly, requesting an early meeting with senior cabinet officials on this issue. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that such a meeting will take place when and if it is requested?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course I cannot give an assurance without conferring with the minister, but if it is a reasonable request for a reasonable meeting I am sure he would want to meet it. This government, since it brought in the auto pact, has always been saying that it was one of the very good achievements of the Liberal government. I am very happy to see now that the parties which did not applaud the pact at the time of its introduction are very enthusiastic in saying that we should preserve it.

UNITED STATES ECONOMIC MEASURES—POLICY TO PROTECT CANADA AGAINST BEING ABLE TO EXPORT ONLY NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In light of increasing American action generally discriminating against the Canadian manufacturing industry and the fear indicated by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister last week that we will be placed in a position of being able to export only our natural resources, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he and his cabinet officials are presently developing an over-all, integrated resource and manufacturing export policy to protect us against being placed in a position of only being able to export our natural resources and not our manufactured products?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear to the House in the very first days of this part of the session that the government was in fact looking at contingency measures to be brought in and announced if ever we felt this was necessary, but that at this stage of the game we were mainly making sure that the Americans understood what effect their policies had on Canada, what choices they were putting in front of us, and that we were making representations to them in every way. In fact, even within the last two hours I met with the NATO delegates from the United States, as other members and ministers have previously, to impress upon them the situation as it has developed as a result of the Nixon measures.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether he feels that the administration in the United States either understands or cares about the jeopardy of Canadian manufacturing interests at the present time?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can answer without hesitation, as a result of the discussions I had with several United States senators and representatives a few hours ago, that their understanding had improved considerably as a result of representations made by this side of the House to them during the past few days.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South. Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for York South but the hon. member for Egmont is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for answering a question which I did not ask. I should like him to answer now the question I did ask with regard to the American administration, which is not the same thing as these representatives who are here at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order. The hon. member claims that the Prime Minister did not answer his question. That is not a point of order. I will return to the hon. member and to others who want to ask supplementaries on this subject in a moment.

PROPOSED MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS TO DISCUSS WINTER WORKS PROGRAMS—REPLY TO TELEGRAM FROM PREMIER SCHREYER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the House whether he has seen a wire sent to him by the Premier of Manitoba urging an early meeting of first ministers—I think the dates suggested are between October 22 and October 28—for the purpose of discussing possible programs to deal with the unacceptable levels of unemployment expected this winter? If so, could the Prime Minister tell us what reply he made to the wire?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member to tell me if he is referring to a wire or a letter, because I did receive a letter? Could I ask the hon. member to clarify that?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may answer, the Prime Minister received a letter and was also sent a telegram on the 24th from the Premier of Manitoba. Perhaps his staff has not yet drawn it to his attention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I inform the House and the hon. gentleman opposite that the Premier of Manitoba held a press conference on Friday at which he released the text of both the letter and the telegram. Both the letter and the telegram ought to be within the knowledge of the Prime Minister now.

An hon. Member: If he sent it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the wire but if the member is right in saying that the Premier released the text of a wire and the letter, certainly I have received a letter dated September 22—27—

Mr. Lewis: The 17th.

An hon. Member: David wrote it; he should know.

Mr. Trudeau: I apologize, the hon. member is quite right; the letter is dated September 17, Mr. Speaker. I regret to say that it contains several outrageous statements and I intend to answer the Premier of Manitoba frankly about some of the issues that he brought up which seem to me to indicate a lack of candidness in his approach to this whole problem.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Premier Schreyer can defend himself against this quite unwarranted suggestion of the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is now ready to call a special emergency conference of first ministers and other ministers, if necessary, before the end of the month of October to discuss possible programs to deal with the unemployment problem this winter, which is likely to be more severe than it is now?

Mr. Trudeau: Although I have replied to this before, I think it might be well to set the facts before the House once again, Mr. Speaker. Late in July I wrote to all premiers following the Victoria conference suggesting an early meeting of the federal and provincial first ministers. I suggested two dates in, early or late October, and they were not acceptable to the premiers. I then suggested two dates in November and they were not acceptable to Premier Schreyer—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: —because he was off on some trip to Europe, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: He is training to be prime minister.

Mr. Trudeau: So in consultation with Mr. Schreyer's office the earliest date we were able to settle was at the beginning of December.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Lewis: Hon. members are of course aware that Premier Schreyer is not the only person in power who has made trips across the world, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if we might return now to the hon. member's supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister this supplementary question: is he considering presenting either to Parliament or to the provincial governments as well as Parliament an emergency program of job-creating works across the country this winter and, if so, then may we expect the announcement of such a program?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if it is done it will not be to secure political advantage as the leader of the New Democratic Party in this House and the leader of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba are trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not wear the mantle on a point of order of saying that what we do in this House has nothing to do with the political situation in the country—

An hon. Member: Not much.

Mr. Lewis: —but I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that there is no one in this House more adept at political hypocrisy than he is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously we are not progressing very effectively. I suggest to hon. members that the last few exchanges have not helped the situation at all. We have a number of supplementaries which perhaps are more legitimate. I will recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether in his letters to the first ministers in July he indicated that he wished to discuss with them programs to attack winter unemployment and whether it is his view that a letter written in July inviting the provincial premiers to a meeting in October indicates any urgent view on his part about winter unemployment in this country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I had no knowledge in Victoria that the provincial governments wanted to consider unemployment to be written as a matter under provincial jurisdiction—that they wanted it to be in the constitution that unemployment was provincial. When I suggested at Victoria that we have an early meeting in the fall to discuss matters of the economy, taxation, unemployment and all the rest I said I would be writing to them in the following month, which I did, to suggest an early meeting in the fall. Therefore I carried out the request of the conference. That is not to say that the federal government has not been considering all aspects of unemployment and ways in which it could be remedied. I am not suggesting that nothing can be done or should be done until the provinces sit down here and meet with us.

PROPOSED MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS TO DISCUSS WINTER WORKS PROGRAMS—REPRESENTATION FOR MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In view of the fact that the government has laid great stress on the importance of tri-level conferences, particularly in future decisions affecting cities, has it been the intention of the Prime Minister or has he requested that the provinces request the presence of representatives from the cities at this meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of representation of the cities was brought up at a conference in Winnipeg which was convened by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. We still have not reached a final set of arrangements with the provinces on the participation of municipalities at federal-provincial conferences. We have, however, certainly taken initiatives which may some day bring a solution to this problem. Once again, this is in the hands of the provinces under whose jurisdiction municipal law lies.

UNEMPLOYMENT—DISCUSSION WITH PREMIERS OF TOLERABLE WINTER LEVEL IN CONNECTION WITH PROPOSED CONFERENCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if the government has agreed on an objective of what it considers to be a tolerable level of unemployment for the winter? Can the Prime Minister tell the House if this objective of tolerable unemployment has been discussed with the premiers in connection with the federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. It is our object to bring unemployment to as low a level as possible but in my letter and communication with the premiers there was no percentage suggested, if that is what the hon. member is inquiring about.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since Quebec Provincial Police officers decided, last night, to carry on with their study session, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, on the one hand, the Quebec Attorney General has contacted him to seek the services of the Armed Forces, if required, and, on the other hand, whether Quebec may count on such services, should the Quebec Attorney General request them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my reply to the second part of the question can really not go beyond what is stipulated in the act itself, i.e. that if the Attorney General of the province requests the services of the Army as provided for by the act, the federal government has no alternative but to supply the services of the Army and also to send an invoice.

As for assistance at the level of the federal police force, I know federal services would be willing to assist, as much as possible, in the maintaining of order in the province of Quebec. However, we have absolutely no intention to interfere in matters of strike settlement between the provincial authorities and an organization of workers coming under their jurisdiction.

Mr. La Salle: May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? I would ask the Prime Minister whether the federal government has decided nevertheless to send trops to Quebec in case of needs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understood that I was asked if we had decided to send troops. I answered that if the provincial Attorney General formally asked for the despatch of troops, we would have no other choice and the troops would be used, as requested by the provincial Attorney General.

FINANCE

CANADIAN INITIATIVES TO ACHIEVE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY REFORM

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance in Washington, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Is the government of Canada presenting any specific Canadian proposals to achieve international monetary reform as a way to get rid of the United States surcharge? If so, may we expect a statement from the government in the House before the return of the Minister of Finance, or just what will be the position? I am sure the House would like to know whether there are any Canadian initiatives. This question follows on the question I asked last week.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are participating in all the meetings of the Group of Ten, of the IMF and of the Commonwealth finance ministers and, of course we are using what knowledge we have of the monetary system and suggesting ways in which it might be improved. However, I would not want the House or the hon. member to believe that we have in our briefs some sure cure replacement for the gold standard or the dollar standard or that we have thought up some new scheme which would be acceptable for the world.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance in an interview discussed wider fixed margins or a moving average. Are these part of the proposals that Canada is making or is there some other formula that Canada might put forward for discussion?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, these proposals have been looked at by Canada and by other countries. I am not sure who made the suggestion in the first place, whether it came from Canada or some other country. But it is certain that this and all manner of other proposals are being looked at by the participating countries.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell us whether the Canadian government has received an official indication that the International Monetary Fund is seeking a change in the valuation of international currencies which would result in Canada's dollar being pegged at about $1.03 U.S.? If that is the case, what is the government's view with regard to this general reorganization?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there has been no official submission made to the Canadian government, in the terms of the question, to up-value the Canadian dollar to $1.03 U.S. or $1.05 U.S., or whatever it is.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO MAKING OF PAYMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board has invoiced the Minister of Finance for amounts due under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act since August 1, 1970, and since there has been considerable debate about the failure of the minister to make these payments, have the payments for the 1970-71 or current crop year now been made to the Canadian Wheat Board from the consolidated revenue fund?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this time reopen the debate of last Thursday, but an explanation was given for that by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Baldwin: It was highly unsatisfactory.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I was not asking for an explanation. I simply want to ask the Prime Minister again if there has been any change in policy or whether these payments have now been made to the Canadian Wheat Board in light of the debates which have taken place?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, those payments have not been made but, as indicated in the House by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, they will be in some short length of time if the bill before the House is not passed, and the farmers will be receiving only $60 million instead of $100 million.

Mr. Baldwin: That's blackmail.

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—OBJECTIONS BY WESTERN PREMIERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think the amount is $90 million. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether there have been any objections from the western premiers or members of the government in reference to the alleged disobeying of the law and failure of this government to pay to the Canadian Wheat Board the money in question that is owing for storage?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Minister of Agriculture that he knows of no such representations and I must say that, for my part, I have no knowledge of such representations.

SUSPENSION OF CONSIDERATION OF STABILIZATION BILL PENDING MEETING WITH PRAIRIE MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government House leader. In view of the meeting held last week by the three prairie Ministers of Agriculture, is the minister contemplating withholding further consideration of Bill C-244 until after the three ministers have met with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board this Friday in order to discuss what they have referred to as a most contentious bill?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have made no decision, nor was I aware of the projected meeting on Friday with these ministers. The bill will be brought forward as soon as we can get it forward conveniently for hon. members.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the government House leader has conveyed to the Prime Minister the objections raised by the hon. member for Vegreville and the Ministers of Agriculture of the Prairie provinces not only to the bill but to the fact that the law has been disobeyed in that these moneys have not been paid?

An hon. Member: Whisper it in his ear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't send him a telegram.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

MONTMAGNY, QUE.—DESIGNATION AS SPECIAL AREA

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Will new areas in Quebec be designated as special areas within a few months? If so, will the town of Montmagny and its suburbs be included among those new special areas?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we all know that the present special areas will remain designated till June 1972. We are now negotiating with the province and it is really too soon for me to indicate to the House what areas will be designated.

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF GRANT TO WHOLESALE HOMES LIMITED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the dismissal notices given to the entire work force at the plant of Wholesale Homes Limited in Blind River, Ontario, a concern which has been approved for a regional development grant of some $50,000, can the minister say if any part of this money has been paid to that company yet?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, no, no money has been paid at all. If the facts are as reported to me, I am sure that no money is going to be paid under these circumstances. I hope the Leader of the Opposition is going to help me, because this involves a former Conservative candidate. Maybe we can straighten out the situation a little bit.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister knows very well that he can seek my co-operation on any matter involving the interests of the country.

TRADE

UNITED STATES ECONOMIC MEASURES—SUGGESTED DIRECT TALKS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to some that were asked earlier of the Prime Minister. Since the right hon. gentleman seems to have had some success in conveying the impact on Canada of the United States import surcharge to some congressman and senators now in Canada, does he not think that the same eloquence and/or logic he displayed to those gentlemen in Canada could also be displayed to the man who is responsible for this action, the President of the United States, by seeking direct talks with that gentleman and helping to educate him?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I want to make it quite clear that I did not intend to convey to the House that it was as a result of my representations that congressmen had indicated great understanding of the Canadian position. It is a a result of statements made by the hon. member for Calgary South and various other members of the Liberal party when they met them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: With all respect to these gentlemen, could the Prime Minister supplement their logic and eloquence by direct representations to the President so that the President could be educated as to the serious impact that the surcharge and especially the DISC program are going to have on manufacturing and on the agricultural industry in Canada? Or will he wait until next spring when they come to look at the tulips in Ottawa?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Egmont has a supplementary.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I would defer to my hon. friend to allow the Prime Minister to answer.

Mr. Trudeau: I was only about to thank all opposition parties for the great confidence they are showing in me in this regard. I want to thank them for this vote of confidence they are extending to me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We shall be running short of time very soon. I shall recognize the hon. member for Egmont because I told him a moment ago I would do so, but perhaps we should go on to the next subject thereafter.

UNITED STATES ECONOMIC MEASURES—APPRECIATION OF CANADIAN POSITION BY WASHINGTON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN POLICIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps I can ask a question which I put earlier to the Prime Minister. Does he now feel that the administration in Washington either understands or cares about the extent of the impact the present trend of their economic policy is having on Canada? Can he also give us any clear indication, if there is no evidence yet that they have understood our situation, as to when he may be announcing specific policies and programs directed to meet this ominous economic threat?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can only tell the House that if such policies were to be announced they would be very important and they would be announced in the normal way before the House of Commons.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A final supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for a final supplementary on this subject, but we do have to give other hon. members an opportunity to ask questions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We understand that policies will be announced in the usual way, but in view of the importance of the matter, to which the Prime Minister himself drew attention last Thursday evening, can the right hon. gentleman not give the House any indication, it being almost a month and a half since these policies were initiated by the United States, that we have any idea whether or not the President, the Secretary of the Treasury and others realize the gravity of the steps which are being taken as they affect the Canadian economy?

Mr. Trudeau: As the House knows, ministers of the federal government have been meeting with ministers of the United States administration and representations have been made to them both here in Ottawa when Mr. Stans came and at the international meetings when Secretary Connally was in discussion with my colleague, the Minister of Finance. I do not think that I, or any member of my administration, can pry into the minds of these people to see whether they have a complete understanding of the points we have made to them, but I repeat that in the meetings I had a couple of hours ago it seemed to me that responsible and important United States congressmen did understand our point of view. I would hope that members of their administration are no less intelligent and enlightened than the representatives to whom I have been talking.

FARM MACHINERY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF BARBER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. As it is several months since the publication of the final report of the Barber Commission on farm machinery, is the minister now prepared to make a statement on whatever plans the government may have with regard to the implementation of those recommendations?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot give a specific date on which we would be making any further statement, but I have made a number of statements in the House respecting this matter in the past.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROTEST TO SOVIET UNION RESPECTING UNDERGROUND NUCLEAR EXPLOSION

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to make a protest to the government of the Soviet Union concerning the massive underground nuclear explosion which apparently took place early this morning?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have been making a number of statements recently relevant to this issue and I intend to reinforce them this week by calling for a complete ban by all countries on all kinds of testing, including the kind of underground test which has been carried out by the Soviet Union. I say this quite deliberately, because it would be a very great pity if the United States were to justify their underground test because the Soviet Union happened to have carried out this one.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs misunderstood my question. Is it the intention of the government to make a specific protest to the Soviet Union concerning this morning's explosion, or will it be done in the more general context of the minister's address to the General Assembly?

Mr. Sharp: No, it would not be my intention to make any formal protest to the Soviet Union any more than to the People's Republic of China or to France, all of which have been causing nuclear explosions. The reason we made special representations to the United States was the additional problem created by the fact that such a test as was proposed could have a direct effect on people living on the Pacific coast in both Canada and the United States. Indeed, such a nuclear explosion is to be condemned on two counts: First, it is a continuation of the testing and, second, because it happens to be in an area of difficult terrain where there might be untoward effects.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO ENSURE PUBLIC ACCESS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. In light of the very strong recommendation in the report of the Economic Council of Canada that the government should proceed as quickly as possible to clarify the rights of the public to access to public information without bureaucratic or political strings, is the government planning to bring in a bill to this effect? If not, will the government give consideration to an order that the subject matter of Bill C-250 be referred to a committee? I have to ask these questions, Mr. Speaker, in light of the difficulty we have in getting information in and out of the House.

POSSIBLE PIPELINE THROUGH CANADA TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL—CONSULATION BY U.S. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. FISHERIES

PRESERVATION OF CONTINENTAL SHELF RESOURCES—CANADIAN ACTION AT UNITED NATIONS AND AT HOME

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the serious decline in the quantities of many of our deep-sea species of fish because of overfishing by foreign nationals in our waters, is it the intention of the minister to take any action at the United Nations which would lead to the early establishment of a deepsea international control commission designed to preserve our fisheries resources on Canada's continental shelf?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canada will be pressing very hard for the convening of a Law of the Sea Conference and certainly a proposal such as the hon. member has put forward, or one to the same effect, would receive strong support from Canada.

Mr. Crouse: Since Iceland is contemplating an extension of fisheries controls over the entire length of her continental shelf by 1972, is the Canadian government giving consideration to taking similar action with respect to our own continental shelf?

Mr. Sharp: We do feel there are several kinds of questions involved here. As the hon. member knows, we have declared certain exclusive fishing zones, for example, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and in similar areas off the Pacific coast. We have extended our territorial sea to 12 miles and we are seeking some special régime with respect to the continental shelf where we believe there are very special responsibilities in the adjacent states.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the government plan any immediate steps this session to introduce into Parliament legislation which will reflect the unanimous report of the fisheries and forestry committee a couple of years ago to the effect that we extend our fishing zones to include the continental shelf and slope?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this question will be considered. I do not think there is any prospect of any such legislation being introduced this session.

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH FRANCE RESPECTING WATERS OFF SOUTH COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether during his discussions with the French Foreign Minister any substantive agreement was reached with respect to Canada's territorial seas and fishing zones off the south coast of Newfoundland, bearing in mind French jurisdiction in and over the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon and adjacent waters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to report that we are making very rapid and I think satisfactory progress on a treaty with the French government which will cover a number of these matters.

CURTAILMENT OF GRANTS TO INDUSTRIES DUPLICATING PLANTS IN WHICH LAY-OFFS ARE OCCURRING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the many reported lay-offs and production cuts being made in a number of provinces, is the minister considering any plans to curtail federal subsidies to private firms that desire to establish new production facilities elsewhere in the country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Is the hon. gentleman asking me not to give these grants, so that there will be more persons laid off than there are now?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, what I am asking the minister is whether he is giving consideration to stopping grants for facilities which duplicate facilities where lay-offs are taking place in various parts of the country at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, every time we award a grant, we are most careful not to enter into competition with an established firm or plant. There might be marginal cases and mistakes can be made, but the general policy rightly tends to avoid what the hon. member has just mentioned.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. As a result of indications of an unusually low domestic price for our Canadian corn crop now being harvested and representations made to the minister by that industry, would the minister indicate whether the government has formulated a policy to bolster the price and, if so, what might that policy be?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, we do not have a detailed announcement to make.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF RESIDENCE RULE GOVERNING RECEIPT OF ALLOWANCES OVERSEAS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would the minister advise what action he has taken as a result of a resolution from the Canadian Veterans Association of the United Kingdom asking him to review the 12 months' residence clause which denies many Canadian veterans residing in the United Kingdom the right to draw war veterans allowance?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the War Veterans Allowance Act was amended in 1960 to provide for the requirement of at least one year's residence in Canada for those who want to draw benefits overseas. The reason for that was that these allowances are, of course, based on financial need and are very difficult to administer outside the country and this applies to the United Kingdom, France and all other countries in the world where our veterans are residing. This requirement does not apply, of course, to disability pensions which are based on actual disability and follow veterans everywhere they go.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period expired a few minutes ago. I tried to prolong it by a few minutes to give hon. members on the back benches a chance to ask their questions. I have noted those who were not called today and I will try to give them a chance tomorrow.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege of very urgent importance which cannot wait until tomorrow. It involves a straightforward, simple question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether in view of the very critical unemployment crisis facing this nation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member appreciates that this is not a question of privilege. Essentially, he is asking that we prolong the question period to give him the opportunity to ask a question. Perhaps he might ask it tomorrow. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

MEASURE TO MITIGATE EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY OF IMPOSITION OF FOREIGN IMPORT SURTAXES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will have noticed on the revised notice paper that there are four motions to amend Bill C-262, an act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect. I have to advise hon. members that I have qualms about the procedural correctness of two of these motions. Motion No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), appears, at least at first blush, to be defective in that it purports to introduce into the bill a substantive proposal to a section of the interpretation clause. While I do not wish to rule at the present time on the procedural admissibility of this motion, I would, of course, be pleased to hear argument on the point which would allow the Chair to express an opinion and to make a ruling.

Motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), also appears at first blush to be defective in that it seeks to introduce as an amendment to clause 11 of the bill a provision in relation to an income support grant to farmers and fishermen. It might well be that such a provision is beyond the scope of the bill. This is the impression I have from looking at this proposed amendment. This is why I bring the matter to the attention of hon. members, in the hope that they might be able to enlighten the Chair in this respect.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, since you have raised some objections to motion No. 1 standing in my name, I should like to address myself to it without the benefit of Beauchesne or May but with the benefit of what I suggest is basic common sense, though frankly I would think that that would be the guide in any interpretation, along with the discretion that Your Honour always exercises with such generosity.

Bill C-262 unabashedly does something about employment in Canada and is presented to the House because of the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes. I would point out to Your Honour—and this might be part of Your Honour's difficulty—that the word "industry" per se is not defined in the interpretation clause of the bill. What my amendment seeks to do is to extend the meaning of the word "manufacturer" to include with certainty the products of agriculture, fishing and I think forestry within the scope of the bill, thus making the producers of these goods eligible for application to the board.

This amendment does not establish any new principle of income support or anything like that; it merely enlarges the definition of "manufacturer". I submit to Your Honour that if the word "industry" had been defined in the bill with clarity, there might be more of a problem here. But even the use of the word "manufacturer" in the bill I suggest leaves much to be desired in terms of clarity and finality. Clause 2 defines it as an "activity in Canada whereby any goods, products, commodities or wares are made, fabricated or refined out of raw material or other substance".

Perhaps it would not be reasonable to use the word "liberal" in respect of interpretation when looking at this measure, because it contains a strict interpretation as well as a liberal interpretation. Even the word "manufacturer" leaves many things up in the air. Does an agricultural product come within the scope of this bill or does it not? There is so much vagueness in the bill that, during the first or second night of debate, the minister had to say that agricultural products such as those which are processed could come within the measure if administratively they could be computed and assessed. He said that in respect of other goods there might be a more difficult administrative impact, for example in respect of raw materials, and the Farm Stabilization Act would have to apply.

In view of the fact the wording of the act does not define "industry" but defines the word "manufacturer" in loose and expansive language to include a wider range of products, I submit all my amendment does is remove the uncertainty and spell out with clarity the products to be included. The measure as it is now could apply to primary products if they come within the guidelines established by the act or the terms set out by the board. It will be up to the board to make a determination as to whether assistance should be given in respect of those products.

In looking at the measure we find three key words, industry, employment and surtax. There is certainly a disruptive effect on agricultural products and fish products as a result of the surtax. Everyone will admit this, yet there is nothing being done at the moment in a statutory way to cover these items. The minister admits this bill covers such products of agriculture as are being processed. As I remember what the minister said, there was a suggestion that because of a certainty in the administration, these items would fall within the scope of the bill. I submit there is no new principle involved.

If processed agricultural products come within this bill, why should the bill not also include basic products subject to surtax? We are not debating a bill through which this government is trying to create employment in certain industries. The prime purpose of this bill before the House is to offset the surtax imposed by the United States by assisting certain industries. That is the essential purpose of this bill. That is the guideline and the basic reason for its existence.

Because the word "industry" is not defined and the word "manufacturer" is left wide open, I submit my amendment would in fact define "manufacturer" with certainty. It would extend the scope of the word without running afoul of any rules outlined in Beauchesne's or May's Parliamentary Rules. This would result by extending the provisions of this bill to cover something which perhaps might not be covered through a liberal interpretation.

Let me submit in conclusion that what my amendment will accomplish is covered at this time by the interpretation placed on the measure by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). He refers to processed agricultural products as being covered. Are frozen blueberries processed and are they covered? They are certainly subject to the surtax. Could apples be considered as being covered? There might be some question in respect of apples in the raw form, but are processed apples covered? How can we ascertain what is a high burden agricultural product? All my amendment does is remove the uncertainty of interpretation in this bill by including the words, primary products of agriculture, fishing and, I suppose, the forest industry.

Because this amendment does not run afoul of the rules, and there is no rule to restrict it, I submit there will be no tampering with the $80 million. I could discuss the fact that the bill is discriminatory as between one industry to be covered and another which is given no protection, but that would be touching upon the subject matter or the principle. At this stage all I am attempting to do is remove that vagueness in respect of the word "manufacturer". This vagueness causes a great deal of consternation not only to the Chair but as well to businessmen, farmers and fishermen across the country. It depends on what type of fishing or farming they do whether they come within this bill. If they happen to be fishermen or farmers who do not process these goods they may be left out in the cold. I am attempting to remove that uncertainty by extending the definition of "agricultural products" and leaving it to the board to define rules and procedures and to develop criteria by which an industry shall qualify. This is being left to the board for final determination.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the main contention of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I feel that matters he placed before you have been of some assistance. Perhaps I should disagree with my colleague in only one small way. In providing us with this definition he has not really extended the scope of the bill, but has in fact clarified and restricted it. It would be very difficult for Your Honour to say immediately in respect of this bill that any number of amendments could in any way go beyond the scope of its intent. There is a great deal left undefined. Indeed, it is a piece of legislation that could well be regarded as a blank cheque for the minister and his officials to do with as they please, in spite of what the minister and others have said to the contrary. This bill is very open-ended legislation similar to legislation we have been getting more often over the years. In some ways this has restricted the legislative function of Parliament because it has meant in most cases that the real legislative provisions are included in government regulations rather than in any bills considered in this chamber.

The hon. member has pointed out to Your Honour one of the difficulties by suggesting there is no definition of the word "industry". We find in clause 3 that the purpose of this act is to provide a means to support levels of employment when other countries impose certain things. Considering that as the core of this bill, if you like, and this is the government's enunciation of its purpose, many difficulties have been created for Your Honour and other members of this House in attempting to determine the impact and the effect of this legislation. For various reasons the government has not made clear, we are provided with very open-ended legislation in which the key word "industry" has not been defined. It does not appear in the table of interpretation. When we look to the key paragraphs which give us assistance we become further confused as to the exact nature and intent of the bill. The measure suggests that:

> "manufacturer" means a person, firm or corporation operating an activity in Canada whereby any goods, products, commodities or wares—

In those terms I am sure we would have to include almost every commercial enterprise in which there is an exchange of some article. That would not only include what the hon. member had in mind, but many more things as well. It is in the last three lines of that clause, (a) that we are supposed to find a delineation regarding the exact nature and purpose. It reads:

are made, fabricated or refined out of raw material or other substance or combination thereof.

I suggest it would take the wisdom of many Speakers and Solomon combined to give us a clear definition of what is intended by the words "are made, fabricated or refined out of raw material". In this day and age when we know so much about processing, growth change, transformation and manufacturing, how can you possibly think that this paragraph in any way limits the scope of this bill and, therefore, the agency to be set up to do whatever it pleases under this bill? It does not quite obviously because whether we have in mind a potato growing in the ground, an apple growing on the tree, a fish swimming in the sea or the process that is involved in respect of growing Irish moss, the process of growth in respect of agriculture, fisheries and forestry, as well as the active part of man's intervention in terms of technological circumstances, cannot be subdivided unless they are clearly indicated. I would say they are far from being clearly indicated under the scope of this legislation. I would adopt the words used by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley in introducing his amendment when he said he was indeed attempting to clarify with certainty. I would say to that extent that in this amendment the hon. member is attempting to help the Chair and assist the House in providing the House with a piece of legislation which may be adequate in respect of the problem presently before us.

At this point I believe I might emphasize the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and others have been very reluctant to speak about the resources of the industries of farming and fishing. I use that word because it is the word that is used in respect of these industries. We are faced with a government which seems to be seeing one side of the problem. The hon. member is trying to give us an amendment which would give us in context the totality of the problem. In view of the complete uncertainty in respect of this legislation, I think members should at least be allowed to make a determination by way of a vote on whether or not this is an acceptable and improved amendment. It is not an amendment which in any way tries to increase the scope of the bill but rather an amendment which tries to clarify and indicate with certainty what this legislation attempts to do. If members are given an opportunity to vote in the normal manner they will be able to say clearly in this House what kind of legislation they want at this point in time when we are faced with the tremendous impact of the United States surtax which will disadvantage many segments of Canadian industry.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support those who seek to have this amendment accepted as part of the bill and as a part of the discussion we are about to undertake. I believe it is proper to define, within this bill and within this amendment, the things we are going to do and hope to do through this measure. If an amendment such as this, which defines the actual products produced as well as those processed were not considered then I believe there would be very considerable difficulty in administering this legislation. In an attempt to define what is processed and what is not processed in this area, we find that there are some pretty fine distinctions and some pretty fine decisions which are involved.

The other thing which I believe is important is that unless some amendment of this nature is added to this bill, we are left without any clear direction in this legislation with regard to a very wide range of agricultural products. I know neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the minister in charge of the Wheat Board are in the House at the present time, so I expect we cannot be advised whether or not in their opinion such an amendment is acceptable. This may or may not be relevant to the discussion, since I am very sure Your Honour's decisions are not made on the basis of acceptance by the other side of the House. However, I do urge, Mr. Speaker, that you give all possible consideration to this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising to address himself to the motion now before the House?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I may do so briefly. Perhaps also I should admit that in arguing for the admissability of this amendment I am putting in one word for it and two words for the next one. Briefly, as I understood Your Honour's remarks from the Chair, you have two questions about the amendment of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). First, is it an amendment by which a matter of substance is imported not only into the legislation but into the interpretation section and secondly, is the amendment something which goes beyond the scope of the bill as recommended by His Excellency the Governor General. It seems to me those two points are pretty closely tied together. On the first point Your Honour, of course, will have to make the judgment concerning whether the words the hon. member for Annapolis Valley wishes to put in the interpretation section are substantial in character or merely clarifying. I suggest a good case has been made for the fact that they are simply a clarification of the intent of the whole bill.

On the other point concerning whether this amendment goes beyond the recommendation of the Governor General, I repeat what other hon. members have said. The recommendation contains these key words:

—respecting payment of employment support grants to mitigate the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect;—

As hon. members know, people in almost any walk of life or occupation refer to their occupation as an industry. Certainly in western Canada we hear of agriculture referred to all the time as an industry. There is nothing in this recommendation which narrows that at all and as the recommendation is one which suggests the legislation is of concern to Canadian industry I submit it is proper to make clear in the legislation what is meant by industry. Therefore, I hope Your Honour will see fit to regard this amendment as not importing any substance but simply clarifying the intent of the bill.

If by any chance Your Honour should find this amendment offends because it would amend the interpretation clause, I hope the arguments which have been made up to this point on behalf of clarification will be regarded as supporting the next amendment which does not amend the definition clause but tries to clarify what is meant by Canadian industry so far as this bill is concerned.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I will only take a moment, Mr. Speaker. The precedents are clear, but if, as has been stated, the amendment is of a substantive nature, then it should not be accepted in that classification of amendments covered under rule 75 pertaining to the definition section. I cannot envisage an amendment of a more substantial nature to a bill of this sort which clearly extends the scope of this bill, since it would extend the scope of the minister's duties to make him the minister of industry, trade and commerce and agriculture. There is a separate portfolio for agriculture. There are, in fact, separate measures to deal with agricultural products that run into the difficulty that is envisaged by this legislation if they are, in fact, raw agricultural products.

There are provisions contained in this bill to deal with agricultural products if they have been processed. Accordingly, I submit that the additional words contained in the definition section are the clearest example of a change of a substantial nature to the scope of the bill. An attempt is made to bring about that objective by simply making an amendment to the definition section.

In the Journals of the House, to which reference was made last week in a similar argument on another measure, at pages 835 and 836 on May 21, 1970, there is a very clear-cut reference to Your Honour's ruling on the Canada Water Act. Subsequent to that, in Hansard for October 28, 1970, Your Honour again had the occasion to make a ruling on a proposal by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to amend the definition section in the federal court bill. On both occasions, Your Honour pointed out that the change was of a substantial nature and could not be proposed as an amendment at the report stage. I submit that this is the clearest example of exactly the same thing.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the parliamentary secretary a question, since his answer may prevail upon me not to intervene in this interesting argument on a point of order. I should like to ask him whether, in support of his argument, he takes the position that the intent of the bill is that it shall not apply to articles of agriculture.

Mr. Jerome: That depends on the state of the agricultural products, whether they are raw, or manufactured. That is the purpose of the bill and its distinguishing feature.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I should like to say a few words on the amendment. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) said that the hon. member who proposed the amendment made the case that its purpose was to clarify an uncertainty and not to extend the definition of the word "agriculture". If this were so, we might have one of those situations where in clarifying one adds. I think this is the case with the amendment in front of us.

As the hon. member for Sudbury just indicated, there are two classifications of agricultural, forestry or fishery products, one is raw products and the other one is processed or manufactured goods. Only the second case is covered by the present bill. If it is a raw product, it is either subject to a surcharge, a surtax, or it is not. If it is not, we have no problem. If it is subject to a surcharge, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will try to take care of it by other means, as he has already indicated he would.

I suggest also that if we were to accept the amendment before us now, we would have to amend also section 14 of the bill which provides that in looking at different cases the board shall take into account all relevant factors, including:

(b) the prices paid by the manufacturer to suppliers for goods that enter into the cost of production of the manufacturer.

So this section 14 aims to protect the producer of the raw materials of fishery, forestry or agriculture so that the manufacturer receiving the grant will not gain from both sides. Section 14(b) is aimed at protecting the sort of people hon. members on the other side are trying to protect in this amendment. But I repeat that others who are subject to the surcharge will be protected by certain measures to be announced by the Minister of Agriculture.

On the word "manufacture"—and I might come back to that later on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the minister might not agree that perhaps he is getting away to some extent from the procedural point which is before us now. The minister has the right, of course, to argue the point as much as any other hon. member, but I hope that the argument we are having now will be limited as much as possible to the strictly procedural aspect of the matter without going into the substance.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I should like to take this opportunity to ask the minister a question. He used the terms "raw" and "processed" with regard to these products. I wonder, since there does not seem to be much by way of definition in this legislation and the word "processed" can have a great variety of meanings, whether he is talking about packaging, handling and interim sales. The present legislation is so vague that it is quite possible to see the hon. member's proposal as being not an extension but in fact a clarification, and thus justify the need for this kind of amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Again the question asked by the hon. member points to the difficulty which I wanted to bring to the attention of the House, that the minister's argument was really more substantive, I thought in any event, than procedural. I do not intend to limit this debate in any way. If hon. members think they might enlighten the Chair, I will listen to them. But it might have been easier if we had had no procedural debate and I had allowed the hon. member to make his point. By this time the debate might have been over. Sometimes I have doubts as to the wisdom of bringing up points of order. I can assure hon. members that I do not do so just out of pleasure but because I realize, especially in this case, that a matter is of interest to all hon. members.

As has been stated by some hon. members who took part in the procedural debate, this is a judgment decision which has to be made by the Chair. The motion is made by way of an amendment to the bill, proposed for the consideration of the Chair and from the procedural standpoint, the Chair has to determine whether the words in question are words of substance, whether they add substantially to what we have before us, or whether they are simply, as has been suggested by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) and others who have argued in support of this point, a clarification of what we have before us.

If I took the liberty to raise the matter in the first instance, it was obviously because I had some thought that these words were more than just clarifying, that they were words of substance. The procedural difficulty stems also from the fact that this proposed amendment comes to us by way of an amendment to the interpretation clause. Based on many authorities in the past, I have suggested to hon. members that it is not competent for any member on either side of the House under any circumstances to amend a bill substantially by changing the interpretation clause. I refer to a ruling reported at page 836 of Journals of May 21, 1970, part of which reads:

—in the opinion of the Chair amendments of a substantive or declaratory nature should not be proposed to an interpretation clause. If such amendments were accepted the clause would not then be an interpretation clause.

I am sure hon. members realize the difficulty of accepting substantive amendments or proposals under the general classification of interpretation. I suggest to hon. members with respect that this is not the place to make proposed amendments or motions which are of a substantive nature. Again, this is based on the assumption that the amendment is of a substantive nature.

Another important aspect is whether this kind of amendment affects the financial initiative of the Crown. The purpose of the motion before us proposed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) would be to relate the provisions of the bill to primary forest produce, etc., and in doing so, in my view, it would expand upon the terms of the financial recommendation.

I would like to refer hon. members to citation 246 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, at page 207, which reads as follows:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

Again, I must come to the conclusion that the amendment proposed to us is of a substantive nature which would alter the terms of the recommendation. Hon. members have suggested that this is a matter of judgment for the Chair. I really do not know how I can exercise that judgment otherwise than by saying that this is more than an amendment explaining the interpretation clause. I would think this might be the subject of an amendment at a later stage; it might be put to the House in the form of a reasoned amendment if it is strictly relevant to what is before us, but I suggest it should be considered by the House not by way of an amendment or proposed amendment to the interpretation clause of the bill which is now before us.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I know how important is this matter, and I have hesitated very much before making this ruling, but I can assure hon. members that I have looked at it as objectively as I could, as fairly as I could, and I do not see, in justice and in good judgment, how I can reach a decision other than the one I have just reached.

So far as the second motion is concerned, I have also expressed reservations. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has indicated that he wants to guide the Chair in this respect. Again I am open to suggestions, and I am prepared to be convinced, if I am wrong in my suspicion that this is a substantive amendment. If hon. members would like to assist the Chair and guide me with respect to motion No. 2 I will hear them with pleasure.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I take it that you have ruled out motion No. 1 and that you are now inviting comment on motion No. 2. Perhaps I should be exceedingly brief because I made the main argument when I was on my feet a few minutes ago. At least motion No. 2 does not offend the rule against importing substantial changes into the interpretation clause, because motion No. 2 seeks to amend not clause 2 but clause 11 of the bill.

The whole point that has to be decided is whether the provisions of motion No. 2 are within the conditions laid down once and for all in the recommendation by His Excellency the Governor General. Once again, I suggest that since the overriding qualification was that this bill was to provide employment support grants to mitigate the disruptive effect on Canadian industry, there is nothing in that which imparts a narrow definition to the word "industry". I suggest that what my colleague from Regina East is seeking to do is to clarify that aspect of the matter in clause 11.

I suppose one of the reasons I am being brief is that Your Honour has already read a citation that it is pretty hard to argue against, but one can still hope that Your Honour might see a difference between this case and the other one, because this motion does not offend twice, as the other one did. Perhaps your judgment might now be that, among other things, its words are very few, and that all it seeks to do is define industry as including agriculture and fishing. That is all one can say, but one can hope.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in supporting the contention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I would just like to say that this amendment attempts to clarify what is meant by "Canadian industry"—the term used both in the recommendation and in the title of the bill. I suggest it is quite relevant to the considerations involved in this bill because it relates to the impact on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, as pointed out in the recommendation and also in the title. The motion, I suggest, simply continues what is already in the bill, and attempts to clarify the manner in which the bill is to apply to Canadian industry and the Canadian economy.

I also submit that it falls entirely within the framework of the bill with respect to the expenditure of money because that is not affected at all by the amendment I have proposed. The $80 million figure is in the recommendation and in the bill, and I repeat that it is not affected by my motion.

In your introductory remarks Your Honour made reference to the fact that I incorporated the term "income support grant" in the amendment which I am proposing. I would like to suggest that this is entirely a technical feature of the proposal before us, and that the principle involved is entirely in accord with what is referred to in the bill and in the recommendation as "employment support grant."

In this particular area of the Canadian economy we are dealing largely with people who are self-employed, rather than with people working in an industry which involves an employer-employee type of structure. In both agriculture and fishing, employment is largely of the self-employed nature. The term "income support grant" used here is primarily for the purposes of identification because of the recognition that the mechanism involved would have to be slightly different in applying the provisions of the bill to these two industries.

I suggest that the principle in the motion is identical to the principle in the bill, that it is attempting to find ways and means of supporting employment in agriculture and fishing in a manner parallel to what is proposed in the rest of the bill. I suggest that the amendment as proposed is consistent with the present structure of the bill, and I hope Your Honour gives it favourable consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that there is very much point in pursuing the argument. I would find it very difficult to accept this amendment after having ruled out the one standing in the name of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley. In fact, I think there would be a revolution in the House if I were to take that attitude.

It seems to me that if there was good cause to reject the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley there is even more cause—I mean procedurally—to reject the one proposed by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) for exactly the same reason. The hon. member says that this is not a substantive motion, that it does not affect the financial initiative of the Crown. I regret that I cannot agree with him.

Clause 11 of the bill, as I read it, deals exclusively with the provision of employment support grants. Motion No. 2, standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) would provide for the payment to fishermen or farmers of an income support grant. I suggest to the hon. member that section No. 3, citation 246 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which I quoted a moment ago, applies with at least equal force to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina East. His contention is that since the adoption of his amendment would not affect the ceiling of $80 million provided by the bill, his motion would be in order and not affect the financial initiative of the Crown. Of course, that is not quite right. The citation to which I referred is to the effect that an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objectives and purposes or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a change.

For these reasons, and with regret, I must reach the same conclusion as the one which I reached in relation to the previous motion. If hon. members wish me to do so I would now be prepared to put for their consideration amendment No. 3, unless there are further procedural objections at this point. Having looked at the motion, it appears to be in order so far as the Chair is concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one question so that we know where we will stand for the day. Is motion No. 4 all right?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I am open to suggestions from hon. members but the motion appears to the Chair to be in order unless when it is called there is such strong objection to it that I am convinced it is out of order. I should say, in all honesty, having looked at motions Nos. 3 and 4, they appear to be acceptable procedurally. The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this is raised as a point of order and perhaps might be presented by way of a grievance or problem that has arisen out of the use of the new rules. It perhaps has been raised before, but it has come to my attention forcibly this afternoon.

We find ourselves in a situation where two hon. members have filed somewhat similar amendments with reference to a very important aspect of this legislation. Many hon. members who have had fair warning of one or both of these amendments may have considered that they would have been acceptable here this afternoon, and we would have had the opportunity to deliberate upon them in the normal way. Now, these two amendments have been set aside because they were, in the view of the Chair, unacceptable. We find ourselves prevented therefore, from bringing forward any other amendments at the report stage of this legislation. We are left then with only the reasoned amendment at any stage of the bill. This creates a number of problems in terms of full and sufficient deliberation of an important aspect of this legislation.

While I realize that it is impossible for Your Honour alone to review this aspect of the rules, because this matter has arisen again I would ask if there might not be some way to refer it to the Committee on Procedure and Organization so that hon. members are not placed in the position of moving into the report stage with the expectation of being able to deal in a substantive way with two amendments put before them, only to find that they are not procedurally acceptable and thus they are not able to deal in any way with the substance of the matters contained in them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on that point, may I just say that in anticipation of a negative ruling on motion No. 2 my friend the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) already has a third reading amendment which will deal with this issue when we get there.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That does not meet this problem.

Mr. Speaker: I hope, with the hon. member, that his third reading amendment will be in order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is.

Mr. Speaker: The point made by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) makes sense, especially in the case of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) who did not even have his motion on the notice paper because of an error for which the Chair and perhaps the table take full responsibility.

I see the difficulty faced by hon. members coming before the House this afternoon with the expectation that they could debate a motion, which is No. 1 on the order paper. Unfortunately, there is not very much I can do about that except to admit that it does perhaps cause a difficulty or unfairness in some cases. It is of course, up to hon. members to consider and perhaps debate this problem when they meet at the very high echelon of House leaders. I gather that from time to time they meet to consider matters which are of concern to all of us. Perhaps this is one of the matters they might consider when they meet again. Having said this, I am now prepared to put the motion which stands in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The hon. member for Edmonton West moves motion No. 3 as follows:

That Bill C-262, An Act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, be amended by adding the following immediately after Clause 18 at page 7:

"19 (1) In the event that Parliament shall then be sitting:

(a) An Order in Council authorizing the issuance of regulations with respect to any assistance period or periods or other matter pursuant to section 18 consequent upon the taking by any country of such action as referred to in section 3 shall not be made until the proposed text has been laid before both Houses of Parliament by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the making of the Order in Council has been approved by the affirmative resolution of both Houses of Parliament.

(b) Where the proposed text of an Order in Council has been laid before the Senate and the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (1) (a) a motion in both the Senate and the House of Commons by a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada in accordance with the respective rules of each House, praying that the making of the Order in Council be approved, shall be debated in each House for not more than seven hours respectively after which time the question shall be decided in accordance with the rules of each House as the case may be.

(2) In the event that Parliament shall not then be sitting by reason of adjournment, prorogation or dissolution:

(a) An Order in Council as hereinabove described may be made as deemed necessary subject to the said order being laid on the Table of both Houses within fifteen sitting days of the next ensuing session of Parliament and the making of the Order in Council has been confirmed by a resolution of Parliament within the first thirty sitting days.

(b) Where an Order in Council has been laid before the Senate and the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (2) (a) confirmation of the said Order in Council shall be governed as in subsection (1) (b)."

and my renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly.—

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I did not want to get into the previous discussion, Mr. Speaker, but I think the only way that these motions could be handled would be for them to appear on the order paper so that if Your Honour has any doubts those doubts may be discussed in public, in this chamber, and not left to discussion derrière les rideaux in somebody's office. I think it is better that they all come here on the order paper and that we deal with them publicly. I think that is the answer to the problem faced by my colleague from Eglinton—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Egmont.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —Egmont—I have transferred him from one metropolitan area to another metropolitan area.

I have proposed this motion for a very good reason. As we will see, the proposal is divided into two circumstances, one when Parliament is sitting and the other when Parliament is not sitting. This bill requires an order in council pursuant to section 18 in order to describe, as shown in that section, the assistance period or periods and the level or levels of unemployment that are to be maintained, the information to be submitted and presumably a description of the action to be taken by whatever country may be involved. This cheque, as has been admitted by both the minister and his parliamentary secretary, is a blank cheque in many ways. The bill has been refined, so does not specify any particular country nor does it limit the action being taken by the trading partners to a surcharge. There are valid reasons for this, perfectly valid reasons. I say that the order in council must come before Parliament to be subject to affirmative resolution, and debatable, as indicated in the amendment, for a period not exceeding seven hours in this House and then in the other place for a period not exceeding that time, subject to the rules of the other place.

It is provided that in the event Parliament shall not be sitting, either by reason of adjournment, prorogation or dissolution, then the order in council may be passed but within 15 days of the next ensuing session the order must be tabled and brought forward for debate leading to confirmation within 30 days.

I put this amendment forward in a rather more limited form before the Committee. It was discussed and there was criticism, the majority of criticism being concentrated around the question, "What if parliament is not sitting and you need rapid action?"I have provided for that in the second portion of my motion. Under the second portion of the motion the government would take action immediately. Actually, the government would be better off while Parliament is not sitting, because they could pass the order in council and everything would be effective immediately. When Parliament is sitting, the order in council must be brought forward and be subject to an affirmative resolution. I must point out, however, this does not mean that any positive action shall be deferred while the matter is being discussed and an affirmative resolution is being sought. The act provides that the appropriate period shall relate back to the date of the action taken by the foreign country. Therefore, that particular period described in clause 18(a), the assistance period, is determined by the date of the action of the foreign country, as in this particular case.

There is no clause in this bill which spells out, for instance, that the employment support arises out of the consequences of a diminution in employment due to the American government's surcharge. All this starts as of August 15, when the surcharge was imposed. We are now coming to the point at which the legislation is likely to be passed, and the regulations will be brought down which will govern the type of assistance that will be given. But all of these will relate back to the period starting on August 15. Nothing is lost. For instance, say, and I am taking a hypothetical example, that the common market, Japan, or some other country with which we have fairly extensive trading relations were, for its own purposes, to take some sort of action not necessarily involving a surcharge. That action could be a heavy import quota against Canada or some sort of other non-tariff barrier which has the effect of eliminating imports.

For instance, it could be required by common market countries that pulp and paper products must be carried from Canada to the port of destination in the common market country in a common market country bottom, in other words, in a ship belonging to one of those countries. This would cause very serious dislocation. These are the types of non-tariff barriers I mean. There could be a stipulation that financing shall be arranged through certain types of financial agencies in a particular sort of way, and the practice stipulated might be followed only by common market country financial institutions. In other words, it is like calling for tenders and then writing specifications in such a way that only one type of machinery can qualify. These are ways in which the actual non-tariff barriers operate.

The bill contemplates something of that kind. The action taken by the other country will have to be described in the order in council and all I say is, Parliament must know about it. Parliament cannot be put in the position of forever writing blank cheques.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This government came to us with Bill C-207 regarding ministers of state who were to be appointed, fired and changed by order in council. That was a blank cheque. Parliament insisted, and the government, I think, saw the light and decided that the order in council regarding any change would come before Parliament and be subject to affirmative resolution after a debate of seven hours, that is, two normal debating days. That is all I ask here. I am asking all hon. members on all sides of the House, is this to be another occasion when Parliament says to the cabinet, "All right, these situations may arise either now or ten years hence and here is a series of blank cheques." That is what Bill C-262 means. It is a complete blank cheque.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that when the government wants to cash one of these blank cheques it will have to come back to Parliament to get the cheque validated. That is only right. Otherwise, what sort of thing is contemplated? If you want to listen to delightful vagueness, and when I say delightful vagueness I really mean gobbledygook, listen to the way the parliamentary secretary answered questions of mine as reported at page 46:7 of the committee hearings. I asked the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Howard):

—there is a very general description in the bill in Clause 3 and you refer to it as trade restrictions of other countries. In the way it is described in the bill it says:

—temporary import surtaxes or take other actions having a like effect—

First of all, what is the contemplation of the government of the 'like effect'? Is it a diminution of unemployment? Is it a diminution in exports or just what is it? This is really important for the individuals because it seems as if parliamentarians are giving a blank cheque for the future with regard to this so-called framework. What do you mean by having a 'like effect'?

The hon. member answered:

I think it is quite clear that we mean diminishing employment, that there is a diminishing employment factor and this is when the proposed act will be invoked.

I went on to say:

For instance, if the action were to be a devaluation of a foreign currency which then would make the export for Canada at a prohibitive price.

That wording should have been, "—make the export from Canada at a prohibitive price." I continue:

Is that a similar action? It would have a similar effect.

Then the hon. member replied:

It is very possible that the bill could be invoked under that kind of a circumstance.

I will move on a little further. The hon. member said, as recorded at page 46:8:

—I think there is a key factor that has to be borne in mind that no action is going to be taken unless there is a massive unemployment factor involved.

Further on, in the next paragraph, he is reported as saying:

I think it is a hypothetical question to try to anticipate the kinds of problems we might get into at some time in the future. We are drawing a general kind of legislation that can be invoked for a variety of problems and I do not think that we can spell out specifically in detail the occasions on which it might be invoked. Each one would have to be examined very carefully by the government before they made a decision to invoke this proposed act. I do not think anyone in government could say today that it would be invoked in any particular kind of circumstances.

The final paragraph I shall quote from this committee meeting is found at page 46:10. It reads:

I am not prepared to give you a commitment today. The government is going to use this bill for a hypothetical problem that may come along in the future. I cannot do that. Each situation will have to be regarded on its own, but the legislation is of a broad nature.

At the meeting after that, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), answering my colleague, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey), is reported as saying:

No, really I think the ground was pretty well covered the last time. Those who answered that question with Mr. Howard leading, said that it was extremely difficult to anticipate situations. He emphasized that the bill gave the government the capacity to react and to react rapidly. That was one of the fundamental aspects of this bill. Second, the action to be reacted against, if I may use these words, would have to be one of great importance, exceptionally destructive with massive effects—all these words were used here last time—and sincerely I do not care too much to go into anticipation of what it might be because it is terribly difficult to do so. If you want me to do so, I would have to go into all kinds of considerations and I would have to qualify to no end everything that I would say in answering.

That gives the reasoning. If the government is going to take action on this bill, it has to pass an order in council, and that order in council must come before this House for an affirmative resolution when Parliament is sitting and, for confirmation when Parliament is not sitting. What kind of action? The minister does not know. Yet we are asked to give the government a blank cheque for 20 years to do something the government has not yet determined and, according to the bill, whatever decision is made does not have to come before this House. As for the Statutory Instruments Committee, it would meet only long after the event with limited powers of review; the government would not need to explain its action one iota. But that is the type of administration we are getting, and this is why I say that Parliament should have power to review—not as in Bill C-207, where the confirmation or the affirmative resolution is limited to the House of Commons—I think that was a terrible affront to the other House.

It is Parliament—and until the constitution of this country is changed the other House forms an integral part of Parliament—that approves something that is happening; it is not a law of the House of Commons, it is law of parliament, notwithstanding that some hon. members have inflated egos as to the relative importance of this chamber and believe that only the temporary majority as expressed by their presence here need confirm the acts of government. The constitution of this country says "Parliament". Parliament means the Senate, the House of Commons and the Crown. There has to be the consent of the Senate in matters of this kind. We are not a uni-cameral Parliament but unfortunately Bill C-207 was written in that way. So I have proposed that change.

I think my amendment is an improvement of the bill. From the viewpoint of Parliament and of this House of Commons it is certainly an improvement, because I defy any hon. member to tell me that he is in the habit of delving into orders in council. As a matter of fact, 95 per cent of the members of this House would not even know where to go for orders in council, or whether they can get copies. Most of them do not even get the Canada Gazette or, if they do, their copies go into the waste basket. This is why I say that in matters of this kind decisions of the government or recommendations or proposals of the government must come back to Parliament. Debate would not be expensive, but the government would be able to state its case and if there were to be opposition or criticism, that case could be stated. I hope members of this House will be so convinced that they will accept this amendment.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to support the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I think it is a very good amendment, particularly in the light of the experience we have had recently regarding economic policy in Canada. The happy assumption, perhaps the happy, incompetent, assumption that the people in Canada once had that all was well because the Liberals were in power has been badly shaken over the last number of years when they displayed an incomparable incompetence. The people could no longer go on the basis that they could leave it to the Liberals, because they know what they are doing, since obviously they do not. This bill is about as good an illustration of how little they know about what is going on as any. It is an additional proof. With that kind of situation facing us I think it would be extremely dangerous for us to give this government, perhaps any government, the power to amend by order in council, to change the rules as they go along.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I say this with the greatest of seriousness. It is time we became somewhat more political about economic matters in Canada. I am sure that the argument the minister, or any other ministers of the Crown will raise, is that these matters arise very quickly and there must be freedom to act quickly in the best interests of the country. He would say they have been given a mandate by the electors and that therefore they have the power to behave in that particular way and that if this House were to accept the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West many of those changes, many of those regulations would become political and subject to debate. I think that is exactly what should happen. The hon. member for Edmonton West has put in a seven-hour debate feature which means that debate would be limited. I think this is a worthwhile part of the motion and should satisfy some of the objections of the government that the debate might get too prolonged. I would say this is one motion which should meet with the approval of hon. members of this House.

I was interested in a remark made by the previous speaker when he paraphrased the minister who said that the purpose of the bill was to enable the government to react promptly. There is almost no evidence that this government has reacted promptly to crises in Canada, including the ones they have brought on themselves. For instance, we have had serious unemployment in this country for two years now. Where is the prompt reaction of the government? All we keep getting are assurances from the other side of the House that the situation is getting better, that the indices would start improving, only to be met with a new set of excuses when their promises do not materialize. Therefore, I think the change the hon. member seeks to make would have the additional effect of assuring that the government reacted promptly. After all, the party in power already has full power to act; certainly, they have all the power they need to do something about unemployment; they have all the power they need to do something about the United States surtax, to change the direction of our trade policy, yet despite the possession of all this power they have done very little about it.

The other question is that although they can take action and sometimes on the odd occasion they do act, there is little evidence to indicate they have done so in particularly wise fashion. Therefore, there is great advantage in ensuring that the action they are contemplating does come before the House for open discussion. It may be that debate sheds light on the subject under discussion. It may be there are occasions when the opposition does not materially assist in developing ideas. On the other hand, there are many occasions—I think most occasions—when the opposition performs a very useful role in the sense that it brings ideas before the government. Whether the government accedes to those ideas at that moment or retreats to its little recesses to think about them is not terribly important; the important thing is that these ideas are aired and, furthermore, that the public itself becomes involved in the debate, which in turn means there is feedback both to Parliament and to the government.

On the whole, the more we can do to ensure that government action is subject to political scrutiny and to make the government responsible to Parliament, the better off this country will be and the wiser will be the decisions emanating from this House. For a long time there was great concern that what was wrong in Canada was that we had a succession of minority governments; that all we had to do was to provide the Liberal party with a majority government and all would be well. The minority governments were pretty hair raising. I was here during the term of office of two of them and it was not easy for the government to govern; there was much criticism of it. But looking back on it now, those minority governments were infinitely better, more responsible and more productive than the majority government that sits on the government benches today. Therefore, I think the motion before the House is a good one. I am prepared to support it and I hope all hon. members will do likewise.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the specific motion put before the house by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), may I say I was present in the committee while this matter was being discussed. Although the hon. member has made an adjustment in the motion he has presented to the House today by recognizing that once in a while this House is not sitting and has offered a provision whereby under such circumstances this matter can be dealt with, I personally will not support the motion for a number of reasons.

The first reason is this. The argument put forward is that the opposition, indeed perhaps the whole House, would like to have an opportunity to discuss the content of the regulations before they are in fact implemented when the House is sitting and, in a case where the House is not sitting, at least to discuss them after the event. I suggest that any Member of this House has an opportunity to do this under the present rules. For example, when an order in council is made and tabled, the opposition in particular is quite free to use one of its many allotted days for the purpose of discussing it. If that is so, and if the opposition feels strongly about it, it can move a motion of non-confidence which may result in the end not only of the regulation but of the whole government.

If we were to allow this sort of motion, every regulation that is passed would have to be discussed in this chamber for seven hours, and I think we would be doing nothing else but debating such matters. We all know how urgent many of our problems are today. This Bill C-262 is designed to deal with an urgent situation brought on by the surcharge applied against goods entering the United States. I am sure that in a rapidly moving society like ours, this kind of thing may well happen again. Therefore, I think we should empower the government to deal with these matters effectively and speedily.

Frankly, I see no reason to bring the regulations themselves before the House in this specific way. We do have the bill before the House, but we do not have the regulations. We are presently considering the bill with a view to passing it. Why would we do so if we felt we needed the regulations first?

The purpose of this bill is spelled out, the reasons for it, as are the general provisions for handling given situations. I suggest that we follow the pattern of the past and allow these regulations to be put forward by order in council. Then, if members of the House wish to debate them, they are perfectly entitled to do so under a motion of non-confidence on an opposition day. This gives them and the rest of the Members of the House ample opportunity to discuss the pros and cons of the regulations which may well come forward if some other penalty is placed upon our exports by any other country in the world.

I also think that one of the virtues of this legislation is that it is not directed solely and entirely toward imposition of the U.S. surcharge. I do not think there is any doubt that the surcharge has given rise to it; I do not think that anyone denies that. But the legislation itself is designed to deal with this or any other kind of situation of similar nature brought upon our economy by any other country. If we were to pass this motion we would be saying that the bill is designed really only to deal with the U.S. surcharge, and I do not think that this is the bill's purpose. I want to speak to some other points later on third reading, but at the moment I wanted to express my reservations in connection with the motion before the House and to indicate that I will not support it.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say a word in reply to the comments of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) in order to make a debate of this in some sense. The hon. member stated in his reasons for opposing this motion that he did not see why Parliament should be asked to pass upon every regulation which the government brought in by order in council. Although I would agree with him on that point, this is not an ordinary order in council. Neither is the bill an ordinary bill. This is a bill which can alter and affect international trading patterns. Our trading relations with other countries can be changed by straight order in council and without the direction of Parliament. It bypasses all the established practices and procedures that have been built up over the years regarding tariffs and trade with other countries. In general it is out of spirit with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; it is out of spirit with world-wide trading patterns.

The hon. member stated that we were not here dealing just with the United States surtax on manufactured goods. I would argue that point with him. I say we are, that that is the only reason the bill is before us at the present time. Such a bill would not be before us if we were not confronted with the situation that has been created by the United States.

Mr. Pepin: That is one occasion.

Mr. Aiken: The minister says that this is one occasion. I do not want to engage in polemics with him; I do not back down from what I have said, namely that if we were not faced with the imposition of the 10 per cent United States surcharge we would not have this bill before us, and we would not be passing it as quickly as I hope we will. The fact is that we are faced with a situation that must be met.

I support 100 per cent the fear expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that the power given this government in this bill can go on and on for years into the future, to other governments and other ministers, thus increasing the stranglehold that government in general is gaining over Parliament. The benefit of this motion is that it makes sure this temporary bill, to meet an immediate situation, does not become a permanent tool of the government, free of Parliament, to direct, alter and control international trade policies and tariffs to the benefit of certain elements of Canadian production. At this time under these circumstances we know why the bill is being passed, and we know in whose favour it runs. This is not a general support bill as the minister has stated, otherwise the government would have accepted motions Nos. 1 and 2 on the order paper, or it would have made provision in the bill to cover the situations to which they were directed. If it were intended to be a general bill benefiting Canadians who export, this would have been the case.

That is not what this bill is. It is directed toward a certain sector of the Canadian economy. While it meets an immediate situation, it could most certainly be used in the future to redirect the whole system of foreign trade and tariffs which has been set up over many years of negotiation. I do not think anyone should object to Parliament being insistent in this case about looking into other situations at different times in the future.

From where will the next threat to Canadian industry arise? Will the next threat come from the European economic community? If it does would we in this House accept, without any debate or discussion, a government move to deal with that situation by way of order in council, without any reference to Parliament and without any need for discussion? That is an entirely different situation from the one we are discussing today. It is in fact in the nature of more than a blank cheque to pay money, it is a blanket authorization to alter trade patterns with the whole world. There could be some secret orders in council under this bill which would be very difficult to locate. Undoubtedly they would come to light as they began to be employed, but by that time Parliament would be met with a fait accompli and, in fact, would be powerless to change the situation.

At this time, with the proposed orders in council and regulations which have been outlined to us, the bill is not only acceptable, it is urgent. The minister has advised the country of the direction of this bill and the direction of current orders in council and regulations. We know what we are talking about if we pass the bill today and when we contemplate immediate orders in council. In that regard, it is urgent.

Let me refer particularly to the forest products industry where some relief is essential to maintaining employment in many of these plants. Forest products plants operate in large part on very narrow margins, relying on volume to maintain operation, staff and employment, as well as the provision of foreign dollars for Canada. These plants have just recovered from a terrible set-back as a result of the value of the dollar rising in relation to the U.S. dollar. A year ago our manufacturers who export had an advantage of roughly 7 per cent when the exports were paid for in U.S. funds.

Within the last few months this rate has hovered around one and one half per cent, and today I am told that the exchange rate is less than one-half of one per cent. This involves a range of 7 per cent, which is more than the margin of profit in many forest products manufacturing industries. In one way or another, by laying people off, by cutting profits and by short-cutting systems, the manufacturers have managed to meet the immediate situation and stay alive. Now, they are being met with another difficult situation. In many cases they are faced with further tariffs of from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. This bill is essential to those who have survived in order that they may continue to make deals with United States buyers, maintain employment in their plants and draw U.S. currency to assist in maintaining our balance of payments. This is a very necessary objective.

In this situation, and with the knowledge that several plants in my region are struggling to maintain themselves in business, keep their staffs going and their workers employed, I am glad this bill is before us and I am prepared to see it approved quickly. But we are faced with this long-range problem referred to in the motion. I think in all honesty the minister should consider this motion and accept it. I see nothing wrong with it. It is not limiting the government's authority or power at this moment, and it certainly does not limit further orders in council. It does permit Parliament to consider and debate a new situation. The only reason for refusing this would be that the government rejects the efforts of Parliament when it attempts to keep control in some way over the type of order in council which could alter our trade pattern and tariff relations with other countries.

I should think the minister would welcome this motion. He has not said yet that he does not, but I hope he will consider it seriously. I would feel very much better about the bill if I knew we were not sacrificing a principle in our anxiety to help those people who have been so severely damaged by a series of events over the past year or two.

In conclusion, I wish to say that under the present government Canada has adopted a very wobbly attitude in its relationship with the United States, in its attitude toward Canadian manufacturers, in its attitude in respect of United States capital coming into Canada and in its political attitude toward the United States. I think the people of the United States and the United States President particularly must have some real doubt about where our government is leading us. We in this House have great doubt about what our relations are with other countries in so many matters. In this particular situation, I rather expect the United States government must be saying to itself that it cannot see any reason on earth to give Canadians a break because our government has indicated no sympathy for what they are doing in the world. Therefore, I believe we must ask ourselves where we are going, not only in respect of the United STates but in respect of various other countries of the world who are left with great uncertainty on where this country stands in its political relationships, its political alliances and, by definition, in its trade patterns.

For all these reasons I support the motion and hope we can have a vote on it so that we can get it out of the way as quickly as possible and proceed with the bill. I hope the minister will consider this motion and let it go through.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of the subject which has been brought to our attention by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in this proposed motion, I should like to direct a few comments to it. I think I may say I agree with the hon. member opposite that orders in council which are required in respect of statutory instruments in general should be open to debate in this Parliament. Indeed, that was one of the principal recommendations of the Special Committee on Statutory Instruments which reported earlier to this Parliament, recommendations which indeed were accepted by the government. Like other members of the House, I am anxiously awaiting introduction by the government of changes in the rules which will enable us to have a permanent scrutiny committee either of this House, of the Senate, or of both Houses together, which would enable Parliament, through an agreed on means, to find an efficient way to deal with problems of this kind.

As I say I agree with what I believe is the intention of the hon. member for Edmonton West, but I have two reasons other than those offered by the hon. member for Perry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for suggesting I do not agree with this motion as it appears here. First of all, I believe the solution ought to be a general solution and not one we attempt to work out on a statute by statute basis. Now we have reached the point of having a recommendation from the committee on this point, and the government has given its acceptance to that, I hope we can expect changes to the rules to be introduced in this Parliament to bring about a scrutiny committee. I would much prefer to await the introduction of those changes so that we would have a generally satisfactory system of achieving this purpose.

Secondly, I would not in any event be very happy with the requirement of an affirmative resolution. The general scheme I would envisage is rather the opposite. Parliament would have the right to negative a statutory instrument which the government had made but in very few, if any, cases should Parliament have the right to pass on a resolution before it was made. I am sorry—not a resolution but rather the passing of a statutory instrument before it is made.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: I am wondering how he could perceive of Parliament passing on an Order in Council before it was promulgated by the government.

Mr. MacGuigan: I was not thinking about an Order in Council before it was promulgated by the government. As I understand this amendment, before the affirmative resolution by both Houses is promulgated the Order in Council would not take effect. My proposal would be just the reverse. Parliament should have the right to negative generally. In cases where a scrutiny committee would report that a statutory instrument was not acceptable or was a very unusual departure from the ordinary method of procedure, if Parliament were to have a right of recourse it should be a right to negative what the government has done rather than stymie the whole administrative process by requiring approval in advance. To require approval in advance really eliminates the largest benefit of the whole regulation making process because one of the very important purposes of making regulations by the executive is to allow not only the development of greater expertise on the part of those making the regulations but also to enable this Parliament to free itself from the encumbrance of having to pass statutory instruments which are being made.

I realize the hon. member opposite will suggest this is a special case and that as such perhaps there should be an exception, but I do not believe there should be a special case here. I believe this should be treated on the same basis as other statutory instruments, and I hope we will have a general policy forthcoming from the government in explicit terms on this question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to intervene briefly in any event, but the hon. member who has just resumed his seat has made it easier and more palliative for me to say what I intended to say. The hon. member of course was the chairman of the special committee appointed to inquire into the matter of statutory instruments and what should be done about them. This was a very good comittee. It came up with a number of very useful recommendations. I must say, however, that when I look at the order paper I find item No. 96 to which the hon. member referred. It reads:

That Standing Order 65 (3) be amended by adding thereto the following:

"(c) On Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, to act as members on the part of this House on the Joint Committee of both Houses established for the purpose of reviewing and scrutinizing statutory instruments standing permanently referred thereto by section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, to consist of 12 members;"

This motion stands on the order paper because of the persistence of myself and other hon. members—I give credit to some members on the other side—in making sure that something is done about the Statutory Instruments Act. We have the act, but there has to be a useful, vigilant and ingenious committee. In this case, I have no objection to a committee of both Houses. My hon. friends to my left might take exception to this. It may, of course, be that we should have a committee of this House alone, but it is much better to have a committee of both Houses than no committee at all. When are we to get this new standing committee? I asked about the business of the House not so long ago and the intimation by the government House leader at that time was that the House would deal with the matters on the order paper in respect of which bills had reached the report stage.

This does not preclude the possibility of this particular committee being established. But there is no intimation of that from the government House leader, and having in mind the disorganization and the incapacity of this government to deal with its legislative program, its utter incompetence and failure to bring forward matters which are so urgently required, I think I am entitled to be a pessimist about it. If the government House leader or anyone in authority on the government side would stand up and say that this matter will be brought up for consideration, I am quite sure that on this side of the House—certainly speaking for this party—we would be prepared to agree to exceedingly limited debate. I hope that my friends on my left, who are equally involved in this particular issue, are prepared to see a scrutiny committee established.

If we had a reasonable hope of getting a scrutiny committee sometime before the session is over, I would go along with the hon. member. But I am just not able to thrust this government, surprising as the statement may sound coming from me. Within the twenty minutes which are allowed to me I would not be able to chronicle even one twentieth of all the reasons that I cannot trust this government—

Mr. Pepin: Dispense.

Mr. Baldwin: It is sufficient on this issue to say that the failure of the government, despite the pressing which they have had from this side, despite the requests, the pleas and almost the prayers, to get this scrutiny committee established, is evident. If we had that committee, the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), a very good motion, would not be necessary.

So I say to my friend that I accept what he says in principle, but as to ways and means, if he were honest he would say to me that he, too, has very grave doubts about when this particular committee will be established. It has been a long, tortuous process stretching back into years of trying to bring ourselves up to date with other modern legislative assemblies and secure some means of dealing with the very sort of thing which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) proposes. This, I think, makes us sit very low on the totem pole so far as issues of this kind are concerned. Perhaps before this debate is over the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) may speak on the matter. I am not blaming him for not being here today. If I were sitting in the cabinet I would stay away from my place also, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: To be part of a law breaking team must break the heart of the Minister of Justice. I am sure that this must concern him, and this is one of the reasons he is not here today. But if before the debate is concluded, the Minister of Justice were to stand up in his place and say "I give my undertaking on behalf of the government that the debate on item No. 96 to establish a scrutiny committee will be commenced, with a reasonable undertaking from the opposition that debating time would be limited to a speech from each party", I think that would be acceptable. The committee would then be established before this debate has been completed and we would rest a lot easier. The very valid reason offered by the hon. member for Edmonton West would then be dissolved.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Before I leave this particular aspect, I should like to say also that I disagree with the suggestion that these Orders in Council should be the subject of a negative resolution rather than an affirmative resolution. The problems which face the opposition and this Parliament of securing an opportunity, a time and a place to debate, place too great a handicap upon us and, hopefully, any member on the government side who might be prepared to stiffen his backbone and say that he does not like what is being done, so is prepared to demand that this particular issue come forward by an affirmative resolution.

There is an obvious difficulty—and I made this case at the time we were debating the government organization bill C-207—which faces an opposition party and a private member in securing the ways and means in the House to debate a negative resolution. Do we have to wait until we have an opposition day? Do we have to put it in the form of a private member's motion? I do not need to illustrate to Your Honour the many pitfalls and difficulties which face us. If, on the other hand, the government cannot secure the implementation of its order in council until it is approved by an affirmative resolution, then the minister and hon. members on his side will be vigilant, alert and very prompt in bringing the order in council before Parliament and securing its approval. I am sure that is what prompted the hon. member for Edmonton West to suggest an affirmative resolution. For these reasons—and there are many others but I will limit myself to these two since the others have been well expressed by the mover of the motion and other hon. members—I say we should support the amendment.

There is another aspect, however, and that is the opportunities which this motion would provide for securing a greater degree of knowledge as to the basis behind the particular order in council which the government might see fit to bring forward. From time to time I have described this government as a very secretive government which hides behind orders in council and behind its refusal to come into the House and answer honestly, faithfully and truthfully questions which are asked. We have had an example of that today. Every day in the House my friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and other members of this party have pressed the minister and the Prime Minister on the particular issue of the situation of Canadian trade with the United States. We have received non-answers. We have been told that there are various contingency plans which this government has and that if the situation arises they will produce them like a rabbit out of a hat. They will tell us what they will do at the appropriate time but we should be good boys for the time being, and there is no reason why they should tell us what they are going to do or what plans they have afoot. This causes some of us to suspect that they do not have any plans afoot and they do not know what they are doing. I may be wrong. I admire the smiling amiability of the minister, although I am afraid I must limit my admiration to that. However, that is a great gift. If any member of this government can smile at the present time, it is a tremendous thing. But it is this refusal to give us facts and information with regard to the particular problem which makes it so essential for the motion proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West to be accepted.

I have here the last report of the Economic Council of Canada "Design for Decision-Making". One of the strongest and most useful recommendations contained in that report appears on page 231, and I quote part of it. I concur in it, and I offer it as an additional reason to hon. members opposite who may see the light and support this motion. It reads:

In chapter 5, we emphasized the need for a more open approach by all governments, and public boards and agencies—

Which is what we will have here, a public board and agency, particularly public because it will be dominated by appointees of the government.

—particularly in relation to information about government policy issues. This point was made by the Task Force on Government Information which asked for new government policies reflecting "the right of Canadians to full, objective and timely information and the obligation of the State to provide such information about its programs and policies—"

• (5:00 p.m.)

On this particular issue, Mr. Speaker, in relation to this bill the government waffles and procrastinates in the House, and waffles and procrastinates outside the House. Representatives of the media have no more success than we have in getting the minister, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or any member of the government to tell us what they are going to do, how they are going to do it, and why.

The need for a means by which this information can be secured is essential to the effective operation of this bill. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) very ingeniously has fashioned at least one means of securing that information. I continue with the quotation from the Economic Council Report:

One of the important considerations reinforcing "the right of the people to know"—

I would like that to be engraven on the hearts of the members opposite.

—is that many Canadians, singly and in groups, are making it clear that they want to play a larger, more active and direct role in influencing the decisions made by their governments.

If the minister were to adopt the very useful and very valid motion put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West for the establishment of this means of securing information, this would be a way by which Canadians, acting through their representatives in this House, would be able to play a larger and more direct role in influencing the decisions made by their government with regard to the difficulties of our trading community in Canada brought about as a result of the action which has been initiated in the United States.

As governments at all levels become increasingly sensitive and responsive to this development in the democratic process, the need for more factual and analytical information as a basis for constructive and relevant public comment becomes more urgent. In past years, the timely publication of commission and task force reports, the use of "White Papers", and studies containing factual and analytical appraisals of alternative policy options have contributed to the quality of discussion about public policy. Much more can be done, however, at every level of government to use published official documents.

I ask Your Honour to cast your mind ahead to what would happen if the motion proposed by my hon. friend were accepted. There would be an inquiry in this House, and the government would have to initiate a debate in the House. The onus would be upon the government, as it always must be, to justify the passage of the order in council in question. In order to do that it is essential that it should have adequate public support. The government would then be compelled to release the facts and information in order to secure that form of support. Without this the government operates secretively, in darkest holes. No knowledge is made available until the matter has become a fait accompli. I suggest that that is not good enough in this day and age.

I will now conclude because I understand there are many other hon. members who wish to speak. I am also sure that the minister will want to make a defence, although he will have great trouble doing so. It will take him at least the amount of time allotted to him to start a defence. Finally, I quote the last paragraph in the recommendations from the Economic Council Report:

The Task Force discussed practices in a number of countries. They did not, and we do not wish to, make specific legislative recommendations in this regard. We would, however, endorse their conclusion that "Canada must devise some federal-provincial means to guarantee that the citizens get unvarnished facts about the activities of their governments (and) . . . clarify rules for fast and efficient access to government information." This is clearly a difficult and delicate subject, but one to which governments must give increased attention. We therefore recommend:

—that governments proceed as quickly as is prudently possible to clarify the rights (and limitations) of the public to access to government information, and to ensure that bureaucratic or political constraints do not operate so as to inhibit such access.

I have been after the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). I have been after the Prime Minister. I have made a lot of suggestions, and I even placed before the House a private member's public bill, based to some extent upon the Right to Information Bill of the United States, and based to some extent on the practice in effect in Sweden and other European countries. I admit that it is not perfect. Not being a member of the government I am prepared to admit imperfections, and I am perfectly prepared to see the bill improved. But it is a start.

It is about time that, with respect to matters of this kind and the whole gamut of government activities, the public was told what is happening. The secrecy, the hiding from people, the refusal to divulge information all are making people cynical and suspicious about the whole processes of government. It is for that reason, as well as the others I have advanced, that I would urge hon. members opposite to support this particular motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, one of the conditions for a good debate is that there should be good arguments on both sides. I am not willing to say that the arguments presented by the opposition this afternoon were not responsible ones. As a matter of fact, members of the opposition have a great advantage over me in that they can afford to be more eloquent, more passionate, being on the side of Caesar's wife. I, too, would prefer to be on the side of Caesar's wife rather than to be on Caesar's side.

This motion has given the opposition a nice occasion to talk about the sanctity of the law, the rights of Parliament, and the dangers of strong government. It also gave them a chance even to talk about the government's arrogance, as if all governments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and everywhere in the world were not arrogant. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was the prime minister of Nova Scotia there were a few people who thought he was arrogant.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, not very many.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, every government is subject to being called secretive, to being called arrogant because the pretense of being able to run a country is the very essence of arrogance. Mr. Speaker, give the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) a chance and he will even make a case for minority government. One can make any case if one is as eloquent as the hon. member for Waterloo.

The motion suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would impose an obligation on the government to obtain the anticipatory consent of parliament to the text of any regulations before they were proclaimed. The members talked about the government asking in this bill for a blank cheque. In some ways, Mr. Speaker, each piece of legislation is a blank cheque—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh no.

Mr. Pepin: Yes it is, in the sense—

Mr. Stanfield: Some are blanker than others.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, some are blanker than others indeed, but I mean in the sense that it gives the right to the government to do whatever is approved in the law. So, it is a blank cheque to do what is permissible, not a blank cheque to do anything.

Mr. Baldwin: Then, how about the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Mr. Pepin: If hon. members are not pleased with what the government is going to do about Bill C-262, they can vote against it. That is one possible way. And, as the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) said, they can criticize the government, ask questions, and bring down the government on a vote of non-confidence. There is more than one way to skin a minister, and more than one way to skin a government, and all these ways are available to the opposition. If they have not made good use of these means, that is their problem. It shows they are a poor opposition, but they should not accuse the system for not giving them the right to do what they should be doing.

This bill, from any point of view, is not different from all other bills. Somebody says that it was brought on the occasion of the surcharge. I will not deny that but this bill is of a permanent nature. It comes in to fill a hole, to cover a need for possible government action.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) indicated a number of situations that might arise. Indeed, a number of situations may. The hon. member for Edmonton West added to the list.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But you have to come and tell us about it. Why are you doing it?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Pepin: Can all situations be anticipated? Why would reference to the House not be requested for any other bill? Sending a man to prison for the rest of his life is a pretty dramatic gesture, too. Why would all life sentences under the criminal law not have to be approved by Parliament? Of course, I am exaggerating here to prove my point.

The hon. member for Edmonton West comes from Alberta. A number of decisions taken by the National Energy Board, for example, are subject to orders in council by the government with respect to the export of gas to the United States and with respect to the construction of oil pipelines. These are pretty important decisions. They can affect the whole economy of Alberta, the whole economy of Canada, and yet there is no obligation in the National Energy Board Act to bring this order in council back to the House for debate and approval by resolution.

Mr. Baldwin: There will be when this motion on the order paper is passed.

Mr. Pepin: On a post facto basis, not on an anticipatory basis.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On this particular example, would the hon. minister permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does the minister know that there is not one cubic foot of gas that can be exported from Canada under a permit from the National Energy Board without permission first having been obtained from the Oil and Gas Conservation Board of Alberta which issues the original permit and looks after the province's rights in the first instance?

Mr. Pepin: No, on the contrary, the government would like to bring back to the House any new application of Bill C-262 for authorization by the House. What I am saying is simply that there is no such obligation in the National Energy Board Act and that decisions taken under that Act are as important as decisions taken under Bill C-262.

The member postulates that the government is going to be crooked, that the government is going to be dishonest, that the government is going to be secretive, that the government is going to be all these awful things. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is possibly a good debating point for opposition parties but this is not the basis on which government is conducted.

Mr. Baldwin: Have you not read the Statutory Instruments Act? Do you not know what that does to governments?

Mr. Pepin: My main point is really that decisions to bring in situations under this bill are indeed important. I am not saying anything contrary to that. They will be very important. What I am saying is that there are 10, 15, 20, 25 other bills where orders in council are important also that do not anticipate the procedure recommended in the motion procedure. I do find all kinds of things under the Import Export Permit Act if I were a crook but I am not doing them because these things are not done in a democratic parliamentary system. This would be against the purpose of the bill as expressed at one time in the past by the Canadian Parliament. If I were to do that I would expect to be chastised publicly in the House and on television by the hon. member for Edmonton West, and I would know that my political future would come to an end because of that accusation. I know too that I would be embarrassing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—and that is the last thing I would like to do.

Under the textile bill I could do a number of unorthodox things, too. Then there is the Canada Shipping Act and the Fisheries Act. All those acts could be used wrongly if ministers were so inclined. The point I am making and it was made already by a number of people is that if we are to change the methods by which orders in council are handled it should be done in some other way and not by the employment support bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is a specious argument.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I learned something from what the minister said. I finally get the explanation of the government's behaviour under the temporary wheat reserves legislation. The minister just told us that in his view, and I suppose it is a view shared by his colleagues in the government, all legislation is a blank cheque.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: That is what he said, every piece of legislation is a blank cheque. That is what the minister said.

Mr. Pepin: Under the law. To do what is provided under the law. If you are going to quote me, quote me properly.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to misquote the hon. minister. I was very surprised by what he said.

Mr. Baldwin: I was not.

Mr. Stanfield: I must admit that it threw a little light on the behaviour of the government when he said that every statute and every law is a blank cheque. How do you interpret that?

Mr. Pepin: I didn't say that.

Mr. Stanfield: What did the minister say, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pepin: I said, and I will even read my own words—I am sure I did not say anything different—that, "Every bill is a blank cheque to do what the bill allows the government to do".

An hon. Member: That is different?

Mr. Baldwin: It is worse.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, "Every bill is a blank cheque". What the minister says has not changed anything a bit because the government has interpreted how it proposes to go about accomplishing the purpose of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and it chooses to feel it has a blank cheque to choose its own methods. We finally have an explanation of its extraordinary behaviour.

I want to repudiate as strongly as I can the philosophy expressed by the minister today, that every bill involves a blank cheque to the minister or the government to carry out the purpose of the bill. This obviously is an absurd and very dangerous doctrine for a minister to put forward.

Mr. Pepin: If I had said it.

Mr. Stanfield: Just checking the minister as he now put it—I suspect he reads Hansard and he will find it was a considerably narrower statement that he made before. But taking the statement that every bill provides a blank cheque to the minister and the government as to the manner in which to carry out the bill—

Mr. Pepin: To do what the law says.

Mr. Stanfield: To do what the bill says—a blank cheque. I repudiate that. I regret very much that a minister of the government of Canada finds it possible to stand up in the House of Commons and make a statement such as that.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: There are lots of things you can have a look at.

Mr. Stanfield: There are lots of things we can have a look at, including this government, and you need a pretty strong stomach to do it, too.

As to the amount of discretion involved in legislation, of course it varies from bill to bill. There is no question about that. The minister dragged in some red herrings. He dragged in the National Energy Board suggesting that, reductio ad absurdum—what an argument—if you are going to put forward the kind of argument the hon. member for Edmonton West put forward, then you are going to say that all decisions by the National Energy Board are going to have this particular difficulty. This is about as irrelevant to the discussion as anything one could mention. No one is attempting to suggest that this House should pass judgment on every decision of the National Energy Board or every decision of the Canadian Transport Commission. We are talking about regulations of the Governor in Council under a very vague and general piece of legislation. I am sure the minister would agree that this motion has nothing to do with proceedings before the National Energy Board. It has nothing to do with whether a minister tries to be crooked or not. It has nothing to do with the personal behaviour or ethics of the minister. The fact is that this is a very wide ranging bill in terms of the discretion of the minister. Frankly, it has shocked me that we should contemplate passing a statute of such wide and sweeping purposes. Perhaps its purposes are not so sweeping. I am shocked that we should contemplate passage of a bill which provides so little in the way of direction and so much in the way of discretion to the government.

I am not suggesting that it is possible or practical for the minister to present to the House a bill that is more precise, and that can effectively narrow the discretion required in the regulations if the bill is to accomplish its purpose. That is not the point I am making. If this bill is to stay on the statute books in its present form it will enable this government or, on some future occasion, other governments of a different nature, perhaps, to apply the expenditure of public funds to measures affecting individual industries, and to do so, virtually, without any direction. Frankly, I see no justification for leaving such a statute in its present form on the statute books, a statute, involving as this does, such wide ranging discretion on the part of the government.

With all due respect to the minister, and the minister is a man whom, in general, I respect, his arguments respecting the National Energy Board have nothing to do with the case. It is nonsense for anyone to stand here and simply say that a measure like this is justified because every bill gives the government a blank cheque to carry out the purposes of that bill. If the bill is to be placed on the statute books and applied in future to some new situation, there is every reason, surely, for the government to be required to bring its regulations or its orders in council before the House and seek approval.

Frankly, I find it difficult to accept legislation of such general nature as this legislation. I accept the purpose of the bill. I accept the urgency with which the bill is required. In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, this is a bill involving wide discretion. It is a bill that should not stay on the statute books indefinitely without the kind of requirement proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I most urgently ask the minister to reconsider his position and agree that it is only appropriate that the hon. member's amendment be accepted and reassure the House, or hon. members on this side of the House at least, that this government in future or any future government when attempting to use this bill to meet some new kind of situation will at least need to get the approval of the House before putting into effect regulations which would involve not only the expenditure of public funds but which might very well affect very substantially industries and employment in this country.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended taking part in the debate on this motion. After listening to the remarks of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), I felt that I should say a few words. I felt that some of the minister's remarks raised some of the concerns regarding the amendment we have before us as well as other, similar amendments and moves which have been made in the House from time to time.

The minister, as I understood him, suggested that each bill gives the government a blank cheque to do whatever the bill allows. If I interpreted the minister's remarks correctly it seems to me that, when using the word "allows", he was implying that there is some degree of discretionary authority. I quite agree that discretion is given to the minister in the bill now before us and in other legislation. There are, certainly, many laws which involve the giving of powers of discretion to the government. These permit the government to take actions or not to take certain actions, or to decide on a wide range of possibilities. It is quite clear that, in many instances, that is the case.

I think it must also be pointed out that in some acts which are the law of this country there is a mandatory requirement. No discretionary authority is given. Those acts say that the minister or the government "shall" do such and such. That is the case in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which has been discussed in this chamber many times in recent weeks. No discretionary authority whatever is given. Its language is mandatory. Regardless of what bill may be before Parliament, or what the government may have proposed, or of the merits or demerits of one or other proposal that may be before Parliament at any one time, that act is mandatory in effect. Certain laws spell out most explicitly what the government must do until such time as the act is repealed. Thus it seems to me that statements such as those we heard the minister making just now raise some of the concerns which have been expressed by hon. members from time to time.

Speaking on this bill, I do not argue that the point that any piece of legislation such as this, regardless of its merits or demerits, adequacies or inadequacies, must have in it some flexibility. There must be some area of discretion provided to the minister. I think that has been acknowledged and recognized. I think it has also been recognized that the guts of this bill really involve, to a great extent, the regulations which are passed within the framework of the bill itself. Thus hon. members, and particularly hon. members on the opposition side of the House, have from time to time requested that the regulations or the draft of the regulations be made available to hon. members of this House and, particularly, to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which was studying this bill. Actually, the minister recognized the point by tabling before the committee the draft of the regulations, as they had been prepared up to that point in time. Those draft regulations were discussed by the committee, and properly so. My saying this does not involve any judgment on my part or anybody else's part regarding their adequacy or inadequacy. They were discussed, and validly so, because it would have been impossible to discuss this piece of legislation adequately without looking at the regulations the government had in mind. Thus, it seems to me that the type of amendment we have before us is simply an extension of the government's recognition that we had to have some discussion of the regulations if we were to consider this piece of legislation fully and properly.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment thereto of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I confess that the remarks of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) have prompted me to say a few words in this debate before the House reaches a decision on the motion before us. In doing so, I should like to make it clear that I believe the House should adopt the motion in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

The main argument used by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce seems to be this: We have power under scores and scores of acts to do what we want to do by Order in Council. Why change it? Why limit us?

Mr. Pepin: I did not say that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister says he did not say that. He did not use those words, but that was the idea he was putting forward—that the government operates on the basis of areas of permission which are given to it by Order in Council. He does not need to tell us that—we know it. We know this is the way in which things are run around here. But one of the realizations which have been dawning on people lately is that maybe this power should be limited. This realization has come not only among members on this side of the House; there have been references to it on the government side.

I would remind the minister that earlier this session we passed Bill C-182, known as the Statutory Instruments Act. When that bill was before the House, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) made much of the desire of the government to involve Parliament more intimately in the details of legislation and in the approval of statutory instruments. This bill did, of course, provide for a special committee to be set up, and there is a motion on the order paper that a certain committee should be established on a permanent basis to review statutory instruments after they have been put into effect. But there was also in Bill C-182, clause 28(a) which reads in part as follows:

(1) In every act,

(a) the expression "subject to affirmative resolution of Parliament", when used in relation to any regulation, means that such regulation shall be laid before Parliament within 15 days after it is made or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first 15 days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting, and shall not come into force unless and until it is affirmed by the resolution of both Houses of Parliament, introduced and passed in accordance with the rules of both Houses—

I did not draft that; the hon. member for Edmonton West did not draft it. This is a piece of government legislation. The government placed its imprimatur on the idea that there are occasions when a regulation or Order in Council ought not to go into effect until there has been an affirmative resolution of the House of Commons. It is fine to hear this nice idea preached to us by the government. But when will the government begin to practise it? Is this something simply put in a book so we can be told it is there, or will it become of practical application?

There is a version of that provision right in Bill C-207, put there after a delay of some considerable time, regarding the establishment of ministries of state. At least there is recognition that there are certain things which the government cannot really do before coming back to Parliament and attaining affirmative approval. I could not stand here and say that this should apply to every last regulation involved in the processes of government; Parliament would be snowed under completely if that were the case. But, surely, if we are to rely at all on the good faith of a government which gave us the clause I read from Bill C-182, there must be some occasions when a matter is of such importance that it ought to come before Parliament before it is implemented.

If I were to say to the minister that every regulation or order should be anticipated by Parliament, he would probably say I was crazy, and he would be right. But I do say there are important things which should be handled in this way, and this is one of them. I would say that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, out of his desire to be known as a progressive type, should welcome the application of the principle which was written into Bill C-182 to his own legislation.

I think it was a good idea which was laid before the House this afternoon in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West. We have had a good and useful debate, and I believe the government would be taking a correct step by accepting it.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). All those in favour will please say aye.

Some hon. Members: Aye.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Motion (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed to consideration of motion No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), as follows:

That Bill C-262, an act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, be amended by adding the following immediately after line 7 at page 8:

"21. (1) The minister shall within fifteen days after the end of each month prepare a report on the amount of each grant, the levels of employment and production at the beginning and at the end of the assistance period at the plant and such report shall be laid before Parliament forthwith upon the completion thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting."

and by renumbering clause 21 at line 8 as subclause 2 of clause 21.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal, as is not entirely the practice in the House, rather narrowly with the specific amendment we have before us.

An hon. Member: Amazing.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to establish that the real title or description of this bill should be not what it presently is, namely, "an act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect", but "a corporate welfare assistance act."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

An hon. Member: Will you vote against it?

Mr. Broadbent: Indeed, as will other members of the New Democratic Party. This has been made clear at every stage of the debate on this legislation.

Mr. Prud'homme: How much did you pay for your foreign car?

Mr. Broadbent: As is not infrequently the case, the hon. member's information is incorrect. I am the proud owner of a Pontiac made in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We have here a bill, as I hope to make clear in my comments on the amendment, which will certainly not guarantee employment to Canadians. There is no such guarantee in the bill. It is the stated intention of the legislation, but there is no guarantee that we shall obtain this result. What it does guarantee is the maintenance of corporate profits to certain enterprises which will be able to apply for assistance.

At the committee stage I introduced an amendment which would at least have had the effect of curtailing some of the discretionary power given to the board by insisting that a minimum of 80 per cent of the employment level existing prior to the assistance period would be maintained. In my judgment, whatever criticisms one can make of this bill—serious criticisms can be made of this paltry sum of $80 million, but that question aside—if we had a guarantee in the bill that provided effective control over the dispensation of funds to ensure that the funds would go to maintain employment levels, then this at least would be something that the New Democratic Party could accept in principle. But such provision is entirely lacking from this bill.

The spokesmen for the government, including the minister, rejected in committee stage a proposal that would have ensured that the discretionary authority of the board would be restricted to an 80 per cent level of employment so as to ensure funds would not be given to any company simply to renovate its capital equipment at public expense and lay off many workers. However, I will come back to this point in a moment. I turn to the final clause in the bill as it now stands, which provides:

The minister shall as soon as possible after the end of each fiscal year prepare a report on the administration of this act during that fiscal year and shall cause such report to be laid before parliament forthwith upon the completion thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

What is wrong with that clause? The first thing that I say is wrong with it is that the report is to be an annual one. There is to be an annual report made on emergency legislation, legislation that dispenses millions of dollars of public funds to private corporations. I submit that such provision is not at all adequate. Parliament needs to be kept informed, as I shall illustrate in a moment, of all details on a regular basis, certainly more frequently than annually. In such case we would be able to see what is happening in terms of this legislation that the government has brought in to deal with the current economic emergency. An annual report would give us lots of time to see what went wrong afterwards, perhaps, but would give us no opportunity to assess in mid-course what is going wrong, particularly in reference to employment levels.

The second thing that is wrong with the final clause as it stands is that no reference is made to the inclusion of a list of firms who will receive this money. If the common practice of this government prevails, we will not be provided with such a list even in the annual report. I say that is wrong for this reason. Over the past few years the federal government, along with the provincial governments of this country, have provided hundreds of millions of dollars to private corporations without in any way making a serious assessment of whether the money so disbursed benefited the public. To my knowledge, no study of this kind has ever been carried out. We have had pious hopes frequently expressed by the minister, as well as good will, to the effect that public money that is spent on aiding private enterprise will somehow have a spin-off effect and we will all benefit in some wonderful way.

I would refer the minister to an article which appeared in Canadian Forum some two months ago dealing with a serious assessment of the province of Ontario's financial give-away program, a program dealing with what are called forgivable loans. This article points out that millions of dollars have been spent by the province of Ontario on private corporations, with little or no direct, causally related benefit in terms of employment patterns, and having a very definite effect on the encouragement of further takeover of Canadian business by foreign corporations, specifically United States corporations.

I suggest it is time that the minister's own department did a study of the effect the kind of assistance this government is providing, this kind of corporate welfare assistance, as I referred to it earlier. This is another reason why I object to clause 21 as it now stands. We need a list of the companies that are to be given grants and we need it at monthly intervals. It seems to me that if such a list were provided we would discover the following. I shall have to look at the annual report, because I do not expect that my motion will be accepted by the government, but I expect to find that most of this money will be given to foreign-owned companies. I suggest that is a fantastic piece of irony.

This legislation has been forced on the Canadian government as a result of action taken by the United States, yet most of the funds dispensed under the legislation will go to the same U.S.-owned firms that are now causing much of the problem. As the minister well knows, a very high percentage of the 70 per cent of exports that go to the United States is in respect of intracompany exports. Now we will have the subsidiaries of U.S. firms in Canada applying for grants to subsidize their own exports to their United States parents in the U.S. A tremendous deal! I suggest this bill will be contributing in some way to the perpetuation of the very problem that in part it was set up to solve, that is to say, it will further encourage the growth of foreign-owned firms in this country. I am not saying that there is an easy way out of this problem, but I am saying that by the monthly provision of information that lists the firms in receipt of funds we will know exactly what is going on. In the committee the minister refused this proposition, and I suspect he is going to refuse it again.

I now come to my third reason for saying that this clause is inadequate. It does not give us the amount of money that is being spent, which seems to me a relevant question. Although only $80 million is being spent, how is it to be distributed? Are half a dozen firms in Canada to be given 80 per cent of that sum? Or is the money to be equitably distributed among many firms? Is it to be equitably distributed among the provinces or regions? I think it is very important to know how much money is to be given to these companies and on what basis.

My fourth criticism is that this final clause calls for no regular report on production and, above all, employment levels of the companies receiving the grants. In committee the minister made reference to the fact that he would expect some report on a sector of the economy in this respect. But that completely avoids, in a fundamental way, it seems to me, the question at hand, which is: If firm "X" is to be given a grant, the public has a very legitimate interest in knowing what are the production and employment levels of that firm—not of the whole industry—prior to and during the period of the grant.

At this point I should like to refer to the testimony given by the minister on this issue. This is to be found in Minutes of Proceedings No. 47 of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. When I pressed the minister about what I felt to be the real danger of this bill, namely, the discretionary authority being left so broad—I acknowledge the need for some discretionary authority if the board is to function effectively—I argued in addition that if the board is to function effectively in terms of employment levels, there should be an insistence in the regulations and in the bill upon the maintenance of what I proposed should be an 80 per cent employment level.

Let us consider an example such as I proposed in committee. A company which currently employs a thousand people may get a grant of $2 million. However, it uses the money to renew its capital equipment rather than the number of employees, even at the 80 per cent level, and decides to reduce the number by 50 per cent. It then lays off half its employees.

Mr. Pepin: Then it would not get the grant.

Mr. Broadbent: If I heard the minister correctly, he said it would not get the grant. This is a complete contradiction of what the minister said in committee, but I hope he is right. I hope the minister will get up and tell the House he has changed his mind.

Mr. Pepin: If the company does what the hon. member suggests, it will not get the grant unless there has been an agreement between the company and the board as to a specified level of employment. That is what I said in committee. The objective is really to maintain employment at the 100 per cent level.

Mr. Broadbent: If I heard the minister correctly, he has confirmed my point; he has said that the board has discretionary authority to make a grant on the conditional basis that the company maintains a certain level of employment. The point is that according to the act and regulations, we are not saying to the company that it can act only in a certain way. We are not saying to the board that it must insist that 80 per cent of the employees remain. Therefore, we reach the conclusion, which the minister admitted, that it is possible for the board to decide to give a grant even though half the employees are to be laid off.

Mr. Pepin: For good reason.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister nods his head. Apparently that is correct.

Mr. Pepin: I said, "For good reason."

Mr. Broadbent: I cannot hear the minister very well, but he can comment later. I should like him to elaborate when he replies. I think this is of fundamental importance and I cannot understand why this kind of leeway should be given the board. The history of this country is replete with examples of corporations getting money and using it for their own interests. In a commercially competitive economy, these companies are out to maximize their profits. We all understand that.

It seems to me to be highly irresponsible for this Parliament, which has an interest in the public good and in public spending, not to specify in this bill—the title of which is, in effect, an act to maintain levels of employment—certain restrictions of some sort on the discretionary authority of the board in order to ensure that the purpose of the bill is maintained. I am sure that when we receive the annual report, if we do not accept this amendment which would allow periodic statements, we will find all kinds of examples of companies which have renovated their capital equipment at public expense and have laid off a lot of people in the process.

Those are the four faults in clause 21 as I see it. There is provision for an annual statement instead of a periodic, monthly statement. It does not provide for a list of the names of companies receiving millions of dollars in public funds. It does not call for a statement of the amount of each individual grant and, most important of all, there is no insistence that we are to be publicly informed about levels of production and employment of the firms receiving those grants.

Before I resume my seat I should like to deal with one argument presented in committee by the minister. It may be he will refer to it again and I will not have a chance to comment; therefore I will do so now. The minister suggested that if we provided all this information in detail it could affect the competitive position of the company concerned. I fail to see why this should be so.

In the amendment we are not asking for the profit picture of the company; we are not asking for pricing policies; we are not asking for a statement as to the amount of money being put into research and development. In short, we are asking a number of questions which, if fully answered and made public, could not affect the firm in terms of its competitive position in Canada and, more particularly, in terms of its competitive position in international markets. That is what we are concerned about here. We are merely asking that the government insist that the names of the companies be listed so the people of Canada will know whether a corporation is receiving public money. We are insisting that these recipient corporations make known to the people of Canada their levels of production and employment. These are the basic facts we want and, I suggest, need if Parliament is to reach any kind of sensible conclusion or estimate of the efficacy of this bill. These facts would not affect the competitive position of the firms and it is for the minister to show us in a serious way how the availability of this information would affect the position. He has not done so.

Instead of raising his normally Socratic questions and reductio ad absurdum arguments, as he does so genially and pleasantly—and without logical effectiveness, I might say—I hope he will define the government's position and show how to the slightest degree my amendment may be wrong and unacceptable to the government.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my remarks at this time will be extremely short in respect of the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I am one of the casualties of redistribution. When I occupied the chair I knew the names of all the constituencies, but as a result of redistribution that was all changed for me. The hon. member presented this amendment in committee and advanced basically the same arguments he has advanced here today. At that time, of course, it was not so much in the way of an amendment but, rather, a suggestion for consideration or what-have-you. We are not as concerned about the difficulties of procedure within the committee system as we are with the essence of the motion before us.

In matters of this kind, personally I want to see what useful purpose might be served by having such a report from the government to the public or from an individual to the government. In many instances I find it absolutely ludicrous that governments should require reports from the public. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), for instance, in respect of the Corporations Act now makes businesses and corporations report on certain matters. He does not have the authority to collate the information and does not know what to do with it even when he has it. This is a complete waste of time.

In the same way, I find it would be a complete waste of time to require government departments to make reports of a nature such as would be required under this amendment because, frankly, I do not know of anyone who could put this information to a useful purpose. Although I do not know, I suppose it might strengthen the hand of some labour union in attempting to negotiate a contract. The hon. member who is proposing this amendment is notorious for proposing this sort of thing. He and his colleagues have used every subterfuge in an effort to obtain this information, not for themselves but for somebody down the line. I do not consider this to be a useful purpose.

In the same way, if the government jumped by 50 per cent its requirements for reporting, I do not think business would be any further ahead—because once the reports are in, no one knows how to use them; it has become a habit. It is just an extra expense to business. Therefore, without any other reason I suggest there has not been proven the value there would be in having these reports provided as requested by the hon. member. I am satisfied that the report should come to Parliament on the basis of once a year and then we could see what had happened. I am prepared to reassess my view in this regard.

I am sorry some of the other amendments were lost, but that is a decision of the House.

Mr. Pepin: That was a good performance.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in respect of one of the points raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent): The amendment he proposed has been commented upon by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He made a valid point and one which I believe should be considered by all members. However, there are some other points which need to be made in connection with the proposed amendment.

In connection with the aspect raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby about guaranteeing certain levels of employment, this of course refers back to clauses 11 and 13 of the bill. Clause 11 refers to the likelihood of a significant reduction in employment, and clause 13 outlines conditions under which the board must take into consideration certain aspects of the levels of employment and provides:

—to the extent that in the opinion of the board was possible under the circumstances, the manufacturer has maintained the level of employment throughout the assistance period in accordance with the specifications of the board or at prescribed levels if the board did not specify any levels of employment for that manufacturer.

In other words, if the level is not specifically stated by the board, then the level specified in the bill must be followed. But there are some special circumstances that I think should be taken into consideration that could affect such a situation and I should like to draw to the hon. member's attention the possibility of seasonal factors in employment. Let us suppose that a company has been engaged in the manufacture of a seasonal commodity. One most obvious example is toys. Then let us suppose the board decides to specify some kind of employment level that would suit the particular period in question. The toy manufacturer might have a high level of employment during the summer or fall of the year, but in the spring the board would want to be able to specify a lower amount of employment which would be required under the act. This seems to me to be a reasonable flexibility which the hon. member has not taken into consideration.

There is another factor in respect of whether the board and the manufacturer should have some flexibility. I remind the hon. member of the possibility, which occurs frequently, where an industry might attempt to keep up levels of employment but be prevented from doing so because of a strike among the suppliers of raw materials. In such a case the board would want flexibility in allowing the manufacturer to adapt to such a situation.

I would also remind the hon. member that however much we may be anxious to maintain a fixed level of employment in a particular industry—and we have designed the act for that purpose—the world goes on and we cannot expect manufacturers to exist always in the status quo. It may be necessary for that manufacturer to implement technological changes in the plant. He cannot wait forever. He cannot wait perhaps for three months, six months or for a year—if the regulations were in effect that long—to make those changes. So there must be some flexibility to allow for changes in the manufacturer's world. We cannot expect him to live in yesterday's world, nor can we expect him to be efficient and productive if he has to live with yesterday's methods of manufacturing. So the board must have some opportunity to allow for that kind of flexibility.

The hon. member seems to be particularly concerned about the possibility that the manufacturer might make a profit as a result of the measures provided in this bill. It has been stated in committee and in the House, in connection with this bill, that the prime purpose is the maintenance of employment. But if in the process the manufacturer is able to maintain his profit level, this government does not shy away from that possibility.

I am sure the hon. member is well aware of elementary economics, the fact that if a manufacturer is to maintain employment in his industry he has to reinvest profits—and profits is the seed money that makes possible jobs in our society. This is particularly true of the kind of manufacturing industry with which we are concerned here. I am sure the hon. member is aware that the usual form of distribution of profits in a company is for the government to get the first 50 per cent and the second 50 per cent to be divided perhaps equally among the shareholders and for the replacement of equipment, modernization and the improvement of the employment capability of the manufacturer.

This is the pattern of capital investment that we endorse and encourage. We hope it will go on, because without it the workers about whom the hon. member is so concerned, as we are, will not have the jobs that they need. We have to look at not just today but at tomorrow and the day after. So we do not shy away from the possibility of the manufacturer making profits, even though that may not be the principal objective of this bill. The principal measure is the direct maintenance of employment right now, but if in the long run we are able to foresee and to aid the development of employment in the future as a result of the maintenance of profits, which have been all too low in the last few months among manufacturing industries, then we do not shy away from that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to ask the hon. member how his comments bore specifically on the amendment that is currently before the House. It seems to me that he was discussing points that were raised in committee. How is the point of disclosure, which is the essence of the amendment before the House, affected in any way by the arguments the hon. member has now been advancing?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I was not dealing specifically with the matter of disclosure. That question will be handled in a moment by the minister.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before I do so I should like to comment on another point which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) made which, if I understood him correctly, would result in grants being paid only to Canadian-owned companies. I hope I am reflecting his views well: if not, I apologize and will allow my hon. friend to repeat his case.

Mr. Saltsman: He said we should know—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. This situation is very difficult for the Chair. The Chair was under the impression that the minister was seeking the floor to participate in the debate. The minister's participation has turned into a question directed to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who has already spoken in the debate and cannot speak again. The Chair allowed the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary, but at this time I think the solution might be for the minister to take part in the debate, and if the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has a question he may ask it of the minister.

Mr. Saltsman: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) permits me to respond to that question. In that way perhaps we will avoid some of the difficulty. I listened very carefully, and with a great deal of admiration, to the speech of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. What he was trying to say—and I think he said it rather well—was that we should be aware of to whom these grants are going so that we can make decisions based on this information. I do not think that at any point in his remarks to the House has he said that one group of companies or another should be excluded from receiving grants. He did make a very strong case for disclosure and for knowledge on the part of the Canadian public and members of the House so that we could make decisions based on that knowledge.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order with respect to whether or not the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) could answer the minister's question. Clarification is needed by the House. Certainly in this case clarification is needed from the minister. It is quite permissible for the hon. member to explain his position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair does not want to enter into a discussion with the hon. member, but it was up to the minister to decide whether or not he wanted the floor. The hon. member did not have the floor at that time.

Mr. Pepin: We could drop it at that. I had heard that particular point being made, but having been rudely misquoted this afternoon I would not like to do it to anyone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair would like to know which hon. member wishes to participate in the debate at this time.

Mr. Pepin: We will forget that point and take it up some other day.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and to clarify my position in this debate, as a result of my intervention as an interpreter I wonder if you would apprise me of my position. Should I continue the remarks I have commenced as part of my intervention in this debate, or can I have the floor following the minister's intervention?

• (8:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member has a few minutes left and may use all of them, but once he sits down he automatically loses his right to participate in the debate.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) by placing this amendment before us has made an excellent suggestion. I know that the minister followed my colleague's remarks with a great deal of interest and could see the wisdom in them. I was hoping that when the minister had the floor he would endorse those remarks and indicate his acceptance of the motion, but on listening to his parliamentary secretary I lost hope that this course of action would be adopted.

Through this amendment we are really asking the government to learn something from experience. There has been a great deal of experience with similar kinds of programs and it has shown that eventually the dissemination of information assists the government in reaching a proper conclusion and serves as a policy guide. On the other hand we have had programs that have been disastrous simply because of secrecy attempted on the part of the government. As a result, it took us years to learn that we were wasting time, energy and money when we should have been moving in more worthwhile directions.

The minister does not need any further reminder of this than the latest report of the Economic Council which discussed the manpower policies of the government. It points out that through lack of statistical and other information, even to this date, after spending close to $2 billion, we do not know whether the program has been as effective as we originally hoped it would be. Surely that should be a lesson to this minister. I would also like to direct the minister's attention to our experience with the regional development program. The government started off with the same kind of nebulous approach to regional development, with criteria which did not hang together, and said, "We will change the criteria as we go along."

All we ask is that the minister give us some indication from month to month of which industries are getting the money. We do not believe this will be a danger to the competitiveness and confidentiality of the industries involved. The government's arguments in this respect are complete nonsense. Why should we have to wait for a whole year to find out whether the legislation is a disaster or not?

I listened to the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). As you know, Mr. Speaker, I was very much in agreement with him on a previous amendment. There is one notable trait which that hon. member has: he is consistent. For as long as I have had the pleasure of listening to him both in the House and in committee, he has always opposed any attempt at disclosure. He opposed it on the Bank Act when we were drafting amendments to the Corporations Act and during discussion of consumers' programs. He always asks, "What do we need information for? Who is the information for?" I hesitate to say that the hon. member for Edmonton West has been proven wrong in his contention that the competitive position of industry will be hurt by disclosure. He does not object to having information placed before this House and, Mr. Speaker, when information comes before this House it is immediately available to the public. There is no evidence to show that in those areas where we have pushed for more disclosure of information, such disclosure has hurt anyone. But if anyone has been hurt as a result of the disclosure it is because he deserved to be hurt, because he was hiding something that should not have been hidden.

If the minister adopts this amendment it will go a long way to improving a bill that does not have very much to commend itself. In fact, the incorporation of this amendment might prove to the best thing in the whole of the bill. What makes the adoption of the amendment more important is the minister's statement that this action is really a permanent feature of government, that it is not a six months' deal or something like that. All the indication are that Bill C-262, when enacted, will be around for a long time.

At the moment the intention is to use this legislation to counteract some of the effects of the American 10 per cent surtax. But the implication is clear that it will be an on-going instrument of government. We are talking about legislation that calls for an initial expenditure of $80 million but which may end up with an expenditure involving billions of dollars. Parliament and the country have a right to know how the money is being spent, rather than waiting for a year to hear the minister say, "We goofed it all up again, fellows." We can save the country a lot of money if we have access to the necessary information.

Another argument in favour of disclosure of information is that there is a great tendency to mistakes—and I say this as my leader would say it, with the greatest of kindness, thinking only of the minister and the difficulties he faces in his portfolio. Through not being compelled to keep this House informed of the actions of his department, even this energetic minister or some of those around him might turn slothful. We could save him a great deal of trouble by catching the mistakes, rather than perpetuate them until the end of the year when the whole package comes in and the evidence and the costs are before us in that particular form. The experience we have had is that disclosure has been all to the good and that everyone has benefited by having information available to him. This is a long-range program which makes disclosure even more important. Also, disclosure is one of the best methods of ensuring that government departments operate with whatever competence is available to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) wishes to speak.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Just a few words, Mr. Speaker. There are two points, really, in the amendment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis).

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, though it is one which I do not wish to press home except to remind the minister where he has gone wrong. I would call your attention to the fact that the minister has already participated in this debate. The Chair did not recognize the minister, but the fact remains that he made his remarks and then surrendered the floor to the member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), thereby confirming the fact that he had already participated in the debate. I do not wish to press the point home, but it shows that the minister has gone wrong in more ways than one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Does the minister have something to say on the point of order?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask members if I can get unanimous consent to take part in this debate for the second time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This might be the best way to clarify the point. It was the impression of the Chair that the minister rose and asked a long question. However, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) has a point and I think it could be solved at this time by allowing the minister, if the House agrees, to speak a second time with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Would the House agree to allow the minister to speak a second time?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I will give my consent only on the grounds that, unlike his parliamentary secretary, the minister will deal directly with the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair is not in a position to allow hon. members to put conditions upon their consent. The hon. member either gives consent or does not, and if he does not the minister will not speak. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, again I shall have to be on Caesar's side and not on Caesar's wife's side. I do so because I know how unhappy my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would be on the government side, and that is a fate of which I should like to deprive him for a long time to come.

The hon. member raises two aspects of clause 21 in his amendment. One deals mainly with the fact that the clause as it appears in the bill does not anticipate that there will be a report on what size grant has been given to each company. I think that is the main point that he makes. The second point that he makes deals with the fact that reporting will not take place more often than once a year.

On the first point I must grant that the information relative to the amount of assistance granted to a firm for a plant and the level of employment and production of a plant is not going to be provided. Rightly or wrongly, this is considered confidential information. I say rightly or wrongly—and of course one could argue, but this is the practice in Canada. We have a number of other bills in my department which are applied in the same way, such as bills providing for research and development support. In this case companies make the point that if their opposition knew how much they were going to spend on research and development, and if they knew the area of research and development in which the money was to be used, they might be damaged in the competitive process.

Mr. Broadbent: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: I would not want to suggest that the minister deliberately distorted my argument, but I took great care to point out to him that research and development information, for example, was one thing that was not being required. I listed many other things that should be required that might threaten the competitive position of a firm in order to point out that what I was asking for did not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: This afternoon, when looking at the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asking for a special provision to be made in this particular legislation, I gathered from the smile on his face that this was intended to be one of many to come. I do not blame anybody for doing that because this is the usual progressive way of getting one's own thinking implemented in bills. I suspect—and if I am wrong I shall apologize on my knees—that my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby will be coming back later to suggest, and he would make a good case for it, that similar information should be given on grants for research and development also. Be that as it may, we have an unfortunate situation where the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby takes the position that everything should be put in the report.

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Pepin: Oh, nearly everything—whatever it is he mentioned in his amendment, should be put in the report. Then the hon. member for Edmonton West says that nothing should be said—so in my usual liberal way I am compromising. Compromise is the bread and butter of politics and I have done that for a number of years now, in the sense that the information on assistance provided to particular companies is not made public under my other Industry, Trade and Commerce programs. This has generally not caused much hardship. I suggest to hon. members that in some cases I have been able to provide such information on specific requests. Of course, I have to seek permission from the company involved to release the information and have to make some assessment in respect of whether it will cause them embarrassment. I undertake to do this under the employment support program now being discussed.

I have asked on a number of occasions if it would be an embarrassment to a company if it is known that the Canadian government has provided it with subsidies of a certain amount. Some companies have said no, possibly a bit reluctantly, and I have given the information to the House. I have gone halfway trying to accommodate the very well known curiosity of my hon. friend from Oshawa-Whitby among others. In this case I have said in committee, and I repeat it now, that I would be giving information regarding levels of employment by sectors; I would take sectors and supply information on how much employment has been maintained in a sector. This is a practice which Statistics Canada follows. When it is possible to identify a particular company, they give what I referred to as sector information. So much for what is going to be in the report.

I share the argument that reporting once a year, especially in view of the temporary nature of this bill, might not be enough. If my hon. friend or anybody in the House wants to introduce an amendment to clause 21 to the effect that reporting should be on a quarterly basis, I would be delighted to accept that.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, could I move such an amendment myself, or is it against the rules?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The minister knows that according to the rules, notice must be given. The Chair cannot allow an amendment at this point, because there has not been notice. Of course, it could be done by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, Standing Order 75(8) reads:

> When the Order of the Day for the consideration of a report stage is called, any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment.

We had a case of this a few days ago. I submit that if any member who has not already taken part in the debate wishes to move an amendment to the motion before this House, that would be in order. It could be moved without notice although Your Honour would have to decide whether or not it was relevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Speaking on the point of order raised by the hon. member, the Chair was of the impression that the minister was speaking of a new amendment to replace the one in front of us. The hon. member seems to be raising the point that the amendment in front of the House at this time could be amended. Nevertheless, it is the responsibility of the hon. member to bring in a subamendment and it would be the responsibility of the Chair afterward to decide whether the purport of the subamendment was relevant to the amendment.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, with leave I should like to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Howard), that clause 21 of this bill be amended so that it would read as follows:

> The minister shall as soon as possible after the end of each calendar quarter prepare a report on the administration of this act during each calendar quarter and shall cause such report to be laid before Parliament forthwith upon the completion thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I submit that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) is now moving the kind of amendment to the bill itself which Your Honour would say can only be done by notice. If the point is reached where I can get the floor to test what the minister has said, I would be happy to move an amendment to the motion now before us. Oh, I shall not be able to do it because I seconded the main motion. My leader has offered to do what I have now asked him to do.

Mr. Baldwin: He is taking a chance.

Mr. Lewis: I know what it is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is prepared to go along with me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has the floor. He sought to move an amendment which has not yet reached the Chair and it is difficult for the Chair to make a decision on it. When I see the amendment, I can rule on it. After that I shall recognize another hon. member who perhaps could move another amendment.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that you were right in the first place. We should have followed your lead. What has been suggested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) constitutes a new amendment and not an amendment to the amendment presented by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Consequently, I ought not to have made the suggestion that I made.

Mr. Baldwin: Perhaps we could adjourn for ten minutes so that the government can make up its mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the Chair understand that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has changed his mind and does not wish the Chair to put the amendment?

Mr. Reid: It appears to me that the amendment, Mr. Speaker, is technically out of order, and I would withdraw it on those grounds.

Motion (Mr. Reid) withdrawn.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make a speech. I seem to have misunderstood the minister. Perhaps it was my fault. I understood that the minister was prepared to go along with the amendment which required disclosure to be made public once a quarter, rather than once a month. If that is what he meant, that is fine by me. He did not move any amendment. If he meant that he will be prepared to make public disclosure once every three months instead of once every month, we would be prepared to accommodate him. I see he is shaking his head. In short, he does not agree to any disclosure by the companies to which he is going to make these grants. That being so, there is no sense in moving any amendment. We will just let the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) stand.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in my desire to be helpful may I suggest that if the government wants to take 15 minutes to decide what it wants to do and how to do it, I am sure the House would give them the time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The point raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) might constitute a good suggestion for the government but it cannot influence the Chair. The Chair must abide by the rules of the House, and the House has before it a motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Any amendment moved must be related to the motion before the House. Although it is not the responsibility of the Chair to make suggestions, I do not think the House should bring forward a new question relating to any other kind of report.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the comments of the minister in rejecting the proposed amendment which suggested, essentially, that since the government of Canada will pay out substantial amounts of money—in the neighbourhood of $80 million—the government shall be required to make available information once a month as to how the money has been spent, the amount of each grant and the levels of employment and production in companies to which money has been given.

Although the minister said he did not agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who, as he suggested, opposed any disclosure, after the minister had finished speaking he really accepted the position of the hon. member for Edmonton West, namely, that we should not make available to the public information as to how public money is to be spent.

The federal government and various provincial governments have had sad experiences in recent years with the expenditure of large amounts of money given in grants and loans at subsidized interest rates to private companies in order to provide for economic growth and employment, particularly in the have-not provinces. In light of the very large losses which have occurred to the public I would think that even the present government and the minister would have learned from experience that the best way to protect the public interest would be to provide as much information as possible as quickly as possible. I will give a couple of illustrations from past experience.

I am not now talking about the assistance which was given in the building of Canadian Pacific Railway; I am talking about the experience of the last five, six or ten years. Hundreds of millions of dollars have virtually gone down the drain because governments, federal, provincial and municipal thought they knew best. They made special deals with promoters, some of them with past experience and some without experience in industries which turned out to be of very little value. Let me mention a few illustrations to show that this has occurred in a number of provinces under different governments of different political stripes, yet all of them were marked by terrible disasters.

Let me begin with the province of Nova Scotia under a Conservative government. There is the heavy water plant in Cape Breton. I come from a have-not province so I know something about what it means when an area has large-scale unemployment and I can sympathize with any government, regardless of its political stripe, wanting to provide more employment in an area which suffers heavy unemployment. But here we are in the year 1971. The provincial government in Nova Scotia and the federal government in Ottawa have paid out in the neighbourhood of $200 million—I am speaking from memory, but I do not think I am far wrong; it was certainly substantially more than $100 million. We still do not know whether we shall have a plant which will ever produce any heavy water, and we certainly do not know whether it will produce heavy water at an economic price.

When that plant was proposed they were talking in terms of a plant costing $10 million or $15 million. I suggest to the minister that if we had had in that kind of plant the kind of disclosure we call for in this amendment, we would never have had an expense of between $100 million and $200 million because governments and the public would have demanded an accounting, an examination of the situation. An informed public would not have permitted that kind of expenditure on what may well be one of the most expensive failures this country has ever seen.

Similarly, in Nova Scotia we had the fiasco of Clairtone. The government of Nova Scotia in its desire to promote employment and industry in the province was persuaded and encouraged to bring into the Halifax area a company which was producing television receivers. That company has lost probably $10 million or more and it looks as though it will never be in a competitive position. Again, I suggest, not that they should not have gone ahead but that had the government of Nova Scotia and had the federal government been required to give the kind of public accounting in detail and frequency which is suggested in this amendment with reference to this special legislation you would not have had the losses which have taken place.

In my own province we have a fiasco which has been criticized, not just by people in my party, not just by socialists but by as respectable a business publication as the Financial Post. We have Churchill Forest Industries. That has now cost the people of Manitoba and the people of Canada $100 million, and the promoters probably made several tens of millions of dollars simply because there was no requirement on the part of the government of Manitoba and no requirement on the part of the federal government that sensible, honest and open accounting practices be followed.

In the province of Saskatchewan the former Liberal government was promoting a pulp and paper mill at Meadow Lake. It may be the minister will say the federal government is not responsible for the promotion of industries in a single province, that that is done by the provincial government. The fact is that had that plant gone ahead, the federal government would have invested by way of outright grants somewhere in the neighbourhood of $15 million or $20 million because that plant would have been in a depressed area.

Aside from the fact that our experience of government involvement with pulp and paper plant has been bad, as I have already demonstrated in the Churchill Forest example, here is an industry which is now plagued with overcapacity to produce. Here is an industry where workers in long-established plants in Ontario and Quebec are being laid off. Yet the federal government was willing to make grants to a new plant which would probably have taken away sales from existing plants and led to further unemployment in existing plants. And that plant probably was not viable in the first place. If we had the kind of legislation which required regular complete disclosure of financial details from companies which are given grants or loans from governments, the kind of thing I have talked about would not have taken place.

Let me for a few minutes talk about the situation in Newfoundland. Here you have two very energetic and very smart promoters operating. You have the Doyle interests and the Sheehan interests. You have proposals for the building of an oil port at Come-By-Chance which would cost tens of millions of dollars—money which would come almost entirely from federal or provincial government sources, which means money which would be paid out by the people of Canada through the federal government and by the people of Newfoundland through the provincial government. The profits of those operations would go entirely to the promoters, who would put no money in at all. This oil complex, if it comes to pass, will be in competition with existing oil facilities which have been built up by companies which have paid the existing corporate taxes, albeit they have received generous tax concessions and write-offs.

It seems to me this is another illustration of the necessity for the kind of disclosure we call for in this amendment. It seems to me that what is involved here should not divide us on principle. I do not see that it should be rejected simply because it is a proposal made by a member of a party that has some reservations about the way the so-called free enterprise system works.

Let me say this to the minister in closing: Surely the few examples that I have given, examples that could be doubled and quadrupled if one were to take the time to document all of the enterprises in which federal and provincial governments have become involved, enterprises which have to a large extent been a failure except to the promoters, enterprises which to a large extent have been of little value to the public, should lead the minister to welcome this amendment rather than to oppose it.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the amendment put before the House by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). One of the points the minister made a while ago is a clear indication of the thinking of members on the other side of the House. He said that he would be prepared to go halfway on some of the measures contained in the hon. member's amendment. However, we know that halfway is not good enough in cases where public disclosure is needed, as it is here. It is like talking about being half-pregnant when you talk of disclosing halfway a matter which, to say the least, should be public property.

This motion makes reference to preparing a report on the levels of employment and production at the beginning and end of the assistance period. I suggest that those who are displaced from employment by the surtax imposition of the United States would like to know just where their tax dollars are going. It just is not good enough for members opposite to say that public disclosure might harm competition. We must remember that people walking the streets are being given no job opportunity even though they have put their money into the treasury through income tax deductions.

We in this party have said many times that public disclosure is the best thing that can happen in a democratic society. This evening we have heard members on the other side of the House, and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), suggesting that public disclosure is not in the interest of the public, that it is the concern of the treasuries of the various companies given assistance under this bill.

If the security of the nation is at stake we do not hesitate to prohibit public disclosure of certain matters. In this case it happens to be taxpayers' dollars that are going to companies in need of assistance, and this is why everyone in Canada should be entitled to know whether it is in the best interest of Canadians, particularly those affected directly by the surtax, to give this money to these companies.

I cannot understand the argument of the minister and his parliamentary secretary that public disclosure would harm the competitive spirit of these companies. I am sure that all Canadians are concerned to see whether or not the money given to Canadian plants once this bill is passed is being invested in the best interests of Canadians. To talk of disclosure of this information doing harm to the competitive position of these companies is just not good enough.

The amendment that my colleague has moved clearly spells out those areas in which there should be public disclosure. In our opinion it is not good enough to tell the unemployed that their money is being spent for the benefit of a company in some other country. Neither is it good enough to state that the branch plant economy that we have is entitled to receive assistance when not one job opportunity will be created.

Surely the minister could find his way clear to accepting this amendment. It is not so far-reaching as to harm the position of companies in the event of public disclosure. My colleague has made it clear that he is not going to ask for the world; all he wants is public disclosure of employment levels at the beginning and end of the assistance period. Level of employment is something that we in this House should be concerned about. Clearly, the United States is hell bent on a program of keeping everything within their own boundary. Our obligation is to protect employment in Canada and investments made by taxpayers in various corporations.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak on this amendment this evening.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: We will let you know whether you should have spoken later.

Mr. Rose: Earlier in the evening I was invited by the ranks of the government backbenches to review a scholarly publication known as "Fuddle-duddle", and while over there perusing this magazine, which I think is volume 1, No. 2—

Mr. Alexander: Is No. 2 out now?

Mr. Rose: It is out now—I noticed some consternation among the ranks of government members who were calling for the House leader, the fire department and every other facility that might assist them, since they seemed to feel at that time that the extent of this debate on the amendment before the House was more than they had anticipated.

Mr. Baldwin: They should know better by now.

Mr. Rose: I am afraid I did not hear what the hon. member said.

Mr. Baldwin: I said, they should know better by now.

Mr. Rose: Let me say to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who said, "They should know better by now", in case the Hansard reporter did not write it down, that they have a learning block. Unfortunately, under the kind of system that we have, which is the adversary system that we have inherited from our progenitors, the British, only the government have men of enlightenment. I see the Gallic minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) looking at me at the mention of the British.

Mr. Pepin: Do I have a choice?

Mr. Rose: Although I did not hear what he said either, the smiling minister has a favourite phrase which is, "It takes two to tangle". I would invite him to tangle now. If he would like me to repeat what I said earlier, I will be pleased to oblige and then he could repeat what he said.

Mr. Pepin: That would be a pleasure. The hon. member said I was looking at him, to which I said that I did not have a choice because he had the floor.

Mr. Rose: The minister says he has no choice but to look at me. But when my deskmate, my old buddy from Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), was speaking a minute ago, the minister did have a choice. However, in complete defiance of the policies of his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), I saw the minister out in the hallway having a cigarette. He was not looking at anybody but the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Rose: In spite of the fact that the hon. member for New Westminster—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair hesitates to allow the hon. member to pursue his remarks, but it is very difficult to relate the last few sentences to the motion now before the House. The hon. member should try to get back to the motion before the House, which is to amend clause 21 of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: I sympathize with Your Honour in trying to thread your way through the excursions and intricacies of this debate. I had a similar problem a little earlier and was deflected somewhat by the question of the minister. It would seem to me the minister should try to "home in" on the real essence—the nub, if you like—of the argument, instead of being distracted and diverted by every kind of irrelevancy and frivolity. In any event, I will do my best to get back to the point.

• (9:10 p.m.)

My colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who is looking very unhappy at the moment, put forward a sincere amendment. His amendment called upon the government, which is spending public funds, hopefully in the interests of the Canadian worker, to disclose the recipients of these funds on a monthly basis. It is very important that any recipient of public funds, whether they be corporations, municipalities or unions, should disclose the source of these public funds and show what has been done with them. They should be willing and eager to do so. This is only sensible, and I have no objection to the suggestion. We must decide whether we are living and operating in a closed or an open society. Hopefully, in an open society all things are placed on the table and nothing is too private to be revealed to a public which is charged with paying the shot for all of us.

Mr. Saltsman: Keep the state out of the bedroom.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) made a suggestion, frivolous I am sure, about keeping the state out of the bedroom. I agree with him, but I do not think it is germane to the point I was making.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) proposed an amendment. I do not know whether he was in contact with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but apparently he was not. He suggested, as sort of a halfway measure, that rather than supporting an amendment calling for a disclosure every month it should be quarterly. That might have some merit. But when I was on the other side of the House the minister shook his head, indicating this suggestion was not acceptable. An hon. member of his own caucus proposed the amendment, and I am distressed by its reception because there is one thing I can say for the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River—he may be a Liberal but he is also Labour. If you look him up in the "Parliamentary Guide," that publication frivolously termed "the stud book" in parliamentary language, you will find he is known as the Liberal-Labour member. I think he has the best interests of labour at heart. Of course, his party tends to be historical, and often hysterical, but that member represents a constituency that has returned to this House since 1926 Members of Parliament who are not only Liberal but also Labour. His amendment was rejected and held in complete contempt by that smiling minister. He smiles even when he is unhappy, and I am sure he is unhappy about the length of the debate tonight.

I think the hon. member's best intentions were put forward in the form of this amendment, but he was repudiated by the government. In any event, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce seems to be willing to bulldoze this bill through no matter whether the taxpayer's money is protected.

Mr. Lessard (LaSalle): Oh, no.

Mr. Rose: I hear the chairman of the transport committee, that hon. member from Montreal. He is one of my—

Mr. Alexander: —"dear friends."

Mr. Rose: Yes, "dear friends."

Mr. Alexander: And highly respectable.

Mr. Rose: I am very fond of that particular chairman.

Mr. Alexander: But!

Mr Rose: That hon. member and I have an association in common. Once upon a time I played trumpet in a night club. I was very surprised to learn that once upon a time that hon. member owned a night club. So we really do have something in common. Regardless of his interjection, the public has the right to know where its money is going.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) made four essential points. He asked for a declaration of the name of the recipient of each grant. What is wrong with that? I do not see why it is not important for the public to know who receives these grants. The hon. member wants to know whether there is a preponderance of U.S.-owned firms involved. To the average guy working at GM in Oshawa, or at RCA or GE in Montreal, who is about to lose his job because of the recent imposition of the U.S. surcharge, I do not think this matters a bit. It may make a big difference to the long-term benefit of Canadian society and our economy, but in terms of these grants I do not think it is too important who owns the firm. The point is that we should know who gets the money, and I think that is fair enough. I think the amount of each grant should be clearly identified.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) suggested, we have already witnessed what can only be regarded as a frivolous waste of money by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. People and firms which really do not need the money, receive it. Companies with all kinds of finances were lured into particular areas and given government largesse they really did not need. The government of Canada, as the donor of the grants, did not have any share in these firms in proportion to the grants given. In my opinion this is wrong. If a private firm received a grant, at least the people should obtain a kind of equity share for the amount given.

My colleague also asked for an indication of the production level at the beginning of the grant period and at the end of the crisis peak. He also asked for a statistical indication of the employment level at the beginning of the grant period as well as at the end. There would then be some indication of whether the $80 million to be given to industry had an effect, or whether it was frivolously wasted in propping up some industries that were not going to amount to a great deal in terms of continuing employment.

In conclusion—this is usually where the applause comes—my colleague said there was a good reason for being rather careful about the disclosure if it should involve the security of the state. He agreed that in certain instances there was a need to be very circumspect about the disclosure if the security of the country was threatened. There is no security of the state, in the sense we usually think of it, involved in this amendment. The well-being of the state in the interests of all is thoroughly documented in Charles Wright's recent book "The Greening of America". We can excuse all kinds of inadequacies and injustices on the basis of the best interests of all, but there should be other safeguards.

In closing this part of the debate—at least I assume I am—I suggest to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we in this party are not calling upon him to be responsible for everything in terms of where these grants go. I do not mean the minister personally but, rather, the government. But I think nothing could be lost and a great deal of confidence could be gained on the part of the general public if the minister were prepared to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, because I believe there is enough evidence to suggest from past practices of the government that government funds are not always used to the best advantage. Every Canadian, rich, poor or impoverished would have no real chance of benefiting from these grants although they contribute equally if not in terms of the amount paid, certainly in respect of the proportion of their income.

So there is really nothing wrong with this amendment and I appeal to the minister's smiling and Liberal conscience to stand up before us and say this is not a bad idea. If he cannot accept the amendment of my hon.

friend from Oshawa-Whitby, at least he could accept something along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I do not know whether the minister was pointing with his thumb to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, whether he was hitch-hiking to Banff or whether he wanted to go the men's restroom; but whatever it is, I wish he would stand up and tell us that something along the line we have suggested has penetrated to him and that he really is in sympathy with us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on amendment No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on motion No. 4 (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At the next sitting of this House.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the acting House leader what designs he has on the time of the House for tomorrow.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I do not presume to be the acting House leader, but I can speak on his behalf and say that we propose to commence tomorrow with third reading of this measure.

Mr. Baldwin: If that is finished, what will follow?

Mr. Jerome: We will go to the tax bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being two minutes before ten o'clock would it be the wish of hon. members that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

FINANCE—QUEBEC—ALLEGED UNFAIR TREATMENT WITH REGARD TO STUDENT LOANS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Student Loans Act was given effect on July 26, 1964 and designed to provide eligible students with financial assistance to enable them to pursue postsecondary studies on a full-time basis.

Under this plan, the Canadian government guarantees grants made to students by designated banks and caisses populaires.

The Canada Student Loans Act calls for the payment of a compensation to any province which administers its own student loans plan.

Since education falls within provincial jurisdiction and that in many cases Quebec is a province unlike others, it did not participate in the federal student loans plan. On the other hand, Quebec contributes to the federal treasury, as do all the other provinces. It is therefore asbolutely normal that it should benefit from compensation that is proportionate to its needs and population. I should like to know whether consultations have been held between federal civil servants and their Quebec counterparts with a view to setting up compensation that is as fair as possible, and to developing administrative criteria to favour the students of Quebec as much as those of other provinces.

Many students in Quebec have financial difficulties trying to complete their studies, and it seems some of them have a hard time getting loans under the act. Is that why Quebec ranks fourth among the provinces that avail themselves of the Canada Student Loans Act while it ranks second by population?

So as to invite this government to correct this situation, may I suggest that a review of the entitlement criteria be made in order that Quebec gets its rightful share of these loans. So, the question that I had put to this House, on June 2, 1971, referred to this matter. I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to give an answer as clear as possible on this point, so that we may be well informed and that we can, if required, give the required information to those who claim that Quebec is often the victim of injustices in this field.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be almost completely misinformed about the situation prevailing with regard to the Canada Student Loans plan and its application in the province of Quebec. The Canada Student Loans plan provides for government-guaranteed loans to students who require assistance in their post-secondary education. The program has been in effect since 1964, during which time 656,535 loans aggregating $398.6 million have been approved in the nine provinces and two territories of Canada that participate.

In addition to guaranteeing the loans, the federal government pays the interest charges while the borrower is engaged in full time studies and for six months thereafter. The borrower then assumes repayment of principal and interest over a period of up to 9½ years. The interest rate is established by a formula agreed between the federal government and the banks which provides for a maximum rate of 1 per cent over the current average yield of government of Canada securities maturing in five to ten years. The cost of the program in the nine participating provinces and territories is, firstly, the interest in course and for six months therafter and, secondly, claims paid in respect of defaults pursuant to the guarantees.

Quebec does not participate in the plan but it does operate its own program and receives from the federal government a share of the cost of interest payments and loss claims. The formula is established by section 12 of the Canada Student Loans Act and is based on the relationship that the population in Quebec between 18 and 25 bears to the same age group in other provinces. In the loan period of July 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971, Quebec was paid $9,106,197 under this arrangement. This amount is not to be compared with the amount of loans guaranteed in other provinces but, rather, with the interest and default costs borne by the federal government in respect of those loans.

POLLUTION—THREAT FROM SUNKEN IRVING WHALE AND IRVING LAKE—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON REMOVAL

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak during the adjournment debate this evening I want to say I am disappointed and alarmed because of the lack of interest the government has shown regarding the serious threat posed by the Irving Whale which is still rusting on the bottom off the north coast of Prince Edward Island. I am becoming increasingly disturbed because not more than seven or eight minutes ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) was in the House; he was here for the vote which was called just before ten o'clock and he has now left the chamber and I assume that he has left the task of responding to my question to his parliamentary secretary.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In no way do I want to cast aspersions on the parliamentary secretary, yet it is well known that it is the minister who speaks for the department and who, hopefully, knows what is going on with respect to this serious problem. Our inability over the last few months to obtain satisfactory answers as to what action the government will take with respect to the Irving Whale has disturbed extremely not only members of this House but the people of Prince Edward Island and of nearby areas who are still threatened by the persistent danger posed by the Irving Whale. I hope the parliamentary secretary, who is here to answer this evening, will be more informative than he was a week ago during the "late show" when he answered a similar question asked by my colleague the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie).

Hon. members will recall that back, I think it was, on the first day of this part of the session, when Parliament reconvened on September 7, I asked the Minister of Transport whether in view of the policy announcement by the government they were going to raise the Irving Whale and remove the pollution danger of the oil that was on board. I asked him also what progress report he could make with respect to the raising of the Irving Lake, which I understand has been a threat to the coast of New Brunswick for some eight years.

In answering me, the minister said there had been a meeting held five days earlier, in Montreal, on September 2, of potential tenderers for the job of either lifting the vessel or removing the oil from it. He said there had been an on-site inspection arranged for all tenderers so that they would be able to see all the circumstances at first-hand. After that was done, he said, the department would get their proposals but no decision would be made either to remove the Whale or to take the oil from it until it was absolutely certain that the maximum amount of protection was provided.

That answer leads to only one conclusion, namely, that the government seemed suddenly to become aware in the latter weeks of the summer that there was a problem. I am wondering what they have been doing and thinking. I know what they have been saying, but I wonder what they have been thinking and doing over the last 12 months. The Whale did not sink in June, July or August of this year, it sank more than a year ago, last September.

I wrote a letter during the summer, on July 30, to the minister. In response I received a letter which came after the answer in the House, on September 8 or 9, I believe, in which the minister confirmed pretty much the information that was provided by way of answering the question, telling me that preliminary conversations had been held, that there was no firm indication of the problems which might exist with respect to raising the barge, that there was to be an on-site inspection either directly there or through the use of cameras, and then they would be able to draw up sufficient tender forms so that prospective contractors might submit bids.

It is high time the government gave a clear answer to the people of Prince Edward Island and adjacent areas as to what they have been doing for the past 12 months—not only that, but to begin to give some clear answers as to what steps they intend to take to clear up this serious pollution threat.

I have asked repeatedly since receiving this communication from the minister what the department has been up to during the past 12 months. Is it that they have suffered some form of amnesia and forgotten the problem has existed, in the hope it will go away? Is it that they really do not care, that while they can make speeches which give the impression that they are increasingly concerned about pollution, when they have direct responsibility, as in this case, they really do not want to take decisive action? Or are there areas in this department which really are not competent to deal with the problem? Surely, at least they were reminded by local officials in the province. At least we were given assurances from time to time by provincial ministers that the problem would be dealt with at an early date this spring.

I am wondering on what basis these ministers spoke. On what ground did they continue to feel the federal minister and officials would take decisive action while the weather and climatic conditions were suitable? This evening we need some firm answers and, hopefully, the parliamentary secretary will be able to provide them. I repeat, I am disappointed that the minister has not seen fit to be present to answer the question I have raised tonight and I hope by not being here he is not conveying by his absence a lack of interest, a lack of concern, a lack of willingness to tackle this important problem.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the minister was here a while ago and is out of the House now. But that is not because he does not know what is going on in connection with the Irving Whale. The minister knows perfectly well what is the situation concerning the Irving Whale, and the only answer I can give the hon. member is in conformity with the facts.

In so far as the portion of the question dealing with the Irving Whale is concerned, this matter was dealt with by myself last Monday night at this hour in responding to the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie).

Briefly, in the limited time which is available, the situation on the Irving Whale is as follows. Over the past months every effort has been made by the Department of Transport to gather all useful information about the vessel, its structure, its position on the ocean bottom, temperature factors and data about her which will be imperative in preparation for a successful salvage operation. Pre-tender meetings are now over and an on site inspection has been completed. Tenders are presently being sought from the salvage companies and a final decision to begin the salvage operation will be made only after every consideration is given to the safety factor as well as the timing factor in view of the very uncertain weather conditions on the east coast at this time of year.

The Whale or her cargo will be removed as soon as the circumstances permit.

The hon. member also referred to the Irving Lake—a vessel lodged on the shore line off northern New Brunswick. This wreck had some oil remaining in her tanks. A work crew has been on the scene over the past few weeks and the oil is being removed by burning it. Much of the work is now finished. The remaining tanks will be burned out in the next few days when there are prevailing offshore winds and when there is absolute assurance that no damage to anything else can result.

TAXATION—ESTATE AND GIFT TAX PROPOSALS—RESPONSE TO PROVINCIAL REQUESTS FOR DELAY

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on September 15, as reported at page 7835 of Hansard, I asked the following question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and received the following answers. I asked the Prime Minister:

Has he yet replied to the letter which he received from the first ministers of the provinces in which they asked for a deferral of one year on the estate and gift tax proposals now before the House? If he has replied, what is the nature of the reply?

The Prime Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, no substantial reply was sent as far as I know.

I then asked:

Does the government intend to send a substantial reply to the first ministers?

The Prime Minister's answer was:

Mr. Speaker, the best reply would be the position the government takes in the House when the bill is passed. We cannot reply to the hypothetical situation as to what will happen if the bill is delayed past January 1, the date that the premiers mentioned in their letter to me.

The answer which the Prime Minister gave me is misleading in the extreme since the text of the letter from the Premiers read, in part, as follows. They requested that——the present system of estate and gift taxation be continued for at least a year from January 1, 1972 to give the provinces concerned time to assess with the federal government the implications involved in the federal proposal.

The statement refers to the proposal now before the House in Bill C-259 for the federal government to quit the estate and gift tax field and to leave it entirely open to the provinces. In referring, as the Prime Minister did, to "a hypothetical situation as to what will happen if the bill is delayed past January 1," the Prime Minister either completely misunderstood or was completely misrepresenting the contents of the letter. The request which I have read is most precise. The letter from the provincial Premiers was drafted at, and mailed from, their conference in Victoria on August 6. Eight Premiers signed the letter. The Premier of Alberta did not because he had to leave early in order to deal with an election, and the Premier of Newfoundland did not sign because he never attends the conferences.

Eight provincial Premiers have made this request. I see none of the confusion that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) pretended to see when he answered questions on September 8. Moreover, it is beyond belief to me that neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Finance has had the courtesy to reply to the letter.

I would be the last to say that the federal government should automatically agree to everything suggested by the provinces, but surely when the Premiers of eight provinces, representing every political stripe in this country, make a united appeal for a certain course of action on the part of the federal government, the request is worthy of reply. It is worthy of reply if only because the event is virtually without precedent. That statement leaves aside the merit of the provincial Premiers' case.

I would argue that the abandonment of estate and gift taxes by the federal government represents an abandonment of considerations of equity in the tax structure, and I believe I would be right in so doing. However, the provinces have not gone nearly that far. They have simply asked for the delay of one year in implementing that part of the act for some entirely practical and unassailable reasons.

Firstly, the provinces argue that federal abandonment of estate and gift taxes should be delayed for a year because they need time to meet and determine a common policy on the question. If they do not have the opportunity to do so, a tax jungle will be created in the field of estate and gift taxes to the disadvantage of the whole nation. Secondly, the provinces moved to make the request because under the current timetable they would not have time to draft legislation and to assemble their legislatures to deal with legislation concerning estate and gift taxes.

These arguments simply cannot be refuted; their logic is irrefutable. In failing to accede to the provinces' request, the federal government is being irresponsible to the extreme. Not that I am startled by the fact the federal government has acted irresponsibly, but its decision to abandon estate taxes was in itself more irresponsible than its decision not to reply to the provincial Premiers.

If I had time I would read in defence of that statement the arguments for federal presence in estate and gift taxes put forward by this government at pages 32 to 36 of its publication "The Taxing Powers and the Constitution of Canada". In that publication this government under the same Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) placed before the provinces and the people of Canada six strong arguments for federal estate and gift taxes and concluded with this sentence:

For these several reasons the government of Canada does not think it would be in the interest of either Canada or of the provinces for Parliament to forgo its power to impose estate taxes.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, that time permitted me to deal with the substantial arguments against federal government abandonment of estate and gift taxes and with the government's specious argument that the capital gains tax is a substitute. Time, however, does not permit this. Thus, I would in conclusion, express the hope that the federal government will see fit to grant the Premiers' request to delay the implementation of the proposals affecting estate and gift taxes contained in Bill C-259.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. member that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) responded this weekend by Telex to Premier Bennett. Premier Bennett contacted the Prime Minister about this question on behalf of the other Premiers. A copy of this communication has been forwarded to every Premier but it is not known at this time whether they have all been received, nor has there been an opportunity for response. It would be inappropriate for me at this time to indicate the contents of that letter, but a response has been sent not only to Premier Bennett but to the other Premiers on whose behalf he wrote.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF SECRETARY GENERAL OF NATO, MR. MANLIO BROSIO

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I bring to the attention of the House the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a distinguished guest of the Canadian Parliament, whose presence here today honours us, Mr. Manlio Brosio, Secretary General of NATO.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

On behalf of my colleagues, I extend the most cordial welcome to you, Mr. Secretary General.

[English]

The Secretary General is in Ottawa on the occasion of the seventeenth annual meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly. I am sure hon. members would want me on their behalf to extend a very warm welcome not only to the Secretary General, but also to the President of the Assembly, Mr. Romain Fandel, and to all the eminent parliamentarians who represent with such dignity the national assemblies of the NATO community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all Members of Parliament. I appreciate that the issue to which I want to refer has been before this House on a number of occasions previously. I refer to the failure of the government to make payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I appreciate, as I have said, that the matter has been before this House on many previous occasions. There was a question of privilege raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), on September 13. There was a debate under Standing Order 26 on September 16. I know also that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) tried to bring forward a motion dealing with the impeachment of the relevant ministers of the Crown on September 21, and that there was an opposition day, a debate and a vote on September 23, as well as a number of motions under Standing Order 43 and numerous questions from members of the Official Opposition as well as from members of the party which I have the honour to lead.

However, Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege arises out of new things that have occurred in the last number of hours. Yesterday during the question period the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in answer to a question, stated:

> Mr. Speaker, those payments have not been made—

Then, according to press reports, outside the House of Commons he said, and this is reported in quotation marks:

> "We admit that the government is in default and we don't want to stay in default much longer," Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said outside the Commons yesterday.
> He warned that the government would pull its new legislation back within "a matter of weeks or days" if it does not get through Parliament.
> "If the farmers through their Conservative members say they want $60 million instead of $100 million, then fine."

• (2:10 p.m.)

That is what the Prime Minister is reported to have said outside Parliament yesterday, in addition to which the minister responsible for the Wheat Board is out in the west allegedly speaking to farmers on the Prairies and asking them to decide whether payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act are to be made by the government or whether they want to support Bill C-244. The statements by the Prime Minister and by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in my respectful submission create a new situation which deserves your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of Parliament. What all this adds up to I say to you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of this House and to the people of Canada, is a deliberate and scandalous contempt for the law by this government. The law is being scorned by the government and Parliament is being scoffed at by the government.

The Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board are saying to the people of Canada and Members of Parliament, "we know we are breaking the law; we know we are in default and we intend to continue to be in default until such time as the bill, which we think is a good bill, is passed by this Parliament or until such time as we withdraw that bill for some reason or other and then must obey the law now on the statute books". I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of the government, as it is of every citizen of Canada, to obey the law as it is, and to obey it not conditionally but to obey it as the law requires.

I also suggest to you that the Prime Minister, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the government are distorting the facts to the people of Canada in statements which they are making. The question at issue is no longer whether people are being paid under one act or another act. The question at issue is whether the people of Canada and this Parliament will permit the government to break the law and to continue breaking it at its will with impunity; whether this government will be permitted by this Parliament, because apparently we are hamstrung and have no way out, to continue in its breach of the law without protest and without an accounting through a careful investigation of the situation by an appropriate committee of Parliament.

I appreciate that there are some legal problems about this kind of issue being an issue of privilege. I appreciate that it is Your Honour's duty to deal with these procedural matters, but there are times in the development of the law, as every student of the law knows, when existing precedents and existing legal strait jackets have to be ignored in order that justice may be done instead of the mere dry form of the law being applied. I suggest to you, as a student of the law, that it is simply beyond acceptance for us to decide that this Parliament cannot send a matter like this to the relevant committee of this House to be studied, that we are helpless, without remedy and that the government, merely because it has a majority in the House of Commons, can use its majority to railroad through a breach of the law with impunity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I therefore suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of the statements made by the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, there is a new situation which requires new thought and that it would be a great contribution to Parliament, to the parliamentary process and to the notion of democracy and law in this country, if Your Honour found ways, as I think there are if precedents are ignored, to permit the following motion which I would move:

That the admitted default of the government in violation of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has given the Chair the required notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege. This, as usual, has given me the occasion to think again about the very important issues which lie behind the matter raised by the hon. member for York South. It is not the first time that this matter has been raised for the consideration of the Chair. The hon. member for York South himself has referred to the many instances during the last two weeks or so, indeed since the opening of this session, when the matter has been brought before me for consideration through questions which were raised on the first day by a number of hon. members, in motions which were made subsequently, in an adjournment motion, in a submission that the matter should be considered by way of breach of parliamentary privilege, and a request for the impeachment of certain members of the government. All these, of course, have given the Chair several opportunities to reflect on all aspects of this very serious matter.

With respect I suggest to the hon. member that it is very difficult for the Speaker, who is required to interpret and administer the rules and procedures of this House, the Standing Orders of the House and the precedents by which it must function, to say that the situation now exists where the Chair must disregard or disobey those rules. I forget the exact words of the hon. member, but his suggestion is that the time has come for the Chair to ignore our procedural precedents. I suggest that the hon. member is asking a great deal of the Chair.

It seems to me that when this matter was raised originally by way of a question of privilege, I indicated to hon. members what the precedents were and under what conditions the matter might be brought for consideration by a committee under the guise of a question of privilege. If I remember well, I quoted the well known precedent going back to the days of Mr. Speaker Michener when a similar matter was brought before the House and the rule was set down by the then Speaker as to what procedure was to be followed to have the conduct of a minister or ministers impugned and considered by a committee.

I suggest that this has not been done by the motion now proposed by the hon. member for York South for consideration by the House. His contention is that statements which have been made outside the House since yesterday or during the past few hours change the situation, that such ought to be taken into account by the Chair in ruling that there is a prima facie breach of parliamentary privilege. I understood that this was the essence of the argument of the hon. member for York South, and indeed that was the way his notice was given to the Chair. The hon. member in his notice said that he wanted to raise a question of privilege related to statements made in and out of the House yesterday concerning the government's attitude toward the requirements of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I do not see how I can take into account the precedents to base a prima facie case of privilege on statements made outside the House of Commons.

There are many precedents on this account. Hon. members may well remember an interesting precedent which goes back to June 10, 1964, when a similar matter was raised by the hon. member for Yukon who suggested that the Chair could not found a prima facie case of privilege, could not ask for the withdrawal of certain words, because such statements had been made outside the House of Commons. This is reported at page 4139 of Hansard of June 10, 1964 and is based on a number of precedents. The hon. member for Yukon at that time, among other references, quoted Beauchesne's Fourth Edition at page 57 where the following citation is found:

The Speaker's jurisdiction does not extend to words outside the House.

I would not think that in the circumstances, in view of this additional precedent, that it is incumbent upon the Chair to follow the advice of the hon. member to ignore the legal precedents, to ignore the rules, and to say that we ought to consider the matter he has raised by way of breach of parliamentary privilege.

I have thought about the matter very seriously, and as objectively and as fairly as I could when the matter was raised originally, I believe by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), by way of a question of privilege, but I cannot see that the additional factors brought to light by the hon. member for York South in support of his proposed motion should change the decision I reached on the previous occasion.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the persistence of the government in not upholding the law and carrying out the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, I consider it inappropriate that this House should consider any further business and I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That under the provisions of Standing Order 25 this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should point out that the hon. member did not have the floor for the purpose of proposing a motion, but that might be cutting things a bit fine. If I were to interpret the parliamentary rules very strictly, I would say it is not customary for a member, on a point of order, to move a dilatory motion, which is what is being done now. But this would not help very much because I am sure that within the next five minutes a motion would be placed before the House by a member who had the floor, not on a point of order, and so I see no purpose in not putting the motion at this time.

Mr. Jerome: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it may be that Your Honour is anticipating what will happen when we do move to motions, but nevertheless there could be announcements made at that time. I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) proposes to make an announcement on motions concerning the business of the House for the rest of this week, and that might very well have an influence on your decision.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that I can take this kind of suggestion into consideration. I cannot foretell that perhaps on motions later today, or at five o'clock this afternoon, or at the time of adjournment this evening, some announcement might be made which could cast a different light on the situation. I have to rule that the motion has been made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and I see no reason why it should not be put now.

Mr. Jerome: With the greatest respect, Your Honour, you said that we were not now on motions and that this motion is contrary to the rules.

Mr. Speaker: That is not what I said. The Standing Order provides that the motion can be made at any time, and it is not necessary that it be made on motions. It is moved by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that this House do now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. McGrath) which was negatived on the following division:

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as acting House leader I would like to advise Your Honour and the House that we will be calling Bill C-262. When third reading is completed it will be followed by Bill C-259. That procedure will be followed except on Thursday which will be an opposition day.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

POTATOES—ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 26, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin), the adjournment of the House in order that Parliament may discuss the establishment of price support for potato growers in view of the hardship they are now undergoing.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette has filed with the Chair the notice required by Standing Order 26. Careful consideration has been given to all factors to be taken into account before determining whether a matter should receive priority treatment. Specifically, the Chair has given detailed consideration to conditions prescribed in paragraph 16 of Standing Order 26. Although the matter raised by the hon. member for Joliette is one of great importance and undoubtedly of public interest, I have not been able to arrive at the conclusion that business on the agenda for today should be set aside in order to discuss the hon. member's motion.

I therefore regret that I cannot put the motion at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—FEDERAL PROGRAM TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT THIS WINTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As the proposed meeting with the provinces is now being suggested for December, some 10 weeks away and apparently at a time that would not be useful for discussing any shared-cost programs to be effective this winter, is the government preparing a federally financed program to provide jobs or opportunities for work to be announced prior to that time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have always made it clear that the federal government was studying plans and projects which might be announced in due course. I believe I have always made it clear as well that these would be done, in so far as they were under federal jurisdiction, without waiting for a federal-provincial conference. It was in response to opposition requests that I said a federal-provincial conference was being convened by me. I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition found it necessary to say that I was dishonest in using the federal-provincial conference date as a way of getting out of our task of fighting unemployment. I wonder if he regrets using that word.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is confused.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It was another statement of my right hon. friend that I characterized as dishonest.

Mr. Baldwin: It is nice to have a choice.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. I am not writing off the usefulness of the proposed meeting because it might be a suitable time to discuss appropriate programs for next summer. I should like to ask the Prime Minister what he hopes to achieve from this meeting in December with regard to jobs for this winter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a transcript of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. He said and I quote his words—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister is rising on a point of order or a question of privilege. I was prepared to recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix on a supplementary question. The hon. member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. I am sure the Prime Minister is anxious to answer the question I asked about what he hopes to achieve from this meeting with regard to jobs this winter.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has already recognized the hon. member for Charlevoix. Perhaps the Prime Minister might reply to both questions at the same time.

INDUSTRY

TROIS-RIVIÈRES—MEASURES TO AVOID LAY-OFF OF EMPLOYEES BY DOMTAR

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question similar to that asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

Since the Domtar Co. in Trois-Rivières intends to dismiss 650 employees as a result of the unpegging of the Canadian dollar, is the government ready to grant a subsidy to enable the Domtar newsprint plant to continue its operation and to prevent layoffs? If so, what kind of assistance is the government ready to grant?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has already announced in his budget speech various measures, some of which are of a general nature and others more especially concerned with the said industry.

The House is now considering Bill C-262, which is also likely to help. The province of Quebec has already announced reductions on wood cutting fees, which will also help. We are considering other alternatives. A number of ministers and representatives of this industry have scheduled an early meeting.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin), but I am under the impression that the question that he asked was not exactly supplementary to that of the Leader of the Opposition. I think that the latter himself would like to put a supplementary question. I shall recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) in a moment.

UNEMPLOYMENT—STUDY OF LATEST FIGURES—ACTION TO CREATE JOBS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I return to my question and ask the Prime Minister what he hopes to achieve from the December meeting with the provinces regarding jobs this winter?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stanfield: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that he has asked the question twice and has received no answer. As he knows, that is the privilege of the minister being questioned.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to trespass on your good nature, but it is usual to give the Leader of the Opposition the opportunity to ask a couple of supplementary questions and I trust I shall have that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition never trespasses on my good nature; that is why I recognized him again. What I am suggesting to him is that he has asked the same supplementary twice. He has the right to ask a supplementary, but no answer having been given to his supplementary question I have no alternative, unless he has a different supplementary question, but to go to another questioner.

An hon. Member: Make it a good one this time.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope hon. members on that side will not get too excited. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the study that the Prime Minister indicated nearly two weeks ago he would be making following the release of the latest figures on unemployment by Statistics Canada has been completed, and when may we expect the job-creating action that the Prime Minister indicated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will recall that I mentioned a study and analysis in relation to the rate of participation of young people in the labour force. I must say that I regret that the Leader of the Opposition said I was dishonest in talking about this. He should understand that the participation rate of young people in the labour force is not the same thing as the rate of entry of young people into the labour force. It is the participation rate of those who are of labour force age that I was studying. Here again, I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would like to regret that he used the word «dishonest» when it is obvious that he did not understand the problem in the first place—

Mr. Stanfield: I understood it.

Mr. Trudeau: —and he still does not understand it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Is the hon. member for Charlevoix rising on a point of order?

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

You stated a moment ago that my question was not related to the one asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Information was wanted on the government's intentions with regard to new jobs and to the measures taken to fight unemployment. That is why I wish to ask the minister a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I told the hon. member that, in my opinion, the supplementary question was not directly related to that of the Leader of the Opposition. I feel that, before coming back to the hon. member, in order to allow him to ask all the supplementaries he wishes, I should recognize the hon. member for York South who has a supplementary. Immediately after that, I will recognize the hon. member for Charlevoix.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED ADVANCEMENT OF DATE OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE FROM DECEMBER 6

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister the following question. In view of the fact that the rate of unemployment expected this winter will unfortunately be very considerable, and in view of the fact that works by the provinces and municipalities will also be needed in order to reduce unemployment to any considerable extent, would the Prime Minister reconsider advancing the date of the federal-provincial conference, which according to reports is now scheduled for December 6, to the end of October or early November in order that plans may be made by the municipalities and provinces as well as by federal authorities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me I did make it clear to the House that, as far as this government was concerned, it has been making every effort it could to find an early date for the conference—not that we have used the lack of such a date as an excuse for not acting but that we did realize the anxiety of the House and everyone in the country to have this date set as soon as possible. This is why the government proposed an early date. When the leader of the New Democratic Party suggested a date late in October, he was obviously assuming that one week after the Ontario election there could be a federal-provincial meeting of some significance. I assume he is presuming that the Conservative leader will be re-elected.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We on the government benches are not so certain. We rather think that there may be a change toward a Liberal administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore we cannot share the view of the leader of the New Democratic Party and Premier Schreyer that Mr. Davis will again be premier of Ontario.

Mr. Baldwin: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: I think Your Honour has held that we are not entitled to ask questions that call for an opinion. Equally the Prime Minister cannot give an opinion, especially when it is an unsound one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am going to try again despite the fact that the Prime Minister is playing games with a question as important as unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: May I tell hon. members opposite that yesterday the Prime Minister said that some of us were playing politics. If the Prime Minister's answer was not that, what was it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are not progressing very effectively this afternoon. Perhaps we might return to the question period with the hope that both questions and answers will be short and to the point.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is ready to reconsider moving the date of the meeting, now set for December 6, to an earlier date than December 6, if possible at the end of October or some time in the first part of November? If the end of October is not possible, would he consider some time in the early half of November so there would still be some time to make plans for winter employment? May I also say that the Prime Minister should not answer in the light way that he did—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I did make it quite clear to the House, and indeed I made it quite clear in my letter yesterday to Premier Schreyer, that I would welcome a much earlier date if one could be found. If the leader of the NDP can arrange with the provinces for an earlier date, that would be perfectly satisfactory to us. This involves a matter of finding a date on which 11 heads of government agree, and that is not always an easy task. That is why I began last July to suggest dates to all the premiers. That is why we proceeded as in the past in good faith by inviting the provinces to state whether or not they could come on the dates I suggested and, if not, what later dates they preferred.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The reason I say we should not play politics in that regard is that this practice has always worked well in the past. I am sorry that a certain premier is using this information, which up to now has been held confidential, as political ploy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, when you are able to restore order I should like to put my point.

An hon. Member: Say something, David.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that it is not conducive to the dignity of Parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —for the federal Prime Minister to make the kind of statement he has about a premier of a province.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I suggest to Your Honour and to the right hon. gentleman that the premier of that province is as anxious about the unemployment situation as the Prime Minister has been and that in view of the actions of the government the premier is probably a great deal more concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that the right hon. Prime Minister wishes to rise on the same point of order. It seems to me we have been dealing with the same point of order since the first question was asked this afternoon. I really do not think we have achieved very much by these exchanges. I would suggest to hon. members that perhaps we might try to go to a subject other than the one we have been debating for the last ten minutes, that is, whether a certain meeting should be held on a certain date or should not be held on that date. Questions have been asked and answers have been given, but it does not seem to me that the questions or the answers this afternoon have been conducive to settling the matter. Perhaps hon. members will be in a better mood tomorrow and we might then make a little better headway. If we continue in this tone I really do not think we will achieve anything.

I still have not had the opportunity to recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue for the purpose of asking a question, and the hon. member for Charlevoix, in a spirit of co-operation with the Chair, gave up his opportunity to ask a supplementary question. I hope that eventually we can give other hon. members who want to ask questions on other subjects an opportunity to do so and forget for the moment at least the point of order.

[Translation]

I think that, in all fairness, I should allow the hon. member for Charlevoix to put his supplementary. After that, I shall give the floor to the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE DIFFICULTIES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

A while ago he said the Minister of Finance had announced, in the budget, measures designed to remedy the situation I described.

As those measures did not have the expected results and Domtar is going to lay off 650 employees, could the minister tell us whether the government will soon announce another program to give the required help to save those industries, especially the Quebec pulp and paper industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to think that the dollar reevaluation is the sole reason for these difficulties. It is one among several others. I indicated that certain steps had been taken and that a meeting between government officials and the industry was scheduled. Obviously I welcome suggestions from the hon. member. Usually in this House hon. members suggest that I should close our door to imports and subsidize exports. This is rather difficult in view of our commercial interests and our commitments under GATT and other agreements.

Mr. Asselin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Charlevoix is rising on a point of order. After dealing with that point of order, I will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, oftentimes in this House when opposition members ask government members what programs they have in mind to correct a situation, they ask us what we would suggest. I should point out to the hon. minister who has just given me this answer that the Canadian people elected this government so that it could take decisions and govern.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order. The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PRICE OF GOLD

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the difficult economic situation now existing in Canada, is the hon. minister or the government considering the possibility of increasing the price of gold in Canada? In fact, a spokesman for the Group of Ten has advocated the revaluation of the gold standard, which would, I think, greatly spur the economy. Is the minister now studying this solution?

Mr. Pepin: I read in newspapers that very important meetings were being held within the framework of certain international programs. I think the Minister of Finance, on his return, will want to report on these meetings.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER AND AUTOMOBILES—EXPEDITING OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS THIS WINTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the substantial lay-offs in the pulp and paper industry across the country and the lay-offs in the automotive industry, generally contributing to the over-all critical unemployment situation, does the government propose to revise its policies under regional economic expansion and use these programs in an expedited way to create jobs this winter? Has this matter been discussed or will it be discussed with the provincial premiers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has received attention from the federal government and we believe that not only one of the objects but one of the effects of the department is the creation of more jobs in that type of region in Canada. If in our discussions with the provinces they can suggest a more effective way of using these programs we will certainly be glad to discuss them, but we will not wait for this conference to take place to improve our methods if we find ways to improve them.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in view of the lay-offs at Domtar, the anticipated lay-offs at Bowaters and the lay-offs in the automotive industry, what immediate steps does the government propose to take to alleviate this critical situation?

Mr. Trudeau: There is a measure before the House that has reached the third reading stage which is one of the very effective measures we hope to take to counteract some of the reasons for these lay-offs.

PULP AND PAPER—REASON FOR DOMTAR LAY-OFFS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister which is prompted by his last remark when he referred to the reasons for these lay-offs. I should like to ask what action he proposes to take or what priority is to be given, considering that the Domtar officials have not pointed a finger at the actions of the United States government but have singled out the action of this government as the reason for these lay-offs?

[Mr. Caouette.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I am correctly informed, one of the reasons they have pointed out was the fact that the Canadian dollar was floating and that the rate of exchange went up. The House knows as well as I why this action was taken a year and a half ago to float the dollar. I think the House realizes also that had we not done that we would now be in a much less tenable position vis-à-vis the United States to hold the discussions we are carrying on with them at this time.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, what priority is the government going to give Canadian industries' complaints that actions by the government have had detrimental effects throughout the nation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would have to tell us what actions he has reference to. I am sure there have been a host of accusations from the other side and I should like to answer his question as precisely as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will be running short of time very soon, but the hon. member has the right to rise on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the remarks of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the last remark of the Prime Minister. The House does not permit members of the treasury benches to ask questions of backbenchers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. MacInnis: I will see you outside and you can give me the answers.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT OF MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the municipal winter works program was most valuable and helpful in the past to municipalities, and knowing of the need of municipalities, especially the smaller ones, to make plans beforehand in respect of such projects, is he prepared to make an announcement as early as possible, certainly prior to the expected December 6 federal-provincial meeting, about a municipal winter works program in order that the provinces and municipalities which may want to take advantage of it can do so before winter sets in?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, any announcement which would be on a subject within federal jurisdiction and which we decided to make would be made well in advance of the federal-provincial conference. I believe the purpose of the conference is to discuss methods under joint jurisdiction or methods by which in co-operation we can help alleviate the economic difficulties of the country, but I repeat again this is not to say that any measures we want to take in the meantime will not be taken because of the late date of the conference.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the previous municipal winter works program which was very valuable, as everyone knows, was discontinued without reference to a federal-provincial conference, would the Prime Minister consider reinstituting it and making an announcement about it within the next few days?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not believe the assessment made by the hon. member that the previous program was very valuable is shared by everyone in this country, least of all by the municipalities themselves. They found that very often it was a wasteful program and asked the federal government to bring in better measures, which we did, and we have the manpower retraining program.

SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF EXCISE TAX AS STIMULANT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to remove the 12 per cent excise tax in order to boost the Canadian economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member suggests it, we will consider it.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he has asked a number of government departments, specifically Public Works and Regional Economic Development, to prepare a winter works program? If so, could he give us an understanding of the expectations he has set for the departments in question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there may be some misunderstanding about the use of the words "winter works". I take it that when this phrase is used reference is made to a previous program which existed in this country for a period of years. When I say that this particular program is one which was discontinued by the government, this does not mean that some program for work in winter will not be envisaged by the government. But I want to make it clear to the hon. member that the winter works program of which he seems to be speaking is not necessarily a program for work in the winter which of course is one we would envisage.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the question in clearer terms. Has the Prime Minister asked any government department to prepare any specific programs for this winter aimed at alleviating unemployment? If so, can the House be apprised of the expectations.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes; I believe a fortnight ago I informed the House that I had consulted several ministers responsible for economic matters in the country and asked them to give their immediate and deep attention to the problem of providing more work during the winter months. As I said, if an announcement has to be made as a result of their decisions it will be made in the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member wishes to ask a third supplementary. I will recognize him but perhaps he will allow the Chair to go to the next question thereafter. There are about ten minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister is investigating the increase in the Canadian population which he announced a few weeks ago, would he also investigate the reason for the decrease from 840,000 to 648,000 in placements by the manpower department between 1966 and 1971 even though the budget increased by 50 per cent during those years?

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO POTATO GROWERS—DISCUSSION BETWEEN FEDERAL AND CERTAIN PROVINCIAL MINISTERS—QUEBEC PARTICIPATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Referring to his statement of last Friday that he was to meet the agriculture ministers of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia regarding the difficulties which are facing potato producers, I would like to ask the minister whether the meeting was held and, if not, whether the provinces interested in that kind of production will be invited to discuss and find a solution to the problems of the producers.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The meeting started at five minutes to eight this morning. There were a number of alternative suggestions made, some of which cause us some difficulty in our international trade which they are now aware of. However, the officials of the provincial Departments of Agriculture and my department will continue to try to find an acceptable solution to alleviate this problem.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask the minister whether representatives from Quebec were present at that meeting. If not, did Quebec make representations asking for federal assistance, considering the nature of the problems involved?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to explain to the hon. member that this meeting was held this morning at the request of the two provincial Ministers of Agriculture who wished to come to Ottawa to have a meeting with me.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POTATOES—ASSURANCE TO PRODUCERS RESPECTING SEED EXPORT MARKET

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, could the minister now give an indication, following the meeting with the Ministers of Agriculture for Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, as to what assurance the potato producers in these provinces will have with regard to the very vital seed export market to the United States which has been very much in jeopardy because of the appreciation in the value of the Canadian dollar and the recently invoked 10 per cent import surtax in the United States?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a measure of assurance contained in the speech I made to the House about two and a half weeks ago.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since I believe it was obvious from the minister's speech that these two provincial ministers wanted to meet him in order to obtain some specific assurance that the very important seed exports to the United States from their provinces which have already been jeopardized to some degree will not further deteriorate, is the minister not able to offer some indication to the many producers in these two provinces as to the extent of any assurance?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, in that speech I dealt with the differences in how processed and non-processed products would be handled. I do not think I could add anything that would be useful because it was such a clear speech that I think it should be understandable.

OIL

POSSIBLE PIPELINE THROUGH CANADA TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES GOVERNMENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the statement made by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States indicating that delay in the planning of the Alaska route may result in a decision to build a pipeline from Prudhoe Bay through Canadian territory to the United States. I wish to ask the right hon. gentleman whether there have been any discussions between the Canadian government and the government of the United States regarding such a pipeline in recent weeks or months and, if so, by whom have these discussions been conducted?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any discussions which have been held in recent weeks or even in the last few months. I am not aware of any discussions having taken place since that which was last mentioned in the House, and I believe that was late in the spring or early in the summer.

[Mr. Olson.]

POSSIBLE PIPELINE THROUGH CANADA TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL—PROVISION OF DATA AND STUDIES TO U.S. TASK FORCE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the Canadian government provided any data or studies or any access to Canadian soil to the United States government for the gathering of data for their pipeline task force headed by Mr. Jack Horton?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there have been some official exchanges between the Canadian and American governments in that connection. I know that some studies are now being made by the Canadian government and private enterprise.

As for the American decision, we are not better informed than other members; we know that President Nixon has made a statement and that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Morton, came out with two apparently contradictory declarations. We are considering the situation and we will be reporting to the House, if necessary.

POSSIBLE PIPELINE THROUGH CANADA TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL—NOTICE OF MODIFICATION OF UNITED STATES POSITION

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wonder whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development could indicate whether he was given any advance notice by Mr. Rogers Morton, United States Secretary of the Interior, of his announcement three days ago that he was changing his position and for the first time would consider a Canadian route as an alternative to the Prudhoe to Valdez route?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Again I bring to the attention of hon. members that we are rapidly running short of time. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West for one last supplementary question on the subject.

POSSIBLE PIPELINE THROUGH CANADA TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL—ASSESSMENT OF ECOLOGICAL STUDIES BEFORE APPROVAL

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can combine my two supplementary questions into one. I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he can assure the House that before the Mackenzie Valley route is approved, all ecological studies and their implications will be thoroughly assessed? Further, when does the minister think he will be in a position to give a definitive answer, yes or no, to the Mackenzie route based on independent Canadian investigation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we cannot at this time say whether we would accede to a request for the construction of a pipeline for oil and another for gas. We are studying the situation and, when applications have been received with regard to this, the government will make a decision. We cannot do so at the present time.

YOUTH

INVESTIGATION OF OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM IN ORDER TO MAKE IMPROVEMENTS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the statement of the Secretary of State to the annual conference of the Social Development Council of Canada that the privileged classes received greater benefits from the Opportunities for Youth program than did the people who needed it most, is the Prime Minister now going to initiate an inquiry into specifically who benefited from the $67 million in student employment funds this summer so that programs designed to meet the real areas of need may be devised?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not seen the statement, but it is obvious that if the Secretary of State mentioned this it was because he had in mind looking for ways of improving the program. As the House knows, the Secretary of State has asked that a report be made on the success or otherwise of this summer's program. I am sure that as soon as possible he will be coming to the House with a report on that and, hopefully, we will be looking at ways in which we can spend the taxpayers' money even better in the future.

HOUSING

LAVAL, QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF PROJECT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Last week I asked him a question concerning the situation governing a condominium development called Les Abeilles. At that time the minister indicated that he would be making a study and would report to the House. At what stage is that study, and can he give us any factual information regarding the protection of the buyers, and also as to what efforts are being made to fix the responsibility for this ungodly mess?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Without accepting the premise of the final comment of the hon. member, I think I did indicate in reply to him the other day that we had taken steps through CMHC to protect the buyers of houses in that project. We have indicated to them that CMHC, which has now assumed ownership through an arrangement for the benefit of creditors, will complete the homes and repair them where necessary up to the standards set forth in the terms of the loan approval.

Second, we have indicated to the purchasers on record in that project that if they are in any way dissatisfied with the arrangement we will agree to get CMHC to repurchase the homes at any time during a period up to 18 months from now at the price they paid and allow them some consideration for expenses incurred if they wish to move.

As to the continuation of the review that is under way now, I have not received any final report. There are two prongs to that. One is within CMHC itself and, in addition, there is the commissioning of an independent technical report from a highly qualified and reputable firm of engineers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister that if he wishes to complete his answer it must be done by way of a statement on motions because we are running short of time.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

What policy does the government plan to implement in view of the re-organization of trade blocks in the world, and how will the Canadian economy subsist in the next few years if it tolerates cost increases such as those we experienced in the last few years while being able to meet the competition on world markets?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his important question is so general that the hon. minister should normally answer by a statement on motions.

FINANCE

PRESSURE FROM INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND TO REPEG CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government and he as head of the government are receiving any pressure from the International Monetary Fund regarding the repegging of the Canadian dollar which at present appears to be rising and will rise above the value of the American dollar, making it even more difficult for Canada to be competitive in trade?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I told the hon. member yesterday or the day before, I know of no such pressure. I did say that the idea was being put forth from various sources. Everyone would like to see the other country do something about its currency in the hope that it itself would not have to take any hard decisions. There have been representations from the International Monetary Fund for Canada to peg its dollar or, alternatively, to revalue it higher, but I know of no pressure in the sense of very strong official representations from any particular source or country to that effect.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Has the suggestion referred to by the Prime Minister come from the United States, among other countries, that the Canadian dollar should move up to a higher level in relation to the U.S. dollar?

Mr. Trudeau: To my knowledge such pressure has not come from the United States, but I would have to verify the discussions which took place at all levels.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TRANSFER OF LANCASTER HOSPITAL TO PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES—PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES' CONDITIONS OF SERVICE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of indications that there may shortly be a transfer of Lancaster Hospital in Saint John to the provincial authorities, can the minister give the assurance that public service employees who are involved will be given the same protection as to their conditions of service that applied in the case of other hospital transfers?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Negotiations are going on at present between the government of Canada and the government of New Brunswick with reference to the Lancaster Hospital transfer. As a matter of fact, there was an agreement between both governments as far back as 1968. The negotiations are not completed, but I wish to assure the hon. member that all possible consideration is being given to employment conditions and to other conditions of our employees presently at Lancaster Hospital.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATUS OF ARBITRATION OF NURSES' SALARIES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a supplementary and related question, Mr. Speaker, which I wish to direct to the President of the Treasury Board. It affects Lancaster Hospital and other hospitals. What is the status of the arbitration of salaries of nurses employed by the government of Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the notice of intention to ask the question. I should advise the hon. gentleman that arbitration hearings at the request of both parties were held in the early part of August, the third and fourth, I believe, and the arbitrator has undertaken to render a decision in not more than six weeks from that date.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WITHDRAWAL OF CHILDREN FROM SCHOOL BY PARENTS BECAUSE OF ALLEGED LACK OF FACILITIES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As a result of the meetings he has held with officials of the Indian Association of Alberta respecting the developments on several reserves in northeastern Alberta regarding the boycott by Indian schoolchildren, can the minister inform the House what steps are now being taken to resolve this dispute?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, following the two meetings I had on Thursday and Friday with the President of the Indian Association of Alberta, we agreed that Mr. Ross Moses, my special assistant, will go tomorrow to the Cold Lake area to investigate the matter and report immediately. We also asked the Indians to exercise pressures on the local band in order that the children be sent back to school as soon as possible, because it is not good that the children's education should be used to push demands with the government.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise the House whether any firm proposals will be put forth by his officials to the representatives of the Indian bands which would work toward a solution of the problem that has arisen there?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the demands had to do with education. Then the questions of economic development and drinking water were raised. This is really an intricate situation and we are not in a position to offer any solution to these problems. My special assistant will report to me this week and if we can make any recommendations, we will certainly do so.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: May I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has already had a supplementary. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Waterloo now and we might continue this subject tomorrow.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Vegreville that when he was recognized in the first instance the question period had already expired. I think he should be satisfied that he had the opportunity to ask a question and a supplementary while other members were still awaiting an opportunity to ask questions. I would suggest to him, as respectfully and as kindly as I can, that I will make every effort to give him an opportunity to ask his further supplementary question tomorrow.

FINANCE

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR IN RELATION TO UNITED STATES DOLLAR

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It is in connection with the level of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the United States dollar. Has the government made an appraisal of where it thinks the Canadian dollar should be vis-à-vis the American dollar and, if so, is it planning any action to maintain it at that particular level?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when we freed the Canadian dollar a year and a half ago we decided it should be left to the market forces to establish the rate, and we have not interfered significantly in the operation of those market forces.

Mr. Saltsman: May I take it from the right hon. gentleman's answer that the policy of the Canadian government is to let the dollar go to whatever level the market dictates even if that means a level of $1.05 in U.S. currency?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the supplementary is not in order. It is debate. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for South Shore and then call orders of the day.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING OF ATLANTIC FISHERIES TECHNOLOGICAL CONFERENCE—ACTION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the serious depletion of our fisheries resources off the coast of Atlantic Canada, will the minister be making a report to the House on the discussions and conclusions reached at the sixteenth Atlantic Fisheries Technological Conference presently being held in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, and which concludes its hearings on September 29? Will he be taking action on any of the recommendations made by this conference?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker, but I should be in a position to make a report to the House after October 8 when representatives of the fishing industry and the fishermen will be here in Ottawa to discuss this problem of consideration on the Atlantic Coast.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I waited until the end of the question period before raising this point of order. Some may think it is somewhat frivolous, but it arises out of the exchange between the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. member for York South when there was a new exhibition of Prime Ministerial pantomime in the House. I should like to know whether the Prime Minister was serious in inviting the hon. member for York South to try to convene a federal-provincial meeting before December 6.

I ask this question because we had one of these gratuitous and facetious invitations from the Prime Minister earlier this session, in May, when the hon. member for St. John's East tried to have a report of the Atlantic Development Council tabled in the House. At that time the Prime Minister told him, "If you have a copy, table it." The hon. member for St. John's East then stood and tried to table the report. There was a hassle, and Your Honour had to point out that, despite the Prime Minister's generosity for which he is known worldwide, it was not possible for the hon. member to table the document. The only reason I am raising this point now is that I want to know whether the hon. member for York South, if he seriously accepts the invitation of the Prime Minister, will be allowed to make a statement on motions on his attempts to convene a meeting?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was under the impression that the hon. member had completed his point. I am prepared to make a ruling, but if he has not completed his statement I would not want to interrupt him and would allow him to finish his remarks.

Mr. Nowlan: The only concluding remark I want to make is that throughout these question periods it has become increasingly evident that the Prime Minister is abdicating responsibility, and many people in the country are wondering whether he wants to run a government or a holiday magazine.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

MEASURE TO MITIGATE EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY OF IMPOSITION OF FOREIGN IMPORT SURTAXES

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as we go into third reading on this bill, I would like to clarify some of the points that have been made in the House and in the committee so that we may be aware of the problems that have been raised. It is very obvious that the bill itself is not designed to solve all of the problems of unemployment in Canada, or all of the problems of industry. It is designed specifically to mitigate the problems that have arisen as a result of the imposition of a surtax by the United States on Canadian exports to that country. It is designed also to provide a vehicle to cope with similar problems that might arise at another time as a result of such action by other countries. Hon. members should view the legislation in that light, and in that light only.

During the course of our debate, both in the committee and in the House, from time to time a question was raised on the possibility of countervailing action being taken by the United States against exports from Canada that might benefit from this measure. In the standing committee the minister stated that, in theory, any form of government assistance, direct or indirect, visible or invisible, given to exports could attract some kind of U.S. countervailing action.

In the past U.S. actions along this line have not been very consistent, and so it is difficult to ascertain what the U.S. might do in this instance. There have been instances where the United States applied countervailing measures against some countries, and totally ignored the possibility of applying them against other countries. A long time ago they used countervailing action against countries which sold them raw materials at prices which the Americans thought were too high. Presumably they might again use countervailing action in that way, but the most interesting use of countervailing action by the Americans has been in instances where other countries applied import surcharges against their products. I am sure in applying countervail, the United States will be cognizant of action that they themselves have taken in the past.

In the context of the employment support program we believe, and sincerely believe, that United States countervailing action would not be warranted. The whole purpose of this bill is to avoid serious employment dislocation in Canada. It is not an export subsidy. There is no obligation on the part of a company receiving assistance to maintain any export level. The assistance provided by this program is provided mainly to tide over affected companies until the surtax is removed or until such time as they can make adjustments which may be necessary in their products. A company is free to do so by developing new product lines, introducing new products, developing new markets or in fact anything other than production as long as it maintains an agreed level of employment. That is the key factor, an agreed level of employment. The program will not give Canadian firms an unfair competitive advantage in export markets. May I remind hon. members that assistance will be given only to the extent needed to maintain employment levels; no more and no less.

The assistance under the program will be available to firms of all sizes. This point was discussed in committee and I want to make that clear, assistance will be available to firms of all sizes, large or small. The point that is important is the degree of unemployment in a particular plant. The program makes no distinction based on the size of the applicant and, of course, assistance will be provided on a plant basis.

During the course of debate yesterday an amendment was proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I should like to refer to an argument raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in that regard. The hon. member said that it would be possible to debate the matter, that is a new set of regulations, if the matter were deemed important enough. What is an important matter, Mr. Speaker? I submit to you that what is important to one member of this House may not be the least bit important to the majority of other members. If a price support program were announced for the apple growers of Okanagan Boundary riding, I would think it the most important program to come before this House and if the amendment suggested was passed, I would believe that to be such an important item that it would have to be referred to the House. To another member from Alberta or Saskatchewan, if the National Energy Board were to decides to change the regulations to include a new pipeline across Canada, that would be of undoubted importance and those members would want to refer it to the House.

[Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary).]

There are many other examples of this type of situation and we could end up by referring every matter to the House of Commons, spending day after day, seven hours of debate after seven hours of debate after seven hours of debate—we would never come to the end, in order to deal with the matters that some member of this House considered of vital importance.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention that the government intends to put this program into operation just as soon as it can be approved so that assistance can be provided immediately to the companies and the employees needing it. We want to forestall the possibility of employment disruption and we want to do that as quickly as possible. I should like to thank hon. members on both sides of the House and in committee for their assistance in processing this bill so quickly. I think all members have recognized the importance of it and we have had a great deal of co-operation.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, I should like to add one point concerning the debate yesterday. We had some discussion at one point and a little confusion on the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) concerning the possibility of changes in the reporting procedure contained in clause 21 of the bill. While we did not succeed in coming to an agreement on changes in the reporting procedure that would satisfy the hon. member and his party, the minister has agreed, and I can assure the House on his behalf, that he is prepared to submit quarterly reports to the House rather than annual reports. If this will make it possible to give hon. members on the other side more access to information, we are prepared to accommodate them. We say quarterly because we feel this would be more practical than monthly and would be often enough to overcome the difficulties discussed in yesterday's debate. The minister is also prepared to provide additional information if it can be done without infringing upon the private business interests of the firms concerned in the program.

I wish to thank hon. members for their assistance in the speedy passage of this important legislation to which business and labour in Canada are looking forward eagerly.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on third reading of this measure to indicate is that I intend to support it but that I am rather reluctant and uneasy in doing so. In the next few moments, I should like to point out some of my doubts in the hope that when the regulations are drawn up it may yet be possible for the government to make provisions that will help many individual companies which I feel cannot qualify under the provisions outlined to us in this measure and before the committee.

One of the reasons for my uneasiness is that this bill is explicit; it is an act in support of employment. In other words, it is just another adjunct to the whole program of unemployment insurance and is not, as we pictured it, a bold and determined effort to sustain our industry when faced with the problem of the surcharge. I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, because this seems to be the main government thrust in protecting our industry from the obvious economic dangers involved. Coming as I do from a province where industry is vastly important, I believe I have reason to express some doubts that this measure will serve the purpose for which it was so hastily designed.

Testimony before the committee and following on the statement made by the minister in the House, make it quite obvious that the actual aid to industry in Canada is going to be limited by the very regulations that are proposed to be drawn up to make this bill operative. If my memory serves me correctly, when this measure was introduced in this House the minister said that in his opinion a survey would show that perhaps 160 industries would be directly involved. This figure, 160, does not mean very much unless you compare it with some other figure. The figure I should like to use is taken from a compilation by Statistics Canada which indicates that in 12 months 5,600 new industries were formed in the province of Ontario alone, if my memory serves me correctly. Yet, here, the minister has spoken of helping 160 industries in Canada. I was interested to learn that 2,300 or 2,400 of the 5,600 new industries I have mentioned will employ less than five people and that only 67 of that entire group will employ over 100 people. This indicates that there will be a tremendous number of companies which, although affected directly or indirectly by the surcharge, will have no hope of being "resuscitated" by the measure before us.

To illustrate my point, may I indicate that in the committee hearings the most striking phrase used by government spokesmen and witnesses regarding the application of this measure was, and this was repeated time and again, that this measure would be employed when there was a severe disruption of employment. They spoke of disruption of a regional nature. It will be difficult to assess whether a small industry employing, say, 20 or 25 people which loses 20 per cent of its business and has to discharge five or six people will suffer from a major disruption in employment. Actually, the parliamentary secretary explained, and I think he was justified in so doing, that disruptions of this nature might constitute problems connected more with employment agencies or unemployment insurance than with any problems as to whether such industries might qualify for assistance under this measure. That is where the government and I part company. It seems that this measure is specifically designed to help large corporate entities and a tremendous number of small businesses cannot hope to qualify.

Under the provisions of the bill there could be a 90-day delay in payments, even after the qualifications of the company involved have been ascertained. Mr. Speaker, that 90-day delay could be a matter of life or death to some of the industries affected. It is all very well to say that a company must lose 20 per cent, 30 per cent, or any other figure that one cares to use, of its export business before it can qualify. The point is that there are many industries which are definitely and directly affected by the surcharge which do not, by themselves, export a single item. The production of many such small companies consists of component parts which are furnished to major industries. Those industries assemble the component parts and export them to the United States and other countries. It is difficult to anticipate how any company, so affected indirectly and employing a small number of workers, could ever hope to retrieve any portion of its business losses through this measure.

I feel that many hundreds of businesses across the country could be hurt by those actions from which we are trying to protect our businesses. The major business concerns of this country, which by their nature are big, will be in the position to claim some of these moneys. I do not think we fully realize the tremendous intrusion in the normal flow of business that measures such as we are discussing can effect. There are in the corporate empires many learned men who have foresight and drive enough to take advantage of a government measure such as this. I am very much alarmed about the way in which this bill will be applied.

During the committee proceedings, it was illustrated to us that a department of a corporation or a subsidiary of a corporation could put itself in the position of qualifying for assistance under this measure. I believe the parliamentary secretary indicated that there would be no strings on the money, provided the level of employment is kept up. The money could be used to develop major research, to develop new products, to develop new production levels and machinery, to develop a new sales force in lieu of a production force—in other words, to change the entire characteristics of the business. This is all very well if you consider it from a philosophical or ideal approach. Practically, however, you must consider the power of the labour unions in directing whether a man or men may be shifted to another part of the operation or whether a man can be taken off a lathe and sent to paint a fence in the back. All this makes me think that this measure, in certain situations, will have no application whatever.

Added to that is the general feeling abroad that the actions of the country to the south are temporary only. They may last for 90 days, three months, six months, 12 months or even two years. What bothers me is this: many large corporations in the business world with tremendous production facilities can take advantage of these grants to sustain employment and production levels by doing nothing else but stockpiling thousands and thousands of units. Nothing in this measure prevents a company from taking such action. After all, they would be maintaining employment; they would be creating employment that the government is so seriously concerned about. Consequently they will stockpile units, knowing full well, Mr. Speaker, that the surcharge will end eventually. Think of the beautifully competitive position such a company will be in when it has a tremendous stockpile of units, two-thirds paid for by government grants. It will be able to ship the units overseas to any country it pleases. I say this is a major weakness in the bill. The tremendous volume of units or goods so stored will create tremendous pressures on local markets.

Mr. McCleave: We shall see a postponed glut.

Mr. Danforth: As my hon. friend says, we shall see a postponed glut. We are deliberately asking for more trouble because of direct government intervention in the affairs of the business community.

The business community is aware of something else. They know that under any program run by any government department, the assistance you obtain is not always the result of direct need or the fact that you are completely qualified for assistance. Too often it is a question of "Do you have the right person in the right department to catch the right ear at the right time?". I am afraid that under the regulations proposed for this particular measure, a tremendous opportunity will develop for the very companies which need it the least to make available to their subsidiaries the greatest amount of government money, whether these subsidiaries are Canadian owned or directed from outside the country.

There is one other factor which we should very seriously consider. We are bandying about this estimate of $80 million. It was brought out in committee that the $80 million is just a figment of someone's imagination. It was picked out of the air. It is an estimation of what might be expended if this measure is operative for six months. It could be $80 million, but if this program runs for 12 months the figure could be $160 million, $200 million or $250 million. No one has any idea of the amount of money involved. What we are doing is handing a piece of legislation to the government which they say will be of a permanent nature and will take care of any contingency that is now taking place or will take place in the foreseeable future. Parliament is granting the government a blank cheque. It can spend as much, wherever and whenever it wishes on whatever corporation meets its fancy at a particular time. This is what disturbs me. We are talking about $80 million. Will that $80 million be for the relief of industry or will $25 million be for the out-of-pocket payments to the bureau which will be set up to administer it and $45 million for industrial payments? These are the questions I wanted to bring before Your Honour. I am uneasy about this aspect of such a bill.

To recap, I do not feel that this measure is going to be the prime solution to this problem. From its very concept, the haste and manner in which the regulations will be drafted and the way the program is being set up, I do not think this measure can possibly perform the function which this government is relying upon it to perform. The $80 million, $150 million or $200 million which we are talking about will not be spent on exports. In other words, we will not be accomplishing anything. We will not be increasing the gross national product, but we will be deliberately creating a glut. Is it not conceivable that either through a spinoff or in conjunction with these tremendous sums of money, we should develop an export outlet which could determine what markets we can service, even under this particular difficulty? We should not only be concerned about maintaining the present output of our industry, but increasing this output by export sales.

Other countries, such as Japan, West Germany and industrial countries whose production is the envy of the world, are not taking measures which will gradually encircle the country and cut down their industrial potential, but are exerting pressure to break out of the shell and increase their industries.

I have grave doubts about this measure. We always seem to take a negative attitude in the face of adversity, regardless of the direction from which it comes. The only exception in this case is the government has recognized that industry is facing a problem and it is trying to do something about it. Too often in the past we have seen the same thing happen and the government almost seemed oblivious to the problem. An agricultural section of Canada has faced a severe drought and almost complete crop loss. The catches are no longer there for our fishermen. As far as their business is concerned, they almost face extinction. I could cite many other examples in the past few years when nothing has been done. We talk about $80 million. If one of our major purchasers of grain were delinquent in paying for 100 million or 200 million bushels of grain, as has happened in the past, the economic impact on the people is far greater than that of this surcharge, yet we would not be able to move.

My one great disappointment in connection with this bill is that the government in its wisdom has determined to completely eradicate any opportunity for the primary producers of this country to take advantage of its provisions. I refer to agriculture, fishing, the pulp and paper industry, the mineral industry, all those which produce primary products. According to the definition section of this bill, they are not eligible. We desperately tried to convince this government that they should be included, but the government determined they should not. This is very unfortunate. There is going to be a good deal of hardship. We must accept this measure because the government has offered no alternative. It may help 2,000 or 3,000 Canadians to maintain their employment, but as a solution to the problem before us I do not have any confidence in it whatsoever.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I want to take note of the offers made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howard) on behalf of the minister to make more information available to members and the public with regard to the operations of this bill once it has been enacted into law. I welcome this concession. It is in the interests of all from two points of view to take every possible step to make more information available on this piece of legislation.

First, we in Parliament are being asked to give what amounts to a blank cheque to the government. Without getting into the argument that took place on this subject yesterday, when legislation which provides for a wide area of discretion to the government is passed there is some obligation placed on the government to make as much information available to members as possible. Second, any steps that can be taken to make further information available to members of this House and the public will be in the government's own interest in terms of its negotiating position with other countries. This will strengthen the government's hand in terms of making it clear to other countries which might be concerned about this legislation that we do not have anything to hide. It will show that the government is laying its cards on the table, making information available and that we are not attempting to hide our operations in any way.

It is in the government's own interest to make information available to the public, certainly in terms of the government's negotiating position with other countries in the very difficult international situation that exists at the present time. All members of this House will want to do everything possible to ensure that Canada's interests are presented in a way which will result in a suitable and satisfactory solution for Canada to the problem which now exists.

With regard to the bill now before us for third reading, I have to again raise one of the points discussed during the second reading debate. I refer to the fact there is no real policy framework within which this bill has been devised and formulated. It has become abundantly clear from the minister's statements, lack of answers in some respects and lack of specific information on how this bill is going to operate that there is a large vacuum, an absence of policy on the part of the government. In fact, in many respects the government has no answers. It has never provided answers on where Canada is headed in the present difficult situation. I would acknowledge that the government had to do something in the present situation. In the absence of any alternative they had to adopt some emergency measures. It is quite clear that the actions taken by the United States in particular will have some impact on the Canadian economy. It is also clear that those actions are going to hurt various sectors of our economy.

I think it will be recognized within Canada that it is only natural and right that there should be some response by the Canadian government. I think that other governments in the world, particularly the United States government, recognize as well that they have to expect some counteraction by other countries such as Canada in response to the unilateral action announced by President Nixon on August 15.

I hope this bill will be of some assistance in the present difficult economic situation. For our own part, we are doubtful that it will be of any real benefit, that it will accomplish anything in terms of whatever objectives the government is trying to achieve. We have already made our points regarding why we feel these objectives, whatever they may be, will not be accomplished. If the bill is passed, receives royal assent and goes into operation, then we will have to wait and see what transpires. We hope that on the basis of the discretionary authority that the bill gives the government some useful programs will be developed. It seems to me very difficult to evolve any sort of meaningful program, whether in terms of this bill or any other possible measure, unless we have adequately defined national objectives and have determined just where Canada is going. Some change in the direction our policies are taking would seem to be indicated at this time.

Most members on this House would want to see steps taken by Canada to ensure that trade barriers are lowered in the world. Looking at the other side of the coin, they also want to see that as few barriers as possible are erected. I am sure the government would have the support of all members in the House in any steps it took to ensure that trade barriers are lowered and kept lowered in the future.

It seems to me that the government has to consider the course of its policies regarding development in Canada. It must consider what direction this development policy is going to take. Are we going to adopt policies that will result in giving us a greater degree of control over our own affairs and destiny? Are we simply going to be subject to the whims of fortune—whatever they may be—on the economic national scene? What we have to keep in mind, whatever course of action we decide to take, is that the basic purpose of economic policy and developmental strategy is the building of a society within which we place a certain value on the welfare and wellbeing of human beings, a society to which Canadians are proud to belong, a society that has concern for others both within the context of the structure of the nation and within the context of the international community.

I should like to stress this last point for a moment because, in spite of our natural consideration for the national wellbeing of Canadians and the future of Canada, we have to keep in mind that Canadians live in an international community and that, by the very nature of our history, our wellbeing is tied up with international economic affairs. We must recognize that in effect this planet is becoming smaller, that we have to live with our neighbours in all parts of the world, and that the international community is becoming more closely linked together. In that context, we want to do everything possible on the international economic scene to reduce the power that is presently in the hands of very few nations, power that influences in a very fundamental way the course of affairs of many nations in the world. As is painfully obvious at the present time, many countries have very little ability to control their own economic and social destinies in face of action taken by other countries.

Since we gave this bill second reading, there have been further developments in the world economic scene. It is perfectly clear that the surcharge announced by President Nixon on August 15 is not temporary, that is it is going to be in effect for some time. We will have to decide just how to deal with that situation, and must recognize that there will not be an early lifting of this import surcharge, contrary to what was said earlier by some United States officials. It is also clear that we will have to have a realignment of world currencies. This has become particularly obvious during the last few days. In addition, it is becoming obvious that, given the present situation, there will have to be some upward revaluation of the Canadian dollar. We must examine the implications of this, how it is going to affect various sectors of our economy and determine who is going to be hurt as a result.

We must also take note of the consequences of the economic policy which the government has been following over the last number of years. The fact is that the government's economic and tax policies, as we have known them in recent years, have been geared to the development of industries which primarily are engaged in the production of raw materials for export. This production requires large capital investment, which means there are large inflows of capital into Canada. Even though this capital produces many goods for export, all too often it produces very little in the form of gainful employment for Canadians.

We now have a very severe upward pressure on the Canadian dollar occasioned by the large outflow of exports of raw materials. The government now finds itself face to face with the consequences of its own economic policies of recent years, and this pressure is one more indictment of the very bad policies the government has been following. As a result of the policies that the government has been following over the past 15 to 20 years, many Canadian industries have been placed in a very difficult financial position. We must also recognize that unless we find an early solution to some of the problems facing Canada and other nations, it is possible that a trade war will develop. We must do everything to ensure that such a war is avoided. At the same time, Canada must take a very firm stand on some of the problems facing us and see that Canada's interests are protected in international negotiations.

During the second reading debate, I suggested there were two major points that should be noted by members of the House. The first was that the economic policy which the government has been following is now in a shambles. The fact is that one of the basic assumptions upon which the government's economic policy was based has now been shown to be false. The assumption was that in late 1971 and early 1972 there would be a significant upturn in the United States economy, and that there would be such an overflow of benefits that the government ought to take them into account in considering a policy for Canada. This has now been shown to be completely false.

Certainly, the United States has taken action to gear up and step up its economy, but those actions have not been in Canada's interest and are not going to be to Canada's benefit. Certainly, it is just the opposite. This indicates that the government was on a faulty course, and it shows the government was not thinking of Canadians first, as it should have been. I think it was a false assumption and one for which this government stands to be severely condemned.

Second, we have also had demonstrated to us the heavy dependence of Canada on the United States economy and the fact that we have a high degree of foreign control over our own economy. This locks us in, in many respects, not only in terms of corporate operation by government policy. If the government attempts now to tamper with the export of raw materials, which I think it certainly will have to consider, this will affect Canada's relations with the United States. We have put ourselves into this box. The government's faulty course of action has led this country into a trap by allowing our economy to become so heavily dependent on the U.S.

I note that we now have the Liberal party climbing on the bandwagon of Canadian nationalism, as it is sometimes called. However, I think some of the statements made in recent days by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and other spokesmen on behalf of the government, are going to sound rather hollow to many Canadian people. It seems to me that Canadians are not going to be easily fooled by the statements of the Prime Minister and others that we now have to do something to gain control over our economy and to make sure we are the masters of our own destiny. How can they say this honestly, in a forthright manner, in face of the policy vacuum which existed in recent years? The government has held off for months and even years producing this policy statement on foreign ownership. Certainly, I do not think these late-in-the-day statements from the Prime Minister are going to go down very well with the Canadian public.

There are a number of policy steps which could be taken by the government that would be of very real benefit to Canadians in present circumstances. Let me briefly mention some of the points I feel should be considered by this government. One of the first, and the most important, is to take all possible action to lower interest rates in Canada. The government has maintained in recent days that it has taken action to lower interest rates in this country, and I cannot argue with that. At the same time, however, it will have to be recognized by the government that it is still following a tight money policy. Certainly, the current level of bank and interest rates in this country have been acknowledged by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and other government spokesmen, to represent a tight money policy. This fact has to be recognized by the government. The government will have to take further action to bring about a lowering of interest rates in Canada with the consequences which will flow from such action. The government must also take steps to slow down capital movements into Canada. This is certainly one of the things that does create imbalances in our exchange rates and our balance of payments situation.

Third, the government urgently needs to adopt expansionary fiscal and monetary policies to a greater extent than it has up to the present time. The answers of the Prime Minister in the House during the past few days were very disappointing in that he failed to indicate in any way that the government was prepared to take any real initiative in dealing with the unemployment situation in Canada. He seems to be more interested in shadowboxing than in taking any concrete measures.

Fourth, we must have more monitoring of foreign-owned subsidiaries in Canada. This is something which has been advocated on many occasions. Many questions have been asked in the House, and the government has had special studies commissioned by some well-known experts who came up with the recommendation that an agency should be established to monitor foreign-owned subsidiaries in this country.

Fifth, we must give consideration to levying a selective export tax on our raw materials. I hope the minister will note the manner in which I phrased that suggestion: we should give consideration to this. I recognize that when dealing with different commodities there are various pros and cons which have to be taken into account, but certainly this is one of the possibilities that should be mentioned in the negotiations the government will be conducting.

Sixth, I suggest that some definite steps should be taken to assist both agriculture and fisheries under present circumstances. Such provisions are absent from the present legislation, and I will come back to that in a few moments, Mr. Speaker.

Seventh, the government should give serious consideration to embarking upon a real selling effort for Canada and a policy which would result in new trade patterns and alignments with other countries in the world. We should not look at just the dark side of this picture, we should look at the bright side as well. While the immediate situation Canada is facing is very serious and has very serious consequences, the other side of the coin does present Canada with an opportunity to bring about the type of re-alignment of its trade patterns which has been advocated by many people in Canada for many years, but in respect of which the government has done very little.

Thus, I think the general view of the NDP on the bill is that it is inadequate, but we will have to wait to see what results will be obtained. We feel it really does not represent an answer to the problems facing Canadians at the present time. The manner in which the bill has been drafted might cause one to say that the proper title should be the corporate welfare assistance act rather than the Employment Support Act. That would be a much more suitable title for this bill.

We have already expressed our disappointment that this bill is going to apply only to manufacturing industries. We recognize there are very real problems facing some manufacturing industries in Canada, and in particular many of the people who are employed in these industries, but we feel there are other problem areas in Canada. This is why I want to return to a discussion of the position and the problems of agriculture and fishing. We moved a motion during the report stage which would have adopted the principle of including agriculture and fishing within the framework of this legislation in so far as that might do any good, but this was ruled out of order. At this moment I am not taking issue with the ruling, but this was the purpose we had in mind. We wanted to see some action taken to help the farmers and fishermen under present circumstances.

When we look at this matter, we have to keep in mind what is happening to farmers and fishermen in this situation. The government's own analysis provides some information on this aspect. This analysis, which was published some time ago, shows that animal and vegetable products, as one of the group of exports to the United States, are more affected by the measures announced by President Nixon than any other sector of the Canadian economy. Some 63.5 per cent of exports of animal and vegetable products to the United States, using 1970 as a basis, are subject to the import surcharge. This compares to 24.8 per cent of the over-all exports from Canada to the United States. This 63.5 per cent is higher than the figure for any other sector outlined by the government. There are some individual or groups of commodities in respect of which there is a higher figure, but in terms of a sector analysis, animal and vegetable products, which include both agriculture and fisheries products, are more severely affected than any other group of products.

What has the government's response been to this? When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) spoke during the debate on second reading he said the government was going to use the Agriculture Stabilization Act; they were going to conduct a commodity by commodity review and then take action wherever it was needed. What action have we seen from the government? All we have had from the government has been some inane answers in which the government suggests it is still looking at the situation and trying to decide what to do. In fact, one of the most recent questions was asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), last Friday. He asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) the following question:

> In view of the statement to the House by the Minister of Agriculture that the effect of the surcharge on agriculture would be handled commodity by commodity, is there under way a study commodity by commodity of how the surcharge is affecting Canadian agricultural production, and may we be advised very soon in the House of what the policy will be and how these specific instances will be taken care of.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Then, the Minister of Agriculture answered:

> Yes to the first part of the question, and as soon as possible to the second part.

That seems to be the old refrain we hear from Liberal cabinet ministers whenever it comes to doing anything about agriculture or the problems of the farmers. When it comes to the problems of some other industries in Canada, where admittedly problems do exist, they come up with policies, however inadequate they may be. When it comes to farming or fishing, however, all they can say is that they are conducting a commodity by commodity review and that they will come up with a policy as soon as possible. That is the old refrain the farmers have been hearing and they are becoming tired of it. I am sure that even the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) may be beginning to understand that some people in western Canada are getting cynical when they continue to receive this answer week after week and month after month. A great deal of concern has been expressed on this matter by farmers and also by the fishermen.

One example of the concern is expressed in a letter addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by Mr. E. K. Turner, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. This letter was sent to the Prime Minister on or about September 9, and in it Mr. Turner stated that Canadian farmers deserved financial compensation for injury resulting from recent United States economic policies.

In his letter to the Prime Minister the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool also noted that Parliament has under consideration legislation to take care of the expected build-up in the numbers of unemployed in Canada as a result of international developments. Then, he pointed out the fact that animal and vegetable products which comprise some 15 per cent of exports from Canada to the United States, using the 1970 figure again, would be subject to the United States import surcharge. He stated that the amount involved is some $422 million which is 15 per cent of the total value of our exports. Therefore he suggested, on the basis of the government making $80 million available as compensation for the adverse affects on Canadian industry of the import surcharge imposed by the United States, that certainly there was a case for ensuring that some $12 million or 15 per cent of the $80 million be made available to farmers and fishermen to compensate them for the added difficulty they face in an already difficult situation.

Then, Mr. Turner pointed out another very important matter, namely that the structure of farming and fishing in most instances is different from that which we encounter in dealing with other industries in Canada. In his letter to the Prime Minister he said:

> . . . but the net effect of under-employment of labour and under-utilization of other production resources because of the surtax could have a severe effect on the individual producer of certain commodities.

Then, he pointed out further that farmers are self-employed, as are many fishermen, and therefore are in a different position from those in some other industries. Mr. Turner went on to point out he was happy to note that at least the government was prepared to accept the principle that the government has an obligation to help industry in Canada when it faces problems such as are being faced at the present time. Certainly, if that principle is to be accepted, then the case for helping agricultural producers and fishermen is as good or better than that for helping any other sector of the Canadian economy. I think it must also be noted that Canadian farmers already face a very difficult situation. They have suffered very severe declines in income and they are suffering as a result of the competition they have to face from the treasuries of other countries. They have been left to face this competition with very little help from the federal government. This, I believe, is a factor which should be taken into account.

Some of the concerns of western Canada have also been pointed out by the Western Producer in an editorial dated September 23. The editorial reads:

> Practically every farm leader in Canada has publicly protested the Canadian government's apparent lack of concern for farmers, who, just as in the case of other industries, are bound to feel the adverse effects of recently-adopted U.S. economic policies. As we noted in this space last week, the government, on the very first day of the new session, announced its plans for assistance to industry.

The reference to industry was, of course, to western agriculture. Then, later the editorial continues:

> It seems to us, and to a good many others, that the government was caught flat-footed without a clue as to what should be done to provide farmers with some measure of assistance that would at least partially soften the blow of falling prices and shrunken markets which are bound to be the result of the U.S. protectionist program. Other than some vague suggestion that existing price support legislation might be used, there was nothing to indicate in government answers to opposition questions that any serious thought had been given to crisis faced by the farmers.

Then, again later on the editorial points out:

> But the keynote of federal government agricultural policy to date is that everything has been too little and too late, and on occasion, anything but effective.
> Mr. Turner's plea for equal consideration of farmers with other segments of industry in this matter is particularly appropriate at this time. He seeks, not special privileges, but an equitable share of a fund set up by the government, ostensibly to assist all industry affected by the new U.S. policy. The government's response to Mr. Turner's request will be enlightening in many ways.

Mr. Turner made other comments to the effect that businessmen and others across the country are worried about the squeeze and that there are 400,000 individual farmers in this country facing a very severe squeeze as well. What does the government intend to do about the situation? We have heard nothing but noncommittal answers from both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture.

[Mr. Burton.]

I think it should be emphasized today that we face a very serious farm income situation in Canada and that farmers faced a crisis long before the current situation developed. The fact is that farm income has been dropping severely in recent years. When one compares the different sectors of the Canadian economy, possibly even the minister may be impressed by the problems faced by the agricultural sector of our economy. We could point out the various categories of income in Canada. I have before me a table released by Statistics Canada, an agency which comes under the jurisdiction of the minister. I presume he has received a copy and I hope he has given it some very close study because it notes that interest, dividends, and miscellaneous investment income of persons between 1969 and 1970 increased from $4,169,000,000 to $5,400,000,000. That is an increase of some $440 million, 9 per cent or 10 per cent. For non-farm, unincorporated business the net income rose from $4,410 million to $4,551 million, not much of a rise but certainly some increase as well. Wages, salaries and supplementary labour income, which also includes the salaries of all highly paid executives and other people, rose from $43 billion to $47 billion, which is a healthy increase. With respect to agriculture, however, the net income received by farm operators from farm production dropped from $1,644 million in 1969 to $1,162 million in 1970. That is a drop of almost $500 million in one year, a drop of one third in one year. It seems to me that this is a crisis of the first magnitude in Canada, and one which should receive top priority from the federal government.

• (4:40 p.m.)

But what do we hear from the government? They are conducting a commodity by commodity review. They will announce their policy as soon as possible. For years their policy has been to do as little as possible and to do nothing whenever it is possible. I think we have also seen within the past year a number of indications that the government is committed to a policy of doing as little as possible for the farmers of this country, as little as it can get away with. I do not intend to debate some other measures which are and have been before this House, but I think they do need to be drawn to the attention of the House within the context of this debate. We have had before the House for debate, as hon. members know, the government's proposed grain stabilization plan. The government is trying, through this piece of legislation, to limit its commitment in terms of dollars to assist agriculture in Canada. It is trying to find some ceiling on the amount of money that it will make available to grain producers in western Canada. Regardless of what the minister says or what the government says, this is the reality and the impact of this piece of legislation.

Then, we can also take a look at what the government did when the Canadian dollar was freed over a year ago. The minister and the House know that members of the NDP supported this measure in principle. But we also recognized that, because of the very diverse type of economy we have in Canada, there would be some adverse effects as well. We recognized and pressed on the government the adoption of the principle that help should be given to any industries which were adversely affected by the freeing of the Canadian dollar a year ago. The minister, later on in answer to a question said "oh yes, we help various manufacturing industries and some other large firms in coping with the problems they face". But what did they do for agriculture? Absolutely nothing. The minister knows very well that there are various sectors of farming and fishing in Canada which are very dependent upon export markets.

Let me give one specific example. Wheat producers had to take the brunt of an immediate 6 cents per bushel drop in the price of wheat. The government allowed them to take it; they allowed this to go on without any interference or any assistance in any way. This is indicative of the government's attitude and approach to agricultural matters. Now, we have the new situation which I have been describing in which the government is just adopting a stand pat policy in dealing with agricultural problems which have arisen as a result of recent economic developments. I cannot stress too much the importance of this question. I feel this is one of the fundamental questions which we are facing in Canada at present. Are we going to see a rural society in this country in the future or is the government going to follow a course of action and a set of policies which will allow our rural society to be destroyed, to simply wither away, or possibly even a set of policies which will help it to be destroyed? I think we need some answers from the minister and from the government, not in any vague terms or in terms of any fairy stories about the situation being under review. I think we need some concrete answers from the government as to what it will do to help agriculture in the present situation. We have had nothing up to the present time and I think that results in a very serious lack of confidence in the government.

Because I feel this matter is so important and one that needs to be given further consideration within the context of this debate, I propose to move a motion which relates to clause 11 of Bill C-262. As members know, this is the clause of the bill which provides for the payment of grants to assist manufacturing industries in particular. Hon. members will also be familiar with the motion which I attempted to introduce yesterday in the House at the report stage and which it was not possible to introduce at that time. This would have provided for the inclusion of agriculture and fishing within the terms of that section. I cannot move an amendment which would make specific reference to the additions that I would like to see made to clause 11 of the bill, but I think I can make my intent quite clear in moving the amendment which I now place before you. I move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave):

That Bill C-262 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering clause 11 thereof.

I commend this amendment to the consideration of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has a copy of the proposed amendment that was just read by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). My impression is that the amendment is in order and I will rule that way unless hon. members want to advise the Chair to the contrary. The Chair is prepared to put the motion.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks made by the leader of our party, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and by my colleagues, the hon. members for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and Compton (Mr. Latulippe) on motion for third reading of the bill, I would like to inform the House that we are more strongly opposed to this measure after it has been referred to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We have voted against referring this bill to the committee and we will oppose its passage to the end, because it aims at protecting millionnaires rather than workers by favouring the piling up of surpluses which will not be exported to the United States, thus damaging consumption in Canada.

Mr. Pepin: What a broad viewpoint.

Mr. Gauthier: I know what I am talking about since I am a member of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs where I had the opportunity of hearing various submissions. I have also received letters and telegrams pointing out the dangers of this bill.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howard) stated this afternoon that this bill was meant to clarify certain matters raised before the committee rather than to provide subsidies to support employment, although this measure provided subsidies to this effect. This is not the kind of statement that would shed light on the various ways in which the bill can be interpreted.

I do not intend to repeat the effective and realistic proposals which my colleagues have submitted to the government, although I would be tempted to do so following the statements I heard from several hon. members on the government benches saying: Let us have better suggestions than those contained in this bill.

This proves once more than none are so deaf as those who will not hear. I shall therefore endeavour to impress upon hon. members on the government benches to use reason instead of blindly following their leader, as they are accustomed to do, or again, I will point out to the people who are conversant with federal matters, the erroneous meaning of the bill.

If we pause to consider the objective of the bill, we read the following in clause 3:

The purpose of this Act is to provide a means to support levels of employment in Canadian industry when other countries impose temporary import surtaxes—

In my opinion this is more a pretext than a goal to achieve for the government which will certainly not miss such a splendid opportunity to create a new commission whose function will be to protect those who protect it. In fact, you have noted that as soon as the government has a small problem they create commissions so as to act finally as they please but which they use as a protective screen against all-too-often justified criticism.

For an industrial corporation to become qualified for federal help, the production factor will not be taken into account. Besides this was stated by a government official before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It will be merely a question of maintaining employment at a normal level.

But how to maintain employment level when the manufacturer can limit production? Will the workers have to remain on the payroll without working or will the old winter work program have to be revived for our industries so as to make it possible for them to amortize two-thirds of the losses they have sustained because of the 10 per cent surtax?

A witness even suggested that the company could have other work done by workers affected by a production slowdown. On the whole, according to arguments put forward before the committee, if a manufacturer lays off workers, he will not get the assistance provided under Bill C-262 and if there are no lay offs, no guarantee is given that the manufacturer will be able to make out his case before the board.

Each case will therefore be thoroughly considered and should the board still have doubts after all those safety measures, clause 15, which to me is but a proof of patronage, will lend assistance to the board members. That clause reads as follows:

> Where a manufacturer who makes an application under this Act for a grant is unable to comply with any regulations applicable in his case and the Board is of the opinion that a grant to the manufacturer would not be outside the purposes of this Act, as described in section 3, the Board may, having regard to the purposes of this Act, recommend to the Governor in Council that a grant be authorized under this Act for that manufacturer.

In brief, we have just been told that the minister concerned can decide whether any manufacturer who does not meet all the industrial standards at least meets the political standards making him eligible for grants.

Then, why should a commission be established, since, in the end, the minister himself will decide? However, we are not at all surprised, because we can see therein the methods usually used by this government. You are for us or against us, the master-minds of the government seem to say. But woe unto opponents, for the ministers keep an eye on them and the powerful party organizers—some of whom have acceded to the Senate—will find out whether they are deserving contributors to the election fund.

That is one of the true aspects of the bill now before the House. Besides introducing this bill under a misleading title, this government does not tell the whole truth to the public, making it believe that the measure will cost only $80 million in grants, and $350,000 in administration costs. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that these amounts apply only to the balance of this fiscal year. This means that before the end of this fiscal year, the minister must ask the House to vote supplementary credits. It is always the same old method. The House is asked to consider a bill said to be of a provisional nature and which involves little expenditure in order to sweeten the pill. Later on, the people have to face the sad fact of a bill of a permanent nature costing workers millions of dollars in terms of taxes and designed for the benefit of foreign companies. It always boils down to fleecing the little fellow for the benefit of the big financier.

Indeed, according to a testimony heard in committee, this bill will cost at least $250 million solely for assistance, to which must be added approximately half a million dollars to cover commissioners' fees and administration expenses. Such is the truth.

Mr. Pepin: How awful!

Mr. Gauthier: Let us stop deluding the population and let us be honest. We will thus avoid deceiving the Canadian people.

A casual look at the industries affected by the 10 per cent American surtax, shows that the capital of practically all of them is American in a proportion of 80 per cent. Thus, President Nixon hits Canada in two ways since he compels American subsidiaries to turn over to him 10 per cent on products manufactured in Canada and since he grants a 10 per cent assistance to American industries which will promote production at home.

And we good Canadians fall headlong into the trap, calling upon our small taxpayers to supply the United States with over $250 million to protect American capital in Canada. Instead of making this anti-Canadian gesture, the government should have had the courage to stand up to the Nixon administration and use those hundreds of millions to be granted under the present bill to promote production of our secondary and tertiary industries, so that we stop sponging on the United States and produce more of our own consumer goods.

In fact, we produce barely 40 per cent of our requirements in Canada, while we are the United States' number one source of raw materials. That shows the absurdity of our position and the irresponsibility of a government which brings forward such a solution to the American surcharge. The most logical course would have been the one pointed out by my colleagues, i.e. outright abolition of the 12 per cent excise tax which, like all the others, was a temporary tax at first but which we have been paying for many years now.

What was Mr. Nixon's intention in putting this 10 per cent surcharge on all imports of countries dealing with him? He just wanted to make up for the United States' balance of payments deficit. How typical of a country feeling more powerful than all others. The president of the United States thought maybe that this would compel the countries of the Group of Ten to revalue their currencies upwards. In any case, the American government can see that the reaction came quickly. In fact, on page 10 of La Presse of September 8, one could read:

> The Nixon plan is attacked by GATT
> —The U.S. protectionist measures were unanimously censured by the great commercial countries as well as by the Latin American countries at a meeting of the GATT special task force, according to reliable sources.
> The group met to study the trade decisions taken by President Nixon, and particularly the 10 per cent surtax on imports. The representatives of Japan, Great Britain, the European community, Canada and Latin-American countries judged the measures illegal under GATT and most inappropriate. The task force studied a document it received Monday from the International Monetary Fund on the United States balance of payments. The conclusions of the IMF have not yet been published, but the same source indicates that the American deficit is due mostly to capital outflows from the U.S.A.

Mr. Speaker, that is what international organizations think of the situation.

In reply to those protests, a few days later, on September 14, one could read the following in a Montreal paper:

The Six request that Nixon remove the surcharge.

The Six have agreed to consider a realignment of monetary parities on the international level only if the United States remove the 10 per cent surcharge on imports.

That decision was taken by the Council of ministers of finance for the Six last night, after an agreement had been reached on the position to be fought for in reforming the international monetary system. The text adopted by the Council states that the Six pointed out the seriousness of the American decision to levy a 10 per cent surtax and grant fiscal concessions in favour of domestic investments and exports.

These steps interfere with the making up of realistic rates of exchange. They impede the realignment of parities. Furthermore, they could well cause serious disruptions in international trade.

Consequently, the European Community is solemnly asking for the removal of the Washington measures.

Well, maybe there is some good in all this because when the Six met, it was even proposed that the international monetary system be revamped. I feel that Social Credit is coming anyway, not only at the national level as stated by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), the former maverick Communications Minister—who asked that the Bank of Canada be used to issue new funds as the only way to boost the Canadian economy—but even at the international level, since the Six unanimously requested a reform in the international monetary system. Incidentally, Le Devoir of September 9, 1971 had an article entitled: The Six Agree on Common Goal, and I quote:

The international monetary system, born of the Bretton Woods agreements, must be reformed: failing a common position to solve the crisis created by the United States on August 16, the Six of the Common Market have at least managed, after four weeks, to agree on a common goal.

That goal is the complete reform of the international monetary system. In the light of those events, what did the government do? It missed its only chance to back track by helping directly our fully owned Canadian industries without being accused of provoking dumping into the United States, or directly violating the GATT agreements. May I point out to the House another article published in La Presse on September 8, 1971 and entitled: Direct Violation of GATT Agreements. I shall read only a few excerpts because the article is too long. I quote:

The emergency plan which has just been launched by the Trudeau government to assist industries most seriously affected by the 10 per cent surcharge established on August 15 by President Nixon is a direct violation of GATT and may have repercussions in the United States as well as abroad.

Indeed, even if the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin, suggests that the $80 million allotted for that emergency plan are meant to lessen the impact of American measures on labour, they amount to export grants none the less. Now, such practices have been denounced by the General Assembly of GATT as "non-tariff walls".

As for Canadian government authorities, always ready to copy the United States, I wonder why they did not imitate Mr. Nixon when he decided to give 10 per cent to his domestic industries to encourage them to produce more goods for American consumers. Thus not only would they have maintained the employment level, but they would surely have contributed to reduce the unemployment rate and help Canadian consumers.

We blame this government for imposing to the people in the lower income brackets this despicable tax which has but one purpose, protecting our pro-American millionaires.

If we wish for the suppression of unemployment and the growth of our economy, these will certainly not be achieved through the imposition of new taxes, but by abolishing those taxes which hinder our Canadian industries' survival and favour the American companies.

That is the reason why all our industries one after the other are falling into American hands. The people mainly responsible for this type of emigration are those presently sitting on the government's side.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, we are against the bill before us at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Before recognizing the hon. minister, I should like to inform the House regarding matters which will be raised tonight at the time of adjournment.

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—Finance—Government attitude on negative tax formula; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Fruit—Request by British Columbia growers for export assistance—legislation to protect against dumping of agricultural products.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO MITIGATE EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY OF IMPOSITION OF FOREIGN IMPORT SURTAXES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Mr. Olson (for Mr. Pepin) that Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Burton.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for speaking at this time. I would have preferred to wait for the end of the debate, but, unfortunately or fortunately, I must leave for Houston, Texas, in a few minutes, so that I will not be here tonight when this bill is approved with great enthusiasm.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and I thank him for his long lecture on international trade and other matters. And, listening to him, Mr. Speaker, I said to myself: Professors never do change. Is this not so? At every opportunity they give a lecture and I hear the oh's in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, the main argument of the hon. member for Regina East is that this bill is not perfect and this I am willing to admit. It will cure neither a cold in the head nor corns; it is not a comprehensive industrial policy. It does not propose an agricultural or a monetary policy, and neither does it create an internation corporation. In short, there are lots and lots of things which it does not do. But, this bill is not meant to do everything the hon. member would like it to do. It did not please the hon. member for Regina East simply because it is not perfect. And therefore, I imagine that the hon. member and his party as well as the Créditistes are going to vote against it because it is not perfect.

Mr. Speaker, I point out that the decision of the two parties concerned expresses a low-standard evangelism. It would be a great help to the government if the whole House voted for the bill to show Americans in particular that public opinion in Canada is not insensitive to American measures.

I shall attempt with perseverance to find, both in the speech of the hon. member for Regina East and in that of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), a few sentences saying that in fact the two parties concerned were in agreement with the legislation. But it will not be an easy task and once again, I hope that in a few minutes the two parties, being aware of their responsibilities and having made all provisos and necessary precisions, will none the less vote for Bill C-262 in order to make it publicly known in Canada, in the whole world and specially in the United States, what stuff Canada is made of.

Mr. Speaker, some say that this bill will not cope with all the problems that this surtax will create in Canada. I agree with that. At the present time, just the uncertainties brought about by the American decisions will disturb Canada-U.S. trade relations and will occasion, in a great many cases, the loss of contracts as well as certain difficulties for some Canadian firms. In a word, I mean that this bill attempts to save the house, the Canadian industrial structure which has been set up at the cost of many efforts over the years by industrialists as well as workers and governments. We are trying to save the house; we may lose a few pieces of furniture, but the commendable efforts of the government at this time should be acknowledged by all.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) seeks through his amendment to refer the bill to a committee for consideration of clause 11. I suppose his main purpose would be to submit to the committee the amendment he moved yesterday and which has been ruled out of order by the Chair.

The hon. member's interest is essentially the protection of farmers and fishermen. That would be his motivation.

[English]

If the hon. member had read beyond the figures he cited for animal and vegetable products affected by the surcharge he would have discovered that about 85 per cent are processed and therefore covered by the bill. This includes the $175 million applying to whiskey and $200 million applying to fish. I am not saying that all this whiskey will be protected. I am not saying that at all, because all the whiskey producers might not need the support of the government in this instance. I am saying that the 85 per cent of products subject to the surcharge are covered by this bill. Therefore, the hon. member is delaying action. He wants to send the bill back to committee just for that 15 per cent left out of the bill. I recognize that the 15 per cent is important to those people who are in that 15 per cent category. But then the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has already said that he will bring about ways and means of helping those people. I think the Minister of Agriculture has a splendid record for responsibility. As a matter of fact, I know that my colleagues in the cabinet committee at this time are discussing just that matter. So, I suggest the hon. member is being very theoretical, very professorial—if I of all people may use that expression—in trying to delay the bill. He is trying to satisfy his own sense of responsibility which, in this case, is very misplaced.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to reply to the hon. member for Roberval because that would take too long but I shall see, or rather I shall try to see that the people are made aware of the remarks he made this afternoon. His statement that only Canadian firms should be protected by the legislation will, I believe, create quite a lot of dissatisfaction particularly among Quebec workers who work for such companies. I feel the hon. member, if he is sincere, should hold a press conference immediately to say that he is most anxious that workers in Quebec and throughout Canada, employed by firms with foreign origins, should not be protected by the legislation. I think at that time he will not get a very hearty reception.

Mr. Fortin: They will not be protected anyway.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member has to make up his mind one way or another. At first he said that this measure is only for the rich, especially rich Americans, and now he says that workers employed in factories with predominantly American capital will not be protected. I know very well that logical thinking is not the strong point of Social Credit but there are nevertheless circumstances where it is possible that abuses—

Mr. Loiselle: They never have understood anything and they never will understand anything.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, abortion and death sentences are at present the big topics within Social Credit. This indicates perhaps that an abortion or the death sentence is in sight for that party.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to be more serious when I answer the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). I think that his remarks this afternoon are quite serious and that he is truly concerned about the effects this legislation might have in certain cases.

[English]

I consider him to be a very experienced member and a very responsible one, so I think I should spend some time trying to answer the points he made. If I understood him well, and I hope that I am quoting him correctly, since I resented it very much yesterday, and Hansard proved me right, when the hon. member's leader misquoted me considerably last night and I should not like to do the same thing to him today. He said that he thought only 150 companies would stand to benefit from this bill. That is not right. I think my hon. friend was impressed by what I said in my first speech on the subject, as reported in Hansard at page 7558. I said:

The survey conducted by my department also indicates that there are some 150 companies which would have difficulty surviving if the surcharge lasted up to a year,—

That was an assessment of potential damage and not an assessment of how many companies would stand to benefit from the bill. This is a very important distinction. As a matter of fact, we questioned 1,700-odd companies, as mentioned at page 7558 of Hansard. The opinion of my department at this time is that about 300 of that number are exporting more than the 20 per cent of their production which they need to export in order to qualify for assistance under the bill. That means that about 300 plants will stand to benefit from this bill. I emphasize again that clause 15 covers hardship cases. It may well be that some companies exporting 12 per cent, 13 per cent or 15 per cent will still have their cases judged in the light of that clause. So much for that point.

The hon. member is also worried that small companies might not benefit from this bill as much as bigger ones would. I want to repeat what was said in committee. I know that there was a bit of "wobbling"—that is the only word which comes to my mind at this time. The final undertaking in committee is very clear. There is no distinction as to the size of the plants. The only factor is that employment in the plant must be "significantly" affected by the surcharge. This may involve a labour force of 2,000 or a labour force of 10. Two or three employees out of 10 could mean "significantly" affected. The size of the company is not a relative factor in the implementation of this bill. It is certainly not to be considered in the way the member thought it might.

The hon. member made a good point. He said he was afraid that unions might create some difficulty. I am sure that the member supports me in the hope that unions will also show some flexibility in these matters. If everyone is going to stand on his rights, on the conventions and practices of former years, of course there will be added difficulties. However, I hope that company officials and union leaders will show intelligence in helping to implement this bill.

The hon. member also stated that companies might use this assistance to stockpile. I already indicated, and I repeat, that this is one of the five, six or seven possibilities offered by this bill. A moment ago my parliamentary secretary stated very strongly that continuation of exports is but one of seven or eight different possibilities and that stockpiling or adding to inventories is one of those. The member was wrong when he said the government was favouring that direction. I do not think it was just eloquence when he said that under this bill the government might be paying "two thirds of the cost of units". That is not the case. The assistance which will be provided will be two thirds of the surtax applicable to goods exported to the United States in 1970. I am not going to go into detail. It will be two thirds of the surtax that would have been paid, not two thirds of the cost of units. If the government had decided on that, it would indeed have meant fantastic support. I presume that the member inadvertently made that suggestion.

I think I have covered most of what I intended to deal with, Mr. Speaker. I hope I will have the pleasure of receiving a telephone call from you tonight in Houston, Texas, Mr. Speaker, or from someone on the government side, informing me that the bill has been passed and that the two reluctant parties, the New Democratic Party and the Ralliement des Créditistes, have surprised everyone by showing intelligence, flexibility, goodwill by voting in favour of this bill, thus giving occasional—I do not mind if it is occasional—support to the government when a question of national importance arises.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I was very impressed with the minister's speech. I am extremely sorry he has to leave us now in order to go to Houston. I have been there, so I am sure he will have a marvellous time. I am not trying to be facetious, as I know that this is impossible, but perhaps the minister can drop in on Washington to let them know about the unknown country. The minister stated that if we pass this bill, it will show how we are going to deal with two specific problems, the loss of contracts and the economic difficulty which Canadians and Canadian industry will face as the result of the 10 per cent surtax.

I wish to point out to the minister that I am quite aware of what the Americans are doing. We cannot really fault them. They are attempting to bring some economic stability to their own country. At the same time, however, I wonder whether they know who we are. The minister has an opportunity of going to the United States. Perhaps he can add another paragraph to the speech that has been prepared, and I do not fault that, and give some information about this country which even President Nixon does not know. I refer the minister to a press release relating to a presidential press conference issued by the United States Information Services datelined Washington, September 16. In this the president gives some indication as to who his friends are, who are the important trading partners and what importance he places upon these respective parties. On Saturday, September 25, 1971, the Globe and Mail picked up this theme. I quote from the report of the press conference:

This is a time for our friends around the world—and they are all competitors—to build a new system with which we can live so that we don't have another crisis in a year. With regard to the Japanese, incidentally, I think I can best summarize our dilemma in this way: After the Japanese were here I found that, both from the information they gave and the information we had ourselves, that Japan is our biggest customer in the world and we are their biggest customer in the world.

That is the part with which I find some fault, Mr. Speaker. I can give the minister a copy of the Globe and Mail lead editorial of Saturday, September 25, 1971, in which they took issue with that statement. I quote from the editorial:

The New York Times, which is respected for its paper-of-record approach to both domestic and foreign news, rated Canada's importance in the upheaval as worth only five inches of space at the bottom of page 42. Shows the dimension of the Canadian fact as it exists in the United States.

If any punctuation was lacking, President Nixon added it in a press conference on Sept. 16 when he said,—

I just alluded to this, but I will continue with the reading of the quote. I think this editorial speaks on behalf of a lot of Canadians.

—"After the Japanese were here I found that, both from the information they gave and the information we had ourselves, that Japan is our biggest customer in the world and we are their biggest customer in the world."

That statement didn't happen to be true on either count. In the first six months of 1971 the United States exported $2.1-billion worth of goods to Japan and $5.2-billion to Canada. In the same six months the United States imported $5.9-billion worth of goods from Japan, and $6.01-billion from Canada. Even on combined export-import dealings the U.S.-Canada package is far greater than the U.S.-Japan package:—

I am trying to tell the minister that something is wrong. Unless the President is misquoted in the statement that he believes Japan is their greatest trading partner, I think this editorial is true. This is the unknown country. The government should work hard through this minister who is going to the United States this evening to create an impression on the President of the United States, one which will be heard by the United States.

Members on this side have questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as to why he does not pick up the phone. Perhaps in my ignorance, not knowing the protocol in this matter, I thought the telephone was a means of prime communication. In view of the disastrous effects of the United States' attempt to satisfy their own demands, I suggest that the Prime Minister of Canada—I do not know whether he has ever talked to the President of the United States; I suggest he must have—should find the situation important enough to pick up the telephone and say to the President that in view of our extended boundary, unguarded, and the action we took in unpegging the dollar, which does not call for retaliatory methods against us which may bring us to the point of disaster. "As a result of our common language and trading patterns, Mr. President, what are you doing to us? We understand you must help your country, but what are you doing to us?"

That is all the opposition is asking, and for the life of me I cannot understand why the Prime Minister does not take this step. Perhaps I am uninformed and do not appreciate the protocol involved in this matter, or perhaps the Prime Minister may think that he is above and beyond picking up the telephone to call the President of the United States; I do not know.

Mr. O'Connell: Has the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) done that?

Mr. Alexander: He is not in a position to pick up the telephone and call the President of the United States. This government continues in its arrogant way, with its complacent attitude and its apathy. But I must not digress because hon. members are eating up my time. It is nice to see members on the other side getting involved in this debate. Sometimes we get such asinine comments from them that I wonder whether they send their copies of Hansard home or burn them in shame.

Mr. Muir: Especially the buffoon from Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney).

Mr. Alexander: I did not say that.

Mr. Muir: I am saying it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) says, his time is limited. Perhaps we should give him a chance to continue his remarks.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But how can one become unexcited and be impassionate with interruptions of that calibre? In the cut and thrust of debate, when you are challenged you must reply.

I do not pretend to be an expert on this bill, as those on the government side do, but I want to put before the government a few of the concerns that have been expressed in this House. With the mandate that we have collectively on this side of the House, we have every right to bring them to your attention, Mr. Speaker. There is no desire on our part to hold up the bill; we just want to point out its inequities.

The title of this bill is "An act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect". I think it should be extended to read "and as a result of inefficient government fiscal and monetary policy". That has been underplayed, or left out, but in fact how can one criticize the bill to any great extent? Obviously, we are in a position where it is necessary to give some relief. But what we are talking about here are the consequences which flow from U.S. policies that affect our daily life; no reference is made to the fiscal and monetary policies of this government that have left industry in an awful mess.

I have watched the legislation go through this House and it seems to me that the free enterprise system no longer means anything. Perhaps to some hon. members it does, but in view of what the government has done in restricting the means and methods whereby we can reach high production, and therefore in the long run have full employment, whatever that may mean—perhaps 3 per cent unemployment—I wonder where we are going.

I appreciate the concern of the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). I know the minister attempted to allay his fears, but from my first reading of the bill I get the impression that it is similar to providing corporate welfare, and perhaps it should be administered under the direction and leadership of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro).

It seems to me that the giants of industry certainly will need help and deserve help, and that is one thing. On the other hand, there are countless industries in Hamilton that feed these giants and do not export, and they will be directly affected by this surtax. After all, we are only providing assistance up to about two-thirds of the surtax that would be paid, which in the long run means that somebody is going to be short. As a result, companies are going to lose contracts, their workers are going to be faced with unemployment, which in turn means that those firms that feed these bigger companies are going to be left high and dry. The minister was not too clear on that. We have hundreds of companies in Hamilton that are extremely concerned. They do not export their products but, rather, manufacture products to feed these bigger companies. What is going to happen to them?

I am not sure what clause 15 of the bill means. It refers to a "special case" and perhaps it is a catch-all phrase. It is a complex clause that no one has explained to me. It provides:

> Where a manufacturer who makes an application under this act for a grant is unable to comply with any regulations applicable in his case and the board is of the opinion that a grant to the manufacturer would not be outside the purposes of this act, as described in section 3—

Section 3 says that the purpose of the act is to provide a means of supporting levels of employment; that is the gist of it. Are we going to bring in under the legislation all companies as a result of the following words, "the board may, having regard to the purposes of this act, recommend to the Governor in Council that a grant be authorized under this act for that manufacturer"? Does that mean that even though a manufacturer does not export, that he is not affected by the import surtax, he can make an application and, in accordance with the principle of the bill, be given assistance?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is a pretty blank cheque.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, it is a sort of blank cheque. So the first concern I have with this bill is, what is going to happen to these smaller industries? That is why the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), in an admirable speech the other day, made so many points. I do not want to go over them, but he talked about the long-term economic policies of this government. This bill is a sort of patchwork solution to this emergency, but we are still faced with the awful problem created by the economic policies of the government as they affect Canadian productivity and employment.

We are used to hearing the President of the United States go to the people and make various points in his state of the nation speech. I asked the Prime Minister whether he would like to do this in order to bring the people of Canada up to date. I am not saying anyone has been dishonest in respect of the state of our economy, but what has been done has been patchwork and ad hoc. One minister says one thing and another minister says something else.

I should like the Prime Minister to tell the country exactly what we are doing, where we are now, where we are going and what our plans are to offset what everyone has concluded will be a disastrous winter. The people are entitled to such a statement. The Prime Minister says, "Leave it to the Minister of Finance". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) lost his credibility months ago. Nobody believes him any more. Every prognosis he has made has been wrong.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: His economic slip is showing.

Mr. Alexander: Why should the Minister of Finance make the statement? Let the Prime Minister be wrong for a change, perhaps even more so than he has been in the past. All I am asking for is such a statement.

On August 15, 1971, President Nixon inaugurated a series of economic reforms based on this statement:

> The time has come for a new economic policy for the United States. Its targets are unemployment, inflation and international speculation.

These reforms affect not only ourselves but all industrialized nations whose economies are linked with the United States. As I said before, this affects Canada and what we are doing in this situation is important. This surcharge hits manufacturing in two ways. Companies in now buoyant industries will have trouble increasing their sales in vital U.S. markets so they will delay hiring more workers. Companies in lagging industries could lose sales if the surcharge continues for long. They may end up laying off workers and creating further structural unemployment.

The points to consider are that our manufacturers cannot raise prices, while those of United States competitors are frozen, without losing ground both at home and abroad. Wages for Canadian labour will not be frozen as they are in the United States. Canadian producers will face yet another squeeze on their profit margin, with the result that still less domestic capital will be available for investment. An added problem is that the industries affected by the surcharge are also those which have been weakened by the 6 per cent rise in the exchange rate since June, 1970. If the surcharge continues for several months, in my respectful submission these industries could be seriously damaged.

Another point of concern to me is the effect of the DISC program. What is the government doing about this? That legislation could be disastrous to the economic solidarity and viability of Canada. The Domestic International Sales Corporation would provide tax deferral on earnings from export sales, and it is likely that the legislation will be in effect by January 1, 1972. This measure would provide a substantial stimulus to United States producers to increase their export sales, with a resulting favourable effect on the United States balance of payments.

The Canadian Export Association fears that the export promotion scheme applied to American companies through DISC may, if successful—and there is no reason to believe it will not be—present a serious problem for Canadian exporters competing for the same markets. This problem is in addition to what we are talking about when discussing this bill. The federal government last year estimated that the DISC proposal would give United States exporters a 6 per cent advantage in competition with Canadian manufacturers, although the effect would vary from industry to industry. It is anticipated that United States companies would be permitted to borrow from DISC for the purpose of retraining employees and changing plants to meet competition from imports. As a result, the competitiveness of U.S. goods would be increased, applying pressure to both Canadian exports to third country markets and the United States and to domestic sales by Canadian manufacturers. I want to know what the government has to say about that matter because it is part and parcel of the problems we are dealing with in this bill.

Have representations been made to the United States about these questions and the disastrous, unwarranted and unacceptable effects this program will have on Canadian exporters? Do we have any liaison or dialogue with the United States in this regard? Has anyone picked up the phone to discuss this matter with American officials? These proposals will come into effect on January 1, 1972, which is just around the corner.

An hon. Member: It is not passed yet.

Mr. Alexander: I heard a voice in the wilderness saying the legislation is not passed yet. Is he saying that the government intends to wait until it is passed and then go to the United States and ask them to withdraw it? Is that the way they do business on the other side of the House? I hope that is not the situation. Perhaps we should send a couple of these expert parliamentary secretaries to Washington. Sometimes I have more faith in them than I have in the minister, because they want to get ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ricard: They applaud themselves.

An hon. Member: That was worth hanging around to hear.

Mr. Alexander: I could say something about a couple of them over there, but I will not do so because I would probably get mean and I do not want to do that. Let me return to what I was saying about the DISC program. The major, long-term impact of the DISC legislation involves parent-subsidiary relations of multinational corporations, both U.S. parents with Canadian subsidiaries and Canadian parents with U.S. subsidiaries. The bill would create a tax incentive to supply foreign markets from United States-based manufacturing operations rather than from Canadian plants. Has this question been explored, and is there any way out of it? These are several questions to which we cannot get answers.

Associated with this incentive would be a significant effect on the investment decisions of multinational corporations as to where plants would be located and which plants would be expanded in the future. The tax deferral incentive would result in a tendency for corporations to expand or locate in the United States. Let me refer to the steel industry which is primarily located in Hamilton, Ontario. I think we should show concern in this area. This industry is the backbone of our nation. In some areas certain types of manufactured steel goods will be covered but, generally speaking, the major Canadian steel companies have been surveying customers in the United States and Canada to determine the effect of the surcharge on the demand for steel products. Flat rolled product sales will be most affected because they bear the greatest percentage increase under the surcharge, while structural steel rails and fastenings are subject to a lower tariff and are less vulnerable.

An official of the Steel Company of Canada estimates that if the surcharge is continued for the remaining months of 1971, $5 million, or 10 per cent of the company's average annual sales to the United States, might be lost and that over a year the loss in sales could be $9 million. It is not only important to Hamilton, it is important to the nation to know what is happening to this industry.

When we realize that the steel companies will be compensated to the extent of two-thirds of the surcharge, we are pleased. But it does not matter what the figures are, somebody else will suffer. I have in mind all the companies directly involved with the steel industry. As a result of United States economic policies they will be placed in a position where they will be no longer productive and no longer able to maintain or further employment. They are not directly covered by this bill, unless clause 15 includes them. In any event, if you do not export you cannot take advantage of this bill, and if you cannot export then somebody will be a loser.

I will not take up any more time but I should like to say this is a proper step. No one in his right mind would say it is not, no matter on which side of the House he sits. There are things missing from the bill about which the government should be concerned. This legislation is only a partial answer. One must remember the complexities and conflicts which will beset this country as a result of the government's fiscal and monetary policies. In my opinion these problems are not being met. We do not know when they will be met, because every day we ask the Prime Minister questions about his immediate plans vis-à-vis provincial meetings and do not receive satisfactory answers. Let us hope the government realizes the difficulty they are in. I understand that even their backbenchers realize it, because the latest report in the Toronto Star indicates that they have a revolution in caucus concerning the incompetency of their ministers. These are not my words; they are what I read. It is reported that there is a revolution in the Liberal caucus because of the incompetency of their ministers and lack of viable, acceptable policies for the economic development of Canada.

In conclusion, I hope our suggestions sink in, because we on this side have been telling them since God knows when in the past two years that they are moving in the wrong direction. I hope that when this debate is finished—

An hon. Member: Do you mean you are going to let the bill go to a vote?

Mr. Alexander: —within a short space of time the words of wisdom which have come from this side will not have fallen on deaf ears.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt any speaker who may follow, but I seek consent of the House to revert to motions for a moment because, further to Your Honour's suggestion of some time ago in respect of Bill C-259, the House leaders met and a form of motion has been agreed upon by the various parties. If the House would consent to revert to motions, I would propose a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman).

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of moving the motion to which the hon. member has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INCOME TAX ACT

MOTION TO CORRECT PROCEDURAL DEFECTS IN RELATION TO BILL C-259

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman):

That, notwithstanding the terms of the ways and means motion upon which Bill C-259 was introduced, this House deems that the said bill was properly introduced within the terms of Standing Order 60, provided that the form of the said ways and means motion shall not be accepted as a precedent in any future case;

And that it shall be an instruction to the committee of the whole on the said bill that the admissibility of any proposed amendments thereto shall be governed by the bill as read a second time and shall not be limited by the said ways and means motion although all other procedures relating to financial or tax measures shall apply.

Mr. Stanfield: We are a generous opposition.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the House leaders met and we have overcome the difficulty which Your Honour properly pointed out. We accept the proposal. There is one condition which I believe should be placed on the record. It is our understanding that the proposal contained in the motion will mean that the government will not be permitted to introduce further amendments of substance affecting ways and means or extending beyond the terms of the bill without, of course, a proper resolution or notice being given. I think that is the plan but I thought I should make definite that this is our interpretation of the effect of the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when this point of order was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure we are on a point of order. My understanding is that we are now on motions. I interrupted the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because I understand the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Is the hon. member for Bellechasse raising a point of order?

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to draw the Chair's attention to the fact that since the interpreter could not catch the statement of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome), I cannot give my consent because I did not hear exactly what he said.

Mr. Speaker: I will try to remedy this problem by reading the motion as slowly as possible:

[English]

This may be cured by the Chair reading the motion:

That, notwithstanding the terms of the ways and means motion upon which Bill C-259 was introduced, this House deems that the said bill was properly introduced within the terms of Standing Order 60, provided that the form of the said ways and means motion shall not be accepted as a precedent in any future case;

And that it shall be an instruction to the committee of the whole on the said bill that the admissibility of any proposed amendments thereto shall be governed by the bill as read a second time and shall not be limited by the said ways and means motion although all other procedures relating to financial or tax measures shall apply.

Perhaps the House would allow me to return to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the point of order that is the subject of this motion was raised, perhaps I went too far in admitting that the House leaders had agreed to the form of the resolution which led to the difficulty. At any rate, honesty is a good policy. Your Honour then suggested that the House leaders who got us into the trouble should get us out of it. That is what we have tried to do. I hope we have succeeded.

Our understanding is that the terms in which Bill C-259 was printed and presented to this House on second reading are now to constitute the form of the resolution. In other words, from here on we are not limited by what was in the draft, but we are limited by what is in the wording of the bill itself; that is, Bill C-259 as printed becomes, for the purpose of this debate, the resolution rather than the draft bill that was first given to us. We accept that, but because it is rather novel we want to underline the wording in the motion that this practice is not to be taken as a precedent. I realize the difficulty in respect of precedents which are not to be taken as precedents; they often are quoted later as precedents.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL

MEASURE TO MITIGATE EFFECT ON CANADIAN INDUSTRY OF IMPOSITION OF FOREIGN IMPORT SURTAXES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-262, to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Burton.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the preceding speaker on Bill C-262, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), made a couple of points with which I should like to deal for a moment. First of all, he indicated that this bill will assist the large industries and he felt that that was proper, but he did not really feel that it would help the many small industries in his riding or those across Canada because they do not export directly to the U.S. Many of them are subcontractors or suppliers to firms which in fact exported to the U.S., and perhaps the level of production which was ultimately exported through the final manufacturer was sufficient to qualify that manufacturer under the act but the subcontractor would, in fact, be prohibited from qualifying because of the terms of the act.

This question was dealt with at considerable length in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when we dealt with this bill. The minister made it perfectly clear that in cases where a manufacturer was in fact a subcontractor and his goods were ultimately destined for the U.S. through another producer or exporter, such a firm would in fact qualify. I think that is a very important point which should be borne in mind by all members when viewing this bill.

The hon. member also indicated that he did not really know what clause 15 of the bill meant, and he quoted from it. I should like to dwell on this question for a moment because I consider clause 15 to be one of the most important clauses in the bill. Clause 15 provides, pretty clearly in my view:

> Where a manufacturer who makes an application under this act for a grant is unable to comply with any regulations applicable in his case and the board is of the opinion that a grant to the manufacturer would not be outside the purposes of this act—

—the board can recommend to the Governor in Council that a grant be given in any event. I led a considerable discussion in the committee on this clause, because obviously it gives rather wide-ranging powers to the board and it is very important that we understand how these powers will be used and exactly what the government had in mind when it inserted clause 15 into the bill.

In committee it was made perfectly clear by the minister, in direct answer to questions which I put to him, that clause 15 allows the board to make this provision applicable in any case which meets the three basic criteria in the legislation. These three criteria are, first, that the base year to be used in calculations in the determination of the amount of production for export is the year 1970; second, that two-thirds of the amount of the surcharge applicable for that production is the maximum amount of the grant; and the third criterion is in respect of 20 per cent of the production being exported to the United States.

The board can receive an application from a firm that does not meet any one of these criteria or any combination of them, and if it decides that it is within the purposes of the legislation to maintain a certain level of employment in that firm it can make the grant or recommend that the Governor in Council do so. This is a pretty wide-ranging power which overcomes many of the difficulties that members of the committee have expressed in this House in respect of the application of the bill. I think that is perfectly clear.

One other point that the hon. member for Hamilton West made is that only two-thirds of the allowance in respect of the surcharge is payable, and that someone is going to lose. Obviously, that is true. If the board decides to give a grant up to the maximum of two-thirds, obviously the firm affected, in order to maintain employment, will pick up the other third. I do not think anyone has ever implied anything different and I think it is only reasonable to expect that the government, in co-operation with industry, will try to overcome the effects of this surcharge.

Another point that I think should be brought out with respect to the two-third allowance—the minister made this clear, I believe, in the House, as he certainly did in the committee—is that it is not two-thirds of the total cost of maintaining people in the employ of the company but, rather, two-thirds of the surcharge itself. I will go into that matter a little later, because I think it is important to understand that this is not some kind of give-away program, in most cases involving large sums of money, and that companies do not have to give anything in return.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and others referred to this bill as being in effect a corporate welfare assistance act. In my view that is not true. I would like to discuss that matter for a moment because the NDP proposed two basic amendments to the bill. One was with respect to clause 11, to include farmers and fishermen within the provisions of the legislation. If one really believes that this bill is a corporate welfare plan, then why would one want to extend the principle to cover farmers and fishermen? It seems to me that the charge laid against the legislation by the NDP is sufficiently grave that they would have to vote against it, no matter how it was amended, and in particular that they would not want to broaden its scope.

The other NDP amendment dealt with disclosure of information, seeking monthly reports from the government detailing names of firms that receive aid, the amount of the grant in each instance, the levels of production and employment before and afterwards, and other information, all of which in my view would not change the purposes of the bill. Such an amendment would cover the way in which the bill is administered and in which the government is to report to the House.

If these two NDP amendments were adopted, would it mean that the NDP would support the bill? If they would support the bill with these two amendments incorporated in it, would that change the legislation from being a corporate welfare assistance act? I cannot see how it would. I suggest there is a degree of inconsistency in the logic of the NDP in this particular case.

The primary purpose of the bill is to maintain employment. In committee, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) suggested an amendment, one which was not moved in the House, providing for a regulation stipulating that the level of employment must be retained at a minimum of 80 per cent. Initially, many members of the committee thought this really was not a bad idea, but upon reflection we felt that by stipulating 80 per cent we would be saying to the board that it would be quite acceptable if the level were only 80 per cent. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, all members of the committee would like to see employment maintained at 100 per cent of the pre-surcharge level.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you move an amendment?

Mr. Cafik: If the hon. member wishes to ask a question when I have finished speaking, I will be glad to answer it. But may I point out in reply to his question that it is quite evident that if the board were burdened with stringent obligations regarding the exact level of employment, we would be tying its hands and frustrating the purposes of the bill.

I wish to give a specific example of what the proposed two-thirds payment to firms means in dollars and cents. I take the hypothetical case of a firm doing $1 million worth of business, $500,000 worth of its production being exported to the United States in base year 1970. Let us assume that 50 employees of the plant are involved in the production of the exported goods. The surcharge on $500,000 would be $50,000. The maximum allowable grant, without looking at the escape provision in clause 15, would be $33,000. Presuming that the firm is going to maintain the previous level of employment, it will have to retain 50 employees, and presuming the cost of each is $6,000 a year, it would cost the firm $300,000 to keep those people on the payroll. From the government that firm would receive, through the provisions of this bill, the large sum of $33,000. That does not strike me as being some kind of corporate welfare assistance act.

I listened as carefully as I could to the hon. member for Regina East, and if I heard him correctly—I shall apologize if I am wrong—he said that when the Canadian dollar was floated the cost of our products bought by consumers abroad increased, and the NDP at that time had suggested that help be given to industry to offset this difficulty. If they believed it ought to have been done, then why do they not believe it is advisable to do it now? Why do they feel that such help given today is a welfare program for corporations, but at the time when it was only the germ of an idea in their minds they felt it was good and was consistent with their philosophy? I suggest there is a degree of inconsistency in their arguments.

I wish to refer to the speech made earlier today by the parliamentary secretary. I congratulate him and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for going such a long way toward meeting the NDP amendment put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, by announcing that the government is willing to give reports to the House of Commons on a quarterly basis rather than once a year. I think that is a reasonable response to the request for monthly reports sought by the NDP amendment.

After the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby had proposed his amendment in the committee, I asked the minister if he was willing to make detailed information available to the House of Commons and yet at the same time try to protect the element of confidentiality which he believed was so important. The amendment sought the names of specific firms receiving benefit. In his reply the minister indicated that he was willing to give the House of Commons details in terms of the number of grants made under the bill, the number of firms that received those grants, and facts in relation to the level of employment prior to and following passage of the act.

I believe that met the primary thrust of the argument put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. It was a good argument and I agree with the hon. member that we must be in a position to judge whether the legislation is being administered properly and is achieving the desired objective of maintaining employment. I believe that the government's intention to make information available on a quarterly basis, and in the terms outlined, will allow us to judge whether the act is being administered so as to achieve the basic objective of maintaining employment. I congratulate the department, the minister and the parliamentary secretary for giving such serious consideration to the matter.

It has been mentioned on numerous occasions that these grants will be available to foreign-controlled industries. I can understand that argument in respect of the 13 or so programs under the Department of Finance; I think very good arguments can be put forward that it should not be done in individual cases. But the thrust of this legislation is to maintain employment, and it seems to me that an employee working for a foreign-controlled firm in Canada is still an employee and he still wants his job as much as a man working in a neighbouring factory which might be Canadian controlled.

Mr. Rose: That is a good point.

Mr. Cafik: The objective of this act is to maintain employment, not to deal with the question of foreign control. I grant this is a very important question and one on which I feel very strongly.

Mr. Rose: Which way?

Mr. Cafik: In relation to this bill, however, I think it is folly to make a distinction between foreign control and domestic control in relation to Canadians working in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: That is a good point.

Mr. Cafik: The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) spoke in this House today and said this legislation is a type of unemployment insurance. I think that is stretching the imagination pretty far. If we had wanted to put these people on unemployment insurance and take no action as a result of the American surcharge, it would have been quite easy not to bring forward the bill at all. The object of the bill is not to create unemployment, to put people on welfare or on unemployment insurance but, rather, to keep them employed and, I hope, usefully employed. Any accusation to the effect that this is a new kind of unemployment insurance leaves a lot to the imagination and very little to reason.

The hon. member also spoke about a great deal of help to large businesses and none to small businesses. The minister dealt with this matter adequately in the House, indicating quite clearly that there is no minimum—a firm with five or seven or even three employees may make application. The important factor is that a significant number of them are affected and about to be laid off or likely to be laid off as a result of the surcharge. That is the only qualification, so I see no reason for anyone to be concerned about the content of this legislation or the regulations and say it is only for big business. Many of us realize that much of big business, particularly primary industries such as the automobile industry, is not affected by the surcharge, so a host of large corporations in Canada are eliminated from the provisions of this bill.

If I understood the hon. member for Kent-Essex correctly, he indicated that the department should ensure that the contents of this bill are known to all business in the country because many of them do not have the knowledge or perhaps the expertise to take advantage of its provisions. I would suggest that indicates it is good legislation.

I think all hon. members should bear in mind—I am sure most do—that we as individual members have a serious responsibility as representatives of our people. I for one want to make sure, without any action by the department, that every industry in my riding is thoroughly aware of the implications of this legislation and the consequences to them. To that end I have established an industrial seminar in my riding to be held on November 6 to deal not only with this bill but the myriad of bills before us for the purpose of stimulating economic growth and activity across Canada.

An hon. Member: Information Canada.

Mr. Cafik: I want to make sure that the people in my riding do not suffer in the way that the hon. member for Kent-Essex feels his constituents may suffer, and I personally will do something to make sure they are informed. I consider that to be part of my job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: The hon. member for Kent-Essex also said that this bill will not do anything positive to create new markets, etc. But that is not the purpose of the bill. Surely the hon. member is aware that there are many government programs designed for that purpose. The measure of emphasis that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has put on the question he raised is illustrated by the fact that in 1962-63 there were only three programs designed for that purpose; today there are 12 industrial assistance programs. Last year the government had over $200 million allocated for that kind of purpose, but in 1962-63 only $35 million was available. I do not think that every act has to do all things for all people. We have acts to do the things the hon. member has in mind. All we have to do is look at them. If a member has problems in his constituency, he can find out about these programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: There is PAIT, the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology, which is very useful. There is the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, the industrial design assistance program, the program to enhance productivity, and a host of others. They are all designed to do what the hon. member feels ought to be done by this bill. But this bill, Mr. Speaker, is designed to make sure that we maintain levels of employment as a result of this temporary surcharge.

Mr. Benjamin: How temporary?

Mr. Cafik: I do not think it can be expected to do other things. In committee I proposed five amendments to the bill.

Mr. Benjamin: What happened to them?

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Cafik: They were all passed and accepted by the government.

An hon. Member: Who wrote them?

Mr. Cafik: I wrote them.

An hon. Member: Attaboy!

Mr. Cafik: If hon. members opposite would like to put forward reasonable amendments they might be accepted too.

An hon. Member: Come on Cafik, be fair.

Mr. Cafik: In any event, clauses 12, 13, 15 and 18 were all designed to do away with the term "levels of productivity". Initially the act was designed to maintain levels of employment and productivity, and I proposed that we eliminate the reference to productivity. I did this for a number of reasons. First, I feel that the maintenance of productivity could well be a violation of GATT. If these products would normally go to the United States and now could not because of the surcharge, and yet we maintained production in order to keep a certain level of employment, what would we be doing? Perhaps we would be suggesting to manufacturers that they should produce exactly the same amount of the same goods as before. But what would they do with these goods—export them to the United States? If they could—and they can now—why would they need the act? Because they are too expensive? What happens then? Do we stop buying? Are they needed?

I believe there must be a degree of flexibility so that we do not create a kind of hothouse productivity for its own sake. Firms must be flexible if they wish to maintain employment. They may use the money to seek markets in other parts of the world, or for development and so on. This is an important change and I thank the government for accepting these amendments.

I support this bill, Mr. Speaker. I have one last point to make and that is that I believe it is very useful to maintain in employment people who are now working and are affected by the surcharge. However, it does not, nor is it expected to, do anything about putting those presently unemployed back into the work force. This is an important point.

Mr. Danforth: Right on.

Mr. Cafik: The reason I raise the point at the moment, Mr. Speaker, is because this bill sets a pace and a tone and creates a precedent which I think is very important. First of all, it seems to me to imply that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is willing to look at our unemployment problems, something I am glad to hear. Second, it establishes a precedent—that the government is willing to give money to maintain employment. I do not think it would be much of a step after that for the government perhaps to give money in order to create or stimulate new employment. I have suggested this in the House on two or three occasions, and personally to the ministers concerned.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I think first we must introduce a program which I would term an employment stimulation fund. Under that program we could give loans, grants or a combination of the two directly to industry, in direction relationship to the number of new people that the industy could put on its payroll, provided, of course, that the industry's activities were viable and meaningful. I hope that this bill will not only help those who are threatened by unemployment as a result of the surcharge, but that it will also serve as a useful precedent in spurring the government on to do more for those who unfortunately are unemployed today.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question now?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, by all means.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member had the courtesy to refer to an amendment that I presented yesterday. Would he not agree that the purported concession that the minister perhaps would have been inclined to make with respect to my amendment in terms of quarterly reports to Parliament would not have included how much money particular firms were to be given, would not have included levels of employment before and after the grants were made to those firms and, therefore, would not have provided the essential information which I deemed to be necessary in my amendment?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, in response to that question I would say, first of all, that the minister in the House—I was present at the time—indicated that these quarterly reports would be made. In the committee he indicated quite clearly, and I know the hon. member was present at the time, that levels of employment before and after grants would be contained in this report. There would be no reference to levels of production. That was part of the hon. member's amendment. I have cited my reasons for being opposed to such reference and I believe that the minister feels the same way. He would give all the relevant pieces of information that I believe the hon. member wants, save one. The hon. member apparently thought it essential to know which firms were getting how much money, in specific detail. I, frankly, do not consider that information, interesting though it may be, to be directly relevant to whether this legislation is achieving its objective.

Mr. Alexander: Answer the question.

Mr. Cafik: The minister indicated in committee, and I believe that this is in itself a substantial answer to the question, that any hon. member is free to contact the department with respect to loans made under the act, and specific information will be given as to details and firms. Nevertheless, so far as a report to the House of Commons is concerned, that will not be done.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), I sympathize with the purpose behind the amendment. He seeks to send the bill back to committee, the idea being that we should allow the agricultural industry to participate to a greater extent in the benefits of the legislation. This suggestion was brought forward in committee and turned down, and in the report stage discussion it was again brought forward. I understand that Mr. Speaker found difficulty in accepting suggestions put forward. Therefore, it seems to me there is no point in referring this bill a third time to the standing committee, since nothing more will happen to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ritchie: I hope that the bill, which I find not to my liking but which accomplishes a certain amount, will pass tonight. Since the surtax was imposed by the United States certain courses of action by the United States and other trading nations of the western world have become clearer. This bill points up a lack of any real understanding by this government of problems that lie ahead. The government completely fails to understand what might be done.

At this time it seems obvious that President Nixon likes the 10 per cent surcharge and it will not come off until international currencies are realigned in favour of the United States economy. The President and Mr. Connally seem to have been very blunt about this. Pleading our case will not work, and the Americans seem quite willing to suffer economic retaliation against them. Mr. Nixon's protectionist policies are proving to be more popular at home as each day passes. Mr. Nixon is nothing if not a political president. Only when President Nixon and John Connally are convinced that the policy has done its job and rectified the American balance of payment will the surcharge be removed.

Perhaps Canada is the unfortunate bystander in the struggle to have Japanese and European currencies realigned upward in relation to the United States dollar, which must be done to relieve the massive imbalance of the American balance of trade. In any case, we cannot fault the Americans for being unwilling to continue to operate under such a high imbalance of payments. Most of all, we cannot fault them for being reluctant to run their economy for the benefit of the rest of the world.

Since 1967 Canada has been moving from a deficit position in merchandizing trade with the United States. We registered a surplus of $182 million in 1968, $371 million in 1969, over $1 billion in 1970 and almost $800 million in the first eight months of this year, or close to $1.2 billion on a whole year basis. This shows that Canada has benefited enormously in the American market, even if this surplus of merchandizing trade has been largely offset by the invisible income of the United States in interest and dividend payments from Canadian investments. The figures indicate that we have benefited substantially as a result of our trade with the United States.

Turning now to Bill C-262, it has become apparent that the Canadian government in responding to the United States surcharge is steering a very tricky course. The problem is how to pass new American levies without being wrecked on the rocks of the United States anti-dumping laws. Ottawa, in this matter, should have had the advice of experienced trade experts. Ottawa invented the device of the voluntary quota which has always been accepted by our oriental friends with extreme politeness. In this case it is not likely that the Americans will be very polite.

One of the problems this bill faces is that if manufacturers are to be assisted in meeting the surcharge there is a risk that the Americans will apply counterbalancing duties. These may be applied even if our commodities get by the anti-dumping duties. We are given to understand that Mr. Paul Volcker, Undersecretary of the United States Treasury, is studying our legislation. It seems likely that the Americans have built into their legislation similar protectionist mechanisms. Our own remodelled anti-dumping laws of 1969 empower the Governor in Council to impose a surtax when the government is satisfied that "goods of any kind, the growth, produce or manufacture of any country, are being imported into Canada under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to Canadian producers." This perhaps explains why the present bill is being presented as something other than an export subsidy measure. It perhaps explains why the bill is presented as permanent legislation although it is filled with phrases dealing with the particular surtax problem of the moment. Whether or not it will prove acceptable in its new disguise remains to be seen.

It is very difficult for anyone, even an expert, to distinguish the difference between employment maintenance and export subsidy. Presumably we export primarily to maintain employment, yet the bill would indicate that this is not necessarily so. The bill indicates that our "non-subsidies" of $80 million are directly linked with exports to the United States because a firm must normally export 20 per cent of its produce to qualify. The export figure is measured as a percentage and exports lost as a result of the U.S. surcharge are to be considered.

Considerable time was spent on the bill in committee. Committee members asked pointed questions as to whether or not job maintenance payments are likely to arouse the suspicions of Mr. Volcker and in that way bring down the wrath of Washington. I thought the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howard) was quite adept at making the point that the outlays were not tied to anything in particular. He quite freely stated that whether the men were kept busy painting the back fence, making additions or sweeping out the shop, the seven-man board would not be very alert in delving into these devious make-work programs. The parliamentary secretary seemed to indicate that the board will not have time to check very closely the use of these funds.

It will be interesting to note who will be the board members to staff this new arm of the government. Surely they will have to be a different type of member from those we have seen in the past. We will not need the sharp, alert people who will be on the anti-dumping tribunal or in the proposed new authority for regulating business which is to operate under the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). These will indeed be men of limited vision who will not look too hard at where this money will be going.

This bill makes no mention of another problem that is very obvious. What about manufacturers who qualify under the 20 per cent rule, seeking to enlarge their share of the domestic market at the expense of their firms which do not qualify? This might at first seem acceptable because it might lower prices at home, but in the end it hardly appears ethical to the business community to have some firms underwriting others with public money. An obvious requirement of the board is to have seven top men with very circumscribed vision. They must be unable to see funds that go for export purposes, especially to the United States. They must be tolerant of those who paint the back fence and sweep out the plant four times a day and, finally, they must be alert to make sure that none of the money is used against domestic competitors.

There are many disadvantages to this legislation and many ramifications that will present problems to the board. Many companies sell into the American market less for the financial return than for the contribution to efficiency because of the additional volume. For many of them the American surcharge means they will lose that market, and unless they make up the additional production elsewhere they will suffer in their domestic operations. Then there are those industries where sales in the American market are based on price. The lumber industry is an example. Then what about the effect of the surcharge on exports by Canadian primary producers to their subsidiary, secondary producers in the American market? All these things are very obscure. The impact of the surcharge on the Canadian economy seems to vary greatly. The estimated loss ranges from $400 million to $900 million. No matter what way you look at it, the Americans must see this measure as a form of subsidization of exports which invites retaliation.

What, then, are the other avenues open to the government to combat the surtax? The simplest and most obvious is a reduction in the corporate tax rate. This would stimulate the economy. The purpose of this bill is to preserve employment. If we cannot maintain our exports to the U.S., this will stimulate increased consumption in Canada and the possibility of finding increased markets abroad. Both Europe and Asia, with their increased currency values, should be easier targets for our exporters. Americans are determined to reduce their take of foreign goods and they want to have the employment represented by these goods maintained in the United States. In order to create jobs it would be best to shift employment to other sectors of the economy. A revision of the corporate tax rate should help accomplish this.

Different selective tax credits to export industries which demonstrate an increase of new business should have been considered. The reason this government has rejected such approaches seems to be that it is firmly hooked on the belief that it alone knows what is best for the economy. Rather than non-discriminatory tax relief, it is continually reverting to grants, loans and other assistance which are creating economic dislocation.

The advent of the American surtax is the most important economic event that has occurred since World War II. It has radically altered the trading pattern of the world in a way that is still very obscure. We are learning that the world does not have to buy from Canada and we must take resolute action to pilot our way in the new situation. This bill is a small recognition of the problem but it still adheres to the policy that government knows best and that the revenues of the federal government are to be kept high. When it is considered that the three levels of government took 46 per cent of the gross national product for the first six months of this year, it follows that the private sector of our economy cannot function in an efficient manner in such a confined tax space.

I support this bill as being of some help, but I think the thrust is wrong and more useful measures could have been adopted.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather difficult to understand how this measure will meet the problems which we face. When the United States announced the 10 per cent surcharge it dropped a bombshell on the world generally and on the Canadian economy in particular. The speech in this House that best outlined the reasons for this action by the United States was made by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans). He outlined the reasons why this action was taken by the most powerful trading nation in the world.

I do not understand how the western trading nations can operate effectively or economically as long as the 10 per cent surcharge remains. The way the economy operates today, the nation with the money and the power is the one which stands ready to support the financial structure of the world economy which it dominates. We have now reached the point where the nation which dominates world economy is turning to its partners and saying they will have to carry the bag. If we were the beneficiaries of the system, there might be some logic in telling us that we would have to pay to maintain the system—but we are not the beneficiaries, we are one of the satellites of the system.

For the government to say to the House that this bill is the answer to problems of this kind seems to be begging the question. One of the shortcomings of the bill is that it does not take care of the effects that the United States surcharge will have on much of the production in the area of Canada from which I come. If the bill were to meet the current situation—namely, that one part of Canada will be left out in the cold—it would be necessary to consider the global trading situation of the western world. Surely it must be evident that this measure will not meet this overall situation. Along with introducing this measure the government should be saying to this House and to the people of Canada that it has a long-range view, that it is going to reorganize our manufacturing and production resources to meet a situation where the major trading nation in the western world has decided to cut out a major part of the products of its trading partners. It seems almost bordering on the ridiculous that a major nation like the United States does not want our products, or at least the major part of them, and then we devise means of getting our products into a nation that does not want them.

I believe that prior to the Second World War, but certainly since, we have taken a continental approach to the North American economy and tied ourselves in with it, assuming that this would bring us a high standard of living and a large measure of economic security. Our whole policy has been based on this premise. We now find that this policy is not going to work. We told United States investors that we were going to build a tariff wall around Canada from which they would benefit, give service to Canadians and at the same time ship their products back to the United States. Some of the resource industries also received tax benefits.

An hon. Member: Tell us what you would do.

Mr. Gleave: In addition to paying for all this investment and losing our money on mutual funds and other funds operated by insurance companies in Canada, do you know what else we are going to do, Mr. Speaker? We are going to subsidize the United States consumer to the extent of the sum this bill provides to assist Canadian workers in Canada.

Mr. Mahoney: Oh, come on.

Mr. Gleave: I am not kidding. If the objective is to put goods manufactured in Canada into the United States market—

Mr. Mahoney: The objective is to keep Canadians working.

Mr. Gleave: If the objective is to put "made in Canada" goods into the United States and the government is paying part of the wages of the workers who made those goods, then we are subsidizing to that extent United States consumers. I do not care how you cut the cake, that is the net result.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Gleave: When I have finished, Mr. Speaker. Then if the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) chooses to ask a question, if I have the answer I will give it to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) has the floor and I think he should be permitted to make his speech.

Mr. Gleave: I am putting forward the picture as I see it. If hon. members on the other side do not accept my logic, then that is their privilege. I was saying that the Canadian government has made a proposal to the House that is supposed to keep the Canadian economy healthy. But I maintain that the proposition advanced by the government is unsound, and for the reasons I have advanced. Even at that, the government's proposal is effective only for certain industries; others will be left outside the scope of the bill.

One question that has been asked before is: What about those industries that do not qualify for assistance under this measure for one reason or another? I know of at least one industry in my own constituency that has informed me it will simply have to close its United States agency and cut its exports to nil. I am sure that this industry will be beyond the scope of the government's bill. If the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), who is grinning at me from across the way and has been needling me, wants to be honest I am sure he could cite cases in Caglary of industries that are in the same position.

Mr. Mahoney: We all recognize the problem, but what is your solution?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Yes, tell us.

Mr. Gleave: If I proposed a solution to the members on the other side of this House, they would not accept it.

Mr. Mahoney: Try us.

Mr. Gleave: I have been arguing against a nonsensical grains bill for the last several months, but not one member on that side of the House has taken any notice of what I have said. So if they will not listen to me on a matter of which I have some knowledge, how can I expect them to listen to me on a matter on which I would not be considered an expert? In any case, it is the responsibility of members on the other side of the House to bring forward a measure that will meet the situation.

Mr. Cafik: We have.

Mr. Gleave: But it will not meet the situation. I have talked until now about the general application of this measure. When you get down to its particular application to primary producers, it is a failure. Its provisions do not apply to them. We have had presented to the House a measure to deal with a surcharge that the United States has placed on Canadian products, but it is a measure that deals with only part of the picture.

One company in my constituency exports 20 per cent of its products to the United States. If this company is affected by the U.S. surcharge it can probably make an application under this measure for assistance. But the primary producer who is affected by the U.S. surcharge can make no such application; he is left out in the cold.

It has been said that a processing company must maintain its price to the consumer. But at what level, Mr. Speaker? Hogs fluctuate up and down in price every day. Prices have been down to rock bottom at $19 a hundred in Saskatoon for months, yet the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has not lifted a finger to remedy the situation. The minister has been asked in this House what he is going to do about a whole range of agricultural products and he has stated that he will look at these products commodity by commodity. Today he finally announced that he had taken a look at the situation regarding potatoes. But when is the minister going to get around to taking a look at the rest of the products?

• (9:00 p.m.)

An hon Member: Rye, barley and tobacco.

Mr. Gleave: Yes, when will the minister get around to including tobacco? We have not been told in this House when he will get around to including assistance to the producers of these products. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) said today that 85 per cent of processed agricultural products will be included. I do not know how he arrived at that figure, but the figures we have indicate that 65 per cent of our agricultural products will be affected by the U.S. surcharge. We do not have any exact figures, but even on the government's figures what guarantee do we have that this protection will be of assistance to the producer?

The minister also referred to whisky as one of the main products. I suppose rye whisky is made from rye.

Mr. Mahoney: Guess again.

Mr. Gleave: If I guessed again I might suggest that some corn is also used, keeping in mind the usual remarks of that hon. member.

An hon. Member: Just like the speeches of the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney).

Mr. Gleave: In any event, rye and barley are two grains seriously affected by the surcharge, and those grains are sold at below the average price of a year ago.

Mr. Mahoney: I can't hear you.

Mr. Gleave: Then you should stick your thumbs in your ears.

Mr. Mahoney: It is your colleague from Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) who is bothering me.

Mr. Gleave: We should have had a clear statement from the Minister of Agriculture as to the policy in respect of farm products and how we are to meet this problem. Subsidies on farm products are being discontinued at the time this policy is proposed to assist manufacturing industries. We had in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act a measure of assistance to the wheat farmer. This legislation could have been extended to take care of barley and rapeseed growers. This program was accepted without question by the United States, other competitors and importers. The logical thing to do at this time of extreme pressure from the U.S. and export markets is to continue that program and devise a companion program to assist our primary producers. In that way they might have something in the way of insurance for the years ahead when they may expect extreme export pressures. Instead of that, we are asked to adopt a stabilization program set up on percentages. This is a sort of never-never program. There is no way I can sell this government's proposal to the farm people in the communities of western Canada. As far as they are concerned, this is a non-program.

All I can say to the government and to the people on that side of the House is that we must look at Canada's trade patterns and trade orientation in a different fashion. We must redirect our objectives before the government negotiates with other trading countries. Our objective is to obtain as large a piece of the western world trade pie as possible. That is the aim of our competitors. We are all fighting for a piece of the same pie and it is no longer big enough to go around. The sort of shinplaster approach offered in this bill is not good enough.

Mr. Woolliams: How do we know they will pay? The government did not pay the farmers.

Mr. Gleave: That is true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Cafik: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had asked the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) whether he would answer a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question can only be asked with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Cafik: In his speech the hon. member indicated that if the purpose of the act is to continue to put goods into the United States of America, we will be in effect subsidizing the U.S. consumer. I should like to ask the hon. member what clause of this bill states or implies that it is directed toward that objective. The bill is clearly designed to support employment in firms affected. Perhaps the hon. member would clarify that matter for the House.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised if even the government were naïve enough to bring forward a bill intended to subsidize the United States consumer. I said that the effect of this bill and the government's action, in so far as we use the taxpayers' money to pay a portion of Canadian workers' wages in order to export goods to the United States, will benefit U.S. consumers.

Mr. Cafik: That is not the purpose of it.

Mr. Gleave: It may not be the purpose, but that is the effect.

[Translation]

Mr. Ronald Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope I am not disturbing anyone by entering the debate at this time.

This House is now studying Bill C-262 entitled "An Act to support employment in Canada by mitigating the disruptive effect on Canadian industry of the imposition of foreign import surtaxes or other actions of a like effect".

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the bill might just as well have been called "An Act to support U.S. consumption".

Here is what a columnist of Le Devoir wrote and I quote:

American consumers will still use Canadian sources of supply at the old prices; Canadian exporters will absorb the surcharge by reducing their sales price and they will be compensated by federal subsidies. The Trudeau government has therefore chosen to subsidize the American consumers through their Canadian suppliers.

It cannot be said that this is an innovation since we use that method constantly, for instance, when we grant interest free loans of millions dollars to foreign countries. Several Canadian shipyards operate currently under that method. Thanks to special loans and subsidies, thousand-year-old countries are building ships in Canada with our money. We, Canadians, therefore subsidize foreign consumers by emptying our fairly depleted pockets.

This is somewhat comparable to having four or five Canadians, who cannot afford to have their own cars, contributing from $700 to $800 each to a foreigner that he might buy one. Now, we must not be surprised if with such methods the number of our unemployed increases. For the second consecutive year, with the coming winter, Canada will be experiencing one of the highest level of unemployment for decades.

It is true that the American surcharge of 10 per cent on exports will not help Canada. Moreover, if the tax remains in effect for a year, our country will lose $900 million and have some 90,000 more unemployed. If we want to blame our powerful neighbour for such a high loss of revenue, it would be easy enough since this figure of 90,000 in fact only represents one seventh of the Canadian unemployed during the first months.

Our unemployment is a Canadian deed which will be amplified by the American decision. The Canadian people are not only affected by an unemployment problem but particularly by a consumer problem.

Statistics show that at the minimum, two fifths of Canadians live on the poverty line and Quebecers make up two thirds of them. Ontario has seen the number of its welfare cases rise by 43 per cent in the course of last year.

From shore to shore, poverty is the most persistent problem. Thousands of Canadian families are stagnating in physical and moral misery, in the midst of a wealthy society.

So this government has taken the bit between its teeth and introduced a legislation to "support employment", which would allow the granting of subsidies to industries badly affected by the surcharge.

Among other points to clarify in this bill, there is, in my opinion, that of the percentage. I am amazed at the way of sorting out exporters according to the quantity of goods exported. As for larger businesses which have operated for many years, have succeeded in making their products known abroad, and whose turnover is greater than a certain percentage, it will be easy to class them.

On the other hand, the smaller firms or those that have developed their business mainly in Canada will not receive such subsidies because their export percentage does not reach that required by the new act. Why such discrimination? Up till now, has the present government not asked the same of all firms? Has the government taken their turnover into account before imposing the 12 per cent tax on their production? Has the government asked what was their turnover before asking them to deduct taxes from their employees' salaries? Their foreign business was not sufficient to entitle them to some assistance but it was never low enough to exempt them from taxation.

Such is the lot of our Canadian manufacturers. One law for the rich and one for the poor. For a government that brags about creating a just society, that is an odd way of operating.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who is piloting this bill must be aware of the results of its enforcement. In fact, he was warned of them by telegrams. Canadian manufacturers know the danger facing them, and among those who made known their views to the government a group, in particular, namely the Glove Manufacturers Association of the Province of Quebec Inc. of Loretteville was very clear. On September 8, 1971 it wrote to the hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I quote:

Mr. Minister, we hereby confirm the telegram sent you to-day: "RE: Bill under consideration regarding help to industry. Consider such legislation discriminatory for our members exporting 8, 10 and 15 per cent of their total production. They will suffer prejudice in relation to those being awarded subsidies.

Some of our members have been exporting to the United States since 1967 up to 8, 10, or 15 per cent of their total production.

If the bill is passed as it is these members will get no help whilst those exporting 20 per cent will be encouraged to the prejudice of smaller industries.

Our members already have to fight not to be swamped by the flood of gloves imported at ridiculous prices from the Far East and from other countries. It seems to us that all the manufacturers who export should be helped. This would be a way to encourage small industries.

We hope that you will consider our request.

Sincerely yours,

The Glove Manufacturers Association of the Province of Quebec

The furniture industry is another area affected by the 10 per cent American surcharge which also plagues shoe manufacturers in Saint-Emile-de-Loretteville, Ancienne-Lorette and Que bec City. In short, the problem is the same throughout the province. While those people have already experienced the hardship caused by massive imports from other countries the Canadian government now is preparing to administer the mercy stroke with provisions such as those of Bill C-262!

The hon. minister may say that there is in this bill a clause which provides for special consideration in the case of industrialists who do not reach the export percentage mentioned in the bill. In fact, we find that the legislation now before us contains a paragraph which allows the government to indulge in patronage.

Mr. Speaker, I dare say these things because I have seen the Department of Regional Economic Expansion operate. For instance, we know that owners of small businesses with a hundred employees or so and savings of $50,000 were told: Gentlemen, we cannot subsidize your business because the amount of your savings shows that you can pull through by yourself, while we have seen government grants made to companies with several thousand employees, worth millions of dollars and having long since demonstrated their ability of pulling through without assistance. That is why we are so deeply concerned about the bill.

Here is what the bill says in paragraph 2 of clause 15, on page 6:

(2) If, following a recommendation under subsection (1), the Governor in Council so directs, the Board may authorize payment of a grant to the manufacturer for an assistance period in such amount as it considers appropriate for the purpose of maintaining employment and production at a plant of the manufacturer, subject to such terms and conditions, if any, as may be set out in the directions of the Governor in Council.

Mr. Speaker, terms and conditions will be set out by the Governor in Council. Let us imagine that the latter says to the manufacturer that under the act he is not eligible for a grant but can be given some assistance under certain conditions. What conditions? Will it suffice to show a membership card or will it be necessary to subscribe to the election fund of the Liberal party?

Mr. Rondeau: Both.

Mr. Godin: The Canadian government is introducing Bill C-262 for the purpose of controling the unemployment situation, which is deteriorating from day to day. It must however be recognized that the amount of $80 million to be paid out is a drop in the ocean compared to the amounts the government continues to extract from Canadians by way of the 11 per cent tax on building materials and the 12 per cent tax on all goods manufactured in Canada.

It is clear that the government has lost control of the country's economy and is operating the country on behalf of another power. It is an open secret that our present system is heading for disaster. The whole population is aware of the danger, since we are living in 1971.

If we go back, we realize that in the past the population had much more faith in its administration.

Around 1935, for instance, the impending disaster was felt only by experts. And among these, I believe I can name the former Prime Minister, the right hon. Mackenzie King who, in 1935, made the following statement:

Capital flow should be related to the domestic social and industrial needs of the Canadian people.

Once a nation loses control over its currency and its credit, it does not matter much who in that nation makes laws. Once in control, money lenders will ruin any country.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister also said:

As long as control over currency and credit has not been restored to the government and acknowledged as being its most obvious and most sacred responsibility, any talk of democracy and Parliament supremacy is vain and futile.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): This is still true in 1971.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, money lenders, once they are in control, will lead any country to its ruin. This is what the right hon. Mackenzie King stated in 1935.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): That was the time when he spoke the truth.

Mr. Godin: Never before had high interest rates prevailed as much as they have since 1967, in other words since the liberal government did away with the ceiling on interest rates.

We, members of the Créditiste party, have fought the adoption of Bill C-222 and we are still opposed to that bill which allowed banks to raise their interest rates.

The present situation proves we were right and we are still convinced—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): This is true!

Mr. Godin: —that this rise in the interest rates is the main cause of inflation and other related problems in our country.

Indeed, the bill now under study is just a poultice on a wooden leg.

If there is still a little honesty in this government, more should be done. In order to help Canadian consumers to meet their needs, to build a healthy and stable economy, to maintain a strong domestic market, I think the government should take its responsibilities by regaining control of its credit first, and then by eliminating forever the 11 per cent tax on building materials and the 12 per cent excise tax on all products manufactured in Canada.

With its strong majority, this Liberal government can also introduce emergency legislation to solve the consumption problem in Canada. Under Bill C-262, we are about to subsidize U.S. consumption. Let us then complete the program with a legislation on Canadian consumption which will make grants available for Canadian products consumed in Canada.

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I shall not be too long, which will be pleasant news to some hon. members opposite, but I think one should question where we are going in this nation and whether Canada can thrive or survive in the situation in which we find ourselves. We must ask ourselves whether or not we are prepared to do anything about it.

Canada is faced with the problem of trying to bring about greater employment and at the same time we are trying to apply stopgap measures which will have very little effect in the long run. It was pleasant to hear some of our colleagues at the NATO conference tell us about the employment picture in their countries. At the same time, it is disappointing for us to view the employment picture in Canada. When one listened to the NATO delegates this week one was made aware of the fact that there is practically no unemployment in their countries, while in Canada we have 6.5 per cent unemployment. One wonders where Canada is going and whether it can survive in these circumstances.

Surely, if we are to continue selling our heritage, our national resources, we should ask ourselves whether or not we will survive. We have to ask ourselves, when we are confronted with the surtax imposed by the United States, what the United States really thinks of Canada. When I look at the news items of the last two days I begin to wonder what would happen if the neo-Fascist racist who referred to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as the crypto-Communist from Canada became president of the United States.

If we are to survive, I suggest we should take action to protect our sovereignty and, in fact, to protect the people living in this nation. If we do not, it will be too late to find out why we have unemployment. It is rather ironic to look at the newspapers and see the headline "New York Speech—Tough Talking Sharp Lashes U.S. Surcharge". The article appeared on September 21, 1971. I heartily agree with what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said in his speech. I wish he would stand up in the House and be as forthright here as he was in New York. The article reads:

> In one of the toughest speeches delivered in the U.S. by a Canadian minister in the post-war era, Mr. Sharp repeatedly attacked what he dubbed "the Nixon doctrine" as an abdication of U.S. leadership.

Further in the article he is quoted as follows:

> "These proposed permanent protectionist measures call into doubt the basic assumptions of our trading relations with the United States and indeed of world trading arrangements generally," he said.
> He suggested, while claiming not to accept, the premise that the U.S. "in narrow and shortsighted pursuit of its own interests has adopted a beggar-my-neighbour policy towards Canada".

At the same time, we are asked to pass a bill in the House which does little in effect to deal with unemployment in this country. It seems to me that if the government can refer to retaliatory measures against the U.S., they should say exactly what they are talking about. If there are regulations to be included in this bill, the government should tell the House of Commons what the regulations will be so that an intelligent vote can take place.

Many people may argue about nationalization so far as industries are concerned. So far as I am concerned, Canadians must safeguard, right now, their independence and their power of decision. So long as we are able to give out the type of money that we are talking about—namely, some $80 million—to companies but have no safeguards and no power of decision as to how it will be spent, because the power of decision is not in this nation but, rather, in the boardrooms south of the border or elsewhere, how can we ask members of this House to support the bill when in reality the bill means that we have no control over the money? I suggest that the grants under this bill will bring no long-term benefits to the communities wherein industry is located. It is just a stopgap measure which means little in the long run.

In my opinion we should receive answers to certain questions. We should ask what the government intends to do to prevent taxpayers' money in the form of assistance from going out of the country. I should like to ask what assurances Canadians have that these grants will not be used by foreign-controlled industry to assist the buying out of the few Canadian-owned industries that remain. There is nothing to indicate that this will not be the case.

Another question that we must ask ourselves is whether the situation of lay-offs in Canada is not similar to what is happening in the United States. I refer to the "Labour News Headlines" referring to paper lay-offs. It reads:

> A number of cities (in the U.S.) are making "paper lay-offs" of employees to rehire them with funds intended to provide jobs for the unemployed under the Emergency Employment Act, the nation's top manpower official disclosed (Thursday). Malcolm R. Lowell, Assistant Secretary of Labour, said that the administration was very concerned about these "paper lay-offs".

I suggest that we could be faced with exactly the same situation in Canada. We may have paper lay-offs in order that corporations and industry here may in effect get a piece of this pie of some $80 million unless there is a regulation requiring them to disclose how the money will be spent, how many people will be affected and what is the level of employment, which in effect was the purpose of the amendment which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) proposed last night. I think we must look at the situation and find out whether we can in fact trust the international firms to play it straight about the level of employment and play it straight with Canadian dollars. Unless the decisions are made in Canada, how can we expect outside industry to play it straight with Canadian tax dollars?

I see the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is still in the chamber. It is unfortunate that provision is not made to have on the employment support board representatives of employee groups in Canada. If we are concerned about the methods of reorganizing workers in particular fields, then workers should have their representatives on the board. In some countries employees are represented on various boards where decisions are made which affect their livelihood and employment generally.

I wish to quote a statement made by the vice-chairman of the Science Council of Canada, published in the Ottawa Citizen of September 10, 1971. The newspaper report reads:

Lack of government incentives is responsible for the retarded growth of the manufacturing industry in Canada, the vice-chairman of the Science Council of Canada says.

"Nothing has been done to make secondary industry healthy, and more and more multinational corporations are exploiting the Canadian market," Dr. Roger Gaudry told 40 senior industrial and government executives attending a development seminar at Queen's University.

Unemployment would accelerate and industrial research suffer if the situation wasn't altered.

It may be fine to suggest that we can put $80 million into supporting certain sections of the economy at this time, but apparently we cannot put $80 million into other areas of the economy where immediate employment could be created. Here I am talking about housing and sewage plant construction, which could provide immediate employment with beneficial results filtering all down the line.

Some hon. members opposite wondered how we could propose an amendment to include farmers and fishermen under the provisions of this bill. It seems strange that these two important areas of the economy, farming and fishing, have been completely omitted from the bill's provisions. I do not know why hon. members opposite cannot agree to extend the protection of the bill to farmers and fishermen. It seems the bill is not intended to help those areas of the economy which have suffered most during the last few years of Liberal government. Surely consideration should be given to these areas of our economy.

If we are concerned, we had better consider who controls the destiny of Canada. If we are concerned about whether Canada can survive, why don't we take action immediately? Why do we have to wait for the government to bring down a white paper on foreign ownership? The government promised it would indicate what it intended to do to protect Canadian ownership of industry and would tell us what it would try to do to buy back ownership of certain industries. But nothing is being done. Now we are presented with this stopgap measure to pay $80 million in order to protect employment. Surely hon. members should be concerned about the destiny of Canada and should realize that if we do not act immediately, Canada will not survive.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, upon learning that the U.S. government had decided to impose a 10 per cent surcharge on imports of manufactured products, the Canadian government was faced with serious problems. It was confronted by a huge problem for small men and the solution as proposed by this government reminds me of Albert Camus' philosophical works which said that Sisyphus had been doomed forever by the Gods to roll uphill a stone which always rolled down again.

The solution put forward by this government is the same it offered in the past to solve other problems. The problems are different, but the same solutions are suggested. The same burden is dragged along and the Liberal government seems eternally condemned to do so by the gods.

Mr. Speaker, the solution which the government wants to impose will have the same effects as all other steps it has taken in the past in an attempt to solve the employment problem in Canada.

The government feels that we must prevent the American surcharge from creating more unemployment in Canada. Such is its objective. We must prevent that by all possible means. However, the government has only found one: To grant to the industries—which in many cases are branches of American companies operating in Canada—grants to enable them to subsidize American consumption. In other words, the United States are thus put on the same footing as underdeveloped countries. I agree with subsidies to help the Arab refugees in Palestine or the Pakistani refugees. But granting subsidies out of the Canadian taxpayers' money to help the American consumers is an outrage: we cannot go along with that.

That is exactly why—

Mr. La Salle: That is not true—

Mr. Laprise: The member for Joliette says it is not true, but that is exactly what is going to happen—

• (9:40 p.m.)

I have here to prove it an article published in La Presse on Wednesday September 8, 1971, and I quote:

—these are obviously grants to export. But such practices have been denounced by the General Assembly of GATT as "non-tariff barriers".

In other words, this rescue plan is no more no less than a retaliatory measure directed against the United States, designed to counteract the effect of the American surcharge in Canada.

The procedure is, all in all, rather simple: in the case of a Canadian product with a listed price of $100 in the United States, the surcharge would raise this price to $110. But through the federal government, if a Canadian exporter feels that his sales are jeopardized by this price increase, he may get from Ottawa a compensation for two thirds of this increase, that is $6.66, which would allow him to reduce his selling price to $103.33.

This is to enable businessmen to sell at a cheaper price in the United States. We thus come to the conclusion that the $80 million will be used to subsidize Americans so that they may continue to buy Canadian products while our production system is almost solely based on foreign consumption. To export or to die. If we cannot export, we die in front of an abundance of Canadian products.

That is how the production system is set up. And as soon as other countries, either the United States or other industrial nations, raise tariff barriers to prevent us from "exporting" our unemployed, we are immediately faced with practically insoluble problems.

Instead of subsidizing Americans the Créditistes suggest, as did their leader in his speech during the debate on second reading, and as have done also other Créditistes, that we should subsidize Canadian consumption by removing the 12 per cent excise tax on manufactured products and the 11 per cent tax on building materials. Thus, we would increase the purchasing power of individuals who would be able, depending on their wishes and needs, to tell industry what to produce and in what quantities.

The government has three ways of arranging the $80 million grant to the United States: first, it could collect $80 million worth of taxes from taxpayers, which means that Canadian workers would have that much less to spend on essentials.

The $80 million reduction in purchases would cause hardship to Canadian industries which would go out of business, thus creating unemployment, in the same way as if we were exporting less to United States.

There is another alternative open to the government if it does not increase taxes in the amount of $80 million, that is to reduce other departments' budgets, tighten up credit, and reduce public works. This solution will also create unemployment. Therefore, the result is the same.

However, there is a third way: To borrow money. As a matter of fact, the government could issue bonds by borrowing $80 million to subsidize the Americans. Then, there would be interest to be paid every year, during an undetermined period, on these $80 million. Then, through income taxes, the government will go and get this money in the taxpayers' pockets in order to pay interests to those who will kindly finance this loan of $80 million.

I remember reading the reports of the first federal-provincial conferences taking place in 1942. At that time, a former Conservative leader, the hon. John Braken, who was Premier of Manitoba, said something like: Our tax system is set up in such a way as to take money from the poor to give it to the rich.

As for those $80 million, the government will not take them from the pockets of the poor. They will not be supplied by the lumberjack, nor by the miner, the farmer or the settler, nor by the construction worker, but by capitalists, high finance and trusts. But when it comes to taxing individuals to pay interests to the trusts, they will go to the common taxpayer and make him pay tribute to the capitalists who feed government loans.

I cannot approve that decision to solve the problem with which, among so many others, the government is concerned. I, too, like my colleagues, think that we should abolish the sales tax on manufactured goods, particularly those which come from the manufacturing industry. The 12 per cent tax should be abolished, as should, especially, the 11 per cent tax on building materials in order that every family may be able to own its own home.

Then will we keep Canadian taxpayers and consumers happy; we will encourage renewed growth in Canadian industry, which will be an effective step toward the solution which all of us, I think, want to bring about in order to solve the unemployment problem in Canada.

In order to determine clearly which members favour an improvement in Canadian consumption, and whether we should be concerned primarily with keeping Canadians or Americans happy, we will call for a vote on third reading.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, before the end of this debate, I would like to express certain thoughts.

I already had the occasion to say a few words about this most important bill. I believed in the goodwill of the government and that it would try to counteract the disruptive effects of the American surtax. Once again today, I heard some members address many criticisms to the government. I would like to reiterate tonight some comments about this surtax.

I think the government must do something. I think its efforts are valuable. Having listened to some members, it seems to me that the government is giving grants directly to the United States. Allow me to say that I disagree completely with these allegations. Unlike some of my colleagues, I think that corporations must be helped, even if they are controlled by American interests in Canada. EVen if some members seem seriously concerned about this measure, industries located in their ridings will be very happy if they can benefit from the subsidies, which in turn will allow citizens to retain their jobs.

I have confidence in the bill now before us. Will this measure be sufficient to offset the difficulties which the American surtax will entail? This, I think, nobody can tell.

It remains, nevertheless, that when a minister proposes a measure, he proves that he is making an effort to assist Canadian industries, and God knows how much such help is presently needed. I think that this legislation should be supported and that it would be unkind to avail oneself of this opportunity to engage in petty politics about such an important matter. Of course, Canadian industries need government subsidies. I am wondering therefore why we are delaying so much the passage of this bill.

My comments will be very brief because I do not want to waste the time of the House, but I think that I had to put forth these opinions, not only to justify my position but to remind hon. members that a decision had to be taken. The government has submitted this measure and I believe we should pass it without further delay. I hope the government will not hesitate to add to or to increase its grants, if necessary, and I truly believe that we need one, two or perhaps three months to really determine the disruptive effects of the American policy on our industry.

I therefore dare hope that the government will not hesitate to grant additional credits if required. There is nothing in the bill that says that if the $80 million are not enough, a further $80 million will be added. As has been stated previously, these $80 million will be certainly quite appreciated by the Canadian or foreign companies operating in Canada since they will help them to maintain their employment level.

Considering our increasing difficulties and since, from time to time, we hear that factories are closing down, I think it is high time for the government to take this action and I certainly will not hesitate to support this measure and urge my hon. colleagues to do the same.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I thought I might evoke some sort of favourable response by saying that I gather there is general disposition to conclude this bill this evening. I do not intend to detract from that. I briefly wish to put forward some ideas that I am sure will not persuade hon. gentlemen in the Liberal party in any way, because their minds are obviously set and they will proceed with the bill regardless of the validity of the objections to it and explanations regarding its shortcomings.

I want for a moment or two to talk about one of its shortcomings relating to one group of people in this nation who for a long time, so far as their economic position is concerned, have been denied justice, fair play and fair consideration by this and preceding governments. I am talking particularly about commercial fishermen who are excluded from the bill and from any of its piddling benefits.

Our commercial fishermen have been denied equity in many areas. One that comes to mind quickly was dealt with yesterday in the question period. This government completely ignored the unanimous recommendation of the fisheries committee with respect to extending fishing zone jurisdiction to the continental shelf and the continental slope. I do not want to talk about what the fisheries committee did a couple of years ago, because that is not germane to the subject and would not be in order. Yet it is a fact that every Liberal member on that committee, every Conservative and every representative from my party voted in support of the idea that, immediately, our fishing zone jurisdiction should be extended to the edge of the continental slope and shelf. We realized that the fishermen of other countries were moving into those areas, had been doing so for a long time and were catching groundfish or bottom fish which properly and in a normal sense belonged to Canada. The government rejected that idea, creating inequity for fishermen on both coasts of this nation.

Another area of inequity relates to the government's program of buying out fishing vessels from the salmon industry. On October 2, next weekend, there will be an auction of 50 salmon fishing boats, I think it is, that were bought by the government from fishermen on the west coast. These boats will now be auctioned off to those who want to buy them. Of course, any Canadian who buys one of these salmon fishing boats will not be able to use his boat to engage in the salmon fishery in Canada. The government's purpose is to reduce the salmon fleet and to reduce the number of people who are involved in salmon fishing. So the Canadian who buys such a boat at the auction to be sponsored by the government at Delta Marine, Richmond, near Vancouver, on October 2 will not be able to use his boat for fishing. Otherwise he will be able to use it for whatever purpose he wishes.

[Mr. Salle.]

But there is no prohibition against a United States citizen who buys one of these boats. He may use a boat that was taken out of the salmon fishery of Canada, take it across the line into Alaska, Washington or Oregon, and put to sea in it. He may use it as a fishing vessel and thereby increase the size of the United States fishery fleet. He may catch salmon which are spawned in Canadian fishing channels, in Canadian rivers, and which are considered as Canadian fish. This is the inequity being perpetrated against the fishing industry in Canada. It is being deliberately brought about by the government opposite, which not only wants to see our fishing fleet curtailed but wants to see the Yankee fishing fleet increased to our detriment. I say that because the Americans will be able to fish for salmon which have come from our own Canadian rivers and spawning grounds.

We know the situation at Hecate Strait and the like. I do not want to go further into that question except to say that our fishermen who are disadvantaged by the 10 per cent United States surtax are not offered any degree of protection, assistance or help under this bill. Not only will the government's tax bill attempt to destroy the co-operative movement of this nation, but the provisions of this legislation will assist in the destruction of the co-operative movement. Let me read briefly one paragraph from a letter that the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative Association sent to the minister responsible for fisheries on September 16, relating to the 10 per cent surcharge. They say in part as follows:

> Our association has felt the effect of this surcharge immediately, and most specifically in the sale of a carload of mild-cured salmon, which was already loaded when President Nixon made his announcement. Further it will affect us appreciably on the export of sole fillets and halibut flitches, where the duty has increased from 0.2 cents per lb. to 2.5 cents per lb.

Anybody in the least familiar with the fishing industry and the export of fish will know that an increase of that nature can be, and is, disastrous. I am merely putting forward my ideas for the record because I know that hon. gentlemen opposite in the Liberal Party have minds like concrete. They are well mixed and well set and are not disposed to listen to reasonable arguments. They want to continue participating in this "love the United States" program that they are embarked upon. Whatever is helpful to the United States is helpful to Canada—so they think. I think it is regrettable that the government has engaged in this sort of activity and has denied the primary producers of our nation fair play and justice under this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD (SKEENA)—ALLEGED FALSE ANSWER TO WRITTEN QUESTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding an answer given by the government to question No. 602, shown in Hansard at pages 2228 and 2229 for January 12, 1970. It came to my attention only this morning that it is a false answer and that, again, misleading information has been given to the House of Commons. Part of the question which was posed was:

Have all reclassified employees been retroactively paid the salary, allowances, pension and other benefits to which they were entitled as of the 1967 date—

And so on.

The answer given was "Yes". The fact of the matter, with regard to the one employee who at that time was involved in this situation, is that in fact he had only been paid retroactive salary and wages to December 1, 1968, and not to 1967, as had been asked and answered in the affirmative, and that he had been employed by the government in this capacity back on October 1, 1966.

There is another erroneous part of the answer which I shall not go into at this stage, but it deals with more than this one employee. The result of this false information is that the employee involved, a person of Indian descent, has been denied the further retroactive wages he should have received and that there may be involved another $2,000 or $3,000 in back wages. The erroneous answer to the other part of the question would involve at least 100 other caretakers of Indian day-schools, because likewise they have been denied their full benefit under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the wages which have accrued to them.

Based on this, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), if you find there is a prima facie case of privilege:

That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire into the information given by the government in response to question No. 602 as shown at pages 2228 and 2229 of Hansard for January 2, 1970, as well as into the matter of all persons employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as Indian day-school caretakers.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena proposes that the House consider, by way of breach of parliamentary privilege, what he calls false information given in a return to a written question. I suggest to the hon. member that there are at least two procedural obstacles that he does not appear to have overcome in the presentation he has just made to the Chair and to the House. The first is that the Chair is not at liberty to rule that there is a prima facie case of privilege when the matter complained of is a dispute as to fact. There are many well known precedents which could be quoted in this respect.

The other difficulty relates to the requirement that the matter should be raised at the earliest opportunity. In this respect I refer hon. members to May's Seventeenth Edition, page 378, as follows:

The matter must be raised at the earliest opportunity. A matter of privilege which claims precedence over other public business should be a subject which has recently arisen.

As an example, the learned author makes the following statement:

A matter which occurred during the recess was refused precedence as a matter of privilege because it was not raised at the commencement of the session.

Similarly, a matter concerning an article in a newspaper published on 6 May was refused precedence because it was not raised till the 14th and a speech reported on a Saturday because it was not raised until the following Tuesday.

In the case brought before us we do not have a situation where the hon. member failed to raise the matter the day after the subject of privilege arose; it is, indeed, more than a year since this particular matter was reported in the Official Report of the proceedings of the House of Commons. I do not think it is sufficient for the hon. member to say that he has just become aware of the alleged inaccuracy of the return. It would be extremely difficult to find that the matter has, in fact, been raised at the first opportunity.

For these reasons I cannot agree with the hon. member that there is a prima facie case of privilege which ought to be considered by the House at this time.

MR. GLEAVE—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENTS BY GOVERNMENT MEMBERS RESPECTING PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given notice. The question of privilege affects all members of the House. Government spokesmen are giving misleading descriptions of an issue faced by the House, namely, the refusal of the government to make statutory payments for wheat storage under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said on television as recently as last night that the government would give the opposition one more chance to permit passage of Bill C-244, and if the opposition continued to block the bill the government would have to reconsider its position with respect to payments due under the act.

An hon. Member: Blackmail.

Mr. Gleave: The opposition has not created any impediment, by its opposition to Bill C-244, to government obedience of the law.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gleave: It is the government's duty to make payments as required by the act, independently of the opposition's stand on a bill that has not yet been adopted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: Again, the government was quoted on CBC radio this morning as saying that only $62 million in payments under the act is now due and that another $30 million is due only on July 31, 1972. In fact, payments are made in equal, monthly instalments.

An hon. Member: Through the Wheat Board.

An hon. Member: Right. You are catching on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: What do you know, the cat is out of the bag!

Mr. Gleave: In fact, payments for August and September are now overdue, in addition to payments for the whole of last year. The $100 million provided in Bill C-244 is a one-shot payment. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act provides for payments every year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now debating the issue. He should indicate his question of privilege. I suggest that the hon. member is now making a speech on the substantive issue, rather than on the procedural aspect of the matter which, of course, is the only aspect that can be of interest to the Chair.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege is that, essentially, by these statements outside the House the government is deliberately misleading the Canadian public on what is at issue here. This, Mr. Speaker, is my question of privilege. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act provides for payments every year in which more than 178 million bushels of wheat are in storage, and payments would amount to more than $100 million if they were continued under that act. About $90 million is already overdue. If Your Honour finds that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I would be prepared to make an appropriate motion to have the matter referred to a standing committee of the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has given the required notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege. I, of course, do not intend to consider the matter lightly because I realize the importance of the situation and the interest of all hon. members in this very important and obviously contentious issue.

The hon. member suggests that there is a breach of parliamentary privilege, either a breach of his privileges or of those of the House, in that, to use his words, "the Canadian government by statements outside the House is misleading the public." I cannot judge whether that is so or not, but I suggest to the hon. member that this cannot possibly be the basis for the submission of a question of privilege.

I have gone into the precedents and considered the Standing Order at length yesterday when a similar motion was proposed which, I might say, was in all points similar to that proposed today by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. There is no point in restating the precedents I referred to yesterday. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that in view of the precedents I quoted yesterday and the citations mentioned in my ruling I cannot rule today, contrary to my ruling yesterday, that there is a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if it would be appropriate for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to make those false statements in this House, where he could be dealt with properly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. G. W. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 25 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), that because of the continued refusal of the government to make the payments required under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Aiken: —this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, If the motion is put in those terms, I suggest it is not in order. It can be put to the House in the traditional form, simply that this House do now adjourn. If the hon. member will make that motion it will be put to the House.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North, that this House do now adjourn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly supply the Chair with the written motion?

The motion is that this House do now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

PROPOSED AMCHITKA NUCLEAR TEST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43. I believe unanimous consent is required. The urgency attaching to this motion arises from the fact that within the next few days President Nixon is to make a final decision on whether the proposed underground nuclear test on Amchitka Island will take place. It is known that Japanese and Canadian concern will have an important bearing on his deliberations. I therefore feel it is urgent that at a time when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) is expressing at the United Nations, Canadian reservations with regard to the proposed test, this House, government and opposition members alike, should indicate to the President of the United States that we all share the minister's concern in connection with this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: The motion is as follows:

That this House expresses its grave concern at continued nuclear weapons testing and its serious implications for the arms race, regrets the recent high-yield underground test in the Soviet Union, emphasizes its hope that the United States government will reconsider its plans to carry out a high-yield test on Amchitka Islands which are close to Canada and known to be prone to earth and ocean disturbances, and strongly supports the efforts being made in the United Nations by Canada and other countries to achieve the prohibition by international agreement of all underground nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson). Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. MacInnis: No.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INDIAN EDUCATION IN NORTHEASTERN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the crisis in Indian education which has arisen in northeastern Alberta.

Hundreds of Indian school children have been withdrawn from school in protest against inadequate school facilities. The parents are requesting a meeting with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to discuss the problem. To date there has not been a satisfactory response from the minister. There is no need to remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the harm which is done to children by lack of attendance at school.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville;

That the House do adjourn and that the education crisis in northeastern Alberta and the wider subject of Indian education be discussed.

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubt as to the correctness of the form of the hon. member's motion. What he is proposing now is an adjournment motion. As hon. members know, that should be done under the terms of Standing Order 26, not under the terms of Standing Order 43. For this reason I hesitate very much about putting the motion. Perhaps I will on this occasion merely issue a caution to hon. members that they have to make a choice between the use of Standing Order 26 or Standing Order 43. If it is the adjournment of the House they wish to propose, it should be done under the terms of Standing Order 26. This having been said, the Chair will proceed. Hon. members have heard the motion which, in accordance with Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the motion introduced by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Some hon. Members: Too late.

Mr. MacInnis: I would ask the Chair to rule whether it was a debatable motion or not. If it was a debatable motion, I withdraw my objection.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 43 I should like to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg):

That in the opinion of this House the government should forthwith pay to the Canadian Wheat Board the full amount now due under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, including the total due for the crop year 1970-71, and the payments due as at August 1 and September 1, 1971, as specified in the said act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Once again I point out to hon. members that this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There are yeas and nays, therefore there is not unanimity among hon. members and the motion cannot be put.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FALSE ANSWER TO WRITTEN QUESTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 in order to test the views of the House in respect of the matter on which Your Honour ruled there was not a question of privilege. Because of the morality involved and the fact that at least one person was disadvantaged by the answer given to the House in response to a question in January of 1970 in that the answer was not, to put it mildly and politely, in accordance with the facts of the situation, I should like to ask the House, and particularly the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), whether they would agree to the following motion:

That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire into the information given by the government in response to question No. 602 as shown at pages 2228 and 2229 of Hansard for January 12, 1970, as well as into the matter of all persons employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as Indian day-school caretakers.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. Again, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Again there are nays which prevent the Chair from putting the motion.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1970—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE TOGETHER WITH AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might suggest at this point that there have been discussions, especially with the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee who is eager to get the committee under way to study the report of the Auditor General, and if there is agreement we could call that order of business, pass the motion without debate and get the committee under way to study the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1970.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I certainly think there is agreement to pass the motion without debate, but there must be some question in the minister's mind whether this is going to be an exercise in futility if the Prime Minister seeks to dissolve Parliament one of these days.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion has been made that the motion be adopted without debate. I must inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen moved:

That the Public Accounts for the year ended 31 March 1970, tabled in the House January 12, 1971, and the Auditor General's report thereon, tabled in the House June 4, 1971, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REMOVAL OF SAFEGUARDS FOR CANADA AS PREREQUISITE TO WITHDRAWAL OF U.S. IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 26 and ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the declaration by a United States official that the safeguards for Canada in the Canada-U.S. auto pact must be dropped before the U.S. import surcharge can be withdrawn and the implications of this U.S. position for an industry already experiencing serious lay-offs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brant has given due notice of his intention to move this motion under Standing Order 26. Meanwhile I have had an opportunity to give careful and sympathetic study to the request outlined in the motion proposed by the hon. member.

The Chair does appreciate the seriousness of the matter raised by the hon. member. It is undoubtedly one which is of national interest and of concern to all hon. members. In determining whether the business of the House ought to be set aside for the purpose of considering such an important and urgent situation, the Chair has to be guided by certain criteria specified in Standing Order 26. One of these requirements is that the matter proposed for discussion should relate to an emergency which calls for immediate and urgent consideration by the House. In other words, it is not only urgency of the matter which has to be considered but the urgency of debate.

While I surmise that the House would want an opportunity to discuss this problem, I doubt that the urgency of the situation would require that the debate be held today or tomorrow rather than later. If the Chair considers the additional factor of opportunity of debate within a reasonable period of time, I would suggest to the hon. member that from the procedural standpoint an immediate emergency debate would hardly be justified.

Therefore, in view of all relevant circumstances the Chair suggests that the adjournment motion should not be put at this time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SEPARATISTS IN CANADIAN FORCES

Question No. 1,229—Mr. Coates:

Has the Minister of National Defence examined the statements of René Levesque, leader of the Parti Québécois, regarding members of the Armed Services in the Province of Quebec and, if so, is he in a position to provide information as to whether all members of the Armed Services have taken the oath of allegiance and, if they have, will any action be taken against them if they are known to be Separatists and advocate the separation of the Province of Quebec from the Dominion of Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Statements purported to have been made by Mr. René Levesque regarding members of the Canadian forces in Quebec being separatists have been examined. All Canadian citizens, and British subjects other than Canadians, applying to join the Canadian forces are required to take the Oath of Allegiance upon enrolment. Other persons enrolled in the Canadian forces are required to take a special oath that includes the agreement to well and truly serve Her Majesty, in the Canadian forces. In addition, Queens Regulations and Orders stipulate that no officer or man of the regular force shall take an active part in the affairs of a political organization or party. What action would be taken against members of the Canadian forces who may become known to be active separatists and advocates of the separation of the Province of Quebec from Canada would depend upon the circumstances of each case.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 1,498—Mr. Schumacher:

1. During the period 1970 to date did Information Canada sponsor any conferences or courses (a) at Grey Rocks Inn, St. Jovite, Quebec (b) elsewhere in Canada and at what locations?

2. What was the duration of these courses or conferences?

3. What was the nature and purpose of these courses or conferences, and what conclusions, if any, were reached?

4. What departments participated in each case?

5. In each case (a) how many employees of each department attended (b) what position does each one hold (c) what expenses were involved for (i) transportation (ii) accommodation (iii) meals and per diem expenses (iv) registrations or fees (d) what mode of transportation was involved for persons attending?

6. Did any expenses involve wives or families and, if so, (a) what was the amount in each case (b) who authorized such expenditures (c) what mode of transportation was involved?

7. In each case, for what reasons were the locations for the conferences chosen?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of State): 1. Information Canada sponsored two functions during the period 1970. (i) a conference at Grey Rocks Inn (ii) a seminar at La Réserve Inn At St. Donat.

2. The conference lasted three days; the course two days.

3. (i) Information Canada sponsored a conference at Grey Rocks Inn to bring together Information Directors of all Federal Government departments and agencies to outline existing and proposed programs of Information Canada. (ii) The two-day training course at La Réserve Inn was sponsored for new Enquiries Officers of Information Canada.

4. 6. No.

7. Locations chosen as the most economical means of providing the required facilities.

*NUMBER OF STUDENTS WHO WILL QUALIFY UNDER NEW PROVISIONS OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Question No. 1,588—Mr. Fairweather:

What is the estimated number of school or university students who will qualify for Unemployment Insurance when they return to classes under the new provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): School or university students who return to classes are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits because they are not available for work as required under the Unemployment Insurance Act. There is no estimate of the number of school or university students who do not return to the full-time attendance of classes and are unemployed. The latter students could qualify for benefits if they worked in insurable employment for eight weeks in the past 52 weeks.

COVERAGE OF CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE IN VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,622—Mr. Mather:

How many CBC staff members were in Victoria to cover the Constitutional Conference?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that its English and French radio and television services and International Service covered the Victoria Constitutional Conference, June 14 to June 17, using a total of 88 personnel, some of whom were in Victoria for only part of the time.

CBC—OVERSEAS TRANSMITTING SERVICES

Question No. 1,631—Mr. Mather:

1. Has CBC any overseas transmitting services for Radio Canada International programs located on the Pacific Coast and, if so, are any programs transmitted in the Japanese language?

2. Is CBC aware of the importance to Canada of Pacific rim communication?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No. However, the CBC International Service is carrying out tests with its new transmitters at Sackville, N.B., to see whether these can be used to transmit a usable signal to the Far East.

2. Yes, and the Corporation is conducting studies on this matter.

DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—PROVISION OF GRANTS TO PRIVATE INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,654—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What programs of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs provide grants, subsidies and other cash incentives to private industry?

2. What amount was provided to industry through each program in each of the past five years?

3. What amount, by program, has gone to each of the five major regions of Canada in the same years?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Nil.

2 and 3. N.A.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE TO VETERANS LIVING OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 1,658—Mr. MacRae:

Is the government giving consideration to amending the War Veterans Allowance Act so that war veterans living outside of Canada, especially in the United Kingdom and in the United States of America, would be permitted to draw War Veterans Allowance without having to return to Canada?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Section 3(3) of the War Veterans Allowance Act, as amended in 1960, reads as follows:

> "3. (3) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the allowance payable under this section to a veteran, widow or orphan may be paid to that veteran, widow or orphan who absents himself from Canada after the coming into force of this Act if, on the day that he leaves Canada, he
> (a) is a recipient of an allowance under this section or section 5; and
> (b) had been resident in Canada for the twelve months immediately preceding that day."

The foregoing provides that such a recipient can normally continue to receive his allowance indefinitely outside Canada.

The government is not giving consideration to amending the War Veterans Allowance Act at this time.

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—ZONING POLICY

Question No. 1,704—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

1. Is the zoning policy still in effect in Riding Mountain National Park?

2. Is the government establishing a buffer-zone around the Park and, if so (a) what amount has been spent in the purchase of lands for this purpose (b) how much land has been purchased (c) how was the value of these lands established?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. No. (a) not applicable; (b) not applicable; (c) not applicable.

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—NEW HIGHWAY

Question No. 1,706—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

Are there any plans for the construction of a new highway to replace the present No. 10 Highway in Riding Mountain National Park and, if so, what are these plans?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes. Current planning is to commence reconstruction of this Highway in 1973-74, subject to the availability of funds at that time.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF CANADA—CLOSURE OF OFFICE AT NOON HOUR

Question No. 1,715—Mr. Ryan:

Is the office of the Geological Survey of Canada at 601 Booth Street, Ottawa where maps are sold to the public closed for the noon hour and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the office referred to by the hon. member is closed during the lunch period, which is from 12 noon to 12:45 p.m. Consideration has been given to manning the office during this period but it is considered to be impracticable. Most business results from mail orders. On an average day there are fewer than a dozen visitors and only occasionally during the lunch period. However, geological maps and reports may be examined in the library and a selection made there during that time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TRAILER COURT, CFB SHILO

Question No. 1,717—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

Is it the intention of the government to establish a trailer court for mobile homes at CFB Shilo and, (a) if so, will it be operated by the Department of National Defence (b) if not, on what basis?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Not at this time, (a) not applicable; (b) civilian facilities are available in the vicinity and there are vacant PMQ's at CFB Shilo.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 248 is acceptable to the government.

CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING PROPOSED NUCLEAR DEVICE TEST AT AMCHITKA ISLAND

Question No. 248—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America since January 1, 1971 regarding the proposed nuclear device test at Amchitka Island.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there could be some indication when Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 75 of October 8 last, having to do with transportation policies, will be made available?

Mr. Jerome: I have made a note of the number of the notice of motion, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RENEGOTIATION OF AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS AS PRECONDITION TO REMOVAL OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the reported statement of Mr. Petty, the United States Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, that the removal of the transitional safeguards in the auto pact is definitely an item to be negotiated before the United States will remove the import surtax. Is it the position of the government that the two questions are linked, and that satisfactory renegotiation of the safeguards in the auto pact is a precondition to the removal of the surtax?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. The auto pact has been discussed by the two governments, through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the United States treasury and trade and commerce departments. There have been continuing negotiations. My understanding of the press reports is not that Mr. Petty was saying that this was a condition precedent or anything else but that it was simply a factor he was raising as being unsolved at the present time.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must say that the minister's interpretation is not the same as mine.

Mr. Benson: You were not there.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in light of the actual statement Mr. Petty made rather than the interpretation of the Minister of Finance of that statement, it is now the policy of the government of Canada to insist on the retention of the restraints and safeguards that are presently in the auto pact?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Petty does not express the views of the Canadian government. Those views were expressed by the Minister of Finance, by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by myself on several occasions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a question about the policy of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I realize the Prime Minister does not have to answer my question, but he does not have to pretend that I asked a question different from the one I did ask.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the Prime Minister specifically whether it is the policy of his government—

Mr. Boulanger: Dont' get mad.

Mr. Stanfield: —to insist upon the retention of the safeguards which are presently in the auto pact. That is a very simple question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition wants to read the record he will find that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and myself have replied to this question several times.

Mr. Hees: You have not.

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Finance said just now that the auto pact is under discussion. It was under discussion even before Mr. Nixon's announcements of last August. Therefore the two are not linked in our minds, and I cannot be asked to answer to this House for a statement by a United States official.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think it is time the government started to deal a little candidly with the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister definitely assure the House that the safeguards will not be surrendered under any conditions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

PRECONDITIONS INDICATED BY UNITED STATES FOR REMOVAL OF IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is not prepared to give an answer in reference to the removal of the transitional safeguards in the auto pact, can he tell us whether or not there are any other preconditions which have been set by the United States government for the removal of the United States import surcharge? I have particular reference to the statements made by Mr. John Petty, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, with regard to bilateral agreements on currency. Is one of the preconditions that the Canadian dollar be allowed to rise to at least $1.02 in relation to the United States dollar, and have any other preconditions been laid down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question has been answered in the House several times, perhaps in the absence of the hon. member. This condition and other conditions were not made to us as conditions for the removal of the surtax. So far as I know, the United States has never said under what kind of developments they would remove the surtax. This is what we are discussing with them, but they have not said, "if you do this we will do something".

EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT BILL—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AGAINST IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the implication in Mr. Petty's remarks to the effect that there is some conflict between the legislation now before this Parliament, the employment support bill, and the U.S. provision of countervailing duties, has the Canadian government made any representations to or inquiries of the United States government concerning whether or not countervailing duties would be applied in the event Parliament passes the employment support bill which provides assistance to industries in Canada adversely affected by the United States import surtax?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course we have made representations. We have had several occasions to explain to the Americans the meaning of this act which was before the House and we explained to them that we did not think it would justify countervailing measures in any way.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the nature of the reply the Canadian government received from the United States to these representations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, they were very considerate and polite and said they would listen to our representations and decide what decision they had to take in the interests of their own government. It is up to the United States to decide if it is to act or not. The most we can do is make representations.

UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX—DISCUSSION WITH AMERICAN OFFICIALS

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Joliette wish to put a supplementary question?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

With reference to the statement made yesterday by the U.S. Under-Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that the American government was ready to undertake next week some new trade negotiations to which would be invited the representatives of the Canadian government, is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether he has decided to send a delegation to the United States as a result of that invitation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand what that invitation is and what the subject matter of the negotiations would be.

Mr. La Salle: I refer to trade negotiations with Canada next week.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce met at the beginning of last week with the U.S. Secretary of Commerce and they held negotiations and discussions. I do not know to which new meeting the member is referring.

UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX—EFFECT ON FUTURE CANADIAN CO-OPERATION RESPECTING NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to the original questions asked. The United States Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has suggested that the question of continental energy policy should not be discussed in dealing with the surtax. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not this is acceptable to the government or whether the government intends to make clear to the United States that the continuance of the surtax will jeopardize future co-operation in respect of resources and raw materials.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL FROM INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND THAT CANADA REVALUE DOLLAR UPWARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the absence of information from the Prime Minister late last week and early this week, can the minister advise the House whether the Canadian government received any proposals from the Secretary General of the International Monetary Fund that Canada revalue upward its dollar by 11 per cent or 12 per cent and, if so, what was the Canadian government's reaction to that proposal which was reported in important circles during the weekend?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was not really a proposal at all—

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no?

Mr. Benson: The IMF, as is the case with many international bodies, is looking at the particular problem and analysing it, and out of their analysis came some figures in a working paper which was not officially transmitted to governments but was really just put forward by the Secretary General of the IMF.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister advise the House, since the Prime Minister did not seem to have the information, whether Canada advanced or disclosed any new initiatives with regard to the regularization of the situation in the international monetary field, particularly toward the re-establishment of a stable, international, fixed scheme of foreign exchange?

Mr. Benson: The best thing I might do in answer to the question is to table the communiqué of the meeting of the Group of Ten which I chaired last Sunday.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

PROMOTION PROGRAM TO ENLARGE CANADIAN MARKETS IN COUNTRIES OTHER THAN UNITED STATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government in the near future to initiate a massive trade drive in countries other than the United States to make Canadian exports less dependent upon the American market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We have been increasing the trade of Canada to other countries. We have not reached 15 per cent as was tried by hon. members on the other side some years ago, but we are trying to sell more to other countries, including the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hees: Obviously, nothing is being done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister either telephoned or written President Nixon to express the great concern of this country over the effects that the President's new economic policy will have on our economy, or does the Prime Minister merely intend to confine his protest to whining on the CBC?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

ASSESSMENT OF EFFECTS OF POSSIBLE OIL SPILLS IN GEORGIA STRAIT—AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA ON JOINT SURVEY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In light of his recent announcement of the award of a contract to make an assessment of the socio-economic effects of possible Alaska oil spills in Georgia Strait and nearby waters, and in view of the lack of action on the Science Council's recommendation of last fall for a joint study of all uses of the environment in the same area, does the minister's announcement mean that the federal government has failed to reach agreement with British Columbia to make a joint survey?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. MacInnis: Does the announcement mean that the government has decided that the United States will go ahead with the Valdez route for Alaska oil despite Canadian protests?

Mr. Davis: The answer in this case is also no.

BARLEY—OFFER OF SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER TO SUPPLY QUEBEC

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is very important. I do not intend to seek adjournment of the House because I am fully aware of our responsibility to govern the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should put his question.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

My question concerns the economic situation of agriculture and more specifically in the province of Quebec.

In view of the price gap between the Prairie provinces and the eastern provinces for the volume of non-quota grain, would the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board consider the offer of assistance proffered by the premier of Saskatchewan in the form of a deal for 100 million bushels of barley, in order to help Quebec farmers?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the reports regarding the offer of the Premier of Saskatchewan of one million bushels of barley to Quebec. I am sure the Canadian Wheat Board would be delighted to receive his order and fill it.

CO-ORDINATION BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENTS ON SILVICULTURE AND OTHER PROJECTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister tell us what the prospects are for co-ordination between the forestry sector of his department and the provincial forestry departments regarding projects such as silviculture?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the minister can give a brief reply. I have the impression that this is such a general question it should be answered by way of a statement on motions. However, the minister can reply briefly.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): The prospects are very good indeed.

GRAIN

OMISSION OF TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT FROM REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice in his capacity as the Attorney General of Canada. First of all, I welcome him back from the province of Saskatchewan. Did the minister give instructions that the statute known as the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, which is still on the books, be left out of the new Revised Statutes of Canada and, if not, who gave the instructions that it be omitted from our Revised Statutes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is not included in the Revised Statutes, following a decision of the Revised Statutes Commission of which I happen to be chairman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would suggest to the hon. member that he would not want to confuse the House. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was not repealed. It is not listed in schedule A and it remains on the books as a statute of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not arguing that it is not the law of Canada. I am asking the Minister of Justice, not only in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada but in his capacity as chairman of this commission, who gave the instructions that it not be printed in the Revised Statutes of Canada when it has not been repealed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was a joint decision of the commissioners. The same decision was made with respect to about 150 other statutes, so there is nothing remarkable about this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: The only remarkable thing is the Attorney General of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask him one further question regarding the 150 statutes, more or less, that were left out. Were they statutes that were not repealed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, statutes that were not repealed, and some of them remain on the books. It was a matter of judgment as to which statutes merited inclusion in the Revised Statutes of Canada. I might say that the Canadian Bill of Rights, under the authorship of a former Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, was not included in the Revised Statutes of Canada but, rather, was included in a separate volume because of its unique character.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I will allow one more supplementary question by the Leader of the Opposition and then we will go on to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—POSITION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether as Minister of Justice he advised the government, of which he is a member, that it is obliged by the law of Canada to comply with statutes on the books, and that he intends to dissociate himself from a government which is not complying with the law?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I am a member of the government and I am as interested as anyone else in this government. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Calgary North welcomed me back from Saskatchewan. The question which farmers in Saskatchewan are asking is, why does Parliament not pass this bill?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition for another supplementary question, but I hope that in the few minutes left in the question period we will not spend our time reviving this debate. For the moment the Chair recognizes the Leader of the Opposition.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the Minister of Justice specifically whether he condones the government of Canada ignoring a statute of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada recognizes that there is a debt due to the farmers of western Canada in the amount of $38.5 million. We are suggesting that payment of $100 million should satisfy that.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are seeking the opportunity to ask supplementaries on this subject. I suggest, with respect, that we could spend the rest of the question period on the same subject, but for the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

LEGAL ACTION TO COMPEL GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Justice. Will he permit certain professors of law in Toronto to take mandamus proceedings against the Minister of Finance to compel him to make the payments under this act, as they have requested him to do, if he himself will not take such proceedings against the Minister of Finance?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen concerned can take any action they want. Whether the courts will receive it is another matter.

Mr. McCleave: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I hope other hon. members will be given an opportunity to ask their questions; but of course I do not want to interpose myself, and if hon. members have legitimate supplementaries they will be recognized.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, this is the first question I have asked in three weeks in this place. I am asking the minister whether he will give permission to these people to institute such proceedings.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, I have not received—

Mr. Woolliams: Go ahead and break the law, John. You have been doing it and endorsing it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have not received any request for mandamus action. I would have to consider it when I get it. But the final result remains with the courts, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, which I think future generations would like to see on the record, with respect to this matter. Has the minister himself initiated any proceedings against the Minister of Finance for his failure to fulfil the statutory duty imposed upon him by sections 3 and 4 of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker, and I think the record will speak for future generations.

Mr. Stanfield: That is exactly right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have tried to be as fair as possible in giving members an opportunity to ask supplementaries, but we are running short of time. Other hon. members have been rising for the last few days, and I would like to give them an opportunity to ask questions. We might allow one last supplementary and then go to the next subject.

Mr. Lundrigan: My last supplementary is: Does the minister intend now or in the future to take action such as was mentioned a few minutes ago by my colleagues and initiate proceedings against the Minister of Finance under this particular law of Canada? I want this on the record.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker.

PENSIONS

LOWERING OF AGE FOR ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED ARMED FORCES AND RCMP PERSONNEL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to stay on the previous subject, but instead I shall direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. He is also a remarkable minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of a commitment the minister gave to the House when we were debating Bill C-207 earlier this year, that a certain anomaly would be corrected, I wonder if he is in a position to report progress on his efforts? The anomaly I refer to is the fact that retired armed forces and RCMP personnel are not able to get their pensions escalated until they are 60 years of age, whereas this is now possible for certain retired public servants. How is the minister getting on with the implementation of his commitment to get this anomaly straightened out?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I can report progress, Mr. Speaker, not at what one would regard as a breathtaking pace, but some progress.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I said, the minister is a remarkable man.

AIRPORTS

TROIS-RIVIÈRES—POSSIBLE CLOSING.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Has the minister recently assured a delegation from the Trois-Rivières constituency that the Trois-Rivières airport would not be closed down?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any delegation from Trois-Rivières with regard to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: I do not believe that this question should have been put to that particular minister.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SHERBROOKE—GRANTS TO CANADIAN INGERSOLL-RAND—REQUEST FOR REFUND

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Does he intend to claim reimbursement from the Canadian Ingersoll-Rand of Sherbrooke which has obtained a $200,000 grant from his department to create 75 jobs but which has decided to close its smelting plant in Sherbrooke, thus putting 140 people out of work?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. colleague should at least get acquainted with the facts. No grant has been awarded to Ingersoll-Rand, so no reimbursement can be claimed. A grant was promised if jobs were made available. The part of the plant which is to stop operations has nothing to do with the one for which the grant was offered.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to advise the minister to check the facts before issuing press releases, so that we shall be better informed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie is one member who has been trying for a few days to ask a question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

HUDSON BAY—INSPECTION OF CONDITIONS BY INSURANCE UNDERWRITERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister had any success with the insurance underwriters of ocean shipping in inviting them to Churchill to view the situation there, similar to what he did with respect to the St. Lawrence earlier this year?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret that although an invitation was given to a like group to visit the north and Churchill, they did not feel they could include the trip in their itinerary in the current year. They did make a trip on the St. Lawrence and I understand the response was favourable. They have indicated their willingness to come to Churchill, but the date remains open. It may be in the spring or at some other time in 1972.

Mr. Korchinski: Will the minister not renew his invitation at this time, with an offer to provide them with a ship after regular shipping has closed at Churchill?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to have them come at any time of their own choosing and provide the transportation for them.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF FREIGHT RATES ON IMPORTS AND EXPORTS THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport look into the matter of discriminatory freight rates in respect of imports and exports through the port of Churchill?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice. I am not sure what the hon. member means by "discriminatory." I will try to look into the matter.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of certain events during the last couple of days I ask the President of the Privy Council whether he will seek an order of the House to commence sittings at one o'clock on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and at ten o'clock on Fridays, so that the opposition's ritualistic obstructionism will be a waste of our time rather than the country's?

DUST-FALL READINGS, SYDNEY, N.S.—STEPS TO ALLEVIATE PROBLEM

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In light of information that dust-fall readings at one location in Sydney were monitored at 261.5 tons per square mile per month, and the fact that pollution technicians consider dust-fall of more than 20 tons per square mile per month to be dangerous, what steps are being taken by the minister and his department to alleviate this rather choking problem?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will look into this matter and report back.

Mr. Muir: Would the minister be good enough to have a team of experts from his department go to the Sydney area and ascertain what can or may be done by himself and his department? This situation is very serious, Mr. Speaker.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Davis: From the description I would think this is a provincial matter, but we will gladly support provincial officials in this regard.

Mr. Muir: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not know why we have done away with the Minister of Fisheries legislatively because we still have fisheries. We now have a man who is supposedly in charge of the environment. I bring a problem to his attention and he immediately sloughs it off on the provincial government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

AIR TRANSPORT

ESTABLISHMENT OF NORDAIR AS REGIONAL CARRIER FOR NORTHEASTERN ONTARIO AND NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—ONTARIO APPLICATION FOR REGIONAL CHARTER

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. Under our national air policy as it involves regional carriers, have negotiations been finalized regarding Nordair as the regional carrier for northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions between Air Canada and Nordair with respect to possible exchange or co-operation for certain air routes but to the moment at least, and so far as I know, no conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Peters: Has a charter been sought from the Canadian Transport Commission by the Ontario government through its commercial carrier, White River Air Service? If so, what role in the regional transportation system is being filled by this application?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that this question really ought to be put on the order paper. If there is urgency it can be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Osler: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Osler: Now that the House leader is back in his seat I wonder if he can answer the question I put to him a moment ago. It was a serious question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that it was more in the form of representation than a question. I also detected that it had overtones of argument.

DRUGS

ACCURACY OF INFORMATION IN GOVERNMENT PAMPHLET DISTRIBUTED TO PENSIONERS AND FAMILY ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the Quebec College of Pharmacists' statement that a pamphlet produced recently for pensioners and family allowance recipients under the government's new drug quality assurance program may be dangerous to public health as it lists drugs which might have harmful side effects and certainly encourages self-medication, is the minister going to review, with the provinces and the medical profession, the accuracy of the scientific information contained in this pamphlet?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this action was taken on our part as a further step in a series of actions we have taken in terms of reducing the cost of drugs. We are satisfied it is accurate information. We are also satisfied it is useful information and that people receiving old age pension cheques and family allowance cheques should have it. I would also point out that the leader of my hon. friend's own party has indicated that steps of this kind should be taken in terms of reducing the cost of drugs.

Mr. Rynard: Has the minister conferred with the Quebec College of Pharmacists on the statement they made that they are not safe?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that we have checked the information and we are satisfied that our information is accurate.

Mr. Rynard: You still did not answer the question.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should like to ask the minister if he was not accused by the College of Pharmacists of the province of Quebec of contravening the law by telling people how to buy drugs without prescriptions and influencing people to use, on their own initiative, some drugs that should be left to the doctors to prescribe?

Mr. Munro: We were not advertising or promoting drugs, Mr. Speaker. We were simply indicating to the people of Canada what the comparative prices of various drugs were in various regions throughout the country and that there are variations in prices. There is then some motive on their part to shop around to get the lowest price. I might also indicate that this type of information went to people whose incomes are not great and who cannot afford to pay excessive prices.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING AND ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION RESPECTING HYDROFOIL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence who has been neglected somewhat lately. In light of current suggestions floating about that he will be having a meeting some time this week to settle the future of the hydrofoil, can he confirm this? If so, could the minister give the House some indication when the decision by the government will be made public?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I should like to thank the hon. member for notice of this question, Mr. Speaker. I can assure him that, depending on the length of this question period, I shall be meeting at an early date on the question of the hydrofoil.

Mr. Forrestall: If there should be a $50 million saving I would hope it would go to the services in the form of pay increases. Would the minister answer the other part of my question and advise the House when he anticipates he will be in a position to make the decision known to the general public?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is a little difficult to say, not yet having had a full analysis, Mr. Speaker. I would hope, however, to be able to do so within the coming month.

REPLACEMENTS FOR ARGUS MARITIME PATROL AIRCRAFT AND CENTURION TANK

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): My question is also for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the House whether the government has yet decided on a replacement for the Argus maritime patrol aircraft and the Centurion tank? If so, will they be produced in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): No decision has been taken yet with regard to the long-range patrol aircraft, Mr. Speaker. I should remind the hon. member that as well as the option of replacing the Argus there is the option of refitting it for future use. It is correct to say that the Centurion tank will be retired from service about 1974 and we are now in the process of bargaining for a replacement.

BANK OF CANADA

ISSUE OF NEXT BILL IN SERIES OF COLOURFUL CURRENCY

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the House when the Bank of Canada will release the next bill in its new series of colourful currency which began with the psychedelic $20 bill?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I really cannot, Mr. Speaker. I shall have to take the question as notice.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED INCREASE IN ALLOWANCES ON BIRTH RATE

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister's department conducted any studies or contemplated initiating any studies to ascertain whether the increase in family allowances to low income and large families will have any effect on the birth rate?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Studies of this kind have been conducted. We are satisfied that in terms of allowances it certainly does not cover the cost of maintaining a child for a month, as the hon. member must be aware. It would therefore be only a marginal incentive toward a large family.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

WITHDRAWAL OF CHILDREN FROM SCHOOL BY PARENTS BECAUSE OF ALLEGED LACK OF FACILITIES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that there is a rumour around that the minister prefers to keep Indians undereducated because they are easier to control that way—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot ask a question based on a premise in those terms. The question should be asked directly.

Mr. Yewchuk: I will ask it more directly, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate whether he intends to go to northeastern Alberta to meet personally with the chiefs of the Saddle Lake-Athabasca district to discuss problems of Indian education in that area?

• (3:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was in the House more often, he would have heard the answer I gave yesterday—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might also reply to the question directly.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Last Thursday and Friday I met with the chairman of the Alberta Indian Association and we both agreed that an official from my department would go to Cold Lake today. The official is there and I will make a decision after I have studied his report.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Could the minister indicate whether he received a telegram from the chiefs of the Saddle Lake-Athabasca district yesterday requesting that he personally attend in northeastern Alberta for a meeting with them?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question, asked in those terms, is not in order. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

MANPOWER

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS FOR TRAINING

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Given that federal funds are being distributed under the Canada Manpower training program somewhat less than equitably among the provinces, as demonstrated in the last annual review of the Economic Council of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question should be asked without argument. Perhaps the question could now be asked directly.

Mr. Gleave: Has the minister considered taking creative action so that unemployed workers in Saskatchewan will get the same chance to be trained as the unemployed in more prosperous regions?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the allocation of training allowances is reviewed each year with an eye on the employment situation in the province, on the training demand in the province, and on the training places available. I reject completely the argument of the hon. member which was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East. I apologize to the hon. member. I will first recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on a supplementary question and then end the question period on a very happy note by recognizing the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, would the minister ensure that federal training expenditure in Saskatchewan, which in 1969-70 amounted to $695 per capita of unemployed compared with $949 in Alberta and $1,138 in Nova Scotia, is increased to an equitable level?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a supplementary question but argument.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CONTINUATION ON SAME BASIS OF GRANTS TO COMPANIES RELYING ON SALES IN UNITED STATES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether he proposes to continue providing grants to companies relying on United States sales, on the same basis as before the imposition of the United States surcharge, under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we will take that into account at all.

Mr. McGrath: Is it the conclusion of the government that the United States surcharge policy is of a very temporary nature and, hence, that grants will continue to be made in the same way as before to companies relying on United States sales?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that question ought to be put to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Stanfield: He doesn't know anything.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

MANPOWER

TRAINING—REMOVAL OF REQUIREMENT OF THREE YEARS IN WORK FORCE IN ORDER TO QUALIFY—WORK PROJECTS UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I always welcome the opportunity to supply the coda to the question period. In view of the Prime Minister's recent statements concerning the decline in the number of students able to resume their education and the consequent increasing number of young people seeking employment, I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether or not he is planning to amend the OTA regulations in order to abolish the three years in the work force rule so that more young people may qualify for income replacement during manpower training or retraining?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated only a short time ago to the House, the question of the three-year rule has been discussed very frequently over a period of time, particularly with provincial authorities, and consideration is being given to the advisability of changing the rule.

Mr. Rose: Could the minister advise the House whether or not his department is preparing to initiate, on a much larger scale than last year, certain work activity projects as provided for under the Canada Assistance Plan? How much money is he prepared to allocate this year for that purpose?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, Canada Assistance Plan work activity projects involve mainly provincial departments and the Department of National Health and Welfare when provincial departments wish to take advantage of them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must draw to the attention of hon. members that the question period expired three minutes ago. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West had a supplementary question and he has asked it. I appreciated that he had been trying to ask the question for a little while and therefore allowed him to proceed. However, I think that at this point I should call orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if I might ask the government House leader a question concerning a potential matter of House business. In view of the near unanimity today on the motion of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich concerning the opposition of the members of this House to the Amchitka underground test, would the government consider filing today a government notice of motion in the very words used by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich so that it could be on the order paper by Friday, which would permit the House to deal with it and thus express its view on this important issue?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to consider the suggestion made by the hon. member, and if I have an opportunity to consult my colleagues within the time in which the notice must be filed I will do that also.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, September 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray (for Mr. Benson) that Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequent upon the amendments to that act, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 7763).

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate, as I am sure do all hon. members of the House, the importance of the proposed amendment to Bill C-259 and the importance of Bill C-259 itself, there is another matter which disturbs me a great deal. Members of the government day after day continue to break the law of this country by reason of the non-payment to farmers and to the Wheat Board of the amount due under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Important though that matter may well be, I think the hon. member appreciates that his remarks should be directed to the bill which is now before the House. It is my understanding that its subject matter is different from that to which he has just referred.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Bill C-244 has not been brought back to this House by the government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member no doubt realizes that such a motion cannot be moved twice in the same day. That motion has already been moved, put and negatived and it cannot be put a second time.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, I meant the motion to be:

That this debate do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: That is not the motion the Chair heard the hon. member put. A motion that the debate do now adjourn is a different motion, which the hon. member has a right to put. I think the hon. member will realize that he cannot put the motion that the House do now adjourn. If he will correct the motion, it will be put to the House.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the motion written out.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will write out the motion and submit it to the Chair, it will be put. No motion may be put to the House unless it is written and submitted in proper form to the Chair. I will wait for the hon. member to prepare his motion and submit it.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East:

That this debate do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. McQuaid) which was negatived on the following division:

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell). Is the hon. member for Cardigan rising on a point of order?

Mr. McQuaid: When the debate opened, Your Honour, I had the floor.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that procedurally he is deemed to have spoken and, of course, he cannot speak twice in debate on the same motion unless he has the consent of the House. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Peel South.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In spite of the thinking of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as to my reputation, namely, my not being a gentleman, I would call your attention to something which took place in this House a couple of nights ago. As a result of common courtesy on the part of members on this side of the House, including myself, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) was allowed to take part a second time in a debate. It is too bad that this government cannot show us the same courtesy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) rising on a point of order?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I was rising to move that the hon. member for Cardigan (Mr. McQuaid) be now heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has already recognized the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Just what we need—a farmer from the city.

Mr. Chappell: Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate to call for an amendment to Bill C-259 to bring relief from the U.S. protective measures introduced on August 15.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: My point of order is one which I continue to raise in this House. I raise it again in this case because the hon. member is now trying to read his speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member will not read the speech but will be guided only by the notes he may have before him. I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Chappell: Mr. Speaker, we have all heard of the import surcharge. The seriousness of its effect on Canada is apparent, but the employment support bill will do much to bring relief. We have also heard of the U.S. wage and prices freeze and appreciate the advantage it will give U.S. industry over Canadian industry if Canadian labour continues to push for increases in wages at a time when U.S. wages are frozen. One need only look at the Douglas Aircraft Corporation in Mississauga, in my riding, which employs 6,000 or 8,000 men. This company produces aircraft wings for assembly in California.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Chappell: This company has already had to absorb—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the House passed Bill C-262 last night, I am wondering whether the hon. member is still speaking to it. Does he not realize we are on Bill C-259?

An hon. Member: He is on the wrong speech.

Mr. Chappell: As I said in opening, Mr. Speaker, I join the debate to call for an amendment to Bill C-259 to bring relief from the U.S. protective measure introduced on August 15.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member for Peel South kindly resume his seat. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is that Bill C-259, with an amendment, is before the House and that hon. members who take part in the debate should make their remarks relevant to the bill and the amendment. I am sure the hon. member will want to take this suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. During the debate on the bill and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) a very wide range of views on economic matters has been considered relevant up to this point. I respectfully suggest to the Chair that the words of the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell) have indeed been relevant to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair did not suggest that the hon. member's remarks were not relevant. I merely indicated that there is a bill before the House and the hon. member's remarks should be relevant to that bill. I appreciate that this matter has very wide scope. It was not my view that the hon. member for Peel South was in order or out of order; I simply referred to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and indicated that I was sure the hon. member would take the remarks into consideration. That was the extent of my remarks.

Mr. Chappell: As I was saying, one need only look at the Douglas Aircraft Corporation in Mississauga, in my riding, which employs 6,000 to 8,000 men to make aircraft wings for assembly in California. This firm has been absorbing the shipping costs, and since the change resulting from floating the Canadian dollar it has had to absorb the difference in dollar value and still compete with its counterparts in the United States.

The surcharge will cost this firm about $165,000 a week, less any assistance it may receive under the unemployment support bill. If labour causes an additional disadvantage, is it not obvious that this company may well accept United States governmental persuasion to repatriate to the United States at a location much closer to California and in a state offering financial assistance? Should we encourage this firm to leave, or encourage it to stay? If this firm moves, the resulting loss of jobs in Canada would number about 10,000.

We have also heard of the proposed Domestic International Sales Corporation, commonly called DISC, which would seek to lure firms like the Douglas Corporation back to the United States by offering home-based corporations tremendous advantages over foreign-based ones and by allowing tax deferral for earnings on export sales. Many think we in Canada export only pulp, oil and wheat, but that is not so. Half of our manufactured goods are exported, the majority of them to the United States. The U.S. surcharge was not meant to affect their imports of our raw materials because they need them but, rather, the export of our manufactured or high labour content goods. In the long run we must work out a set of rules with the United States authorities which will give our manufacturing concerns an equal opportunity with the American firms, or we shall revert to being an agricultural nation living on our natural resources because we will not have the money with which to manufacture and trade.

None of the measures I have mentioned is pleasing, but the worst one, a real sleeper, has received very little attention in public discussions so far. It is the 10 per cent tax credit on the cost of all new machinery and equipment produced in and for use in the United States. This is called by the innocuous name "job development tax credit." But look at what it does. The 10 per cent tax credit on all new machinery purchased in the United States for use there, along with the usual tax write off would amount to a price reduction of 12 per cent to 14 per cent for at least a year, and something less than that for an indefinite period.

The expressed long-term purpose of this tax benefit is, first, to cause replacement of productive facilities with new, modern equipment with the newest technological innovations and thus increase the productivity of their workers and, second, to thus make their domestic industries more competitive in domestic and foreign markets. Third, this in turn would supply more jobs, provide a sound basis for future wage increases where productivity has increased, and decrease inflationary pressures on prices. This means that no United States industry would buy a piece of machinery or mechanical equipment in Canada if it or a substitute can be made in the United States. Last year we exported about $332 million worth of machinery and mechanical equipment to tne United States. If nothing is done to replace these sales we will lose 20,000 skilled and semi-skilled jobs almost immediately, and about 50 per cent of them in Quebec where we were trying so hard to create employment through regional development.

This is not all. United States firms extract perhaps 70 per cent of our natural resources. This part of the operation being low in labour content, we naturally hope and try to persuade them to process the raw materials to some extent in Canada. But if a new mine or other natural resource is started here now, there is no way that an American or Canadian would buy new machinery here to process the raw material in Canada. He would be disadvantaged in the machinery purchase. After extracting the raw material he must process it in the United States for this advantage and other benefits which the United States is innovating to encourage and aid industry and, thus, the creation of jobs. The result is, if we do nothing about this measure we are in effect allowing United States citizens here, Canadians and all others, to be forced to process our raw materials in the United States.

And now the most jolting realization of all. The United States will give this huge tax credit, with resulting loss of revenue, so that all of their industry will take advantage of it and quickly introduce all technological improvements available and thus become more efficient and productive in every type of industry. They give business a year under the full 10 per cent incentive, so one may be reasonably certain that all steps possible to introduce new and more efficient machinery will be taken quickly. This will not affect the machinery and mechanical business only but the whole manufacturing industry. In all business, industrial and commercial, carried on by Canadians we will be seriously disadvantaged on the U.S. market and against Americans in the other marketplaces of the world because the American competitor has, by tax incentive, been assisted in modernizing his equipment up to the moment.

We cannot afford to allow this situation to stand another day. We must undertake to introduce legislation in the form of an amendment to the bill, retroactive to this date, to give exactly the same advantages to industry purchasing Canadian machinery and mechanized equipment for use in Canada and to further improve the whole industrial climate by taxation and other incentives and the removal of annoying and unnecessary obstacles.

During the last year we imported about $1,325 million worth of machinery and mechnical equipment. This is about four times the amount we exported. From my conversations with representatives of industry I am satisfied that we could produce in Canada $660 million worth of that which we have been importing. With the amendment to this bill which I propose we could increase sales in Canada by that amount, about $660 million, thus avoiding the loss of 20,000 jobs and in fact creating an extra 30,000 jobs. Moreover, such a provision would cause us to look to ourselves as Canadians and reexamine whether at this time of emergency we could not somehow find the product available in Canada.

From my contacts with industry I am satisfied that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is doing an excellent job. But what about some of the other departments? Under the proposed Canada Labour Code Bill C-253, if an industrialist proposed a technological change that might make him more efficient by introducing a machine which would do the work of six people, he must give notice of the change to the bargaining agent of the union, along with considerable detail as required by the act and as may be further required by the regulations under the act.

If the bargaining agent makes certain allegations there must be a hearing before the board. The board can direct the employer not to proceed and has considerable other power to throw blocks and even prevent the technological change no matter how much more competitive it might have made that industry in the world market. On the face of it one might think that this proposal is kind to labour. But this is not so. It is this type of thinking that has made our railways so overstructured in labour content and so costly, and thus destructive of the efficient movement and lower price of goods which would make them more competitive.

The new competition act, Bill C-256, which in a sense contemplates confrontations between government and industry, or at least provides for overly severe policing, is in a very real sense a form of nuisance and in fact has been used to prosecute and harass on charges that are old and really quite trivial. I suggest that more effort should be diverted to encouraging, rather than hindering, industry.

When the United States authorities introduced a wage freeze and it was suggested that this action would prevent an increase in wages at Douglas Aircraft in Canada, what a fuss was raised by the NDP, and one of our ministers said the United States action could not influence our wages. It would have been better had we all reassured business that we have enough intelligence to realize that if wages in Canada go beyond those of competing industry in the United States, where productivity is the same or higher, our industry is disadvantaged to the point where it will eventually have to close shop. One wonders what international labour, under their United States leaders, is trying to do. With a freeze on wages in the aircraft industry in the United States, a strike at the Canadian plant which provides the wings for the planes would be an indirect strike in the United States. If this plant could thus tie up the whole United States aircraft industry, certainly it would be transferred back to the United States. Surely we must realize that the time has come, when we are faced with these new United States protective measures, that we must encourage industry and co-operate with industry because otherwise the jobs which we must have will not be saved.

Japan and the United States encourage, encourage and encourage industry. It seems in Canada that we give the impression that we want more and more from industry and that we want to give more and more by way of handouts to other people whose only retort is, "Is that all you are going to give me?"

I have heard it said so often in this House that we should tax profit more, put greater taxes on big business. The profits that are not taken in taxes are distributed in dividends, and the dividends in Canadian big business are not high. In fact, they are so low that people will not buy shares in existing companies or new companies which would create jobs. If the profits are low and dividends are low, in no way can we find the money to create extra jobs.

We must react with more positive and speedier action, not only because it is necessary to avoid massive loss of employment but we must appear determined to keep the economy healthy so that investment and expansion will not draw back again and American capital leave to return to the United States, and Canadian capital migrate out of Canada to other countries. If our machinery and mechanical industry were given the same tax credit advantage as in the United States, the American corporations which have been exporting these goods into Canada would be in trouble, naturally. Then we would have a strong American lobby assisting us in our quest for more reasonable trade arrangements between Canada and the U.S.—a very helpful ally, I would think.

If we wait until the Americans are satisfied with their trade balance we will lose some of those industries which began specializing or, as they call it, rationalizing two or three years ago. By the time we return to the former trade pattern those industries will have lost many of their customers, much of their skilled labour and their ability to compete against their larger competitors. Under the American DISC plan many American companies will be persuaded to take their export production back to the United States and perhaps also their whole production. In some cases Canadian manufacturers will be asked to fill in those gaps for Canadian consumption. This is another reason for a tax incentive on the purchase of Canadian machinery, so that Canadians will take the gamble and buy new machinery to replace this production and to re-employ labour where jobs have been lost.

In conclusion, I say that although such an amendment would indeed be helpful and it is absolutely essential as an immediate step, we must still bring forth more concrete and substantial incentives for Canadian-owned companies to export. If our resources are to be sold, they should not be sold just for dollars, but for jobs. Our resources will have to be exported in the finished form or alternatively an equivalent number of jobs created by an alternative export of manufactured goods to the country receiving our natural resources.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-259, commonly referred to as the tax reform bill of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) because, coming from an agricultural riding, I find that unfortunately it spells bad news for our farmers. This naturally means that I and other hon. members and colleagues should raise our voices in protest where we feel injustices are being meted out. Just to refresh our memory I would read the amendment that is before the House. It was moved on September 13 by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and is as follows:

That this House deeply concerned with unacceptable levels of inflation, persisting unemployment and stagnant industry and conscious of the necessity for meaningful tax reform declines to give second reading to a bill which does not provide sufficient stimulus to the economy of Canada with appropriate tax cuts and incentives, does not contain adequate tax exemptions and is not calculated to materially improve business and labour conditions in Canada now or in the foreseeable future.

Of course, the terms of this bill, as with any other taxing measure, not only affects our farmers but also our fishermen, small business, the labouring man and all other sectors of our economy. In fact, when the government refers to Bill C-259 as tax reform legislation I have grave doubts about the correctness of their terminology. It appears to me to have finally emerged as a subtle plan to gouge more and higher taxes out of more and more Canadians who are already staggering under the burden, which is having the effect of an economic millstone around our necks in our endeavour to produce goods at a price that will compete on world markets and provide for our basic, everyday needs.

The original Carter commission report on taxation, brought in several years ago for the government's consideration, did contain a number of suggested tax reforms, but it was so socialistic in many areas that even the NDP, then led by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), had to back away from several sections of the report, although at first blush he and his party seemed to be ready to clasp to their bosoms the whole program as outlined.

The white paper of the Minister of Finance was a well watered-down version of the Carter report, and today we are looking at a bill that, again, is only a shadow of his original intentions planned for us in the white paper which was so much debated a year ago. This change of heart can be credited chiefly to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), who almost in a one-man crusade across this country last spring and summer alerted thousands of Canadians in all walks of life to just what the white paper on taxation would do to them and to our economy in general if it were thrust on us in its original form.

In the present bill, everyone is in agreement with increasing tax exemptions for those in the low-income brackets. Every one of us also supports the closing of loopholes in our tax laws with respect to income tax evasion, and perhaps we are in agreement with several other sections of the bill, depending where we sit in this House. However, in my opinion these suitable and necessary changes could have been made by simple amendments to the present law without all the political fanfare, a wasteful spending of the taxpayers' dollars and the consequent subterfuge leading people to believe that great changes were taking place when in fact they were being asked to dig up more tax dollars for this spendthrift government.

I do not pretend to be a tax expert, but if what I read and hear is true, this bill in its present form will lead to the greatest tax jungle in Canadian history. It seems that our top accountants and tax lawyers who have looked at the bill are about ready to throw up their hands in despair when it comes to properly interpreting the proposed legislation. If this is the case with the so-called tax experts, imagine the trouble and feeling of despair of the ordinary layman when he looks at how he may be affected by this legislation.

At this point I wish to deal with two aspects of the finance minister's tax reform bill, how it will affect the agricultural industry, farmers in particular, and how it will affect co-operatives, a matter with which some hon. members are probably involved. First of all, let us consider the farmers. Under the present law a farmer may classify a group of animals as his basic herd, and gains and losses are treated as capital gains and capital losses and are tax exempt. However, under the new tax reform bill, the basic herd provision and straight line depreciation will be phased out. Livestock farmers will be able to establish a basic herd as of December 31, 1971, and any gain thereon will be tax free, but no additions to the basic herd may be made after December 31. When livestock is sold after December 31, 1971, the sale will be considered as going out of the basic herd or the other herd and will be subject to special rules.

Assets acquired after December 31, 1971, must be depreciated on the diminishing balance system. If proceeds from the sale of assets, depreciated on a straight line basis, exceed their cost or valuation day value, the excess is capital gain. As an example, trading-in tractors and combines for new machinery will be affected in this respect. Under the new legislation capital gain will be subject to taxation. As far as a hobby farmer is concerned, he may still deduct only $5,000 of his annual farming loss from other income. But in addition, any amount of interest and property taxes not deducted because of this limitation may be applied to reduce any proceeds on the eventual sale of the farm.

In general, income gained from farming and fishing will be brought more into line with the tax treatment of other businesses. Farmers probably will be taxed somewhat more heavily in this area, but it is impossible to say how much because the government has not calculated additional revenues which might result in this area. One measure in the tax reform bill that will adversely affect farmers is that no new additions and sales can be deducted after the livestock farmer has established his basic herd as of December 31, 1971.

Another part of this bill that will spell bad news for farmers is valuation day, because property will be subject to the new capital gains tax proposed in the bill. This capital gains tax is new to Canada and will begin with valuation day. Some people may not be familiar with the term "valuation day" or V-day as it is commonly called. Some time before the new tax plan takes effect the government will declare what it calls valuation day. Only the gains realized after that date will be taxed. If a capital asset is valued at below cost on that date, the cost value will be taken as the starting figure for the system. For many farmers this measure will not mean much, but farmers who sell to developers will face a large tax bill.

Under the new plan there will be no capital gains tax on a taxpayer's principal residence, and one acre of surrounding land will also be exempted. That is to say, no capital gain will be calculated when he sells his acre of land or his house, but his farm machinery and barn are still subject to capital gains. However, this plan could hardly bring any comfort to farmers who have considerably more than one acre of land, so farmers will have an alternative. A farmer may choose the white paper formula for a $1,000 annual deduction against gains on his farmhouse and all his farm property, whichever plan is more beneficial to him.

One aspect of the finance minister's capital gains tax structure which does not make sense is this: if all capital gains are to be taxed, why aren't all capital losses to be deducted? Mr. I. H. Asper, in the Globe and Mail of July 1, 1971, clarified this situation very well as follows:

> Take, for example, the situation of the farmer who, because his children do not want to carry on the family farm, sells his assets. He has a capital gain of, for example, $50,000 which is taxed.
> He retires and invests all of his money in the market. Three or four years later he liquidates because his investments are not advancing, and suffers a $50,000 loss.
> In fairness he should not pay any tax because he is even, not ahead—he has had a taxable $50,000 gain and a non-deductible $50,000 loss.
> Now if another farmer had the same results but in reverse order—first a $50,000 capital loss and then later made a $50,000 capital gain, the gain would not be taxed because the law, as written, provides that a loss can be carried forward indefinitely to offset future gains. But the reverse is not true, resulting in an unequitable situation.

At first the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool appeared to be one of the few organizations throughout the tax reform debate that was ready to support partially some of the finance minister's proposals, for the simple reason that they thought Saskatchewan farmers would likely be among the first to benefit from measures to reduce taxes for some and eliminate them entirely for others. However, the pool has many qualifications. For example, Mr. Speaker, it has argued that a tax on capital gains may hit farmers and other small businessmen particularly hard because most of them seek to retire on proceeds from the sale of their farm or business and fear the proceeds may be whittled away by a collection of tax on the capital gain. The pool has said that farmers and small businessmen should be permitted to purchase a registered retirement plan from the proceeds of the sale of their business before a capital gains tax is levied. But the minister's tax reform legislation does not appear to allow opportunity for this kind of purchase.

Let us now consider the new tax bill as it affects co-operatives and credit unions. In a rather obscure and complicated way the bill seems intent upon profoundly altering the nature and goals of co-operatives in Canada. Under the present law, new co-operatives are exempt from taxation for the first three years. The new bill proposes to withdraw this three-year tax exemption.

Consumer patronage dividends are to remain exempt as long as they can be distributed. Under the present law, patronage dividends on production goods, for example farm supplies, are considered a reduction of cost and must be taken into income by the recipient and are taxable at the recipient's personal rate. Patronage dividends for production goods will remain as income under the new bill.

The capital employed principle has been drastically changed under the new bill. Whereas now co-operatives cannot reduce their taxable income below 3 per cent of the capital employed, the formula for calculating the capital employed under the new tax reform bill will include essentially only members' equity, that is, shares, loans and general reserves, and the rate has been increased to 5 per cent. The only deduction is the interest paid on members' loans.

These changes will have the accumulated effect that less and less of a co-operative's earnings can be distributed as patronage dividends on purchases. This means that the earnings of co-operatives will gradually have to be distributed on the basis of the equity owned by the members. This will force co-operatives into the pattern of investor-owned corporations rather than service corporations distributing earnings on the basis of use. When this point is reached, co-ops would be better to incorporate as ordinary corporations because then the shares would not be on call. It is unbelievable that the government of Canada wants to kill the co-op system in this way.

The tax on employed capital was introduced in the amendments to the Income Tax Act of 1948 purely as a political answer to opponents of co-operatives, and was not suggested or recommended by any of the various royal commissions which inquired into the position of co-operatives. It is an inequitable tax, practised nowhere else in the world. Some years ago the Danish government attempted this method but soon abandoned it.

It should be kept in mind that earnings on non-member business and money put into reserves or held by the co-operative itself are taxed at normal corporation rates. No one questions these regulations. The Minister of Finance has indicated that he will be receptive to amendments in this area. We hope he follows through on his word, and we intend to press the government to explain just what it means by these changes. Special sectors of the economy, for example the resource industries and small businesses, have received favourable consideration in the tax reform bill to assure their continued viability, and we feel co-operatives should receive similar treatment. These new tax reform proposals appear to favour the distribution of co-operative earnings as interest on members' equity rather than as patronage refunds. Perhaps the members of co-operatives, and not the federal finance department, should determine how earnings of co-operatives are allocated to members who are also patrons.

Aside from the tax reform bill there are two items in the minister's June budget which also affect the agricultural sector—the end of the federal estate tax and the elimination of the 12 per cent tax on margarine. Roy Atkinson, president of the National Farmers Union, has said that the imposition of the capital gains tax will nullify any benefits that could come from the abolition of the estate tax. The National Farmers Union has been advocating an end to the estate tax for some time. However, this tax was never one of the biggest problems facing farmers, particularly in western Canada. George Heffelfinger, president of the National Grain Company, was much more optimistic about the effect of this particular portion of the budget. He said that the estate tax in the past has been responsible for the sale of many small businesses and farms, particularly to American buyers.

The elimination of the 12 per cent tax on margarine has drawn varied reaction from within the dairy industry which stands to be hardest hit by a projected lowering of the price of margarine. Philip Isaacs, former manager of the Winnipeg Dairy and Poultry Co-operative, is reported as saying that the dairy processing industry has been urging the removal of this tax for several years. He said he did not expect any great increase in the consumption of margarine, but conceded it may cause many difficulties for dairy producers. The dairy farmers of Canada, on the other hand, have been opposing the removal of this tax. Roy Atkinson has said the removal of this tax may make margarine more competitive with butter and may pose a problem for the butter producers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the serious reservations expressed by my colleagues earlier in the debate on Bill C-259 and in light of the views I have just expressed, I have no alternative but to support the amendment now before the House.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the events leading to the introduction of Bill C-259 were billed as an exercise in participatory democracy. That is how it was publicized. To those hon. members who may be under the delusion that this is what took place, I suggest that it was one giant fizzle. We did not have participatory democracy in any way, shape or form. This is demonstrated most vividly in the result of the exercise as expressed in the form of Bill C-259 now before us. It in no way speaks for the people of Canada nor does it relate to the needs and desires of many people throughout the country.

Perhaps we should ask ourselves who won the exercise, such as it was. I think this was demonstrated in the concessions made by the government with respect to capital gains, to the mining, oil and gas industries, the difference in the way various forms of income are treated and the difference in the treatment of working people compared to businessmen and others who receive their income in different forms.

Mr. Speaker, if there is any thought in the minds of members opposite that the bill now before us is an expression of the just society, they had better think again. As soon as they have looked beyond the few goodies contained in the bill, people will realize that in fact it contains a great many inequities. The public will react to the hoax that has been perpetrated upon them and this will result in a further build-up of pressure in our society for some sort of meaningful change. It will be realized that the government of the day has not been responsive to the very real needs and desires of the people.

I should like to deal with some aspects of the debate that has taken place on this bill, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I should like to deal with the argument that has been debated very widely on the whole question of equity versus growth. It has been quite apparent that the primary consideration of members on the government side of the House, in many instances, and on the part of the government itself has been in terms of giving more emphasis and more priority to growth considerations. This has been the justification put forward for some of the measures proposed in this bill.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if they really want to examine this question in depth it will be apparent that it is not possible to have true and meaningful growth unless it is linked with considerations of equity and unless equity is built into the tax system in all respects. Before we can have any real tax reform we must have more emphasis on tax equity than so far has been demonstrated in this bill.

I acknowledge that one important departure which the government has proposed is the introduction of a capital gains tax. It is a half-baked measure but it does give some hope for the future. Once the breakthrough is made in terms of introducing the principle of taxation on capital gains, it may be possible in the future to introduce further improvements in order to realize a greater degree of equity.

Looking at the over-all picture, I think one of the worst features of the bill is the manner in which it deals with the resource industries, particularly mining, oil and gas. It continues a system of concessions made available to those industries which is not available to any other sector or taxpayer in the Canadian economy. This seems to me to result in a very serious distortion of our economic system and of the pattern of our economic activity. It will result in greater incentives and greater inducements to development within that sector of the economy, but that is not necessarily the best allocation of resources in terms of our development policy. It will not necessarily result in the greatest possible number of jobs. It is well known that these primary industries have a very low labour input. They do have a high capital input and on many occasions in the past it has been necessary for Canada to import the capital required to bring about the development of these industries, but in terms of new jobs the result has been minimal.

There has been added pressure on the Canadian dollar and on our international economic position by way of added inflows of capital. The additional export of raw material has not produced much benefit. It is probably true that as a result of the concessions contained in this legislation and in the government's policy there are some marginal mining operations which have benefited, but I suggest that the allocation of resources to those industries which results from the influence of our tax system is not in the best interests of Canada. The suggestion that a change in the present system will result in a massive outflow of capital and resources industries is straight nonsense, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, these industries will make a noise and will protest. But I think when we see the end result we will realize that only very marginal industries are affected in any way.

It seems to me that we must keep these factors in mind when thinking of the current economic crisis facing Canada as a result of President Nixon's new economic measures. The fact is that the Canadian dollar is under severe pressure at present. In large part, but not totally, this has been brought about by our heavy emphasis on primary, non-renewable resource industries. These industries export most of their products in a raw or semi-processed form, the result being a heavy inflow of United States dollars to Canada. At the same time this produces little in the way of benefits for Canadians.

In my contribution to the debate this afternoon I should like to deal with one particular problem at some length. It is of a serious nature. I want to deal with the proposals in this bill with respect to taxation of co-operatives and credit unions. I feel that this constitutes a very serious problem. It has been brought to the attention of all members of this House. I am pleased to note that some members of all political parties have expressed concern about this matter. This shows, I think, that something has gone wrong with the system responsible for the introduction of this bill.

It seems that either nobody in the Department of Finance really understands what the co-operative movement is about—and I can hardly believe that since many capable and competent people are in the employ of the department—or somewhere along the line, before the bill was finalized in its present form, somebody got to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) or to the government and brought undue influence to bear. That has resulted in the atrocious proposals we have before us in clauses 135, 136 and 137. I do not hesitate in saying that from the viewpoint of the co-operative and credit union movements the proposals in this bill which affect them are nothing short of disastrous.

I think all hon. members should pause and think about this matter before they pass lightly over the proposals introduced by the government. We must keep in mind the history of the credit union and co-operative movements and the contribution they have made to Canadian society and to the economy. These movements are dedicated to helping people and to enabling people to exercise a greater degree of control over their own affairs. Their operations have been built largely on the principle of self-help. They have arisen in large measure because of the very real needs of Canadian people in many walks of life—not just in one sector of the economy, in one sector of our society or in one geographic area. In all the areas of Canadian society we have seen the credit union and co-operative movements grow in response to the needs of people and their desire to help themselves, to improve their conditions, their community and their country.

If the government is to take the step of doing something that actually will destroy the co-operative and credit union movements—and I suggest that is what is at stake—I suggest it will be perpetrating on this country one of the most serious follies we have witnessed in a long time. I also suggest that the co-operative and credit union movements have made a great contribution to Canada in terms of bringing about a greater degree of equality within our society and of bringing somewhat closer than would otherwise be the case equality of opportunity and equality of condition. If we are to think of the future of Canada in meaningful terms, we must think about these matters.

If the government continues on a course which results in the destruction of the co-operative and credit union movements in Canada, I suggest it will be taking a major step toward destroying Canadian society and democracy. Our co-operative movement is dedicated to the principle of democracy. It is thoroughly steeped in the principle of democracy. It is an expression of democracy in its truest form in social, economic and political terms. For these reasons I suggest that the government must reconsider the proposals contained in this bill.

I think we must look at clauses 135, 136 and 137 of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and ask ourselves this question: What will happen to a society that cannot tolerate a different form of organizing its affairs than that which seems to predominate? We must also ask ourselves: Are we to have a tax system that is designed primarily to meet the needs of people, that is designed primarily in terms of people, or are we to have a tax system that thinks first in terms of money and capital? I think the answer is obvious when we consider that simple proposition.

We must translate that proposition into real terms with respect to the legislation now before us. I believe that the legislation as drafted thinks first in terms of money and capital. Those who drafted it and decided on the form in which it would be introduced, it seems to me, thought only of some form of economic structure or organization which begins with capital and financial considerations. They did not begin from the basic premise which is: Before you have money, before you have capital in any form you must have people, and it is people who are the prime movers in society and in our economy.

Members of my party, Mr. Speaker, have often been accused of being doctrinaire in their approach to our economy. It seems to me that clauses 135, 136 and 137 constitute one of the best examples of a doctrinaire approach ever envisaged. It seems that those responsible for including these clauses in the bill could think only in terms of classical capitalism. They could think only in terms of some form of economic organization which begins with a capital structure based on a classical capitalist type of economic organization. I suggest seriously to the government that a society which cannot accommodate a variety of approaches involving social and economic considerations is doomed. The minister must consider that when approaching this question.

Under the co-operative movement people have banded together to deal with their own problems. They wanted to help themselves. That was the prime, motivating force behind the co-operative and credit union movements. I suggest that these movements have developed a unique form of organization, a unique type of corporate structure, you might say, which differs from the usual type of corporate structure in our economy. The government has totally failed to take into account in the bill before us the unique characteristics of the movement.

I assure those on the other side of the House, the government in particular, that many of us will not stand idly by and see the co-operative and credit union movements destroyed. We will stand in this House and fight for the changes that are necessary in order to produce a fair deal for this movement. I serve notice on the government that many of us will do battle when we come to these clauses of the bill. The operation and the structure of the co-operative and credit union movements differ in some respects, although they are based on similar principles. I would like to deal with each in turn because I believe there are some considerations that must be brought to the attention of the House.

Members will be familiar with representations that have been made to them by both the co-operative movement and the credit union movement. The credit union movement has expressed some very real and valid concerns with regard to the proposals in Bill C-259. We have to keep in mind that Bill C-259 proposes, for the first time, to remove the present exemption from taxation of caisses populaires and credit unions. This is a new departure in the Canadian tax scene. The last major change in this area was in the late 1940s. At that time the McDougall royal commission studied the question of taxation of co-operatives and credit unions. In spite of the changes and recommendations they made with regard to co-operatives, they recommended that credit unions should not be subject to taxation. I quote from the McDougall commission report:

> Credit unions provide a method whereby people in poor circumstances are encouraged to develop a habit of thrift, since by pooling their savings they can provide a source of credit for themselves in time of need.

That only has to do with the question of taxing credit unions as such, taxing their surpluses or net income. I think it is fair to say that the credit union movement has very serious concerns about regard to the manner in which taxation will be imposed on them. I would like to enumerate some of their major concerns. First, members of the credit union and caisse populaire movement request an equality of tax with that accorded to corporations and the availability to corporations of a lower tax rate of 25 per cent. Of course, private corporations can under the revised rules continue the application to them of a lower rate of tax by the payment of dividends.

It must also be kept in mind that under provincial laws governing the operation of caisses populaires and credit unions, reserves set up by a caisse populaire or credit union cannot be distributed to members to provide for the continuation of a lower rate of tax as provided in other sectors of the tax system. Credit unions and caisses populaires ask that modified rules be provided for them so that the period during which they have received the reduced rate of tax of 25 per cent is extended in a manner equitable to that provided for corporations.

The second major point raised by the credit union movement is that payments made by a credit union or caisse populaire as a payment of interest or dividends, as they are commonly known, on members' shares, are not deductible as an expense. That is the proposal in the bill. This provision demonstrates a failure to recognize that the shares of a credit union or caisse populaire are a form of deposit by their members and are not shares similar in nature to ordinary corporate shares such as hon. members opposite are generally familiar with.

[Mr. Burton.]

The third major concern is that clause 137 imposes very severe limitations on the manner in which a credit union or caisse populaire may carry on its business or in the manner in which it may invest its funds. I feel this question has to be looked at as well. They are also concerned about some of the transitional provisions developed for credit unions and caisses populaires in the application of Bill C-259.

Finally, members of caisses populaires object to the principle of "capital employed" limiting the patronage refunds that may be made by a credit union or caisse populaire to reduce the cost of borrowing by their members. This is a very reasonable set of objections which must be taken into account by the government. The National Association of Canadian Credit Unions and several other credit union and caisse populaire organizations made these representations to the government. They are also making them to members of the House of Commons. I think it is incumbent upon every member of this House to give them very serious consideration.

Members must bear in mind that the credit union movement has been of very great service to thousands of people across Canada in providing a start for them in solving their financial problems and financing the necessities of life. It is recognized that there is now general acceptance of the value and role of credit unions across Canada. It must be kept in mind that the people who invest their savings in credit unions are subject to different levels of taxation. No one is quarrelling with the principle that the dividends received from savings in credit unions, which are termed as shares, should be subject to taxation at whatever level may apply to the individual. It must be emphasized that there is a very serious malaise in our economy and our society if it is not possible to find a way of accommodating our tax system to the very unique structure and role that is played by this movement.

I would like to deal with the situation of the co-operative movement because it plays a very important role in the Canadian scene. The latest figures show that there are 1,700,000 members of co-operatives across Canada. Many are small community organizations but there are also large operations. These organizations have very real concerns which I believe should be made known to members of this House.

Co-operatives in general object most strenuously to the "capital employed" concept contained in Bill C-259. This substantially reduces the amount of patronage refunds which can be paid to members. Second, reducing patronage refunds hits at the economic existence of co-operatives. This point relates to my earlier submission that it will result in the destruction of some co-operatives and in other cases will seriously hamper their growth. It has to be kept in mind that patronage refunds are part of the investment required to enable a co-operative to operate. If a co-operative has no means of raising equity capital except through the reinvestment of patronage refunds in its share structure, it is obviously unable to expand and develop. This is the practice followed by many co-operatives—they do plow back patronage refunds into their capital structure. This provides them with the resources necessary to continue their operations and expand them if desired.

There are other objections which need to be taken into account. I was very much concerned by a statement made earlier by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) when he led off the debate on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party. He made some comments with regard to the taxation of co-operatives. I quote from his speech as reported in Hansard at page 7762 for September 13:

> We have had quite a reaction to this bill from the co-ops. I do not know what the House is going to decide, but it seems to me that the government has advanced its proposals after looking at some of the largest co-ops in the country, organizations which have lost their co-operative origins, that operate in the hundreds of millions of dollars class, their boards of directors being far removed from the ordinary members, in the same way as the boards of the biggest multinational corporations are far removed from the shareholders.
> Unfortunately the government's proposals gather up into the same net hundreds if not thousands of small local co-operatives. I am speaking of co-operatives organized on a local self-help basis.

There is no question but that this statement reflects a serious lack of understanding of the nature of the co-operative movement. It is certainly true that many large co-operatives operate on a large scale. There are many others which operate simply on the basis of serving a small local community. But I suggest that all of them are part and parcel of the co-operative movement. I do not say the co-operative movement is free from criticism with respect to the extent to which it has kept contact with its membership, but this is something which ought to be dealt with within the movement itself.

If you take time to look at some of the large co-operatives in Canada you will find that many of them have made monumental efforts to keep in contact with their members. It seems the hon. member is not familiar with the efforts of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, for example, to keep in touch with its membership and carry out an on-going program of membership participation in its activities and in the decision-making process. I invite him to take a close look at the highly developed organization, structure and pattern of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I think it is a first-class example of the way in which organizations could keep in closer touch with their membership.

I think the hon. member for Edmonton West was off-base when he suggested that the tax proposals contained in clauses 135 and 137 were designed primarily with the very large co-operatives in mind. In fact, some of the very large co-ops will be hit most severely. Many of the large co-operatives are now being called upon to undertake expansion programs in order to meet new conditions and will be unable to continue in existence if the bill now before us is enacted.

Hon. members will be familiar with the representations which have been made by the movement to the Minister of Finance. The co-op movement has objected to the continuation of the capital employed concept as contained in Bill C-259. I should like to pose to the government the same question as the co-operative movement has posed: What is the rationale behind the capital employed concept? Is there any rational explanation for using a fixed capital employed concept? What justification is there for doing so?

Having set an arbitrary level in a capital employed formula—it was 3 per cent as applied to co-operatives under the old act; the percentage is now to be raised to 5 per cent—the principle is to be extended to the credit union movement. The co-operatives find the emphasis placed on the relation between income and capital to be unreasonable and illogical. They view this as a form of discrimination and point out that no similar provision appears in the proposed tax bill affecting other methods of doing business.

There is a further aspect of these proposals which ought to be considered, namely, the manner in which the cash flow of co-operatives will be affected. What is envisaged here will completely destroy the operation of the co-ops; it will make it impossible for them to carry on their operations within the structure they have developed over the years. There is one alternative open to them: they can simply change over to a stock company type of operation. But if they did that they would be abandoning the principles upon which the movement has developed and flourished. Consider the question of shares. A share, as we speak of it in the co-op movement, is a completely different thing from a share in an ordinary corporate operation.

It should be kept in mind that the only source of equity capital for co-ops is through the patronage refund system as they have developed it. Again, they could reorganize on a different basis, but if they did they would no longer be co-operatives; they would no longer be carrying on as in the past. The bill will make it impossible for them to operate as they desire to operate, and this is a serious matter.

Similarly, it should be kept in mind that there is no means whereby credit can be obtained for corporate taxes paid under the new proposals before us. There is no dividend tax credit applied to pay-outs of patronage refunds as is available to recipients of dividends from ordinary stock corporations. This, too, is a discriminatory feature in the bill, one which is totally intolerable.

The co-operative movement has also pointed out that the new tax proposals will make it virtually impossible for most co-operatives even to consider paying dividends to their members. I hope the government will reconsider its proposals in this area, bearing in mind that the purpose of a co-op is not so much the earning of profit as the provision of services to those who have organized it.

I suggest that if the government allows clauses 135 to 137 to pass without substantial change and without giving substantial weight to the representations of the co-operative and credit union movements, it will destroy something that is essential to the future well-being of Canadian society. That is a cross that I am sure even a Liberal government would not want to have hanging around its neck.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, through certain manoeuvers this afternoon, members of the opposition have succeeded in delaying study of Bill C-259. In order to recover some of the precious time we have lost—

[English]

Pursuant to Standing Order 6(5)(a), that this sitting be extended until 7 p.m. for the purpose of continuing consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-259.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the motion put forward by the hon. Postmaster General pursuant to Standing Order 6 (5).

[English]

Hon. members have heard the motion.

Mr. Aiken: I did not hear it, Mr. Speaker. Would you repeat it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I will in a moment. The minister is proposing to extend the hours of sitting until seven o'clock. Before putting the motion I should like to remind hon. members that when such motions are put in the hour before the adjournment of the House, after the motion has been put the Chair asks members who oppose the motion to rise. If more than ten members rise, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil), seconded by Mr. Mahoney, moved:

That this sitting be extended until 7 p.m. for the purpose of continuing consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-259.

[English]

All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You thought we were not ten.

Mr. McCleave: We'll put the run to this German tactic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): More than ten members having opposed the motion, it is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this very important Bill C-259 because I feel the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) expresses very well the concern which is felt by a great many Canadians. The amendment reads:

That this House deeply concerned with unacceptable levels of inflation, persisting unemployment and stagnant industry and conscious of the necessity for meaningful tax reform declines to give second reading to a bill which does not provide sufficient stimulus to the economy of Canada with appropriate tax cuts and incentives, does not contain adequate tax exemptions and is not calculated to materially improve business and labour conditions in Canada now or in the foreseeable future.

That expresses a concern which is felt by thinking Canadians generally at this time, particularly those who have studied this so-called tax reform bill. Taxation is an increasingly important factor in the economic life of our country. We have a situation in which we have two phenomena, which used to be considered to be mutually exclusive, occurring at the same time. The first is inflation and the other is high unemployment. It was once thought that you only had inflation in a period when the economy was buoyant and everybody was employed, and that you only had unemployment when the economy was in a depressed condition, when prices were stable or falling and when the value of the dollar was not being inflated but deflated and going up in value. At the present time we have these two phenomena, a high rate of unemployment and a high rate of inflation, happening concurrently. A good question is, what new factor is there in the equation which makes this not only possible but perhaps inevitable?

In what I am about to say I will do my best to avoid being unduly partisan, because what I say is not criticism of this government only but criticism of our general outlook in government. It applies not only to this government but, in a larger context, perhaps to all levels of government. I believe our rate of increasing taxation has to be controlled. We tend to look at this progression of increase as so much of a percentage each year and it does not seem very serious. It may be just an increase of 10 per cent, or something of that sort, and we forget that it is a geometric progression. It is like the population explosion or compound interest rates: when they continue for a while the absolute increase is frightening and ultimately explosive.

I think I can illustrate what I am saying by a classic story which has various forms and settings. It is about a farmer who sent his hired boy to the blacksmith's shop to get a horse shod. As you will know, Mr. Speaker, there are 32 nails in a set of horseshoes. The regular charge for this job was $2. The blacksmith asked the boy whether he would prefer to be charged the $2, or would he like to be charged one cent for the first nail, twice as much for the next, twice as much for the next, and so on. The boy thought that there being only 32 nails, this would not be a very large amount. The blacksmith then pointed out that this was a compounding, or a geometric progression and that by doubling even 32 times you arrive at a colossal figure. As a matter of fact, I believe it would cost something like $21 million to have a horse shod on that basis. This is the kind of lack of appreciation for trends taking place in this and many countries which produces exponential curves which become steeper and steeper. They are trends which cannot continue becoming steeper and steeper with ever-increasing acceleration without something flying apart at the end.

Some people might say, "We have inflation, but what does that matter? If a dollar will only buy half as much now as it did X' number of years ago, it comes out to the same thing." It does not come out to the same thing. Inflation has a very great number of unfortunate effects on the economy. The first is that it discourages thrift and saving, because if one saves for the future, his old age or anything of that sort, the value of the savings is depreciated as the value of money goes down and inflation increases. The people who want to borrow money realize that the thing to do is not to have their property value in dollars but, rather, to have those dollars invested in perhaps stocks or real property.

The effect of this is that there are more people who want to borrow money than there are people willing to lend money. The people who lend money not only wish to have a reasonable rental on the money they loan, but also an increment on the interest which will neutralize the depreciation of the money in the period it is loaned. They do not want to lend a dollar with which one could buy a dollar's worth of goods and find that when they get that dollar back a year from now it will only buy 95 cents worth of goods in terms of its original value. The result is high interest rates. That is an inevitable result of inflation. This places an added burden on people who invest in the means of production whether they be farmers, representatives of companies or anything else. They must borrow money, and while it is depreciated on their income tax return they are gypped because the depreciation they receive is in respect of cheap money.

When these people have to replace the capital goods and means of production at the end of that period, they find the replacement cost is twice what it had been. I will give an example, Mr. Speaker. This is a homey example. This summer I found it necessary to put a new roof on my barn. I am a farmer. The barn had been built many years ago and I happened to have the contractor's receipt from the time when this fair-sized building was built before the turn of the century. When I repaired the roof this year I found that the cost of just the nails to put on the roof was about the same as the cost of the whole building when it was first built. That is inflation.

We are experiencing a type of inflation which is becoming steeper all the time. It is very dangerous. I remember being appalled when I was told that when the Palace Hotel in Brussels was redecorated after World War II the inside decorations cost more than the total cost of the building just before World War I. I thought at that time, "Thank God we have not been exposed to that kind of inflation in North America". Now, however, we have that kind of inflation, or something very close to it. This concerns me greatly.

This situation makes it impossible for industry or business to plan for the future or to engage in many of the economic stimulations they could carry on if they were dealing with a dollar that was fairly constant. It would be an impossible task to try to plan for business expansion or for the future in a situation where the value of the dollar is wildly fluctuating, where you have wild inflation or where you have a rapid rate of inflation, because the businessman or the entrepeneur is in the same position as an engineer if he were called upon to plan a building like the Arts Centre and was told that his yardstick would expand by 5 per cent per year.

It is this type of difficulty which is slowing down our economy. Our economy is being slowed down by high taxes. One might say, of course, "We are paying high taxes, but governments are in so many fields of endeavour now and are giving good service in return for the tax dollars. We have many things such as the old age pension, medicare and better schooling." This is all good; it is excellent. I am for this so long as we can afford it and so long as we do not live beyond our means.

If we should find that we are living beyond our means we must make the difficult decision as to what our priorities are, because I believe our tax burden is already too heavy and that our tax load has been expanding at a rate which is much greater than the rate of expansion of either our population or our gross national product. This cannot go on idenfinitely. I would give an illustration or two about what I have in mind. I have here a statement which was prepared in reply to an answer to a question placed on the order paper last year. We find, for example, that the ratio of federal government employees to the population has increased, from 1950 to the present time, from one civil servant to 106 members of the population to one civil servant for every 87 members of the population.

In reply to another question we find, in absolute terms, that the number of civil servants in the federal civil service increased between 1934 and 1968 from 40,000 to 235,000. Yet in that period the population only doubled. I am not against civil servants. We have an excellent civil service in this country, comprised of dedicated people; but I believe it is unfair to them if it is government policy to expand government services to the extent that we have civil servants working in many non-productive fields.

As I have said, the effect of taxation on the Canadian economy is fairly extreme. I should like to quote some figures in respect of the total revenue of the federal government. I have the figures for only the period 1926 to 1946 and to 1966. The total revenue of the federal government increased from $373 million in 1926 to $2,602 million in 1946 and to $9,721 million in 1966. The municipal and provincial rates of revenue increased in roughly the same proportion, so that the total tax paid by Canadians to all three levels of government in a matter of 40 years has increased from a total of $879 million to $22,155 million in 1966, and the trend has continued. The fact that disturbs me is that this trend continues at an ever-increasing rate in most cases.

What is the end result of such a trend? To give an illustration of the end result, the taxes paid in Canada in the 40 years—per individual, per capita, not per wage earner—prior to 1966 increased from $87.90 to $1,107.75, to all levels of government. If the average family consists of four people, that is a tax burden of $4,400. It is no wonder that it is an absolute necessity, especially in the cities, for there to be at least two wage earners in a family so that they can make both ends meet. If there is not, their income does not allow them to own a home.

This sort of change in our economy affects the quality of life and the kind of homes that we are able to provide for our growing children. I think that from this situation stem some of the other problems that are facing Canada. One might suggest that big corporations can be taxed more, or that the sales tax can be increased since nobody knows whether the increase is part of the actual cost of production or not, and what the taxpayer does not know will not hurt him. So we keep on piling these hidden taxes on everyone and there is no escape. I do not care whether a taxpayer's income is high or low, he pays through the nose day in and day out to all three levels of government. There is no escape for him, and the taxes that are imposed on corporations or on the so-called rich filter down through all income groups.

Let me give another illustration of the effect of high taxes. I have here a statement which I suppose all telephone subscribers received recently with their bill. It points out that the total tax on the Bell Canada telephone service, which must inevitably be paid by their customers whether the taxes are direct, indirect or merely collected by Bell and remitted to government, amounted to about $44 for each telephone in service last year. They write:

Consider that we have more than six million phones in service and you'll see why we say we deal in "huge" numbers.

The tax per phone has increased by 90 per cent since 1960. This rate of increase in taxes is four times the rate of increase in general operating costs over the same decade.

This is a typical example of how high taxes affect business, because one cannot do much business now unless one has a telephone, at least one. But with one telephone you will be stuck with $44 worth of taxes which you have to pass on to your customers.

Automotive transportation I think is considered a business necessity for the transportation of goods. What happens at present? For example, from 1955 to 1970 the oil companies got three cents less for each gallon of gasoline that they produced than they did 15 years ago. The filling station operators who distribute the gasoline receive about the same as they did 15 years ago. Federal taxes have gone up by more than half a cent per gallon in that time, and other taxes have gone up by 6 cents a gallon, with the result that now, although the industry is so efficient that the costs of production and distribution have not increased in that period, the cost of a gallon of gasoline, which is an essential element of production, has gone up sharply.

I could go on, but I want to make the point that high taxes have an inhibiting effect on industry, and when I say industry I mean business in general down to a person who is self-employed. It is harder and harder for Canadians to compete in world markets or to continue in a business which might have been prosperous under similar circumstances if the tax load were not as high. We cannot avoid taxing the means of production, and this is very unfortunate because it makes us uncompetitive in world markets.

We still feel that we live in an affluent society and should have the newest cars and everything we need. But how do we pay for this if we do not export competitively in world markets goods that have a high element of employment, that create many jobs? We are doing it less and less successfully. We are blessed with a tremendous hoard of natural resources, so we export them. They take a minimum of work and that keeps international payments in balance. But the result is that the Canadian dollar is relatively higher, compared with other currencies, than it would be if it were a measure of our competitiveness as it should be. This vicious circle makes it more difficult for us to compete in world markets, as the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) pointed out so clearly the other day. The kind of life we are living as Canadians can be compared to the life of a farmer who could not make ends meet and decided to pay the grocery bill by selling some of his acreage every year.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker(Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, September 30, 1971.

The House met at 2 p.m.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, of Frank Duff Moores, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, by resignation.

Accordingly I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

PROPOSED TRANSITIONAL PAYMENT UNDER STABILIZATION BILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

This matter concerns the confusion caused by the propaganda put out by the staff of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) with respect to the $100 million transitional payment proposed under Bill C-244.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh):

That this House instructs Information Canada to inform the wheat producers of western Canada—now owed over $90 million by the government for storage costs under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act—that the substitute one-shot $100 million payment proposed under Bill C-244 will be diluted in its distribution among producers of oats, barley, rye, flax, rapeseed and other miscellaneous crops.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's proposed motion, moved as it is under the provisions of Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED AMCHITKA NUCLEAR TEST—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of Standing Order 43 to move a motion. It is similar to the motion proposed yesterday by my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson), and its urgency arises from the fact that within the next few days the President of the United States is to make a final decision on the proposed underground test at Amchitka Island.

The Canadian government and, more specifically, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), have already expressed Canada's reservations about this proposed test. At this time I think it is important that this House, opposition as well as government members, indicate to President Nixon that we are unanimous and united in our concern about this and any such future tests by any nation.

I would propose that this House formally record its grave concern at continued nuclear weapons testing, wherever such testing may take place; that it regrets the recent high yield underground test in the Soviet Union; that it expresses its hope that the United States government will reconsider its plans to carry out a test on Amchitka Island; and that it strongly reaffirms its support of the efforts being made in the United Nations by Canada and other countries to get international agreement to ban all underground nuclear weapons tests.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Essex. I must say that at first glance there does not appear to be a formal motion, unless I take the words of the last paragraph as intended to be the beginning of a motion. If this is the situation—the hon. member indicates that it is—then of course the motion can be put only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. McIntosh: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES FOR REMOVAL OF U.S. IMPORT SURTAX

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the United States Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. John Connally, in his speech to the International Monetary Fund this morning to the effect that the United States will be prepared to remove its 10 per cent additional levy on dutiable imports if other governments make tangible progress in coming weeks in dismantling their trade barriers and permitting the establishment of realistic currency exchange rates, has the Canadian government indicated to the United States government any willingness to make moves or negotiate in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not since the statement was made, Mr. Speaker; it has just come to our attention now. But the House knows that in the past few weeks, and even before, our ministers and officials have been telling the United States that the 10 per cent surcharge should not apply to us, and that we had already done the things mentioned in Mr. Connally's statement to which the hon. member has just referred.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, since Mr. Connally has indicated that the United States government is willing to negotiate regarding this matter on a bilateral basis with any country which so desires, is it the intention of the government in the near future to sit down in a session of hard bargaining with the United States government with a view to having the 10 per cent surcharge removed as soon as possible, and will the Prime Minister be willing to participate in these negotiations in order that Canada's position may have the best chance of being understood?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the confidence he has expressed in my negotiating powers.

Mr. Hees: It is a lack of confidence in your ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: All I can do is repeat that this type of discussion has been going on for some weeks. I am not sure whether Secretary Connally wants to embark on a different type of bilateral negotiation, but certainly we have been making representations on our behalf to the United States for some time.

Mr. Hees: I have a final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Obviously it would be a good idea to get in touch with Mr. Connally to find out what he does mean. Is it not a fact that one of the principal reasons Canada has not been able to obtain an exemption from the 10 per cent surcharge is the very poor relations between Canada and the United States which this government has engendered during the past year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is in the form of an argument.

GRAIN

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—POSITION IN LIGHT OF REPORTED LEGAL ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): In the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports that four grain farmers in Saskatchewan have filed a motion in federal court in the city of Regina for a writ of mandamus to have the Minister of Finance implement the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, will he now instruct the Minister of Finance to implement the terms of this act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of doing that. Beyond saying that the Minister of Finance and other members of the government will obey any order of the court, there is nothing further to be said at this time if the matter is before the courts, as the hon. member has just said.

Mr. Benjamin: Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that this kind of action before the courts does not preclude the Minister of Finance from making the payments under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMMEDIATE PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—SPLITTING OF STABILIZATION BILL TO FACILITATE TRANSITIONAL PAYMENTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board whether, in view of the reports referred to by my colleague, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, he would urge the Minister of Finance to fulfil the requirements of the law under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and make these required payments immediately, and is he giving further consideration to splitting Bill C-244 in order that transitional payments can be made immediately?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members know that the situation is perfectly clear. We will indeed make those payments if a decision is made that we cannot proceed with Bill C-244 because of the obstruction of the opposition in not letting it come to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—LEGAL ADVICE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In light of the Minister of Justice's admission of responsibility for omitting the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act from the Revised Statutes, can he inform the House whether he first advised the cabinet to withhold payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

An hon. Member: Answer yes or no.

Mr. Hees: Don't be shy.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, since I could not get a response from the minister to my first question, may I ask another supplementary. At that time did he consult with his legal advisers on the legality of withholding these payments to the prairie grain producers?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking me for advice I may have given within cabinet. I submit to Your Honour that I am protected by the rules of this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: You can't have it both ways, John.

An hon. Member: The minister cannot hide behind any fifth amendment.

Mr. Lundrigan: That's pretty weak, John.

ADEQUATE SUPPLY OF MILK FOR CHEESE PRODUCTION

Mr. Speaker: I have recognized the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Could he tell the House whether production for the 1971 dairy season has been high enough so far to allow a sufficient production of cheese to satisfy the needs of the country, or whether the Canadian Dairy Commission has been forced to import a certain quantity of milk?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no, the dairy commission will not be obliged to import any milk. Some specialty cheeses have come in for a long time but, I am happy to say that the domestic market in Canada has improved and that there has been a satisfactory increase in the price of cheese and of other dairy products.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EARLIER DATE THAN DECEMBER FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—PROPOSALS TO PROVINCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of more consultation with the provinces about rising unemployment and special programs to fight unemployment this winter, can the Prime Minister indicate whether further attempts have been made to arrive at an earlier conference date with the provinces in order that there may be effective collaboration and, hopefully, participation in programs that will be put forward to fight this serious problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the conference I instructed the secretary of the conference to make a renewed attempt at communicating with the provincial governments and provincial premiers to see if some of the set dates some had objected to earlier were now open and if they had changed their minds and could come at an earlier date. I have done this just recently and have had no report yet.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In this further communication to the provinces, have the Prime Minister or his staff also made it clear that this conference will be specifically on special programs dealing with unemployment and that the federal government will be putting forward specific proposals for consideration, and perhaps even putting them forward before the meeting takes place so that the provinces may adequately consider the implications for their own responsibilities?

Mr. Trudeau: I indicated to the premiers when I wrote to them, I believe on the twenty-seventh of this month or perhaps earlier—I do not remember the exact date—that this subject would be one of those we would want to see on the agenda. I cannot say at this time what agenda will be agreed to by all the governments, but I did put this proposal to them. Concerning proposals we might make on that item of the agenda, I can only repeat what I have told the House previously. If there is any action we can take sooner, we will take it sooner. If we have any announcements to make to the provinces, we will decide whether to put them to the provinces in preliminary documents or whether to put them to them at the time of the conference.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Could the Prime Minister indicate whether specific proposals have yet been made to the provinces or whether the federal government has yet responded to some of the specific proposals presented to the federal government over the last few months?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question will have to be more specific regarding what proposals have been put to us over the last few months. I am sure that a fair number of proposals might have come from a great number of sources. I cannot offhand answer yes or no to that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a further supplementary and then recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will be a bit more specific and ask the Prime Minister whether there has been any response to important cost-sharing programs, such as welfare programs under the Canada Assistance Plan where there is a limitation on the participation factor, or whether there has been any response with regard to the Canada Manpower programs where there are some real limitations with regard to entry or re-entry into those programs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Canada Assistance Plan is quite wide in its participation. I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare has always indicated he is prepared to discuss with the provinces ways in which payments can be made differently if the provinces change their programs within the framework of CAP. With regard to manpower retraining, I am not aware of any proposals we have made to the provinces recently on that score.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED AMCHITKA NUCLEAR TEST—SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT MOTION EXPRESSING OPPOSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of a letter I sent him last Friday, September 24. I was assured in a letter from one of his secretaries, Mr. Lawless, dated September 28, that my letter would be immediately drawn to the attention of the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister considered the suggestion in my letter that the government propose a motion with regard to the proposed American nuclear blast at Amchitka in order that there may be a multiparty expression of opposition to that test?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should have thought it would be obvious to the House that the government side is prepared to have such a motion put because I understood no one objected to the motions which were put yesterday and today by two of our members. If I understood correctly, the opposition to such a motion being put came from the Conservative benches.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that on earlier occasions there was also opposition from the government benches when members of my party moved similar motions, in view of the fact that a government motion would not require unanimous consent and could be put on the order paper and debated in the normal way, and in view of the importance of this question, I ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to place a government motion on the order paper with regard to the Amchitka nuclear test without waiting for unanimous consent?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the House will realize that the position of the government has already been made known in the House, in the United States and in other forums such as the United Nations. On the matter of having a motion from the government which would be debated, I suggest that we would require some guarantee from all opposition parties that the debate would be relatively short.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that the members of the New Democratic Party are in agreement with this. Indeed, the leader of that party in his letter to me said that perhaps the motion could be passed without debate or with very little debate. Certainly we on this side had hoped this would be so when the hon. member for Essex put his motion to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

STATEMENT BY NOVA SCOTIA DIRECTOR INDICATING CHANGES RESPECTING GRANTS—PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS DURING WINTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Was the department director in the province of Nova Scotia voicing departmental policy when he indicated in his speech of Tuesday last that there would be changes made in the application formula under the Regional Development Incentives Act with regard to grants to industries?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: Are changes being planned in the strategy of the Regional Development Incentives Act in response to the Prime Minister's request to the minister to come up with programs to help create jobs during the coming winter months?

• (2:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, those are different things. If the Prime Minister has spoken of special programs for next winter, those do not necessarily have a link with the department's programs.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Does the minister propose to change the formula for the application of the Regional Development Incentives Act in order to expedite the program with a view to having a crash program this winter to create jobs?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I believe a distinction should be made between the program concerning regional disparity, which is a permanent program whose purpose is to ensure better balance between the various economic regions of Canada, and programs that could be established to stimulate the general economy of this country.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MONEYS ALLEGED TO BE OWING TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. INDIAN AFFAIRS

RETROACTIVE PAY ALLEGED TO BE OWING TO CARETAKERS OF DAY SCHOOLS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I want to pose a question to the Minister of Justice similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Hillsborough. I ask the Minister of Justice, inasmuch as he is a staunch upholder of the law, whether he will cause an inquiry to be made into the action of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and of Treasury Board in denying Indian caretakers of Indian day schools their proper retroactive pay. This question involves at least 120 or 130 people and perhaps half a million dollars in back pay. Will the minister look into this situation from the point of view of justice to the people concerned?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The primary responsibility lies with my colleague, but I will take the matter up with him.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—SUGGESTED MEETING TO DEVISE PLAN TO AVOID FURTHER SHUTDOWNS—EMERGENCY TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR THOSE LAID OFF

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Having regard to the continuing crisis in the pulp and paper industry across Canada, a crisis which is worsening as further paper mills shut down their operations, would the Prime Minister direct that a meeting be convened between responsible departments of government, the Pulp and Paper Association and representatives of the labour movement to discuss the situation and, hopefully, to plan a course of action which would avoid further shutdowns with their adverse effect on unemployment figures and the economy generally?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I could answer for the Prime Minister. I have already told the House the other day in answer to the hon. member that such a meeting between ministers and leaders of the industry has already been planned. It will take place in the coming week after more preparatory work has been done.

Mr. Marshall: Taking account of the recent blows to the industry, particular in Quebec and Newfoundland, mainly due to loss of markets, is the minister considering the feasibility of establishing marketing boards under federal government auspices as suggested in some provinces and in some quarters?

Mr. Pepin: I am not in a position to confirm or deny any of those reports. I can only say that a number of suggestions, a number of possibilities, are being investigated by my department at this time.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister advise the House whether, having regard to the continuing lay-offs highlighted by the recent announcements of Domtar and Bowaters, his department is examining the effects of these lay-offs with a view to introducing emergency training programs as a means of providing alternative employment for those who lose their jobs?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In connection with any lay-off, in the ordinary course an examination is made to see what alternative employment is available to the persons concerned, either with the company or somewhere else, as well as to determine in which cases training might be the most suitable alternative available for certain employees.

PROGRAMS TO ASSIST COMPANIES TO AVOID SHUTDOWNS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a recent survey undertaken by Canadian Press shows there has been an alarming increase in layoffs caused by plant shutdowns, will the Prime Minister indicate to the House what specific programs the government has in mind to deal with this situation? I am thinking in terms of tax incentives which would assist the industries concerned and alleviate the prospect of severe unemployment this winter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have already answered in the House that the government is considering what programs it might implement to alleviate this situation. When a decision has been reached it will be announced in the House at the proper time.

Mr. Alexander: Bearing in mind the growing lack of confidence in the economy, can the Prime Minister assure us that the statement which is to be made will be made in the very near future, perhaps in the next three or four days, in order that the confidence in the economy which seems to be lacking right now may be regained?

Mr. Trudeau: It will be made as soon as possible, if it is to be made.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer this question immediately. As you know, this matter falls under the civil service jurisdiction. I shall find out what the situation is from the chairman of the Public Service Commission and transmit the information to the hon. member.

HOGS—NECESSITY FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT—POSSIBLE LEVEL

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has it now been determined that a deficiency payment will be required with respect to hogs this year because of the low prices realized for this product? If so, what is the level to which the deficiency payment will have to rise in order to bring up the general level of prices for the year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): A calculation will be made at the end of the year. Certainly, if the price falls below 80 per cent of the 10-year average, a payment will be made. I can advise the House that the department is making the calculations week by week. The 80 per cent level of the 10-year average is $24.14, so if the price falls below that there will be a mandatory payment up to that amount at least.

IMMIGRATION

CIRCUMSTANCES OF ENTRY INTO CANADA OF HEAD OF BLACK PANTHERS AND TWO OTHER TERRORISTS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for, jointly, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Have either or both of these ministers ordered special inquiries to be made with respect to the circumstances in which one Mr. H. Newton, head of the Black Panther movement in the United States, and two other United States terrorists whose names are on the prohibited list obtained entry into Canada, stayed here for a week and negotiated with the Chinese Embassy for permission to make a special visit to Communist China?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have some information with regard to at least part of the hon. gentleman's question, though I do not have any confirmation of the entry or way of entry of Mr. Newton into this country.

Mr. Nesbitt: I wonder whether the Solicitor General might have some comments to make on this matter as it affects the RCMP?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the fact that this person had any public activities in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: In view of the Solicitor General's lack of information on this subject perhaps I should direct my further supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who at least seems to know something about it. Will extra precautions be taken at once to prevent further incidents of a similar nature occurring? This is hardly the time at which to further exacerbate relations with the United States.

Mr. Lang: Very full precautions are in fact taken at the present time in an attempt to ensure that those whose names are on the prohibited list are noticed as they approach the border and are dealt with in an appropriate fashion. It is, of course, difficult to do this in every case, bearing in mind that there are 37 million or so crossings each year.

The minister is aware that litigation is presently prohibiting the distribution of spare parts and fulfilment of warranties with respect to Russian tractors by the Canadian distributor. Can the minister tell us whether the government is seeking to find another source of supply for these parts, lack of which is causing ever-increasing hardship to farmers who purchased these tractors?

In view of the fact that all those veterans who are double leg amputees and who have applied for the new exceptional incapacity allowances have had their applications turned down, and in view of the concern expressed about this matter at the Edmonton convention of the War Amputees of Canada, which I believe the minister attended, would he look into the matter in the hope that the intentions of the veterans affairs committee, parliament and the government will be carried out?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Decisions of that nature are taken by the Canadian Pension Commission, Mr. Speaker, which is a quasi-judicial body. In any event, I shall be pleased to look into the matter and report to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue in order to help the discussion of a forthcoming provincial election. In light of the criticism of the Ontario Liberal leader that the development of a foreign investment policy is taking too long and is being done in isolation from any provincial consideration, would the minister tell the House when we might expect publication of his report and whether or not consultation in fact has taken place with the provinces before the enunciation of a policy?

ASSISTANCE TO POTATO GROWERS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Following his meetings with the Ministers of Agriculture of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, is the minister now in a position to make any statement as to the assistance that this government or the three governments jointly might be prepared to give potato growers, especially in those two provinces?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful meeting and there were two or three separate avenues that required further exploration and co-operation among the three departments. I am very hopeful that this will be done, but there is no question in my mind that at least one or a combination of these three methods, which I do not have the time to spell out now, will be put in place and be of assistance to these growers.

Mr. MacLean: May I ask the minister whether he can assure the House that payments of interest and principal which may be due from the potato growers will not be pressed by the Farm Credit Corporation, at least in cases where financial distress exists, until the situation is clarified?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that only requires a restatement of a policy that we now have in effect.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Could he advise the House whether the Quebec government has made representations in view of the difficulties which this industry is currently encountering?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have had some communications with the Quebec government.

ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS IN LIGHT OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that agricultural products are among the hardest hit under the 10 per cent surcharge, and in view of the fact that the employment support bill will provide no direct assistance to agricultural producers affected by the surcharge, what assistance is the government considering giving specifically to help the producers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is not correct to say that Bill C-262 will not provide some assistance to agricultural producers. If the hon. member would look at the speech I made in the House on September 7, reported at page 7587 of Hansard, he would find a complete answer to his question.

Would the minister inform the House whether the refusal of welfare officials in Cornwall to continue payments to persons with long hair constitutes a violation of the Canada Assistance Plan?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a legal or quasi-legal opinion. I would not think that the question as asked is in order.

Mrs. MacInnis: Then may I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister investigate the situation in Cornwall with a view to seeing whether or not there has been a violation of the Canada Assistance Plan and report back to the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

GRANT TO HAMILTON STADIUM FOR ASTROTURF—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING ASSISTANCE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and arises out of the $50,000 grant recently made to the stadium in Hamilton for Astroturf. Does this grant to Hamilton mean that there has been a change in government policy and, if so, will community arenas that want to instal artificial ice plants now qualify for federal assistance?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be aware that expenditures are made on capital projects out of the Fitness and Amateur Sport budget which go to various cities that win the winter games. As far as the Astroturf is concerned, we felt that this was meritorious and are applying this policy across the country in places where it can be shown there could be a tremendous increase in the utilization of such facilities for purposes of amateur sport.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Then does the minister's answer mean that there is one policy for his own riding in Hamilton and another policy for the rest of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will look into the matter, Mr. Speaker. I do know that at the constitutional conference some provision was made to have representatives from that part of the country sit as part of the federal delegation or as federal observers, but I will examine the situation vis-à-vis the forthcoming conference.

Mr. Nielsen: In view of the fact that the invitations that have been extended have referred to representation as an observer only, with really no participation, would the Prime Minister not consider that at a conference of this nature, which is at a somewhat lower level than a constitutional conference, participation might be had in the deliberations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I will give some thought to the matter. The hon. member will realize that these are federal-provincial conferences and that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are not provinces.

IMMIGRATION

PROVISION OF ACCURATE INFORMATION ON CANADIAN ECONOMIC SITUATION TO PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the government taking any new measures to properly inform potential immigrants about the true economic situation here in Canada in light of concern expressed by the Quebec immigration minister that too rosy a picture of Canada is being portrayed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is the constant endeavour of the department to ensure that most correct and up to date information is given to prospective immigrants. Difficulty does occur sometimes because of the time lag between when prospective immigrants visit our offices and come to Canada, but generally speaking the information given has improved in recent months and years.

Mr. Peddle: In view of the fact that the government is telling the people of Canada, and particularly the 500,000 unemployed Canadians, that unemployment is on a downward trend, is the same message of encouragement and comfort being given to potential immigrants?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INAPPROPRIATE ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As our television programs, at the time when children can watch them, are flooded with advertizing designed to sell them all kinds of gadgets, could the minister tell us if measures will be taken to stop the broadcasting of such massive advertising aimed at children and which ultimately puts pressure on parents?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the private broadcasters and advertisers and the CRTC and ourselves have been having a number of discussions on this subject, and I hope an announcement will be forthcoming in the very near future.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—COMPLETION OF EVALUATION—PROGRAMS FOR STUDENT EMPLOYMENT NEXT SUMMER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of reports that enrolment is now down in Canadian universities, could the minister inform the House when the evaluation of the Opportunities for Youth program will be completed so that we may know whether or not part of the reason students are not going back to university is because of financial need?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I must say I do not understand the relation the hon. member wants to establish between the data he has given and his question. I shall try to answer the question. I estimated the assessment report on the project would be ready by mid-October, and I do not think there will be any considerable delay.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Can the minister tell us whether or not his department is now co-ordinating and planning programs for student employment next summer?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the Department of the Secretary of State, as several others, contributes to the studies the government has undertaken in that regard.

FINANCE

ESTABLISHMENT OF REGIONAL STABILIZATION FUND FROM WHICH PROVINCES COULD BORROW

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has the government any immediate plans to set up a regional stabilization fund from which the provinces could borrow in order to spur economic activity in their areas, as I believe was recommended by the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. No immediate plans have been made to set up that type of fund, but the House will remember that last December we did have a proposal which permitted provinces to draw upon funds in quite a substantial amount, I believe $150 million. This was in response to a request which I believe had been made by Quebec to have a regional development fund of the nature the hon. member is describing. So the general aspect of such a fund has been examined by the government. We have rejected certain approaches but have adopted others.

INVESTIGATION OF FAILURE OF BANKS TO PROVIDE GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOANS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister investigate the situation with regard to government guaranteed loans which are supposed to be provided by banks and the dereliction of the banks in providing these loans to the small business sector of the community, such as small business loans, loans to fishermen and farm improvement loans?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not understand the question very clearly, but perhaps if the hon. member would repeat it or let it appear in Hansard I will try to have an answer on another day.

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGATION THAT EDUCATIONAL FACULTIES ARE SECOND RATE AND GOVERNMENT AT FAULT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister tell us what action the government proposes to take in light of the accusation of the executive director of the Science Council that Canada's agricultural faculties are all second rate and that it is the fault of the federal government?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with either contention.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in light of his accusation that the federal government has been monopolizing millions in research funds and starving university researchers, is the government reviewing its spending priorities and policies in this area?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, you cannot answer a question when you do not agree with the premise on which it is based.

PENITENTIARIES

INMATES STILL UNDER SENTENCE BY WARDEN OR OTHER OFFICIALS AS A RESULT OF KINGSTON DISTURBANCE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether there are any inmates in the federal penitentiaries who are still under sentence from either the warden or officials of the penitentiaries as a result of the Kingston situation?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to take that question as notice for the Solicitor General who has just been called out of the House for a few minutes.

GRAIN

ILLEGAL MOVEMENT OF NON-BOARD FEED GRAIN ACROSS PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the evidence of the selling of non-board feed grains at distress prices on the prairies, can the minister inform the House whether there is movement of non-board feed grain across provincial boundaries contrary to Wheat Board regulations.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Maclean: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council if he can inform the House now what business the government proposes to place before Parliament in the immediate future and for the next week if possible?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume discussion of the tax bill. On Monday we will discuss the agricultural stabilization bill. Following that we will return to the tax bill.

I should say that in response to suggestions made earlier I would consider placing on the order paper a government resolution with regard to the Amchitka test if I could have some assurance that when it is called on Monday we would agree to limit the debate so that there would be an opportunity for one speaker for each party to speak briefly. If I could work that out I would be happy to put that motion on the order paper and probably call it on Monday.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, we would welcome the opportunity to discuss this matter on that basis, and I am sure an agreeable formula for the debate can be arrived at.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I make two comments. First, may I say that we too would be glad to negotiate with the government House leader on this matter in the certainty that we can reach a mutually acceptable agreement. The second comment I should like to make is with regard to today's debate which is on a motion in the name of our party. I may say there have been discussions among the House leaders of the four parties and there is agreement that we will not seek any change in the time limit provisions set out in Standing Order 58(13), but there is also agreement that no one ask for or be granted an extension of time so that as many speakers as possible might get the floor today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO STIMULATE THE ECONOMY — SUGGESTED NEW MEASURES

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

This House cannot tolerate any longer the economic policies of the government which have produced massive unemployment that threatens to become more serious this fall and winter; nor can this House tolerate any longer the government's failure to implement policies to reduce Canada's dependence on a single market and to assure a strong and independent Canadian economy.

Therefore this House calls for:

(1) a large scale program, in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities, to provide jobs this winter for the growing army of unemployed;

(2) immediate reduction in taxes, particularly for lower and middle income groups;

(3) further government action to force down interest rates;

(4) large additional funds for housing;

(5) essential anti-pollution measures such as funds to municipalities to build waste-treatment plants and other necessary works; and

(6) introduction of a program designed to protect Canada's future by redirecting trade so that it will not continue to be at the mercy of a single market and by restructuring the economy to free it from foreign domination and control.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the House and to the people of Canada that the present economic events in this country have highlighted two urgent facts facing the Canadian people. One is the unfortunate likelihood that unemployment this winter will be at least as severe as last year and probably a great deal more serious. We face the possibility of three quarters of a million or more Canadians out of work in the winter months unless steps to meet the situation are taken by the government without delay. The second fact, which the Nixon economic policies have underlined, is the danger facing our country's future if our economy continues under foreign control and our welfare continues to depend on the benevolence of Washington and of the multinational corporations. For years the NDP has warned of these dangers. At last their existence has been acknowledged by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). But there is still no suggestion of policies to free our economy from the straightjacket of foreign domination. I want to deal with each of those facts, as I call them, in turn.

I want to say to the Prime Minister, who is here at the moment, and to the government that as I study the situation I see that instead of presenting to Parliament a program to deal with the present unemployment crisis we have had from the Minister of Finance pollyanna forecasts of which every one has proven wrong. I suggest on a study of the record that either the Minister of Finance should fire his forecasters or he should fire himself for being an easy prey to the defensive, bureaucratic optimism. On second thought, I think perhaps both should happen, the Minister of Finance should fire his advisers and someone should fire him for misleading the Parliament and the country.

When we face this emergency it is important to recall only a few of the minister's alleged predictions. On January 30, 1969, the Minister of Finance said "the latest monthly figures have fallen below 5 per cent", and having said that went on to paint a rosy picture for the rest of that year. What were the facts? The facts were that in October of 1969 the unemployment rate went beyond 5 per cent, that in May, 1970, it went over 6 per cent, and that from May until today it has stayed at over 6 per cent continually for 16 months.

Let me give a second instance. On November 12, 1970,—and hon. members and the people of Canada should listen to this with attention—the Minister of Finance said that unemployment had reached its peak. Everyone in this House knows that since that fatuous statement the unemployment situation has continued bad and has grown worse. On September 7 of this year the Minister of Finance said: "Unemployment will continue to decline". Unfortunately for Canada, one week later the Minister of Finance was shown to be wrong again.

I cite these examples—and I want to come to some statements made by the Prime Minister himself in a moment—because they underline the complacency and the insensitivity of this government toward the major problem that has faced the Canadian people for a year and a half at least. These are merely a few of the minister's pearls. It occurred to me as I was writing my notes that our Minister of Finance has not merely created a credibility gap, he has created a credibility desert. He can never be believed again on any of his statements about the future position of Canada's economy.

The Prime Minister himself and the government, particularly after the disastrous unemployment figures were revealed for the month of August of this year, went on a search to manufacture statistical excuses for the serious unemployment which we have seen in August, and that too in my submission is most reprehensible. I said the other day, in commenting on an answer which the Prime Minister gave me to a question, that he was playing games with the unemployment situation. It was true then, and the points I want to raise now underline the validity and the relevance of my statement.

The Prime Minister discovered, apparently for the first time, in answers to questions in the House in recent days and on a television program the other day that the young, the people aged 14 to 19, were particularly affected by unemployment in this country. Indeed, he said on a number of occasions that this was an unexpected development. I say to the Prime Minister I find that to be an astonishing statement. Indeed, as a member of this House and as a citizen of Canada, I find it embarrassing that the head of our government should make a statement so patently, factually wrong. If he found that to be an unexepected phenomenon, I do not know where he has been living in the last few months. The facts are that in August, 1971, the number of unemployed between the ages of 14 and 19 was 132,000, and the percentage of unemployed it represented was 29 per cent. But in July, a month earlier, the number was 184,000 and the percentage was 35.8 per cent. In June of this year, two months earlier, the number was 197,000 and the percentage was also 35.8 per cent. In fact, the number and the percentage of unemployment in August among the group between 14 and 19 was lower in August than it had been in June and July.

If the Prime Minister's advisers had taken the trouble to brief him on this, he would have found that the percentage of unemployed among the 14 to 19 group has always been high in the month of August. In the years 1968, 1969 and 1970 they were a little lower than in 1971, and in the years 1965, 1966 and 1967 they were a little higher than in August, 1971. But always the number and the percentage of the unemployed in the 14 to 19 years group in the month of August have been a very large proportion. It is astonishing to me that he should find it an unexpected phenomenon that became evident only in August of this year.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly.

Mr. Trudeau: I wonder if the hon. member realizes that I was talking about the participation rate of that age group, and the participation rate as compared between August of one year and August of the succeeding year? I wonder if he realizes that I was talking about the participation rate of that group in this August compared with the participation rate last August, which was substantially lower?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Prime Minister deal both with the proportion of unemployed in that age group and the participation rate, and I say to the Prime Minister that if he looks at the participation figures closely he will find that although the participation rate of this age group in August, 1971, was somewhat—not substantially—higher than in August, 1970, it really is not of very great significance when you consider that the participation of the total labour force was a little bit lower this year than last year. I suggest to the Prime Minister that it is not a new phenomenon, not a new development that was suddenly to be discovered, nor by any means was it the most important part of the development.

I am interested merely in underlining the fact that the government, instead of recognizing the severity of the unemployment crisis and saying, "It is bad; let us do something about it," is constantly looking for excuses, as indicated by either the pollyanna statements of the Minister of Finance or the astonishing and embarrassing statements of the Prime Minister.

If I widen this youth group, and I deal with unemployment among the ages 14 to 24, the following facts—I do not often cite statistics but it is important in this case to put them on the record—emerge. In August, 1971, the number unemployed between ages 14 to 24 was 240,000. Their proportion of the total unemployment was 52.7 per cent. In July, the number was 293,000 and the proportion was 57 per cent. In June, the number was 313,000 and the proportion was 56.7 per cent.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, as I was preparing my notes I remembered, without going back to Hansard, that each time I have referred to unemployment in this country—and I am sure I am right in saying that each time other members of my party as well as members of the Conservative party who have referred to this unemployment—I always pointed out that the largest group suffering as a result of the government's economic policies and as a result of the massive unemployment was the age group between 14 and 19, and the age group between 19 and 24. If I went back through Hansard I could find references to this group in my statements, and in my questions to ministers of the Crown at least a dozen times in the last 12 or 16 months. It is not an unexpected phenomenon. It is an obvious thing that has been happening for the last two years. On various occasions we emphasized that when you throw young people out of school and university into society without any future, any hope, you are creating great dangers for society. I have emphasized that this may be of particular relevance to the situation in the province of Quebec. I say it is not true that this is a new phenomenon, and let not the government try to peddle it as new and unexpected. To do that is either ignorance or dishonesty and, Mr. Speaker, I leave it to you and other Members of Parliament to take your pick.

The government has indulged in other excuses for the present situation. The Prime Minister referred to one of them. Members of the government have talked about an immense increase in the labour force this year. They have talked about increases in the participation rate. On the CBC program to which I referred the Prime Minister said, "There has been more job creation than there ever has been in our economy." Mr. Speaker, without going into the statistics in detail I say that those statements are wrong. They are statistically and historically false, and they are merely a shabby excuse for the government not having taken steps earlier.

If you study them, the statistics show that even when the employment picture was much better than it has been in the last few months, for example, from August, 1964, to August, 1967, when unemployment was somewhere around 3 per cent to 4½ per cent, instead of being over 6 per cent as it is now, the growth in the labour force was much higher, and the participation rate was necessarily higher, otherwise we would have had more unemployment. And the number of new jobs created in each of those years was very considerably higher than the number of new jobs created during this present economic crisis.

The reason that I have referred to these statistics is that I want if I can, through you, Sir, through Members of Parliament, through the press—if they are interested—to nail down once and for all these excuses of the Prime Minister, of the Minister of Finance, and of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) as being false. They are statistically wrong. They are deliberate excuses to hide the inaction and lack of program on the part of the government. Let no one in Canada be fooled by any of these games played by an insensitive government during a highly dangerous and critical unemployment situation. It is obvious to everyone in Canada, except apparently the government, that we face an emergency this winter, and the way to deal with the emergency is to have an emergency program to create jobs this winter. That is why the very first point of the motion I had the honour to move requests that the government immediately undertake a massive program to create jobs this winter.

That cannot be done by the federal government alone. In order to accomplish it, the plans of provincial governments are needed, and the plans of municipal governments. It is not possible for the federal government alone to create a sufficient number of jobs. That can be accomplished only if the provinces and the municipalities are given an opportunity, and are given the funds, the finances, to add to the works that are needed to create the jobs. And they need time, Mr. Speaker. This is why I have been so critical of the Prime Minister about the federal-provincial conferences. And I was delighted to hear this afternoon that at last he found it necessary, or he agreed, or whatever the term may be—if I understood his answers correctly—that he found it desirable to write the provincial governments and ask if they can now attend a conference at an earlier date than December 6 which had previously been agreed to by them.

I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister may have to leave the chamber. I am sure he has important work to do, but in the Prime Minister's presence I want to say that my impression of what he has been saying throughout the last number of days on this issue of the federal-provincial conference, from reading the letters that have been made public, is that at no time had the Prime Minister called the provinces to a special conference to deal with unemployment this winter. The Prime Minister called for a conference on non-constitutional matters, on general economic matters. Maybe one is necessary, but at no time did he say to the provinces, "We face an unemployment emergency this winter. We must have a conference on this point. I invite you to such a conference."

The Prime Minister has now left the chamber, Mr. Speaker, and I have to say in his absence that had he had the understanding and the sense of urgency that as the leader of the Canadian government he ought to have had, he should have issued such an invitation for an emergency conference to deal specifically and only with unemployment. I am confident that no government in this country, not even the government of Ontario which is in the midst of an election campaign, would have failed to come to such a conference if such a conference had been called by the Prime Minister of Canada. It is only because the negotiations were for a conference on general economic matters that the normal negotiations about a date and the normal considerations about convenience were taken into account. I am confident, and I repeat, that if the provinces and the municipalities had been called to a conference to deal specifically with the threat of severe unemployment this winter, as they should have been, that conference would now be taking place and not be delayed another day.

The reason for urgency in this regard is obvious to every thinking person. Indeed, you do not need full wit to understand this. Some of those who have less than full wit on the other side could easily understand it as well. They must understand that no province or municipality could participate in a job-creating program for this winter unless the plans are made now. You cannot create jobs for November, December, January, February and March if the programs and plans are announced in October, November or December. You could create jobs for April, May, June and July of next year, but not for this winter at such a late conference. With the knowledge of the facts known to every member of this House and every member of the country, I charge this government once again with complete—perhaps that is an exaggeration—with disastrous unconcern about the unemployment crisis this winter, and I charge it with failure to take at least the initial steps to deal with it by bringing the provinces and the municipalities together to create the necessary programs.

There have been hints by the Prime Minister and other members of the government, and I have seen stories in the newspapers, which suggest that the government is considering producing a program designed, as the Prime Minister has said, to deal with unemployment this winter. If that is done without consultation with the provinces and municipalities it will likely be inadequate. If such an announcement is made, and if the program is at all adequate, I will be pleased and happy to welcome it on behalf of my party. Indeed, I hope the announcement will be made during this debate or, if not during this debate, that it will be announced within the next day or two. Every day's delay in the announcement of that program will make it more difficult for the provinces and the municipalities, as well as public and private corporations, to respond and meet the unemployment crisis this winter.

My motion sets out some other elements which are needed in such a program. I will not bother repeating them in my speech. They are not original suggestions, they have been made on many occasions, not only by me and colleagues in my party, but by other members and economists across the country. They include such things as reducing the income tax for the lower and middle income groups, lowering the interest rate, a massive injection of funds to build the homes which are needed across the country and a massive injection of funds to municipalities to fight pollution in their environment and to build waste treatment plants and other such things. All these things, such as forcing down the interest rates in this country, are known and must be done immediately. They are not original and I do not claim originality for them. They are urgently required and must be urgently applied.

The second point my motion makes and that I ask members of Parliament to take into consideration is that our present crisis is related directly to our dependence on a single market and to the foreign control of our economy. It is not only the unemployment crisis that is involved. That crisis was created by the government itself as a result of its phony war against inflation or its cruel policy of creating unemployment. Our government did that itself and it needed little help. It is now getting a little help from the Nixon economic policy. Undoubtedly, our unemployment situation is threatened further by the effect of the 10 per cent surcharge on the export of manufactured goods and some agricultural goods in this country.

This additional trouble we have and the general fear which faces Canada are directly tied to the fact that we are in a straitjacket of foreign domination over our economy. I am not saying that were we not in that situation we would not suffer some consequences as a result of the Washington policy. Obviously we would, and obviously every country in the western world has suffered from it, but we would not have the same situation we have in Canada, which is more serious and more frightening than in any other western country, if it were not for our ties to and controls by the United States economy. I appeal to the government and, if I may do so without being presumptuous, to the people of Canada, to awaken to the dangers and act now to start a new orientation for the Canadian economy so we may be free of foreign domination and free from reliance on a single market for our trade. I know this is a long term thing. This cannot be done in the course of a year or, indeed, in the course of five years. This will require a commitment over a period of years, but it must be started now.

The present emergency in Canada has underlined the importance of the problem, and this is the time to begin. This is why it is incomprehensible and heartbreaking to me that we are still waiting for a government statement on its policy on foreign ownership and a statement as to what will be done vis-à-vis the present situation and the threat of the United States economic policy extending beyond the 10 per cent surcharge to DISC and other protectionist policies. It is obvious that Liberal continentalism dies hard if it dies at all. If this government continues in its continentalist mendicant poise toward the United States this country's political independence, as well as its economic independence, is in a very serious and precarious state.

The Prime Minister said the other day that if the United States wants Canada to be merely a source for its natural resources something will have to be done about the situation. Again I am astonished by the Prime Minister's apparent lack of understanding. I can hardly believe it because he is a highly intelligent and well-trained man and should understand Canada's economic position over the years. He says "if" the United States wants to use us as a resource source; it has used Canada as that and nothing else for decades. We have always played this role for the United States. We have always been the country upon which the United States has relied for its natural resources. It has yanked out our non-renewable resources and shipped them to the United States, in most cases without refining, smelting or dealing with them in any other way in Canada.

Foreign control and reliance upon the United States market for our trade has been a fact of Canadian economic life for literally decades in our history, and that the Prime Minister should still say "if" that is the case is an embarrassment which I as a member of this Parliament have to regret. We must start moving in a new direction. We must say to the people of Canada we are ready for new directions in our economy, and that as legislators and as a government we are ready to proceed in that new direction to set a national purpose in respect of our self-reliance in the Canadian economy, independence from foreign control and domination, and that we start that process today not next year or ten years from now. I am confident that the Canadian people are ready to take that step. If that step involves some temporary dislocation, as it undoubtedly would, and some temporary costs, as it undoubtedly would, we have the ingenuity and capacity to reduce the dislocation and cost to a minimum and to do the things that are necessary for Canada's future independence.

[Mr. Lewis.]

In my last two minutes—I am informed that is all I have left—I wish to make two points. First, there are obvious steps that must be taken if we are to gain control of the Canadian economy. We must de-emphasize the export of non-renewable resources by removing the tax exemptions and holidays we are now giving to mining and petroleum corporations and by putting a surcharge on the export of oil and gas and similar, non-renewable resources that are in strong demand. We must step up the sale of agricultural and forest products. We must build labour intensive industries. We must rationalize our secondary manufacturing in this country. Above all, we must seek new trading partners, particularly in the developing nations of the world, by buying their commodities and extending to them long term credits. We must stop foreign take overs in this country. We must control foreign equity investment in this country and set up an agency to monitor foreign corporations and make sure that their actions are in the interests of this country.

My last point is this. The time has come for the people of Canada and the members of this parliament to renew their faith in our country. As one travels across this great country one never fails to be impressed. I never fail to be impressed by the immense wealth with which we have been endowed and by Canada's great beauty. I have never visited any other part of the world without feeling that there is equal beauty in this country. There is great wealth and great beauty, as I say. One never fails to be impressed by the great people that are in this country from coast to coast. A country as wealthy and as beautiful as this one, and with people as great as ours, can stand on its own feet. The time has come for us to do just that.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have the opportunity of being associated with the motion in the name of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) which incorporates many suggestions that have come from official opposition members and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) during the last several months.

While reading a few notes in the course of the preliminary preparation for my part in today's debate, I came across a passage printed in Canadian Forum, back in May, 1964. It impressed me so much that I should like to put in on the record. The passage reads as follows:

> Our politicians occasionally talk about unemployment, but neither the Federal nor the Provincial authorities have ever categorically declared that they would assume the responsibility of fixing the problem. In fact, the country awaits from all levels of government the elaboration of a new and adequate policy. Among other things, it is inconceivable that politicians should continue to dread budgetary deficits and that, even when resorting to them, they should continue to pay homage to the sacred cow of a balanced budget.

It continues at length in the same vein and then concludes as follows:

In effect, such policies would require either a readjustment of the external value of the dollar or a strong injection of foreign capital. Because devaluation and large scale investment from abroad are found to be unacceptable from the nationalistic point of view, the government rejects truly expansionist measures and relies upon ineffectual expedients.

That quotation comes from something that was written by the Committee for Political Realism, and the author was Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lundrigan: That was back in 1964. At that time we heard from a Canadian who, theoretically and intellectually, identified with the problem he raised.

Lest anybody should mistake the concern of the party I represent and of other opposition parties regarding the unemployment problems of Canada, I should like to indicate the number of times that we have raised questions in the House since September 7 on the economic problems facing the nation. These have nothing to do with agriculture, nothing to do with regional development, nothing to do with fisheries and local problems. They had all to do with the national, economic problems facing the nation. For instance, on September 27 we asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues 23 questions on this subject. On September 8 there were 12 questions, right on this subject. On September 13 there were 26; on September 16, the day of the release of the highly unfavourable unemployment statitistics, there were 32 questions, for a total of 320 questions. That is the number of questions that have been asked from September 7 until the present—the figures include questions asked yesterday—on the economic problems facing the nation. If I had time, and I do not, I should have liked to catalogue all the displays of callousness that have come from the mouths of the Prime Minister and his colleagues in responding to these questions. We have had deceit; we have had distortion; we have had concealment; we have had pretence; we have had hypocrisy and insensitivity; we have had confusion and we have had pious fraud, as far as I am concerned, and deliberate deception on the part of the Prime Minister and his colleagues regarding this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: That is what we were given in response to 320 questions that we asked on economic problems facing all Canadians, and especially the half million people who are presently unemployed.

On September 16 a number of questions were asked about the hard core unemployed. The Prime Minister used that term, we did not. He seemed to be the one who identified with it. I am, of course, referring to the 106,000 people who have been unemployed for more than six months and who make up over 20 per cent of the total number of the unemployed. Let me read what the Prime Minister said when asked about what the government intended to do to help these people. As reported at page 7867 of Hansard, he said:

—I believe the hon. member is referring to the hard-core unemployed and my understanding is that their number has decreased rather significantly in the past month.

I should like to say that, if you take the "hard core unemployed" compared to all those who are unemployeed, there has been a considerable increase in the number of hard core unemployed in the past four months.

Second, if the Prime Minister wants to present facts, let him give facts on unemployment as published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1971. We can see that for the past year there has been a considerable increase in the number of hard core unemployed and in the number of Canadians unemployed. If you want to go back for five years the figures would be lower. The Prime Minister tried to decieve the Canadian people by saying that we had had a reduction in the number of unemployed. I do not doubt for a moment that if you allowed him to bring in his own statistics, he could prove that to be the case. Nevertheless, on September 16 questions were asked about the astounding increase in the unemployment figures for the month of August, the largest increase in that month since 1946. The Prime Minister's response, as reported at page 7864 was:

There has been the biggest surge in job creation ever in the spring and summer months, and this has translated itself into a lowering of the unemployment figures for people 25 years old and over.

Having heard the remarks of the man I should like to be able to trust, I looked at the statistics and learned, for example, that if one compares the figures for 1970 and 1971, one will see that there has been an actual decrease in in the number of people over 25 years of age in the labour force of one-half of one per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis. In other words, people over 25 during the period the Prime Minister was referring to were actually withdrawing from the labour force. Clearly, there must be a tremendous amount of hidden unemployment that never shows up in statistics. In the period in question, that is, between August, 1970 and the same month in 1971, the increase in employment among those people was only one-fifth of one percentage point on a seasonally adjusted basis. I think statisticians will agree that is hardly statistically significant.

I could quote more of what the Prime Minister said regarding unemployment among young people. On the sixteenth we raised questions about unemployment, and the Prime Minister suggested that there has been a cut in unemployment and that the only problem was among young people; that was where the unemployment situation was the most grave. I believe, in responding to a question by the hon. member for York South, he said that he was referring to the fact that unemployment has increased because of the "participation"—that is the word he used—of young people in the work force during the month of August. On that basis he is taking his consolation. In response to a general question on September 16, he said and I quote:

Therefore the addition in the figures is caused essentially, I would say, only by the people in the 14 to 24 age group. This is obviously very serious, but the cause of it is not too well known. What we do know is that the rate of participation has increased; in other words, the number of people who at this time of year usually withdraw from the labour force have not withdrawn in that age group. We want to see the causes and reasons for that before being able to prescribe remedies.

• (3:40 p.m.)

In answer to a similar question on September 20, the Prime Minister said and I quote:

The problem is with the teenage group which has entered the work force, or which has not left the work force after the summer period, at a vastly different rate from the past.

It is the teenage group. There is a tremendous amount of confusion. On the one hand, the Prime Minister does not admit the problem of unemployment. On the other, he says it is because of increased participation of the younger people in the labour force. He indicated it is the teenagers between 16 and 19 years of age. I can only conclude one of two things. Either the Prime Minister is deliberately trying to convey to the Canadian people some misconception of the whole problem or he is not aware of the fact that ever since the 1940's economists and demographers, or whatever these people who talk about Canada's growth are called, have been saying that the Canadian population will continue to expand through the period of the 1970s.

Everyone in Canada with any knowledge of the economy or of the population has been aware of this. I can only conclude that there must have been absolute ignorance if the Prime Minister has only now discovered we have an expanding labour force. Perhaps it is related to some of his domestic concerns or perhaps it is a deliberate attempt to deceive the Canadian people. The Liberal party can make up its mind which one it wants to choose.

When in Regina last year, the Prime Minister made reference to our expanding labour force. On December 3, as quoted in Hansard, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) made reference to the fact that we have an expanding labour force. In 1964, when we were beginning to get a recurrence of the unemployment problem, the then Prime Minister took consolation in the fact that we had an expanding labour force. In addition to these statements, people connected with the Economic Council of Canada, economists and Canadians from all walks of life, recommended that the government accept the fact that we have an expanding labour force and adopt immediate expansionary policies in order to remedy that problem. I challenge members opposite to deny that fact.

Anyone knowledgeable of the Canadian economy knows that the traditional economic models that can be applied to countries such as Italy, the Scandinavian countries or Britain, which have a relatively static labour force, cannot be applied to Canada. All Canadian economists recognize that when you have an expanding labour force you must have an economy which is growing, developing and expanding. How contradictory it is that in the past two years the government has insisted on cooling off the economy, cutting production, discouraging investors and discouraging initiative on the part of individuals, businessmen and, in fact, the whole business community, while at the same time recognizing that we have a growing country and a massively growing labour force. This can only be the result of absolute autocratic arrogance on the part of the people calling the shots.

The Prime Minister's office, the supergroup, autocrats, inner cabinet or whatever they are called, have shown tremendous arrogance. They know better than other parties, the Canadian people, the business community, labour people and economists. They are so damned pig-headed that they feel they know this or else they are ignoring what are the realities of the situation. Because of their intellectual seclusion, long years in universities reading books, and theorizing through Cité Libre, they are not aware of the realities of our country.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

I wish to quote from the September 1969 Economic Council of Canada Perspective, 1975:

—the existing high rates of unemployment among young Canadians not only represent a waste of some of our most valuable human resources and a potential source of social instability, but also partly reflect a failure on the part of our society to bring young people quickly and effectively into active participation in the economic life of our country.

Dr. Haviland, a senior economist with the Economic Council of Canada, stated at the beginning of 1970 that we must have a real growth in Canada of 5.25 per cent a year just to keep the unemployment figures at their present rate, in other words to avoid having the unemployment problem grow worse. In 1970, the gross national product rose by only 3.3 per cent.

Another director of the Economic Council of Canada, Dr. Sylvia Ostry, stated in a detailed statement to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the same chamber which made a number of recommendations to the Prime Minister which have been rejected, that we need 2.6 million new jobs in Canada during the 1970s. Are we going to get 2.6 million new jobs with the kind of policies being advocated by the Prime Minister of this country?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lundrigan: We might get 2.6 million unemployed but we are certainly not going to achieve this increase in new jobs in the next decade with the kind of policies being advocated by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: I referred briefly to the proposed federal-provincial conference. Even learned members of the press were deceived when the Prime Minister first made reference to this federal-provincial conference. Day after day he has referred to the conference. He is trying to give the impression to the Canadian people that this conference on unemployment is the result of his own initiative. The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) placed that in proper perspective today. Day after day we have recommended an early conference specifically directed toward unemployment. The suggestion came, I believe, from Premier Davis of Ontario last year at the Victoria conference. The Prime Minister is trying to suggest that it is through his initiative that the conference will be held. This is absolute deceit, distortion, concealment and deception on the part of the Prime Minister of this nation. I hope that the Canadian people see what he is trying to do by misrepresenting the facts.

I wish I had a half hour to review some of the things we have recommended. In the 320 questions we have raised in this House, there have been numerous suggestions of a positive nature. Some of these were repeated today by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). Not one suggestion that we have made has received a sympathetic or even polite response from the Prime Minister. We have recommended immediate tax cuts, not tax cuts such as those contained in the tax package which has been almost a decade in the making. We recommended immediate tax cuts for the low and middle income groups; selective corporate tax cuts and the elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, which my colleagues will also recommend. Because of the inability of the government to forecast the unemployment problem with any accuracy, we recommended an economic forecasting unit. That has been sloughed off discouragingly and disparagingly by the Prime Minister. He also recommended a sort of band-aid approach to the problems of this winter. We recognize that you cannot get programs with long term effects off the drawing board and into active operation within a matter of days or weeks.

We have recommended the introduction of a winter works program and other similar approaches intended to keep people off welfare and allow them to continue their normal way of living during the coming winter. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has recommended special assistance to industries which find themselves in difficulty, through tax incentives, direct financing and the like. We have recommended to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who rarely appears in the House during debates on this subject, the removal of the three-year work experience clause governing the retraining programs of his department. We have recommended a consistent effort, together with industry, to end the system under which employees have to wait until lay-offs are announced before they can take advantage of industrial training programs. Many of these recommendations have had the support of the Economic Council of Canada. We have made numerous suggestions in the fields of housing and anti-pollution. If I had another 20 minutes or so at my disposal, I could develop the logic and reasoning behind many of these proposals, especially those which relate to tax cuts.

The frustration which is felt by members who are concerned about unemployed Canadians is mounting daily in the House of Commons because we cannot get the Prime Minister to recognize that a problem exists. I am sure this frustration is felt by members of the Liberal party as well as by members on this side. Unemployment goes against the life style of the Prime Minister. How can you be a swinger, how can you be happy-go-lucky, how can you do your own thing, travel all over the world and so on, yet be concerned about the little people who are unemployed? How can you be an elegant Prime Minister and at the same time be concerned about those who are unemployed, living in small rented apartments in Hamilton, Toronto and Halifax?

Of all the recommendations we have made, there is only one I should like to put forward now, in conclusion. It is that the Prime Minister, at the earliest opportunity, give the people a chance to replace him as the head of the government in order to bring some sensitivity and concern back into Canadian politics.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the extremism of his rhetoric, in the extravagance of his proposals and in his total disregard for hard realities, the leader of the New Democratic Party has succeeded in surpassing even his own past excellent performances. I was particularly taken by his technique of disavowing the use of statistics and then proceeding to make outrageously inaccurate statements which could not possibly have been supported by statistics had he used them.

He has tried to convey the false impression to this House and to the Canadian people that the economy of our country is in deep trouble, an impression which is totally denied by the facts. He has tried to suggest that the substantial proportion of Canadian trade with the United States is somehow the result of the failure of government policies. The reality is that the high proportion of our trade with the United States is a very obvious and completely natural consequence of the fact that our country has had the good fortune to border on the richest market in the world. I am sure most Canadians are well aware, even if the NDP is not, that this factor has contributed substantially to our achievement of a very high standard of living.

In striving to gain political fortune from adversity, however, the leading Cassandra of the NDP has never allowed himself to be deterred by realities, and if adversity does not exist he seeks to invent it. Every difficulty he seeks to blow up into a calamity.

During the opening debate on second reading of the Employment Support Bill, when Parliament reconvened earlier this month, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) pointed out that virtually every major indicator provided clear evidence that the Canadian economy had been expanding at a steadily accelerating rate for almost a full year.

Mr. Hees: We never had it so good.

Mr. Mahoney: While I shall avoid going over the same ground as the minister covered in his speech of September 7, let me recall to the House some of the highlights of the economic performance. During the first half of this year, the nation's real output of goods and services rose at an annual rate of 6.2 per cent, which was almost double the growth during 1970 as a whole. I can see why the hon. member for Prince Edward Hastings (Mr. Hees) disdains statistics, too. They just don't support his attitude. During the second quarter of this year, the real gross national product rose at an annual rate of 8.9 per cent, which was the largest quarterly increase in two years.

Consumer spending has paced the advance of our economy, with the increase of 4.3 per cent between April and June being the largest quarterly gain in several years. But other sectors of the economy have also contributed substantial strength. Housing starts in the second quarter amount to 225,000 at an annual rate and 243,000 in August, indicating a record number of starts for 1971 as a whole. Total capital investment rose by 5.7 per cent during the second quarter and business capital expenditures by 6 per cent.

Although the expansion has been steadily gathering momentum over a period of several months, I do not mean to suggest for a moment that we should relax or that there is not room for further progress, particularly in the creation of new jobs and faster progress in bringing down unemployment.

Mr. Hees: It is better than Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Mahoney: George, I imagine you are the only member of the House who has recently read "Alice".

Mr. Hees: That's a lot better than some of the stuff you are saying.

Alleged Failure to Stimulate Economy

Mr. Mahoney: As the minister told the House in his speech on September 7, a number of the new economic measures announced by President Nixon in mid-August obviously pose a serious threat to the strong growth under way in our own economy.

The upturn which has occurred in the rate of price increases this year is a further matter for concern even though it is due in no small measure to a rebound in food prices after the decline last year resulting from the supermarket price war.

As I said a moment ago, we are deeply concerned about the high level of unemployment. Despite the simplistic approach from members of the opposition, this is a complex problem. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of the steady expansion of the economy over the past year there has been a big increase in the number of Canadians with jobs. In August of this year there were a quarter of a million more people employed than a year ago. This increase of 3 per cent in Canadian employment during the 12-month period was more than three times the increase in employment in the United States during the same period and outstrips the performance of all other industrial countries. This performance is all the more impressive when it is recalled that during the early stages of rapid economic expansion a large proportion of the increases in output comes from the higher production of workers already on the job, rather than through employment of new workers.

Hon. members should know that unemployment among adults has declined over the past several months. The seasonally-adjusted rate of unemployment among those 20 years of age and over, who make up 86 per cent of the labour force, has dropped from a peak of 5.9 per cent in July, 1970, to 5.3 per cent in August of this year. In the case of men and women 25 years of age and over, who make up 70 per cent of the labour force and include most of the heads of households, the seasonally-adjusted rate of unemployment declined from a peak in July, 1970 of 5.2 per cent to 4.4 per cent last month. While I certainly do not regard these rates of unemployment among the more mature members of the labour force as being satisfactory, they do indicate that substantial progress has been made in alleviating the problem in this important and largest sector of the labour force.

In increasing measure, the core of our unemployment problem in Canada has come to be focused on youths 14 to 19. And even here the source of the problem does not stem from a slow growth in employment. In August of this year, employment of youths 14 to 19 was actually 50,000 higher than in the same month last year. This represented an extraordinary year to year increase in the number of teenagers with jobs of some 5 per cent. The source of the unemployment problem among teenagers results from a phenomenal increase in the number of these young Canadians who have entered the labour market in search of work. Let me hasten to point out, particularly for the benefit of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), that I am not talking here about the increase that has taken place in the total number of Canadians among the population aged 14 to 19. That increase is, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has asserted, quite predictable. What has never been predictable, and has always been subject to wide variation, is the number of youths 14 to 19 who will enter the labour market to seek jobs at any particular time.

[Mr. Hees.]

This point is perfectly illustrated by the developments of the past year. During the 12-month period ending in August, the total number of Canadians aged 14 to 19 increased by 2.4 per cent. But the number of boys and girls in this age group who entered the labour force increased by 6.3 per cent, which is about triple the increase in the population of this age group. Because even this increase in jobs was not sufficient to absorb the still larger rise in teenagers seeking work, there was an increase in the numbers of this group without work last month on a seasonally adjusted basis. This increase was the sole cause of the rise in seasonally adjusted unemployment for all workers in August. It should be evident that the very sharp jump in the number of teenagers recorded by Statistics Canada as being in the labour market, and the associated degree of unemployment among this group, presents a rather special problem which will have to be attacked in a special way. As indicated to the House previously, the government is focusing on this question urgently in order fully to understand it and to deal with it effectively.

In the motion which he presented to this House, the leader of the New Democratic Party chose to paint a stark picture of a stagnating economy and rising unemployment. He chose to ignore the fact, evident to most informed Canadians, that economic growth has been accelerating over a period of several quarters, and that the problem of unemployment as it affects our mature labour force is declining. Under the circumstances it is not surprising that he also chose to ignore the very substantial fiscal and monetary stimulus which we have given to the economy. In these circumstances, the massive nature of his specific suggestions for increased expenditures and tax reductions will not be seen by the Canadian people as anything but irresponsible. But then, Mr. Speaker, in this House the hon. gentleman has always been in the happy position of being able to advocate extreme courses of action without having to take the responsibility for the consequences. I recognize that within his party he has found it necessary on occasion to resist the still more extremist "wafflers" in his midst.

There is in the motion before the House the suggestion that tax cuts should be implemented. I point out there is a bill before the House that does propose to implement tax cuts as of January 1 next, and we are hoping that it will be through the House by January 1. Under the tax reform measure, every married taxpayer whose income is derived from salary or wages will pay less income tax. Every single taxpayer in similar circumstances will pay less tax if his income is under $8,000. Every retired taxpayer aged between 65 and 69 inclusive will pay less tax, whether single or married. Every retired taxpayer over 70 will pay less tax under the new system than under the old system if he is married, and less tax as a single taxpayer if his income is less than $8,500.

In addition to that, the prospect is held out in the tax bill of progressive reductions in the marginal rate of personal income taxes on the first $500 of taxable income from 17 per cent to 6 per cent, and a reduction of the general corporate tax rate from 50 per cent to 46 per cent by 1976. All of these tax cuts are in legislative form and we do hope that we will be able to get them through the House in time for the people of Canada who want them to enjoy them. Perhaps members of the opposition are getting messages from their constituents different from those received by members on this side, but at least we understand very clearly that the people want these tax cuts.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate searched Votes and Proceedings and Hansard to find how many questions had been asked on general economic subjects by members of the opposition since the House resumed on September 7. I, too, searched Votes and Proceedings this morning for the same period to see how expeditious has been the work of this House. Leaving aside the previous opposition day as well as this one, on the 16 days of government business that the House has sat since resuming after the summer recess the opposition has "co-operated" in helping the House get its work done by moving no fewer than seven motions to adjourn the House under Standing Order 26; three motions to adjourn the debate, each of which required a recorded vote and consumed something between half an hour and one hour; two motions to adjourn the House, each of which also required a recorded vote and consumed between half an hour and an hour of time.

On the other hand, the government has on three occasions attempted under Standing Order 6(5)(a) to extend the sitting of the House in order that business might be proceeded with expeditiously and so that time that has been wasted by hon. members opposite in procedural manoeuvrings might be made up, to the benefit of the people of Canada. On each of those occasions more than ten members of the official opposition and New Democratic Party have stood in their places to frustrate the work of the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a question before he finishes reading his speech?

Mr. Mahoney: Certainly.

Mr. Lundrigan: Since there are only four or five minutes left, aside from the catalogue he has given could he, as official speaker on behalf of his party, tell us what the government proposes to do in response to the tremendous frustration manifested by the opposition which has forced it to move motions of this kind and to ask over 300 questions? What is the hon. member and his government going to do for the great number of unemployed Canadians?

Mr. Mahoney: If the hon. member would clean the wax out of his ears or adjust his spectacles and read my speech, perhaps he will find the answers to some of these questions.

When I read the portion of the motion condemning the government for its failure to reduce Canada's dependence on a single market, I could not help recalling the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett's ill-fated attempt to blast his way into the markets of the world. It also brought back to mind the stillborn attempt to bring about a 15 per cent diversion of trade from the United States to Britain promised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was Prime Minister. Can the leader of the New Democratic Party do no more than seek to revive these abortive Tory efforts?

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we have worked very strenuously over a number of years to open up markets for Canadian goods and services wherever they were to be found around the world. I do not recall that in the past that approach has brought much complaint from the NDP. We have participated actively in international discussions to bring about a multilateral reduction of tariff and other trade barriers. We have a large trade service to help Canadian producers take advantage of every potential opportunity for new and expanding trade around the globe.

While there has been a substantial increase in the volume of our trade with other countries, the proportion of our trade with the United States remains very high. Is the Leader of the New Democratic Party—and I hope his predecessor in office who is the only member of his party in the House at this time will convey to him my comments—seriously suggesting that we should have discouraged Canadian producers from seeking to sell their goods in the largest, richest market in the world right on our doorstep, a market very similar in character to our own? Is he suggesting that we should not have entered into special bilateral arrangements with the United States, such as the auto pact and the defence production sharing arrangement, which have enormously increased our exports to the United States market? If that is the case, I hope he will have the courage to make his stand clear to the labour movement, whose friend he claims to be.

The government is aware, as the Minister of Finance suggested to the House a few weeks ago, that we will have to give consideration to the nature of our trade and industrial policies if the protectionist measures announced by President Nixon last month prove to be part of a fundamental change in the direction of United States policy and a move towards restrictionism. It would be very regrettable if that were to be the case. The government believes that, given access on reasonable terms, Canadian producers could look to the United States to continue to provide a rich and growing market for our industries. All Canadians would be the poorer if our entry into that market should become restricted for any prolonged period of time, and that applies to restrictions imposed by the United States or restrictions gratuitously imposed in Canada in the form of such ridiculous suggestions as export taxes on some of our resources.

As the minister has made clear previously, we are of course deeply concerned about both the short and long-term threat to our economy that is raised by the new policies announced by the United States administration. Only two days ago this House gave approval to an important measure to minimize the immediate adverse effect on production and employment in Canada resulting from the imposition of the surcharge.

An hon. Member: And the NDP voted against it.

Mr. Mahoney: Yes, the NDP voted against it. Of course they did. There are other measures proposed by the United States administration which could also have an adverse impact on our economy and we are very carefully following the course of their consideration in the Congress. It would obviously be premature to take steps in this country aimed at offsetting the impact of such measures on Canada until we know whether and in what form they will be enacted. We have made strong representations to the administration about their proposals to the Congress. The Canadian economy is moving forward. It is moving forward in response to monetary, fiscal and specific economic policies that we have introduced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: The United States economic policy and the international financial crisis have cast a shadow across our forward path. We are alert to this and have taken steps, as this House knows, to mitigate the adverse impact on Canada. This is a time for cool heads and responsible action. And that is the kind of action the country will get from this government. Action will be taken as required to deal with difficulties encountered by particular industries and sections of our economy. Should these developments threaten to slow down the economy, action will be taken to sustain the expansion which is now under way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Is the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the allocation of time to members in the House. With the greatest respect to the hon. member who moved this motion, in view of the fact that the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) did not have time to offer any positive suggestions, which he said I should read in Hansard tomorrow when I have my glasses—which incidentally I don't need—I suggest he should be given an extra 20 minutes to make the positive suggestions he wants to offer to my colleagues—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Bellechasse.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is of vital importance for the future of our economy. In listening to the speeches delivered up to now, we have come to realize that hon. members have a special concern for unemployment and inflaton problems.

The motion is of a very general nature, but in the few minutes that I am allowed I should like to deal very briefly with the causes of this deplorable situation and show that the government is not taking the appropriate means to correct it.

It is a recognized fact that this government's economic policy has brought disaster to Canada. As a matter of fact, everyone knows that unemployment is there. Figures are quoted, but nobody agrees on them, so much so that the Montreal newspaper La Presse published an article entitled "Statistics are, it is said, lies under scientific cover". If this is true, the fact remains that thousands of Canadians are unemployed, although they would like to participate in the development of our country and to make an honourable living.

A former minister of the present government, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), resigned precisely because he could not agree with this government's economic policy. He did not share the government's views as to the necessity of fighting inflation. He, and various other experts, proposed changes, just as we, Créditistes, have been suggesting extensive economic reform for a long time. Nobody listens to us much, but our principles are being adopted little by little, and I hope that eventually this solution—which, surely, is not asking for the moon—will be resorted to. It would not be heaven on earth, but it would at least solve many problems.

If our economic system was really good, it would give satisfactory results. A bad tree cannot bear good fruits. Our economic system has very good points, but it also has bad ones. We have to keep what is good and correct what is bad. What are the effects of our economic system? General displeasure. Let us discuss with people on the street, in service stations, in stores. We do not even have to question them. We only have to ask them: "How are you?" At first, they say that everything is fine. After a few minutes, we hear them say: "Well, I have a problem. I do not work. My business is in poor condition. The operations of my plant have been slackening".

People are complaining about the bad condition of our economic system which contributes to create inflation, unemployment, bankruptcies and disorder.

This government taxes people more and this increases the cost of living. Why does it tax? The financing system of the public sector is forcing this government to get us more into debt from one year to the other. One has but to read the annual statistics for Canada to realize that, year after year, our country, which is supposed to get wealthier, is getting deeper and deeper into debt. In order to pay for interest on this ever-growing debt, this government has to levy taxes from Canadians. We have reached the point where we are paying more than $2 billion a year in interest on the public debt.

Mr. Speaker, with $2 billion we could achieve great things in order to solve the problems that we are now facing. The increase in interest rates is a direct factor of inflation. Inflation is the main cause of the increase in the cost of living. These are related. Inflation does paralyze the economic sector of construction. All contractors say: "We are building less because we simply cannot borrow money at a reasonable rate". Since they are unable to borrow at a reasonable rate, they slow down their operations and hire fewer workers.

Inflation is a disincentive for businessmen with the result that numerous projects are postponed indefinitely. I talked with smart businessmen in several regions of Canada and they told me that they were postponing their projects because interest rates were too high and that decent profits were out of the question.

Even governments, especially the federal government, will not proceed with public works because of inflation. There are many requests for buildings and post offices to be erected in various Canadian municipalities, but projects are being paralyzed for want of money and because of inflation. Many problems for Canadians stem from inflation. Extension and construction projects for hospitals and some institutions are at a standstill and this is felt even in Montmagny where a heavy increase in unemployment is foreseen for the coming months due to the anticipated shutdown of the Chemcell plant.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I ask the federal government to reimburse to the province of Quebec the millions of dollars collected by means of the so-called social development tax. With these sums, the Quebec government surely could pursue construction of public buildings such as hospitals, homes for retarded children and senior citizens; this could alleviate unemployment and increase the workers' purchasing power.

Unemployment stems from inflation. Unemployment erodes the over-all purchasing power of Canadians, which in turn dampens consumption of goods. A decrease in consumption creates overproduction, which then leads to a slowdown in the operations and often the shutting down or bankruptcy of industries.

Bankruptcies, while they may at times enrich some people, nevertheless impoverish many more. Victims are businessmen, traders, workers and the number of bankruptcies is constantly increasing. Businessmen are therefore concerned with this situation.

Recently, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce held a convention and the former president, speaking of government interference in the field of enterprise by way of taxation, of unduly high taxes which paralyze enterprise and hinder its development, expressed the following views:

> The speaker also dwelt on the ubiquity, the meddling and interfering of federal and provincial governments in the Canadian economy.
> It is the duty of business leaders, he said, to initiate more energetic action if they wish to prevent new legislation from putting an end to their operations.
> They are already beginning to stir in their sleep. They need a lot of time to wake up. They must be shaken very hard to voice their fear in public. They are concerned about the future of their business.

I quote further:

> Never in the past has the ability of Canadian businessmen to run their business in an efficient way, to develop it, to make a profit and to be competitive been so severely challenged by the labyrinth of laws.

To conclude he said this:

> Many businessmen will give up and all the clever young people who could have been attracted will stay away from business.

Mr. Speaker, that is a very serious note of alarm that Parliament ought to take into account if it really wants to find valid solutions before it is too late.

I shall say only a few words about agriculture because we often have the opportunity to talk about it. In that area, producers are concerned about the situation.

Most farmers are in a plight. Hog producers for instance are having extremely hard times. Costs for electricity, telephone, feed, transportation, building materials and chemical fertilizers keep rising, adding to production costs. On the other hand, prices paid for hogs are clearly too low.

I was recently visiting a hog producer in my riding and he told me that it costs $11.50 to breed an 8- to 10-week-old piglet, while he cannot sell it for more than $8 or $9. Obviously it means that he suffers a loss instead of making a profit. Those who sell carcasses on the market are not having any better treatment and their income is insufficient.

Egg producers are not in a more enviable position because it costs 36 cents to produce a dozen eggs, and the average price is 30.8 cents a dozen. Therefore, from the standpoint of income these producers are hardly any better of than the unemployed, and yet they are compelled to work hard every day.

The motion of censure suggests that the government undertake winter works. In my opinion, these as well as summer works should be undertaken because it is cheaper to carry out water, sewage and road projects in summer than in winter.

There is much work to be done in almost all municipalities but these are in no position to go ahead owing to the high cost of the price of money.

So in April the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities submitted to the Canadian government a brief from which I would like to quote a few extracts so as to draw the government's attention on the merits of this resolution. I quote:

• (4:30 p.m.)

> WHEREAS the difficulties and high cost of borrowing is one of the principal impediments to municipal capital financing, and
> WHEREAS there is mounting need for investment in such urban development programs as: urban transporation (including the acquisition of land for right of way), housing, pollution control, water supply, recreation facilities, industrial sites; and
> WHEREAS it is not in the national interest for our municipal governments to be obliged to compete with federal and/or provincial governments and private corporations in the capital market;
> BE IT RESOLVED that the Federal and Provincial Governments be asked to undertake, after consultation with the municipal associations, the establishment of a specialized municipal credit institution or institutions to facilitate municipal borrowing for capital works.

It ends up saying:

> We ask as well how the Federal Government can extend interest free lending privileges to underdeveloped nations while refusing to extend those same privileges to underprivileged municipalities that are so numerous in Canada.

There, Mr. Speaker, is a resolution which should not only be carefully considered, but applied so that we may immediately help municipalities achieve their projects.

There was no alternative: we had to suggest that the government use the Bank of Canada to finance the public sector, or build public works which would help give jobs to the workers and increase the total purchasing power of the consumers. Public works add to the wealth of the people in that sense that they can use public property. In addition, as I have just pointed out, they increase the total purchasing power.

Sometimes we are told: That is not possible. So, why try to use an institution to this or that end? Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the great Liberal leader, Mr. Mackenzie King, on September 23, 1935, in Saskatoon, at a time when there was an electoral campaign to be won, knew that the people were aware of the situation. In fact, he said, and I quote an editorial:

The Liberal party believes that credit is a public matter which does not only concern the bankers—

I also agree with this—

—Capital flow should be related to the domestic social and industrial needs of the Canadian people.

That was true in 1935, and it is true now in 1971. He was very severe when he said, quote:

Once a nation loses control over its currency and its credit, it does not matter much who in that nation makes laws. Once in control, money lenders will ruin any country.

We are being lead to ruin—

—As long as control over currency and credit has not been restored to the government and acknowledged as being its most obvious and most sacred responsibility, any talk of democracy and Parliament supremacy is vain and futile.

We have ample proof of this: Parliament falls far short of supremacy, because it has to submit to the whims of high finance, which dominates the Canadian economy.

The Right Hon. Mackenzie King also stated, I quote:

If my party is re-elected, we will assert our monetary policy in the greatest battle between high finance and the people ever witnessed by Canada.

The great battle announced by Mackenzie King never took place. As a consequence, and because of a series of acts of treason, we are now close to ruin—

Mr. Speaker, I would say in conclusion that changes should be brought about in order to allow the whole population to reach a reasonable standard of living and the guaranteed annual income, which is possible in Canada. All there is to do is simply use the remaining crumbs of our rich resources.

If that is not done, I think we will be guilty of a great treason as a great economist once said and I quote:

He who strips someone of his clothes will be called a thief; and he who does not cover a naked man when he can do it, is he worthy of another name?

The Holy Scriptures contain a part which should make us think. Being Christians, we have the right to take our inspiration from them. There was a rich man and at his gates laid a beggar. All the beggar wanted was the crumbs which feel from the rich man's table, but the latter kept turning him down. And it came to pass that both died. But they were carried to different places: the rich man was in hell and saw Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said: "Father Abraham, send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame". But Abraham said: "Son, remember that in your lifetime you received the good things and likewise Lazarus the evil things. Now, he is comforted and beside all this, between him and you, there is a great gulf fixed: so that he which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can you pass to him, that would come from thence".

In these circumstances, one could derive pleasure from this situation. But I am serious when I say this. I mean that if we do not take the steps required to assure a minimum guaranteed income for each Canadian, destitution will continue to increase; it will widen the gap between men and contribute to enrich those who hold the credit monopoly and who can use it for their own purposes, by refusing morsels to the less fortunate. The day will come when this destitution will give rise to agitation among the people, but it will be too late.

It is essential to work together to assure a minimum income to each Canadian citizen and we will thus have done our duty.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important that we continue to bring these motions before Parliament and the people of Canada in order to remind the people of the crisis with which the country is faced as a result of the attitude of the government. I was very disturbed that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) had the unmitigated gall to repeat the same ineffective, asinine speech that he gave the other day, attempting to lead the people of Canada into believing that we never had it so good.

Mr. Mahoney: I just used the statistics.

Mr. Alexander: The parliamentary secretary is living in a dream world, and is using all his vigour and enthusiasm to entice the balance of the Canadian people into that same dream world. Earlier today when I read the list of government supporters who were thought deserving of Christmas presents by being appointed parliamentary secretaries, some 28 of them, I wondered what Christmas present the government was going to give the 750,000 Canadians who will be unemployed this winter. Regardless of whether or not the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance knows it, there is a role for the opposition in Parliament. The survey which he made in respect of opposition motions was as academically untrue as that made by Dr. Roman Marsh with regard to the attendance of members during recorded votes. The parliamentary secretary was not honest enough to indicate the subject matter of all those motions. They were not introduced frivolously. They were introduced as a result of the economic policies of the government.

The Official Opposition and hon. members to my left have tried continually, and will continue to do so,—

Mr. Olson: To adjourn the House.

Mr. Alexander: —to focus the attention of the Canadian people on situations that have been brought about as a result of the government's fiscal and monetary policies. I am very pleased that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) has placed on record the attempts made by the opposition to help the government reach some conclusions about what it should do regarding unemployment and the state of the economy.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We on this side of the House believe we are in a crisis, but those on the other side believe we are only approaching it. As I listened to the parliamentary secretary telling us how good things are in Canada, I wondered whether he was aware of the latest report in the Ottawa Journal. I want to put it on record because it deals with lay-offs. It will show that the parliamentary secretary is definitely in a dream world if he thinks things are good, particularly when we look at the results of this government's fiscal and monetary policies and its strategy in the fight against inflation. We see a frightening picture, and I do not use these words lightly. It reveals a stagnant economy, regardless of what is said, with an intolerable rate of unemployment and business failures.

It can be quickly concluded that all these matters spell disaster for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his government, and a tragedy for Canada and Canadians. Confidence in the economy is now absent, or at best a rarity. How can our quality of life be improved without that confidence? How can we reach full employment without that confidence and how can we reach full productivity? There is an alarming and ever-growing concern being registered by people from all walks of life and in every segment of our society regarding the frightening and bleak economic future of Canada.

In order to bring the parliamentary secretary back to reality, so he can see the picture as it is now painted, let me refer to some facts as reported in the Ottawa Journal of today. I quote from the front page which reads:

A cross-Canada survey by the Canadian Press shows lay-offs—some permanent, some temporary—hitting a wide spectrum of industries.

No industry appears immune because of size alone. Some lay-offs involve 2,000 workers.

Let me put on the record figures in respect of the lay-offs about which we are talking to show that these do not hit just the large urban centres but small rural areas as well. At General Motors in Ontario and Quebec there have been 2,000; at Domtar, Trois-Rivières, 650; at Toronto Telegram, 1,200; at Bowaters in Newfoundland, 350; the pulp and paper industry in New Brunswick, at Ste. Anne, Mackawic Pulp and Paper Company, 423; Scott Maritimes Ltd., Sheet Harbour, Nova Scotia, 310; Alcan Aluminum, Quebec, 300; Boyles Industries, Orillia, 112; Polymer, Sarnia, 60; International Nickel, Toronto, 50; Heywood-Wakefield, Goderich, 30; Savage Shoes, Galt, 125; TCF of Canada, Cornwall, 22; Courtaulds of Canada, Cornwall, 100; Domtar Fine Papers, Cornwall, 135; Chisholm Lacrosse Manufacturing Company, Cornwall, 110; Continental Insurance, Winnipeg, 40 and more at B.C. forest industries. How can the parliamentary secretary stand in his place and talk about this country being in such great shape? How can he attempt to impress upon the Canadian people that the country is in good shape?

Mr. Olson: He never said that.

An hon. Member: The fishing industry in Nova Scotia has just about been eliminated.

Mr. Alexander: I heard someone say that the fishing industry in Nova Scotia is just about finished. Let me impress upon hon. members just what unemployment means. Let me reiterate what has been said on numerous occasions. Unemployment affects everyone. To those persons unemployed, it means loss of jobs and income. To the government, it means a loss in tax revenue and an increase in expenditures as welfare and unemployment benefits increase. The Prime Minister, in answer to a question the other day, suggested that those who are unemployed this winter could take advantage of the Unemployment Insurance Fund. He was being a little less than honest because he did not point out that there are some 1.5 million people who are not covered by the unemployment insurance fund. I note the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) looking at me. I am sure he will indicate I am right when I suggest there are 1.5 million people who cannot take advantage of the unemployment insurance fund until January 1, 1972. This is what the Prime Minister did not say, and at the rate we are now going those 1.5 million people could be out of work this winter yet not be in a position to obtain unemployment insurance. It was for this reason I asked the Minister of Labour whether something could be done to move this eligibility date forward, keeping in mind the extremely serious circumstances we will be facing this winter. Perhaps the minister will say something about this later, because in this way these people could find some relief.

Mr. Mackasey: In the guise of a question, Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit me to agree that at least one million people, including civil servants of the Tory province of Ontario, cannot draw unemployment insurance if they do not take advantage of the plan.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It won't be Tory then.

Mr. Alexander: Let me continue because the remarks of the Minister of Labour are not even worthy of a reply. I am surprised he would intervene in this very serious debate to make such a facetious remark. That should be beneath his dignity. To those who are employed, unemployment means reduced prospects for advancement and promotion. As a result of massive unemployment industries stagnate, and so do the prospects of those still working. For those not in the work force, such as students, wives, mothers and young people, massive unemployment reduces or eliminates the prospects of these people getting jobs once they enter the work force. Accordingly, Canada adds these groups to the unemployment rolls and loses the benefit of utilizing their talents and skills.

For the elderly and the poor, unemployment means increased hardships and/or premature retirement. An economy riven with unemployment has no capacity to increase its treatment of the marginal worker. Massive unemployment is the tip of an economic iceberg, and it causes our economy to suffer an irretrievable loss in output and income. I should like to repeat that the greatest asset of this country is its human resource and it is terrible to see that we have so many employable people who are not able to obtain employment as a result of the fiscal and monetary policies of this government. What is the government trying to do? It is trying to blame everybody.

A short time ago the parliamentary secretary blamed the opposition because they were obstructing and refused to pass Bill C-244. How can we discuss that bill when the government does not bring it before us?

Mr. Olson: It has been before the House since spring.

An hon. Member: It has been before the House for 12 hours.

Mr. Ricard: At least be honest.

Mr. Alexander: As I said, the government is now trying to blame the opposition. It has in the past blamed numerous groups, organizations and individual people. The Prime Minister at a press conference on July 27 said:

> But now with the very heavy quasi-monopolistic power exercised by the unions and by many of the industries, we can be in hard times and still the unions won't lower wages and the industries won't lower prices and the shareholders won't lower profits, which means you can have—well, you do have a worse trade-off.

The Prime Minister has lumped a number of people together who must take the blame. Let me read an excerpt from a federal government advertisement. It reads in part:

> Canada's economic future is very much in your hands. Our economy depends on the private sector to create new wealth and employment.

The government is now blaming the Canadian businessmen and the workers. The latest organization upon which it has laid the blame has been the Nixon government. We must keep in mind that this state of affairs existed long before Nixon made his economic moves which have only been in effect for a month. I am sure the Canadian people will not buy the kind of garbage that has been thrown across the House from the government side. If you ask me who is to blame for this situation, I say the blame lies with the federal government in Ottawa. If I were the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney), and had made the two speeches he has made in recent days, I would hold my head in absolute shame after reading about the number of lay-offs I have mentioned today.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: Surely, the hon. member is not serious.

Mr. Alexander: That certainly is no laughing matter and does not call for facetious remarks from the parliamentary secretary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that bothers me about this government. They continually say they have a mandate. I admit it. For goodness sake, I say, use the mandate responsibly; use it to give confidence to the people of Canada. The business sector hesitates to make decisions. Why, Mr. Speaker? They do not know what the future holds.

Mr. Mahoney: Then, pass the tax bill.

Mr. Alexander: That is another farce and fraud. Mr. Speaker, I have continually asked the Prime Minister to stand in his place in the House, or do as he always does, go before the television cameras, and give a state of the economy address to the people of Canada. Let him tell them in all sincerity what we face, where we are heading, what will happen and what the government intends to do. What are the projections for unemployment? What are the targets for employment? We do not know the answers, those answers have not yet been given. These are extremely important questions. How can you develop programs and policies to fight unemployment without possessing a survey to indicate what the unemployment picture will be. Why does the government not tell me, the members of the House and the Canadian people what the unemployment picture actually will be this winter. The government has the figures and it is reluctant to release them.

I hope the Prime Minister will answer the question I asked today regarding the types of policies to be established for those industries that are suffering and that will continue to suffer more drastically, because some relief must be given to them. I hope, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party suggested, that we shall have a statement within two or three days. With every passing day, the crisis becomes more pronounced. Surely, we are entitled to know the facts from the Prime Minister rather than from ministers whose competence is in question. Actually, the government's backbenchers question their competence. Let me repeat that—I see the parliamentary secretary standing up. I do not know for whom he is about to speak. According to the latest reports, it appears that there is a split within the caucus of his party. The good guys are on the "opposition" side and the bad guys are on the government side.

Mr. Mahoney: We don't do things that way in our party.

Mr. Alexander: I have reason to believe that a revolt is going on among the backbenchers of the Liberal party.

An hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member is referring to the wrong caucus.

Mr. Alexander: I see members on the government side shaking their heads. There is one thing for which I must admire them.

An hon. Member: The hon. member's party is revolting.

Mr. Alexander: If I am revolting, then so is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Mahoney: No, no. The hon. member's party is revolting.

Mr. Alexander: It does not matter what the hon. member said. I take objection to whatever it was he said, and if he wants to call that obstructionism that is fine with me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Alexander: I know that there is the cut and thrust of debate, but I say in all sincerity that we are in very, very serious times. All that we on this side of the House are saying, with due respect to the government, is this: no matter what you have done or what you have meant to do, it is not good enough. We say that the government must come up with better answers and better policies. Not only must it bring forward better policies, but it must do that immediately, otherwise Christmas for some will be very, very bleak. Let the government listen not only to what is said by the opposition but to what is said by all segments of society. People are looking to the government for leadership in the formulation of economic policies that will bring about increased productivity which, in turn, will lead to greater employment. I am not being smart when I say this. I hope the government does that so that many people, and particularly those who do not have any hope, will have a merry Christmas.

Mr. Hugh M. Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I want to start off on a dispassionate note and suggest that it is fair to say that every hon. member in this House, regardless of the side on which he sits, is deeply concerned about the chronically high levels of unemployment.

Mr. Orlikow: Except the Prime Minister.

Mr. Faulkner: Not excepting the Prime Minister.

Mr. Orlikow: Except the Prime Minister.

Mr. Faulkner: If the hon. member really believes that, let him say it.

Mr. Orlikow: I have said it.

Mr. Faulkner: I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and I really doubt that he believes that statement.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the parliamentary secretary a question?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, no, not now, if the hon. member does not mind.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor.

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member for Winnipeg North will have an opportunity to speak. I expressed doubt as to the truth of that particular statement. I do not believe the hon. member believes it. I do not think any hon. member really believes it. It may be politically advantageous to say it, and perhaps that is why it has been said.

Mr. Orlikow: The Prime Minister said it himself.

Mr. Faulkner: We are all concerned and frustrated about the problem and the difficulty encountered in dealing with it.The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) recited a series of sad and, in some cases, no doubt tragic lay-offs.

Mr. Alexander: That is all my point was.

Mr. Faulkner: He conveniently ignored the fact that this country enjoys the fastest employment growth of any industrialized country in the west. That was not mentioned because that does not fit in with his theory.

Mr. Alexander: That is what we question.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I listened patiently to the hon. member, so perhaps he can extend to me the same courtesy.

Mr. Alexander: Why not say that to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Faulkner: This particular problem, brought forward on an opposition day, has been treated, I suggest, in a fashion which is less than satisfactory to me and, I am sure, far less than satisfactory to those people about whom the opposition seems to be concerned. The remarks made so far, and I will deal with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in a moment, have contained an appalling lack of constructive suggestions. Surely, an opposition day is designed for the making of constructive suggestions by the opposition. Without question, we face difficult circumstances. Without question this problem is one of agonizing, personal dimensions for those people affected. The problem, obviously, has been compounded by recent events in the United States. There is the 10 per cent surcharge, the proposed job development credit plan which is now before the American Congress and, even more ominous than that, the proposal for "Domestic International Sales Corporations", or the DISC proposal.

All these compound the problem which we are all aware of and pose, I suggest, serious threats to employment levels in this country. Therefore, given this situation, the opposition could at least address itself to the sort of adjustments it would expect the government to undertake. One would expect that opposition suggestions would be responsible and precise, and that there would not be an insistence on a response to hypothetical problems. May I say that some of the suggestions made recently as to what we ought to do in the event of the DISC proposal going through Congress are not serious or responsible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What will the government do?

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member for York South, the lead-off speaker on the NDP motion, spoke for 20 minutes but it was not until the last two minutes—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He spoke for 30 minutes.

Mr. Faulkner: For 30 minutes; that's even worse. It was not only the last two minutes, as will be recorded in Hansard, that he came to the point of addressing himself to the precise proposals that his party would recommend in the face of these difficulties.

Mr. Orlikow: That is all in the motion.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Faulkner: I am going to deal with that. We all acknowledge the difficulties, but it was not until the last two minutes of a 30 minute speech that the leader of the New Democratic Party came up with anything precise. In my judgment, the proposals he did make were thoroughly inadequate and not worthy of a motion worded with the strength of this motion. I will now turn to the motion.

An hon. Member: Tell us what the government is going to do.

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member is asking what the government is going to do. The government has taken steps. I am going to deal with them. The hon. member has been in this House longer than I. He should know that proposals are not announced on an opposition day. These sort of gratuitous comments are not in keeping with the hon. member's understanding of the purpose of opposition days.

I now wish to deal with the specific motion before us. The first proposal is for a "large scale program". In his speech, the hon. member for York South made no mention of the dimension of that scale. He did not attach any money figure. He made a grandiose suggestion at a time when we face serious and precise problems.

The second proposal is for an immediate reduction of taxes. Everyone in this House and the Canadian public know that there is a tax bill before this House which, by all predictions, is not likely to get through this House until some time in November because members want to debate it at length. This bill makes precise proposals dealing with tax reductions such as higher exemptions for senior citizens, the elimination of the 3 per cent surtax on personal income and a whole series of proposals dealing with employment expense allowances which would permit wage and salary earners to deduct 3 per cent of their income up to $150 a year. Also, child care expenses will be deductible up to $500 per child up to 14 years of age with a maximum of $2,000 per family. Some of these proposals also deal with deferment of transportation costs for members of the labour force who move from one part of the country to the other.

The set of proposals will take one million people off the tax roll, reduce taxes for 4,700,000 and generally accomplish the purpose outlined in this particular motion. No mention was made of this. No mention was made of the fact that the government is behind these tax adjustments and would like to get them through as quickly as possible. We believe the Canadian people are also behind them.

The third proposal deals with forcing down interest rates. This is also a general and attractive statement. No precision is attached to it. I will deal with interest rates for a second. As the hon. member for York South knows, in recent years there has been an expansionary monetary policy which has had a lowering effect on interest rates. What has been the effect? The most important effect has been that short term interest rates are at their lowest levels since the early 1960's. For example, the yield from 91 day Government of Canada Treasury Bills in last week's auction was 3.98 per cent. A year ago the yield was 5.61 per cent. Yields on 90 day finance papers have been in the range of 3.25 to 4.5 per cent a year, also substantially lower than levels in recent years. It is somewhat irresponsible to frame a strongly worded motion such as this and not say anything about what the interest rates should be. This is just a general statement about interest rates.

The approach taken by the New Democratic Party in this debate can only be described, and I am trying to be as generous as possible, as opportunistic and irresponsible. They know the government's record. How much further would they go? If they are talking about a fund for municipalities, how much money are they talking about? If they are talking about interest rates, how much lower should they be? The leader of the New Democratic Party did not say a single word on those points. He simply presented a broad set of proposals, all of which are attractive. He has not made any precise suggestions. I do not see how these proposals can be treated as other than opportunistic, irresponsible and a systematic attempt to play with a very serious and agonizing problem.

I now come to the fourth proposal. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Andras), a very competent minister, will be dealing with housing matters. The motion suggests large additional funds for housing. This is another grandiose statement, undisputably attractive. The opposition knows the government's record. They know the budget for housing this year is something like $942 million. If they are serious about this, how many more million are they talking about? Why has the leader of the New Democratic Party not enough intellectual honesty and political courage to define precisely what he means by this rather grab-bag omnibus motion? He did not say a word about details. I again dismiss this as a general and attractive statement. It again is opportunistic and irresponsible because it fails to go beyond what the government has done in precise terms. Our budget is $942 million. We are aiming at 220,000 new housing starts this year. The government has paid particular attention to providing money for low income housing. Where does the New Democratic Party stand on this particular question? We have not heard a word about that. It has been dismissed in a way which is not worthy of the hon. member for York South. We did not hear a word about the $200 million that has been designated for experimentation and innovation to provide housing for low income families. There was no recognition of this imaginative proposal, not a word.

The fifth suggestion deals with money for waste treatment plants. In the past 10 years this government has spent $432 million to assist municipalities and others to build waste treatment plants. If the hon. member for York South is serious, and I hope he is, how much is he talking about? If this amount is inadequate, how much more would he put into it and from where would he draw the money? Would he increase taxes or shift money from other government programs and, if so, which program? Until we get these precise answers from that party, we can legitimately accuse them of being opportunistic and irresponsible for introducing a motion such as this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Faulkner: The sixth suggestion talks about redirecting trade from the U.S.A. I find this particularly galling. The speech by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) was of the type that we expect from him. I have studiously avoided dealing with it. It was replete with unattractive adjectives and offensive. It was the type of speech which opposition members have often made containing snide, critical comments about trips abroad by ministers. No person has been subjected to more snide and critical comments than the Prime Minister. We know and the opposition know that the trip to the Soviet Union and the trip to countries in Asia were primarily designed to deal with expanding and diversifying our markets. They know that perfectly well. They have made snide comments about those trips, taken political advantage and exploited them. Yet they have the unmitigated gall to come before this House and, as part of an omnibus resolution, ask us to take steps to diversify our trade. This is an indication of the degree of integrity embodied in a motion before the House today. Let me deal with the trade question.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Let's hear you.

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member says "Let's hear you", and I shall be delighted to oblige him. Over the past decade, that is, from 1960 to 1970, total Canadian exports have increased from $5.4 billion to $16.9 billion, an expansion which is more than threefold. Exports to overseas markets, that is, to markets excluding the United States market with which the hon. members opposite are so concerned, increased from $2.35 billion to $5.9 billions, or by 250 per cent. Exports to the United States have increased from $3 billion to $11 billion, an increase of 350 per cent. Among the major industrial countries, the most rapid growth in Canada's trade has been with Japan. Exports to that market have increased by 450 per cent. These are the facts. Yet the motion refers to the introduction of a program designed to protect Canada's future by redirecting trade so that it will not continue to be at the mercy of a single market.

As I say, trade with Japan has increased by 450 per cent. The hon. member for York South knows this to be the case, or, at least, ought to know it. But no mention of this aspect was made by him. Exports of manufactured products now comprise nearly two-fifths of our total exports as compared with 12 per cent a decade ago. The preponderant proportion of this increase has been in exports to the United States. Highly manufactured products now comprise about one-half of Canada's total exports to the United States, and the United States now absorbs about 85 per cent of Canada's exports of highly manufactured products. Again, the hon. member for York South knows this. I would have thought that since the new economic policy of the ited States is presently, in part, before Congress for consideration the House would have heard some suggestions from the New Democratic Party as to what Canada's posture should be. It would be helpful, not only to the Canadian people but helpful generally if it were recognized that there were some risks and difficulties attached to trade in any export market. They are not peculiar to trade with the United States. It could be that in future we will encounter similar difficulties with respect to, say, Japan, or the German market. We support the idea of diversification. Achievement in this area has been part of the government's record. But it is important to recognize that diversification alone would not eliminate the risks which are essentially involved in the export business.

I wish to deal with the situation as it is today, with special reference to the final point made in the resolution before the House. The implementation of recent United States measures, particularly the surcharge and the investment tax credit feature has introduced a disruptive element in the development of north-south trade in manufactured products. The Canadian government has remonstrated strongly against the application of these measures to Canada, not only in terms of damage to Canadian industries but also in terms of basic United States self-interest. If it should turn out that these measures reflect a new and continuing intention on the part of the United States to frustrate the development in Canada of a mature and balanced structure, then clearly Canada must adapt to such a circumstance.

I do not believe we should respond to these measures until there is a much clearer indication that they will be approved by Congress. To me, it seems a symptom of the obsession in the minds of members of the New Democratic Party that they should ask the government to declare what its position would be in the event of a measure going through Congress. It seems to me that a mature party would not give way to an obsession of that kind. Yet this is the approach opposition members are taking. In support of the general attitude being taken by the government, let me quote from a speech made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) in Houston, Texas, yesterday:

> If we were now to find that United States policies were turning inward and that the United States considers it as in their interest to import our raw materials and our energy resources but to impede and obstruct the development of our secondary industries, we would have to take a very hard look at our whole economic relationship with the U.S. Indeed, in that case, we would need to fundamentally reassess our own trade and industrial policies. It would be an "agonizing reappraisal".

It would, indeed. We should not for one moment minimize the importance of United States trade. If the hon. member for York South had some single scheme in mind whereby Canadian trade could be directed away from the United States without producing the most serious consequences for Canada I should be glad to hear it. He should come to my riding, and I will get some of my steel workers to talk to him about the realities of the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary. I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): We have now listened to two speeches from the government side. The first was from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney). I intend to ignore that speech because I know, as do most members of this House, that in the light of recent political trends in western Canada it is almost certain that that hon. member will not be back here next session.

An hon. Member: Don't get political.

Mr. Orlikow: I turn to the speech made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). He began by saying that every member of this House was concerned about unemployment. When I intervened to say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was not, he chided me and suggested I was not telling the truth. Let me remind the parliamentary secretary that some 18 months ago, when the Prime Minister was attempting to deal with the inflation which was facing this country, he said he would not be deterred from pursuing his anti-inflationary policies even if the country had to face unemployment at the rate of 6 per cent. Well, the rate is now 6½ per cent. I say, as I did when I interjected, that the Prime Minister does not give a damn about unemployment. The statement which the Prime Minister made was a heartless, unfeeling and uncaring statement by a man of wealth who never had to think about what it means to be unemployed, a man who, when he thinks of unemployment if he thinks of it at all, does so in terms of the kind of statistical gobbledygook we have been getting from ministers in this House.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) was here a few minutes ago. Before he came here he was president of the National Federation of Trade Unions. He understands the significance of the recent announcements of lay-offs by Domtar and Alcan. He must know, because he led these men in the strike at the end of which they gained recognition in 1941. The present Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) knows what it means for a person who has been employed at relatively high wages to find himself out of work with payments due on a mortgage, or on an automobile or on a television set. He understands the uncertainty they face when they are laid off without knowing when, if ever, they are to be called back to work. Working people caught in a situation like that can look forward only to living on unemployment insurance until that runs out, and then going on welfare. Those other ministers I have mentioned may be concerned, but the Prime Minister has never been concerned about the unemployed. We have heard all kinds of rationalization. We have been told that the participation rate in the labour force is higher now. We have been told that the situation has improved, but that suddenly and unexpectedly there has been a sharp increase in the number of young people unemployed.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The facts are crystal clear. We need not take the word of Members of Parliament, or academic economists, or labour economists, or business economists: Statistics Canada gives us the figures each month. What do these figures show? For 16 months we have not had a seasonally adjusted unemployment rate of less than 6 per cent. The government can squirm and argue, but nevertheless this is the fact and it cannot be wished away. In August 1971, we had 455,000 people unemployed, an increase of 7,000 over August 1970. This was the month before President Nixon announced his new economic policies which, according to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), will mean that if these policies are continued for a year there will be an extra 90,000 people unemployed.

We have been told that with the exception of unemployment among young people things are better. Just what is the situation as far as these young people are concerned? In August 1970, among the age group 14 to 24 there were 217,000 unemployed. In August 1971, there were 240,000 young people unemployed, an increase over the previous year of more than 10 per cent. We have been told that long term unemployment is getting better. If it were not unparliamentary, I would say that statement was a lie. Let me give the House the facts. In August 1970, there were 79,000 people in Canada who had been unemployed for more than six months. In August 1971, there were 106,000 people who had been unemployed for more than six months. Is this an indication that the situation is getting better? To me it indicates an increase in the number of these unemployed of 25 per cent or more.

We have also been told that the participation rate has improved. You can do anything with figures, Mr. Speaker, but at least this statement is true. In August 1970, the participation in the labour force was 57.9 per cent. In August 1971, it was 58.1 per cent, or 0.2 per cent better. These are the real facts and government ministers, and parliamentary secretaries who would like to be ministers, can argue all they want. The fact is that we have not done enough for the unemployed. One would think that by some accident, that through some act of God, Canada has the largest unemployment rate of any industrial country in the western world. That is not an accident; it results from deliberate government policy. I pointed out earlier that when the Prime Minister inaugurated his anti-inflation policy he said that even a rate of 6 per cent unemployment would not deter him from his policy of restraint. Well, we have that amount of unemployment. In addition, this year we have a rapidly rising increase in the cost of living.

On the same day the unemployment figures for August were published, the Globe and Mail carried an article headlined "Cost of living, jobless rate up". I have said something about the jobless rate, and let me put on the record what this article had to say about the cost of living:

> Official statistics on jobs and prices in Canada showed yesterday that high unemployment has stubbornly resisted the loosened economic policies that have permitted a new upsurge in the cost of living.
> The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate rose in August to 6.5 per cent of the labour force. It was 6.3 per cent in July, slightly below the 6.4 rate for June.
> At the same time, the cost of living went up 0.7 per cent, following a 0.8 per cent increase in July, pushing the total increase for the 12 months from August, 1970, to 3.4 per cent.

More than two-thirds of this rate of 3.4 per cent is attributable to the latter half of the year and the early months of 1971. We are now experiencing an increase in the cost of living at an annual rate of 5 per cent or more. I am simply saying that the government's policy regarding full employment has been a failure. The government's policy to combat rising costs has similarly been a failure. We have the worst of both possible worlds.

This afternoon we have had the same sort of speeches from the "juniors", the would-be ministers, the parliamentary secretaries, that we have had for a couple of years from the big chiefs.

Mr. Mahoney: And you keep ignoring what we say.

Mr. Orlikow: Let me put on the record a couple of the gems. The Prime Minister said on March 18 last in this House that the government had taken a series of steps intended to alter the course of the economic policy, but that some time must elapse before those steps could be fully productive. Then, he continued by saying he thought that all the economic indicators showed that the economy was moving. At the time the Prime Minister made that statement in March, 1971 we had an unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted, of 6.2 per cent. Six months later, in August, the unemployment rate had risen to 6.5 per cent.

Then, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who is always so optimistic, said on November 12, 1970, that he had recently publicly suggested that on a seasonal basis unemployment had about reached its peak, and he expressed confidence that we could look forward to continued improvement. At the time he made that speech in November, 1970 the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 6.5 per cent. In August last, it was once more 6.5 per cent. Recently, the Minister of Finance said in this House, on September 7, in response to some comments made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), that unemployment would continue to decline. He challenged the Leader of the Opposition to resign his leadership if the predictions made by the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that unemployment this year would not go below 6 per cent did not materialize.

I challenge the Minister of Finance, who has made repeated speeches in the House as well as statements outside the House in which he claimed unemployment was going down and that things were getting better, to follow the suggestion he made to the Leader of the Official Opposition, and if unemployment does not drop in any month for the balance of this year below 6 per cent, seasonally adjusted, that he resign his position. I say this because if ever there was a minister who has given the people of this country bad advice, it is the Minister of Finance.

We had a new, novel and ingenious explanation by the Prime Minister a few days ago of why the rate of unemployment, according to latest figures, was 6.5 per cent. The Prime Minister said that things are better all round; that it is only among the age group 14 to 19 that things are worse, and that this was a completely unexpected development that no one knew about. Economists inside and outside the government service have been pointing to the very large number of young people, a product of the postwar baby boom, who would be entering the employment market during the next few years.One does not have to consult professional economists on this subject; I have a column written by Douglas Fisher in the Toronto Telegram for December 11, 1970, headlined "Unemployment hits young people". He is talking about the unemployment figures published for November, 1970 and the article reads:

The breakdown for November, however, showed an inordinate increase in unemployment among the 14- to 24-year olds. This is what the opposition focused on, not the slightly-dipped rate.

This was not something unexpected. The government had every reason to know that the number of young people looking for work would be much greater than had been the case in recent years. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) says we have not put forward any concrete proposals. Of course, that is not true, like most of his speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: The resolution we have put forward is pretty specific. It is as specific as any resolution can be in outlining the kind of program we think is necessary. We have gone into detail month after month in speech after speech concerning what is to be done. Last February the Premier of Manitoba showed his concern about unemployment, as the Prime Minister has not done. He announced a provincial program to meet unemployment, in so far as it could be done by the provincial government, in the province of Manitoba. I made a number of speeches in which I placed on the record the specific kind of thing the government of Manitoba is proposing. Let me summarize again for the parliamentary secretary, who said we were not specific, what the Premier said last February and what he proposed last week for the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Faulkner: Never mind the Premier; what are you saying?

Mr. Orlikow: I say that the government in Ottawa ought to follow the specific kind of proposals the government of Manitoba has already produced. Then I will tell you what we say.

I heard someone just say the Premier of Manitoba is going off to Europe. That comes with ill-grace from a member of a cabinet which has done more travelling around than any other. The Premier of Manitoba made clear that the trip he proposed to make to Europe would be postponed or cancelled if the Prime Minister should call a conference when he would have been away. He will be at that conference next week, next month or any time the Prime Minister calls it. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) knows this.

What the government of Manitoba proposed last February, and implemented, was a program providing $70 million for public works' projects and an expanded housing program. The province of Manitoba spent $110 million in capital works. That is what the government of Manitoba did. The parliamentary secretary asks what we would propose, specifically. I will tell him what we propose specifically, but I say that this country is entitled to, and can have, full employment. It is the responsibility of any federal government to be, if necessary, the employer of last resort. The federal government has the responsibility of seeing that people are put back to work.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Orlikow: No. I have no more time than the parliamentary secretary. I say the federal government should inaugurate a program of putting 250,000 people to work for the four winter months. Who are those people? I am thinking particularly of people in Peterborough, Hamilton, Montreal and Quebec City who have been unemployed for so long. They are unemployed and their unemployment insurance benefits have run out. I am thinking particularly of the young people who have not worked long enough to qualify for benefit.

I say we ought to find work for 250,000 people. How can we do it? I suggest the federal government should grant to the provinces and municipalities $250 million toward capital costs in order that the municipalities and provinces may build things which are necessary and which are not make-work programs. To do that we have calculated it would involve a wage bill of $500 million. I am suggesting that half of that $500 million, in other words $250 million, be paid by the municipalities and provinces and that the other half be provided by the federal government in the form of long-term, low-interest loans.

Need I tell the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State that 250,000 jobs provided in this way would have a dramatic effect in cutting back welfare costs which are beginning to strangle the municipalities of this country, including Peterborough. Need I remind the parliamentary secretary that 250,000 jobs would have a tremendous multiplier effect. He wants some specifics. I suggest to him that he remember and recreate a program begun by a Liberal government, if I remember correctly, under the then minister responsible for housing, now President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

I refer to a program which subsidized the building of houses in the winter by the payment of $500 per unit. Such a program would have a very dramatic effect in increasing house building and construction this winter, and Lord knows we need it. That is the kind of specific program I have been talking about. It is common knowledge in Ottawa that the government will not just let things go. Even if the Prime Minister has no heart, he wants to be re-elected, so there will be a program. What will it be? It will be another program of job training.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The parliamentary secretary may ask a question if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Perrault: I think it is very important that this question be asked. May I have unanimous consent?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair could ask for unanimous consent, but I suggest to hon. members that the House leader of the party of the parliamentary secretary and the House leader of the hon. member have indicated to the Chair a desire that as many members as possible speak. It seems to me that there should be no extension.

At this time I would read the proceedings of the adjournment motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Proposed Amchitka nuclear test—Possible reference by Canada to United Nations or International Court; the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—Bilingualism and Biculturalism—Representations by ethnic organizations—Policy statement on commission recommendations; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Temporary Wheat Reserves Act—Legal action to compel government to make payments under Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO STIMULATE THE ECONOMY—SUGGESTED NEW MEASURES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

[Mr. Orlikow.]

—This House cannot tolerate any longer the economic policies of the government which have produced massive unemployment that threatens to become more serious this fall and winter; nor can this House tolerate any longer the government's failure to implement policies to reduce Canada's dependence on a single market and to assure a strong and independent Canadian economy.

Therefore this House calls for:

(1) a large-scale program, in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities, to provide jobs this winter for the growing army of unemployed;

(2) immediate reduction in taxes, particularly for lower and middle income groups;

(3) further government action to force down interest rates;

(4) large additional funds for housing;

(5) essential anti-pollution measures such as funds to municipalities to build waste-treatment plants and other necessary works; and

(6) introduction of a program designed to protect Canada's future by redirecting trade so that it will not continue to be at the mercy of a single market and by restructuring the economy to free it from foreign domination and control.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will not surprise anybody by taking part in this debate since there is in the opposition motion a reference to housing. There is a simplistic reference to it. Even if we accept the bald assertion in this motion that the economic policies of the government have produced massive unemployment, which I certainly do not, I do not think the House accepts that one of the simplistic solutions is captured in these few words of the motion, "large additional funds for housing". That phrase certainly has a nice ring to it. Who would not, least of all a minister responsible for housing, call for large additional housing funds? But I think in the very best of circumstances this somewhat self-righteous and overly simplistic generalization hides and distorts what this government has done and is doing for housing in Canada.

Of course, we are always considering the provision of more funds for housing. I hope that if and when we do inject more funds into housing, it will be done with full recognition of the complexities of the housing market. I will say now that I hope we never subscribe to the idea that this is totally an economic regulator and thereby withdraw funds from housing for limited objectives, nor will we simply force-feed funds into housing solely to reduce unemployment.

What we do, what we have done and what I hope we will continue to do is to achieve the basic housing goals of this country and at the same time seek to maximize employment benefits generated by residential construction. Certainly that will be apparent in the 1972 program which will be announced in this House in due course. It will take into account the twin objectives of the government, housing and employment.

I think, also, that we would be very wise to recognize that the residential construction industry is now operating at its highest level in Canadian history. NHA insured mortgage loans approved during the first eight months of this year exceeded the volume for any previous full year in the history of the National Housing Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: I would say that this is a highly significant achievement. I think it is fully reflected in the actual 12 months' housing starts measured month by month from January, 1971, which at that time stood at 191,800, to a steadily increasing level in April of 203,800, in June to 220,400, and a further increase in July to 225,200. As of the end of August the actual starts in the previous 12 months were 230,000, which is by far the biggest record of housing starts this country has seen. I repeat that those are actual starts for the previous 12 months, and not forecasts. Speaking of forecasts, I would remind hon. members of the figures for August, which show that we were at the seasonally annually adjusted rate of 243,000. I think that heralds the continuance of a high performance during the winter, a performance of which we are not ashamed.

There is also reference in the resolution to this subject. In our CMHC sewage-treatment program, our achievement since 1968-69 is very real indeed. Federal outlays in 1968 for sewage-treatment facilities, loans to municipalities, were in the neighbourhood of $37 million. In 1969 they were $56 million and in 1970 well over $72 million. Indeed, in 1971 we will have committed $97 million.

I think these statistics reflect an upward and onward commitment to the housing and pollution control priorities of this government. The federal government's financial participation in housing since 1969 has increasingly been concentrated in the area of accommodation for those who cannot afford to obtain adequate shelter in the market. Here I refer to direct federal contribution. The 1969 capital budget of CMHC was set at $680 million, of which more than half, $359 million, was allocated for housing for low-income families and elderly people, while another $55 million was applied directly to accommodation for students. Of the balance, $170 million was devoted to direct CMHC loans to homeowners. This program began at that time to give special emphasis to the needs of those in lower-income brackets in areas outside urban centres where access to the private market was limited.

This activity in 1969 resulted in a commitment under the direct budget of CMHC which provided 27,470 dwelling units for low-income groups in that year. That trend was continued and expanded in 1970 when an unprecedented budget of $1,094 million was approved. It included several special programs. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) mentioned the $200 million innovative program, and there was an additional $240 million direct lending program inaugurated in late August of 1970. This year, 1971, again our direct CMHC investment in housing and related infrastructure will approach $1 billion. Of this amount, $789 million has been allocated to housing and virtually all of this sum is being utilized for housing for people in the lower half of the income scale.

I wish I had had the time to do more research and checking before coming to the House this afternoon. However, I think I remember when the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—who challenges me from time to time on housing—spoke in the standing committee which studied the CMHC estimates almost three years ago and said that the minister had better make a commitment to members of the House that he would invest at least $300 million a year in low-income housing from the CMHC budget. That figure was passed that year and we have more than doubled it every year since. There was no mention of that in any of the comments of the hon. member. I think the credibility of that party would have been much higher if this kind of fact had been placed before us along with their criticism.

All this means that in the three-year period 1969, 1970 and 1971 we will have produced 117,000 housing units for low-income people. In other words, more than one-quarter of all the housing that has been produced annually goes, by deliberate direction, to those whose needs are most urgent. In those three years we will have begun, in terms of housing starts, 50 per cent more housing units for low-income people than in all previous years under the National Housing Act.

We were assured, on the private side of operations, in my consultations with approved lenders late last year that there would be a high level of private lender support, and this has been realized.

Our approach to 1971 has been taken on the basis that if we are to deal effectively with the variety of housing problems in Canada, and even within particular communities, we must introduce a flexible program and a more flexible use of instruments available to us under NHA. In 1971 we have been trying to exercise the increased flexibility which we began under last year's $200 million innovative program. This year, the CMHC capital budget commitment for federal initiatives of that nature in fact amounted to $451 million. Close to $100 million was allocated for a new program of assisted home ownership. Here we are utilizing reduced interest rates and extended amortization to get down, in some cases, to people with incomes a little in excess of $3,000, for the first time in a long time letting them experience home ownership.

I must say that most provinces are continuing to cooperate. They are providing various forms of assistance to complement federal efforts. These vary from interest rebates to homeowner grants with which most hon. members are familiar. The major elements of this program include interest rates which are now down to 7-3/4 per cent, and extended amortization to 40 years if the lower interest rate is insufficient to bring monthly repayments within the financial capability of the purchaser. About a quarter of the funds to which I have referred were committed in the first nine months of the year. We anticipate that projects will move into the "start" stage at a faster rate in the weeks ahead, providing for continuing on-site activity for many months to come, the many critical months to which hon. members are referring, in the winter of 1971-72.

Within the $451 million we allocated another $100 million to support the activities of non-profit organizations building rental housing for low-income families and individuals at rents agreed in the contractual obligation that goes with such loans from CMHC. That includes the section 15, formerly section 16, activities of the Quebec Housing Corporation. This section is used mainly for the provision of housing for elderly persons, for the handicapped and other disadvantaged people. Here again some provinces, but not all, provide assistance through capital or operating grants, and in these remarks I must recognize the very valuable contributions made by church groups, service clubs, charitable organizations and many others who are co-operating with us.

For the first six months of this year our program of non-profit loans produced commitments for 1,085 units and an amount of more than $15 million for new construction. Many of the projects are moving into a position where starts can be effected in the later part of the year and will be very valuable in creating employment in the winter months.

As part of the section 15 activity we also arranged for close to $100 million to be used for projects in 28 centres across Canada using the proposal call technique. We did this on a considerably smaller scale in 1970 and were encouraged by the results. We are extending it this year to provide needed rental accommodation throughout the country. Close to 3,000 units and $41 million have been committed under this special program to date, which will provide for new accommodation in such centres as Vancouver, Regina, Moncton, Pointe Gatineau, Hamilton, Brantford, Toronto, Ottawa, Windsor, Halifax, Calgary, Sudbury, Winnipeg, North Bay and St. John's. I hear my hon. friend from Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) interjecting, but I do not see the name of his town on the list. In addition to these special efforts there is the direct CMHC lending program under section 58, formerly section 40, and a number of initiative and development projects where we are attempting new approaches in such areas as rehabilitation of existing homes.

So, Mr. Speaker, when we take into account all the lending activity under the National Housing Act for new construction, for the first six months alone we are talking about more than 70,000 dwelling units and close to 7,000 hostel beds, for an investment of close to $1 billion with many more projects in train now approved. I think that as a result we will have a record housing accomplishment this year. I think we can predict with conviction that 1972 will be another year of high production, with the housebuilding industry fully engaged. I also think that our low-income housing achievement in the 1969-71 period, which I fully intend to see carried forward into 1972 and beyond, is most gratifying. We will continue to thrust for an increasing proportion of our housing production to go into this area. I think it will be one of the thrusts that will serve to keep the housebuilding industry alive and fully active in 1972.

Having set some of those facts on the record, I wish to refer to some of the comments made by my hon. friend on this side of the House, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State, who asked some very pertinent questions as to the precision of the recommendations made by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) and other speakers who used such fine phrases as "more funds for housing." I ask: How much more funds? Where will it come from? What programs will it displace? Where will it be placed, and what of the capacity of the industry?

All sorts of questions are left hanging in the air by hon. members opposite. These are questions that must be thrown right back at them. We will be delighted to receive constructive suggestions that go far beyond the superficial, in-favour-of-motherhood expressions contained in the motion before the House.

[Mr. Andras.]

Mr. Lundrigan: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point is whether the minister will accept a question. He has a minute or two left. I note that he will receive the question.

Mr. Lundrigan: I ask the minister a question raised in the House a few days ago concerning a gentleman who is eminently qualified to speak on housing; I believe he is president of the Canadian national housing association. He made a statement at St. John's, Newfoundland, speaking on behalf of his association, and indicated that for a good many reasons, all of which were outlined, there will be a substantial increase in interest rates during the last quarter of 1971 which, despite the 225,000 housing starts predicted, means we will not get the full amount of housing that we should get.

Would the minister take his last minute to respond to that kind of criticism and indicate whether he is willing to make an effort to bring down interest rates and to reduce the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it would take another 20 minutes to answer the questions raised by the hon. member. I have not yet had an opportunity to see the remarks of which he speaks. I presume he is referring to the president of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, Mr. Shipp. I noticed some reference in the newspapers to his speech. Much as I enjoy the co-operation of that body, I do not share the premises contained in his remarks. I do not agree that we will see a fall in housing starts and a tremendous increase in interest rates during the next quarter.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister referred to a Mr. Shipp.

Mr. Andras: Yes, I think that is his name.

Mr. Lundrigan: In his speech he referred to an impending increase in interest rates which might put a damper on housing starts. Has the minister any plans in mind to try to curb any increase in interest rates which will make it more costly and difficult for people to own their own homes? Also, will he speak for a few seconds in reply to the suggestion made by this party regarding the elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Andras: I do not wish to elaborate further on the 11 per cent sales tax question because on several occasions I have placed my views with respect to it on record in this House. But I may repeat that I would be glad to see it removed if somebody can tell me where the funds thereby displaced will come from, because I would like to get my share of them for housing just as other ministers want their share to meet their responsibilities. With regard to interest rates, I do not agree with the premise of the remarks made by the president of HUDAC.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey).

Mr. Downey: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair, to resume the same at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

NUMBER OF APPOINTMENTS REDUCED FROM 28 TO 27

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like permission of the House to revert to motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to allow the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to revert to motions for the purpose of making a correction, I believe it is?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for allowing me to refer to this matter as soon as possible.

A few hours ago I tabled an Order in Council providing for the appointment of 28 parliamentary secretaries, pursuant to the provisions of the Government Organization Act, 1971. I am advised that this number is based on a misinterpretation of the legislation under existing circumstances. This legislation is new and has not previously been applicable.

So there may be no question concerning the validity of the government's action in this matter, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) has graciously agreed to decline appointment as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue. This leaves the number of appointments at 27, which is the number that coincides with the strictest possible interpretation of the law.

I should like to add that the government and myself, personally, appreciate the co-operation of the hon. member for Laprairie.

An hon. Member: He should be a Senator.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are starting to obey the law.

Mr. Bell: There are so many parliamentary secretaries it does not really matter.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO STIMULATE THE ECONOMY—SUGGESTED NEW MEASURES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

This House cannot tolerate any longer the economic policies of the government which have produced massive unemployment that threatens to become more serious this fall and winter; nor can this House tolerate any longer the government's failure to implement policies to reduce Canada's dependence on a single market and to assure a strong and independent Canadian economy.

Therefore this House calls for:

(1) a large-scale program, in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities, to provide jobs this winter for the growing army of unemployed;

(2) immediate reduction in taxes, particularly for lower and middle income groups;

(3) further government action to force down interest rates;

(4) large additional funds for housing;

(5) essential anti-pollution measures such as funds to municipalities to build waste-treatment plants and other necessary works; and

(6) introduction of a program designed to protect Canada's future by redirecting trade so that it will not continue to be at the mercy of a single market and by restructuring the economy to free it from foreign domination and control.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take the floor after that earth-shaking announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I thought he might have said something in another vein, but I suppose he is still trying to solve the unemployment problem in his own way before calling an election. I am pleased that the Prime Minister is in the House this evening. It was regrettable that government members who were present this afternoon had to take so much abuse from hon. members on this side, because I think we all appreciate that they are not responsible for the mess the country is in.

The Prime Minister and what I might term his little power group of three or four make decisions in this country while the bulk of the members on the government side have to take the abuse. Any admiration I may have for them in this regard would be the same kind of admiration I might have for a flock of sheep.

When the Prime Minister came into the chamber this evening I thought we might have the good fortune to hear the announcement of an election.

Mr. Trudeau: Any time.

Mr. Downey: We would then see a group of unemployed Liberal Members of Parliament. I think it is time we put the present policies of the government to the test.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), and the minister in charge of housing told us this afternoon how good things are. They referred to a lot of statistics in respect of housing and unemployment to show how good things are. As an hon. member to my left said, they gave us the old numbers game. But when you have been around here for a year or two you realize that statistics do not mean very much. They are adjusted seasonally and in any other way in order to make the picture look as rosy as one wants. I think it is safe to say that no one actually believes this government or any of its members.

Let me read part of a letter I received from a farmer in Kelfield, Saskatchewan, in which he complains about taking out a cash advance. It compares the announcement by the government with the legislation passed. He said he took out a $2,400 loan on the basis of a statement by Otto E. Lang as recorded in the July issue of the Prairie Grains Policy Progress Report. He took out a cash advance. I will read from that report issued by the office of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang):

• (8:10 p.m.)

Repayments will be made at the same rate as advances. If, for example, the advance is made at the rate of 50 cents a bushel, repayment will be made at the rate of 50 cents a bushel as the grain is delivered.

The farmer I am talking about read that statement, took out the loan on the basis that collections would be made at 50 cents a bushel, but discovered, as he says in his letter, that repayments were on the basis of 95 cents a bushel, the maximum rate allowable under the legislation. Yet the ministry of misinformation, as I prefer to call it, puts out this garbage which does not coincide with what is going on.

Referring to our debate of the last few days with regard to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, what has the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said? On page 8276 of Hansard, for September 29, 1971, we find this entry:

MR. TURNER (OTTAWA-CARLETON): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada recognizes that there is a debt due to the farmers of western Canada in the amount of $38.5 million.

Yet the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) stood blandly in front of the television cameras the other night and said that $60 million is owing under the Temporary Wheat Reserves provisions. Whom are you to believe? Let me refer to page 58:15 of issue No. 58 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Mr. Treleaven, assistant chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, is reported as saying:

The $60 million was due as of August 1, 1970.

Under questioning he went on to say, as reported at page 58:24:

—$30 million is the amount approximately that would be due on August 1, 1971.

Nevertheless, the Minister of Justice mentioned $38.5 million yesterday in the House. The Minister of Agriculture did not say anything in the House. He went in front of television cameras and made erroneous statements. Whom are we to believe? Obviously, the assistant chief commissioner of the Wheat Board. He has no political axe to grind. He has no fear of being defeated in an election. I would be inclined to think that the farmers of western Canada would believe him. We will see who the people of Canada will believe if this government wants to put its policies to the test.

The government, in the same vein, of course, has accused the opposition of obstructing passage of the stabilization program. It has been pointed out time and again that the stabilization bill spent 27 hours in committee. Until last week's debate only 12 hours had been spent in the House on that important bill which supposedly is to form the basis of farmers' incomes in the years ahead. We spent only 12 hours on it in the House, and the government calls the debate a filibuster.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Orlikow: You've seen nothing yet.

An hon. Member: They can't stand it.

[Mr. Downey.]

Mr. Downey: Some discussions on bills in committee have had face-saving value. Last year, when discussing Bill C-176, the Standing Committee on Agriculture saved the Minister of Agriculture from himself. It saved him from making, I hesitate to use the word, a fool of himself. At any rate, it saved him from himself in front of the Canadian people. If that bill had not been examined carefully and had been allowed to go through, I submit that the Supreme Court ruling of last summer would have rendered the bill useless. We are talking about an international trade war now, and we are worried about it. Yet if that bill under the aegis of the Minister of Agriculture had gone through, it would have precipitated the greatest interprovincial trade war imaginable. The international situation would have been as nothing compared with what might have happened interprovincially.

Government supporters have given a glowing report of our economy. They have tried to make their points from the right kinds of statistics. I recall, looking over newspaper headlines of September and October, 1929, that there were glowing reports then, too. Everybody said the economy would advance. That was the big point everyone made. There may have been little paragraphs on the back pages which indicated otherwise. But government and officials were saying that everything was fine. The same thing is happening today. Certainly, what the government says bears no relation to fact and to what is going on in this country.

I know the government is genuinely worried about the state of the nation today, but look at their priorities three years ago. Then they could have done something to avert the situation that is upon us today. What were their priorities? One of them was language, another was the bedrooms of the nation. Day after day we asked the Prime Minister questions. He did not answer, he just shrugged. That is the fashion now; if you do not want to do anything or say anything, you just shrug.

Then there is this business of skiing. I think the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) talked about the Prime Minister's trips and how necessary they are. I believe heads of state should get around and maintain relations with other countries—personal relations. It is this continual round of skiing events and the Prime Minister's participation in that type of activity when the economy and the country are going downhill that bothers people to whom I have talked. They are not bothered by his visiting other heads of state.

Anybody who has watched closely the reign of this Prime Minister must conclude that his policy has been to confuse and to divide. Look at what happened to the Post Office Department. When I first came to Parliament you could receive a letter from my constituency in two days. How long does it take now? It could take two days or two weeks. Look at what the white paper on tax reform has done to the country and you will understand why today there is no prosperity in the country. People have no faith in the government, they do not know what the government is about to do next and hence business is reluctant to invest because investment may come to nothing. I think businessmen prefer to invest in other countries or keep the money in their own pockets.

Look at our youth and you will see the policy of confusion at work. Only a few years ago our youth were being told that business was bad, that they should "do their own thing" and that type of thing. Now the Prime Minister is saying to the youth of this nation that they should help business. He is telling them to go along with business and that it is necessary. That was not his message two or three years ago. Look at our present situation. It is the direct result of this policy of division and confusion. Whether there has been any point in the attempts to divide and confuse the nation we shall have to wait and see. Much has been said on the subject and according to some sources that policy may have been intentional.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Opinions on foreign ownership have continually been voiced in this House. This fact has been deplored many times by my friends to the left. Foreign ownership and capital coming into this country have been deplored in many speeches made in this House. It is not the matter of foreign capital that should bother Canadians. However, there is a situation we should seek to correct. It is the matter of foreign industry coming into Canada being financed by the Canadian banking system. Hon. members will recall the stir in the House created by the sale of Ryerson Press last spring. No Canadian firm would purchase it. An American firm purchased it and then borrowed 90 per cent of the purchase price from one of our chartered banks. If there are to be any consequential changes to improve the system, perhaps should begin by studying our Bank Act which was last revised in 1967 and should be revised again.

We must discontinue ranting and raving about the United States which, basically, is our friend. We should not have expected to receive preferential treatment when our ministers visited that country a short while ago. We have betrayed them, in their eyes. The United States is a fact of life on the North American continent that we cannot ignore. The only way, I am sure, we will have prosperity with this government is if they start printing money again which will make our currency even funnier than it is today.

Some time ago I looked through the Bank Act. I noticed with regard to deposit reserves that the ratio is something like 12 per cent on demand loans and 4 per cent on contract loans. Of course, this is averaged every month. The last time I inquired, the ratio was 6.12 per cent. With the deposits which the chartered banks in Canada now have, which I think amount to approximately $33 billion, they could issue credit of approximately $428 billion. Whether this monopoly to issue credit to this extent is realistic in terms of maximum benefit to Canadians is something that should be reviewed by the House.

In conclusion, until we have in power a government that will do something other than divide and confuse we will be in continual trouble.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, while listening this afternoon to the motion which we are now debating, I could not but think: This has already been seen, heard and repeated.

If there is in this motion a theme, a common denominator, it is the word "additional". This government is on the right track, obviously, but the motion states: Do a little more. You are reducing taxes, the motion seems to say, for people with a low income and for those with an average income. Do some more. Interest rates are low, but take —further action—

Housing is doing great, but vote

—additional funds—

Pollution control is well undertaken, but build additional —waste-treatment plants—

I was going to tell the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that his motion was entirely lacking in originality, but in a rare moment of moderation, he has recognized this himself by saying—

[English]

There is not an original suggestion in this motion.

[Translation]

Those are his own words, Mr. Speaker. One must admit that the fact of being told by the mover of the motion that this has already been said many times will not encourage hon. members to take part in this debate.

In my field of responsibilities, however, especially with regard to foreign trade, I must admit that the motion is more provocative. That is why I am taking part in the debate tonight.

If the tone of paragraph (6) of the motion with regard to trade, and especially its first part, had been more in harmony with the rest of the resolution, the hon. member for York South would have said: "By redirecting trade in a more intensive and better way". If he had continued by saying "so that it will not be so much at the mercy of a single market", if he had used the same tone as in other parts of his motion, if he had made the distinctions appearing elsewhere, then, I admit, I would not have had anything to say. I would have agreed that Canada should continually strive to diversify its foreign trade in a more intensive and better way instead of reducing its American share. This would have been logical. In business as well as in other fields, it is a good thing to refrain from putting all the eggs in the same basket. This is peasant wisdom.

Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to be an expert in international trade. It is quite evident. Everybody knows that I am Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce because I am rather industrious and quite easy to deal with but in looking at this motion, I cannot help but think that it is ill-informed, extravagant, simplistic and pessimistic.

It gives the impression that Canada is always given the choice either of exporting to the United States or of exporting in the rest of the world, in short, exporting this or that, exporting manufactured products or raw materials. It is the impression it gives. It gives the impression that Canada may choose between exporting—

Mr. Lewis: At the present time, we have no choice. That is the problem.

Mr. Pepin: —renewable raw materials and exporting non renewable raw materials. But the hon. member has just said it himself—we do not have that choice, because Canada must export everywhere in the world all exportable materials, whenever the price is reasonable. Canada cannot and must not try to favour one market more than another. It is a luxury we cannot afford and people working in such or such a sector would point out, I believe, to the hon. member that his proposition would not suit them very much.

The hon. member gives the impression that external trade is a tap one can turn on or off at will, a heating system one turns on in the morning and off in the evening. It is not that at all.

The resolution is also a defeatist one, because in the face of our present difficulties in our trade with the United States, the hon. member gives the impression that we must give up and export in the rest of the world, namely give up what we have and look elsewhere. Mr. Speaker, that is a defeatist attitude and it would be bad policy. It is not the one the government is taking and I do not believe it would be the one the Canadian people would approve.

In the present crisis, there is a struggle to engage in and as for me, I intend to pursue the government's efforts.

For the information of the House, I should like to comment on the efforts made in order to reach the valuable goals referred to in the motion, that is diversification of foreign markets. Later on, I should like to refer to the American market.

There is nothing new in trying to diversify our foreign trade and, this afternoon, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) as a matter of fact mentioned results achieved in the diversification and enlargement of our foreign trade.

For the past ten years, Canada's foreign trade has increased three times that of the United States three and a half times; overseas trade, two and a half times; Japanese trade four and a half times, etc. The hon. member for Peterborough has also established the fact that such increase has not only happened with raw materials and semi-finished products, but also with manufactured goods, because ten years ago our manufactured goods made up 12 per cent of our exports, whereas now they represent 40 per cent of such exports. I know for a fact that a good portion of those exports are the result of the auto pact. That I know very well! However, I fail to see why we should dissociate the auto pact from Canada's foreign trade.

Efforts are made all over the world—as I have said before—in all sectors, through a great variety of means; I might say that we are using all commendable means to succeed.

Diversification is not easy to achieve. As a rule, when the minister or the government makes a special effort in South America, for instance, hon. members say in the House: You ignore Europe! Whenever an effort is made in Europe, we are told: You ignore the Pacific area! When we are selling wheat, they say: You neglect manufactured goods. When we sell manufactured goods, we are told that we are forgetting pulp and paper. This is indeed, an easy kind of criticism to level at someone and personally, I find it quite educational. Also, I often say that here as elsewhere there are conflicting interests; for instance, we have a legislation to promote textiles and clothing.

Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly you are aware that the textile people's interests are different from those in the clothing business. For instance, the suit, skirt and shirt manufacturer must find raw materials at the lowest possible price and sometimes he will have to import. Obviously he is then acting against the interests of the Canadian raw material manufacturer.

Mr. Speaker, every day I get advice in the House. Some say: Stop all importations. Others urge me to sell more abroad and, above all, to protest against the Japanese and the Americans when they use protectionist measures against us. Each time I hear this contradiction I smile because this is the way I am made. I am a mixture of stoicism, catholicism and—

Mr. Lewis: —unfortunately of liberalism too.

Mr. Pepin: —and also liberalism. But I believe that there is good Christian liberalism as there is also good Christian socialism particularly that of the Manitoba premier. I think there is also a good Jewish socialism represented by the member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I figure that nobody has a monopoly over intelligence and goodwill.

Mr. Speaker, I will try to deal with the government's efforts to increase our foreign trade with the other countries and mainly the United States. All departments and many Crown agencies are precisely devoting themselves to that. Why does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) visit Japan—and we are all sorry for what happened to him—if not to increase our foreign trade with Japan in certain areas such as uranium? When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) makes a trip to China, or rather to Russia—I hope he will soon visit China—when he flies abroad it is obvious that foreign trade is one of his main concerns. Actually, as soon as he goes to Russia he is told to go to the United States, and as soon as he goes to the United States, he is told to go to Asia without considering that he has already been to the United States and Asia. Finally, he has gotten used to that kind of criticism and has resigned himself to it.

In my department, Mr. Speaker, we work unceasingly to broaden overseas markets for our Canadian goods. For instance, we are now conducting negotiations with Hungary, Australia, New Zealand and Columbia, and in a few days we will travel to Algeria, Zambia, the Philippines and so on. We are constantly endeavouring to obtain better conditions of access for Canadian products in these countries.

We are improving our methods and devising new ones. We have created "departmental committees". Ministers from various countries meet together. We have set up a committee with the United States and another one with Japan. A few days ago, we held a meeting in Toronto with the Japanese ministers and another meeting was held in Mexico City. An inter-departmental meeting with the ministers of Mexico will be held next month.

There are now so-called "mixed" missions. From early 1971, I have headed "mixed missions" to Germany, the USSR and China. This formula is advantageous. The mission is headed by the minister who is sometimes accompanied by parliamentarians and the mission in question includes officials and businessmen. This is one way of making contacts which otherwise would not be possible. It is sometimes enough that an embassy should call up the manager of a company saying that Mr. So and So is here with a group headed by the minister—it can be me or somebody else of course-to open doors, which hitherto had remained closed.

It is a formula, Mr. Speaker, and we take advantage of it. Indeed we hope to have one soon in Algeria and Japan. I say all this, Mr. Speaker, so that the public in general, to which the hon. member for York South was addressing himself today, know also that the government is making efforts, that the idea of diversifying trade has not been born today in the mouth of the hon. member for York South, but that others thought of it before him.

I am even prepared to acknowledge that some of my predecessors, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) for instance, have made serious efforts along those lines. It is not a new idea to try to diversify trade. Is it being done adequately? Maybe not. Therefore, we may be criticized on the means we are taking, but let us not be asked, as in the motion before us, for "introduction of a program designed to protect Canada's future by redirecting trade so that it will not continue to be at the mercy of a single market . . . " and so on, as if the hon. member for York South had just invented that yesterday.

That "introduction", Mr. Speaker, has already taken place. For instance, we have the "scientific and technological agreements" formula. That is another means of increasing trade. We seek to know the inventions, the breakthroughs of such and such a country, in order to take advantage of them, and we also draw its attention to imaginative technologies developed in Canada.

We are also committed by scientific and technological agreements with Belgium, the USSR, Germany, and we also hope to conclude similar agreements with other countries. Furthermore, we are trying to persuade Canadians to turn to the metric system more rapidly, precisely in order to increase our trade possibilities with countries where in most cases that system is in use.

Together with the USSR, we have established "workshops" comprising Canadian and Russian experts. There are six such "workshops" at the present time, and they meet once or twice a year precisely to seek trade opportunities between both countries.

We are setting up export consortiums. If there is a power dam to be built in Brazil, Zambia or somewhere else, consortiums are set up, which are associations of persons having material, services or knowledge they can pool so that they will be well enough organized in that country to offer a single project instead of 18.

We have opened lines of credit for some countries. We have said, for example, to the people of Iran: Listen, here is $100 million that we are going to lend you so you can come and buy from Canada. And they did.

An hon. Member: Were they convinced?

Mr. Pepin: What I am trying to do is show the efforts that are made. There are programs to help exporters of goods and services explore foreign markets. Here is a group of men who heard that it was possible to export in a country, Uruguay for instance, but to get down there, to make a survey and a submission, requires a lot of money in somes cases. A company can do that two or three times a year, but to do it five or six times is sometimes too costly. So we are going to help them and provide them with 50 per cent of the expenditures envolved and if they get the contract they will pay us back the money we invested in that project.

The hon. member from York South said this afternoon that we should be making more credit, particularly to developing countries because they need it very much to pass orders. On the other hand, is he aware of the efforts made by the Export Development Corporation in that regard? In the period from 1966 to 1969 the corporation granted loans of approximately $50 million. Last year they totalled $96 million. In 1971 they were up to $400 million.

So, when the hon. member says that more credit should be granted to underdeveloped countries, all I can say is that this has already been done. Should one billion dollars be allocated for that purpose? Possibly! But this is where government expenditures must be shared between various departments; some must be left for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and for some other undoubtedly important departments.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker. As some people know, I am a former tennis player; in that game, as you know yourself—especially before you break a leg—one of the most important things, according to champions like Perry, Budge and Vines, is the followthrough, that is what happens after you have hit the ball. This is how a trajectory can be given to the ball. In our department, we are "obsessed"—this is the true word—by the importance of the followthrough. We are sending missions to Germany and China and we remain in contact with our trade commissioners; we call them back every two or three months to see what progress has been made, to encourage and stimulate them, to give them the information we have gathered and that they sometimes do not have. As I say, we are "obsessed" by the necessity for continuity, by the followthrough.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, we achieve fairly fantastic results which are not always recognized by this House. This is normal and I am not complaining. For instance, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and myself returned from Europe where we had made certain representations to negotiate the enlargement of the Common Market and had obtained most interesting terms for pulp and paper producers, for the producers of Douglas fir plywood, for the producers of phosphorus, etc., I remember full well having complained that the members of the opposition were not paying attention to what I was saying. That is not very encouraging; yet,—

When we went to China, Mr. Speaker, we obtained three very important things. First of all, when they need wheat the Chinese will come to Canada first. That is an advantage other countries would have loved to have had: I obviously need not specify which countries they are. As we know, the Chinese came over the other day and bought 30 million dollars' worth more wheat than they had on their previous order which was prodigious as everyone will recall.

We have also obtained from the Chinese—I remember quite well that the word "consider" was used—that they consider the possibility of Canada making further exports. In addition, we have obtained from them that each year they indicate what they intend to import the following year. Incidentally, in a few weeks in Pekin, there will be a meeting of Canadian and Chinese officials and the latter will tell us what they intend to import in 1972. It is a break-through and a considerable advantage.

The Russians have done the same as far as wheat is concerned. They told us that they were coming to Canada and they did so a few days after the Prime Minister's visit. But obviously few members opposite saw the connection between the two events. We are not complaining, that is normal. But one is surprised at being told to make greater efforts. I only ask the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that if he is getting extraordinary inspirations from Yahweh, God or Jesus, he should enlighten us because we are extremely anxious to find new ways of expanding our exports to other markets than the United States, because we know as well as he does that we should diversify our external trade.

Mr. Speaker, there are many things I would like to say on that subject, but I shall only add this: We are now being told that we rely too much on the American market. We might also consider that it could get just as dangerous to depend on other overseas markets, if we were to follow the advice of the hon. member for York South.

To trade is to take a chance, and you have to take a chance, no matter where you trade. I think we try, as much as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), to find the right mix, the best possible balance between our exports to the United States and our exports to the rest of the world, our exports of raw materials and our exports of manufactured goods.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words concerning the American market. Why do Canadians do more trade with the United States? As everyone is aware, we do about two thirds of our import and export trade with the United States. Why so? For a very simple reason—in fact, it is the most natural thing in the world. From a geographical viewpoint, we are Americans: it is, therefore, quite natural that we should do more trade with American than with Asian countries.

Our export goods are well accepted in the United States, corresponding to American fashions and customs, much better perhaps than they meet the requirements in India, the Philippines or elsewhere, because we belong to the same civilization, the same culture, the same way of life.

Our trading patterns—

[English]

Mr. Gleave: You speak English, don't you?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, I do. Depending on the way I feel on the subject, I speak either mostly in English or mostly in French. Tonight just happens to be a night when I am speaking mostly in French.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Canada and the United States also have common trading patterns. There is also economic complementarity. Some Canadian products round out the American arsenal, and vice versa. There is also much specialization between companies on either side of the border.

This afternoon I heard the hon. member for York South criticizing multinational corporations, but I should very much like to know what he intends to substitute for them. The trend toward multinationalism in industry and trade is general.

I feel there can be no going back. The trouble is that Canada does not have enough of those companies. I believe if we had more we would be stronger economically.

Moreover, there is the fact that the United States do not need preferential credits, dealers or foreign aid. That is obvious. And, Mr. Speaker, they are right there, they are next door, their market is a natural extension of our market. Exporters do what comes naturally. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is continentalism because precisely we happen to belong to the same continent. As far as I am concerned, I believe that the Canadian people consider the American market as a natural market for Canada, and I think that they consider it also as a stable one, made of sensible, distinguished people who above all do pay well and I do not think that the hon. member will be very successful in advising the people to export more to Africa or to the other developing countries. We do that as far as possible but it seems to me that, with regard to the economic future of Canada, it would be unwise to depend largely on the African or Asian market.

Mr. Speaker, we regret that the Americans do not take into account, especially at present, the special and unique nature of the relations between our two countries and, as far as I am concerned, I do not miss any opportunity—and I wished that the hon. member for South York did so more often—to draw the attention of the Americans to the unique nature of our mutual trade relations.

I was in Houston yesterday. I suppose that some hon. members would like to take note of my speech which, I think, is fairly good and where I show exactly the importance of economic and trade relations between Canada and United States. Only a detail, we receive 35 million visitors from United States.

Does the hon. member intend—no, surely not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but his time has expired even though the Chair has recognized him as the official spokesman for his party and has allowed him 30 minutes. Unless, of course, the House gives unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: No.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to allow the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with the second part of the motion moved by the leader of this party, as follows:

—nor can this House tolerate any longer the government's failure to implement policies to reduce Canada's dependence on a single market and to assure a strong and independent Canadian economy.

I am sure there is no need for me to enumerate to the House the catastrophic effects which would ensue if the United States continued the 10 per cent surcharge on imports and retreated into some of the protectionist devices which are at present being discussed in that country. I agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when he says that if these policies are continued it will be disastrous for Canada. The estimate of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), that it would mean a loss of at least 90,000 jobs in Canada, is probably too low.

It seems to me we must ask ourselves how we came to be in this predicament and what we can do to rectify it. We should begin by asking how we came to be in this very difficult situation. I suggest the reason Canada is more adversely affected by the United States recent action is because we have virtually become a United States economic colony. Ever since the end of World War II the Liberal party has been the advocate of economic integration with the United States. Whenever we attack the government for its continentalism we get the kind of hoary answer given to us this afternoon by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) who asked, "Do you not want us to trade with the United States?" or the statement of the minister who has just resumed his seat that it is only natural that we should trade with the United States.

No one quarrels with that. Of course we must trade with the United States because of our proximity. The late President Jack Kennedy, when he visited Ottawa some years ago, said of our two nations that "geography has made us neighbours and history has made us friends." But there is a great deal of difference between trading with a country and being owned and dominated by that country. There is a great deal of difference in the relations between neighbours and the relations between tenants and landlords.

Of course we support trade with the United States. But what has happened in the process of continentalism is that we have gradually been losing the capacity to make our own economic decisions in this country. It is not that the government has not been warned of the apparent dangers of allowing the economy to be dominated and manipulated by another country. When some of us have been making these statements over the years we have been attacked as being anti-American or Canadian nationalists. We have not been alone. Many newspapers in Canada, and other publications, such as the Toronto Star, the Financial Post, the Financial Times and MacLean's magazine have been speaking out on this subject for the last ten or 15 years.

People in the academic community have warned the government of what is likely to happen. As a matter of fact, a former Liberal Minister of Finance, Mr. Walter Gordon, tried valiantly in the years between 1962 and 1967 to do something about this growing encroachment by the United States corporate power on the Canadian economy. We know what happened to him.

In order to appease public concern, the Liberal government set up the royal commission headed by Professor Watkins. This commission reported in 1967, and nothing has been done. For the past two years the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) has been making a study of foreign ownership and now we understand he has made a report to the government. We are still waiting for some action. Even the Leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario, Robert Nixon, the other day in a public speech criticized the government and said it had been too slow in dealing with this crucial matter.

The fact is that the chickens have come home to roost, and the chickens look very much like vultures. The Globe and Mail said in an editorial today that Canada now is in the position of being like a branch plant arguing with head office. In a television interview the other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he was surprised that the United Sates wants to make Canadians hewers of wood and drawers of water. He need not have been surprised. Like Rip Van Winkle, he has just awakened to the world of today. They have been making us hewers of wood and drawers of water for decades, particularly since the end of World War II.

Instead of being aware of the situation, the Prime Minister has poured ridicule again and again upon those who have expressed their concern about the growing control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors. He has referred to them as Canadian nationalists and superpatriots. If we take the trouble to make a survey of the Canadian economy we find that foreign control has now reached the stage of economic domination. I shall not go over again the long, depressing catalogue of what the results of foreign ownership and control have been. Most members are familiar with it. In the last ten years the book value of foreign capital invested in Canada has doubled in size. The foreign ownership of the manufacturing industry is now 60 per cent of its total assets. Tobacco, rubber, machinery, transport equipment, petroleum, coal products and chemicals are all virtually in foreign hands to the extent of anywhere from 70 per cent to over 90 per cent.

The number of takeovers by foreign-owned and foreign-controlled companies has been increasing since the end of World War II, and the rate of takeover has increased sharply in the last three years. In 1945 there were 20 mergers in Canada. For the last three years there have been about 200 mergers a year, which has resulted in increasing control by foreign investors. Foreign ownership and control in Canada is the highest of any other country in the modern industrial western society. Two-thirds of the total investment in resource-based industries is foreign-owned. Three-fifths of the investments in manufacturing is foreign investment and four-fifths of that investment is American.

The United States investment in this country is growing rapidly. From 1945 to 1967 it rose from $5 billion to $28 billion and is now in excess of $30 billion. In 1955, American investment in this country averaged $500 a year. It is now in the neighbourhood of three-quarters of a billion dollars per year. This is so not only in the field of investment but in the field of technology. Some 95 per cent of the patents issued in Canada are registered to foreign owners, and of these two-thirds are owned by U.S. residents. Of the list of 25 leading countries in the world, Canada is first in the percentage of patents that are foreign-owned and last in the percentage of patents which are owned by its own nationals.

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Douglas: The hon. member asks, "So what?" When patents are owned outside this country I ask my friend to stop and ask himself who he thinks controls the economic activities of our nation. Of directorships of firms which are 50 per cent or more foreign-owned, only 44 per cent are held by Canadian citizens. The result of all this is that the Canadian economy has become more vulnerable than that of any other country to changes in U.S. economic policies, and we have reduced our capacity to respond effectively to any actions taken by the U.S.

American investment has had two main thrusts. Their major concentration has been on resource industries. The subsidiaries set up in Canada are producing for the parent company. They are not seeking world markets, they are seeking to produce raw materials for their parent companies, supplies that can be cut back when they do not need them or when they find other sources. These are raw materials which are sold to the parent company at an agreed price, not the world market price, with the result that the profits are very small in Canada and the wages are 25 per cent to 30 per cent less than those paid in the U.S.

These subsidiaries have no incentive to process or fabricate their raw materials in Canada. That is why we have a large trade surplus with the U.S. and why we have between half a million and three-quarters of a million unemployed, because these extraction industries are capital-intensive and not labour-intensive. What we have been doing is exporting jobs by sending our raw materials to the U.S. and elsewhere to be processed and fabricated.

The second thrust has been to set up a branch plant economy in Canada which was designed largely to benefit from the Commonwealth preferential tariff. The result is that many of these companies are producing only for the Canadian, or at the very most the Commonwealth markets and have not been anxious to enter world markets in competition with their parent companies.

It is all very well for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to say that he is not against diversification. Of course he is not, and I compliment him on the efforts which he and his department have made to diversify Canadian trade. But to what extent can they be effective in diversifying Canadian trade when they do not control the decisions that are made with respect to diversifying trade? If the Canadian subsidiaries of American companies are prevented by their parent companies from energetically entering the world markets, then all the trips that the minister and his colleagues make to various parts of the world will not be effective in bringing about the kind of diversification which is necessary.

The result of this branch plant economy is that most of our research is being done now in the U.S. and most of the patents, as I have already pointed out, are held in the U.S. The crux of the matter is that ownership means the power to make the decision that affects the economic livelihood of the Canadian people. It means that if the demand at any time lessens, then of course it is the subsidiaries that will be cut back, not the parent companies. The economic decisions affecting this nation are not made by Canadians. In the main they are being made by gigantic corporations in the United States, and they are not being made in the interests of Canadians. It is bad enough to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, but it is even worse when someone else decides how much wood you will hew and how much water you will be allowed to carry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: Let me say just a few words about some of the things we think must be done to meet the present crisis. Mr. Speaker, everyone readily concedes that there is no quick and easy answer. We cannot undo in a few weeks or months the drastic results of 25 years of economic integration. What we need, first of all, are immediate policies to begin regaining control of the Canadian economy, to stop mergers, to limit the impact of foreign investment and to put a limit on the amount of foreign investment in various segments of our economy.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The House of Commons committee on foreign affairs recommended that there should be at least 51 per cent Canadian ownership. I think that in some areas, for instance finance and investment companies, it should be 100 per cent. We should be using the Canada Development Corporation to develop Canadian industry with government participation. We should be setting up a state trading corporation so that we can expand our trade, on Canadian terms, not only with the United States but with other countries of the world.

Let me finish on an optimistic note, Mr. Speaker. The Kennedy round and GATT have already been breached on a wide front. I hope they will not be destroyed and that we will be able to maintain multilateral trade in the world. But if that does not happen, if we must resort to bilateral trade, then Canada is not without great bargaining power. We have two main bargaining powers. First of all, Canada gives greater access to its market than most other countries do. Of the 18 leading trading nations, Canada allows a larger percentage per capita of imports, some $700 per capita compared with $180 per capita in the United States and $150 per capita in Japan. We are a valuable market. Although we are only one-tenth the size of the United States, we are her best customer. We buy large quantities of goods from the European Common Market. Our market is a valuable asset to these countries. I repeat that we have bargaining power there.

We also have natural resources, particularly energy resources, which some countries, notably the United States, must have. We have bargaining power there. We ought to be able to do what we have never done until now but which we have urged the government repeatedly to do. If we have surplus energy resources, we ought not only to sell them for cash but be prepared to say that in return for selling them we want more of our natural resources fabricated and manufactured in this country, and we want access to the American market and other markets for our fabricated and manufactured goods.

It may be that the crisis through which we are passing will have a salutary effect. I hope the U.S. surcharge will be removed. I hope that the difficulties which have arisen will finally be resolved. But that should not allow us to lapse into a state of lethargy. This crisis ought to teach us the lesson that we must begin in Canada to regain control of the Canadian economy. We must now begin to make our economy more diversified. We must begin to process more of our primary products in this country. The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) warned the government about this in a recent speech when he pointed out that the whole tax structure of this country has been designed to give special assistance to the extraction industries which are capital-intensive, rather than to the manufacturing industries which are labour-intensive.

As a deliberate government policy we should be encouraging industries which create jobs, producing goods that will give our people work and opening up new markets for the products of our industries. If we do that, Mr. Speaker, this country will be much less vulnerable and we will be able to provide employment for our growing labour force. There is no use in the government complaining that we have the fastest growing labour force in the world and therefore it is very difficult to provide jobs. We have been warning the government for ten years that a quarter of a million young people a year are entering the labour market. We must now gear our economy so that it will expand at a sufficiently rapid rate to provide jobs, not only for those who are now unemployed but for the hundreds of thousands of young people who are entering the labour market each year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the hon. member concluded his remarks I was rising to my feet to say that his time had expired. As I said earlier today, because other members want an opportunity to speak I hope extensions of time will not be sought.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to touch on two points. The first is that I feel we need much more centralized economic planning, and the second concerns the youth unemployment problem. With respect to my suggestion that we need more centralized economic planning, it is my feeling that in the present situation we do not have enough planning at the centre and we do not have enough co-ordination among the many departments and agencies of government which produce economic effects.

There are a great many departments of government which do produce economic effects: for example, there is the Department of Finance, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Transport, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and the Treasury Board.

I suggest that we should have a minister whose primary concern would be the co-ordination of the economic policies of all these departments and the development of general economic policies. I suggest that we should have a minister of state for economic policy who would undertake this task. I understand that at the present time the job is being done by a committee of ministers, the principal member of which is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who is assisted by other ministers who have responsibilities in the area of our economy. I believe these ministers have other administrative concerns to occupy their time to the extent that they cannot concentrate primarily on developing economic policies both for the long-run and the short-run.

At present we have the Economic Council of Canada, but it has basically a long-term role. For short-term economic planning we have two branches within the Department of Finance, the economic programs branch and the economic analysis branch. I suggest that a minister of state for economic policy should have jurisdiction over these two branches, which should be taken out of the Department of Finance, and that such a minister should report to the House for the Economic Council of Canada in the same way as the Minister of State for housing reports for CMHC. He would also be in a position to submit problems and programs to the Economic Council for long-term study and analysis.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. McGrath: Can I conclude from the hon. member's remarks that he no longer has confidence in the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) since he recommends a minister of state for economic policy?

Mr. Allmand: No, indeed. Mr. Speaker, I listened to several of the speeches made today. While I heard a great litany of the economic problems facing the country, I did not hear many positive suggestions to solve those problems. It is my impression that a debate like this should be one during which Members of Parliament put forward our ideas for discussion and consideration. Our ideas may not all be good, there may be shortcomings in them, but this is the place to express them.

One of the best speeches on economic policy that I heard in this House was made by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), a former minister. His was one of the most thought-provoking speeches made to the House in a long time. But it seems that all the opposition do is think in terms of personalities.

I think we would be much better off if we could have our discussions on a policy level—but instead we hear the kind of remark just made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

I said I intended to refer to two matters. My first point is that I think we need more co-ordination of our economic departments and a minister should be appointed whose prime concern is economic analysis and planning. The other matter I should like to deal with is youth unemployment; and I admit, as does the government, that this is a serious problem. The government has tried to develop a program to deal with the unemployment of youth. I would refer the House to the report of the Youth Committee entitled "It's Your Turn". I think this report has been much maligned. Unfortunately, the media has concentrated on two very minor aspects of the report, one dealing with the legalization of marijuana and the other with cadet training.

If one reads the report he will find that the principal concern of the Youth Committee was the problem of youth unemployment and most of its recommendations relate to a program and policy to solve this problem. It is unfortunate that the report has been maligned and criticized for matters which are not dealt with principally. The analysis of the youth unemployment problem in this report is excellent. At page 15 of the report, in the summarization of the youth unemployment problem the following is stated:

—Canadian youth experience a consistently high rate of unemployment, even when the economy is at or near full employment;

—the variations in youth unemployment during the business cycle exceed variations in all other groups in the labour force;

—the ratio of the youth unemployment rate to the national unemployment rate has increased during the latter part of the 1960s and reflects a general deterioration in their employment prospects;

—there are distinct regional differences in the employment opportunities for the young.

The report goes on to analyse the reason for this problem among our young people—which is growing worse each year—and states that without any relationship to the general level of our economy, even when our economy is good things are not good for our young people. Let me suggest to the government and the House that we must do more for our young people in the way of giving them training, but not merely at the university level. A few years ago it was part of the Liberal party platform that we provide young people with 100,000 scholarships. That program was replaced by the Canadian student Loans Plan, which is a good one. I suggest that we reconsider a national scholarship program, but let it be a scholarship program directed not only to young people going to university and college but young people going into trade school, going abroad to learn different trades, professions, or the arts, including music and similar skills.

The scholarships should also be used in conjunction with industry and commerce so that young people can be trained while on the job. This would work in a way similar to the apprenticeship training program of the past. If we look back to the 1920s and the 1930s we will remember the apprenticeship programs. In those days employers were willing to hire young people under the apprenticeship program for a period of four or five years, during which they received training in all aspects of commerce or the industry concerned. They did not pay very much but they were being trained while working. When they finished the training program they were in a position to accept and carry out work responsibilities, which many of our young people are not prepared to do today.

We should provide grants directly to industry, business or to the young people in conjunction with grants to industry and commerce, to promote this type of training. Perhaps this could be done through tax incentives, grants or scholarships, but I think it is essential that it be done. This would not only help our young people, it would help employment generally by keeping young people off the labour market for a few years and giving job opportunities to older people who are raising families.

Let me refer to another very good suggestion in the Youth Committee report. The suggestion refers to a Canadian youth employment directorate. This would be a special directorate to assist the Canadian government in resolving the problems of youth unemployment. One of the principal recommendations of the report appears at page 168 as follows:

[Mr. Allmand.]

Therefore the committee recommends that the federal government set up the Canadian Youth Employment Directorate (CYED) to take immediate action in the following areas:

a) in the area of structural youth unemployment, given the high ratio of youth to adult unemployment and the variations in success at finding a job associated with region, socio-economic status and ethnicity,

i) the CYED act as an interlocutor in all governmental social and economic development programs to ensure that the specific employment problems of youth are taken into consideration;

ii) the directorate undertake extensive research into the nature of youth unemployment with a view towards defining and evaluating the range of alternatives for public action;

iii) the directorate establish, if necessary, direct programming to create viable alternatives to present training and retraining programs—

The report also suggests that we reconsider the three-year delay we have in our manpower training program which prevents young people benefiting from these programs unless they have worked for three years. Our government and this House must take a close look at this recommendation. It is one that has been made by others.

I do not wish to take up much time of the House as I know other members wish to speak, but my principal purpose in intervening in the debate was to make these two points. I shall repeat them. We need more economic planning and co-ordination, and I suggest we should have a minister whose sole responsibility is directed toward this end. My second point is that we should pay much more attention to the Youth Committee report "It's Your Turn", especially those parts of it which relate to youth unemployment. I think it is a good report in that respect.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, it was gratifying to listen to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). I am pleased he is so trenchant in his views. Perhaps that is one reason his name was not on the list today. Perhaps he is too frank, forthright and realistic about what has to be done in this country if we are to get some action in respect of unemployment.

In 1968 we had a Prime Minister and a party which had all the answers. There was no problem they could not solve. The just society was around the corner. That corner was difficult for many people to reach. Many have fallen in the gutter trying to get there.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: Right on.

Mr. Coates: Unfortunately, before we reach the end of this year many more people will have fallen by the wayside.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is right on, again.

Mr. Coates: This government has shown, above all else, that it has no answer for any problem. The hon. member who spoke was quite right. He said there is not enough planning. My conclusion, having watched this government operating for three years, is that they do not plan at all. The cupboard is bare. It has been bare for three years. There are no plans and no alternatives. The government is bankrupt of ideas and of alternative programs for the people of Canada. Worse than that, the government does not even know what to do tomorrow. That is why today we are not sure whether a federal election will be called next week, next month or next year.

Mr. Mahoney: The hon. member is coming closer all the time.

Mr. Coates: They cannot make up their minds because they have no alternatives to place before the Canadian people. I have been a member of this House for some time and have watched governments operate. I have tried to appreciate the problems that cabinet ministers face, as well as some of the problems they encounter in running a country as large, diversified and complex as this. In 1957, when I first came to this House, the government I supported faced pretty serious problems it had not known about. There was the hidden report of 1957 that we did not know about. The Canadian people did not know about it either. The report told the government of the day that a recession was on the road and that we should prepare for it.

The previous government had not prepared for it. We had to prepare for it. We had to face the fact that there would be a recession, and there was a recession. We fought it by coming up with new, imaginative schemes for putting Canadians to work. We keep asking the present Prime Minister what programs and plans the government intends to bring forward to create jobs for people this winter. We are worried about unemployment. We know there will not be enough jobs around to keep employed all the people presently working. We want something to be done about this.

We did not do anything unique in 1957, but at least we did something. We employed people through the Department of Public Works. We made the Department of Public Works the main vehicle by which people were able to work during the winter months. We put many people to work. We improvised, I would say effectively, by producing a winter works program. We introduced the roads to resources program and considered the disadvantaged provinces, the prairie provinces. We brought out the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants under which we gave the governments of these regions more money which they could pump into the economy and thereby put more people to work.

These days members of the opposition direct questions at the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) day after day. They ask, "What are you going to do?" The Prime Minister says, "We will do something some day." We say to the Prime Minister, "You are running out of time; provincial governments are running out of time; municipalities are running out of time. If you do not tell them what you intend to do, how can they tie their programs to what you will do?"

Mr. Alexander: Absolutely right.

Mr. Coates: We want the government to produce a program that will provide jobs for people. That is what we are interested in today. We know, as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has said, that many people will not enjoy a merry Christmas on December 25 if this government continues in its ineffectual and ineffective way. All the government says is, "Well, maybe tomorrow we will have a program for the unemployed of Canada."

I think we all like listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). We wish he were right about the stories he tells, stories that he got from "Alice in Wonderland."

Mr. Mahoney: I see the hon. member is another reader.

Mr. Alexander: The parliamentary secretary is in the same dream world as the minister.

Mr. Coates: Although the Minister of Finance may look into the looking-glass, we do not know what to say to our own constituents about how they are to survive this winter. More important, we do not want to see a repetition this winter of the sort of half-baked, ill-conceived summer programs this government has produced. I am referring to programs such as Opportunities for Youth. Surely to goodness the government will not try to introduce for the unemployment this winter the same type of program that it introduced for our youth this summer. Surely to goodness there need not be the nutty, "weirdo" schemes that under the aegis of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) were produced for students this summer. Those programs put into disrepute the government, the people involved and Members of Parliament.

It seems that the government is willing to gamble on anything in the hope of providing some sort of employment for somebody. That is what happened this summer and I do not think the members of this or any other opposition would be willing to go through that again. Yet we get nothing except lame and hair-brained excuses from the government. Perhaps part of the blame should be laid at the feet of members of the government. As I see it, Liberal Members of Parliament—this includes a great many members of the cabinet—have abdicated their responsibilities and allowed the growth of an oligarchy headed by the Prime Minister. He surrounds himself with people who are not elected, people like Marc Lalonde, Ivan Head and a great many more.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: —who run this country.

Mr. Alexander: That's a fact.

Mr. Coates: We in the opposition have suggested to cabinet ministers that these fellows are really the ones who are in control. It is nice to know that the Prime Minister can bring out lists and say, "I am promoting this fellow, that fellow and some other fellow to the position of parliamentary secretary, and those who are left I will make ministers or chairmen of committees so that everybody in the Liberal party will have a position."

Mr. Alexander: That is shameful.

Mr. Coates: The Prime Minister says, "Really, though, when it comes down to power and control, the technocrats in my office and around me run this country." That is the situation we have arrived at in this country. Elected representatives, excepting the very favoured few whom the Prime Minister likes, have nothing to do with governing this country. The rest of them sit by and condone and accept this situation because the pay cheque at the end of the month is bigger, because the Prime Minister has appointed them to this, that or the other position or acknowledged that they should be chairmen of this, that or the other committee, or ministers of state of this, that or the other department. But the technocrats have proven over three years that they do not have any answers to anything. They get large salaries, a lot of help and are well paid—and they know that we have a great deal of unemployment and lots of inflation.

It is time the Liberal party again took over the Liberal party and started producing some action and results. Let us look at a few facts—inflation, for example. We watched this government create unemployment, hardship and misery because they were fighting a great battle against inflation. What are the facts? The rate of increase in the consumer price index, January to August, 1971, is a little short of 5 per cent, 4.8 per cent to be exact. Last month there was a monthly increase in the consumer price index of no less than 7 per cent, or an annual rate of increase of 8.9 per cent. That is some battle! That is some victory! That is a pretty poor performance.

What about the Atlantic provinces? The Atlantic provinces are more adversely affected than at any other time in their history. The Prime Minister said that he was really going to look after regional economic disparity. The only way he has looked after it is by spreading it across the whole nation. That is not what we wanted to see. We wanted to see it eliminated, not spread. We do not want the cancer to go across Canada; we want to cut it out and eliminate it completely. But that is not the way it happened.

What about unemployment in the Atlantic region? Our people received really good news in August: they were told that 9.4 per cent of the people in the Atlantic provinces were unemployed! The same is true for July. In August, 1970, it was 8 per cent. It increased 1.4 per cent in one year. The sad fact is that the situation is no better in Quebec. Quebec keeps talking about separating. I do not know why we in the Atlantic provinces do not do the same. We face the same adversity as the people in Quebec.

What about Nova Scotia? We had a change in government in Nova Scotia. Things were going to be good with a Liberal government in Ottawa and a Liberal government in Nova Scotia. Oh boy, things were going to be good. This is how good things are in that province: in August, 1970, the rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent. In August, 1971, it was 6.5 per cent, an increase of almost 1 per cent. The number of unemployed in Nova Scotia has increased from 14,000 to 19,000. The rate of unemployment has gone up from 5.1 per cent to 6.8 per cent.

We used to be proud of the fact that Nova Scotia had the lowest rate of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces. Now only Newfoundland exceeds us. If Nova Scotia continues with a Liberal government we will probably pass Newfoundland. I am sure we will pass them because in the very near future the clock will run out on the Premier of Newfoundland and there will be a Conservative government in the province. Things are bound to be better. They cannot be worse.

Mr. Gibson: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: I have the great distinction of having the hon. "Hoot" Gibson hooting again. Every time I get up, he hoots like an owl. He only comes out at night. He never says anything. He is not a very wise owl. As a matter of fact, he is rather stupid. I have never heard him make a speech. If he ever does, I will be willing to come here and listen.

An hon. Member: That would be a waste of time.

Mr. Coates: I wish to give an example of what is happening in my constituency. For 22 years we had an engineering office of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It looks after many things for the three Atlantic provinces, in co-operation with the federal government. It has been there since the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act was passed. It has been very effective and very valuable to the area. What does the present Department of Regional Economic Expansion intend to do? It is going to close this office. The department talks about bringing industry to the area, but it is going to close an office which contains more expertise and information than ever existed in any one body at any one time. Rather than try to keep these people working at a time of high unemployment, the department suddenly decides to lay off these 65 people. They are going to eliminate the problem of those 65 people being unemployed by putting them on welfare or unemployment insurance. That is the way they are going to correct the situation in the Atlantic provinces.

This government is bankrupt of ideas. It has been ever since it took office. They are a bunch of technocrats, most of them not elected, who are trying to run this country. The sooner we get rid of this government, the better the country will be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, if I had spoken earlier today I would have dealt with our position with regard to the United States, our industrial potential and our balance of payments, situation—but charity takes a little time and I do not have much time. It may appear that I am being rather ruthless with our party and the government tonight.

It is about time we got away from the state of shock into which we were thrown when the surcharge was announced by the President of the United States. It is understandable that for a time the surcharge will leave us a little shocked, not quite certain what we can do and hoping that it will disappear. The surcharge will disappear. We went to the United States. We asked for concessions. We did not get them. The newspapers said the surcharge might be lifted. Because all of these things might happen, I decided yesterday to go to Washington to find out whether we are going to be exempted or whether the surcharge is going to be lifted. I was told that I would never be able to get this information.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke to the highest officials and elected representatives in the committees of ways and means, finance, and rules. They laid out the whole program. There is no doubt in the world that the surcharge will be lifted. When? When the DISC program is passed, when the United States gets its own terms as far as world trade is concerned, as far as its economy is concerned and as far as the monetary exchange situation is concerned. As far as Canada is concerned, they do not even know we exist.

One gentleman I spoke to in Washington said, "Mr. Otto, did you try to buy anything in Washington with Canadian money?" I said, "yes, I tried to buy something. The storekeeper who had been dealing with Canadians for 40 years looked at the money and said, I think this is Canadian money, isn't it? It is no good here'." I say without any rancour toward the United States that as far as they are concerned, we do not exist. They meant the surcharge to be applied against us. The DISC program is against us, everyone else is against us—and to hope that things will get better is absolute fallacy. This government has to come to the conclusion that this situation is with us. There are going to be no world trade agreements outside of a great favour by the United States. If they leave, they will leave in their favour. They admitted this. Kennedy is gone; the Kennedy program is gone. They are in a position where they must protect themselves against the onslaught of many other nations.

Let me deal with the DISC program. I wonder if Your Honour is aware of the awful results it might have for us. This program is designed, in brief, to set up a corporate tax haven in the United States for all export companies. Congressmen and Senators told me, "We know we have multinational corporations spread all around the world because they can get tax advantages by operating outside the United States. We cannot legislate to bring them back but we shall create a tax haven in the United States which will give them tax-free profits."

Mr. Speaker, there will be loopholes so wide that all the expenses can be charged against domestic production and all the profits counted against exports. No subsidiary company can possibly exist in Canada when the DISC program takes effect, unless they are out of their minds, because the advantages will be fantastic and every United States corporation which is responsible to shareholders will pull any of its subsidiaries right out. This will reduce our industrial potential by 20 per cent. This is a fact. I hope everyone will realize it is a fact because then we may be able to get on with a program without all these political repercussions, a program which will give us a chance to exist and to grow.

My time is running short, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that apart from pulling in subsidiaries, the United States move will result in an increased tendency among Canadians to invest in the United States. It is said it would mean a $100 million loss to the treasury, which is equivalent to $200 million profit by corporations, which is equivalent to about $3 billion in exports and, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has said, since we do about 70 per cent of our import and export business with the United States most of that export portion will be thrown on Canada, so we are in double jeopardy.

The first essential is this: the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must tell Canadians that we can be independent of the United States. We can be industrially and economically independent. Let us wash away all this supposition that we cannot do something because we are merely 22 million people. This is the first time in our history that we have a Prime Minister with such a great following among Canadians. They will listen to him. If he has confidence, and I think he has, he will say, "We must expand our export endeavours, increase our research activities and develop our independence along worth while lines."

I see the house leader for the NDP is making a sign as if to cut my throat. I gave him an undertaking that I would be very brief and I hereby stick to that undertaking. The task now falls upon the Prime Minister to tell Canadians that we can do great things, that there is a great destiny ahead of us if we only have the will, without the help of the nebulous United States which will disappear as far as we are concerned, anyway.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) for permitting one of our party to wind up the debate on our motion. I do not know that I can do much better than he was doing.

Mr. Otto: Maybe you should have let me finish.

Mr. Gleave: I did not prevent the hon. member from finishing. All I will say is this. The action taken by the United States in imposing a surcharge against Canadian goods is forcing us to reassess our position. There were members on the government side who sought to bring about such a reassessment in days not long gone by. Some of us remember Walter Gordon. He brought in a financial policy which was designed to enable the Canadian economy to become less dependent upon the United States, an economy which was viable and able to protect itself. All of us recall perfectly well what happened to Walter Gordon. Since then we have consistently followed a policy which has made the Canadian economy increasingly vulnerable in the kind of situation in which we now find ourselves.

The economic policy which the government has followed since I came to this House in 1968 has made us increasingly vulnerable to measures of the kind taken in the United States. It has sought to make the dollar increasingly expensive. The Canadian dollar has been protected, and those who own Canadian dollars have been protected. But the worker and the farmer have been made the fall guys. If I had 20 minutes in which to speak I would fill in the background. The government has sewn us up piece by piece, month by month. As the hon. member for York East said, it is now time for them to come up with some of the answers.

Mr. Speaker, they do not have the answers. They have placed the Canadian people and the western farmers in a vulnerable position. I could see this coming. Anyone could have seen it coming right from the time the United States refused to renew commodity agreements—the sugar agreement, the wheat agreement. Now we are standing out in the cold. At no time have members on the other side produced a policy which would enable the Canadian people to survive as a community and provide for themselves what they need to enjoy, well-being, jobs and security. We are waiting for the government to come up with solutions and quit shadow-boxing. There was an excellent cartoon in one of the papers not long ago on this very subject.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 58 proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PROPOSED AMCHITKA NUCLEAR TEST—POSSIBLE REFERENCE BY CANADA TO UNITED NATIONS OR INTERNATIONAL COURT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that the reply to my remarks will come from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson), so may I take this occasion to congratulate that courtly and courteous gentleman on his reappointment and say how pleased I was to see him on the survivors' list.

On September 16 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he intended that the Canadian delegation would bring before the United Nations General Assembly the question of the proposed Amchitka nuclear blast or if consideration was being given to having the matter brought to the attention of the International Court. On several other occasions in the earlier part of this session I inquired of the government's intentions in reference to this matter.

The Prime Minister's statement that the United States had not accepted jurisdiction of the International Court was probably an unintentional exaggeration of the reservations made by the United States Senate at the time of the ratification of the United Nations charter, which of course embraces the International Court statute. The Connally amendment, which interposed a self-judging aspect on U.S. acceptance of court jurisdiction, was designed to give the United States the right to determine unilaterally whether a subject matter of litigation lies essentially within its domestic jurisdiction. This is not quite the same thing as a blanket non-acceptance of the court's jurisdiction.

There is insufficient time to discuss this important question of international law in this short debate, but it can be said that contemporary developments and concern for the universal environment, if I may call it that, have internationalized many aspects of national behaviour which were once regarded as purely domestic.

Since my question was asked, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has made his contribution to the general debate at the United Nations and discussed the very serious question of nuclear explosions. There can be little doubt that there is grave risk in the escalation of nuclear testing. The nuclear family is growing and the number of tests is dangerous. There may be some argument about the degree of fall-out danger, but there can be no doubt that the world is a little more polluted and the environment a little more poisoned after each detonation.

This is why there should be continuing, vigorous protest against proliferating tests. I well remember the minister to whom I was parliamentary secretary discussing nuclear tests at the United Nations. The Hon. Howard Green always made the Canadian case with great clarity and with directness. He used to say, "We are against nuclear tests—period". So I agree with what I am advised the present minister said the other day at the United Nations. Not having had a copy of his address I must be general in my appraisal.

I believe we must be relentless in pushing for this final stage of the ban on nuclear explosions. It would be magnificent if the United States, which has given leadership in so many areas, were to set the example in this case and abandon its proposed Amchitka test, the test of a five-megaton bomb, a project which could so gravely affect the environment in such a broad area of the world. The project is called "Cannikin" and I hope that the United States will "can the Cannikin".

So serious is the situation that the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States has allegedly declared the test to be too dangerous to carry out. I must use the word "allegedly" because the report is secret under the imprimatur of the White House. But what we do know is that both Houses of the United States Congress have passed a bill banning the test unless the President gives his direct approval of it. In the House of Representatives the vote was 377 to 9 in favour of the ban; in the Senate no opposition was recorded.

The soul-searching and anxiety within the United States itself should surely prompt Canada to do its utmost to oppose this and all nuclear tests by all powers, and to push for international agreement that this particularly dreadful aspect of our modern technology be relegated to the discard of disuse.

We were shocked and astounded that the Prime Minister has not yet contacted the President on this matter and I hope that every effort will be made to do so. Speeches at international assemblies are important, but all channels of communication must be used to this end. This country must watch closely and make every effort it can to see that no opportunity is left untended that can push toward internationalizing a ban on this heinous aspect of our modern civilization. So we will watch what our delegation does at the United Nations now that our participation in the General Assembly debate is over.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) for his very extravagant remarks. I believe he was as extravagant in calling me courtly as I would be if I called him portly, but I do appreciate the sentiments he expressed.

On the question of further representation to the United States concerning the Amchitka test, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) have both very recently informed the House that no decision had been taken at this time to make additional representation. The Canadian government acted very promptly as early as February 22 of this year to make known to the United States government in unmistakable terms our serious concerns about the Amchitka test. The text of the note delivered on the instructions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs was tabled by him in the House on March 29, 1971. Further representations, of course, would not be ruled out if it were thought that Canadian views were not already appreciated.

In this case, however, there can be no doubt that the United States government knows our concerns very well indeed and that these will be taken into account when the final decision on whether to proceed with the test is made at the highest level. At the present moment, the situation is that President Nixon has not given the necessary approval for the test and there is room to hope that the United States will reconsider its plans, as Canada has already formally requested it to do.

Canada's position has been further strengthened by debate in this House, by questions such as this by the hon. member for Hillsborough and by virtual unanimity in this House in backing the government's stand in opposing these tests. I hope agreement will be reached among the House leaders so that we may proceed with a debate to express that unanimity this coming week.

Canada has been actively pursuing a ban on all underground nuclear weapons' tests for over two years now in the appropriate international forum, the Geneva Disarmament Committee, as well as in the last two General Assemblies. At the forthcoming General Assembly we shall again be registering our concerns about and opposition to all underground tests, including the proposed test at Amchitka, as well as continued tests in the atmosphere. These latter tests in fact represent a greater threat to the environment from radioactive fall-out than do underground tests carried out by the United States and the Soviet Union.

The Amchitka test question is, in one dimension, a bilateral problem between the United States and countries such as Canada and Japan which are particularly concerned about it. In the United Nations context, however, nuclear weapons testing is dealt with as a general international issue, involving as it does a very considerable amount of testing underground by both the two major nuclear powers and in the atmosphere by the two nuclear powers—China and France—that have not adhered to the partial test ban treaty of 1963. At the twenty-sixth General Assembly, Canada will therefore continue to work actively, along with like-minded nations, for the ending by agreement of all nuclear tests.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary's time has expired.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM—REPRESENTATIONS BY ETHNIC ORGANIZATIONS—POLICY STATEMENT ON COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, since my question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) on June 23, 1971, asking for information on the federal government's policy with respect to the recommendations of Volume 4 of the B and B Commission report, interested Canadians have been waiting with patient expectation for a long-overdue policy announcement. The commission set up on July 19, 1963, was instructed to inquire into, among other things, the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada and the measures that should be taken to safeguard that contribution.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Since that time the commission heard many briefs from organizations and private citizens, and on October 23, 1969, it presented to the federal government a report entitled "Book Four, the Cultural Contributions of Other Ethnic Groups". This report was then studied by various ethnic organizations in Canada who later presented their observations in the form of briefs to the Secretary of State. For approximately one year after that no official statement from the federal government was heard until September 12, 1970, when the Secretary of State delivered a speech at the Canadian Conference of the Arts in Toronto. I might add that the text of that speech was widely publicized and was favourably received by ethnic organizations in Canada.

I wholeheartedly endorsed in my public speeches the declaration which the Secretary of State made in that address, especially when he stated:

> When we speak of cultural pluralism, we are making a fundamental choice for Canada both now and for the future, for we are talking about the development in Canada of a multicultural society. Canada is not a melting pot, and the government is opposed to any measure aimed at assimilation. It encourages all initiatives which have as their object the promotion and dissemination, along side the two main cultures, English and French, all other cultural values.

At this time I should like to say that the report of the commission dealing with the cultural contribution of other ethnic groups is an interesting and historic document deserving the serious study especially of the federal and provincial governments. Of the 16 recommendations in this report, ten are the responsibility of the federal government. I should like to urge that recommendation No. 14 be implemented as soon as possible. It deals with financial assistance to cultural and research organizations whose objectives are to foster the arts and letters of cultural groups other than the British and French. Furthermore, there is a great need to assist the ethnic groups of Canada in collecting and preserving their documents in the Archives of Canada.

Although six other recommendations deal with the teaching of languages other than English and French and are the direct responsibility of provincial governments, I believe the federal government should assist at least by providing funds for the publishing of language and history textbooks. Official bilingualism at the federal level in no way precludes the promotion and protection of other languages at the various provincial levels if other ethnocultural groups form a large enough body in these provinces.

I believe that retention of a language is an important factor in the evolution, development and expansion of a culture. Therefore, if any encouragement can be given to the teaching of more languages in Canada, it is important that such encouragement be given. That this encouragement is important is without question. That it should be provided I think becomes clear after one reads the 655 paragraphs in volume IV of the B and B commission's report. We all proclaim equality of opportunity as an aim of the western democratic civilization to which we are committed.

I should like to urge the Secretary or State to appeal to his colleagues in the government to do everything in their power to assist in the preservation and promotion of the various ethnic groups making up the fabric of Canadian society. I believe that these efforts are worthy of our support because they can be defended on a realistic assessment of Canada as it is today. The very premise to the uniqueness of our Canadian plurality is based on the association of various cultural components in our society.

Identity does not just happen but must arrive out of a healthy, positive experience fed by tradition, current interest and future aspirations. Just as an individual person, to be healthy, must have a wholesome acceptance of oneself, so does a nation. Although Canada, which was inhabited by Indians and Eskimos, was first colonized by the French early in the seventeenth century and then by the British, immigrants from various other countries began arriving on Canadian shores as early as 1750. There was even a Canadian of Polish origin in Canada's first Parliament in the House of Commons in 1867.

The history of Canada truly is composed of multi-ethnic and multi-cultural contributions. This is Canada's unique identity. Financial support from all levels of government will be necessary to preserve and develop this identity. Furthermore, I believe that constitutional recognition should be accomplished explicitly in the future by a statement in the Canadian constitution acknowledging the multi-cultural nature of Canadian society and, implicitly, by adopting measures such as a bill of rights which would have the effect of protecting minority rights.

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, first of all in reply I would like to pay tribute to the assiduous and continuing concern of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) for the interests of ethnic groups in this country. I assure him and the groups in question that the government shares this concern.

Originally, the hon. member raised this question on June 23 last. At that time the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) responded and pointed out that the recommendations contained in volume 4 of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism were before the cabinet. The matter has advanced even further since then and I am optimistic that the government will be making its position clear very shortly. I hope, and in fact I am sure, that the hon. member and the ethnic groups will be pleased as a result of this thoughtful and careful study of a matter that is important to all Canadians.

GRAIN—LEGAL ACTION TO COMPEL GOVERNMENT TO MAKE PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, the other day I intruded myself, perhaps with some trepidation and timidity, into the question of the payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and having received the answer that I did from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) I got my dander up. I thought it was about time members from other parts of Canada interested themselves in a rather delicate subject, because one can turn to the Bill of Rights passed by the British Parliament in 1689 and find therein that he will be—

—assuming and exercising a power of dispensing with and suspending of laws and the execution of laws without consent of Parliament—

That was the name of the game in those days—to see it never happened. Later in that preamble we find:

By levying money for and to the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative for other time and in other manner than the same was granted by Parliament—

That is the name of the game in Canada, because that is precisely what is happening here. We have been asked in the tax year six months removed to levy moneys for uses of Canada and under the statutes of Canada, and they have been diverted to other purposes: or at least now, since we do run at a deficit, we have been asked to say, "Oh, that was only a mistake. We have to use the money for some other reasons." Sir, that cannot be done.

The fight is joined because the farmers in western Canada have taken the measure of issuing a writ against the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and serving it on him. And yesterday, in the Toronto Globe and Mail, one finds at page 7 two assistant professors of the faculty of law at Queen's University, Kingston, namely, David J. Mullan and John D. Whyte, writing to say that they have written to the Minister of Justice asking him to give them the right to sue, to see that the law of Canada is obeyed. I talked to those two professors today, and they did not receive an answer from the Minister of Justice. I would have been awfully surprised had I phoned them and found that they had received an answer, and more especially if he had said, "Go ahead, boys; sue the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister of this country." But that did not happen.

We know the Minister of Justice, for all his posturing, is a lovely fellow, but he still has to posture because in the just society he simply cannot instruct the cabinet on what is the law and what their duties are. Let us take two cases in recent times. One was fought in the British Columbia Supreme Court, before Mr. Justice Norris, on October 19, 1960, where it was held;

It is the duty of members of the executive—

That is the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, and so on.

—to obey the law, not to disregard it, and they must ascertain the law in order to obey it.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I am glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary here tonight. He is a nice fellow and I am delighted about his attendance, because I know he has the onerous job of representing a boss who did not have the guts to attend this evening. I quote further:

It is the duty of members of the executive to obey the law, not to disregard it, and they must ascertain the law in order to obey it. Matters of the practice and policy of the government or any department thereof cannot override the duty of obedience to the law, nor will it avail a minister of the Crown to say that he acted on legal advice where it turns out to be wrong.

We do not know whether the Minister of Justice gave advice that turned out to be wrong, because we do not have him here tonight. I am sure we will never hear his side of the story until his memoirs are published many years hence.

The fact is there is abuse of the law in this matter. There is a statute which obligates the government of Canada to collect money for a certain purpose. That money was not collected for this purpose. We have the Revised Statutes, and the fact is that the Minister of Justice decided to see that the law we are dealing with tonight was not included in those statutes. In addition to the case I have mentioned in of British Columbia there was a case some years ago in Quebec where Premier Duplessis directed the chairman of the Liquor Licensing Board to see that the bar licence of one Roncarelli of the city of Montreal was not renewed because the individual involved supported Jehovah Witnesses by signing bail bonds. The courts of that day had the guts to stand up, as I hope they always will, and awarded damages and substantial costs against the Premier of the province.

Finally, chapter J-2, section 4(b), provides:

The Minister of Justice shall

(b) see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with law—

He has not done that in this case. In section 5(d) it is stated that the Attorney General of Canada, which is the same individual, shall——have the regulation and conduct of all litigation for or against the Crown for any public department, in respect of any subject within the authority or jurisdiction of Canada—

It shall be written on the tombstone of the present Minister of Justice that because of the schizophrenia of the time he was supposed to do one thing but did another and that this finally caught up with him. I regret, indeed, having to say that in view of the appointment of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I first of all want to thank the hon. member for his kind words in respect of my appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the great Minister of Justice whom we have in Canada. In answer to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), yesterday the Minister of Justice said:

Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen concerned can take any action they want. Whether the courts will receive it is another matter.

Further, in answer to a supplementary question by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) the minister said:

I have not received any request for mandamus action. I would have to consider it when I get it. But the final result remains with the courts, as the hon. gentleman knows.

In fact, as the hon. gentleman knows, the minister was away in Saskatchewan during the weekend and Monday and Tuesday, and this matter was brought to his attention late yesterday. I think the hon. member must be aware of the commencement of proceedings in court yesterday. A notice of motion was filed in the trial division of the Federal Court of Canada by Pedersen, Norman, McLeod & Todd, barristers and solicitors, 403 Sterling Building, Regina, Saskatchewan. It is as follows:

BETWEEN:

The Attorney General of Saskatchewan . . .

Etc.

- and -

William Surdia, of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan;
Clarence Lucas, of Mazenod, Saskatchewan;
Roy Ames, of Milestone, Saskatchewan; and James Bradley, of Milestone, Saskatchewan, . . .

Applicants

- and -

The Minister of Finance

Respondent

The first part of that notice of motion reads as follows:

Take notice that an application will be made to this honourable court on Wednesday, October 6th, 1971, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon, central standard time, or so soon thereafter as counsel can be heard on behalf of the applicants, at the Court House, at the city of Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan, for a writ of mandamus, directing the respondent Minister of Finance to pay to the Canadian Wheat Board forthwith all sums of monies required to be paid to the Canadian Wheat Board by the respondent minister by virtue of the provisions of The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act of Canada, chapter 2 of the Statutes of Canada, 1956.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, being a distinguished member of the bar, will know that it is inappropriate for the Minister of Justice and others to comment on this subject at this time.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, October 1, 1971.

The House met at 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF MR. SPEAKER DHILLON OF THE LOK SABHA OF INDIA

Mr. Speaker: I have particular pleasure in bringing to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of an eminent visitor to our country, Mr. Speaker Dhillon of the Lok Sabha of India.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Speaker Dhillon's visit to Canada as the official guest of the House of Commons honours us greatly. I am pleased that his presence here today provides an opportunity to thank him for the most generous hospitality which he personally extended to our colleagues who, last year, attended Interparliamentary Union and Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meetings in New Delhi.

As you prepare to return home, Mr. Speaker, we ask you to take with you our message of friendship and of good will to the members of the Lok Sabha and to the people of India.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL—LEGALITY OF PROCEEDING WITH DEBATE IN LIGHT OF COURT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last evening at the very end of the sitting the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard), speaking for his minister in reply to a question that had been put to him by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), declined to answer the question or to comment on it because of a situation that has developed.

The parliamentary secretary read the terms of a notice of motion filed in the Federal Court of Canada at Regina having to do with the government's position under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The parliamentary secretary took the position that matters related to that situation are now sub judice and therefore cannot be the subject of comment in the House of Commons.

Points of order are not usually raised during the adjournment debate. Therefore there was no objection taken last night and no ruling given. But I feel I must at the earliest opportunity call to Your Honour's attention the fact that yesterday the government House leader indicated that the business to be placed before the House on Monday would be Bill C-244. I remind you, Sir, that that bill includes a provision for the repeal, effective July 31, 1970, of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

It seems to me that at some point we must have a ruling on this matter. Either it is sub judice and, if so, we cannot proceed to discuss Bill C-244, or it is not sub judice, in which case questions and discussions on this matter are still in order.

• (11:10 a.m.)

I felt I should raise the point of order at the earliest opportunity, though perhaps Your Honour will feel you should not be called upon to rule on it until the issue is before us again. In any event, if it is not raised earlier I shall raise it on Monday when Bill C-244 is called. I hope that in case Your Honour finds the sub judice contention is correct the government will be ready to proceed with some other item of business.

AGRICULTURE

STATEMENT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS FOR UNPROCESSED PRODUCTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief statement providing further information on agricultural assistance programs designed to cover unprocessed agricultural products which will not be eligible for assistance under Bill C-262, the Employment Support Act. You will recall that I gave notice of this assistance when I spoke on second reading of Bill C-262 on September 7, 1971.

I can advise that the Agricultural Stabilization Board and the Agricultural Products Board have been authorized to come forward with individual commodity programs designed to help producers adversely affected by the surtax. The programs will take any one of several forms, namely, purchase of the product, deficiency payments or payment to distributors for the benefit of producers. In this latter connection distributors to be eligible must have been exporters of the unprocessed product to the United States in the base period, must demonstrate that the price paid to farmers for raw products was maintained at a level consistent with that which would have been expected in the absence of surtax, that distribution volume and employment were maintained. I say the latter because employment in the agricultural distributing industry is important as well as in the agricultural processing industry.

As with processed products there will be no requirement that exports to the United States be maintained.

I am issuing a press release today inviting applications from the agricultural industry both from producer groups and distributors. Applicants are asked to provide basic data relative to the criteria and on the impact of the surtax on their operations to supplement the information already accumulated by the department.

In conclusion, I want to say that I am very conscious of the need to put these programs in place promptly and consistent with the need of those affected and the international situation.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased, as we always are, when at least some token recognition, no matter how small, is given to the agricultural industry. It is unfortunate that over the past year the government has not seen fit to maintain farmers' incomes at a realistic level by using the mechanics of the existing Agricultural Stabilization Act which received Royal Assent on January 1, 1958, I believe. Far more use could have been made of that act to keep farmers' incomes at realistic levels. It will be interesting, and we will all be watching, to see the extent to which the assistance indicated by the minister will filter down to the actual producer.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement indicates that he is keeping the commitment he made earlier to provide some support and assistance for farm products affected by the United States surtax. He says that it will be up to those concerned to make application. I suppose the procedure will be clarified as we go along. For example, I am not sure who would make application on behalf of barley growers. Would it be the Canadian Wheat Board or one of the farm organizations? It would be fairly clear, of course, who would make application on behalf of meat packers or other processors. I hope the procedures will be clarified and that the minister will advise the House what the process will be for different products having in mind the various ways in which they are marketed.

INVESTIGATION OF USE OF ROBERT EADIE AS INFORMER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43 arising out of last night's CBC program "Midweek" during which Mr. Eadie, his father, and several other young men denied almost every detail of the Solicitor General's statement in the House on the Eadie case. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That this House, being deeply concerned by the conflict between statements made in this House by the Solicitor General and the participants in the CBC program "Midweek", instructs the Solicitor General, the officials involved in the Cornwall informers investigation, and the program participants to appear before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for an investigation of the situation.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Olson.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

RESTORATION FOR PREMEDITATED MURDER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I ask the House to give unanimous consent to a motion based upon urgent and pressing necessity. I call the attention of the House, if that is needed after the vicious kidnapping and killing of an innocent boy within a mile or two of this chamber, to one of the most horrible symptoms of the permissive society. That symptom is the licence to kill attitude of an increasing number of criminals since the abolition of hanging by the Criminal Code amendment of four years ago coupled with the total and indiscriminate use of the power to pardon. I therefore propose to move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott):

This House calls upon the government to act immediately to restore capital punishment for the crime of premeditated murder.

Mr. Speaker: Again, this is a motion proposed to the House under Standing Order 43 and as such requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

BROADCASTING

TELEVISION SERVICE TO RURAL MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 in a case of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns a threat to the television service provided to the rural population of Manitoba. The Canadian Radio-Television Commission has recommended that stations in neighbouring states be prevented from effectively serving Canadians by making their continued operation economically impractical. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey):

That in regions served inadequately by alternative broadcasting media, the government shall not by tax legislation, amendment or other subterfuge, cause the level of broadcasting service, or the diversity of program choice, to be reduced in rural Manitoba or in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not and the motion will not be put.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INDIAN EDUCATION IN NORTHEASTERN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O.43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the withdrawal of Indian school children from schools in northeastern Alberta. In view of the escalation of difficulties that has occurred in the past two days and in view of the failure of the minister to take effective action in the matter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the House do instruct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to travel to northeastern Alberta for consultation with the chiefs of the Saddle Lake-Athabasca district about this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL—ACCEPTANCE OF OPPOSITION AMENDMENTS—GOVERNMENT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, knowing that he is fully conversant with the topic I am about to raise. In light of the Prime Minister's admission that the government is breaking the law and is anxious to rectify the situation by passing Bill C-244, is the government now prepared to accept any of the 15 amendments proposed by the opposition parties or is the government prepared to put forth any amendments of its own which will make the bill more acceptable and workable for prairie farmers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the bill was before the House there could have been discussions of this kind and there can be when it is again brought forward. I do not think that in the question period we should discuss what amendments might be made when the bill is properly before the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister advise if any new proposals or amendments will be put forward as a result of the meeting this morning between the prairie Ministers of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and if there will be a statement made to the House today with regard to that meeting?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member address that question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board when he is in the House. I am not even sure if that meeting has yet concluded.

IMMEDIATE PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I shall direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement as reported on radio and television in western Canada that the government admits it is in default on payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, can the Acting Prime Minister inform the House that by virtue of a directive either from the Prime Minister or the cabinet the payments now due are going forward to the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister made it perfectly clear with regard to this particular interview, as he has previously on a number of occasions in the House, that the government will be proceeding as rapidly as it can to do justice to the prairie farmers and with the alternative conditions which are offered to them.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Canadian people have no doubt that justice will be done, but I asked whether the government is taking the necessary action through the Treasury Board or regular channels to make these payments to the Canadian Wheat Board in view of the admission that they are due and payable and are now in default?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member and the House are aware that the government is proposing a payment to the farmers at the earliest possible moment of some $100 million. If the assent of the opposition to this cannot be obtained, we will proceed with a much lesser payment under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Pay your bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three or four supplementaries on the same subject. I wonder if we should have all of them at this time. For the moment the Chair will return to the original questioner, the hon. member for Vegreville.

Mr. Mazankowski: My supplementary question is for the Acting Prime Minister. If the government is still of the opinion that Bill C-244 in its present form is such good legislation, can the minister advise the House why it will not allow the bill to stand on its own merits and pay out the $100 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is argument.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ACTION REQUIRED OF CANADA BY UNITED STATES FOR REMOVAL OF U.S. IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the only minister present who might have information of this kind. The question arises out of a statement made by Secretary Connally. In his statement Secretary Connally suggested that the United States import surtax would be removed as soon as certain conditions were fulfilled and bilateral discussions, as well as multilateral discussions, concerning some of the conditions take place. Has the Canadian government received any bill of particulars as to the kind of action the United States wants Canada to take on the road to the removal of the 10 per cent import surcharge?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge, anyway; it might have come more recently but I have no knowledge of any bill of particulars, as the hon. member calls it. In discussions with the United States Secretaries we have, as was stated in the House by the Prime Minister, talked about a number of issues which have been referred to by the Americans as irritants, ranging from the automobile agreement to the use of bourbon. We have also put in our own list of irritants, and that goes from the de facto embargo on the export of uranium to the conditions of the United States copyright act. There will be discussion on these matters in due course. I must admit that the present circumstances may not be the most favourable, but in my discussion with Secretary Stans, for example, we made plans for bilateral meetings on all these matters.

Mr. Lewis: I would have thought it dangerous to couple automobiles with bourbon, Mr. Speaker. If I may say so, however, that is not the question. Secretary Connally stated that he wanted certain barriers removed by all the trading partners of the United States as a condition. What I think the House should know, and what the minister should tell us now or, if not, at the earliest possible moment, is this: what barriers do the Americans want Canada to remove? Are we talking about the safeguards in the auto pact or about other things as well?

Mr. Pepin: My answer is simple, then. There has been no formal request by the United States along the lines suggested by the hon. member.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Since the United States Secretary of the Treasury has made it very clear that the surcharge will not be removed until bilateral consultations between the countries concerned have taken place, when does the government intend to sit down with the United States and participate in such bilateral negotiations to the end that the surcharge may be got rid of as soon as possible?

Mr. Pepin: We did that very early after the announcement of the United States economic measures. I recall there were a number of people on the opposition side, supporters of the party to which the hon. member belongs, who suggested we rushed to Washington too early to debate this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: Since then, either within the framework of international organizations or bilaterally—I referred a moment ago to my conversations with Mr. Scans, for example—these discussions have been going on.

Mr. Hees: As the discussions which have been going on so far have been completely useless in getting anything done, when does the government intend to talk in a factual way with the United States government so that something can be done?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman always speaks on the basis of ignorance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hees: If I am speaking from ignorance, will the minister advise the House what the situation is and how close we are to seeing the 10 per cent surcharge removed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Hees: If I speak from ignorance, tell me about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Come on!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (11:30 a.m.)

REMOVAL OF AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS AS PRECONDITION TO REMOVAL OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Mr. John Petty, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, called a press conference three days ago at which he specifically said that the removal of the transitional safeguards in the auto pact was a precondition to removal of the 10 per cent import surcharge, may I ask the minister whether he or any member of the Canadian government has been in touch with the government of the United States to ascertain whether or not Mr. Petty was speaking on behalf of the United States government, and that this is indeed a precondition to removal of the surtax?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there has been no transcript made of the conversation between Mr. Petty and some Canadian newspapermen so it is very difficult for me to know exactly what he said. I really do not know whether—

Mr. Hees: Are you admitting that you are ignorant?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is pretty obvious that I have touched a delicate nerve.

Mr. Hees: Come on, smiling boy, let us have some information if you are so smart.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was saying—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. minister kindly resume his seat. Obviously we are not making much headway on the supplementary question asked by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. The minister was attempting to reply but no one could hear his reply because of the interruptions. I suggest that this might be the time to pass to another subject and return to this matter, if we can, before the end of the question period.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the minister who indicated his willingness to reply. Surely any disturbance in the House should not preclude the minister from making a reply and giving the House a statement which I think would be of considerable interest to the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It was my impression that the minister had attempted to reply and had completed his reply. If not, he will be allowed to complete it.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that it is very difficult to know what Mr. Petty said because we have no transcript. I have read reports in some newspapers but I do not know whether the reporting was totally accurate. That is no reflection on the press, but sometimes one person will hear something differently from the person standing next to him. So, as I say, it is difficult to comment. However, to my knowledge there has been no sine qua non condition vis-à-vis the auto pact agreement and the removal of the surcharge.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask hon. members to co-operate with the Chair. I think in all justice we should now go to the hon. member for Abitibi. About 15 minutes have gone by and a representative of his party has not had the chance to ask a question in the first series of questions. I now recognize the hon. member for Abitibi.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT—STUDY OF ECOLOGICAL CONSEQUENCES BY FEDERAL AND QUEBEC GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could he say whether joint studies or research have been made, or shall be made eventually, by the federal and Quebec governments so as to determine the possible effects of the hydroelectric development of the eastern basin of James Bay on hunting, fishing, wildlife, recreation activities, etc.?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether such studies are being made now, but I do know that the provincial government is carrying out studies to that effect, and we are following the situation very closely, because we know that this could affect the Indian people of the area. This is why we are concerned by this matter.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Can the Minister, who stated some time ago that studies were performed on the possibility of moving the Indian people from that area, tell us if those studies are effectively under way and if he will soon report to the House about that matter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether a report will soon be made to the House, but I know that the Indian Association met with the Quebec premier some ten days ago and that the officials of my department will in the near future hold a meeting with the Indians in Ottawa in that connection.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—OBSERVANCE OF PROVISIONS OF NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Minister of the Environment regarding the ill effects caused in the Peace River and Athabasca area because the Navigable Waters Protection Act was not adhered to, is the Acting Prime Minister able to assure the House that the provisions of that act will be directly adhered to in the case of the project in the James Bay area?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not personally aware of what applicability the Navigable Waters Protection Act has to the James Bay project, but I am certainly convinced that the Minister of the Environment will see that that act is applied to that particular project.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCES OF FRANCOPHONE COUNTRIES—ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING VOTING BY CANADIAN DELEGATES AND DISPLAY OF FLAGS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the agreement announced outside the House which provides for a new basis for structuring the delegation to plenary sessions of meetings of Francophone countries. Can the minister advise whether it is intended that in voting Canada is bound to abstain on any question not acceptable to the Quebec members of the delegation; and is it also the intention that at Francophone meetings both the flag of Canada and that of Quebec will be flown?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while the arrangements are not yet entirely complete, it is our intention to pursue a format or modus operandi similar to that successfully employed at the last meeting.

Mr. Macquarrie: Can the Acting Prime Minister advise if and when it is intended to bring this fundamental diminution of the national government's primacy in the field of foreign affairs before the House for consideration?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of the question. I do not think there has been over the course of the past year a diminution but rather an appreciation.

Mr. Macquarrie: Can the Acting Prime Minister give the House an assurance that the government, at the same time as it is adopting a one-China policy in the international scene, is not abandoning a one-Canada policy?

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Out of recognition of the rights of the other provinces in the fields of language and culture, will the flags of those provinces be flown at these and similar conferences? Will the other provinces be invited to participate and will they have the same right of veto?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think all provinces that are interested in the question of Francophonie have been invited to attend and their presence will be welcomed. At such a conference the rights of all provinces will be similar.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a supplementary. In view of the fact that reports on this subject are necessarily conjectures at this time, and in view of the likelihood that there may be very undesirable misunderstandings of any arrangement that is arrived at, would the Acting Prime Minister undertake to see that the government at the earliest opportunity makes a full statement to the House on the exact arrangements arrived at as soon as negotiations are completed? It is my understanding that they are not yet completed.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the understanding that the arrangements are not yet completed is a correct one. As soon as conveniently appropriate a statement will be made.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

LEGALITY OF APPOINTMENT OF 27

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Acting Prime Minister which has reference to the upholding of Canadian law. Has the Acting Prime Minister checked with the legal officers of the Crown to determine whether the appointment of the present 27 parliamentary secretaries announced recently satisfies sections 4 and 5 of the Government Organization Act, 1970, particularly as that act pertains to the legal status of the Postmaster General, in order to see whether there still is not an extra parliamentary secretary appointed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that a legal check has been made which resulted in the announcement of the Prime Minister last evening, and that the situation is now in order.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister did not understand my question. I was not talking about the 28 appointed illegally yesterday but rather about the 27 appointed as of today. On the basis of the 27 now appointed, not on the basis of the 28, has the minister checked to determine whether they come within the law under sections 4 and 5 of the Government Organization Act, 1970? If not, will he investigate and make a statement to the House before this day is over regarding the legality of the present 27 parliamentary secretaries, keeping in mind the status of the Postmaster General under this act?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to check into this and, if there is any illegality, report to the House.

TRANSPORT

CALGARY EXPERIMENTAL PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM—PARTICIPATION BY OTHER CITIES IN SIMILAR DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. Joseph P. Guay (St. Boniface): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of radio and news reports pertaining to the fact that the city of Calgary has been chosen by the federal government for the development of an experimental public transportation system using special buses travelling in special lanes, will the minister indicate whether this will be made available to other cities in Canada, particularly to the greater Winnipeg area?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Joe for parliamentary secretary.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that in respect of all of these pilot projects taking place the information is made available to other cities. I might point out to the hon. member that the results of the expensive pilot project regarding rail line abandonment now under way in Winnipeg will be made available to other cities.

USE OF INFORMERS—INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION OF EADIE ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the extreme doubt now placed on the veracity of the statements of the Solicitor General, will the Prime Minister initiate an independent inquiry into the allegations of Mr. Eadie and others?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Solicitor General has yet had an opportunity to familiarize himself with last night's program and until such time as he has I do not think it would be appropriate to make a response.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Is he going to repudiate the statements made last night on the CBC program "Mid-Week" and, if not, is he now prepared to appear before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee along with those officials involved in the Cornwall informers investigation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, last night I had the opportunity of speaking to the Maritimes Corrections Association in Prince Edward Island, and did not have time, as the hon. member probably had, to watch television, but I have asked for a copy of the speech.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, will the Solicitor General undertake to the House to inform himself and then reply to the question I have asked him?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not only a lawyer but an expert in that field; he should know, therefore, that he should refer to facts before asking that type of question.

DRUGS

INCREASING USE OF HEROIN IN ONTARIO CITIES—DISCUSSION WITH ONTARIO OF JOINT PROGRAM TO COPE WITH PROBLEM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of very serious drug problems, particularly the widespread use of heroin in Ontario cities as indicated in the report prepared by a committee appointed by that department, is the department taking steps to discuss with the government of Ontario the planning of a joint program in order to deal with this situation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's question. This report has just recently come to my attention. There is no doubt that not only in Ontario but in other provinces there is mounting evidence of increasing inflows of heroin and of people resorting to its use. We have endeavoured to upgrade, on an emergency basis, various aspects of our drug abuse program. As we analyse the findings we are certainly entertaining a course of action such as the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am not critical of the number of expensive studies undertaken by the minister's department, but there is not much point in carrying out studies unless they are followed by action. Will the minister consider discussing what can be done about this very serious problem with the province of Ontario and other provinces?

Mr. Munro: I have already answered the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that we are considering adopting that very course. These studies can be justified by the fact that we have already expended considerable money to combat this problem. These studies have indicated to us how this money can be most usefully directed.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—PROVISION OF EMPLOYMENT SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): In view of the reported widespread lay-offs throughout our economy, particularly in the pulp and paper industry, which are beyond the scope of the Employment Support Act, will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce advise the House whether the government intends to introduce a comprehensive employment support program to overcome this disaster?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the pulp and paper industry singled out by the hon. member, I have already indicated a number of things that are being done at the federal and provincial levels, in the case of Quebec. A few days ago I indicated to the hon. member that we were looking into other possibilities. I also indicated that a meeting is to take place between the leaders of that sector of Canadian industry and members of the cabinet.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise whether these support or relief programs will include assistance to the pulp and paper industry in respect of the $700 million cost of anti-pollution measures and other types of programs?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that some of the measures announced in the last budget would accomplish this, as well as some measures being taken by the Quebec government. I have indicated also that we are looking into other ways of helping in this very difficult situation. My hon. friend is perhaps aware of the fact that the pulp and paper industry is picking up a little. Sales in August were 3 or 4 per cent higher than they were last year at the same time, and with regard to the United States they were 9 to 10 per cent higher than they were in August last year.

Mr. Marshall: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that at this point we should perhaps limit the number of supplementary questions because we will be running short of time in a few minutes.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PULP AND PAPER—SUGGESTED MISSION TO ASSESS WORLD MARKET CONDITIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to send a mission abroad to examine world market conditions for Canadian paper products, especially with a view to assessing the market for Canadian newsprint? While he is composing this mission, perhaps he might engage the assistance of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who was so successful in this field.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In respect of the last part of the question, Mr. Speaker, last night I did recognize during my speech the good work of my hon. friend when he was the minister.

Mr. Hees: All is forgiven.

Mr. Pepin: Thank you very much. I always take with a smile the remarks the hon. member makes about me and I hope he does the same in the future. Now I have forgotten the question.

An hon. Member: That's not a compliment.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the sort of thing recommended by the hon. member is already taking place. We send missions going abroad. A few days ago a German mission came to Canada to look at the possibility of trade in respect of newsprint and other forest products. The government of Newfoundland recently gave us some advice in this respect, and we are trying to accommodate them with some—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING SPARE PARTS FOR IMPORTED RUSSIAN TRACTORS—ALTERNATIVE SOURCE OF SUPPLY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is now in a position to answer the question posed yesterday by the hon. member for Kent-Essex regarding the availability of spare parts for tractors of Russian manufacture purchased by some Canadians?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I made inquiries and have been advised that, notwithstanding the difficulties of the distributor, there is an ample supply of parts available for these tractors. If anyone who requires them would get in touch with my office I can provide them with phone numbers in Montreal so they can have immediate access to these parts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN ASSISTANCE TO PRIVATE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister were here I would be putting this question to him, but perhaps it is even more appropriate that I put it to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as President of the Treasury Board.

In view of the action of the government in appointing 27 parliamentary secretaries, the largest number in history, and in view of the large staffs that are available to ministers in their office establishments, is the government also considering increasing the assistance available to private Members of Parliament in all parties to enable them to cope with the ever-increasing workload?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I think we did examine this particular problem briefly during the discussion of the bill under which these parliamentary secretaries were appointed. The conclusion was reached then that perhaps the balance was not too inappropriate but that certainly some time in the future it should be subject to review.

[Later]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if, in his capacity as a member of the Internal Economy Commission, he would raise in that body the whole question of providing adequate assistance to Members of Parliament? I am referring to private members in all parties.

Mr. Drury: I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

SALARY INCREASES FOR MEMBERS OF PARTY RESEARCH STAFFS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): While this discussion is going on, may I ask what the attitude of the government is to the fact that the research staffs supplied to all parties are on a fixed budget and therefore the staffs are not entitled to any of the increments that other employees of the House receive? How is this problem to be solved?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I think this is perhaps rather more a question for the House. However, if I may venture an opinion, while the budget for research is a stipulated amount there is no such restriction on the movement within that budget of individual salaries.

Mr. Fairweather: This is a semantic argument on the part of the minister. Is it not true that the amounts supplied to the research people have not increased and therefore those employed at the beginning of the program have not participated in the increments which everybody else in this establishment has received?

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES EAST COAST LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE ON CANADIAN PORTS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has any up to date information on the United States longshoremen's strike spreading on the east coast and in particular if he has had any meetings or been active himself in connection with the whole matter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): In so far as the east coast strike is concerned, I have simply asked for an up to date report. It is much too early to assess the benefits or the disadvantages insofar as Canadian east coast ports are concerned. I will have something on it later today.

On the matter of the strike on the west coast which is affecting the port of Vancouver, I am meeting this afternoon with representatives of the Canadian Importers Association to see if there is any way out of what is presently a most difficult situation all round.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR COVERAGE OF ROBERT LEMIEUX PRESS CONFERENCE BY TELEVISION AND RADIO

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Solicitor General. Did he or the security planning group in his department request Channel 10 television, Montreal, and Radio-Canada to cover a press conference by Robert Lemieux and to report to the department?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this certainly occurred without the knowledge or the participation of my officials. If this originated from an employee of my department and is contrary to freedom of the press, I think that Radio-Canada and private stations were justified in objecting to this kind of practice. I have asked the deputy minister to inform me of what happened.

POST OFFICE

STEPS TO INCREASE SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): This question has become urgent and pressing because of the lack of government action.

An hon. Member: So what's new?

Mr. Muir: I should like to direct it to the honourable and genial Postmaster General. In view of the fact that postmasters in staff post offices receive less salary than their assistants, when will steps be taken to correct this anomaly?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I can point out that the rates of pay of our postmasters are related to those of their subordinates and that some of these subordinates have already negotiated new rates. This is why the anomaly exists. A new contract is being negotiated which includes the postmasters, and when an agreement is signed the rates will be retroactive to October, 1970, which will do away with the anomaly. I think that a settlement is imminent.

Mr. Muir: I thank the minister for his frank and kind reply. Can he assure me that if this does not take place cabinet ministers will receive less salary than their parliamentary secretaries?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF LAND USE REGULATIONS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the minister's recent statement about not proceeding with the Yukon minerals bill this session, will the land use regulations for the north also be held up until the Yukon minerals bill is proceeded with?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Harding: When does the minister expect the proposed land use regulations to become operative in the north?

Mr. Chrétien: In 15 days, Mr. Speaker.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ACTION TO PREVENT SALE OF DRUGS TO STUDENTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put my question to the Solicitor General.

Since there is a law which prohibits the sale and use of certain drugs in Canada and since very strong pressure is applied in schools, at least in the province of Quebec, to sell dope to students, could the minister tell us if agents of the R.C.M.P. are tracking these dope peddlers?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): We try to enforce the law with the co-operation of provincial and municipal police forces.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTENSION OF REGIONAL PAY DIFFERENTIALS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the policy of pay differentials in the regions of Canada, which has been presented as the federal position in the case of nurses be extended as a matter of policy to other categories in the Public Service?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The policy of pay differentials for people not required to have a high degree of mobility has been progressively introduced or proceeded with over the past four years. It is the intention of the government to continue in this direction as it produces a much better relativity and a much greater sense of fairness than attempts to equate unequal parts.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BANK OF CANADA

ISSUE OF NEXT BILL IN SERIES OF COLOURFUL CURRENCY

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to answer a question regarding the new currency issue, of which the Minister of Finance took notice on Wednesday.

The Bank of Canada is not yet certain about the exact time of release for the next bill in the new series. However, I am informed that on grounds of security the announcement would in any event be withheld until just prior to release. Counterfeiters have the best chance of success in passing bogus bills when a new design is still unfamiliar to the public, and it is not intended to give them a headstart.

URBAN AFFAIRS

AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS PROJECTS—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH PROVINCES AND CITIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): In view of my patience I hope the Speaker will allow me two questions to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In light of the mayor of Toronto's criticism that the federal government has not come up with funds for winter works projects, can the minister at least assure the House that there will be federal funds available for municipal winter works projects?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The Prime Minister has dealt with this question on several occasions in the House in the last few days and I would not wish to add to his comments at this stage.

• (12 noon)

Mr. Alexander: In spite of the minister's tri-level conferences which have been held and which the Prime Minister seems to indicate have not been too successful, and in view of the fact that the federal government is now attempting to meet with the provinces, I ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs this question. Inasmuch as Toronto feels it will now be necessary to prepare to go it alone, would the minister call a meeting of representatives of the cities and the provinces this month to discuss winter works programs so that there can be some co-ordination of efforts this winter? I ask this question because it seems to me necessary to have involvement of the municipalities in any discussions regarding winter works or winter programs that the government intends to introduce.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it will be no surprise to the hon. member when I say that I subscribe to the principle of having the municipalities involved in such discussions. It will also be no surprise to him when I say that the inclusion of the municipalities in such discussions is basically a decision that must be taken by the provinces, and there have been some difficulties in that area in the last few months.

Mr. Alexander: One last supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about run out of time. I hope the hon. member will allow me to recognize the hon. member for Palliser.

[Later:]

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if Your Honour will bear with me the answers the Minister of State for Urban Affairs gave to the House in reply to the questions I asked are, of course, important, but I also think it is important, in view of the fact that the municipalities have been frustrated in terms of bilateral agreements being forced upon them, that I ask whether Your Honour would allow me to ask the minister if he will assure that there is some participation by representatives of the municipalities in the scheme of things, in order that they will know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: —just what type of program—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is not for the Speaker to allow the hon. member to ask a further supplementary following the expiry of the question period five minutes ago. But I have no objection whatsoever if the House will allow the minister to reply to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I could not possibly give the assurance to the hon. member that all those events will take place. I totally agree that the participation of the municipalities is necessary to come to any sound arrangements with regard to that or any other problems facing urban Canada. We have placed on record with the provinces our willingness, indeed our desire, to see tri-level consultation on this and many other matters, but all is not as smooth sailing as I would like, and in the end the provinces must themselves make that decision to include the municipalities. We cannot force that decision on them.

LIFT PROGRAM—ALLEGED REQUESTS FOR RETURN OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the great number of demands now being made by his department for the return of payments made to prairie farmers under the Lift program, can the minister say why these demands are being made?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not hear the hon. member. Which payments is he talking about?

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the great number of demands being made by the minister's department for the return of payments made to prairie farmers under the Lift program. I would like to know why these demands are being made?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, if it is a question of a return outlining what has been done under the Lift program, this is no problem, but I am not quite sure what the other matter is. Sometimes overpayments are discovered when the auditing or inspection is done, and if we find that an overpayment has been made in relation to the acreage then, of course, we are obliged to demand a return of that overpayment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CORRECTNESS OF PUBLISHED REVIEW OF LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE CONDITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the report in the Canadian Press two days ago reviewing some 9,000 lay-offs that are already in effect or else planned for the very near future, can he say whether he is aware of that report and, if so, can he say whether or not that report is correct?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the particular report referred to and therefore cannot say whether it is correct.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, can the Acting Prime Minister say whether or not the government has its own agencies compiling this information? If so, can he say how many lay-offs we can expect in the near future, and what the government is doing to stop this trend?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I entirely understand the question. I shall read it in Hansard and see if it can be answered.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there has been some discussion among House leaders as to the order of business for next Monday with regard to motions and other House business, could the Minister of Agriculture possibly tell us precisely what will be done on Monday, both in the afternoon and evening?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have not been party to any such discussions but so far as I know there is no change from the announcement that has been made.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, September 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray (for Mr. Benson) that Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law relating to or consequent upon the amendments to that act, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 7763).

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose on Wednesday, I was speaking about the danger of taxation burdens increasing at a greater rate than either our population or our gross national product. I said that this increase is a geometric progression which expands at an ever increasing rate as time goes by. With that background, I now wish to turn to the necessity for a meaningful tax reform.

I think it is regrettable that so many years have been spent in studying this matter of so-called tax reform and that the end product has been the bill which we have now before us, with many amendments, which does not result in a reduction or a control of the expansion of the tax load. Certainly, there is a great deal of tinkering and shifting of the tax burden from one group to another, but the net result is not an appreciable decrease in the general tax burden and I maintain that that is a necessary objective for any government in this country, in the federal field at least, and in the provincial field as well so far as that goes. It may be said that this is just one person's opinion stacked against the collective wisdom of the government and all its advisers. I beg to differ, and say that I am not alone in this view. I think that in the United States the situation is roughly the same as here, but it is not so likely that in that country they have already passed the point of diminishing returns so far as tax rates are concerned.

I wish to quote briefly from the text of a speech made by President Nixon on September 9 when, addressing a joint session of the U.S. Congress, he said this:

> I ordered a $4.7 billion cut in federal spending, to allow for tax cuts to create new jobs.

I think that makes sense. I think that is something we Canadians should carefully consider. The President went on to say:

> I ask the Congress to consider as its first priority, before all other business, the enactment of three tax proposals that are essential to the new prosperity. These three measures will create 500,000 new jobs in the coming year.
> First, I urge the congress to remove the 7 per cent excise tax on automobiles, so that the more than eight million people in this country who will buy new American-built cars in the next year will save an average of $200 each. This is a sales tax, paid by the consumer. Its removal will stimulate sales, and every 100,000 additional automobiles sold will mean 25,000 additional jobs for America's workers.

I believe that this kind of stimulation of the Canadian economy by the reduction of the tax load is overdue, Mr. Speaker. I would recommend that in the Canadian setting it is most urgent that there be an immediate reduction in income tax. I recognize that the exemptions will be raised by this bill, but I am talking about an immediate cut in the rates of income tax to individuals and corporations.

Second, I would recommend most seriously, as a further stimulant to the economy, the removal of the sales tax on building materials. I believe the situation is neatly summed up in an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on September 25, which reads:

> The essential question, of course, is how much longer taxes can be raised faster than the country's ability to pay them. At some point, the law of diminishing returns begins to take effect. Indeed, in the relatively slow recovery from the recession induced in the name of inflation restraint suggests that point may have already been reached.
> In the last five years, the net revenues of all governments have been increased by more than 75 per cent. Over the same period, the gross national product—a basic measure of the country's ability to create taxable resources—has increased by only 48 per cent.

That is as far as I shall quote but that editorial indicates the vital importance of getting government expenditures under control so that they are not increasing faster than both the population and the GNP. That curve which is going so rapidly upward must be brought under control while it is still controllable. Of course, we may not realize the magnitude of the growth of taxation. At the present time, this federal government taxes the Canadian people at the rate of about $35 million a day every day of the year, including Sundays and holidays. This tribute has to be paid by Canadian initiative, individuals and industry to keep the huge governmental machinery operative but that machinery has grown too rapidly in proportion to the general growth of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: In his heyday, Mr. Speaker, Genghis Khan was noted for the tribute he extracted from the people he brought under his domination but $35 million a day makes Genghis Khan look like a piker.

Mr. Bell: Benson looks like Genghis, doesn't he?

Mr. MacLean: The suggestion that not only must the growth in government expenditures and expansion be controlled but that savings must be made is always answered by the response, "What would you cut out of the services the government now provides?" I do not think it is necessary to cut out anything, because I believe that by cutting taxation we would stimulate industry enough that the net payment of taxes would increase.

Mr. Hees: It would stimulate buying power as well.

Mr. MacLean: As I said already, the rates have passed the point of diminishing return. I do not subscribe to this counsel of despair that things are so out of hand you cannot cut anything out or down or control anything. We are faced with this dilemma and we must accept it and act like the proverbial lemmings approaching the cliff activated by some primeval urge that they do not understand. I do not think Canadians have reached that point. Surely, even yet Canadians have a right to say, "I am the master of my fate; I am the captain of my soul". Surely, we can decide that we are not going to allow ourselves to be so heavily taxed that we are no longer able to compete in world markets. It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I urge the government as a short term measure to introduce an immediate cut in income tax and to remove the sales tax on building materials.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I would make the following recommendations: First, I recommend immediate cuts in income tax and sales tax on selected items to stimulate the economy. The tax burden is slowing the economy and the rates have passed the point of diminishing return. Second, as a long term program, the rate of growth of government spending should be curbed in order to bring it below the rate of growth of the GNP. Third, government borrowing should be curbed in order to lessen demand on the money market because that demand is forcing interest rates to rise. Fourth, the government should pursue every means open to it to encourage people to be industrious and efficient, thus improving our ability to compete in world markets.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as I see it, this is a bill designed to give the impression that it provides something for everyone. It presents the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in the role of the benevolent father of his people impartially concerned in providing gifts for all. Closer examination reveals that beneath the tinsel and glitter of the packages one firm rule has been followed, and that is that this bill contains big goodies for big people and little goodies for little people.

The most disappointing feature of the government's tax bill for us in this part of the House is the fact that the tax changes reject the main principle of the Carter Commission report; that is, that taxes should be based on ability to pay and that taxation should be determined by what a person earns rather than how he got it; that a dollar is a dollar and should be taxed as such no matter what its source. The government has progressively watered down this recommendation in the Carter report in successive investigations and inquiries, and has finally abandoned the principle altogether in this tax bill. The result is that this tax bill continues to widen the gap between the "haves" and "have nots" in this country. It increases the comfortable insulation of the top 20 per cent of our population who enjoy 40 per cent of the good things of this world, and of Canada in particular, and makes more acute the humiliating poverty of the lowest 20 per cent, who try hard to cling to their portion of only 7 per cent of the national income. Their position has not changed very much or, if at all, only for the worse. Somewhere in between are the middle 60 per cent who are trying to climb the slippery slope to security while those at the bottom of the slope are sliding to the ragged edge of poverty.

In my riding as in most other ridings, and I can hardly think of a riding where the picture is different, large numbers of people are concerned about the tax bill. Large numbers of elderly people have come to me saying that this tax bill does nothing for them. Those are the people who helped to build the country. They worked on the roads, on the construction jobs, in plants, offices and factories. They are the ones who raised families and brought up properly our younger people who are now carrying on the work of this country in every field. They saved and scrimped to provide a reasonable measure of comfort and security for their old age, something to which they were entitled as a result of their hard work. Today, under the hammer blows of repeated increases in the cost of living, they find themselves defenceless. Actually, many, many of them have come to me, as no doubt they have come to other hon. members, asking what they can do in order to keep their homes for which they sacrificed so much and which many of them could not secure for many years because they had not accumulated the tiny savings which allowed them to obtain those homes. Now, those savings have shrunk almost to vanishing point. Yet those same tiny savings prevent those elderly people from applying for the guaranteed income supplement. What are they to do? Those who talk to me remind me of people who have had a terrible blow. They are weak from shock. They cannot believe that this government is not ready with programs that will help them. So, they wait and wait and wait, and many of them finish out their lives still waiting. Those who remain cannot believe that the government does not intend to help them.

The same situation applies to our veterans in my riding, and in every other riding of this country. The rising cost of living has robbed them of that dignity and security to which they had a right as men and women who had risked everything for their country. They have asked for help to meet those conditions for which they are not responsible and they have been sent away with empty hands.

So it is for those other thousands of people who must live on small pensions and fixed incomes. This bill ought to have provided them with the means of living out the rest of their lives in the dignity and comfort which they have the right to expect. By taxing those at the upper levels of income as they should have been taxed, that is, on the basis of their ability to pay as recommended by the Carter report and on the basis of fairness and justice, this government could have secured revenues to make possible a large measure of security for those on low incomes. There is no need for me to review the figures. A number of my colleagues have already done so.

Harsh measures are understandable when they are needed. People understand that they are needed and will put up with them. Yet, people will not put up with unfair measures that discriminate against those who are in the low income brackets. During the second world war, when Britain was desperately fighting against Hitler, the British authorities knew that if the war against Hitler was to be won, harsh measures had to be imposed on everybody according to their ability to bear those measures. That was done. If we could do that in these difficult times, the government would be a great deal happier and have to resort much less to semantics than it has at present. After all, it could depend on the good will of the people of the country and impose whatever harsh measures are necessary. What the people will not forgive, Mr. Speaker, is comfort for the elite but misery for those in the lower income brackets.

The least this government ought to do now is amend this bill in order to secure sufficient extra revenue with which to review all government pensions and allowances with a view to establishing a floor at a level consistent with a modern standard of living. All pensions and allowances should then be set in relation to that level, and none should be permitted to sink below it. An escalator clause should be built into the new program, with provision for proper review in accordance with increasing living costs. That, I suggest, ought to have been envisaged in this tax bill and provision made for it.

My colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) has advocated a program of "Opportunities for Age". I endorse it heartily. In my opinion, its foremost objective should be the provision of sufficient income to permit elderly people to be properly nourished, to have a comfortable place to live, to have the wherewithal with which to buy the drugs they need and the little comforts that are so necessary and, above all, to have the opportunity to hold their heads high against the meanness and indignity of handouts.

It should be the same for veterans and their families. Frankly, I am completely sickened by watching the penny pinching that goes on, especially when some of these people who need help come to see me, like the veteran's widow. So urgently was she in need of assistance that she was willing to have her husband's body exhumed, because she hoped to prove that she was entitled to a little more help as a result of the sacrifices he had made in his war service. It is this sort of situation, repeated over and over again in essence, that makes me less and less enchanted with this tax bill, the provisions of which bear so lightly on the wealthy and crack down so heavily on the poor.

Actually, of course, we should have a floor under income for every individual and family in Canada. Several years ago we had reached the point where not only sociologists and government officials, but also cabinet ministers and, at one point I believe, even the Prime Minister, were playing with the idea. However, with their usual expedition in these matters, the wealthy got to the government first with the "most" and this tax bill is the result. It has been left to the New Democratic government in Manitoba to go ahead with a pilot project to demonstrate the feasibility of the guaranteed income. I trust that this federal government will at least be willing to co-operate in providing a large portion of the necessary funds for this project of great social significance. Actually, the NDP government has had to provide a great deal of the leadership which this government has followed belatedly. I am referring to 20 years of experimental projects carried on under the CCF government in Saskatchewan which was the forerunner of the NDP. From those programs this government picked up some of its ideas. It is making a belated attempt to carry out some of those programs in a much more attenuated form.

Much is made of the fact that the tax bill now before us will remove about one million people from the tax rolls. That big figure is calculated to look impressive and to underline the government's generosity towards those on low income. However, let us examine this proposal. My colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) referred in his speech to the long years of promises in which we were told that we were to have real tax reform when the government finally got around to it. My colleague asked the question—and this is not particularly with reference to the one million taken off the tax rolls but the people above that level—how real are the tax benefits in this bill for most Canadians? He calculated that in terms of their effect on income, the tax proposals for most people represent a yearly saving of about $100. This would amount to $25 each for a family of four or, reduced to less astronomical terms, approximately 50 cents a week each. How far will this go in meeting the grocery bill when the cost of living is increasing month by month? When the ordinary citizen starts thinking about Canada's natural wealth, productive capacity and the income of the not inconsiderable numbers of the elite in this country, he will begin to wonder.

I wish now to deal with the one million people to be removed from the tax rolls. Why are they being removed? The simple reason is that they do not receive enough income to pay any taxes. What greater indictment of the policies of this government could be found? One million Canadians will be removed from the tax rolls because they do not receive enough income to pay income tax. The people being removed from the tax rolls will still have to pay all kinds of other taxes such as sales tax, which bears most heavily on those with the least income. In addition to their lack of income, these people are now going to suffer a great wrong. A democracy is supposed to be a country in which all the people take part in the affairs of that country. The ability to pay taxes means that one has a stake in how the country is run and participates effectively, according to a proper share of one's income in carrying on the activities of the country. Because they have so little income, one million Canadians will have lost that right. They will have been shunted aside as surplus to the mainstream of life in Canada just as surely as many others have been shunted aside before them, those with insufficient income. Thousands and thousands of young people have apparently been shunted aside forever as far as this government is concerned because they are considered surplus to the mainstream in Canada at this time. In my view, getting enough income to live properly and still have enough money to pay taxes should be a basic right of every citizen.

There are certain features of this tax bill which represent an improvement over the present situation, such as the $500 allowance for child care, the provision of up to $150 a year to enable a wage earner to equip himself for his job and the increased exemptions for individuals and dependents. However, in comparison with the benefits provided for those in higher income levels, these improvements, welcome as they will be, pale into insignificance.

When we know that the cost of proper child care is several times the $500 allotted by the tax bill, we realize how much better off a person is whose taxes taper off as he reaches the higher levels of income where there is plenty of money available for proper child care. When we know that business executives and self-employed people are permitted almost unlimited deductions for expenses incurred as a result of their occupation, the $150 allowed the wage earner for equipment appears insignificant indeed. When we realize that many still on the tax rolls are below the poverty level determined by the Economic Council of Canada, while many others who have acquired great wealth can transfer this to relatives or friends without paying either a gift or inheritance tax, we can only ask: Whatever happened to the idea of the Just Society? How can the government justify a policy which permits the handing over of accumulated wealth to those who have not done anything to earn it while the ordinary wage earner must pay tax on every cent he earns, apart from his deductions?

Speaking of exemptions, this party deplores the government's rejection of the Carter commission's finding that it is more fair and just to provide tax relief in the form of tax credits than through increased exemptions. A system of exemptions provides a greater benefit to those in the higher income brackets than those in the lower ones. Tax credits, on the other hand, provide the same benefit to all. In the hands of a government anxious to help those in lower income brackets, tax credits could be designed to give greater benefit to those whose need is greatest. However, this government at every turn insists on giving proof of the observation in the Bible that "To him who hath shall be given and from him who hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." This government is adept at trying to squeeze out the last drop of blood and cut off the last pound of flesh from the have-nots. The have-nots are beginning to find out the truth, even though they have been led to believe the contrary from the propaganda that this government has been turning out in such vast amounts ever since it has been elected. People all across this country are beginning to notice the way in which this government favours the wealthy and powerful at the expense of the small taxpayer. They are beginning to resent a taxation system that permits large commercial interests to pay only 50 per cent tax on their capital gains while small savers, without much left to go on, must pay 100 per cent tax rates on the small amounts they have been able to lay aside.

I wish to read a pungent comment by a woman taxpayer in Gloucester County, New Brunswick. One does not think of New Brunswick as being a place which fosters radicals in vast numbers, but this woman has hit the nail right on the head. She writes:

> Apparently, there is no provision whatever to encourage the small saver. It is mostly certain that a capital gains tax will be introduced. Thus, a person receiving a gain in shares, for example $100.00 will be taxed on half of the amount, that is, on $50.00 only. However, the small investor, due to lack of knowledge about shares, or because he is just too poor to risk his money on the stock market, usually invests in Canada Savings Bonds or handles a savings account in a bank. However, if this person receives, for example, $100.00 in interest, he is subjected to pay income tax on the full amount at full personal rate. It is definitely unfair and illogical! Is this the fair taxation system preconized by the Trudeau Government?

I suggest it will take many months of communication on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to convince this woman and thousands like her that this tax bill is heading toward the Just Society. They know where it is heading. It is heading in exactly the opposite direction.

One of the positively bad features of this tax bill was dealt with at some length by my colleague, the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). I want to deal with it briefly now. I refer to the unfair way in which the tax bill bears down on co-operatives and credit unions. Although members of co-operatives pay full tax on dividends received and full tax on retained earnings, previous tax measures levied on them in addition a 3 per cent tax for capital employed. This tax has now been increased to 5 per cent under the terms of the new bill. Surely, this is not the action of a government which genuinely believes in participatory democracy. Co-operatives and credit unions are among the few business organizations where the members carry on their affairs—and membership is open to all—for the sole purpose of providing goods and services at cost on a non-profit basis and whose operations are directed solely by those who use them. At this time when we are threatened by the growth of huge commercial monopolies, home-grown and foreign, it is dismaying to find the government introducing policies whose effect will be to restrict if not seriously damage these co-operative institutions which have proved themselves capable of surviving and standing up to the practices of private business.

It seems to me that if the government were serious about providing ways and means of developing Canadian identity, Canadian strength and the Canadian economy, it should not choose this moment in which to find ways of wiping out or seriously endangering the life of organizations which have proven themselves capable of standing up to the commercial private monopolies which in their most monopolistic form come from the other side of the border.

There are many other features of the tax bill with which I should like to deal individually, but this can be done during the clause by clause study. I have tried to explain some of the reasons I must oppose this tax bill on general principle. As hon. members will gather, I do so for two main reasons. First, the bill is unjust, and, in the second place, it is self-defeating in that it widens the gap between the haves and the have-nots with all the surrounding implications of waste and inefficiency. To sum up, the bill reminds me of the story of the small boy who came home crying from school. When his mother asked him what had happened he told her he had been punished for telling a lie. "But Johnny," his mother said, "you knew it was wrong to tell a lie." "Yes," he sobbed, "I knew it was wrong. But it was worse than that. It didn't work." That is the size of this tax bill. It is not only wrong, but it won't work.

The people of this country have been led to believe that the government would reform the taxation system to make it more just and more efficient. They have been patient. They realized that the government had problems of all kinds with which to deal. But they had confidence. They believed the government would honour its undertaking to introduce a taxation measure which would lead toward a more just and more fair society. They have been deceived on both counts. You can fool all of the people some of the time and some of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time. The New Democratic Party and its supporters throughout the country have never been fooled by this government's protestations about wanting a just society. Every bit of their legislation takes from the poor and gives to the rich as far as it is possible so to do by act of Parliament. The people of this country we run into from one province to another, the people who were well-wishers and boosters of the government are beginning now to forget about the rhetoric, the charisma, the halos and the flood of government propaganda which goes out through every one of the media and are starting to look at the actual measures which are being ground out by the legislative mill.

The House has recently been considering one clear example. All the farmers of western Canada, all three Prairie governments all the farm organizations, have said: we do not want the legislation which is being put forward. The government has insisted that papa knows better. But papa will not get away with it in this instance. Papa does not know best. The farmers know what they want and they are determined to get it. Similarly, the taxpapers generally know what they will put up with and what they will not put up with. The bill before us is another piece of pure evidence of unjust, unfair and unworkable policies. This is why I shall vote against this measure, and I am confident that more and more of the Canadian people share my point of view.

Mr. McBride: Will the hon. member permit a question? I followed her speech with much interest. She said the government had promised a bill which would be more just and more fair. Is it her opinion and the opinion of her party that the bill is, in fact, less just and less fair than the present tax system? After all, it is one thing to talk about an Utopian ideal. I ask the concrete question: are we making a significant step in the right direction? Everyone realizes there is always room for improvement; we live in an imperfect society, and we realize that the tax bill is not a perfect one. But is it, in fact, less just and less fair than the present system?

Mrs. MacInnis: The people of this country are not interested in hair-splitting of that kind.

Mr. McBride: It is not hair-splitting.

Mrs. MacInnis: I am speaking for the people in my constituency. The people in my constituency are not interested in finding out whether this bill is one inch better than the last. They are interested in the policies of a Prime Minister who said he intended to bring about a just taxation system, who led them to believe that the recommendation in the Carter Report that taxation should be levied in accordance with ability to pay was to be implemented. These proposals crack down on the poor, who are heavily taxed as compared with the wealthy. I shall not argue about whether this measure is better than the present act in one particular or another. There are some respects in which it may be an improvement. But basically it is not what was promised.

Mr. McBride: Is there any area where it is not an improvement. Is this a step forward or not?

Mrs. MacInnis: The hon. member has my answer. It is not what was promised, and I am not interested in weighing whether it is better or worse in some of its particulars.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I wonder whether, having regard to the closeness of the luncheon adjournment, we could call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Mahoney: The opposition forces us to "blow" a good deal of time. I do not see why we should "blow" another ten minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Obviously there is not unanimous consent. I recognize the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I rise to speak in this debate in ominous and perilous national circumstances. Canada, as this House and all its citizens know, is in a perilous economic and social position. Recent headlines tell us, for example, that 42 per cent of the gross national product goes for taxes. At this rate, no citizen in the category of the average Canadian can protect his or her solvency with any assurance of success. At the present rate of drain on the economy through taxation no business can be assured of freedom to function, of being able to employ the labour it usually requires, of being able to take care of its load of overhead and inventory and hope for a profit at the end of the year.

• (12:50 p.m.)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), his cabinet and the administration in general will go down in history in a surge of superlatives. First, the Canadian people will tag them as the most expensive; second, as the most careless of the Canadian general good; third, as the most arrogant; fourth as the government that accomplished the least at the greatest expense to the taxpayer. Then this morning, Mr. Speaker, we had evidence that they will also be tagged the "captains of confusion", as shown by the affair exposed this morning regarding the appointment of parliamentary secretaries, 28 yesterday, 27 today, and the law calls for not more than 26.

The Trudeaumania that swept the country has now turned to Trudeauphobia.

Mr. Mahoney: You will not convince the public of that.

Mr. Alkenbrack: But the Gallup poll will convince them. After all, the Gallup poll has been an instrument dear to the heart of the Liberal party.

Mr. Pepin: What does the Gallup poll have to say about the Conservative party?

Mr. Alkenbrack: The Gallup poll proves my statement that Trudeaumania has changed to Trudeauphobia. As I say, the Gallup poll is an instrument dear to the Liberal party and has been frequently abused by them in the past to attain their own power-seeking ends. According to a Gallup poll published in the Montreal Star on September 22:

> Mr. Trudeau's economic policies may well cause him some trouble at the next federal election, for, to date, the voting public is not impressed with them. Little more than one in ten—

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. parliamentary secretary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Mahoney: Would the hon. member permit a question, either now or at the conclusion of his remarks?

Mr. Alkenbrack: I will deal with the questions at the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker.

> Little more than one in ten (13 per cent) believe they are sound, while twice as many (27 per cent) claim they are not. Less than half the electorate (47 per cent) give them the faint praise of calling them fairly sound.
> Moreover, it is among the largest segment of the working force, labour, where the greatest criticism lies, as only one in ten believes they have been good—but three times as many are very critical. Executives and professional men and women, are more inclined to describe them as fair than other segments.

That attests to what a poll reveals when the man in the factory, the man behind the plough and the man in the street is interviewed.

I had planned to bring a copy of Bill C-259 to my desk in the House, Mr. Speaker; not that I had intended to read parts of it to the House, but rather to remind me that this government continues to confuse quantity with quality. All of us can remember the ballyhoo and the fanfare that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) engaged in when he inflicted this so-called tax reform bill on this Parliament. I am reminded of my childhood days when circuses were in vogue, or at least more so than they are today. When a circus was due to arrive in my town, or a town nearby, we were alerted to the fact by what was called the advance man. This advance man swept into town with a great flourish and in no time at all he had all of us entranced. He pasted up posters and handed out a few free tickets. We held our breath while he talked of the elephants and the bearded ladies and the tallest or the strongest man on earth. More often than not, the spiel was better than the circus. Very often we learned that the elephant caught the flu and had to be left behind in Peoria. And sometimes the tallest man on earth lost his balance and we discovered that he was wearing stilts under his trousers.

What I am trying to say is that the Minister of Finance is the best advance man I have ever seen in this House. I am often entranced by his spiel, but I have found so far that his predictions and ballyhoo are better than his circus. In respect of Bill C-259, I must admit that the finance minister did not deceive us on one fundamental point. He did not say that there was anything of any great significance in this bill, at least not in the beginning. He told us that the combined budget-tax reform package weighed about 30 pounds. He told us that, to his knowledge, it was the heaviest package of legislation ever tabled in this House.

In my opening statement I mentioned the fact that I had planned to bring my copy into the House. However, I had second thoughts when I heard the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) say that he had to rest three times when he brought his copy down from the fifth floor. I would have had to bring mine from the west block, and when you consider how little there is in that weighty volume that is worth while you can understand why I had second thoughts.

Another member of this House has already noted that the finance minister has obviously failed to look up the definition of the word "reform" in the dictionary. The meaning is altogether different from the definition attributed to it by the government. It is equally obvious that the minister has confused the word "reform" with the word "proliferation", which is understandable since the present government is confused on most things. Understandable, Mr. Speaker, but certainly not excusable.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair to resume the same at 2 o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Just before lunch, Mr. Speaker, we were talking about some of the sins of omission and commission on the part of this government, and some of my remarks aroused criticism from the government benches. I had reference to the arrogance and ineptitude of this government as evidenced by this flouting of the law. Since that time some newspapers have put today's editions on the streets. Let me point out that if the government is otherwise, at least we have an active, fair-minded and enlightened press. Let me read what the press states today regarding the flouting of the law as contained in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and the government's precipitant rush to pass Bill C-244 in face of the demands of the country that it pay what it owes the farmers. Today's Globe and Mail states:

> The cause of any present obstruction is the government;

The government has been accusing the Official Opposition and all other opposition parties of obstruction, but the Globe and Mail says today that the cause of this obstruction is the government. The Globe and Mail also states:

> The government, rather, should deal frankly and conscientiously with the points the opposition has raised with regard to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. It should accept the law as it is on the books until the law has been changed: a touch of humility would give it an unexpected and refreshingly new complexion.

I believe I made my point just before one o'clock when I referred in no uncertain terms to the government's arrogance toward Parliament and the Canadian people; in this case the arrogance is toward that large and important sector, the wheat growers of western Canada. The Globe and Mail goes on to state:

> After that it should get on with the job of facing the real issues that confront and frighten Canadians.

That is why I said at the beginning of my remarks that we are living in ominous and perilous times, which the government seems to completely ignore. We should get on with the real issues that confront and frighten Canadians. These issues are large and important, and they are immediate. The Globe and Mail then states:

> What the government does about them will be the real basis on which the country will judge the performance of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau on Parliament Hill.

The Ottawa Journal, which was delivered a few minutes ago, has an article under the heading "Farmers suing Benson for grain funds". This is a fine situation the government has created for Canadians today. The article reads:

> The cloud surrounding the Prairie Grains Income Stabilization Act has become a thunderhead.

The farmers seek a writ of mandamus against Finance Minister Edgar Benson, and their application was filed in Regina Wednesday and is to be heard on October 6.

• (2:10 p.m.)

I just digressed for a few minutes from the gist of my speech in order to make those points. I was talking about how the Finance Minister and the Prime Minister have confused the word "reform" with the word "proliferation". The Finance Minister and his hirelings have done an excellent job of proliferating in the tax field, just as the Prime Minister is doing a glaringly excellent job in the proliferation of parliamentary secretaries as of yesterday and today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: A very worthy group.

Mr. Alkenbrack: The government have touched on virtually every aspect of taxation, but they have settled nothing. Behind the flurry, behind the smokescreen of alleged reform, we see that the same people will carry the tax burden. True, a million and half people will be relieved of some of that tax burden, but they were not in the first place the ones who were carrying the main load.

Mr. Mahoney: Five and a half million.

Mr. Alkenbrack: So we see that the people in the categories above those who will now be relieved will carry that burden, and indeed a greater burden. We see that instead of true reform, the government will be taking a still larger bite out of those who are told by the government that they will be spared.

The Finance Minister is quick to state that some one and a quarter million taxpayers will be removed from the taxrolls under the proposed tax reforms in Bill C-259, and we are told that our magnanimous government itself will stand the loss. We have been told that Big Brother will pick up the tab. This is one area where I would be safe in charging that the Finance Minister has resorted to deception. There is no way in which a spendthrift government like this one would remove a million people from the taxrolls without knowing in advance that at least an equal amount of money would be coming from another source. The clear fact is that a very large percentage of those taxpayers will not be removed from the rolls, and this was pointed out graphically by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in the last session of Parliament.

While the Finance Minister makes much of the increased exemptions for single and married persons, he avoids mentioning the fact that the increased rate of taxation will wipe out that advantage for a large percentage of taxpayers in the lower income brackets.

Mr. Mahoney: Nonsense.

Mr. Alkenbrack: The Finance Minister has also neglected to point out that the new sliding scale of taxation will catch up very soon with another large group of taxpayers within two or three years. Thus, we learn that Big Brother is not picking up the tab at all. We learn that the increased taxes which will flow into the federal coffers will originate from the very same source. We learn that the same people who are paying the shot right now will just keep on paying the shot.

I can understand how the Minister of Finance could stray so far off the path so consistently when he attempts to formulate economic and fiscal policies. It is a question of training and experience or the lack of it, and with all due respect to the minister's good intentions he just does not have these attributes or these intentions. The minister is a chartered accountant, and I know very well that he was a competent and successful chartered accountant when he was employed in that milieu. However, we all know that an accountant examines other people's books and checks to see that the fives and the sixes are in the right column and he checks to ensure that the additions and subtractions have been done properly. I would expect that he even checks to see whether or not the figures have been juggled to conceal a fraud. Accountancy is an exact science, and I would be the first to concede that governments, business and industry could not endure without the help of chartered accountants.

However, I suggest it is a far cry from the desk of a chartered accountant to the office of finance minister. In the latter case, the minister is responsible to the people of Canada for a national budget that has now climbed to some $15 billion to run the country for one year. I suggest again that it is one thing to check the books of a business or a corporation and yet another thing to formulate policy, and I think the answer comes loudly and clearly in the so-called tax reform package and its companion piece, the budget.

Mr. Pepin: What background does the minister have?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Disenchantment is not felt or expressed only on this side of the House. The only economist in the cabinet, the former minister of communications, left the government in disgust when he could no longer stomach the futile posturing of the Prime Minister and his so-called geniuses in the economic and related portfolios.

Mr. Mahoney: Now, this sounds like Mr. Stanfield's speech.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I am glad that my strong statement is receiving some response, because if it does nothing else it might alert the rank and file of the Liberal party members behind the front benches to becoming more conscious of the dire effects that this cabinet is having upon the economy, the morale and the social welfare of the Canadian people. I suggest that because of the rate at which some of the ministers are spending money—particularly the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand)—the Finance Minister has been instructed to administer the karate chop on any and all Canadians who cannot defend themselves.

I asked yesterday for some assistance for a youth group in my riding which is in financial difficulty and which is doing a good job in its work among youth in one particular community in the south of my riding. However, I was told that the money was all gone. It did not take long for funds allotted for that purpose to completely disappear, did it?

The ever expanding spending spree, particularly in Quebec, must be matched by an ever-expanding tax bite; that is only a natural thing. The more they spend the more they have to demand from the Canadian people, and all the finance minister's protestations to the contrary, we are witnessing the most sinister and menacing tax bite in the history of North America. Compared with the incredibly expensive war in which the United States is involved at present—their government has cut personal income taxes twice in the last three years—compared with the serious economic problems faced by the United States, we in Canada should find it easy to make adjustments in our tax laws in order to help the people who are working but who are earning less than they need to live properly. You will notice that I did not say "to live comfortably" although I cannot see why it is so difficult to ensure that most Canadians are able to live comfortably.

At this point I should like to draw the government's attention to a parable which appears in a number of places in the New Testament and which is familiar to most if not all members of the House. I refer to the parable which I paraphrase as follows: "You have done those things that you ought not to have done, and you have not have done those things that you ought to have done". This parable attempts to convey to all men that it is often, if not always, just as easy to neglect the things that you ought to do as it is to do the things that you know to be wrong.

Mr. Pepin: It is far clearer in the Bible.

Mr. Alkenbrack: In other words, sins or crimes of omission are just as serious as sins or crimes of commission. When one is charged with a responsibility, such as the responsibility to govern, then it is a serious offence against all the people being governed when a government neglects to do everything in its power to ensure equality of opportunity, equality of justice and obedience to the statutes.

• (2:20 p.m.)

When the Prime Minister was campaigning throughout Ontario this past summer he remarked that politics was fun. In the case of the Prime Minister it may well be that politics is a ball, a real gas, as the saying goes. But I say to him that while he is having a ball there are millions of Canadians who are living at or below the poverty line. While he is having a ball I would point out to him that there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians unemployed. He knows that. Lately, he is beginning to realize it. And every day a larger percentage of them is running out of unemployment insurance benefits. I am sure I speak on behalf of all private members of the House when I point out that a great deal of our time every day is spent trying to get unemployment insurance benefits straightened out or obtained on behalf of our constituents. I do not hear any contradiction of that statement, and so I am sure all hon. members have had this experience.

Mr. Osler: Will the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member knows that a question has to be allowed by the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, when I have finished the time that you have allotted to me then I will deal with questions.

While the Prime Minister is laughing, inflation is once again getting out of hand. I would also say that with this latest ploy on the part of the government to hide the problem behind a smokescreen, and I refer to this 30 pounds of tax reform legislation, the tax burden remains right where it has always been.

With Your Honour's indulgence I should like to quote from the motion moved on September 13 by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert):

> This House, deeply concerned with unacceptable levels of inflation, persisting unemployment and stagnant industry and conscious of the necessity for meaningful tax reform, declines to give second reading to a bill which does not provide sufficient stimulus to the economy of Canada with appropriate tax cuts and incentives, does not contain adequate tax exemptions and is not calculated to materially improve business and labour conditions in Canada now or in the foreseeable future.

This is a serious indictment of what the Minister of Finance has called the heaviest piece of legislation ever tabled in this House. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that this is not tax reform but rather tax juggling. It is a serious offence against the public trust vested in the Minister of Finance to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars, perhaps millions of dollars, on a long series of futile manoeuvres leading up to what we are told is a tax reform package.

A few days ago the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) noted in his speech that all the discussion about Tax reform started with the Royal Commission on Taxation called the Carter Commission, from which flowed the Carter report. Then, we were introduced with much fanfare to the government's white paper on tax reform. I would like to inject a comment here concerning the white paper on taxation. Hon. members on this side of the House, and more than a few on the government side, will remember with some little satisfaction that the Minister of Finance was thoroughly roasted by a few segments of the population when he went to the people with that particular gem, and the white paper was truly a gem. After the white paper was referred to a committee of the other place as well as to a committee of this House, it was reported upon. These reports were appended to the white paper, along with reams of representations from individuals and groups throughout Canada. Presumably this massive accumulation of data was sent to the same group of experts who, over the past three years, produced those budgets that have so effectively stagnated the Canadian economy.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, the casual onlooker would immediately exclaim, "I know what happened next. The whole package was fed into the furnace, and the Finance Minister started all over again." Not a bit of it, Mr. Speaker. That is what one would naturally assume, but the Minister of Finance had learned by then that he had the Canadian people squarely on the rack. All he had to do was to turn the wheel and the cries of anguish would rise to a beautiful crescendo. The Minister of Finance knew without a doubt that he had created a monster equally as bad as any of his previous budgets. He had here a tax reform bill that was devoid of reforms. He had here a tax bill that was devoid of any of the measures that the country needs so desperately at this time—tax cuts, increases in exemptions, and a removal of the crippling 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, among other things.

I am also reminded that the Minister of Finance was smilingly complacent last year and the year before when the Official Opposition warned repeatedly in this House that the government's fiscal policies, or the lack of them, were cooling the national economy at an alarming rate. When questioned about the danger of fighting inflation by deliberately creating a high level of unemployment, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister both said that they could and would accept a much higher level of unemployment in order to beat inflation. We now have the highest level of unemployment in more than a decade, and inflation is still very much with us. In fact it is still climbing. Considering the dismal record compiled by the Minister of Finance in managing the national economy, it is easy for me to understand how he could put his stamp of approval on this monstrosity, Bill C-259.

In the last few days another development has come to light which will make it imperative for the federal government to wring still more taxes out of the wage earners in the provinces that are self-supporting, such as Ontario and a few others. Thank God we do have some provinces which are self-supporting. I just wonder if the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance knew in advance of the announcement by the welfare minister of the province of Quebec that he has dusted off one of the old Duplessis canards, specifically that his province would pay a premium to families with large numbers of children. The idea is that a married couple should be encouraged to have a large family whether or not they can afford it, and where necessary their annual income would be guaranteed at a level that at least would permit them to survive. I mention this, Mr. Speaker, because the money would obviously have to come from taxpayers in other parts of Canada. At a time when Quebec is already getting a disproportionate amount of tax revenues from other provinces in equalization payments, this scheme cannot be allowed to go into operation without full debate on the issue in this House.

The Quebec government says that it is launching the scheme in order to off-set the decline in the birth rate among French Canadian families in that province, and that there is a danger that the decline will result in a lower proportion of French Canadians to other Canadians in future years. Whatever the Quebec government chooses to do in order to increase the birth rate of French Canadians is its own business, but when such schemes are financed with revenues of other provinces, when such schemes are financed with taxes from Canadians who live and work in other parts of Canada, then they become the business of this House. I strongly condemn the government for not giving us notice that the Quebec government had decided to take this selfish and unilateral step.

The point I am making is that the amount provided in family allowances should be comparative and equal in different parts of Canada. The severity of the tax load should fall in an equitable way on the shoulders of all Canadians, and the tax revenues paid out by the federal government should be paid out in an equitable way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alkenbrack: I hope the derision from the other side of the House explains my point.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Still on the subject of taxes, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how much longer the people of Canada are going to accept the present government's policies with respect to language training and the imposition of the French language on aspects of Canadian life far removed from the French fact. Reference has been made on numerous occasions to Brockville and Landsdowne. I live just west of that district but I will pass on to some other aspects. French language aspects of Canadian life seem rather far removed from the French fact. Reports that come to us almost daily convince me that morale in the federal public service has never been lower in the history of the service, and it is largely due to the destruction of the public service merit system in order to accommodate French Canadians, both inside and outside the service.

The Chairman of the Public Service Commission has long ago destroyed his credibility and the objectivity of his office by going along with the government's policy to bring French Canadians into the public service in large numbers, whether or not they are qualified to hold the jobs they are given, and whether or not English Canadians are displaced arbitrarily to accommodate the newcomers. There are cases of people resigning from the public service after more than 20 years service rather than to be shunted aside, and in many cases subjected to abuse by new supervisors who have been parachuted into the service in senior positions. There are cases, and they are increasing daily, where promotion boards are now composed entirely of French Canadians, and where French Canadians are given an advantage when they appear before the boards for promotion.

One might argue that this is against the merit principle, and that it is in fact against the law. Of course, this is not the first time that this government has flouted the law. When an English Canadian is denied a promotion that he or she has earned—I am just using the term English Canadian here for want of a better description, I do not really mean English born, but English speaking—

Mr. Mahoney: Anglophone.

Mr. Alkenbrack: That is a much abused and favourite word of the Liberal party. There is provision for appealing the promotion to the board. This sounds like a valid and logical answer to the problem, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately even the appeal system in the public service has broken down. Resort to it is, in most cases, the best way to ensure that you will be barred forever from promotion. In other words, if you appeal the promotion it is the kiss of death for further promotion. In some cases, people who appeal promotion board decisions have their jobs declared redundant. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics is being converted to a French department, and there is so much unrest, so much dissention and so much animosity being generated in DBS over the French-English issue that I plan to undertake a thorough examination of the situation with some of my colleagues. There are things going on in DBS that would make the infamous situation in the National Museums Branch in the past few months look like child's play.

Many years ago I worked for the Bureau of Statistics on the 1931 census and of course that dates me. We had no such trouble then. Over 3,000 people were in our office for a period starting in the summer of 1930 until the end of 1931. The Dominion statistician was Mr. R. H. Coates, a man who served Canada well and long. I recall that my supervisor was named Lemieux and came from around Montreal. We worked two at a desk and my seatmate was a boy from Lac St. Jean in Quebec. He spoke very little English and I spoke a little high school French but during the time we were employed he taught me French and I taught him English. There was a spirit of harmony in that office and we got a lot of work done. There was no French-English question and no bilinqual or unilingual contention either.

I am deeply disturbed about what is being done to our public service and to the Canadian Armed Forces by some of the ministers across the floor, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) in particular. This is tax money we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, taxes collected from every part of this country and from Canadians of every ethnic origin that one can name. It is time we directed some of those funds and some of our efforts to Canada and to Canadians, and forgot about hyphens. I am not a hyphenated Canadian, and I do not accept the superficial and outdated concept of hyphenated Canadians. I do not need a hyphen in my name to preserve or retain my identity. If my identity were so fragile that I had to embrace artificiality or superficiality in order to preserve it, I would stop and take a good look at just what it was that I was trying to preserve. If the present government would take the advice it is feeding the country hourly on the radio stations and start thinking Canadian, then perhaps we would start to get somewhere.

I have one more word for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down. If Bill C-259 is the best he can salvage from the lengthy and costly process the government has followed for the past two years, then I think it is time he looked around for a job that better suits his talents. I would suggest that he try to get a job as advance man for a circus, a small circus. It would not pay as well as his present job, but I am sure that he would find it most satisfying and it would be honest employment. The minister would be able to start out with a backlog of the hoopla and ballyhoo he has employed over the years trying to sell his budgets to this House and to Canadians who are forced to pay for his experiments in economic planning. If the finance minister would step down, Mr. Speaker, we might get lucky and have the present cabinet resign en masse.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Is the hon. parliamentary secretary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Before lunch the hon. member indicated that he would accept a question. I am sure he would not want to renege on that and I am sure the House would give him the opportunity.

Mr. Hees: His time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member knows that he requires the unanimous consent of the House to ask a question if the time allotted to the hon.

member has expired. Unless the House gives unanimous consent the question cannot be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hees: His time has expired.

Mr. Mahoney: You are not very confident that he can handle it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. There is not unanimous consent and all the Chair can do is call upon the next speaker, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe).

Mr. Forrestall: If there had been more than one minister in the House we would have allowed it—I am sorry there are two ministers.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity this afternoon of making some comments on the amendment under study and on the tax reform proposals of the government.

The true solutions to economic problems have not been found yet, and the proposed tax reform is not satisfactory to us. Canadians are not only asking for increases in taxes but for a fairer distribution of such taxes. They are not asking for distribution at the expense of the average wage earners, as is the case under the present fiscal system, but for a fair tax table for all.

Every citizen now knows, especially hon. members, that there are two tax tables: one to protect one sector of the population, the upper society, and the other to apply to the low and medium income people in order to deprive them of their purchasing power. The government is making the middle class, those earning $7,000 or more a year bear 75 per cent of the burden.

Former rules have lead us to the present situation, to this economic unbalance where wealthy people continue to grow richer to the detriment of the poor who become more and more destitute and miserable. The past does not exist anymore; the future of Canada is now in the making. The present is now, not yesterday nor tomorrow. Let us not forget the story of Lot's wife who was turned into a pillar of salt because she looked back while the other members of the family were moving ahead toward freedom and the horn of plenty.

Let me point out that a grievous lack comes with this wonderful progress, and it is getting urgent to correct it in order to avoid the disasters which are likely to be irreparable if we do not immediately take the obviously needed steps.

Modern progress that helped increase production and capitalization must now take a sharp turn toward progress in correlation with consumer spending, distribution of purchasing power, necessarily bearing in mind the essential needs of each Canadian, while we plan the expansion of production and capitalization of large corporations in Canada.

The solution is not to be found in excessive taxation that deprives taxpayers of 50 per cent of their purchasing power.

Promises, hopes, wishes, words, legislation, numerous surveys, white papers or slogans, which have been costing millions of dollars, are not what the people want, but fair distribution of the tremendous annual production in Canada according to the needs of all those who live in Canada, and then, according to the merits of the Canadians who work. To make all those things possible, the cost of living must be reduced through tax cuts, and not through galoping increases that ruin the builders of this country as fast as they develop it to satisfy the voracious appetite of a few financiers who callously take over everything.

They speak about a just society, a united Canada, about fight against poverty, but by means of legislative measures they very often produce something aimed at reducing the purchasing power of the people and increasing the cost of living, the prices, the interest rates on capital and on wages. By means of legislative tactics they boost the income of individuals and companies whose financial position is already satisfactory and they further deteriorate the situation of those without sufficient income or without any income at all.

That is the real picture and there are nevertheless all kinds of increases in all sectors of the economy. Since interest rates are so high, since during the last years, and especially during the last decade, the government has sold bonds to the banks, in view of the fact that those banks have taken over the powers of the Bank of Canada in order to sell those bonds back to the government and receive cash in return, although this did not cost them anything, considering we pay $2 billion in interest a year to service the public debt, the government should immediately introduce legislation to lower the cost of servicing the public debt to $1 billion by redeeming all bonds issued at excessively high interest rates, thus saving the Canadian people $1 billion in interest on the public debt. With this $1 billion, we could solve many of the problems affecting the Canadian people. We could solve unemployment by undertaking extensive public works, not by increasing taxes but quite simply by lowering interest rates, redeeming bonds through the Bank of Canada and paying reasonable interest rates instead of the extravagant rates which we now pay. It does not make sense to spend $2 billion in interest on public debt in a country like Canada, with a population of only 22 million.

The federal government proposed amendments to the present tax system in order to eliminate serious injustices while continuing to promote economic growth. I have here an article from La Presse which reports comments made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene). This minister is responsible, honest with himself and with his beliefs that all Canadians should have an adequate standard of living. I quote:

> When the federal government proposed to amend the existing tax structure to eliminate serious injustices while continuing to promote economic growth, the only response came from those who felt they were affected by these amendments.
> The minister, who was addressing accountants of the oil industry in western Canada, noted that according to the Carter report, 70 per cent of the tax burden in Canada was placed upon those citizens earning less than $7,000 annually. Sometimes, he added, large companies with no financial problems do not pay any corporate income tax. The government was hoping that its white paper on tax reform would create a lot of interest in several sectors, but only the mighty voiced their opinions.

—those who earn less than $7,000 a year, those to whom Mr. Carter's opinion and the white paper would have been the most profitable—

That voice remained silent or very weak. The debate remained a purely academic one, which can result in one-way decisions; without the participation of the expert in such a field, namely the producer, Mr. Greene added, there can be no balance in the decision process.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, where is the balance mechanism? We must find a way to establish it, otherwise the whole society will break up into small groups with conflicting interests, pulling in opposite directions and going against each other.

To overcome difficulties, we must get back to the technical and moral values that have already been tested in the taxation field. Every citizen should know that work is the normal source of wealth. It is the excess of production over consumption that represents new capital; steady savings lead to sufficiency, security and real independence. Is it not desirable that a large number of young people should be willing to enjoy life according to such a marvelous formula? So that young people may be able to save money, let us not at least take away from them 50 per cent of their earnings. As for credit, it is a tremendously efficient invention, but it is also a double-edged instrument. To borrow in order to produce becomes a benefit for the national community, although the high interests increase the cost of products and consequently the cost of living.

But such is not the case anymore. When unbounded borrowing goes on for unproductive consumption purposes, when governments borrow in all kinds of way, especially on the bonds market, at excessive rates of interest, when they buy back bonds issued at a 2 or 3 per cent interest, in order to pay 8 or 9 per cent, there is no logic in that. Unfortunately the Canadian government is doing such things in order to make the rich richer, to the detriment of poor people.

They redeem bonds because they were not able to pay for them. If they were not able to pay for 3 per cent bonds, can one believe that they will be more able to pay 9 and 10 per cent as was done recently in order to pay for old debts?

A hole is dug only to fill up another one. The best means to fight inflation effectively is to revert to tried moral values such as devotion to duty, thrift, efficiency, rather than to save only in favour of government, school boards, municipalities. One must save for himself in order to develop one's heritage, build his own house and manage to pay for it. When people save only for government and large public enterprises, have no dwelling but the street or build houses at interest rates of 9 or 10 per cent, or pay for such houses four or five times their worth over a period of some 30 years, this is neither logical nor normal for a government. Such a state of affairs cannot last indefinitely, for the ferments of revolt are already showing up.

How can we find solutions to problems whose nature has not yet been diagnosed? We do not know where the problem lies. People work here and there or do this and that, but everything is being done besides the real issue. We have not yet managed to diagnose the problems, yet that would be so easy. It is quite easy to find out that production involves no problems.

Considering that the surplus production will amount to $41 billion by 1971, the buying power is obviously not high enough, is not distributed to the right people namely to the true consumers. There lies the problem and not elsewhere. We should not try to produce more since we already produce too much for our population.

It is not a production problem which needs to be solved but a distribution problem. Interest rates on the capital held by millionaires are increased. They are being paid 7 per cent instead of 5 per cent, that is $20,000 more per $1 million per year. I say 7 per cent but it is rather 8, 9 or even 10 per cent. Anyway, it was only an example I wanted to quote.

Mr. Speaker, we should avoid taxing even more our taxpayers and mainly the poorest and we should not increase the salaries of the best paid people: those earning $50,000 per year are granted $75,000; those earning $35,000 per year are granted $45,000; those earning $26,000 per year are granted $35,000 while the postmen who earn only $6,500 per year are granted $8,000. It is hoped problems will be solved by increasing salaries and taxes to meet the inadmissible commitments that exist in Canada today and the only result is to increase the cost of living for everybody. Meanwhile, pensioners, housewives and more than 13 million citizens without income have to pay more for all necessities. That is not how to solve the problem.

At the same time, salaries and interest rates have increased.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, some 9 million citizens are deriving increasingly large annual incomes from salaries and interest and more than 13 million are victims of the rising cost of living, without their obtaining any increase in the income which is being doled out to them in driblets by welfare officers.

I am not accusing anyone. I am merely showing the flagrant and obvious results of our economic policy which goes back to approximately 1944, the end of World War II, the Bretton Woods agreement, the inception of family allowances that have remained at the same level for 25 years.

Now, we are trying to reform family allowances but this will only reduce the present purchasing power because less money will be handed out. In fact, a great number of children of a certain age will no longer receive family allowances while others will be receiving more, but at any rate the government will be reducing the purchasing power. That is one of the tax reform proposals. As to the way these family allowances will be distributed, it is not reassuring at all for those who see the light.

It is obvious to me that there are profound discomforts and that the remedies are readily available.

The ministers and members of this House represent a population of 22 million citizens. They should, if but for a moment, forsake their political allegiance and remember that they too are part of these 22 million Canadians and that all of us, as such, have to endure or enjoy the administration which is reflected in every sphere of society, whether we live in Montreal, Toronto, Halifax or Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker, what should be done to restore balance to the economy? We have to strike a balance between family and corporate incomes as between taxes and reserves, which is not presently the case. Today, reserves are piling up to the tune of billions of dollars and the organizations which accumulate such reserves are not taxed. No tax is levied on the billions of dollars of accumulated reserves and profits therefrom are also tax free.

A balance must be struck between needs, costs and prices; there is no balance between needs, costs and prices, between employers, workers and dependents; there is no balance between the various classes of society. Above all, there should be a balance between capital, labour and essential right. Here again, there is an imbalance and nobody is really interested in solving this problem.

Briefly, we are witnessing all the uneasiness and seeing in which areas we should act to solve the problems. We must in the first place solve the problem of production, consumption and capitalization.

Here are three things which the Minister of Finance should have taken into account: production, consumption and capitalization. Order and justice should prevail in those areas.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the effects of the present system are obvious. We see that farms are being abandoned, family businesses are going bankrupt, small towns are dying, the unemployment rate is increasing and poverty is rampant in large cities.

Such are the obvious signs of the impending decline and the total ruin of a system. Yet, we praise the magnificence of its leaders, whose self-complacency is equalled only by their laissez-faire.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The system is collapsing and is dragging everything down to ultimate ruin. But, we refuse to see that. We refuse to heed any benevolent warning. It seems that governments, even those with the best intentions, are content with feverish activity, but always beside the real solutions and the real problems, which they refuse to see.

All leaders talk about increasing production. But we already produce too much, and products are much too expensive as compared with the purchasing power of the population, which live in want and insecurity because it is taxed and overtaxed by governments which at all levels always end up with deficits.

For forty years, since the 1929 crash, we have been seeking solutions to the economic lack of balance in the whole capitalist world. Ten years of recession, five years of war, 25 post-war years, nothing has yet succeeded in opening the eyes of the capitalist world. We have only increased our production, retrained the labour force, brought automation into the industries, and made larger benefits by paying lower wages, employing fewer wage earners, ruining small entreprises, destroying the buying power, upsetting the order established in business and services, in the labour force, in the economic, urban and rural life and in the life of all human beings unable to grasp the unattainable world of capital, shares and bonds.

Millions are certainly important in the whole economic life of a nation. But the nation is not made entirely of a few wealthy people, scientists and powerful capitalists, professionals and politicians at the head of the 22 million Canadians who make up the whole of Canada.

Why wait for the present crisis to worsen, for the coming world war which is inevitable in view of the constant skirmishes throughout the world beyond the boundaries of our beautiful country.

Let us gather our wits about us. Let us look around us. We are not alone; there are some 10,000 millionaires in Canada, some 10,000 presidents and directors of the 800 largest companies or millionaire institutions, with or without securities listed on the stock exchange. And even if we were alone, what could we do with our millions of dollars?

Just for one moment, let us imagine that the 7 million Canadian children under 16 have disappeared, that colleges and universities are empty, that our professors are no longer needed, that there are no more unemployed to train, that all the vicars, curates, businessmen and doctors have become unemployed and are seeking decent new jobs.

Inflation, foreign trade, exports and war are no longer sufficient means to satisfy the forbearing and shrewd people who know how to read between the lines. Let us wake up, recover, regain our consciousness and react as soon as possible because, Mr. Speaker, it is high time that we act in a humanitarian way. It is more than high time that we wake up to organize all together a sound economic system where the cost of living would be reduced—

Mr. Pepin: A real earthly paradise!

Mr. Latulippe: —and where we could compete with other countries.

We could also help Canadians by reducing prices. To reduce them, we must lower interest rates and to do so, we must make loans if we want to achieve full employment.

This can only be done, Mr. Speaker, with massive investment. The Industrial Development Bank is now lending money at 10, 11 and 12 per cent to develop trade. Is it by paying 10 or 12 per cent to the Industrial Bank and more especially the 11 per cent tax on building materials, as well as the 12 per cent excise tax, etc., that we can think of competing on other foreign markets and reducing the cost of living?

These are the areas where reforms should be made. So, I ask the minister, who is really doing his best in the present economic situation, to do all he can to solve present problems.

We should not be content with only routine work or bandaid treatments. We must apply them where they are needed, that is in the distribution. The real disease comes from exorbitant interest rates, from excessive cost of living. Those are the factors that must be restricted in order to restore balance to the economy, which in turn will work out as a corrective measure to solve the real problem.

In 1969, out of a production of 72 billion, it is noted that the consumption is only 44 billion, or 60 per cent, while individuals and corporations can capitalize surpluses of 28 billion, or 40 per cent of the production. However, in 1971, they will capitalize 50 per cent of the production, which is nonsense. This is where the minister should intervene. There is too much capitalization in relation to the volume of our production and consumption.

On the one hand consumption is too low, and on the other hand capitalization is too high, which results in lack of balance between production, consumption and capitalization. Once again, it is not production which is at fault, and yet all the efforts of our governments are directed at encouraging production, automation, and manpower retraining. As a consequence, we produce more but consumption is low among certain social classes. We refuse to acknowledge the real cause of inflation. We try to produce and export more rather than promote an increase in the purchasing power of the people, who go on living in poverty and insecurity. In fact, about 60 per cent of Canadians are unable to make both ends meet.

When the government attempts to balance its budget it does so at the expense of family budgets. These budgets must show a deficit so that the government's budget be balanced. That is not a logical principle of government, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore I urge hon. members not just to be critical this year and during the coming year. I am not just being critical, I am trying to find what is wrong. We must work in order to reform our inadequate institutions which are all out of kilter. We have to restore normal and sound balance in order to provide Canadians with a decent life within a country which is bursting with great riches.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jerome: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government House leader announced that Monday's business would be Bill C-244. I think everyone in this House knows that discussions are taking place between the federal agricultural minister and the agricultural ministers of the western provinces. I wish to report to the House—and I have so advised the House leaders opposite—that these discussions may continue. In that case, rather than call the agricultural bill on Monday we will continue with the measure now before the House. The House leader will endeavour to notify opposition House leaders as early as possible on Monday.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray (for Mr. Benson) that Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law relating to or consequent upon the amendments to that act, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 7763).

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter the debate today and say a few words about the tax bill on which so far I have been silent, a course of action I thought I might follow to limit debate on this subject. However, I find hon. members on the other side of the House talking on and on and I think it is time something was said about bringing this debate to a close.

It is ten years since the Carter commission was first formed. In that ten-year period there has been a full and complete examination of the taxation system in Canada. We Canadians have gone through a good deal of agony as we have performed one of the most painful of all self-examinations, that of pulling out our wallets to see the condition they are in. It upsets Canadians. While the examination has been salutary, it is time we got on with the business we set about ten years ago.

We have heard in the last few weeks in the House arguments from members of the Tory party on the evils of taxation. We have heard for many months, if not years, moralizing and inaccuracies from the New Democratic Party on this subject. We have had lectures from the Social Credit Party on monetary theory. I suggest it is time to bring these specious arguments to a close and to get on with the business for which we are here.

This bill is designed to provide alleviation or elimination of tax for about 5.5 million Canadians. I suggest that this alone makes the discussion and the study we have conducted more than worthy to complete consideration of the measure. There are some legitimate arguments to be made about the bill. Matters need discussing in committee. It has been suggested the bill is complex, that it will be difficult to administer and understand. I think that is a legitimate argument and complaint about which we have had full discussion.

I think it is obvious that any tax bill is complex. The people who make such a point are those who never look at taxation bills. They have never tried to understand the complexities that exist in them and the ins and outs that it takes an expert to understand. They are not aware that Canadians who have engaged in the business of advising other Canadians on tax law have had to engage in years of study to become knowledgeable of the law and its loopholes. The basic training of a chartered accountant takes in the neighbourhood of 5, 6 or even 7 years. About the same length of time is required to train a tax lawyer. After all this formal training it takes further years of practical application and specialization to become knowledgeable about some parts of tax bills, and even then the most expert of experts are only knowledgeable about certain parts of a tax bill.

Therefore, I am not surprised that the bill is complex or that hon. members find difficulty in understanding it. I have the same problem. I am not surprised that tax lawyers or tax accountants are annoyed that they will have to relearn their professions all over again. This is unfortunate, but we must contend with it. It is a necessity arising out of changing such a large and difficult piece of legislation. Nevertheless, if we are to bring about the reforms that Canadians demand and are asking for, and if we are to provide an alleviation of the tax of 5½ million Canadians, the effort involved in creating the changes is worth our attention.

In the course of the arguments that have been made, in addition to some useful points there have been some inaccurate statements which need correcting. For instance, the former leader of the New Democratic Party has been going around the country for some time now talking about the wonderful things the Carter commission would do for Canadians. One of his inaccurate statements, which I think it is about time was laid to rest, is this. On numerous occasions he has stated that a person who receives an income of $6,000 as dividends from taxable Canadian corporations would receive much better treatment under the old system, or under the new system, than he would under Carter; that he would receive a great deal of benefit which a person earning the same income from salary would not receive.

I should like to remind the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas)—I am sorry he is not in the House this afternoon; I see only one member of that party here for this important debate—that if we had followed the Carter formula, a person earning $6,000 in income by way of tax dividends from a taxable Canadian corporation not only would not have paid tax on those dividends, but would have received a refund. This refund would be chargeable against his other tax. The Carter formula would bring complete integration of the tax system and a credit carried over from what the corporation has paid would be applied against one's personal tax.

The new system and formula in the bill before us will not only alleviate that discrepancy in the Carter formula but will provide a graduated scale for people who will receive these benefits, in such a way that those with lower incomes will receive a greater benefit than those with higher incomes. I suggest that is a benefit to the taxpayers of Canada. It is worth saying, at the same time, that this country needs the investment of risk money which Canadians are prepared to put up in order to expand Canadian industry and provide the jobs Canadians need. This is worth saying over and over again.

Let me say, for the benefit of the NDP—which professes to show concern about the unemployed in Canada—that the things they protest about most are those things which bring about greater employment. I refer to the profit on investment in Canadian industry. Unless there is some hope of return on investment, Canadians will keep their money in their socks. I remind hon. members of the NDP party, using the argument of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), that the man who makes $6,000 profit on investment in Canadian corporations probably has had to save something like $150,000 or $200,000 and has deferred the benefits of that money by lending it to a corporation in order to get the $6,000. I do not think that is an exorbitant profit, and certainly it provides a useful service to all Canadians.

I wish to endorse some arguments which have been presented in the course of the debate. There should be some changes in the bill regarding the tax on co-operatives and credit unions. This is an important source of savings in Canada. It is important to the small savers in our society who put money into credit unions in many rural communities. This is perhaps the only source of savings available for business expansion, and I suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)—I hope his Parliamentary Secretary is listening very carefully—that there should be a change in the provisions regarding co-operatives and credit unions.

Mr. Nielsen: Call him on the telephone.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I want to say something about the changes in the tax law in respect of expenses allowed on apartment construction under the proposed formula. There has been a change from the original white paper formula, allowing income from another occupation to be written off as interest and property taxes charged against apartment dwellings. This is an improvement over the white paper formula. I argue that the failure to allow depreciation as write-off against other income, while in some ways it may appear to be inequitable may in the long run result in fewer apartment buildings or rental properties being made available to Canadians. I ask the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary if that is really what they want. If a man takes money from one occupation and is willing to invest it in an apartment operation, from which there has been little return—and an examination of the returns on apartment investments will show that the returns have been very small—

Mr. Nielsen: Ask your minister to listen to you.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): —if there is some way of increasing that return it will redound to the benefit of the people who want to inhabit these apartments. Anything we do that lessens the return on that kind of investment will increase the cost of apartment accommodation. This will apply over the whole range of apartment dwellings: it will apply not only to expensive apartments but to the full range of apartments from top to bottom. I hope the parliamentary secretary will give more consideration to this point and that when we come to a clause by clause study of this bill an amendment will be made to remove what I think is an unfortunate provision.

I do not want to speak at length on this bill because I recognize the urgency of passing it. I recognize, also, that the reforms contained in the bill are worthy of implementation and we should get on with the job as quickly as possible. I said earlier we did not need stories from the Conservative party to the effect that taxation will cause cancer, sexual impotency and all the other evils associated with that subject. We do not need further lectures about peculiar monetary theories to help us understand this tax bill. We do need tax stability in Canada—and we need a quieting down of the discussion that has taken place.

The businessman wants to know where he stands. The longer we discuss this matter and the longer we put off our decision and vote on third reading of the bill, the longer stability will be prevented to the detriment of all Canadians. I say to the hon. members on the other side of the House that Christmas is not far away.

Mr. Nielsen: But Santa Claus is.

Mr. Paproski: You are no Santa Claus and neither is the government.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Let me say to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) that this side of the House is prepared to offer a Christmas present to 5.5 million Canadians.

Mr. Nielsen: Ho, ho, ho!

Mr. Paproski: All Benson has to do is get up and offer it.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): The offering is there and is spelled out for all who can read.

Mr. Nielsen: That is the problem.

Mr. Paproski: Even your minister does not believe that.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): If the hon. member would only take the time to read the Minister of Finance's little red book—

Mr. Paproski: I have read this bill, the Liberal bible.

Mr. Nielsen: "Red" is right.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): —he would be able to understand the benefits all Canadians will receive when we pass second reading of the bill and get on to clause by clause study of the specific things which need changing. Let us get on with the preparation of the Christmas present for our fellow Canadians.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we have heard many astonishing things in the House during our debates, but none more astonishing than we have heard today. The parliamentary secretary to the minister—and the minister is sitting in the House—has been appealing to his minister to talk, not to his colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) but to that minister's parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney). He only opens his mouth in respect of these matters to change his feet.

I should think there would be a more effective line of communication than has obviously been established by this government over the past 3½ years. Even when the parliamentary secretary was speaking—and he made a rather doubtful contribution to this debate—he was not appealing to his own minister, who was not listening in any event, but to a colleague.

When I look around at the number of experts in the House on the other side listening to the suggestions being made in this important debate, I see the hon. gentleman who suggested our economy is in such a rosy state that we need worry no longer. He suggests employment will go up in the forthcoming winter months and that the cost of living will go down. He said we have nothing to worry about as far as the Canadian economy is concerned, notwithstanding the warning of the Economic Council and economists throughout the country that we are facing a serious situation. We have that parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Calgary South, who stands up and tells us not to worry, everything is rosy and things will turn out all right.

Mr. Mahoney: That's not true.

Mr. Nielsen: In addition, we have that other expert who appeared rather touchy this morning during the question period. Obviously, something has worried him. But he is the only minister in the chamber at this time, apart from the newly-appointed minister who is an expert on science. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has been sitting here but has not been listening to the suggestions of his parliamentary secretary. I do not think he even heard the changes the parliamentary secretary has been advocating to the bill.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: I can read.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says he can read. That is an assurance to members on this side of the House, because in the past we have had some doubts as to whether he really could.

Of course, there are other experts over there apart from the hon. member for Calgary South. We have the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome). That expert has disappeared for the moment. Then we have another expert, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger). He is an expert on these matters and no doubt will be participating in this debate. He has a great deal to say outside of this debate, and we will be looking forward with great interest to his contribution.

Mr. Paproski: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) got rid of him.

Mr. Nielsen: Then, of course, there are at least—

Mr. Mahoney: Why don't you move that the House adjourn?

Mr. Nielsen: Members supporting the government sometimes have constructive suggestions to make, but the suggestion that has just been made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, that the House adjourn, is one of his less constructive suggestions because there are some things members on this side of the House have to say that, given time, might filter through to the government and be found embodied in this bill. The hon. member for Calgary South seems to indicate, as do members on the other side generally: What the hell is the point of talking in this House. We are not going to get through to them anyway, because there is only one man who rules this country. He said the other day on the television program "Encounter", "I do not govern to please the opposition".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: They are applauding. I invite hon. members opposite to pay attention to the personal pronoun that was used. What happened to the cabinet system? He said, "I do not govern to please the opposition"—and the question asked was, "Who do you govern to please?". Unfortunately, the program finished at that point so we were unable to hear his answer.

But that is the situation. No matter what is said over here with respect to this or any other measure, it is that man who governs and that man who makes the decision. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howard), instead of trying to go through the ineffective channel of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance might try writing a letter to the fifteenth secretary of the Prime Minister. He might find himself further ahead. He might even speak to the individual who is responsible for the regional desk in his riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: This will be great.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering whether the hon. gentleman who is speaking would observe the rules of relevancy. I do not understand what his remarks have to do with the matter under discussion today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I have been asking myself the same question. There is some latitude under the motion and the amendment now before us, and hon. members have been allowed a more or less open debate on the matter. Perhaps the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was about to stray too far from the subject matter before us, but I am sure he is coming back to the question before the House.

Mr. Nielsen: That interjection by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is as useful as his usual interjections. I suppose he wanted it on the record.

I want to speak about some of the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since he raised these points, I presume my comments will be relevant. He criticized every contribution made by the opposition. He said that every argument put forward from this side of the House was specious, and he said he was tired of hearing lectures by the Social Credit party with respect to their economic theories. Every statement that he made is indicative of the mental attitude over there that none of the things said from this side of the House, whether with respect to this bill or anything else that arises in debate, has any substance. In other words, every argument is specious except those made by persons like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Every argument advanced on this side with respect to real reform of taxation legislation is either lecturing, specious, or else something else is wrong with it—it has no substance. The people over there, Sir, are the divine rulers. Only they can be right, only they can be capable, only they are men of ability. Therefore, what is the purpose of listening to the opposition?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Have you just found that out?

Mr. Nielsen: No, but I think these things have to be said. They are not being said enough; they are not being exposed enough.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: They laugh over there. The ubiquitous ex-Liberal leader of the province of British Columbia, who is progressing nowhere except at minus 70 miles an hour—

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Will he at some point attempt to refer to the matter before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: That is a great statement.

Mr. Bell: Terrific.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder, in the reply to that rather empty and useless interjection, whether the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), who had the privilege of visiting my riding on one brief occasion, will make any useful contribution to this debate. I very much doubt it because I suspect, along with all other hon. members, that they have been told, with the exception of a very privileged few, to keep quiet because if they speak they might lose their parliamentary secretaryships.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: You are speaking from experience under the previous government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Perhaps this time the Chair should intervene and ask the hon. member for Yukon to try to stay within the scope of the motion and the amendment before the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about mining and the effect that these tax measures will have on the mining industry. The so-called tax reform would knock out the prospector in this country who heretofore has had all his discoveries free of taxation. A man who has spent 10, 15 or 20 years searching for minerals has been free of taxation on the sale of his property if he has been lucky enough to make any discoveries. Now he is to be taxed. This is inimical to the growth of exploration and mining activities.

In my view, the reforms so far as they apply to the mining industry, taken together with other measures such as the new Yukon minerals act and the land use regulations which will be coming into force in 15 days in the Northwest Territories, will effectively destroy the incentive which has heretofore existed with respect to the mining industry. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce speaks of reforms. But these so-called reforms are a masquerade; they are really an unrestricted march for a concentration of power in this government. The government wants to control industry, including the mining industry, to the ultimate degree.

The parliamentary secretary says that employment comes about by investment in Canadian industry, yet by these so-called reforms changes are being made in the law which absolutely limit investment in Canadian industry. A good example of that is the foreign-ownership clause contained in the changes that are proposed to the mineral legislation in respect of the Yukon.

• (3:40 p.m.)

With regard to experts, again the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has lectured us about the length of time it takes a lawyer to become a tax expert and about how long it takes a chartered accountant to become a tax expert. Then he says, "Let us get on with this because these experts have come down with their decisions. Those decisions are embodied in the legislation. Let us pass it and rely on the recommendations of the experts."

However, he failed to mention that the associations of which these experts are members have all advocated delay. They have said it is a much too complex piece of legislation, a much too bulky and lengthy piece of legislation on which to pass immediate judgment. They themselves, the experts of whom the parliamentary secretary speaks, say, "Let us have some time to make a detailed study of what the government has brought in, which is such a radical departure from that very radical document, the white paper on taxation."

Somebody at one stage called it the black paper on taxation and others called it the red paper on taxation. After a discussion of the white paper, the mining industry of Canada and other concerned institutions, at a series of public hearings submitted their interpretation of the tax reforms and of how they will affect the mining industry. The findings by those institutions suggest very strongly that the tax reform proposals will not only slow down mining activity in Canada but, more importantly, will make the Canadian mining industry less competitive in international markets.

To divert for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the representations—if any—made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) found so little sympathy in the cabinet committee which undoubtedly considered this tax reform legislation. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has travelled extensively enough in the northern parts of Canada to know the economic problems there. Either he knows them as a result of these travels or he is deliberately choosing to ignore them in the making of his recommendations to the cabinet committee which considered this legislation.

That minister has travelled in Russia and in Australia. Both those countries make special exemptions to people who populate and settle their northern areas. For years the residents of Canada's north have been asking for no better treatment than is accorded to the employees of the government who reside in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. They have asked for increased personal exemptions in order to attract people to settle permanently in the north and partly to compensate for the high cost of living there. They do this in Australia, and the minister knows it. They do this in Russia, and the minister knows it. That policy works in both of those countries. I am rather surprised that he has been unable to get across to his cabinet colleagues the desirability of instituting such a reform in Canadian tax policy.

After appraisals by the government of the submissions by industries in respect of the white paper, the Minister of Finance announced three modifications of the tax proposals last fall and these are now embodied in the bill before us. The important point to consider is that despite the modifications to the white paper, the mining tax reform proposals as they now stand in the bill will affect the way of life of each and every Canadian in an adverse manner.

There has been too little said about the multiplier effect of the mining industry in Canada. The lack of adequate reforms illustrates this. The mining industry is one of those industries upon which a great many Canadians depend for their livelihood. Canada has in the past depended on a variety of primary natural resources as a cornerstone for its economy and now the mining industry is really coming into its own as one of the two major primary industries in Canada. From furs, to lumber, to minerals, Canadians have prospered from the export of these natural resources. Today the dependence of the Canadian economy on mining is even more striking.

The mining industry, as distinct from oil and gas, employs directly about 140,000 people in its mining, refining and smelting activities. The mining industry is unique in Canada in its widespread ripple impact on indirect job creation. I need not cite any more striking example than that of Thompson, Manitoba. Mining products represent about 40 per cent of all railroad and inland waterways tonnage, thus providing a high base-load and reducing transportation costs for other industries. Annual repair expenditures on construction, machinery and equipment amount to about $300 million. New capital expenditures in mining are now more than $1 billion.

The mining industry has promoted the development of secondary industry in Canada. The performance of the Canadian steel industry provides an excellent example. Mining has contributed significantly to the growth and development of our more northerly areas. In many instances it is the only activity for northern communities. No more striking example can be found in this regard than the whole of the economy of the riding that I have the honour to represent.

The current tax reform proposals in Bill C-259 will have many, varied effects on the mining industry. Among some of these is the fact that the bill will make the Canadian mining industry less competitive on the international scene. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should realize how serious a matter that is, having viewed some—I am sure only a fraction—of the Australian mining industry and the mushrooming development that is occurring there. Since no other major industrial nation has such restrictive taxation laws as are incorporated in Bill C-259, this will force Canada's mining industry into a period of slow and restricted growth.

Nothing can better illustrate this than the recent studies prepared by Price Waterhouse and Company, for the Mining Association of British Columbia, on the Yukon and the British Columbia mining industries. With respect to the financing of the industry, that study came up with the following finding:

> The total net inflow in 1970 was $15,608,000, down $40,100,000 or 72 per cent from 1969, and less than in any year since 1965—
> The industry paid $5,745,000 in interest in 1970, an increase of 47 per cent over 1969—
> Total expenditures for exploration and development were $9,411,000 in 1970, down 42 per cent or more than $6,800,000 from the record level of 1969, and slightly less than the amount spent in 1968.

With respect to taxes, the report makes these findings:

> Total federal, territorial and municipal taxes paid by the Yukon mining industry reached almost $4,700,000 in 1970, an increase of 23 per cent over 1969 and four times the amount paid in 1966.

We never hear of this kind of contribution to the economic fabric of the nation when we hear the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tell us so often that we can never expect any autonomy in the Yukon, any further responsible government reform in the Yukon, because we don't pay our way. We do not hear that kind of statistic, with respect to the contribution in taxes which that industry makes to the federal treasury, when the minister uses these arguments. The findings also show.

The major share of tax contributions was paid to the federal government, which received $4,086 million in 1970, 22 per cent more than in 1969.

Employee income taxes withheld reached $3,350 million in 1970, an increase of 39 per cent from 1969.

• (3:50 p.m.)

This is the kind of statistic which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development does not use when it suits his purpose. With respect to British Columbia, of course, the growth is the other way around because a lot of the exploration and development activity is being siphoned off into that province precisely because of the legislation and regulations introduced by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Canada is not the only nation endowed with mineral resources. I have spoken of the mushrooming development of that industry in Australia and its close proximity to the markets of large users of raw mineral resources. If this bill is implemented international money will look elsewhere for investment opportunities and Canadians will suffer because of it. Regional and northern development in Canada will come to a halt as exploration ceases and as fewer companies are willing to explore in Canada. The dramatic drop in the number of exploration companies which have usually been active in the Yukon is a good example of the truth of this conclusion. Under the excessive tax burden proposed by this bill, Canada's mining industry will have to tighten its belt. If and when this happens, many Canadians will feel the pinch because the multiplier effect can be just as effective in a reverse sense.

The tax reform proposals affecting the mining industry must be modified to take into consideration some of the special characteristics of the mineral industries and their importance to the Canadian economy. A fruitful area for modification of this bill would be in broadening the base by which mining industries can benefit from earned depletion. As the reform proposals now stand, earned depletion can be used only for expenses such as machinery and mining equipment. Because many mining companies also have large expenses for infrastructure development at the mine site, the bill should take into consideration associated mining expenses other than machinery and equipment which could be used under the earned depletion proposal.

I have spoken briefly of the treatment accorded the two northern territories in this tax reform legislation. No more important area to occupy the concern of those responsible for considering the changes in this bill can be found than the mining industry. Both northern territories in the long run are going to depend for their economic base on a sound, developing mineral industry. I have not spoken of oil and gas at all, because there is no time—but a strong case can be made for the proposition that the Canadian government in its tax legislation and taxation approach is discriminating against the development of this industry and greatly permitting its absorption by foreign control by its lack of vision in tax policies.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is quite correct when he says that employment comes about by investment in Canadian industry. But it is no way to bring about employment in Canadian industry by saying to foreign investment capital, "You are not welcome". However, that is precisely what this government is doing. For a long time to come we are going to depend on investment capital from outside our boundaries in order to develop industries such as mining.

Before I conclude these remarks I should like to refer briefly to a statement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to employment in the Yukon, employment brought about, or not brought about, directly as a result of the policies, or lack of them, of this government. In response to a question which I put to him last week, the minister said that there was no unemployment in the Yukon; and the next day, of course, he had smuggled the word "almost" into Hansard, a word which he did not utter when answering my question.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: For a minister who has travelled in the north to come back and tell the members of this House that there is no unemployment, or even almost no unemployment, in the Yukon or indeed in the Northwest Territories is misleading hon. members as to the true situation that exists. I should like the minister and the government to explain how these tax reform proposals can possibly help the hundreds of unemployed Indian and Eskimo people in the north.

The majority of the population of these two territories is simply not getting along at the poverty level. These people in fact earn so little, and are so far below the so-called poverty line compared with the national average, that it would be shocking to most Canadians to see the conditions under which they live. In my estimation, 70 per cent, 80 per cent or more of the natives are living in a state of permanent welfare handouts because of the failure of the government to institute policies, taxation and otherwise, which would integrate the indigenous populations of our northern territories into the economic fabric of the country.

Since the establishment of articulate and forceful voices for the native in Canada there is no reason why the government should not be following their recommendations. But instead they proceed on their merry, unilateral way controlled by one man, their dictator, who has control of this country. Any reference to the legitimate desires and aspirations of a people who have not only been invaded and whose territory has been inhabited by outsiders is completely ignored, and the people continue to live in a state of perpetual poverty.

In the limited time available to me I have tried to cover some of the problems that I think should be considered in these tax reform proposals. I have little hope that they will find fruition in actual amendments. But should they not, then the government, far from fulfilling the hopes of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry,

Trade and Commerce for quick passage, will find itself confronted with amendments in an effort to bring about these changes which are surely justly due to northern residents if we are, indeed, to have a just society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISION FOR ADJOURNMENT FOR ACCUSED TO OBTAIN LEGAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved that Bill C-50, to amend the Criminal Code (adjournment for accused to obtain legal representation), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to force the federal and provincial governments to adopt an effective legal aid system. As hon. members know, a private member is limited with respect to the introduction of private bills. We cannot introduce bills which will entail the spending of money, and we must operate within the sphere of federal jurisdiction. As a result, even though this bill deals with legal aid I have been limited in respect of the provisions I could have brought forward.

This bill is an attempt to deal with the problem of legal aid in the best way that I feel is possible. At present, many people throughout Canada are charged, tried and convicted without benefit of legal counsel, either because they cannot afford a lawyer, are not familiar with the system of legal aid or do not know where lawyers are available. My proposed amendment to the Criminal Code would make it obligatory for a judge to ask an accused if he has legal counsel. If he has not, the judge would adjourn the case for one day to allow the accused to find counsel. It would also obligate the judge to advise the accused as to how he might avail himself of the legal aid available in the district. I realize that this type of bill is not the answer to the problem. As I said, considering the restrictions placed upon private members this is the best type of bill that I feel can be introduced in order to force upon the provincial and federal governments a better legal aid system.

As a lawyer who practised in Montreal before being elected to Parliament, I had occasion to observe many instances where individuals were hauled before the criminal courts, charged with offences they could not understand and then urged by policemen present to plead guilty. Many of them did plead guilty. In many cases they were sent to prison for several years. In some cases they did not deserve to be so sentenced. This was a shocking experience to witness. One wonders how even the wisest and best educated of men could, on coming into a courtroom atmosphere with which they are not familiar, properly understand the charge and make the right plea. I suggest that this type of situation, which is probably repeated today in many courts across Canada, constitutes a complete travesty of justice and should not exist in this country.

The same could be said of many civil cases, of cases involving family matters, of landlord and tenant litigation, of consumer cases, of small debt cases, of disputes between employer and employee, and so on. It is not always the big case that makes people think justice is not being done; it could be a small case such as one I experienced. I remember the case of a housewife, who was not too experienced in these things, who took a dress to a cleaning establishment and the cleaning establishment ruined it. The woman thought she could not claim compensation for the damage and could not go to court because the cleaning establishment had presented her with a ticket saying that it was not liable for any damage. This woman felt that a serious injustice had taken place.

I met her after the matter was over and told her that this type of statement on such tickets was not legally binding, and that she probably had a good case. The fact is that she did not have enough money to retain a lawyer. Legal aid was not available. She accepted what happened, but developed a very bad conception of our system of justice. It is because of such experiences that many Canadians are suspicious of our system and are cynical about our lawyers, our courts, the law and our entire democratic process.

The Quebec Commission on the Administration of Justice, the Prevost commission, conducted a survey four years ago among Quebec citizens regarding attitudes towards lawyers, judges and the legal system. I should like to tell the House what many people of Quebec thought about the legal system in that province. I have before me an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of March 10, 1970, which quotes some of the findings of the Prevost commission. It reads in part:

> Most Quebecers have a low opinion of the province's system of criminal justice. They think the lawyers are hypocritical and that in court the odds are stacked against the poor.
> These facts came out in a survey released yesterday by the Quebec Royal Commission of Inquiry into the Administration of Justice—the Prevost commission.
> The survey reveals that 62.4 per cent of the population considers the province's criminal lawyers hypocritical and 43.1 per cent think they are dishonest. Another 34.4 per cent think lawyers are outright thieves and a little over 20 per cent think they are totally useless to society.

The newspaper report goes on to say that the people of Quebec do not have a much higher opinion of judges in the province. Apparently, 1,098 people were polled in that province. Some other remarkable statements about the system of justice are made. The newspaper article continues:

> The courts were condemned by 78.1 per cent as discriminatory against the poor and 72.4 per cent said criminal proceedings were too slow. Slightly more than 40 per cent felt that chances of a fair trial in Quebec were less than 50-50.

I could go on reading the findings of that survey. The few results I have put on record will show the House, I think, the sort of impression a great many of our people harbour with respect to our system of justice. This arises from the fact that our legal system and our lawyers are primarily geared, in my opinion—and I am a lawyer—to serve the rich and not the poor. Although we have made improvements in certain areas and other improvements are under way, we still have a long, long way to go.

Few provinces in Canada have legal aid systems which can be considered adequate. Ontario, perhaps, has the best system. In my own province, Quebec, the situation is deplorable. Legal aid in Montreal is carried out by the Bar Association. Less than 20 lawyers work on a full-time basis on matters involving legal aid in Montreal. They are paid through the Bar Association and also receive some money from the Quebec Department of Justice. I submit that that number is completely inadequate. In addition, each lawyer in the Montreal area is supposed to take on one legal aid case a year. In most instances lawyers take on cases but give them very little attention. Some lawyers, of course, give these cases their full attention, but, in the majority of cases it is fair to say that the system is poor. The government of Quebec has promised the people a legal aid system. I believe that one is to be put into effect. From my distant place in the federal Parliament I urge the Quebec government to do this soon.

There have been other signs of improvement. The federal government has introduced a legal aid system for the Northwest Territories. It appears to be a comprehensive system of legal aid. I refer to the announcement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) when he introduced that legal aid system on August 17 last. Page 3 of the release reads:

> Legal aid in criminal cases is to be available in any of the following matters:
> (1) An offence under a statute of Parliament (which includes the Criminal Code) and is to be proceeded with by indictment;
> (2) An offence under a federal statute or regulation, or under a Territorial ordinance or regulation, where the Crown proceeds by summary conviction and the accused is subject to a sentence of imprisonment or to a penalty that, in the committee's opinion, will interfere substantially with his livelihood;
> (3) Proceedings under the Juvenile Deliquents Act;
> (4) In any other case where, in the opinion of the court or the committee, the accused is not capable of making an informed decision as to his proper course of action or where he may be subject to a jail term or a sentence which would affect his livelihood—

• (4:10 p.m.)

With regard to the provision of legal aid services, the system is in some ways similar to the Ontario system. In addition to the system which the federal government has started in the Northwest Territories, the Minister of Justice announced this fall at the Canadian Bar Convention in Banff, Alberta, that he was considering establishing a nationwide legal aid system. I read from a report of September 2, 1971:

> Justice Minister John Turner said here that he hopes a federally-financed coast to coast legal aid system will be operating in Canada within a year.
> In an interview, he said he has put forward a proposal for such a system to the attorneys general of the ten provinces and has received a generally favorable response.
> Turner said he put the proposals to the provinces "two or three months" ago and has received replies from most of them. Those answering had "some reservations," he said, but were nevertheless uniformly favourable."

This is to be a complete legal aid system covering both civil and criminal cases. If such a system could be put into operation it would be a great step forward. If the provinces do not agree to such a system with the federal government, legal aid services should at least be provided in both territories in the meantime. I understand that they have now been established in the Northwest Territories. They should be established in both territories. This should cover all federal courts, including the new Federal Court, federal boards of commission and cases under the Criminal Code and other statutes which can be considered criminal statutes. It is true we have allowed the administration of criminal justice to be carried on by the provincial authorities, but the constitutional basis of that is not soundly established. If it wishes, the federal government could provide a legal aid system for all cases coming under the Criminal Code and criminal statutes.

I would like to make reference to some very encouraging developments which have taken place in the last year, particularly with regard to the opening of store-front law offices and legal aid clinics associated with anti-poverty committees. These store-front law offices and legal aid clinics have to a great extent been initiated by students of different law schools across the country. This was done by students of Dalhousie University in Halifax, McGill, the University of Montreal, and Toronto. There may be other cases but I am not familiar with them.

I visited some of the store-front law offices during the past summer. Some were assisted by the Opportunities for Youth program. They have done a very good job. Montreal has the two with which I am most familiar. One is an office of the juvenile legal services operating in the northeast end of Montreal near the family welfare court. It is in the area of St. Denis Street and Bellechasse. This legal aid clinic provided services to young people who were being brought before the juvenile court in Montreal. It had one full-time lawyer who was being paid out of money that was raised by the office. It also had a number of student lawyers who worked during the summer under the Opportunities for Youth program. In addition, there were two students who were being trained in social work and other types of services for young people.

The other clinic in Montreal, which was very impressive, was known as Community Legal Services, Point St. Charles. It operated in conjunction with the Point St. Charles poverty committee. This group had the services of one fully qualified lawyer. It was also assisted by law students working under the provisions of the Opportunities for Youth program. Very valuable work was done in both cases. A service was provided to the community that would not have been available under ordinary circumstances.

In conclusion, I make a plea for federally-financed legal aid services. I hope the Minister of Justice is successful in carrying through the program which he presented to the Canadian Bar Association at Banff. If not, I hope he will introduce a legal aid service pertaining to federal courts and federal laws. The bill which I have before the House is minimal, but if it is put into operation great pressure will be applied to the provinces and the federal government to do something about the legal aid system and to ensure that no person in Canada is denied justice because he cannot afford legal services.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre de Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at first that the bill introduced by my colleague and friend the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is a fine bill. I feel that it is essentially based on the concept of the availability of justice. Indeed, in spite of the legal system now in force in Canada, especially the legal services mentioned in the Canadian Bill of Rights, we can state that a large part of the people with small means are far from being assured of obtaining legal services.

I would like at first to make some technical comments. In my opinion, the inclusion of that section after section 20 would not be as satisfactory as if it appeared at the beginning of Part XIV of the Criminal Code which deals with appearances, that is section 434 and the following ones.

Then, at line 8, in the French version, instead of the words

—afin d'être accusé—

I would rather put

—pour répondre—

since at his first appearance, he should be called upon to make a choice rather than face a charge.

At line 9, instead of the word

—infraction—

I would use

—offense—

—which includes "infractions" and criminal acts. Finally, at line 10, instead of —le juge—

I would prefer

—le président du tribunal—

since it may well be a magistrate rather than a judge.

Finally, at line 17, the term

—le procès—

should read instead

—les procédures—

since the "procès" has not started yet. To avoid any doubt, any uncertainty, I would add at line 23, the following:

—and he may rule on the temporary release of the accused.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, as I said in my opining remarks, that the bill introduced by my colleague is essential because, as he himself pointed out, legal aid services are not yet widespread throughout the land.

In Ontario, the Legal Aid Act is intended strictly for the poor.

It is true that the duty counsellor is always in attendance at the court when there are appearances. Evidently, he does not have time to inquire about the financial means of the people brought before the court, but he can then at least help them.

In Quebec, for many years, only the bar was concerned with judicial assistance. It was paid out of the lawyers' contributions without any help from the provincial government. Today, it is fortunate that the government and particularly the present Minister of Justice in Quebec are greatly interested in that matter. I notice that seven lawyers work full time on legal aid in Quebec City, and about twenty in Montreal.

This has been made possible in Quebec through an agreement between the government of Quebec and the bar association of that province. This year, for instance, the Quebec government will grant $1.8 million for the Quebec City and Montreal offices and the opening of others in every part of the province.

I point out that the purpose of those offices will not be only to assist the persons accused of criminal offences, but also to help those who have legal family problems, such as divorce, separation, social welfare, etc.

Of course, the amount may seem enormous, but according to the information I have gathered, it will hardly be enough to meet 20 per cent of present needs.

Thus the area I represent—the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé—does not have any legal aid service. When people from this area or from peripheral areas have to cope with a legal problem, they cannot appeal to any legal aid service.

This bill is essential if we really want to acknowledge that we are part of a just society. Let us imagine a needy person or anybody appearing before a tribunal. The man has spent the night in prison, and was unable to shave or wash; he already has one strike against him. It is the first time he sees the austere and strange decor of a court and he is already flabbergasted by his arrest. After the clerk has read the indictment, the judge asks whether he wants to appear before a magistrate without a jury, a judge without a jury or a judge with a jury—with a preliminary enquiry in the two latter cases. He is asked whether he has well understood, but he will certainly not say no because he does not want to look like a dope. He has to say yes even if he has not understood a single word. Everything is proceeding in an atmosphere reminiscent of Kafka's books. If one considers the problems of law students themselves in understanding these distinctions, one can readily imagine how lost a layman must be when he hears these uncanny and esoteric words.

This reminds me of a story, obviously fictitious, which appeared in an issue of the Criminal Law Quarterly.

A person charged with drunken driving appears before a judge who asks the defendant if he has a lawyer. The latter says that he does not and the judge tells him that drunken driving carries a minimum penalty of fourteen days in jail. But if the defendant pleads not guilty and is convicted of impaired driving, he can get off with a lighter sentence. Such is British fair-play. Consequently, the defendant agrees to a trial before a judge and without a jury and the case proceeds at once before the judge. Policemen submit evidence and the judge then says to the defendant that as such he does not have to testify but he can do so if he wishes. The trial ends with a conviction for a lesser offense, impaired, not drunken driving. The judge then says that the many people who drive while impaired constitute a public danger.

So, I shall sentence you to 30 days in jail.

Obviously, this is a fictitious story related in the Criminal Law Quarterly, but it illustrates pretty well how difficult it is to protect the interests of citizens appearing before the courts when they do not have the help of counsel.

If Canada truly wants to establish a just society, we absolutely must include in the constitution the sacred right of the citizen to counsel as soon as he is arrested. Until such time as this right is provided for in the Canadian constitution, civil liberties in Canada will be threatened.

I personally have had too much experience, in my Quebec legal practice, of people arrested by the police whose prison whereabouts were not known. They were held incommunicado several days and although I had been retained by their relatives or their spouses I was unable to communicate with them. Sometimes, after a week or two of detention, they appeared in court disfigured, having signed full confessions in jail. I consider such methods to be absolutely vile and unworthy of a so-called just society.

That is why I was so grieved to see that on the occasion of the attempt of partial reshaping of the Canadian constitution in Victoria last June there was practically no reference to the right of the accused to have the services of a lawyer immediately upon his arrest.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the principle we are discussing today is the principle which is underlying Bill C-50 introduced by the hon. member for Notre-DAme-de-Grâce. That is a basic principle in a democratic society: the principle of access to the courts and of democratization of justice.

[English]

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the hon. member who has just spoken in supporting the bill in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

Any society which aspires to social justice is deficient if it does not possess an adequate legal aid system. Canada, with the exception of one or two provincial jurisdictions, does not possess such a system. The province of Quebec has announced that within the next few months it will, hopefully, inaugurate a better and more comprehensive legal aid system.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has given an indication of sympathy for some kind of national system of legal aid. I heartily endorse this proposal, as I am sure does every member of this House. The Department of Justice, through its minister, took an important step in promoting a federal initiative when it inaugurated the legal aid system in the Northwest Territories by signing an agreement in August with the commissioner of the territories. Unfortunately, the federal system as proposed and implemented in the Northwest Territories has come under what I would call unfair attack.

A few days ago in the Globe and Mail an argument was presented to the effect that the method of appointing counsel as proposed under the legal aid plan in the Northwest Territories was improper and inadequate. The argument appearing in the editorial was that the assignment of counsel provision appeared to be based on the fear that the system would result in one or two lawyers getting the bulk of the legal aid business, and since there are only a handful of lawyers in the territories this might cause the demoralization of the remaining lawyers, causing them to leave, and dissuading new lawyers from coming to the territories. The Globe and Mail suggested this was the apparent reason for the inclusion in the agreement for legal aid in the Northwest Territories of the provision that lawyers providing legal aid would be chosen by a committee rather than by the person needing legal aid.

As provided for in the agreement, this committee would be appointed by the commissioner and by lawyers, and would name certain lawyers on a rotating basis as the judge made his circuit of communities in the Northwest Territories. The reasoning behind the decision to have a committee appoint lawyers in the Northwest Territories, for legal aid cases in all but the most serious cases in which individual accused would be entitled to their own lawyers, was based on logistics. It would be almost impossible if every accused in the Northwest Territories who was unable to pay for legal services was given a choice of the lawyers in the territories. It would mean that practically every attorney would have to accompany the judge on circuit. One can well imagine the logistical problem facing the court each time the judge flew to Frobisher in the eastern Arctic, returning through the central Arctic, back to Inuvik and down to Yellowknife. There is no possible way in which this could be handled, for it would disrupt the normal legal proceedings of the entire territories each time it occurred.

The fear expressed in the Globe and Mail is based on a misinterpretation of the reasoning for the provision in the agreement that lawyers be appointed by the committee. The committee is independent and is one that will reflect the views of most of the lawyers in the Northwest Territories. It will have the requirement to divide cases as fairly as possible among all practising lawyers in the territories. The Yukon territory up to now has, unfortunately, not seen fit to inaugurate an agreement of this kind with the government of Canada. I understand the Minister of Justice has been attempting to persuade the commissioner and the council there that this would be in the interest of Yukoners. I understand there is a fear among territorial councillors that the cost involved may be considerably more than initially appears to be the case. If it is simply a question of cost, I would hope a formula for cost-sharing could be worked out somewhat along the lines of that in the Northwest Territories provision, perhaps with some slight changes.

The 50-50 proposal which formed part of the Northwest Territories agreement would appear to be at least a good starting point. I urge the Yukon territorial council to reconsider its position in this case. There is no doubt in my mind that the implementation of a legal aid agreement in the Yukon would be a real step forward. If this important social reform, which I feel is one of the most important proposed in the Yukon for some time, is being prevented from implementation for purely financial reasons, I am convinced there must be a solution.

If, however, it is simply a question of the commissioner of the Yukon, who is an appointee of this government, resisting or impeding the social reform proposal that has been made by the government, then the matter is much more serious and I hope that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), who have ultimate responsibility for the Yukon, will get together and discuss the matter.

It seems to me that there is no excuse whatsoever, now that the program has been implemented in the Northwest Territories and if reasonable terms are being offered to the Yukon, for the matter to be held up indefinitely. If the reason is simply financial, I am sure it can be worked out to the Yukon's satisfaction. But if there are other reasons involved in holding up the social reform proposed by this government, then I do not like it and I am sure members of the House would agree with me that all necessary pressure should be applied to ensure that this social reform in the Yukon is carried through. I hope, also, that the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), whom I know is favourable to the principle of legal aid in the Yukon, will exert on the commissioner the considerable amount of pressure which is available to him to assure that this reform is carried through.

In conclusion, I would urge that the bill proposed by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce be accepted. I urge that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where it could be discussed more fully and where, hopefully, we could consider its inclusion in our Criminal Code within the not-too-distant future. Without taking any more time of the House, let me just say that I hope we can agree to having this bill referred to the committee this afternoon.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in my view, this bill in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is a good one and I hope the House will this afternoon either pass the bill on second reading and send it to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs or, if that is too much, agree to send the subject matter of the bill to the committee.

Having looked at the bill itself and the explanatory note, it strikes me that this is one of those cases where the bill is so clear, even in its legal language, that the explanatory note was hardly necessary. I do not think that anyone who has preceded me in this debate has put the actual text of the bill into the Hansard record, and therefore I should like to do so. The bill proposes that there be written into the Criminal Code these words:

> As soon as an accused is brought before a court to be charged with an offence under this act, the judge must immediately ask him if he is represented by legal counsel, and if not, if he wishes an adjournment in order to obtain such legal counsel. If the accused replies in the affirmative, the judge will adjourn the appearance for one day. If the accused replies in the negative, the case shall proceed in the usual way.
> When the judge adjourns a case under this section he will immediately advise the accused of any and all methods of legal aid within the jurisdiction.

It seems to me that that is a progressive proposal, that it is in line with our concepts of civil liberties and justice for all, and I hope the bill will not receive the treatment that bills sometimes receive in private members' hour. I see my good friend and fellow member of the Friday afternoon club, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), is here. I hope he has not been given instructions to talk out this bill. Perhaps he will move that its subject matter be referred to the committee.

[Mr. Watson.]

Mr. McBride: He has just become a "P.S."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A "P.S."? You mean he is a postscript to somebody? At any rate, even though we on this side of the House have difficulty getting the subject matter of bills of ours referred to committee, that will not stop us from thinking that it should be done when there is a good bill before us, even when it comes from the government's side of the House. This is a good one and I hope it will be approved this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to catch the eye of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I listened very carefully to any comments he had to make about me, my attitude or the actions I take in the House, and I concur with the comment he made that the subject matter of this bill should be referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I give that proposal my 100 per cent support.

I believe this is the second occasion in the last month that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has brought a subject matter before the House during private members' hour. I was happy to second his previous motion. It had to be made in the form of a notice of motion, because I know the careful study and research that this hon. member carries out before he places anything on the order paper for debate in the House.

As a result of this debate there may be a feeling that no legal aid is available in Canada. Of course, that is not true. I was a practising lawyer in the province of Ontario before I became a Member of Parliament. In that province, long before the government got into the act, the benchers, who are in effect the board of directors of the lawyers in our province, saw fit to organize and set up special committees. Their purpose was to ensure that anyone who needed a lawyer in the province of Ontario could get one, and not only could they get a lawyer but they could get one of their own choice at no cost to the taxpayer or to the individual who sought legal advice. In recent years that has been changed; the provincial government saw fit to build upon the administrative expertise. The benchers' directors and members of the Upper Canada Law Society have developed the situation where we now have legal aid directors in communities who receive a percentage of the fees set down in a particular scale.

I endorse the admonition that is recommended in this bill. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce may not feel that his bill will be passed by the House or that its subject matter will be referred to committee, but I think he is hoping in this way to impress on the provinces which have the responsibility of administering justice the fact that this is a question they should be considering; and if legal aid is not available in all the provinces now, it should in fact be made available.

I think we have a good legal aid scheme in the province of Ontario. Hopefully, this program can be improved upon, because one of the arguments constantly faced by lawyers, judges and used by those who criticize our system of justice is that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. I think a legal aid system goes a long way toward dissuading people from speaking in that manner and from taking this attitude.

I was a little disturbed when the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce quoted statistics, not so much because he read them but because, unhappily, that seems to be the true picture. Although he was only quoting from 1,000 returns, I think it would be generally true of the attitude of the general public to the legal profession. I do not blame the public for this; I blame members of the legal profession who should spend more time on public relations' work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: What struck me particularly was that the public felt criminal lawyers were hypocritical. Yet to my way of thinking no one who practises before the courts has a more difficult task than the individual who practices criminal law. To illustrate, take the case of a child who is sexually assaulted, killed, or beaten. Someone is accused and charged with an offence. Invariably you hear the comment, "How could anybody defend a monster like that?" Unhappily, that attitude is becoming all too prevalent in discussions that you hear on the street. Yet that individual, if we believe what we preach, is innocent until proven guilty: he is entitled not only to a defence but to the best possible defence available.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I am proud to be a member of the legal profession because among our profession we have dedicated men who are prepared to risk rust or stain on their reputations by ensuring that an individual is adequately protected before the courts. I take my hat off to any criminal lawyer in this province, because I know the difficulties he goes through. It is the freedom of the individual that he has to protect, and sometimes he has to associate with those who might be called shady characters. He has to associate with them to the extent that they come into his office and seek his help. He is not pleading his case, his position; he is pleading the case of the individual he is called upon to defend. In this respect, I believe the gentlemen who had the most difficult cases in recent history were those who defended the Nazi war criminals. It had been suggested by many people that those monsters should be given kangaroo court justice, taken out and shot. But they were given the benefit of a true court hearing. Before people begin to criticize criminal lawyers I hope they will think about the fantastic job that these men are called upon to do.

Another individual who criticizes the courts, Mr. Speaker, is the person who loses a law suit that he thinks he should have won, or the individual who convinces himself that he has done no wrong and that the other party involved is completely wrong, only to find the judge decides that the responsibility must be shared, perhaps on a 50-50 basis. That individual will be even more critical if he is found to be 70 per cent at fault. He will be critical of the court and perhaps his lawyer for not doing a sufficient amount of work or background study before taking the case. He may even criticize the fact that the lawyer, in his opinion, did not have a sufficient degree of expertise to cope with the case. We will always have that kind of criticism.

If I had the time I would speak to every one of the thousand people who returned the paper to which the hon. member for Notre-Dame-De-Grâce referred and find out why they feel as strongly as they do. I would like to find out whether they have a strong feeling about capital punishment. Do they feel that once a policeman picks somebody up it is game over; that the police have arrested the right man and he should automatically go to jail? People who feel that way will not be convinced that a lawyer has a role to play in the courts. I would like to interview those people individually. I maintain that those who wrote this report should follow it up and find out why people have such ideas. Are they ideas that have been foisted upon them by others, or do they sincerely believe there is something wrong with what they call the "rotten Bar" and even with the judges who preside over it?

I do not wish to speak longer on this motion. I support the bill. I doubt that it will be carried in its present form, but its subject matter should be discussed by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate and I must say that I agree with the principle expressed in the bill. In fact, there does not appear to be any fundamental disagreement with it. But a bill like this should be examined on its merits, and carefully examined. In this respect I have been a little disappointed by the debate from the other side of the House. I welcomed the intervention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think he spoke for only three minutes. However, we have had no contribution from hon. members on that side of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We don't want to talk out the bill.

Mr. Francis: The purpose of this House is to examine matters that come before it, and I shall put forward one or two reasons why I think there should be further debate on the bill before it goes to committee. I agree with the principle of the bill. I am not a lawyer, but as I understand it, ordinarily a judge before whom an accused appears for the first time will be asked if he is represented by counsel and, if not, whether he wishes time to instruct counsel. If the answer is yes, a reasonable adjournment will usually be granted.

Judges are very conscious of this aspect in the case of a person who is in custody, perhaps having been arrested only the night before. If such a person desires counsel and is unable to retain counsel privately, the judge will usually inform him of whatever legal aid may be available. In provinces where legal aid is more highly organized, there may even be duty counsel present in the court. On the other hand, where the accused simply appears in response to a summons and where he has had ample time to retain and instruct counsel prior to his appearance, the court may be less willing to grant a lengthy adjournment in order to secure counsel unless there appears to be good reason why the accused was unable to do so.

One aspect of Bill C-50 which gives me some concern is that it would oblige the judge to grant an adjournment of one day only where the accused indicates that he wishes to be represented by counsel. Sometimes this may be insufficient. The effect would be to deprive the judge of the discretion to grant any reasonable adjournment when an accused wishes to retain counsel and has been unable to do so up to the time of his appearance.

The last aspect of the matter which I think is worthy of consideration is that the system of legal aid varies very considerably from one province to another. This is something which should be discussed by the Attorneys General of the provinces and by the federal Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), because this bill proposes an amendment to a federal statute. Before the federal government enacts such legislation in the form of an amendment to the Criminal Code there should be good and sufficient prior discussion with the provinces which also have a major constitutional responsibility in the administration of justice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I rise on a point of order with regard to the business of the House, Mr. Speaker. On Friday last the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader said, when dealing with the Business of the House:

> ... Mr. Speaker, yesterday the government House leader announced that Monday's business would be Bill C-244. I think everyone in this House knows that discussions are taking place between the federal agricultural minister and the agricultural ministers of the western provinces. I wish to report to the House—and I have so advised the House leaders opposite—that these discussions may continue. In that case, rather than call the agricultural bill on Monday we will continue with the measure now before the House. The House leader will endeavour to notify opposition House leaders as early as possible on Monday.

Subsequently a press release was issued on behalf of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the three agricultural ministers for the prairie provinces which indicated that there might be a cease-fire or armistice as the case may be. While we were not a party to that, there is no doubt that it is the desire of all members that the best interests of the farmers should be served. However, Mr. Speaker, it was our opinion at the time that this was all conditional upon certain changes being made in Bill C-244. I now find that my impressions in this regard are not correct and that the government will be proceeding with Bill C-244 today, following the shortest armistice in history. I just want to make it plain, Mr. Speaker, that this party did not at any time request a postponement of Bill C-244. Despite all the bleating in high places about what the bad opposition is doing to the poor timid little government, they have carriage of the government business, when to bring it on, how long to keep it before the House and when to end it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with respect to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River. I do so in the belief, from telephone conversations that have taken place this morning, that it is now the government's intention to call Bill C-244 today rather than Bill C-259 as was indicated Friday afternoon by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. If that is the intention I wish to register a very strong protest. Not only was the statement made on his own initiative by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on Friday afternoon but we were advised from the government side about the intentions for these few days.

As the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board knows, because we have since confirmed the telephone conversation to which I shall refer, he telephoned me on Friday afternoon and indicated that as a result of the discussions between him and the prairie Ministers of Agriculture there was a desire to have a moratorium for a few days or perhaps a week. The terms of that moratorium were, in the main, two. First, Bill C-244 would not be proceeded with today; second, we would not continue to hound the government over its non-payment of the amounts due under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I indicated, as House leader for this party, that I would recommend to my colleagues that we agree to this truce, this cooling-off period, or whatever you want to call it.

It was my clear understanding that Bill C-244 would not be called today. It was also my understanding that this undertaking had been given to the prairie Ministers of Agriculture. The reason for putting off the debate on Bill C-244 was that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board—perhaps more than that, the whole government—wished to give consideration to the requests made to the government by the prairie Ministers of Agriculture, which included a request for certain changes in this bill. There was no misunderstanding between my hon. friend and myself. It was clear that "consideration" did not mean that the government would necessarily agree to the things we were requesting. But it was also clear that there would be consideration in good faith. It was made clear to me that after consideration had been given the prairie ministers would be advised of the position. We would also be advised and we would resume at that point. That kind of agreement having been discussed on Friday, I submit that the government, in wishing to go ahead with Bill C-244 today, is not operating in good faith.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I make the point that I did not telephone the minister in charge of the Wheat Board on Friday. He telephoned me. We did not ask for this cease-fire, this cooling-off period; the government asked for it. We said we were prepared to agree to it.

But the one point that was made very clear by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was that the government would not proceed today with Bill C-244. If I may spell this out, I thought it was an agreement for a full week and the minister said no, not necessarily for a full week, it might be for three or four days. For the government to come back and ask us to debate this bill today is not only breaking faith with us here on the floor of Parliament but breaking faith with the Ministers of Agriculture who were promised that their pleas would be given consideration. I recognize that some of the things the ministers asked for were outside the confines of Bill C-244, but some of them were within the confines of that bill.

The answer that sent those ministers home, namely, the assurance that there would be consideration, is completely without value if the government comes back after the weekend, in which, surely, there was not enough time to give consideration to this question, and introduces this debate today. We were asked to cool off and to call off our attack. But over the weekend we heard from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board on one television network and we heard from the Prime Minister on the other, both of them attacking us for our stand. Today they are bringing back the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I object most strongly to this change in the order of business. It was the minister's suggestion on Friday, not ours, that we proceed with Bill C-259 instead of Bill C-244. I object most strongly to this change in the order of business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, speaking on the point of order—I presume that is what it is—I should like simply to indicate to the House that in the discussions which I had in the absence of the House leader on one point last Friday, it was quite clear that the question of the order of business would require some further confirmation between the House leaders this morning and therefore there was always in that sense the possibility that we might proceed with one item of business or with the other.

The request for postponing debate on the stabilization bill and also on any question of illegality came from the prairie Ministers of Agriculture. It was addressed in effect to all of us in the House and required all of us to consider different aspects of that question. It was that request which was put, I understand, by them to hon. members opposite and was discussed by me with my colleagues. It therefore required confirmation of discussion about what exactly would be understood with regard to the order of business.

I understand that in the course of discussions this morning agreement was not capable of being arrived at because of some view that any postponement in some way implied accepting changes to the bill, whereas in fact the proposal from the prairie ministers and our willingness to consider any delay depended upon their feeling that if we had some additional time it might be useful in our formulating a commentary to them on their proposals. It certainly was not ever meant to be a detailed or complex policy statement on those proposals but merely some kind of interim reply to them, because they raised complex matters going far beyond the bill. Briefly, with regard to the discussions we had, these depended on their being an understanding of exactly what we were agreeing upon and depended upon full consent and agreement on all sides which this morning did not appear to materialize.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BANNING OF NUCLEAR TESTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This urgent matter is the necessity for this House to enunciate Canada's position in actively working for an international agreement to end all nuclear tests by all nuclear powers, including China, France, the U.S.S.R. and the United States—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIntosh: —and whether such tests be in the air, the seas or underground. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that a motion to adjourn the House is normally made under Standing Order 26; however, my motion contains procedural qualifications that cannot be appended to a Standing Order 26 motion. If I have the unanimous consent of the House, I will move, seconded by the member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That this House instructs the House leaders of all parties to confer together to draft a motion concerning the banning of all nuclear tests; and to provide this week a period for a debate and vote by this House on the motion under terms and conditions agreed upon by the House leaders but to ensure opportunity for free expression of opinion by members: and this House orders that a message containing the text of such motion be carried to the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the terms of the motion proposed for consideration by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. This motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

An hon. Member: Sudbury said no.

Mr. Bell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When there were objections on this side to a motion under Standing Order 43 it was reported in the newspapers. I think it should be recorded that the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) said no.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Warmonger!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE CONSTITUENCY NAME FROM HIGH PARK TO HIGH PARK-HUMBER VALLEY

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-268, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

• (2:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Deakon: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to change the name of the electoral district of High Park to that of High Park-Humber Valley, thereby expressing the wishes of the majority of the people of that riding, namely, to describe more accurately the boundaries of the said riding as they encompass the area.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—PORTFOLIO OF PHOTOGRAPHS "SÉRIE 4"

Question No. 1,621—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Was a portfolio of photographs entitled "Série 4" by Normand Grégoire commissioned by the National Film Board of Canada and, if so (a) what was the total cost (b) how many copies were made (c) what was its selling price?

2. Was there any free distribution of the "Série 4" portfolio and, if so, what persons and schools were supplied with these photographs?

3. (a) How many other similar portfolios of photographs were produced for the National Film Board (b) what was the total cost (c) what is the rationale for and purpose of such photographic productions?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows: 1. Yes. (a) $10,425; (b) 3,300 copies were made; (c) $5.00 a copy.

2. No.

3. (a) None; (b) not applicable; (c) to promote and distribute visual interpretations of Canada through the work of talented Canadian film and stills artists.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF HEARING-AID BATTERIES

Question No. 1,691—Mr. McQuaid:

Has the Department of Supply and Services awarded a contract to Mallory Battery Co. of Canada Ltd. for the supply of hearing-aid batteries and, if so (a) were any of these purchased for the use of Cabinet Ministers and, if so, which Ministers (b) for what purpose were the batteries purchased (c) to whom were they distributed?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. A contract valued at $39,025, dated July 29, 1971, was awarded to the lowest tenderer, Mallory Battery Company of Canada Ltd., for the supply of hearing-aid batteries. (a) No. (b) & (c) The contract covers the supply of various types of hearing-aid batteries, as required during the period from August 1, 1971 to July 31, 1972, to certified hospitals of the Department of Veterans' Affairs, across Canada.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF WASTE PAPER BASKETS

Question No. 1,692—Mr. McQuaid:

Has the Department of Supply and Services recently awarded a contract to Office Specialty Limited for the supply of waste paper baskets and, if so, how many baskets are involved and what is the price per basket?

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. A contract was awarded on August 10, 1971 to the lowest tenderer, Office Specialty Ltd., for 7,392 baskets at $1.36 each, for DSS No. 1 Supply Centre, Ottawa, to meet demands from all government departments.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF MOBILE UNIT

Question No. 1,693—Mr. McQuaid:

Has the Department of Supply and Services purchased from Porta-Built Industries Ltd. a mobile home and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) who will occupy it (c) where will it be located?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) Yes. A contract valued at $16,347, was awarded to the lowest tenderer, Porta-Built Industries, for the supply and transport of one mobile residence unit to the Department of National Health and Welfare Hospital at Inuvik, N.W.T.: (b) the unit is to be part of a nursing station complex and will also be used temporarily as office accommodation; (c) as in (a).

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF FELT HATS

Question No. 1,697—Mr. McQuaid:

Has the Department of Supply and Services recently awarded a contract to Biltmore Hats Limited for the purchase of felt hats and, if so (a) how many hats are involved and what is the price per hat (b) to which departments are the hats being supplied and how many hats to each department?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) and (b) Yes. A contract was awarded on July 28, 1971 to Biltmore Hats Ltd., for the supply of 2,500 hats at $16.31 each for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—SUPPLY OF FRESH AND FROZEN MEAT

Question No. 1,699—Mr. McQuaid:

Has the Department of Supply and Services recently awarded contracts to Canada Packers Ltd. of Charlottetown for the purchase of meat and meat products and, if so, what types of meat are involved and to whom will the meat and meat products be distributed?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. Two contracts were awarded to the lowest tenderer, Canada Packers, Ltd., Charlottetown, for: (a) the supply of fresh and frozen beef, veal and corned beef to Department of National Defence ration depots at Halifax and Greenwood, and to CFB Cornwallis, N.S. Contract valued at $28,648, was awarded on July 23, 1971, and

(b) the supply of boneless, frozen beef to the DND ration substone at Halifax, N.S. Contract valued at $42,405, was awarded on June 22, 1971.

COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Question No. 1,780—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Does the Commissioner of Official Languages use investigators to test the bilingual competency of federal employees?

2. Was Marc Therien engaged in such an investigation when he appeared at the Prescott and Thousand Island bridges customs port in early September?

3. How many other similar investigations have occurred and where did they take place?

4. Have protests been received by the government with respect to these to date and, if so, what action has been taken?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Commissioner of Official Languages reports directly to Parliament and not through a minister. Questions can be made directly to him privately.

PUBLIC SERVICE—7 PER CENT BILINGUAL BONUS

Question No. 1,391—Mr. Coates:

How many members of the Public Service of Canada have qualified for the special 7 per cent bonus available for bilingualism, what was the total cost to the Federal Treasury in each fiscal year since the program has been in effect, and what is the estimated total cost for the fiscal year 1971-1972?

Return tabled.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN LAY-OFFS PROPOSED BY GENERAL MOTORS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, in the context of threats and government equivocation concerning the safeguards contained in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, the revelation that the layoffs in General Motors plant in Ontario will be nearly 50 per cent higher than those first announced by General Motors and confirmed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in this House on September 21.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has given the Chair notice of his intention to propose this motion under the terms of Standing Order 26. I have given the matter very serious consideration.

As all hon. members know, a similar motion was proposed for the consideration of the House last week, that is, on September 29. I should like to suggest that the circumstances which applied to that motion apply today in the same way. Perhaps, if hon. members will allow me, I might refer them to the ruling which is reported on page 8269 of Hansard for September 29. It reads as follows:

The Chair does appreciate the seriousness of the matter raised by the hon. member. It is undoubtedly one which is of national interest and of concern to all hon. members. In determining whether the business of the House ought to be set aside for the purpose of considering such an important and urgent situation, the Chair has to be guided by certain criteria specified in Standing Order 26. One of these requirements is that the matter proposed for discussion should relate to an emergency which calls for immediate and urgent consideration by the House. In other words, it is not only urgency of the matter which has to be considered but the urgency of debate.

While I surmise that the House would want an opportunity to discuss this problem, I doubt that the urgency of the situation would require that the debate be held today or tomorrow rather than later. If the Chair considers the additional factor of opportunity of debate within a reasonable period of time, I would suggest to the hon. member that from the procedural standpoint an immediate emergency debate would hardly be justified.

I suggest to the hon. member that this ruling applies to the present situation, and I do not see how I can allow the hon. member's motion and put it to the House at this time.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DELAY IN RESUMING DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON ENERGY—UNITED STATES PRECONDITIONS FOR REMOVAL OF SURTAX

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Prime Minister but, since it concerns the subject of energy, perhaps I might be permitted to express the regret felt by myself and my colleagues over the illness of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the hope that he will makes a very full and complete recovery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would confirm that the government has informed the United States that discussions between our two countries relating to energy cannot be resumed at the present time because of preoccupation with the economic situation, as reported by a spokesman for the Canadian embassy in Washington? If the statement is correct, would the Prime Minister make available to members of the House a copy of the message that was sent to the United States authorities? I make this request particularly in view of the fact that some of the press is linking this action to retaliation in connection with the surcharge.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the situation is not quite as the Leader of the Opposition understands it. I believe there were talks last May or in the spring which were adjourned until some time this fall. The situation now is that we have not set any date for such discussions. We have indicated to the United States that at this particular point we are preoccupied with other matters, particularly economic matters, and that we are not in a position at the moment to sit down with United States officials and continue these talks. But there has been no indefinite postponement of them; there is merely an inability to find the time now to proceed with them.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the Prime Minister make available to the House the text of the message in view of the importance of this whole subject to Canadians, and would he tell the House whether the preoccupation of the officials at this time relates to new initiatives that Canada is taking regarding removal of the surtax and state whether Canada has yet received from the United States any indication of any preconditions that the United States will insist upon prior to removal of the surtax?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, I am informed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there is no text of any message; the communication was oral and was along the lines I have just reported to the House. As to what the Leader of the Opposition calls "preconditions", my answer is still the same, that there has been no statement by the United States authorities that if we did such and so they would take off the surtax.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the Prime Minister or the Canadian government received any indication not that the United States would necessarily remove the surtax if certain things were done, but that certain matters have to be settled between the two countries before any removal of the surtax would be considered? In particular, is the government of Canada considering any specific changes with regard to the auto pact? I ask this question particularly in view of the reported differences of opinion within the government on the subject.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is no, and this is not surprising since the question of the Leader of the Opposition is based on an entirely false report.

CONTINUATION OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON IMPORT SURTAX—UNITED STATES SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING REMOVAL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, to pursue the same subject in a somewhat different way, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether discussions between officials of the Canadian government and officials of the United States administration on the question of the surcharge are continuing, and whether any specific matters have been raised in those discussions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke to Mr. Rogers on Friday and mentioned this particular matter. The next occasion, I believe, on which the matter will be brought up for discussion between our officials and the United States will be at the meeting of the deputies of the Group of Ten which is to take place later this month.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is saying to the House that at no time in discussions between ministers or officials were there suggestions made to Canadian spokesmen or representatives about the kind of thing that might be required for the United States surcharge to be removed from Canada, not necessarily as a precondition in firm terms but in the form of a suggestion, recommendation, proposal or in any other way? Is he saying that nothing of that kind was suggested to Canada with regard to the removal of the surcharge?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, long before the surtax was imposed, when I first visited Secretary Connally last spring after he was appointed Secretary of the Treasury we discussed frankly the difficulties which occur between the two countries. I frankly admit they indicated that they would like to see a settlement of the automotive pact. This sort of thing has taken place on each occasion we have met. We have discussed the various problems between the two countries but not in the context of, say, if you do this we will remove the surcharge, and so on. We have maintained the position that we have fulfilled all the requirements put forward by the President and therefore the surcharge should never have been applied to us.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Minister of Finance aware of reports that the United States administration is considering or is developing a program which would ask Canada to contribute $1 billion worth in the turnaround to get the United States balance of payments into relative equilibrium? Has he heard of such a report and will he inform the House whether that kind of thing is being discussed?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. As a matter of fact, on current account we are running at a deficit with the United States.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the information the minister has given the House regarding continuing meetings between officials of Canada and the United States, is he confirming that the United States has now taken the attitude that Canada has been led to believe that the surcharge will be subject to bilateral discussions before modification or removal in its entirety?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Prime Minister. Would he tell the House whether the failure to pursue negotiations with the United States on energy matters is a subtle form of retaliation for recent United States economic policies?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: You mean it is not subtle?

INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF CARS PURCHASED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in respect of discussions with the United States government on the subject of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, is the government of Canada insisting that within a period of say five years the automotive industry within Canada be actually producing the number of cars on an annual basis which Canadians actually purchase?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these negotiations are being carried out by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I really am not familiar with all of the details.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS OF CANADIANS WORKING IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour.

Last week, in answer to a question I put to him regarding the eligibility to benefits of Canadians working in the United States, the minister answered that he would report to the House before the end of the week. May I ask him if he is in a position today to give this information to the House?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me last week whether we had completed reciprocal agreements with all the states of the United States on unemployment insurance. I am pleased to state that we have, but the complete answer would be rather detailed and lengthy. I could either send the hon. member a copy or consider his question as a written one and have the answer printed in Hansard.

GRAIN

STABILIZATION BILL—CLAUSE GUARANTEEING PAYMENTS IN PRESENT AND NEXT CROP YEARS

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the indication given by the Prime Minister on the media yesterday that farmers would be receiving under the proposed stabilization bill, in addition to the $100 million transitional payment, some $35 million in the present crop year and $35 million in the next crop year, will he indicate what clause of Bill C-244 will guarantee that the last $70 million will be put into the hands of the farmers in the next two years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt as to the form of that question.

[Mr. Lewis.]

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Battle River who asked the original question on this subject.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister or to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Are these gentlemen not concerned that the farmers will interpret their statements for what they really are, using the terminology of the farm community, as being pure b.s.?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STABILIZATION BILL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH PRAIRIE MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE—POSSIBLE MODIFICATIONS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Will he report to the House the substance of his discussions with the three prairie Ministers of Agriculture, and would he also indicate any undertakings which were given as between himself and the ministers at their meeting?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the release by the ministers after the meeting contains about all that it would be possible to say at this stage. I do not propose at the moment to make any further report, although certainly I may do so if after further discussion I decide anything should be said to the House.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I should also like to ask the minister whether he or officials of his department, as he may wish, are prepared to meet with appropriate representatives of the three prairie Ministers of Agriculture to determine whether some modifications to Bill C-244 may be worked out which are mutually acceptable for presentation to this House?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in the course of discussions from October to March we met many times with not only representatives of the producer organizations but of the provincial governments. We did include within the final form of the bill those changes which seemed to be indicated as a result of those discussions. This is the bill now before the House, and I think now is the time for the House to consider it and deal with its elements on that basis. Of course, I am always ready to talk generally about the whole problem of prairie grain farmers and other such issues with the provincial Ministers of Agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Close the door to change.

REACHING OF DECISION ON STABILIZATION BILL

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has made statements to the effect that either he or the government would allow one more day's debate on Bill C-244 to determine whether the opposition will allow it to come to a vote and thereby allow it to pass, and in view of the fact that bill is to be called for debate today, following the discussions with the prairie agricultural minister does the minister consider today to be that last chance that he is providing to the opposition in his terms?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been references by a number of members of the government to the need to come to a decision within a reasonable or fairly short time without specific regard to a day or a period. "Last chance" may obviously include a number of days, a period of time or a reasonable period of time, and that is really what is involved. The bill has been considered by the House for many months in different forms and in different ways, and I think the time has come to make a decision soon.

NATURAL RESOURCES

ACTION TO REQUIRE MORE PROCESSING IN CANADA—NATIONAL CONSERVATION POLICY

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As suggested by the Prime Minister of Ontario, is the federal government considering action along with the ten provinces to require more processing of our natural resources and minerals in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this problem is one which has been under the jurisdiction of the provinces for many years and some provinces have, indeed, acted in this regard. In so far as the federal government is able to have some influence, we have tried to exercise it, for instance, through reform in the tax laws.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all interested in constructive federalism, and as the federal government is looked upon as a sort of catalyst or co-ordinator—

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask the question.

Mr. Ryan: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government considering action to compel companies based in Canada to carry out research and development in this country as urged by the Prime Minister of Ontario?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have not considered compelling, as the hon. member would want us to do, but we have given great incentives for this to be proceeded with through the taxation structure.

Mr. Ryan: Is the government going to take action with the provinces to develop a national resources conservation policy.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the area of jurisdiction of the provinces over natural resources is very well established and very wide. I think the hon. member should be directing his question to the Premier of Ontario and not to us.

INDUSTRY

ALLEGED DEPORTATION OF JOBS TO UNITED STATES BECAUSE OF CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of United States charges as reported in the Toronto Telegram of Friday, October 1 that Canadian industrialization policy results in the deportation of Canadian jobs to the United States, is the minister aware of the report and, if so, are his officials preparing an answer to the reported United States charges?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the report and will be happy to receive some comments from my officials.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in light of this and other developments, would the minister agree to make a statement on motions soon in respect of government policy in granting loans and subsidies to subsidiaries of United States and Japanese corporations?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EXTENSION OF SPECIAL AREA DESIGNATIONS—DATE OF DECISION

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of evidence provided on May 12 by Tom Kent, former deputy minister of that department, that the decision to extend the special area designations beyond June 30, 1972, would be made this fall, can the minister now inform the House concerning the date when the decision will be made and what the last date for submissions from interested parties will be?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, no specific dates are mentioned in the law, but we intend to start negotiating with the provinces during November in the hope of reaching a decision in the last part of February.

Mr. McBride: In view of the importance of this question to local representatives and industrial promotion generally, at what date will the government's decision concerning the extension or termination of the special designations be made known?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer now because we are entering on negotiations with the provinces. After these negotiations we will be in a position to fix a date.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ENERGY

DELAY IN RESUMING DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the message which has gone from the government of Canada to Washington with regard to the energy negotiations. Was this message sent to the United States in the context of a definite date having been set for the resumption of these discussions? Did this message involve a postponement from a particular date set for the meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. There has been no message in the sense in which the Leader of the Opposition implies. There have been conversations. I can only repeat what I said a few minutes ago, that the talks were adjourned last spring to be resumed again in the fall and we have not yet set a date.

Mr. Stanfield: When the message referred to by the Canadian embassy spokesman was delivered to Washington, was it in response to a request by the United States officials or authorities for a specific date to resume these discussions relating to energy?

Mr. Trudeau: I rather think so. I would have to verify it. But I think the position is that the United States asked us when we were going to resume the discussions which had been postponed last spring and we said we had not had time to put our minds to it and therefore could not set any specific date right now.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING CRACKDOWN—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT TO CABINET

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the speech made in Houston, Texas, by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in which he assured his audience that the Canadian cabinet were now studying the report on foreign ownership prepared by the Minister of National Revenue and that when a final decision was made they could be sure there would be no crackdown on foreign ownership. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether this represents the view of the government, whether any final decision has been made and if it is true that the new policy will not reflect any significant measures to lessen the growing control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the NDP member talks of a crackdown and then interprets it to mean a significant change. If that is what he means by "crackdown", then I am sure even his party wants to crack down on United States foreign ownership. But that is not what the minister said. To say there is not going to be a crackdown, with which I am sure we all agree, is not to say there will not be some measures taken to ensure greater Canadian control of our domestic and economic environment.

Mr. Douglas: In order that members of the House and the country generally may be able to assess the government's policy on foreign ownership when it is brought down, may I ask the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to make public now or at a later date the entire report submitted to the cabinet by the Minister of National Revenue on foreign ownership?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is talking about a cabinet document, the answer is obviously no. We will not make that public. We never make cabinet documents public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech. He should ask a question.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These events are causing massive lay-offs and my question to the Prime Minister is whether it is his intention to do some belt tightening to match the lay-offs in industry by laying off some of the excess staff in the Privy Council office and in the Prime Minister's office which has increased by one-third to 288 members in the past year?

CLOSING OF ACADIA FISHERIES PLANTS AT CANSO AND MULGRAVE, N.S.—MEASURES TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. On September 22 I posed a question to the minister with reference to closure of fish processing plants at Canso and Mulgrave placing 800 workers on the unemployment rolls and asked what steps were being taken by his department to alleviate this serious problem. The minister at that time stated that had he had one hour's notice he would have been in a position to make a full report, to use his own words, and added that he would do so the next day, September 23. As it is now 12 days since he had notice of the question, is the minister now in a position to give us some information on this subject?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the government of Nova Scotia has informed us that they are very carefully considering this case. We are closely following the discussions between the management of this industry and the government of Nova Scotia and if we can help at any time, we will be informed and I shall be happy to take part in the re-establishment of this business.

Mr. Muir: In other words, is the minister assuring the House that his department is getting ready to assist in opening up these fish plants?

INCOME TAX

CRTC RECOMMENDATION FOR DISALLOWANCE AS EXPENSE OF COST OF ADVERTISING ON RADIO OR TELEVISION STATIONS NOT LICENSED BY COMMISSION

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell). Has the minister asked the government to act on the recommendation of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to introduce an amendment to section 12(a) of the present Income Tax Act, or to Bill C-259, that would disallow as an expense the cost of advertising on radio or television stations not licensed by the commission? I ask the minister this question in the absence of the Secretary of State.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, questions concerning the Income Tax Act should more properly be directed to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether that question is in order. The hon. member for Greenwood.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO PREMIER KOSYGIN ON RIGHT OF SOVIET JEWS TO EMIGRATE AND RIGHTS OF OTHER ETHNIC GROUPS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the fact that in 1971 some 50,000 persons of Jewish origin applied for exit permits in the U.S.S.R. and only about 7,000 permits were granted, will the Prime Minister take the opportunity presented by the forthcoming visit of Mr. Kosygin to indicate to him the serious concern of Canada about this refusal of the right to emigrate from the U.S.S.R.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will look into these figures and if they do indicate the situation which the hon. member seems to describe I will renew with the Premier of the Soviet Union representations I made to him when I saw him last May.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It was reported yesterday that the Minister of Communications promised that the government will "renew the representations" the Prime Minister made for the rights of minorities in the U.S.S.R. when Premier Kosygin visits Canada. Will the Prime Minister say whether this is the intention of the government and, in light of what he said in the U.S.S.R., will the Prime Minister say what the minister meant by "representations"?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look up the statement to which the hon. member refers and see myself what it says I said, or would say.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary but we have reached the point in the question period when I have to remind hon. members that we will soon be running out of time.

Mr. Paproski: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister hired from the Toronto Telegram the services of Peter Worthington and Lubar Zink to look after the itinerary of Mr. Kosygin when in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary to the original question. Will the Prime Minister discuss with Mr. Kosygin the rights of other ethnic groups to visit Canada, as well as the rights of the Jewish people in the Soviet Union, along the lines of the question of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre?

Mr. Trudeau: Here too, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the hon. member what exactly he would like me to say to the Premier and certainly give it very deep consideration.

COMBINES

SALE OF TORONTO "TELEGRAM" SUBSCRIPTION LIST TO TORONTO "STAR"

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the expressed intent of Bill C-256, the new Competition Act, I wonder whether he has notified the purchaser of the subscription list of the Toronto Telegram that under the new act his officials may take retroactive action if they believe competition is significantly decreased by the sale of that subscription list?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that would be prejudging a decision by parliament and would be in contempt of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: You would never do that.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Did he not prejudge the wishes of Parliament when he told Home Oil that they could not sell out and that, if they did, retroactive legislation would be enacted by Parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is argument.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF MONOPOLY CREATED IN TORONTO NEWSPAPER FIELD

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I with to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister investigate the monopoly situation that apparently has been created in the Toronto newspaper field, particularly in view of the fact that his department investigated and is now prosecuting in a situation similar in the New Brunswick newspaper field?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept either hypothesis relative to Toronto or New Brunswick. I indicated at the time the announcement was made relative to Toronto that the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Act would conduct an inquiry in order to determine whether he had reason to believe the Combines Investigation Act was being violated.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, then may I take it from the minister's answer that a monopoly is all right in Toronto but not in New Brunswick?

Mr. Basford: No.

AGRICULTURE

CORN—ACTION TO PREVENT DUMPING OF UNITED STATES PRODUCT AND LOWERING OF CANADIAN PRICE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the price of corn in southern Ontario has now declined to $1.09 a bushel and may in fact decline even more to 99 cents a bushel, and in view of the fact that this is mainly due to the dumping of American corn on the Canadian market at this time, would the minister consider preventing this dumping so that Ontario corn producers will get a fair price for their product?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, representations along these lines were made to me and to officials of my department several days ago and they are under active consideration at the moment.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ST. ROMUALD—USE OF GRANT TO GOLDEN EAGLE COMPANY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Last Friday, the minister was a guest of honour at the inauguration of the Golden Eagle refinery in St. Romuald. Following the ceremony, newspapers reported that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion had made a grant of five million dollars to the firm.

An hon. Member: Ten.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): May I ask the minister whether a portion of those five million dollars was allocated for the construction of the St. Romuald pier?

Mr. Speaker: I believe that question should normally be placed on the order paper. If it is urgent, as I believe might be the case, the matter could be dealt with at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member want to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse on a supplementary.

POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): In view of the importance of the matter, I wish to ask the minister why in his capacity as representative of the federal government he has not been invited to elaborate on its policy governing subsidies to companies, even in Quebec?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the incident at St. Romuald has nothing to do with a speech I may have made. However, the officials of the company have not mentioned the assistance from the Canadian government, which is of the order of $10 million, and I found it improper for them not to thank the Canadian public for the assistance granted to them.

HIGHWAYS

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND BRITISH COLUMBIA ON PAVING OF ALASKA HIGHWAY AND BUILDING OF ROAD TO SKAGWAY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I was waiting for the Minister of Public Works to return to the chamber but since he has not may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Have the discussions been concluded which have been going on between Canada and the governments of the United States and British Columbia with respect to the paving of the Alaska Highway and the construction of a road through the Panhandle to Skagway? If they have been concluded, what are the results of those discussions? If they have not been concluded, are the discussions continuing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer this question. I am not aware of the state at which these talks or discussions may be now but I will inquire and either answer or ask the minister to prepare an answer.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have an indication that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has an answer to the question I put to the Prime Minister a moment ago. I wonder if he could provide that answer to the House?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the United States Congress authorized discussions with Canada concerning the improvement and paving of the Alaska highway, and officials of the two governments met in Ottawa in June for an exchange of views, largely on technical questions. It was decided at that time that Canada would conduct a survey of the origin and destination of traffic on the highway during the summer months and when the results of that study were available there would be a further meeting.

Mr. Nielsen: That leaves only the question of discussion with the British Columbia government and the U.S. government with respect to a road through the Panhandle to Tidewater. Perhaps that could be answered at some other time by the appropriate minister.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNITED STATES ECONOMIC MEASURES—RENEGOTIATION OF DEFENCE PURCHASING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, this is supplementary to a question asked earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton West and I direct it to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether in the discussions with the Americans the question of defence purchasing in Canada has come up? If so, was there any particular request from the Americans that we perhaps re-orient part of our defence purchasing to offset their difficulties somewhat?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these discussions have gone on for a long time, in fact, as I indicated previously, since last spring, and this is one of the questions that were raised. The Americans indicated to me, and I was told this in general discussions with Secretary of the Treasury Connally, that they felt we had done very well and that this exchange of defence procurement had worked out for us rather better than they would like to see us do in the long run.

Mr. Forrestall: Could the minister indicate whether or not we have in any way made any concessions that would place professional judgment in some difficulty, particularly with respect to a replacement for the Argus? Are we going to buy the Orion despite the professional judgment we have received?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: No concessions whatsoever have been made or are being considered.

CONCENTRATION ON PROVISION OF EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement emanating from our embassy in Washington that Canadian ministers and officials are at present unable to focus on such problems as the discussion of energy with the United States, is there any reason to hope that the Canadian ministers and officials are busy focusing on some program to provice massive employment in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is the upshot of what I have been saying earlier, Mr. Speaker. We have other things in mind.

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT THIS WEEK

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether he or one of his colleagues will be making an announcement this week of any employment program for the winter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If we are to make such an announcement, Mr. Speaker, I will try to ensure that the hon. member knows of it a little bit in advance so that he can prepare himself to congratulate the government.

Mr. Lundrigan: That is typical Trudeau bunk. Can the Prime Minister answer the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I have raised an important question. I understand that Treasury officials have worked all weekend trying to concoct some sort of program. I am asking whether an announcement of that type will be made this week by the Prime Minister or one of his colleagues, and I should like an answer to that very important question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will understand that the Chair has already recognized the hon.

member for Moose Jaw. If he has a supplementary, I shall recognize him in a moment.

GRAIN

WITHHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT OF PAYMENTS UNDER TEMPORARY WHEAT RESERVES ACT—SUGGESTED POSTPONMENT OF WRIT OF MANDAMUS AND BILL C-244

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a question for the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Can the minister tell the House if he made a request to the Minister of Agriculture of Saskatchewan for postponement of the writ of mandamus served in Saskatchewan last week against the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance? At the same time, can the minister state if there was any request made to him at the meeting of the three prairie agricultural ministers with their federal counterpart for a one-week moratorium on Bill C-244?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked two questions and, to my way of thinking, one is not supplementary to the other. Perhaps the minister might reply to the second question. I have some doubts as to the first one.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the request that was made by the prairie Ministers of Agriculture was addressed by them to hon. members opposite as well as through me to my colleagues. It depended on certain understandings in relation to the whole situation covering both the stabilization bill and payment under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCES OF FRANCOPHONE COUNTRIES—ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING VOTING BY CANADIAN DELEGATES AND DISPLAY OF FLAGS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the upcoming meeting of Francophone countries and it follows upon a question which I asked the Acting Prime Minister on Friday. Can the minister advise the House what provinces, other than Quebec, are now being consulted about the manner of structure of the delegation and on voting procedures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Discussions are proceeding with other provinces that have expressed interest in the meeting of the agence, particularly those that will be attending the meeting and will be participating in the Canadian delegation.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I ask the minister if it has been decided that the flag of Canada and the flag of Quebec will be flying at this conference of sovereign states?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have had some very useful discussions with the province of Quebec, and I am very happy to say that this kind of matter did not receive prime consideration.

[Mr. Speaker.]

REPRESENTATION ABROAD OF CANADA AS FRENCH-SPEAKING NATION

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the minister consider it proper that a Canadian cabinet minister should go abroad and represent Canada as a French-speaking nation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think Canada is one of the most important French-speaking countries in the world.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister consider it proper for a cabinet minister to do so to the exclusion of the other language spoken in this country?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. Canada is also one of the most important English-speaking countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order please.

Mr. MacInnis: I wonder if the minister would take the opportunity to explain the kind of language that we are hearing now in the House. However, on what basis can the Prime Minister allow himself to associate with a cabinet minister who promotes Canada as a French-speaking nation only, as has been done by this minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is disturbed by my charge, I not only have the transcript but I have the tape which I will make available to him.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate also rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: I should like to raise a point of order regarding the business of the House for the coming week and serve notice of points which should be raised today, in anticipation of something that may happen later. Could I ask the government House leader if discussions can take place among all House leaders to try to make some procedural arrangements for a lengthy response from various parts of the country, not only by the various parties in this House of Commons, to any announcement by the government of a works program for this winter, so as to ensure that all areas of the country receive adequate representation in response to a statement which the Prime Minister would like to make on a works program for this winter.

Mr. MacEachen: When an announcement about a winter works program is made by the government, I am sure there will be an opportunity for members of the House to comment upon it. I gather that my hon. friend is referring to an opportunity for members of this chamber to comment on the program.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

On the order:

September 24, 1971—Resuming the report stage of Bill C-244, an act respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture—The Minister Responsible for the Wheat Board.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order with respect to the proposal to proceed with the order which has just been read from the chair. As Your Honour will recall, I made a brief reference to this matter on Friday morning as reported in Hansard for that day at page 8345. My point of order arises from a citation in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which I shall read. It is found at page 127 and the part I wish to quote is citation 149 (c) which reads as follows:

149. Besides the prohibitions contained in Standing Order 35; it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:

(c) refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending;

I ought to point out, Sir, that the first person who raised this question was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard). He raised it last Thursday evening when it was his turn to respond to a question which had been put to him by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice pointed out that there is now a matter before the Federal Court of Canada, notice having been filed in that court last week, at Regina, on behalf of the Attorney General of Saskatchewan and four farmers of that province, as applicants. The respondent in the case is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I think it is appropriate to read again, as did the parliamentary secretary the other night, the first part of the notice of motion. It is as follows:

Take notice that an application will be made to this honourable court on Wednesday, October 6th, 1971, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon, central standard time, or so soon thereafter as counsel can be heard on behalf of the applicants, at the Court House, at the city of Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan, for a writ of mandamus, directing the respondent Minister of Finance to pay to the Canadian Wheat Board forthwith all sums of monies required to be paid to the Canadian Wheat Board by the respondent minister by virtue of the provisions of The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act of Canada, chapter 2 of the Statutes of Canada, 1956.

After reading that part of the motion, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice referred to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants as a distinguished member of the bar and said that he would know "that it is inappropriate for the Minister of Justice and others to comment on this subject at this time."

Sir, there has now been called for debate in this House Bill C-244 which includes a clause that seeks to repeal, effective July 31, 1970, the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The entire question of the government's position in relation to that act, a question arising from the fact that it has not paid the last 14 or 15 monthly payments that it should have paid, is now before the Federal Court of Canada. Any discussion of this bill is bound to involve a discussion of that situation. Any comments that are made are bound to involve comparisons of the results of operating under one formula or under another. Also, if discussions on this bill were to come to the point where we would be called upon to vote, I submit that we would be expressing an opinion. We would be taking a decision on a matter that is, in the terms of Beauchesne's citation, "before the courts for a judicial decision". It seems to me that our discussion of whether or not the government is in default at a time when the matter is before the courts is, in the language of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, inappropriate. Indeed, now that the whole question has been referred to the courts, we shall have to look very seriously at whether or not we can discuss it.

I am ready to admit that there are strong arguments on the other side of the question. It can be argued that Parliament is the supreme court of the land and that we have the right to change the law. No one here ever denies that; indeed we, in this place, insist on that right. At present it is not the right of Parliament to change the law that is in question but the position of the government under the law, as that law now stands. Since that matter is before the courts, we must consider whether we have the right to discuss it. As I said the other day when I raised this matter briefly, a ruling is called for one way or the other. Either the matter is sub judice, in which case this bill should not be proceeded with until the court's decision has been made, or it is not sub judice, in which case the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice and others should not refuse to answer questions about it.

To this legal objection there has now been added, I believe, the weight of the moral position in which the government finds itself. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board only a few days ago requested of us on this side of the House an agreement to delay discussion of this matter, because he was discussing the whole bill with the prairie Ministers of Agriculture. We feel, in fairness to them and in fairness to ourselves, that the matter should not be proceeded with at this time. That may be slightly aside from the legal point I have raised. However, we are in a new regime. The Prime Minister says that it is not just legalistic matters that count; it is justice. I suggest that proceeding with this bill at this time does not do justice to Parliament and does not do justice, to say nothing of fair play, to the prairie Ministers of Agriculture. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I said on Friday I would do, I raise this point now, feeling that there should be some discussion of it and a ruling from the Chair as to where we stand.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not detain Your Honour and the House for long. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has summed up the position with admirable clarity. I sometimes think he would have practised successfully in the profession to which Your Honour and I belong. I sometimes am under the impression that the hon. member is a member of the bar.

Mr. McCleave: And a distinguished member at that.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member's argument I accept thoroughly. I concur in it and urge it on Your Honour. The government is indulging in impudent, fraudulent intimidation of the worst kind.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baldwin: It is attempting to litigate by legislation, something which is frowned on in many circles. Actually, an amendment standing in the name of the minister indicates that the act, which was to come into force on August 1, 1970, will now come into force on a date to be set by proclamation.

I suggest that the government accept my hon. friend's point of order that we not proceed with clause 33, which provides that the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is repealed, effective July 31, 1970. The minister ought to agree with the contention advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a contention which I support. I hope he will agree that this particular clause will not be amended or will not come into effect until such time as the litigation, properly begun by citizens who have the right to bring an action before the courts, has been carried to the courts and has received final judgment. I suggest that that is the only fair way to deal with the matter, unless the government intends to seek an amendment which will pardon it retroactively for its 14 months of lawbreaking. It may be that the minister will seek such an amendment. As a member of the bar he may realize that it is essential, if the government is to be pardoned for the lawbreaking it has engaged in and in which it continues to engage. Apart from that, I support my hon. friend's argument and ask Your Honour to give careful consideration to what he said.

Mr. Speaker: Are hon. members rising on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I hope we do not spend the next three hours on the point of order because, to my way of thinking at least, it will not be too difficult to make a ruling on it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was thoughtful enough to give notice of his intention to raise his legal point, and I have spent a great deal of time giving it serious thought. At the same time, if hon. members think that their contributions will assist the Chair, of course I will be glad to hear them. I will not limit their right to make their contributions.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can be forgiven for taking two or three minutes in this debate. I think it was my contribution the other evening that started this whole process. I suggest if any member has a vested interest in this, I am that member. I wish to make four points to Your Honour. I will do so as quickly as I can.

First, it should not be possible for someone in Canada to issue a writ to halt a discussion in Parliament of the law being questioned. For example, although some members may not be aware of it, a gentleman on the west coast has tried several times to file writs in court dealing with the status of the Canadian flag. I hate to think that all discussions of issues of Canadian nationalism would have to come to a halt because someone issues a writ, even though I may think that person's writ has some substance to it.

Second, the court should decide on the substance of the issue rather than merely on the issuance of a writ, so that we at least are not put in the position of trying to influence the judge or appeal court. Short of that, we should surely be allowed to have our say.

Third, we should not inhibit Parliament at any time from changing the law, attemping to change the law or Members of Parliament from asking about the law as it exists when it is not being carried out.

Finally, we should be very careful about any steps being taken by the government or Parliament which would denigrate from the fact that we, after all, are the ultimate court in the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I am concerned about the possible effect on farm people if we proceed with this bill at this time. There are certainly two or three facts that are well known. One is that a writ of mandamus has been issued by four farmers in the province of Saskatchewan with, I understand, the consent or knowledge of the attorney general of Saskatchewan. This is known. It has been publicly admitted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that this government stands in default of certain payments which should have been made. It is under these circumstances that this Parliament is being asked to consider this bill.

What is the situation? If, for example, the bill is considered, passed by this Parliament and becomes law, the transitional payments are distributed under clauses 32 and 33 and this writ of mandamus is in force, what will happen? The government will find that it must pay out under this bill. If the transitional payments were made, would they have been made legally or illegally? If the writ prohibits the payments under clauses 32 and 33 of this bill, will any payments that have been made been made illegally? Would it then be incumbent on some legal agency to go to the farmers to whom the money has been paid and collect that money? This is what bothers me. I have a letter on my desk from a farmer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is up to the hon. member, but it seems that what he is now saying does not relate precisely to the point now before us as to whether this is a sub judical matter and, being a sub judical matter according to the established procedures of either the Canadian or British houses, questions might be asked about the matter, motions might be made and bills considered. I suggest that this is strictly a procedural question. I doubt whether we should get into the background of the situation or consider what will happen if the writ is granted, and so on. I suggest to the hon. member that is not the point before us. I do not in any way want to restrict the debate on the procedural point, because this is very important, but as much as possible we should limit our contribution at this time to this very limited point of procedure.

Mr. Gleave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will do so. I only wanted to point out the danger to the ordinary farmer. I know of one case where a farmer is being asked to return money which he was paid under the Lift program. I am aware of the niceties of the law. I am not a lawyer, but I am aware of the vulnerability of the farmer if we persist in dealing with this bill while the legal situation is in question.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. During the question period, I asked two questions. Your Honour suggested the first question was not in order and allowed the second one. I will use that as an analogy in dealing with the situation we are faced with under this point of order. The question is whether there has been any request by the minister responsible for the wheat board for the postponement of the writ of mandamus. Possibly Your Honour did not allow my first question because this matter is now before the courts. If we proceed with this bill, how can we possibly fit the question that is now before the courts in the form of a writ of mandamus into our discussion.

The reason Your Honour did not allow me to ask the question which referred to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), who are included in the writ of mandamus, must have been based on some past practice or ruling of this House. I wonder how we can possibly expect to discuss this bill, if we wish to discuss it, when this question is still before the courts in this particular form. The only reason I am drawing this to Your Honour's attention is to use the question I asked today as an analogy to the question now before the House. The only reason the question was asked was to find out whether we were in fact faced with a double-cross by the government.

Mr. Speaker: I think that—I apologize to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). I am sure he has very interesting comments to make which, I am sure, will be helpful to the House and to the Chair.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): After that introduction, Mr. Speaker, I am hesitant to even make a point. However, I do not want it to be understood that we accept the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) or that we agree with the validity of his point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It came from your side.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I understand the point was based on Citation 149 (c) of Beauchesne which says that a member whilst speaking must not refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending. The key phrase seems to be the words "on which a judicial decision is pending." One thing I know is that no judicial is pending with regard to this bill, Bill C-244. There is certainly no judicial decision or writ or legal action in progress with respect to the report stage of the bill. I know, too, by a process of elimination, that there is no legal action in process or judicial decision pending in connection with any of the amendments which are set down for discussion by the House today. Whatever might be that matter which will unfold itself on Wednesday, it will not be the bill or the report stage or any of the amendments which are now to be discussed.

I would suggest that if the rule of relevancy were strictly observed by all of us it would perhaps be possible to discuss the report stage and dispose of the amendments without the necessity of referring to the matter which will be commenced in the courts on Wednesday, as I understand it. It seems to me we should not be asked to withdraw from a discussion simply because something is to happen in the courts, when that discussion could properly be handled without reference to those proceedings—unless, for other reasons, it might be difficult not to refer to what is happening elsewhere having regard to the broad political situation. I am not a member of the bar, as some hon. gentlemen are, but I would assume the quotation merely implies that a member in speaking cannot refer to a matter on which a judicial decision is pending. I would probably ask the leader of the New Democratic Party to assist me by confirming my conclusion that a judicial decision can only be pending after evidence has been taken and arguments have been made by opposing counsel—the point at which the judge says he is about to decide the case. The purpose of the citation is, presumably, if there is any sense to our proceedings in this House at all, to impose a structure against Members of Parliament making comments from that point on in connection with the pending decision, comments which might amount to an interference with the independence of the judiciary. Otherwise, there would be no sense to the rule.

Consider how idiotic we would appear on Wednesday if, having said we cannot proceed to discuss this subject because the matter was pending in the courts, the judge, after hearing the initial arguments, were to say that the process had been wrongly put together and that he would not proceed with it until it had been put together in proper form. I suggest that whatever situation this citation is expected to cover, it really does not cover the situation which is now before the House as it is called upon to deal with the report stage of a bill, or, more strictly speaking, with amendments thereto. Certainly, none of these form the subject matter of the legal action.

I could continue, Mr. Speaker, and make further arguments, but I have said enough to convince, at least myself if not hon. members of the opposition, of the unsoundness of this particular point of order. I note that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) coming from a good legal city, has reached the same conclusion as I have reached, namely, that this is not really a serious point of order and that we should be in a real mess if debate in this House could be stopped because somebody had taken legal action in some court. We would have to close our doors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank all members who have taken part in this interesting discussion. As I mentioned a moment ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) had given me notice of his intention to raise this matter today. I have given it serious thought and looked at precedents which enabled me to make a ruling. I think I should apologize to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for appearing at one point to cut off discussion before he really had a chance to make what I consider to be a valuable contribution on an important aspect of the subject. May I say that I agree entirely with his submission to the House. I only wish I could make a ruling as clearly as he expressed his views when taking part in the debate.

I cannot agree with the contention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that a legal proceeding initiated in a court of law in Canada, be it by way of writ of mandamus or any other writ, should prevent the House of Commons or Parliament from continuing or even initiating the discussion of legislation. The hon. member has quoted as his authority citation 149(c) in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, in addition to the prohibition contained in Standing Order 51:

It has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada that a member while speaking must not . . . not refer to any matter upon which a judicial decision is pending.

I think this citation should be interpreted as narrowly as possible. I doubt very much if the Chair should be called upon to intervene whenever a member refers to a matter which is before the courts. Hon. members, in particular the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and the President of the Privy Council, have suggested that the citation should be interpreted narrowly and that the phrase "judicial decision pending" means that the case has been heard in full and that the court has before it the matter on which a decision will be rendered in the near future, in which case debates in the House might not be interpreted as influencing or attempting to influence the decision of the court.

I do not believe we should go that far. I believe hon. members should look at other citations, for example, at page 400 of May's 16th Edition—the same citation is repeated in the 17th Edition:

A matter, whilst under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the House by a motion or otherwise. This rule does not apply to bills.

I think it would have been useful had this limitation been included in Beauchesne. It seems to me logical, as hon. members taking part in the discussion have indicated, that we should take this view, otherwise the whole legislative process might be stopped simply by the initiation of a writ, or legal proceedings in one or other of the courts of Canada. I can imagine, for example, amendments to the Criminal Code relating to matters of great interest to Canadians being prevented by the issuance of a writ of mandamus in one of the courts of Canada. This would place Parliament in an intolerable situation. I do not think this is an interpretation which hon. members would wish to place on the sub judice rule.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) has referred to the fact that the Chair had some doubts as to one of the questions which was asked today. The hon. member will have noted that this matter was handled somewhat gingerly by the Chair. I said I had doubts as to the first question, but that I would allow the second one. What I had in mind was that the question was bearing directly, and perhaps a little too closely, on the case before the court. However, I was not disposed at that point to make a ruling on the matter; I just had some doubt, which is why I felt that if one of the two questions were to be allowed as we approached the end of the question period, it was easier for the Chair to allow the second than the first. This was the extent of the ruling that I made at that time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I suggest to hon. members that the citation which applies is that which can be found in May, that a matter, while under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the House by a motion or otherwise, but that the rule does not apply to a bill. I suggest that what is now before the House is a bill. A bill is legislation and the sub judice rule should not apply so as to prevent discussion of the bill or an amendment to the bill, or any proceedings under that bill at the present time.

The House resumed, from Friday, September 24, consideration of Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 of Mr. Gleave (page 7252).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. members will know that when this matter was last before the chamber we were dealing with a point of order with respect to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). The Chair had not made a decision, and if there are other hon. members who would like to assist the Chair on that particular point of order I would be very pleased to hear them now.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the proposed amendment. It seems to me that one of the fundamental points here relates to the novelty of the proposed amendment in terms of what it would do to the situation facing the House. The motion before the House which the present amendment would purport to amend has been described as vague in meaning, and so on, which I think is the substantial difference between the amendment and the motion before the House. Among other things, the amendment being proposed would eliminate from the original motion the words "and including stabilization payments", which would have the effect of leaving only the proposed deduction of increased production costs. I say that because it would make a substantial difference to the original motion if a matter which could have major significance were eliminated.

It is also quite clear that the amendment in the form proposed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) would be beyond the terms of the recommendation. It may be argued that the motion before the House is already beyond the terms of the recommendation, but I submit that its very vagueness and probable unworkability means that no firm judgment can be made upon it. In its present form, the amendment would clearly go beyond the terms of the recommendation in that it increases the amount of the commitment by the treasury beyond that outlined in the recommendation. It would do this in terms of its impact upon at least one of the clauses in the bill, namely clause 3.

I think this bears further on the point about making a substantive amendment to the definition clause of a bill. Again I suggest, with respect to Your Honour, that this may have been forgiveable in the case of the motion before the House, which after almost two and a half days everyone has agreed would either be unworkable or meaningless. The present amendment would have an important effect upon a series of clauses in the bill, namely clauses 3, 4 and 9 among others.

Interestingly enough, it would have a quite different effect on other clauses, and this simply highlights the danger of proposing an amendment which, though clear, would have a substantial effect on different clauses in the bill. For this additional reason, I would urge Your Honour to find that the amendment now proposed is not in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If hon. members have concluded their contributions to assist the Chair, I would be prepared to make a ruling on the point of order which has been raised on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). It might be helpful to the chamber if the Chair were to read the motion and the amendment that is before the House.

The motion proposed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) reads as follows:

That Bill C-244, an act respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, be amended by adding the following to paragraph (c) of subclause (1) of clause 2 after the word "producer" in line 18 at page 1: "and after the deduction of the increased costs of production, and including stabilization payments, if any;"

The hon. member for Skeena proposes to amend that motion in the following manner:

That the amendment be amended by deleting all the words after "deduction" and substituting therefor the following: "of the amount by which the costs of production for the crop year within which a levy under section 9 is deducted exceeds the cost of production for the crop year ending on July 31, 1970".

Hon. members will recall that when this bill came on for consideration at the report stage on June 22 last, Mr. Speaker indicated some doubt about the procedural acceptability of some of the motions. In addition, the hon. minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board expressed his doubt about many of the motions, including the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar which I have just read. There was, it seems to me, general agreement on the part of all hon. members at that particular time to debate the substantive aspects of the motion then before the House, and debate proceeded on that basis.

On September 22, the hon. member for Skeena proposed the amendment which I have just read, and on September 24 the Chair, having expressed some doubts about the procedural acceptability of the amendment, heard argument from several hon. members. The Chair has also heard argument from the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and I want to thank all hon. members who have assisted the Chair on this procedural problem.

I might say that because my ruling will be premised on this point I think I should restate, at the outset, the proposition that the motion by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is properly before the House for consideration. Hon. members will recall that I stated during the argument on June 22 that I was satisfied on that point. As an aside, I might say that had there not been the consent of the House to proceed, I might have taken the view that the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was not acceptable procedurally. However, the House is now seized, by consent, with that motion, and the matter before us at this time is whether or not the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena is in order procedurally.

The question for determination, I suggest, is whether or not the amendment substitutes something new in place of the motion, or whether it merely amends the main motion. I appreciate that one must apply the rules even more strictly when dealing with an amendment to the motion. In effect, it is a subamendment because the motion amends the clause of the bill. The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) made an effective argument when the matter was last before the House for debate and I would find his argument very persuasive if the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar were now before the Chair for consideration as to its procedural acceptability.

However, I have dealt with that point; we have accepted the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and what is now before the House for consideration is the amendment, or the subamendment if I may use that terminology, of the hon. member for Skeena.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board has assisted the Chair and, in essence, has argued in some respects along the line taken by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, particularly on the point about the difficulty that the Chair has in accepting an amendment to the interpretation clause of a bill. Indeed, the Chair would have that difficulty if we did not have before us the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. With all respect, I cannot agree with the hon. minister, who has just argued the point, that the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena should have some doubt cast upon it because it may go beyond the terms of the recommendation. I think it is probably an argument I would have no hesitation in accepting if it were made in respect of the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. I need not repeat that I am satisfied, because of the concern of hon. members, that we are now seized with the motion, so we must deal with the matter on that basis.

Paraphrasing the situation in general terms, it seems to me that the motion by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar provides that the increased cost of production will be taken into account in determining grain sale proceeds, and the hon. member for Skeena amends this by saying that the determination of the increased costs of production shall be measured on the basis of the crop year ending on July 31, 1970. When the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena was before the House on September 14, I invited assistance from hon. members on the procedural point and indicated that at first blush, before hearing arguments, it appeared to me that the amendment might be a substitution of one procedure for another and, therefore, not acceptable procedurally because of the lack of notice as provided under Standing Order 75(5).

The hon. minister has argued today, in addition to the argument of the hon. parliamentary secretary with respect to a substitution of one procedure or principle by another, that the question of stabilization payments is one which the Chair should take into consideration. Indeed, that is the question which gave the Chair, although it was not argued previously, a great deal of concern when considering the arguments. It was my opinion, and I must say I considered the matters raised by the hon. minister, that stabilization payments must be included in or somehow form a part of the cost of production. Therefore, it was my opinion at that time that I could not give the degree of weight to the argument which the minister has urged upon me today.

I might say that after hearing the helpful arguments from all hon. members, and after careful consideration of the Hansard record and the authorities cited, I am of the opinion that the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena does not go beyond the scope of the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and does not substitute one method or principle for another. I think its purpose and effect is to clarify that which would be, I might say with respect to the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, a bit difficult of interpretation if it stood by itself.

The minister argued that point today, and this is something that certainly occurred to the Chair. It is very difficult to understand exactly what the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar means or how it could be operative. It does seem to me that the addition of the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena is of assistance to the Chair in understanding what is before the House.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the amendment under consideration is relevant to the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar; it makes it more intelligible and, therefore, is in order and should be put to the House. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) moves, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by deleting all the words after "deduction" and substituting therefor the following "of the amount by which the costs of production for the crop year within which a levy under section 9 is deducted exceeds the costs of production for the crop year ending on July 31, 1970."

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to enter the debate and I would not do so were it not for what the government did today. I suggest that the behaviour of the government with regard to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and the behaviour of the government today, together constitute the most disgusting kind of contempts for a parliamentary and gentlemanly agreement possible. There has been a deliberate attempt on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but if he was listening to my decision he will recall that I did say if the amendment to the motion were accepted we would at this stage be confining the debate very narrowly. I suggest to the hon. member with respect that he should not range beyond the motion and the amendment which are now before the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you will have me resume my seat when you see fit. With great respect, however, what I am saying is relevant to the motion and the amendment before the House. I intend, without the slightest disrespect, to continue along the lines I began.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

What we have attempted to do through these amendments is genuinely and sincerely change the bill from one which we think is bad to the kind of stabilization we think would be better. That is what we have attempted to do. This is what members in my party and the Conservative party have been trying to do. What the government has done has been not to attempt to meet the arguments we have put forward in respect of their stabilization plan, but deliberately confuse, on the floor of this chamber, on radio and on television, the western farmers into thinking that all that is involved is an amount of money under one act and an amount of money under another act. When the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board do that, they are doing a dishonest disservice to the western farmers of this country. That is not the issue of either the motion, the amendment or the bill. The bill is an attempt to establish a stabilization plan, and you do not have to be a genius to understand it, in spite of the fact that the legalese of the bill makes it difficult to follow.

An hon. Member: Speak to the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: I will speak to the minister, Mr. Speaker, which does not give me as much pleasure as speaking to the amendment, but unfortunately that is what I have to do. I speak to the minister because he is the cause of the confusion and the distortion with which this Parliament and the western farmers are now faced. What the bill before us suggests is that we establish a measure to stabilize the ups and downs of grain farmers' income, by creating a fund into which the government will pay a certain amount and into which farmers will pay a certain amount, using that fund to equalize these ups and downs or booms and disasters to which the western and eastern grain farmers are subject.

What the motion before the House and the amendment of the hon. member for Skeena attempt to suggest is that the stabilization proposed by the government is stabilization of poverty. If you are going to have stabilization which is of value to the grain farmers, that stabilization must deal with the net income of the farmer, taking into account the rising costs of production. If you stabilize income on the basis of gross revenue only, you will be putting the farmer into a straitjacket of poverty because the gross revenue for the average is established on a moving five-year period, with the cost of production going up and net revenue contracting. The farmer, like every other professional, worker or businessman, does not live on his gross revenue, but on his net income after he has paid the costs of production.

We have therefore urged that the law be changed so that the stabilization is based on net income. This is the reason I say, with respect to you, Mr. Speaker, that what I started to say is entirely in order. This is what the three prairie ministers of agriculture proposed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board last Friday. One of the things they urged on him was precisely the line which is proposed in the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and the amendment by the hon. member for Skeena to the effect that the stabilization be based on net income. It is not the amounts of money that are involved in this. What we want to make clear so far as the members of this party are concerned is that we have objected to the bill not because of any amount of money in it, but because the stabilization plan is a bad plan for the grain farmers since it will be based initially on a period of five years which are poor years. The average established, therefore, will be a poor average and for the two or three years after that, the farmer will be held down by the poor average on which the stabilization is based.

Second, we object to this stabilization plan because it is based on gross income which does not take into account the cost of production which, as we know from history, is bound to rise every year so that the net situation of the farmer may be worse as a result of this bill rather than better. We are all interested in a better situation for the farmer, including I am sure even the ex-dean of law who is now rapidly becoming the dean of lawlessness, in view of his disregard of his duty under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Now, Mr. Speaker, if that were the subject the government permitted us to discuss, then the farmers of western Canada and eastern Canada would be able to sit down and try to decide what they think of the law. Most of them with whom I have spoken—and I have had occasion to speak to literally thousands of them on the Prairies in the last couple of months—are very much opposed to the bill just for the reason I have given, but the government has not permitted us to have this kind of discussion.

Despite the fact there had been an agreement last Friday that there was to be some kind of—I do not know exactly what to call it—truce or cease fire for a few days, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went on the air last night and made a statement to the western farmers which I can describe only as being inaccurate and misleading. If the Prime Minister did not know any better, he ought to have made himself more knowledgeable before making those statements. He made statements about the amount of money that would be paid under the bill we are discussing now. He said that there would be $100 million in payments on a transitional basis. I agree that that is there. Then, he talked about $35 million in a year and $35 million the year following. The minister nods his head. I say to the minister, because the Prime Minister is not here, that he does not know and the Prime Minister does not know how much money they will put into the fund two years hence. We do not know what the market will be; we do not know what the price will be, and we do not know what the yield will be or what the weather will be. They are talking out of their hats.

No one can make such a forecast concerning what will happen two years from now. I have often said to farmers in the west and in the east, as a person who has never been a farmer, that they are the real gamblers in Canada. They gamble on the weather, on the market and on the price. Why in heaven's name they gamble with this government is something I have never been able to understand. I say that the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board are misleading the people of Canada and the western farmers by reciting figures about which they know nothing. They have no idea what the amounts will be. They are misleading the farmers because they fail to tell them the whole truth. The minister knows he is not telling them the whole truth. They fail to remind the farmer that he will have to pay 2 per cent out of his gross crop revenue into the stabilization fund. Not only is the government to pay 4 per cent but the farmer is to pay 2 per cent. He never mentions that. He never mentions that if this bill passes the farmer will lose what he has now under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and that from now on he will have to pay the cost of storing any surplus grain which formerly was paid out of the federal treasury.

The minister knows that if this bill passes the PFAA will be removed from the statute books. The farmer who used this as a form of crop insurance will now have to enter into another crop insurance scheme for himself. The minister knows that will cost the farmer another one per cent or one and one half per cent of the sale price of his crop. He never tells him that. I say that the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board are misleading the western farmer and I, as a member of this House, am ashamed of their behaviour in respect of a bill which is as important as this bill which is before us. Last Friday the minister met with the three prairie ministers. I read the statement he made to the press. I was not in Ottawa on Friday afternoon or over the weekend, but I read the statement he made to the press. I shall not quote him but shall give an accurate representation. Reporters quoted him as saying that the three prairie ministers of agriculture made certain suggestions to him, that he and they agreed that there would be an attempt in this House not to proceed with the matter of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and that the government would not put Bill C-244 before Parliament today but would take some days—the report said a week—to give serious consideration to what the three prairie ministers of agriculture proposed to the minister.

My colleagues—I did not myself, because I was not here—spoke to the two New Democratic ministers of agriculture from Saskatchewan and Manitoba and were informed that that was the understanding between the two ministers and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. They told our members that this was the understanding, that there would be a week of delay before this bill came before the House and that the government would give serious consideration in good faith to their proposals in so far as they attached to this bill. This has not been done. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board spoke to our House leader, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on Friday, and conveyed this information to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who is sitting right beside me now as he does every day in this House. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board informed the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that it was his intention that this bill would not come before us today but that the government would take some days—he said not necessarily a week, and my friend will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I should like to make a correction in respect of what the hon. member is saying. I must say I should do so in respect of quite a number of things he has been saying. Since he said these things in my presence this might leave the impression that I am in some way agreeing. At all times the request to which he refers was from the prairie ministers. At all times it was conveyed as being that to the government and to parties opposite, and was dependent upon certain agreement being arrived at all around. It was also clear at all times that the final understanding would depend upon agreement this morning, Monday morning, between the government House Leader and the House Leaders of other parties. It was that discussion which failed to bring about agreement. I may add that it may well be that if all parties in the opposition had taken the view of his colleague, the House leader for his party, we might have had such an agreement. They did not, and therefore we did not have such an agreement.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the minister's explanation shows precisely the kind of tortuous route that his mind always travels. I was not present, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) told me what the conversation with him was, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre never deviates one iota from what he is told and what he says. Members of the House know that.

What was the agreement to be dependant upon? The minister answered a question earlier this afternoon in a way that was completely unintelligible to me, and his remarks just now were completely unintelligible to me. What kind of agreement was it that the three or four House leaders were supposed to reach? There was no meeting of the House leaders. The government House leader spoke on the telephone to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre. I do not know how he spoke to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By telephone.

Mr. Lewis: I did not know that. Now, I am told it was by telephone. I repeat that there was no meeting of the house leaders. The minister made no proposal to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre which that hon. member rejected. We made no proposal to him. Mr. Speaker, he is not telling the entire truth to this House. He is weaseling and distorting what the situation is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It did seem to the Chair that, before the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board rose, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) might have been straying a bit from the motion and the amendment before the House. Perhaps the Chair was at fault. I think, with respect, that the minister did not have a point of order but I felt in fairness, and in the absence of objection, that if he wanted to explain his position, that was fair enough. The hon. member for York South, who has the floor, has responded to that. I think it has been a useful exchange. However, I would hope that at about this time we might try to get back to the motion and the amendment before the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in a moment you will see my reason for answering the minister. I say this with great seriousness. When members of this House and the people of Canada read in the press that there has been an understanding among ministers of the Crown, the federal minister and three provincial ministers, it is important for Parliament and for the democratic process that such an understanding be kept, and that it not be betrayed and breached. I know that the prairie ministers, at least the Manitoba and Saskatchewan ministers of agriculture, are planning a press release to make that clear. I am almost finished, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It does seem to the Chair, as the hon. member for York South has pointed out, that the arguments he makes, in which the minister has joined, are important arguments for the people of Canada, and indeed are important for this chamber. However, I know that the hon. member for York South and the minister are both learned counsel and will appreciate that the Chair must be bound by the rule of relevancy. The Chair cannot hear this particular argument at this time. There are other forums in which it can be raised, and I need not mention them. I would ask both hon. members to confine their remarks to the motion and the amendment before the House.

Mr. Lewis: What I seem to have failed to get clearly before Your Honour is that the issue of the basis for stabilization of the grain farmers' income was precisely one of the issues that was the subject of the discussions between the three prairie ministers of agriculture and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. It was precisely what was suggested in the motion by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and in the amendment by the hon. member for Skeena. It was precisely the subject matter of those amendments, motions, or subamendments—whatever you want to call them. That was one of the subjects of discussion with the minister last Friday, and therefore it is relevant.

I say that it is important for these agreements to be kept. It is important for the Members of Parliament, to make the government honest in keeping such agreements. Because the minister and the government broke that agreement, and because we of the NDP, and I hope others on this side of the House, will not be parties to the breaching of that kind of agreement by having Bill C-244 before us when it was agreed that it should not be put before us today, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That this debate do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): In rising to speak to the amendment to the motion moved by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) I wish to state that I will support the amendment and the motion to amend Bill C-244.

I might first of all agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who stated emphatically that it was his impression there was an agreement between the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and the agriculture ministers of the three prairie provinces. It was obviously clear on October 1, because, as reported under the heading "Business of the House" at page 8368 of Hansard, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) had this to say:

> Yesterday the government House leader announced that Monday's business would be Bill C-244. I think everyone in this House knows that discussions are taking place between the federal Minister of Agriculture and the agriculture ministers of the western provinces. I wish to report to the House—and I have so advised the House leaders opposite—that these discussions may continue. In that case, rather than call the agriculture bill on Monday we will continue with the measure now before the House. The House leader will endeavour to notify opposition House leaders as early as possible on Monday.

This gives one some idea that there was an agreement. It is regrettable that agreements mean nothing to the federal government, that agreements mean nothing now to federal ministers. I used to think this only applied to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) when he reneged on the agreement he made with the cattle producers of western Canada, but we now see the minister in charge of the Wheat Board disregarding the agreement he made with the three agriculture ministers of western Canada.

Mr. Lang: Nonsense.

Mr. Horner: This gives us some concept of the wording of the present bill. Can the country go along placing faith and trust in the word of a government one cannot really trust very much? When that situation becomes an established fact, it is wise for the government, I suppose, to call an election so that the public can restate its confidence in them or choose another government.

The formula presented to us takes 1970 as the base year, as the year to which costs of production should be related. In order to gauge that year as the foundation year for the establishment of net farm income as a basis for a stabilization program, one has to establish the net farm income position. As the bill now stands, it is really an insurance concerned with marketing the grain. It is not an insurance of the farmers' ability to produce or sell. It is a guarantee for a marketing system toward which farmers are asked to contribute a 2 per cent levy. Has that system worked?

Net farm income in Saskatchewan in 1966, which is the year this program starts, was in the neighbourhood of $580 million. In 1970 it was down to a low of $194 million. This gives one some idea as to the level upon which the stabilization program would be based. It is based on a declining income from 1966 to 1970. The level will be very low. The Minister of Agriculture realizes the effect that "low years" will have on the bill.

As reported in the minutes of committee proceedings No. 55, the minister had this to say on Wednesday, June 2:

The stabilization program is designed to fill in the very deep valleys which can occur when a bad year follows some good ones.

I want to emphasize those words. We have experienced a series of bad years since 1966. How will the stabilization bill fill in the valleys?

An hon. Member: All bad years.

Mr. Horner: As reported at page four of the minutes of proceedings No. 55, the minister went on to say:

It does not cut down the good years except to the extent of the producers' contribution of 2 per cent. It could be as good a year as sales really make it. Our emphasis must be on sales and we are optimistic that with continued effort on sales we can see an ever-rising total in the gross receipts from grain in the prairie region.

Well, if we start off with a low in gross receipts, and we are optimistic about seeing a continuing rise in gross receipts, when is the farmer to get the $35 million the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talked about on television when he said farmers were going to get $35 million this year and the year after, and so on? The minister in charge of the Wheat Board understands this program. The government is geared to getting out of paying money to the farmers of western Canada.

What has been paid under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act? Look at Volume 58 of the committee proceedings. If anyone is in doubt as to the exact interpretation of this bill I suggest he read volumes 58 and 59 of those proceedings. At page 117 of committee report No. 58, it appears that $79.7 million was paid out under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act during the crop year 1968-69. Since that time the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has deliberately reduced the amount of wheat in storage, thus depriving the farmers of income that was theirs as well as their opportunity to sell their wheat. All that was paid out the following year, 1969-70, was some $15 million.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner: When I am through; I have only 20 minutes. Some $40 million was owing in the crop year 1969-70 according to the tables presented to the committee by the Canadian Wheat Board. In addition to that $40 million there was another $20 million owing, making $60 million due to the farmers on August 1, not of this year but last year. If any member doubts my word for this, let him turn to page 15 of the committee report to which I have referred, where Mr. Treleaven, a representative of the Canadian Wheat Board, admitted that $60 million was due as of August 1, 1970, of which, he said, $40 million roughly would be applied against the 1969-70 pool account and the other $20 million applied against the 1970-71 account.

What has occurred since August 1? Another $26 million is due for the year 1970-71. Mr. Earl, as reported at page 12 of the report, had this to say:

Of that $60 million, again recognizing that there are two pools open, 1969-70 and 1970-71, we estimate that very roughly about $40 million belongs to the 1969-70 pool. Now were that amount in the pool it would mean to producers in the final payment 9.5 cents a bushel.

This would mean that about 14 cents a bushel is due as of August 1, 1970 and that another 7 or 8 cents a bushel is due as of August 1, 1971. In other words, there is due about another 20 cents a bushel.

In his great lecture to the Canadian farmer last night on television, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not mention the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the $6 million that the PFAA fund costs the federal treasury every year. In fact, he skipped a year in showing the payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and added a year to his grain stabilization program calculations. By skipping one year's payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and disregarding the PFAA payments, it was no wonder that the Prime Minister was able to present such a lopsided calculation of $170 million as opposed to $112 million under the respective schemes. To me, his statistics just did not add up.

Let me now look at the question whether the payment should or should not be made. It is of interest to note that this whole question was dealt with extensively in the debate before the agriculture committee, and if one were to refer to page 9 of committee proceedings No. 58—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair is finding difficulty relating the remarks of the hon. member to the amendment before the House at the present time. Hon. members have already been advised that when the House is dealing with a specific amendment they should try as much as possible to confine their remarks to the subject matter of such amendment. It seems to me the hon. member is once again opening up the question of payments to be made under some other piece of legislation, and I think he should return to the amendment before the House in accordance with instructions. The Chair had hoped that as far as possible he would do this and invites him to try to keep within the confines of the amendment.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, may I speak briefly to the point of order, though my remarks should not be counted as part of my time. The point Your Honour has raised is a valid one, but the motion and amendment seek to place the stabilization fund on a net basis, using the 1970 crop year as the basis for evaluating cost of production. I am endeavouring to support the establishment of the year 1970 as the basis, and I shall be coming to that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair did not intervene when the hon. member was dealing with that specific point and trying to base an argument upon it. However, he has gone far beyond this point now and is referring to payments made to farmers under another piece of legislation and to the responsibility of the administration for that legislation. In doing so, I suggest he is opening up previous debates we have had on the subject. Therefore, his remarks do not conform to the guidelines that have been given to hon. members.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I realize this is a difficult subject matter to follow. It is also difficult for one to confine his remarks to such a narrow point as using as the basis for calculating cost of production the year 1970. May I refer to catalogue No. 62-004 published by Dominion Bureau of Statistics which gives the price index numbers of the commodities and services that are used by the farmers. This is the way DBS calculates cost of production, which is the cost of the goods and services that our farmers must buy.

It is of interest to note that if you base this equation on gross income, you fail to take into consideration the increase in cost of production, which thereby puts a tremendous squeeze on the farmers—what we have all heard referred to as the cost price squeeze. I suggest one has to examine cost of production over recent years in order to see whether or not there is any merit in basing your calculations on net income and using the year 1970 as the base year. According to the price index of the number of commodities and services used by the farmers as published by DBS, in 1949 the composite index inclusive of living components for the cost of goods the farmers buy was 199.2. In January 1970, it had risen to 390.8, very nearly double over a 20-year period.

In the event that the government's program is enacted, the fact that we are on a downward trend in establishing an average under the stabilization program means that in order for the farmers to collect they would have to build up their gross sales and then suffer a drop subsequently. Notable economists have estimated that there may be one, at best two, payments between now and 1980. Taking the past 20 years' cost of production as a guide, one can readily see that cost of production has doubled. A better way of putting it is to say that the cost of the goods and services that farmers must buy has doubled. As sure as night follows day, the cost of the goods and services that the farmers have to buy during the next ten years will double again, especially if the present government continues in office. This will place our farmers in a tremendous squeeze.

As this squeeze approaches, under the stabilization program that the Prime Minister has put forward and which the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is attempting to pilot through the House, no payment is made unless the farmers have a bad crop year. The $35 million that the Prime Minister spoke of last night will not be distributed to help offset cost of production unless the farmers experience a calamitous year, whereas under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act money flows in each year to help offset the ever-rising cost of the goods and services the farmers buy.

I made reference a while ago to what the chairman of the Agriculture Committee said on page 9 of committee proceedings 58 regarding this whole question as to whether the $60 million should be paid. He said:

> That is probably a matter that would have to be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

That is very clear. There is a good legal point here. The Prime Minister said last night that this government is breaking the law, and he seemed proud of that as he lectured the farmers. He went on to say they are in default of payments, and I suggest they will continue to be in default until they change this program in such a way that the bill takes into consideration the net position of the farmers and is related to some time which is more favourable to farmers. If you use 1970 as the year on which to base the net position, that will be fine, but on the basis of gross sales it is not good.

The minister went on to say in respect of the lows and highs of the cycle, and I read from proceedings No. 55 at page 4:

> This is an important thing in relation to some of the arguments which have been made by producers about whether there is anything to guard against inflation or cost increases and so on in this program. In a sense there is, in the sense that its sales continue to increase if over-all gross receipts for prairie grains do go up as they have indeed over any past period of years; you can see an increase in total receipts in any long-term graph you may draw.

He is predicting that you will see an increase at some time in the future in respect of gross receipts, and you will know when a payment should be made, but this is the dangerous thing about the grain stabilization program. If a program is to be beneficial to the farmer you must have a situation in which there is continuing growth in gross receipts, but you would have a payment under this bill that merely represents a transfer from one government pot to another government pot. It is merely a paper transfer.

The minister went on to state, as recorded at page 29 of committee proceedings No. 59, regarding the logic of setting up such a fund:

> All I can do, in terms of your question, is reframe the statement I made earlier that if you start with a high average, the average is high; if you start with a lower average, the average is lower. Obviously, the only way you know exactly what is going to happen is by starting to forecast the future and that is a thing I have been refraining from doing.

He is reported on the same page as saying:

> The logic of making the trade now is very clear in terms of what this stabilization plan will provide in the way of money from the treasury toward the grain industry compared to what would have been provided if we had gone on with the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, standing in its present terms, and with less wheat in the system to make room for the barley and rapeseed and better functioning of the system.

This refers to a reduction of wheat in the system. The minister is well aware of the fact that he is starting now in a position favourable to the government rather than to the farmers. If this stabilization program were presented again five years from now, it might find a more favourable climate in this House of Commons because of a change of climate in the agriculture industry. I suggest that if farmers accept this program today, they will accept it to their own detriment.

There is one other situation that is not covered, and this is related to the amendment regarding the net receipts. Under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, money would be paid out if a farmer suffered a calamity, as happened in some parts of Saskatchewan and Alberta this year because of the Bertha army worm. However, under the stabilization program, the farmer would receive nothing because this is a regional situation and is not covered. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board suggests that this should be covered under crop insurance, but there are fewer farmers who took out crop insurance this year in the province of Alberta than last year, merely because it was not to their liking.

There is one statement I should like to put on record before concluding. This statement was made by the secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when appearing before the committee. It appears in committee proceedings No. 54 at page 37.

Mr. Chairman, in our brief we did not go into the intricacies of the legislative process, thinking that that was perhaps something that you people could deal with, but we are quite clear on the principle, that this bill needs amending, that the total policy package needs amending, and that it is not satisfactory to be in a position where one runs the risk of a delayed payment of a very necessary $100 million if one gives sufficient attention to the bill to get those amendments in the other part of it. If that requires separation, if that is the only way that can be done, then that is fine. The best way to do it is to amend the bill the way it needs to be amended right through the piece and to do it right away. That is the other way to do it, to accept our proposals for amendment of the whole bill, of course.

He goes on to suggest that this is a very complicated bill and a very great deal of time must be spent on it. I make no apology for the length of time this House has debated this complicated piece of legislation. It is regrettable the minister did not bring it forward earlier in order that it might have been passed last June. For some reason known best to himself and the cabinet, he introduced it in a proposal to the country on October 29, 1970 but withheld it from the House until April 3, 1971. It is regrettable he kept it to himself for that long.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Public Service—Extension of regional pay differentials; the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand)—External Affairs—Representations to Premier Kosygin on right of Soviet Jews to emigrate and rights of other ethnic groups.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 of Mr. Gleave (page 7252).

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I understand that shortly before we had the vote on the motion to adjourn in the name of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the minister responsible for the Wheat Board intimated that for some unknown reason the responsibility for bringing this bill back today rests on my shoulders. Perhaps the minister did not intend to create that impression, and if that is the case I will pause here for a moment to allow him to stand and say so.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the statement I made was perhaps more general than that, but I would be pleased to be more specific with regard to the matter. I indicated to the leader of the NDP, who was then speaking, that if the understanding which the house leader of the NDP and I had arrived at had been shared more widely or generally in the House there might, indeed, have been no debate today. If you would like me to be more specific about what I was saying I shall attempt to do so.

I was indicating that during our discussion with the House leader of the Progressive Conservative party there was some indication that any delay or postponement of the debate on both the bill and on any question of legality under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act would depend to some extent on the likelihood of amendments being accepted to Bill C-244. We thought in all fairness to him we should make it clear that the purpose of any delay was, in fact, to give us time to consider what our reply should be to representations made to us rather than for any other reason, and that in our view any question of an amendment to Bill C-244 at this stage of the proceeding was pretty remote.

As I understood it, it was no longer acceptable to the Progressive Conservative party, represented by the House leader, that the debate on both questions should be delayed. For that reason I understood there was not the kind of agreement on all sides in respect of which the request of the prairie agricultural ministers could be accepted. Therefore the order of business was confirmed in the original format, and Bill C-244 was called.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the minister has clarified the situation to some extent, but I think I have no alternative than to repeat what I said this afternoon when the House opened. Throughout the discussions which took place last Friday, the firm impression was created in my mind that one of the reasons for seeking a moratorium in respect of the debate on this bill for a week was, among other things, to consider the question of whether there would be amendments to the bill. Quite frankly this was the main subject of the exercise at the inception of this debate. Our side made this quite plain. Without any substantial amendments our views could hardly be met.

I kept that view until this morning when, in discussion with the Government House Leader, I told him this was my impression and he then, I assume, got in touch with the minister. The minister then made the statement, which the government House leader repeated to me, that the chances of any amendment to Bill C-244 were very, very remote. I think those were the words the minister used. In any event, they are the words which were passed on to me. On that basis, I had to say the impression I had derived on Friday was certainly changed, and so far as we were concerned there could be no commitments given of the kind asked because the whole basis for discussion had been destroyed. Then, the question was asked whether or not we were prepared to proceed with the bill, and to that my answer was categorical, that it was for the government to decide. The government has the carriage of business in the House and brings measures forward when it desires to do so. I believe the minister and I are not too far apart, but I thought I should make plain at the first opportunity that this was the discussion which took place.

In my opinion, I bear no responsibility for this bill being here today. It is for the government House leader and the government to decide what they want this House to discuss.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair has given an opportunity to the hon. member for Peace River and the minister to clarify a point for the House. Insofar as it is possible to be lenient, the Chair has done so because this is a very important question. However, I believe it should be left at this point now that both hon. members have had an opportunity to express their views on the matter.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the motion which is before us deals with the question of the net cost element being introduced into a stabilization bill. There have been quite a number of statements about the problem of the grain farmers' income position as requiring some special modifications under the stabilization bill, notwithstanding the fact that we on our side made clear at all times that the stabilization bill was indeed a partial increase in the amount of support the government was giving to the grain industry, immediately and prospectively, but that the over-all question of support by the Canadian people as a whole to the grain farmer was a question which would continue to require examination. I made this quite clear in statements I made on March 15. I stated that, for the moment, this bill was adding $40 million or so for this year and increasing the commitment for future years compared to the commitment under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and its declining amount of payment estimated on the basis of keeping the elevator system and transportation system operating efficiently. I said this was what we were doing and that the stabilization plan as a whole was particularly important in that it gave massive protection to farmers against drastic declines in gross sales in world markets over which no one has control because control is dependent upon climate and growing conditions throughout the world.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) in this connection referred to an amount of $60 million or $70 million or so on a comparable basis which would in fact have been paid under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The question I had wanted to put to him in that connection was whether he would mind referring to the amount of money which would have been paid in those years if the stabilization plan had been in effect in its present form without the amendment in relation to net proceeds or net deduction of costs which is before us. If he had answered that question, he would have had to say that somewhere between $200 million and $300 million might have been paid in each of the years 1968-69 and 1969-70 compared to the $60 million or $70 million which in fact was paid under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act in those years.

For the future, one can afford to look at the government's commitment of expenditure in an absolute way and estimate it. This does, of course, involve some speculation about sales, except that those of us who are optimistic believe the amount will in fact rise.

Mr. Horner: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think I will let the hon. member wait until I finish.

Mr. Horner: Thank you.

Mr. Lang: The question of the future, and the commitment of say $35 million estimated for this year or next year of course, depends upon some speculation concerning the level of sales. However, it is a fairly realistic, if modest, estimate of the amount which may be spent based on the 4 per cent contribution by the federal government. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act provisions are likely to result in a declining amount to something like $30 million in the current year and perhaps down to $20 million or so in the following year. If one looks at the amount to be paid to farmers in those years it becomes more speculative but it is unlimited. The amount paid to the farmers may well exceed the amount being paid out of the treasury because of the commitment in the bill to lend, in an unlimited way, interest-free to the fund, whatever is required to keep the farmers' income or gross sales level at the previous five year average.

The amendment comes to the House in an interesting fashion. It really demonstrates not the objective on the part of the opposition to improve the plan, but simply part of the tactics we have seen in adjournment motions and other motions to delay Bill C-244 being voted on in the House. The reason it does this is clear. I should like to remind hon. members that the principal motion which is here being amended was brought before the House for debate on June 22. After a couple of speeches from the opposition side praising it, I made a very short interjection in which I indicated that in my view it was in its form unworkable and, I might have added—and I did refer to the committee proceedings—that there had been other suggestions about that kind of amendment and that it would, in fact, be impossible to give any meaning to it. Notwithstanding that advice, hon. members opposite lauded the motion proposed to the House.

Yet when the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) introduced his amendment, he said he felt that without this further clarification the motion would have left wide open just what was meant by increased cost of production. His statement is recorded in Hansard at page 8089. In the course of the debate on this amendment the hon. member for Skeena later on, as recorded at page 8148 of Hansard, referred to that amendment as being one which was necessary in order to make the motion intelligible. Further comments were made by the hon. member for Crowfoot as recorded at page 8150 of Hansard, to the effect that the motion produced by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) may be very difficult to implement.

This was very kind language to use in describing their colleague's motion but it meant what I had said at the very beginning of the debate, that the whole thing was very unworkable. Indeed, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), referring to whether the amendment was in order, as recorded at page 8152 of Hansard, said he did not quarrel with the suggestion of the minister with regard to the fact that there is no possibility of an accurate determination under the amendment. Now in its place they have moved a subamendment. In view of the fact that in order to delay debate, in order to stall debate, they have had this long debate on an amendment which they have agreed to be worthless, I would hope hon. members would pay careful attention to my comments on the subamendment which they propose.

By their subamendment hon. members would change the definition of "grain sale proceeds." As I indicated on the question of order, this would have a different effect depending on which clause in the bill it is applied to. In particular I would like hon. members to refer to clauses 4 and 5 of the bill where the term "aggregate grain sale proceeds" is used, "grain sale proceeds" being already defined, or when they are used as the basis for determining the payout to be made to a farmer in a particular year.

Since hon. members, by the subamendment, would deduct from grain sale proceeds the increases in costs of production incurred by a producer, the producer who himself had the greatest increase in his costs of production from the base period to the period in which the amount is being paid would, in fact, find he is eligible for a payout reduced that much more—reduced more than that paid to another producer whose costs were increased to a lesser degree or, in fact, whose costs were reduced. In the first amendment we had an unworkable amendment or one which would be meaningless. It would simply have been an obstruction if the House were to adopt it, and I urged the House not to do so.

Now we have an amendment which seems to increase the amount paid to farmers in the prairie region at a particular point in time on a basis which might be impossible to determine. But with respect to an individual person, where you could more likely determine his increases in costs, there would be a real reduction in the amount to be paid to him under this plan. Surely anyone who continues urging the House to support this amendment, or indeed the amendment to which it is an amendment, is clearly demonstrating that his interest is not in helping the prairie farmer, is not in a plan which is workable and he is only willing to stall the debate, helping to prevent the law from coming into effect, endlessly using up the time of this House to do that without putting forward any suggestions of real merit with regard to the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) wish to ask a question?

Mr. Horner: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member can only do so if the minister accepts the question.

Mr. Lang: I accept it.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Horner: My question has to do with the stabilization fund. Isn't it also a criterion under the stabilization fund that it will be reduced by the net loss in the grains pools, oats, barley and wheat, and aren't we in a position today that there will be a loss in the barley pool, a loss which was previously picked up by the federal treasury?

Mr. Lang: The rules relating to deficits in the pools may well lead to such deficits—which, I may say, are highly speculative at this stage—being paid out of the stabilization bill fund. But the reduction of the fund by any amounts required to pay deficits in no way reduces the amounts to be paid to farmers, because those payments depend not on the amount in the stabilization fund but upon the formula; and behind the fund stands the clause in the bill which the hon. member continues to ignore, which says that the federal government, where required by the formula, will lend money interest-free to the stabilization fund of whatever amount may be required to make a payment out of the fund.

Mr. Horner: But today this is a grant paid out of the federal treasury. Under the stabilization bill plan it will have to be paid back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair cannot allow a debate on this point.

Mr. Skoberg: May I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member wishes to ask a question. Does the minister consent?

Mr. Lang: Yes.

Mr. Skoberg: At the end of his remarks the minister suggested that he was undecided as to whether there was any material gain to be had from continuing the debate in the House. Can the minister say whether he believes that nothing constructive came out of his discussion with the three prairie ministers of agriculture on Friday last?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I indicated quite clearly to the prairie agricultural ministers that I would always be ready to talk with them about problems relating to the grain situation and the prairie income situation, and indeed we were intending to follow up our initial discussions last Friday with other discussions. We will still do so even though the debate now before the House is continuing.

Mr. Burton: Would the minister permit another question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Again, this may be done only with the permission of the minister. The Chair hopes that hon. members will not go too far in exploiting this possibility now that the minister has completed his speech.

Mr. Burton: I was wondering if in his meeting with the three prairie ministers of agriculture on Friday he discussed the subject matter involved in the amendment and subamendment now before the House. If so, was there any understanding or agreement on the part of the ministers who were making representations to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board or on the part of both parties involved in the discussion?

Mr. Lang: There was no agreement on the substance of any proposals except on the need for further time to discuss a number of them, including major questions about the prairie grain income situation and how the federal treasury would pay an extra $100 million or $200 million a year to assist in that direction. There were proposals which did touch on a variety of things, including the legislation now before the House, but certainly no proposals in the material I saw which would in any way link the amendment and subamendment before the House, in the sense that I have indicated both are meaningless and unworkable, and I am quite sure the prairie ministers of agriculture would not be willing to be associated with them.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, that is a good note on which to start. The minister is within his right to say that in his judgment a particular amendment is unworkable, but when he goes on to say it is meaningless he ceases to put forward any logical debate. At that point he ceases to meet the real argument and contention that we have put forward from this side of the House. He is continuing in the arrogant way to which he has adhered solidly since this bill was first introduced.

The real sense of our amendment was repeatedly brought to the attention of the minister and the government when the bill was before the standing committee. It was repeatedly brought to their attention by farmers' organization after farmers' organization who said that this proposal should be a factor in arriving at a formula which sought to stabilize or establish a certain standard of farm income.

It may have been meaningless to the minister, but it certainly was not meaningless to a large number of farmers and the organizations which spoke for them. They felt that this particular point had a great deal of meaning. I suppose the reason it would have such meaning is that the two factors, costs of production and gross returns, are factors that decide whether a farmer is to stay in business, just as they decide whether any individual operating an enterprise of any kind in Canada could stay in business. It is quite understandable, therefore, that it should be meaningful to farmers and farm organizations. I am sure it was also meaningful to the prairie agricultural ministers who came to Ottawa last Friday. I am surprised how lightly the federal government dismisses that visit.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gleave: I am surprised how lightly it dismisses the representations they made. The minister and the government, Mr. Speaker, dare not take four or five days to consider the representations made to them; they must immediately bring this bill again before the House.

The government says that the things we propose are meaningless. I would judge, then, that in their opinion the things that the prairie governments proposed to them were also meaningless. If they were not, this government would have listened to what they had to say. None of these prairie governments has been in power for long. All are newly elected. The government of Alberta came to power with an overwhelming majority only within the last few months, so no one can say that it is not representative of the rank and file voter in Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: In Saskatchewan, a government was elected with the same strong thrust of voter support as in Alberta. It turned out a government of the same stripe as that opposite, a government without the courage to come here and point out what was being done to Saskatchewan farmers.

Mr. McBride: They will tell in Assiniboia.

Mr. Gleave: You have listened to that so long you begin to think it is true. The two governments were elected last summer and, unquestionably, speak for the people in these two provinces. The Manitoba government is barely two years old. It was elected by a slim majority, but when it went back to the people in by-elections it received the unquestioning support of the voters.

In the measure now before the House, Mr. Speaker, this government has disregarded the representations of farm organizations, it has disregarded the representations of the provincial governments who speak for the voters and the farmers in their provinces, and then it accuses us of being unintelligible and of talking nonsense. This reminds me of the story of the two old people who were sitting in front of the fire. The old fellow said to his wife, "You know, I think almost everybody in the world is a little odd except thee and me, and sometimes I think thee is a little odd, too." This government should watch out.

Mr. Baldwin: "Queer".

Mr. Gleave: Well, queer is an idea. With all this weight of opinion, the government still cannot afford to stop for a day or two to give a little thought to what might be done to meet the considered opinions of the prairie governments and the opposition. It cannot afford a few days of thought. Does the minister and the government consider it is easy for us on this side of the House to debate at such length a measure that is supposed to be for the benefit of western farmers? I heard a report that as soon as one election was over we would drop our opposition and fall into line. Mr. Speaker, I want to inform members on the other side of the House that we are not using this bill to fight elections.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Tell us another one.

Mr. Jerome: Alf, you are losing your credibility.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is all the Grits think of.

An hon. Member: All they do is heckle; they never speak.

Mr. Gleave: I expected to draw a little fire on that, Mr. Speaker. The bill presented to us is essentially wrong. The minister says that this amendment is unworkable, but in some respects his bill is unworkable. In the three prairie provinces there are partnerships, co-operatives, corporate farms comprised of a father and a couple of sons, partnerships of a father and son, and so on. This bill is not workable for such people. It was designed on one course. No suggestions were made that would make it workable as it went through the general legislative process.

The minister says that we should not consider net income. I should like to quote some figures on net income, taken from Statistics Canada. In Saskatchewan in 1970, the net income received by farm operators from farm production was $158 million; in 1969 it was $420 million. In other words, the net income received by farm operators in 1970 was one-third what it was in 1969. But if you look at the gross income, Mr. Speaker, that is not the picture you get.

I do not have the figures on gross income from Statistics Canada, but in a paper entitled "Proposals for a Production and Grain Receipts Policy for the Western Grains Industry," issued by the minister's office, some figures are given. On the first page we see that cash receipts from the six major grains in the 1969-70 crop year were $878 million. They were down $270 million from the average receipts applying to the preceding five years. The decrease, therefore, is in the order of 25 per cent. I mention these figures to illustrate to the House that bad though these figures might be when applied to gross income, they become much worse for the western farmer when applied to net income.

I merely say to the minister that if he really did not like the kind of amendment we have advanced, which would take into account some kind of realistic net income for the farmer, he should have taken the necessary steps himself to arrive at a workable formula. In other words, he should have sat down with the prairie Agricultural Ministers and worked out a formula that might have suited his kind of logic.

I do not think anyone on this side of the House insisted on the minister adopting the particular proposals that were made. I do not think the farm organizations which came here at the beginning of the hearings on this bill insisted on a particular formula. They merely said that the provisions of this measure must bear some relationship to the costs of production. If the government had come in with a proposal or amendment along that line, I am sure it would have been carefully considered.

I do not understand how, in this day and age, we can justify a stabilization program that does not take into account costs of production. In our society all manner of people, professional people, working people and people who run industries for profit, as well as those who made representations to the Prices and Incomes Commission, insist on using as a factor in calculations increases in the cost of living or costs of production, as the case may be. Unions bargaining with industries insist on the cost of living being considered. All these people say that unless such a factor is included in these calculations we will inevitably become poorer and poorer while the rest of society either maintains its standard of living or enjoys a larger measure of well-being.

There is nothing far out in insisting on this kind of approach. It is done in western countries. It is as much a part of our present economic system as profits and wages. It is an accepted part of our system. Yet when we try to tell the government this their reaction is that we are putting forward an idea that belongs to the eighteenth century. Maybe this bill belongs to the eighteenth century.

An hon. Member: To the seventeenth.

Mr. Gleave: Perhaps one day we will persuade the government to catch up to modern trends. I am sure the government is still getting representations from western farm organizations on this bill, just as we are. The Alberta Wheat Pool, in a release dated September 30, 1971, said:

> Alberta Wheat Pool's position concerning proposals recently mentioned in the House of Commons has previously been made clear. It seems necessary to reiterate them again.

Then it goes on to say bluntly:

> This organization does not believe the grains receipts and income stabilization plan as it is presently written provides adequate provisions for maintaining economic health in western grain production. Alberta Wheat Pool has requested several modifications to the plan, including a provision which would recognize any increasing cost of production.

The ideas advanced on behalf of the prairie farmers are not peculiar to the people sitting on this side of the House. Mr. Speaker, this government operates, through the Canadian Dairy Commission, a dairy program which gave certain increases to the producers of dairy products during the past year. Those increases took into account changes in costs of production and the manner in which dairy farmers had to operate. The government did that last year for the dairy farmer, yet when we talk about doing the same thing in a moderate way for the grain farmer, we are charged with putting forward an unworkable idea. Really, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what to say. I do not know how they have the gall to talk that way.

Mr. Dinsdale: Oh, they have lots of gall.

Mr. Gleave: It takes an original mind to put forward ideas like that. The Alberta Wheat Pool goes on to say in its release:

> The present proposal takes no account of the serious effects of inflation on prairie grain income.

The proposal does not consider the effects of inflation at all. That is what the Alberta pool says. I could quote statements made by various farm people in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the opposition is now convinced they would like to bring the House to a vote tonight, so I will take only a few minutes to make one or two points with regard to what is now known as the amendment to an amendment to Bill C-244.

I appreciate that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) are sincere in their desire to attempt to change the format and try to propose a plan which in their minds would be of more benefit to the grain farmers of western Canada. They are concentrating their proposals on net receipts, the difference between costs of production and sales. The people involved, those who have worked for months and have endeavoured to plan this bill in such a way that it will be fair to all farmers as well as being workable, have decided that in the interests of a bill that is workable they should arrange the formula based on the sales or the receipts to farmers. The question arises with regard to formula.

I am sure everyone has read bulletin No. 5 issued with regard to the prairie grain stabilization program, wherein is very clearly outlined how the bill will operate and how the formula will work. I wonder if serious consideration has been given to the problem relating to costs of production. I am not concerned whether it is farm produce or any other type of production, such as automobiles. People who have operated a head office and branch plants understand that a formula of payment to the managers of the plants, suggested while meeting in convention, based entirely on the net average would not be well received because there are so many variables in this respect.

Farmers operating on a similar basis will show a different net profit. How can it be suggested that someone, somewhere is to be told that we in this House have decided that the net cost of producing a bushel of one type of grain is a certain figure? Farmers in various areas will say, "Oh, no, that is not the net cost of production. My cost is different; it is more than that. You have taken the wrong average." We then get into the question of management and all kinds of variables which control the costs of production.

I have found in the various plants with which I have been associated that bigness alone is not the answer. Often a big plant operating at the wrong plateau, where the unit costs are difficult to control, will have a lower net profit per unit than a smaller plant. We have found that bigness alone is not the answer. When we consider the possibility of working out a formula on net receipts, we must come to the conclusion that it is unworkable. It is a matter that will end up the subject of an arbitrary decision by somebody.

I am not sure that anyone in western Canada would like to declare to western farmers that he has the expertise to decide for them what are their net receipts. I suppose we might say we can get this information from each farmer. I wonder if the fund can afford the cost of the bureaucracy which would be required to analyse the various costs of production, in order to arrive at the net figure for each farmer.

Let us look at the other side of the question, the matter of sales. Under the Wheat Board, the sales per unit formula is more or less established. In fact, if the true intent of the Wheat Board is carried out by all the farmers involved, it is not too difficult to establish a unit receipt or unit price. There is also the fact that the grain is delivered to only a few places in the country. The required information will be easily available to those in charge. In my opinion this formula will be much simpler.

Then we come to the business of unnecessary pride. We shall find those who in their own minds decide they have a formula they would like to use. It might not be compatible with the formula which is established as required. So it would mean getting rid of unnecessary pride. I do not think we want to impose this on farmers. It appears to me that if we consider this matter in a serious vein, the plan as proposed is workable and is one which could eventually be accepted by all farmers in the west. The Palliser Wheat Growers Association, a well-known group of successful grain farmers, has said through its president, Mr. Walker Nelson, of Avonlea in the great province of Alberta, that the board of directors has decided publicly to support the controversial stabilization bill.

Mr. Horner: Avonlea is in Saskatchewan. Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pringle: Palliser, in my opinion, is in Alberta. I am sorry if the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is objecting to my mentioning the great province of Alberta. I did so because I thought it would please him. I realize that the Palliser triangle is a large area.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, the hon. member who has the floor mentioned me in the course of debate and I only corrected him to say that the Palliser Wheat Growers Association is mostly in the province of Saskatchewan. He referred to it as being in the province of Alberta. The president's home is in Saskatchewan. I just wanted him to be correct, that is all.

Mr. Pringle: I thank the hon. member. I happen to have spent most of the day with one of our big wheat and rapeseed farmers from Saskatchewan, a well-known citizen of Alberta, as a matter of fact. He is from Falcon, Alberta. He is a well known member of the Palliser triangle. I have been listening to him all day and perhaps I did not make the right statement geographically. I quote from the press release. Mr. Nelson said:

The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act placed the emphasis on storage of grain, rather than movement of it, and with the new government policy of keeping wheat stocks low, the TWRA loses much of its importance as a factor in farm income. Under the new act, the fund can be used to keep Canada competitive in world markets by using competitive pricing at all times, and placing more emphasis on moving grain rather than spending money on storage, which tended to subsidize the elevator companies.

We are now discussing the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Horner: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he read the whole of that news release put out by the Palliser association, from the first paragraph?

Mr. Pringle: I would be prepared to do so. I did not want to prolong the debate. I made requests of the same kind to the hon. member in committee, but he did not oblige me. I now quote from the press release issued by the Palliser Wheat Growers Association:

Mr. Lang, minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, has assured us that fullest consideration would be given—

Mr. Horner: You are reading the third paragraph, not the first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) has the floor.

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take advantage of the hon. member for Crowfoot. When he interrupted me I was reading the first paragraph.

President Walter Nelson of Avonlea said today, "The decision was not an easy one as our association does not agree with certain aspects of Bill C-244, but if it is faced with choosing between acceptance of the stabilization plan or retaining the storage-oriented Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, we must concede the new act is a big improvement."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pringle: To continue:

"Mr. Lang . . . has assured us that fullest consideration will be given to placing actual producers on the advisory board which will administer the fund," Mr. Nelson said. "This will ensure that it will be used for the benefit of the man who grows the grain, thereby enhancing our marketing position."

"In view of all the ramifications involved," Mr. Nelson added, "our association has reached agreement with several farm organizations, including the Manitoba Rapeseed Association, the Saskatchewan Rapeseed Association and the Carman Farm Business Association to make a public plea to Members of Parliament to allow Bill C-244 to come to a vote in the House."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pringle: We are now considering whether we should scrap the whole formula, which is based on receipts, in order to adopt, possibly, some other formula which would be extremely difficult to administer, one which I have heard described as unworkable, in my opinion properly so. The amendment to the amendment is rather meaningless. The stabilization act is applicable to wheat, oats, barley, flaxseed, rapeseed and rye and the federal government contributes at the rate of at least $2 for every $1 put in by producers.

A payout to producers will be made when the total receipts of grain sales fall below the five-year average. Computation of receipts is a comparatively simple matter, although some problems will certainly be attached to it. The producer board, which has been promised by the minister, and all those directly concerned will have to work out some of the details. But I am sure anyone who has been concerned in operating a business will say that it will be much simpler than any other method which has been suggested. If the point were ever reached at which consideration could be given to working on the basis of net receipts, the whole basic formula would have to be changed. There is only so much money available for this.

The minister has told producers that if they wish, they may also contribute 2 per cent of receipts from their sales of approved feed lots and other approved buyers. I presume they would have to submit cash receipts showing what sales have taken place. The bill is so designed that payments into the fund will be made by the federal government on an annual basis. Four per cent of receipts will be contributed on an annual basis and this, especially in the present year, will amount to a very large sum of money.

The grain growers of the west will also be in a position to contribute to their own future and build up a meaningful fund which could be used to advantage when they needed it. I am sure that although we buy insurance policies, we hope we will not need to collect the insurance. Similarly, we hope that sales of grain will be sufficiently large that the farmers will not have to draw upon this fund in order that the fund can grow.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: Filibuster.

Mr. Pringle: It has been suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that I might be filibustering, so at this point I will close with my thanks to him, since I am sure he now wishes to call the question and have the House conclude debate on this bill.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by my colleague for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and the subamendment of my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) deal with the crux of the measure now before the House. They deal with the formula upon which payments under the grain stabilization act will be made, which really is what this whole controversy is about. I think there would be no difficulty in getting the agreement of this House to proceed very quickly with the legislation were the minister prepared to look sympathetically at a formula that would be more realistic and in keeping with the farmers' needs.

I have seldom heard a speech so full of unctuous self-righteousness as the one the minister delivered to the House this afternoon. According to the minister, the members who are proposing amendments are not trying to improve the legislation or serve the needs of the farmers; they are merely trying to obstruct the minister in his efforts to get the legislation through the House. It is only the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) who is interested in the farmers; every other member is trying to keep him from playing Robin Hood to the prairie farmers.

I wonder whether it has ever occurred to the minister that everybody else is out of step except him. The governments of the three prairie provinces have sent their ministers of agriculture to Ottawa to tell the minister what, in their opinion, is wrong with the formula contained in the grain stabilization legislation and why this legislation will not meet the needs of the prairie farmers.

I wonder whether it has ever occurred to the minister that all of the farm organizations have expressed their disapproval of this legislation. These organizations are not anxious to obstruct. The minister is being paranoic on this subject. The farm organizations are not plotting against the minister or against the government. I read in today's Globe and Mail the statements that were made by the minister. According to the Globe and Mail—

Mr. Lang yesterday expressed regret that prairie farmers organizations had still not said that the bill is a step forward. He said that to date no clear voice on the legislation has been heard from the west.

"I'm concerned that the issue whether this was a step forward was confused in the minds of prairie farmers by the fact that in their zeal to demand more (money) they never chose to admit that this was a step forward".

I cannot conceive of a more childish statement than that the farm organizations would not admit that this was a step forward. The minister then went on to say:

"If they'd said this was a step forward . . . then I think that the support for the bill in the House might have been forthcoming more quickly and we would have been out of our difficulty".

Is all that the minister needs in order to make some adjustments to this legislation, a statement by the farm organizations, by the opposition, that this is a step forward? If that is all he needs, let me start by saying to the minister that it is a step forward for any government, particularly for a Liberal government, to admit that there is a need for a grain stabilization fund and that steps must be taken to stabilize the income of prairie grain farmers. Certainly that is a step forward. But when the measure before us completely fails to stabilize the income of the grain farmers of western Canada, then we are duty-bound to say to the minister that there needs to be some changes made in the legislation, particularly in the formula upon which the payments will be made from the grain stabilization fund.

That is exactly what the ministers of agriculture from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta came to Ottawa to tell the minister. They are not plotting against the minister. They are just as interested in the farmers of western Canada as the minister is and, some people may think, more so. They came to Ottawa to plead with the minister to make some changes so that the legislation now before the House will be acceptable not only to the governments of the three prairie provinces but to the farmers and the farm organizations of western Canada.

To judge from the press statement which was released by the three ministers, they left Ottawa under the impression that the minister was going to take some time—they suggested a week, or some days—to consider this matter; that the opposition would cease to belabour the government for not making payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and the government in its turn would take this matter under consideration, the minister would take the matter to cabinet and probably the cabinet would agree to some fundamental changes.

But what has happened? Instead of this cooling-off period, the minister has brought the legislation back today. I wish the minister had told us this afternoon the answer to some of the questions that have been asked. For example, does this mean that the consideration which was promised the three ministers of agriculture from the prairie provinces has already been given and that the answer is in the negative? If the answer is not in the negative, then what value is there in passing this measure since the minister is going to negotiate some changes?

I think it is perfectly apparent from what the minister said this afternoon that he has no intention of making any changes. I also think it is apparent from what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said about the information conveyed to him that there is a very remote chance of any changes being made in the legislation. If that is so, then I would contend that the agreement made with the three ministers of agriculture from western Canada was simply a device to get them out of this city. I would say that they have been double-crossed. They went away from here with the distinct impression that the whole formula for making payments out of the grain stabilization fund would be reviewed. It is now perfectly apparent that the government has no intention of reviewing this formula. I go further and say that the government probably never had any intention of reviewing it, that the so-called cooling-off period was merely a means of getting rid of the ministers so the government could proceed with this legislation.

• (8:30 p.m.)

There is no doubt in anyone's mind about the need for legislation to stabilize the income of the grain farmers of western Canada. Anyone who has been familiar with the plight of the prairie farmer over the last 30 years knows that the ups and downs in prairie farm incomes have been such that the farmer has suffered undue hardship because of lack of any stabilization of his income. No one is quarrelling with a grain stabilization act. What we are quarrelling with is that this legislation is not a grain stabilization plan at all. This legislation will not stabilize the income of grain producers in western Canada. The minister put it more accurately this afternoon when he said it was designed to give massive assistance in a year of catastrophe. That is what it will do—but it will not stabilize income.

In the first place, the previous five-year average upon which payment will be based contained two of the most disastrous years, in terms of farm income, in the west.

Mr. Lang: And two of the best.

Mr. Douglas: Two of the worst. The average will be low because three out of the five years will be low in terms of the five-year average, and the prospect of getting payment is remote. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appears on national television and tells the farmers they will get $35 million next year and $35 million the year after, I say that is a deception.

An hon. Member: You are a Santa Claus.

Mr. Douglas: In all probability there will be no payments under this plan for the next decade; and if there are, they will only be made in a year of catastrophe or crop failure.

An hon. Member: Are you predicting that?

Mr. Douglas: The second objection to this formula is that it deals with gross income. No other group in the Canadian economy would be prepared to accept as a formula for stabilized income 90 per cent of a moving, five-year average of gross income. The professional groups in Canada, including managers and business executives, have had an average increase of 7.5 per cent per annum.

An hon. Member: What about the unions?

Mr. Douglas: Trade unions and groups of organized workers on the average have received 6 per cent per year. The cost of living has been going up at the rate of 5 per cent per year, and the costs of farm production have been going up at a rate of over 5 per cent per year. Therefore, to talk about a stabilization formula that is set in terms of 90 per cent of gross income over the last five years is not to talk about a stabilization plan but a plan to fix perpetual poverty on the grain farmers of western Canada. This is a plan to fasten any assistance to prairie farmers at a poverty level.

Mr. Lang: That is not true.

Mr. Douglas: What this means is that the farmer will be levied 2 per cent on his grain sales, to go into the fund to provide assistance in any year when there is a catastrophic crop failure or a very serious and radical drop in farm income. The minister said this afternoon there is no limit to how much the government could lend the fund. That is true. But the farmer will then start to pay one-third of the cost of replenishing the fund. If the minister really wants to have an income stabilization plan, I am convinced that in the next day or two it is possible for this House to work out the kind of formula which would be acceptable to the farmers of western Canada and the governments of the prairie provinces.

If the minister does not like the wording of the motion or the amendment, surely it is not beyond the wit of his department to devise a formula under which there would be a factor dealing with farm costs. It is not difficult to work out a formula which would take into account the annual increase in farm production costs. Year after year Statistics Canada and the Department of Agriculture publish figures on farm production costs. The minister could put that factor into a formula. If he did that, much of the objection to this legislation would disappear. Why does the minister not do this? Is it because of mere stubborn arrogance?

Mr. Lang: It won't work.

Mr. Douglas: Is it because he is so surrounded with his own conceit that what he proposes is the only thing that can be done? The minister says it won't work.

Mr. Lang: Your amendments prove that.

Mr. Douglas: The minister says it won't work. If the minister is telling us it is not possible to put into a stabilization formula a factor which will provide for increased production costs, then he has no right to be occupying his present position. He ought to resign and go back to his ivory tower where he will not be faced with the practical problems of administering a grains program.

An hon. Member: I hope he doesn't go back to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Douglas: I suspect that the reason the minister has not been prepared to make these changes to the grains stabilization act is not because his officials cannot devise a formula, and not because he is not seized with the validity of the arguments put forward by farm organizations that net income, rather than gross income, ought to be the basis upon which stabilization payments are made. The real reason the minister is trying to force this legislation through the House is that this is part of the program which arises from the task force on agriculture and the farm adjustment resources mobility plan, which envisage getting off the farm those farmers who are described by the task force as being inefficient. It is designed to get farmers out of wheat growing because they will be much worse off under this legislation.

It may be that under this legislation, with gross income from the six grains enumerated in the legislation, they will remain at a fairly good level. But farm wheat deliveries could be low. Yet out of the few deliveries the farmer is able to make he will have to pay the storage which is now being paid under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. The wheat farmer will be the worse off. The government wants farmers to get out of wheat growing. I concede that under the farm adjustment resources mobility plan, the government does not propose to leave them negligently alone. According to the government's statement, it proposes to take them into the minister's Department of Manpower and train them as electricians, plumbers and welders so they can go into the cities and join the other unemployed electricians, plumbers and welders.

That is the plan and purpose of the grain stabilization act. It is to reduce the commitment this government is making to support the western wheat grower. The government is seeking to cut its losses and to put the screws on so that only large farmers will survive and this stabilization plan will come into effect only in a year of catastrophe. We could go through an entire decade without a dollar having been paid out of that fund to the farmers of western Canada. I think unless the minister is prepared to amend the formula upon which grains stabilization payments will be made, this legislation constitutes a retrogressive step.

The minister is now making the threat that if this legislation is not passed promptly he proposes to withdraw it. Speaking only for myself, may I say that I do not scare worth a damn. I say to the minister that as this legislation now stands, it proposes to fasten upon the farmers of western Canada a rigid framework of poverty and I am opposed to it. I do not care whether the minister forces it through the House or withdraws it, I will make no apology for opposing the legislation.

I am prepared to go across the Prairies with the minister any time and discuss this legislation. I am prepared to go into the minister's constituency and discuss this legislation. I am prepared to abide by the decision of the farmers of western Canada when they have a chance to go to the polls and say what they think of this legislation, because up until now, despite all the propaganda of the minister, his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the fictitious and misleading figures of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), they have not yet been able to convince the farmers that the legislation is not harmful to their best interests. I for one am prepared in the final analysis to leave that decision to the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the debate on the motion and the amendment now before us must be cast within the framework of a rather ominous shadow. That shadow takes the shape of one of the worst double-crosses western Canada has ever seen. I suggest that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) is the person primarily responsible, at least on the evidence available to us at the present time. If he wants to tag anybody else within the government, that of course is up to him. But he is speaking for the government at the present time and the government is prepared to accept him as their spokesman.

Regardless of the little song and dance he tries to come up with, I think his record in the cabinet as a representative from the province of Saskatchewan is not one to be proud of. I would hope the minister would have a little more sense of history than he has displayed up to now in consideration of this bill. We have had ministers from western Canada who in the view of many of us have not always represented the interests of the west. However, they stood by what they thought; they did not attempt to pull some of the tricks the minister is now prepared to engage in.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) to relate his remarks to the motion and the amendment before the House. With respect, I believe he is roaming considerably wider than the scope allowed him.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to cast my remarks within the framework of the present situation as I see it. I shall deal with the motion and the amendment as I see them within the context of the considerations which must be before members of this House. It seems to me that they go to the very core of the debate in which we are presently engaged.

The plan as presently constituted by the government is totally inadequate. It will be impossible to come up with a meaningful plan for the farmers of western Canada unless provision is made for taking into account increases in the costs of production, as my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has pointed out. Farmers are faced year after year with increases in costs of production. For many years they have seen their gross grain sale proceeds come up to near the level of past years, but they have also seen increases in costs of production. They have seen the portion of their net income upon which they have to live, and from which they have to find their savings and capital for expansion and new investment, dwindle as a result of steadily rising costs.

I think it is important to note some of the factors involved in the proposal which has been placed before the House. First of all, in the motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), and the clarifying amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), they are trying to set out the principle that account must be taken of increases in the costs of production if, in fact, western farmers are to have a meaningful sort of plan.

I think it is important to note the differences which exist between the patterns of gross farm income and net farm income as they involves farmers in western Canada. I have some figures I should like to place before the House, which I feel illustrate the difference, the reason this matter is so important to farmers in western Canada and why our proposal is so important to the bill now before us. The minister has pointed out that the provisions of the bill are based upon aggregate grain sale proceeds for the six major grains produced in western Canada, wheat, oats, barley, rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. Taking figures which were immediately available to me, I totalled for the last five years the gross cash receipts from sales of these six grains in Canada as a whole. I recognize that some sales would have been made outside the prairie provinces, but I believe it would be agreed that the greater portion would have been made within them.

The figures of the cash receipts from these six grains for the past five years are as follows: for 1966, $1,281.1 million; for 1967, $1,307.3 million; for 1968, $1,191.7 million; for 1969, $929.8 million; for 1970, $1,013.2 million. I made a calculation in respect of these five figures; I attempted to find the relationship between the lowest of and the highest figures. I found the highest figure in these five years, in 1967, was 41 per cent higher than the lowest figure, which occurred in 1969.

Interestingly enough, I found when I looked at the farm income picture for the province of Saskatchewan alone, my own province, that there was a very close relation between the degree of variation between the lows and the highs of total gross farm income province and the sales figures for the six major grains right across Canada. Without quoting all the figures I might note that for the period 1966 to 1970, total farm cash income in the province of Saskatchewan varied from a low of $619 million in 1970 to a high of $976.2 million in 1967. I found, again, that the high figure in 1967 was 41 per cent higher than the low figure in 1970.

There has been a steady downward trend in gross cash income over the past several years, so that the minister will find, whatever way his present averages hold out, that given another year or two we will be dealing with a very low average figure. I think it is important to note this degree of variation in the gross cash income figures, namely, a variation of approximately 40 per cent over a five-year period when you compare the low figure with the high figure. I think it is important to compare these figures with the variation that exists when you consider farm net income.

The only figures I could use adequately in this sense were of total net farm income in the province of Saskatchewan. I think it has to be kept in mind, as hon. members will realize, that the difference between your cash income and your net income is your costs of production. I would like to note briefly the pattern of farm net income in Saskatchewan over the past five years. In 1966, farm net income in my province was $583 million; in 1967 it was $354.9 million; in 1968, $462.3 million; in 1969, $402.9 million and in 1970, $195 million. Thus, we have a variation between a low of $195 million in 1970 and a high of $583 million in 1966. The figure of $583 million is almost 300 per cent higher than the low figure of $195 million in 1970. We see that while farm cash income, gross income, only varied by some 40 per cent, there was a variation of some 200 per cent when looking at net income figures.

Therefore, we see that we must look at more than the farm cash income picture if farmers are to have a plan that means anything at all to them. That is why many of us have been pressing this matter and have been debating it in the House of Commons. We feel that the present provisions do not provide the type of stability that is required in western agriculture. I think there will not be disagreement with the contention that there has been a high degree of instability throughout the history of prairie agriculture. We in this party, and I am sure members in all parties, have no disagreement with the proposition that we do want to find a means of ensuring an adequate degree of stability in western Canada.

In the grain stabilization bill now before us we have a very specific set of proposals. As I have already indicated to the minister, I have no disagreement or no quarrel with the fact that we have a very specific, detailed plan in this bill. At least we are able to form an adequate judgment on the bill as it is before us. It is a specific plan. It does not simply lay down guidelines, broad criteria, or just provide enabling authority for the government to establish a plan.

It already has been noted in the debate this evening that some farm organizations have expressed approval of the grain stabilization proposals. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) said that the Palliser Grain Growers Association have expressed themselves in favour of the grain stabilization bill as it is. That is their privilege. They are entitled to present their views. But I think it needs to be noted for the record that many other organizations have continued to express their dissatisfaction with this bill and in fact are now expressing themselves in stronger terms.

I have in my hand a news release issued by the Alberta Wheat Pool last Thursday, September 30, under the name of G. L. Harrold, president of the organization. His news release states as follows:

> Alberta Wheat Pool's position concerning proposals recently mentioned in the House of Commons have previously been made clear. It seems necessary to reiterate them again.
> This organization does not believe the grains receipts and income stabilization plan as it is presently written provides adequate provisions for maintaining economic health in western grain production.

I am sure there are other members of the House who will agree that the Alberta Wheat Pool is a responsible organization and would not make such a statement unless it had given the matter thorough study and had come to the conclusion that the bill now before us is very inadequate. I am sure all hon. members recently received from the secretary of the Alberta Wheat Pool a letter setting out certain criticisms of Bill C-244. Mr. Broughton in his letter pointed out that since the Alberta Wheat Pool made their submission to the House of Commons standing committee on June 1, the members of his association have become even better informed on its provisions and the association had received further expressions of opinion from them. I quote:

> We need hardly mention that they are less than complimentary. It was a shock to many producers to realize during the summer that the Canadian Wheat Board had not received any payments during the crop year under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Quite naturally, grain producers had operated during the year in the belief that the act was in force and that its provisions could be counted upon in the grain income picture. The realization it was not, was extremely disappointing.
> We have, in the interval, also heard on an informal basis from a good number of our members, their viewpoints on the stabilization plan as proposed. It again seems to have failed entirely to capture their support. While no producers are now in doubt that the plan is one for stabilization of the grain producing industry as a whole on the prairies, they relate it quite naturally to their own operations and circumstances. Localized mishaps—

I wish to emphasize this point because I feel it has not been given adequate consideration in the debate so far. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) has pointed out on a number of occasions that practically every significant criticism of the plan was based on putting more money into it. But there is another problem with respect to the provisions of the bill. It is the lack of equity in the plan in terms of the method of operation set out in the bill. This point is dealt with by the Alberta Wheat Pool in the following paragraph:

> Localized mishaps such as occurred this year through the Bertha armyworm attack on rapeseed can leave an individual farmer or groups of farmers with no income from that crop and under circumstances where the total prairie picture is relatively unaffected, these farmers could expect no assistance from the proposed stabilization plan. This is small comfort to the individual and we believe, will be a continuing and strong influence in his attitude toward the plan. An additional feature is the 2 per cent deduction on any gross grain income which he may have.

As has been pointed out on many occasions, this will take from many farmers whatever net income they have left as a result of the current situation. The contribution to be made by the federal government to the grain stabilization plan has been discussed in this debate, and we heard the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on television last night. I now have a transcript of that broadcast.

Mr. Osler: It is more than your leader had today.

Mr. Burton: It came in the mail just tonight. One of the statements of the Prime Minister was:

> Let's first compare them in terms of money.

He was referring to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the grain stabilization program.

> For the last crop year, under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, we would be in process of paying the western farmer $62 million, for the crop year which we are now in—

I think there is no quarrel with the figure of $62 million, Mr. Speaker, but the Prime Minister was wrong when he said:

> . . . we would be in process of paying the western farmer $62 million, for the crop year which we are now in—

I think it should be pointed out that under the terms of that act the process should now be completed, because all the payments should have been made in 12 monthly instalments between August 1, 1970, and July 1, 1971.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Unless there is unanimous consent, the hon. member may not continue. There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Mahoney: We already heard it. Gleave gave us that.

Mr. Burton: It might do you good to listen to somebody else for a change.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, the pattern of deception that the government has engaged in—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mahoney: Heigh ho, Silver!

Mr. Downey: —over the past weeks and during the debate on this bill, short as it may have been, has been pointed out this afternoon. First there was the failure to observe the law that was finally brought to the attention of those not already aware of it. Last weekend there was the betrayal of the trust of the prairie Ministers of Agriculture. I think they left here in good faith, believing that some of their logical and beneficial proposals, would at least be studied by the minister in the following week. The blatant indulgence in deception that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) engaged in last night after the eleven o'clock news was one of the highlights of any deception that I have ever witnessed.

Mr. Osler: Your sidekick said there were a couple of minor errors.

An hon. Member: He read the transcript.

Mr. Downey: Those are minor errors? Today in this House I asked the Prime Minister if the $70 million that he referred to would actually go into the hands of the farmers, but he did not choose to answer. I do not think he can fool the farmers any longer, however. I have the transcript of the remarks he made on television last night, and he said that $35 million will be paid out in the present year as against $30 million, and $35 million next year as against $20 million. He knows very well that unless total agricultural products drop below 90 per cent of the five-year average the money will remain there and not be paid out to the farmers. Yet he came on television with a shrugging approach, that convincing approach, and he is trying to sell this—

An hon. Member: Convincing and shrugging—which is it?

Mr. Downey: I saw him shrug, yes; I saw him trying to deceive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair regrets having to interrupt the hon. member, but has difficulty in relating his remarks to the amendment before us, which concerns the method of implementing the bill. The Chair would hope that for the purpose of orderly debate the hon. member would return as quickly as possible to the subject matter of the amendment before us.

Mr. Downey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was only after listening to the previous speakers and the range of their remarks that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Especially the minister.

Mr. Downey: Before I go to another point which you may consider more closely associated with the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say it is evident to all of us that there are no principles across the way in this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Downey: It is merely a union or an alliance—

An hon. Member: A team.

Mr. Downey: —concerned with the power to rule; an unholy alliance to say the least.

An hon. Member: A dictatorship.

Mr. Downey: I should like to read from an act which is still law, the Agricultural Stabilization Act which received royal assent on July 1, 1958, under a Conservative government. I should like to draw parallels between that act and the bill before us. Section 2(1) (a) reads:

in relation to a named commodity—

These are the criteria for increasing farm income under this policy. It went to the 80 per cent formula instead of the 90 per cent formula under the present plan.

in relation to a named commodity, 80 per cent of the base price thereof, or such higher percentage of the base price thereof as the Governor in Council prescribes—

Section 8 (1) provides:

In each year the board shall establish the base price for each agricultural commodity, or the grade, quality, variety, class, type or form thereof, the price of which is to be stabilized under this act.

Section 7 (1) provides:

The board shall from time to time in accordance with this act take such action as is necessary to stabilize the prices of agricultural commodities at their respective prescribed prices, and shall take such action and make such recommendations as are necessary to ensure that the prescribed prices for an agricultural commodity in effect from time to time shall bear a fair relationship to the cost of production of such commodity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Downey: Here we have a law already on the statute books which has a built-in inflation factor. Let me read that last part again:

—shall bear a fair relationship to the cost of production of such commodity.

An hon. Member: Listen, Otto.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Downey: Section 5(1) of the act provides:

The minister shall appoint an advisory committee consisting of a chairman and at least six but not more than nine other members composed of farmers and representatives of farm organizations.

That act is in force today, but you come along with all this garbage—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Downey: —and cloud the issue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Downey: Whereas with a few simple, timely amendments you could have amended this act that is already on the statute books and made it work for the benefit of farmers.

An hon. Member: Boloney.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I hope hon. members will refrain from addressing each other and will, instead, address the Chair. Hon. members should refer to the constituencies of other hon. members or to the positions they hold. I say that without referring otherwise to citation 147. I hope that as much as possible hon. members will refer to the constituencies of their colleagues or to the positions they hold in this House.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I think the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) should resign.

Mr. Woolliams: After the election he will wish he had.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your attempts to get the minister's attention. We want him to get the benefit of some of our counselling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Listen, Otto.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Speaker, I read section 2(2) of the act I have been referring to. It provides:

> In prescribing a percentage of the base price of an agricultural commodity under paragraph (a) or (b) . . . the Governor in Council shall be guided by the estimated average cost of production of the commodity, and such other factors as the Governor in Council considers to be relevant.

Here we have a stabilization act that is far more complete than the bill we are now considering. With a few simple amendments it could improve the entire agricultural picture in this country. It is no longer the aim of my party to save this government from itself.

Mr. Mahoney: Some aim.

Mr. Downey: We are tired of saving it from itself. We did that last year for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) when he was piloting through the marketing bill. We prevented his making a fool of himself, as it were, in front of the farmers and people of Canada. I say, let us bring this bill to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McBride: Now you are with us.

Mr. Downey: Let the people find out what this government is trying to do to them. Let them judge the government when election time comes again.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Orlikow: Now here speaks a real farmer, I suppose.

Mr. Osler: Thank you. It is amazing; every time I have risen to speak—

An hon. Member: The hon. member says nothing.

Mr. Osler: —in the past 2½ years the obvious has been repeated to me. People keep saying, "There's a man who is not a farmer, there's a man who is not a farmer." You would think they would have something new to say. I do not know how many times I have told hon. members, "I am not a farmer," but they do not seem to get the message.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member does not look like a farmer.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Mr. Osler: I am not one. Farmers are not the only ones who think, and people who are not farmers are sometimes able to speak for farmers. Many whom I have heard today are certainly not farmers; and if they claim to be farmers I do not think any farmer would recognize them as such. I know many farmers and they certainly do not behave the way some people behave. Most farmers are doers.

An hon. Member: Are what?

Mr. Osler: Doers. Most farmers are doers. Most farmers are interested in getting things done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Not if they are in the NDP.

Mr. Osler: I suppose even NDP farmers like to get things done, because they like to eat as do other farmers.

An hon. Member: What about Conservative farmers; are they different?

Mr. Osler: Conservative farmers certainly like to eat, but they do not eat as well as Liberal farmers because they use the methods of 50 years ago.

Mr. Alexander: Maybe they are honest.

Mr. Osler: Without carrying on in this vein any longer, may I say this. I really have one small message. We are speaking on an amendment to an amendment. This is big stuff. We could talk for 50 years on this subject. We could talk for two more or for six more weeks. Although this is supposed to be a government headed by a dictator, it is obvious that we will have to talk for 50 years if the opposition has no new light to throw on the subject. Out of one corner of their mouths they allege we are governed by a dictator, and out of the other corner they say the government cannot get something through Parliament when it is confronted with an absolutely nonsensical, nonthinking filibuster.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Osler: We have various points of view in this House. That is why, probably, we have four parties represented here, with a couple of mavericks who have no party. That is honest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Borrie: That did not mean you, Stanley.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising on behalf of the Speaker?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the present occupant of the chair is one of the members of this House who does not belong to any party, I do not like the reference that was made to Your Honour by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler).

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, as usual, quality shows. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who represents the riding next to mine, has made a good point. I apologize to the Chair, for the sake of those who may have thought that I had insulted the Chair and on my own behalf.

Mr. Alexander: I do not accept.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, honest and honourable people entertain honest and different points of view. Nevertheless, words are only words. They have nothing to do with cash. We agree, as the three premiers from western Canada have agreed, that what the farmers need is cash.

An hon. Member: Pay your bill.

Mr. Osler: It is no use castigating the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for what he said on television last night. One member has asked him to pay the bill; another has called him a rogue.

An hon. Member: And what does the hon. member say?

Mr. Osler: If I did not think that our Prime Minister is the best Prime Minister we have had for a long time, I would not be on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Now the hon. member is being carried away.

Mr. Osler: Hon. members can castigate the Prime Minister and rib the minister. We could spend months doing this. It might be a great deal of fun. It is lots of fun playing the game called politics. The people of Canada are fed up with this game called politics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Osler: I am not a farmer, Mr. Speaker, but I do not want to delay this bill.

Mr. McCleave: Pay the bill.

Mr. Osler: I am not a farmer, and I will be the first to admit that this bill is not absolute perfection and does not meet all of a farmer's dreams. Actually, I am not qualified to know whether it is perfect or not; I merely know that the farmers of western Canada would rather have $100 million than this entertainment. They do not want to be entertained with the sort of display that has been presented to the people of Canada for the past few weeks. This entertainment is cheap. We do not even charge admission here. Old parliamentarians, to whom we pay a pension, may attend. How we entertain the people of Canada is not important.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I am perfectly willing to stand on the record of this government at the next election. If the people of Canada do not like what I have helped the government to do, they can elect someone else to this House. I am damned if I am going to sit around listening to this garbage week after week while the farmers of Canada go short of cash.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Osler: The minister has made it abundantly clear—I have heard him say it—that this bill can be amended or changed. It will be open to compromise and change as time goes on. For God's sake, let's get something started. This is a new deal for the farmers. They need a new deal. It is nice to be holy at this stage, but what do we have? The people of Canada know this bill has gone through to the report stage. It has been approved in principle and this House is now deciding whether it can be accepted. Having been approved in principle, we now find—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry that I missed some of the speeches which preceded the one being made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler). I am not in a position to judge to what extent hon. members have limited their contributions to the debate on the subamendment. As the hon. member has said, there is a motion, an amendment and a subamendment. My understanding of the rules of parliamentary debate is that we should limit contributions to the question before the House. It does not help the institution of Parliament if hon. members move motions, amendments and subamendments and then entirely disregard the rules and talk about whatever they please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am not necessarily referring to the hon. member who has the floor at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: My thought is if we are to make any progress in Parliament, not necessarily in connection with this bill but in connection with the work of the House of Commons in general, we should respect the rules. The basic rule that should be respected at all times is with regard to relevancy. If hon. members were prepared to disregard this rule at all times, I doubt that Parliament could work at all. I invite hon. members to limit their contributions to the matter before us at the present time.

Mr. Osler: I heartily concur with Your Honour's remarks. I will try to observe your counsel. I hope other members who participate in this debate will do likewise.

This amendment to an amendment is another method of implementing this bill. That is my point. Having arrived at this stage, the House is in general agreement with the bill. We are arguing about ways and means which are becoming finer and finer as the debate progresses. Perhaps this is necessary because there is a certain inefficiency to democracy and the democratic process that is worth debating because the alternatives are so disastrous and bleak. Noting Your Honour's admonition and profiting by it, I will limit my words to just one thought.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Osler: Hold it. It is a thought I would like to get into their heads, Mr. Speaker. We are at the point where we can go on with amendments and subamendments for the next year. We will probably be able to write home to our constituents and say that we again have 176 inches of snow. This will say, "Big deal; it is really rugged in Ottawa." However, you will not get a single mark unless you allow this matter to come to a vote. In a democratic process, things come to a vote. They must be decided. The time has come to decide. We have talked long enough. If the House will let this question come to a vote, members will have enough courage to live up to their convictions and let us live up to ours. The country will in the long run decide who is right.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question? If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre wishes, he can allow the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to ask a question before he resumes his seat. Does the hon. member consent?

Mr. Osler: In lieu of a vote, yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It appears to be rather qualified approval. In view of the circumstances, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but the remarks of some members have prompted me to do so, especially since the previous member seemed somewhat to neglect the importance of an independent member. In addition, Mr. Speaker, you will realize the importance which I give to my mandate as well as to the debate now under way.

In my opinion, we have on several occasions slightly strayed from the subject of this discussion. I will try in the next few minutes to deal with the subamendment and the amendment now before the House.

It does seem that Bill C-244, which guarantees more money and even certain services to farmers, does not contain as many faults as the members of the opposition seem to suggest, but I must recognize the major importance of the amendment and sub-amendment, as regards a policy based on production costs.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Unless I am mistaken, the bill is intended to define a policy of stabilization for the western farmers. Of course, being an easterner, I also understand the problems of the western producers; but needless to say, I shall take this opportunity to ask the minister to pay special attention to any policy that concerns the East as well.

But wanting to be as objective as possible, I should not want to miss this opportunity of showing the members and farmers from the West that we are just as concerned about agriculture in the East when it comes to wanting a sound economy.

The amendment and sub-amendment now before the house are quite significant in terms of the profits of the producers. I wonder to what extent those responsible in government could study seriously the sub-amendment to set up a plan for the stabilization and cost prices.

It was mentioned earlier, for instance, that production costs have changed in the last few years. I think we can justly say that production costs become extremely important in terms of the profits which may be expected. The sub-amendment however deserves consideration from the minister and Parliament. How far could the government go in considering this amendment in order to arrive at a compromise? We have reached the point where we must at all cost find a compromise in the interest of farmers who are awaiting these payments.

I had the opportunity to say that I surely cannot give my blessing to opposition members who have had the opportunity and plenty of time to pass the bill. Legally, the government should have made payment at a date already past. It proved its good will by trying to give more and by introducing a bill that, in my opinion, is more justified with regard to the small or average farmers.

Now the opposition is attempting to find faults in this bill. As an independent member, I am in a better position than anybody else, I think, to ask for a compromise and this, in the interest of farmers affected by this bill who are still waiting for payments they undoubtedly need. How far would the government accept to go to arrive at a compromise with the opposition members?

I think that the amendment in question which explains production costs should retain the government's attention since any stabilization plan must be based on the agricultural policy while taking production costs into account. We may talk about gross profits but I think the farmers' interests would be protected only if production costs were also taken into account. I wonder to what extend the government could consider this amendment. For my part, I am fascinated by this, because I am among those who believe that production costs must be analysed first of all, when a stabilization program is in question. It may be possible for the government to give more serious consideration to this amendment in order to reach a compromise and to limit the length of the debate on Bill C-244, always taking into account, of course, the interests of the farmers concerned.

So, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my comments, which have the objectivity that is desirable in this House, will help, not to enlighten hon. members—because I do not think that I am qualified to enlighten my colleagues especially with regard to this bill—but only to call their attention to the objectivity which they should always practise. I felt that I ought to point out to them the possibility of reaching a compromise—and this, only in the interests of farmers who are waiting for payment.

We know that the government is willing to pay, as it has demonstrated on several occasions. We also know that members of the opposition are very anxious to improve the fate of farmers in their own ridings. But how far does logic determine our actions? We must look seriously for a compromise, keeping in mind the primary interests of those farmers, who are waiting to be paid.

I would like this appeal which I am making tonight to be one of the last which I will have had to make on behalf of farmers, in view of the interests of the latter, and maybe also of this House, as it seems that stubbornness, whether on the part of one party or another, will contribute to make the public lose its already much shaken confidence in Parliament.

It seems to me that, if we consider that matter objectively, then not only will payments be made to the producers but also the Canadian people will again have faith in the members of this House.

[English]

Mr. Rod. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest some practical changes which I believe could be made to this bill. They all relate to the net income position. I suggest that the minister seriously consider these points. If he were to do so, I do not think we should hesitate to pass the bill quickly.

We have heard comments from backbenchers on the other side about our opposing this bill. I would ask some of them, including the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Osler): Why should the farmers of Alberta grow wheat at below cost of production to feed the people of Calgary? Why should the people of Manitoba grow wheat at below cost of production to feed the people of Winnipeg?

I ask the minister why he has not included in this bill provision for a two-price system. This would take into account the rise in the cost of production and would have relevancy to the cost-price position in Canada. This is a contention we have been making all along, but the minister has not yet told us why he could not include such a provision.

It is a reasonable conclusion that people should get a decent price for a product they grow and the service they have to sell. Members of this House received a 50 per cent increase in their salaries, yet farmers are asked to produce wheat at below cost. What kind of nonsense is this? I do not understand why he cannot include in the bill an amendment to cover this point.

The minister admitted to me when the bill was in committee that if the plan were to work properly a form of crop insurance would be necessary. The PFAA had not only some income value but some crop insurance value. The plan before us deals only with income. If it contained crop insurance features as well, I think we would be more ready to approve it than is the case.

These are two points. Another point is that there has to be a drop in income in the prairie region before any payment can be made under the plan. I ask those who have factories in their areas what they would think if the government said, "All the factories in your area must be shut down before anyone can receive unemployment insurance." Yet this is what the present bill implies. Again, I ask: What kind of nonsense is this?

Possibly the scheme could be dealt with on a regional basis to a far greater extent than is proposed. Let me give the House an illustration. I have rapeseed growers in my area. Some of the land is especially good for producing rapeseed and last year a number of rapeseed growers harvested a crop valued at $100 an acre. If a payment had been made under proposed legislation they would have received money in addition to the $100 an acre. I suggest that should not be the situation. On the other hand, farmers who suffer a complete crop failure may be unable to receive any benefit. For example, this year farmers in certain rapeseed growing areas lost their entire crops to worms. If the general picture throughout the area had been reasonably good, these farmers would not have received a single cent on the basis of the minister's proposals.

These are the sort of objections we are making to the plan which has been put forward. They are practical points which should be looked into. Apparently the minister has not paused even to consider them; he is not listening. I am not talking in the abstract; I am talking about farmers who have suffered from the effects of maladministration by this government. I have suggested that the minister look at some of these problems, but I do not think he has done so.

May I make one more point before sitting down. If I were a farmer operating in the red, not making any money, the plan that the minister envisages could cost me another $300, increasing my deficit by that amount. I have no guarantee that I would get five cents under this plan. I would ask the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) whether he has returned to his constituency and explained this plan to his farmers. If he did that I think he would look at the plan in a completely different light.

If some of the points I have made were taken into account and the plan amended, it would have an enthusiastic reception on this side of the House. We would shake the minister's hand and congratulate him on his good sense and political good will in solving the problems that are plaguing the prairie farmers.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it has been said on a number of occasions this evening that the basic concept of the bill is one with which members on this side of the House agree, namely, the stabilization of the incomes of western farmers. It is the details of the plan and the way the plan is implemented by this bill with which we quarrel, and I think we have legitimate reasons for doing so.

In case it has missed the attention of hon. members opposite, one of the purposes of the amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) is to have the stabilization payments for which the bill makes provision related to net farm income rather than gross farm income. For this reason the amendment provides that increased costs of production be deducted from the purchase price received for grain in order to arrive at a figure for grain sale proceeds.

The subamendment submitted by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) clarifies this amendment by providing as a base year for the purpose of calculating increased production the crop year ending July 31, 1970. This was a necessary clarification. As the minister has said, the original amendment was probably less precise than it needed to be in order to accomplish the intended purpose, and that is why the hon. member for Skeena submitted his subamendment.

Having said that, in his remarks this afternoon the minister suggested that the subamendment as presented would result, because of the way the concept of grain sale proceeds is employed in clauses 4 and 5 of the bill, in the possible reduction of payments to some individual farmers. That may be the case. He concluded, and rightly, that such was not the purpose of the subamendment. He then said for that reason the subamendment confused matters and was therefore not worthy of support.

I submit that this kind of reasoning, coming from the minister in a debate like this where it is perfectly clear that what we on this side of the House are arguing is for a plan based on net income, is simply a cop-out. The minister knows that the purpose of this amendment is to change the bill and to base the plan on net income rather than gross income. The minister knows that if that concept were accepted by the House there would be no problem in making the necessary, consequential amendments to the bill to ensure that it accomplishes the purpose for which it was designed. So what we are debating here is the principle of net farm income as opposed to gross farm income as the basis for the plan. This the minister knows, and to say anything else is a cop-out.

The concept of a plan based on net income is one of the changes for which the three prairie ministers of agriculture came to Ottawa to argue. It is the concept that the three pools, the National Farmers Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture wish to see incorporated in the bill. Because it is not, they continue to oppose the bill. These organizations and the three prairie governments have not wilted when confronted with the government's ultimatum that they either let the bill go through the House as it is or they get nothing. They have not knuckled under to such blackmail. They have not replied to the government's assertion—

Mr. Osler: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) on a point of order.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Speaker, I should like the hon. member to document his statement. I do not think anyone has ever heard the government say they would either have to take this bill or get nothing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair feels that the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is argument and a point for debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Rowland: This government has repeatedly said to the farmers of the west; "Either you accept Bill C-244 or you will get no stabilization plan".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McBride: Who's confused now?

Mr. Rowland: The farm organizations in the west are not going to take this kind of approach and neither are the prairie governments. They are not going to give up the fight for justice for the west because of an attempt at blackmail, and a cheap attempt at that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rowland: Hon. members opposite have complained about the time it has taken to get this bill through and they charge us with filibustering, mounting a blockade, and so on. Despite the agonizing by hon. members opposite, no attempt has been made to change the bill and no logical, reasoned arguments have been advanced on their part for not doing so. If this bill had been drafted by people genuinely knowledgeable about the problems of the west and genuinely concerned for the west, it would be through the House right now because the plan would have been based on net farm income rather than gross farm income.

[Mr. Rowland.]

This bill is supposed to meet the needs of the prairie farmer. The three prairie ministers of agriculture came to Ottawa—

Mr. Osler: Listen to our farmer talking.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, it has been said that I am not a farmer, and I am confronted by the same problem as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler). However, the difference between the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and me is this: I know that I have a lot to learn about the problems of agriculture. This is why I listen to the people who know something about agriculture, such as the NFU, the CFA and the Wheat Pools.

Before I was interrupted I was saying that the agriculture ministers representing the governments of the three prairie provinces to which the provisions of the bill are supposed to apply, came to Ottawa expressly to tell the minister that unless the plan were based on net income rather than gross income it would not stabilize farm incomes, which is the intent of the bill. They came to argue, rather, that the bill would act only as insurance of doubtful adequacy in the event of a catastrophic crop failure or some other economic event of equally disastrous proportions.

Nevertheless, the minister would not even listen to them. He misled the ministers from the three prairie provinces into believing that they had reached an agreement with a gentleman, and did so in order to get them out of Ottawa. Then as soon as their backs were turned he tore the agreement up. And this government wonders why there is discontent in the west! It wonders why the government is about as popular in the west as the plague. It wonders why Ottawa is as foreign to westerners as Bangkok.

The treatment this government has accorded the western agricultural ministers supplies the answer to each of these questions. Can anyone here imagine this government treating the ministers of agriculture of Ontario and Quebec as it treated the ministers of agriculture of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta? Can anyone here imagine this government welching on an agreement with the ministers of agriculture of Ontario and Quebec? You're damned right they cannot. This government, composed almost exclusively of easterners, would be falling over itself in its attempts to do exactly what Ontario and Quebec wanted.

Look at the chicken-and-egg war. When Quebec was in obvious violation of the laws of this country, the government would not act. It was left to Manitoba to seek the court ruling which eventually resulted. As long as this government has Ontario and Quebec firmly in its pocket the rest of the country can rot as far as the government is concerned. That is why there is discontent in the west. We are sick of being ignored and insulted. We are sick of government of, by and for Ontario and Quebec.

Why did the three prairie ministers come to Ottawa to ask for a plan based on net income? Why are we on this side of the House determined to have a plan based on that concept? I suggest it is simply and solely because a stabilization plan based on gross income will only serve the function of stabilizing farm incomes for small farmers at current levels of near poverty.

It is obvious that if rising costs of production are not taken into account in calculating grain sale proceeds, proceeds could go up and still result in losses for the farmer in terms of net farm income—and net farm income is what the farmer lives on. Many of the current difficulties in western Canada are the result of costs of production increasing at a much faster rate than proceeds from sales. Indeed, while costs of production have consistently risen, prices received for farm products have in many cases dropped. Thus, it is entirely conceivable under this plan for gross income to increase or to drop only marginally, therefore no payments under the plan would be made, while at the same time actual net farm income might drop.

There is absolutely no justice for calling a plan which would promote such a situation an income stabilization plan. It might be called a fire insurance plan, but let no one believe that it will contribute to the stabilization of prairie farming communities. The unwillingness of the government to even give cursory consideration to the concept of net farm income as the basis of this plan is just one more example of the government's determination to drive the small prairie farmer off his land in the name of efficiency, without regard for the tragic social consequences of such action.

What does a man of 55 or 60 years of age, who has been a farmer all his life, trained as a farmer and with no other training in industry or commerce, do when he is forced off his land? He moves to the city and looks for a job. In the cities in this country there are people who, despite the fact they have spent their lives in industry, are looking for jobs. They have been forced out of work and laid off. What does the farmer do under these circumstances? Can the government really tell us that it is more desirable to have farmers wandering around cities looking for work than to have them on the land productively employed in producing the agricultural products necessary to sustain life? That is what this plan will do.

The time has come to demonstrate that the west will no longer stand for legislation which has as its effect the destruction of its culture and its way of life. We are drawing the line on this side of the House at Bill C-244. We are insisting that this bill be changed so it is based on net income, will provide real income support for the small farmers and some sustenance for the western way of life. That is what this debate is really all about. That is why we on this side of the House are not giving up. That is why we will continue to fight this bill until we get some change.

The government has not heard the last of the three prairie ministers. They will be back here to raise the same points. The minister has probably seen and heard enough about net farm income. He is probably sick of the phrase. But if he is sick of it now, he should wait and see how sick he will be in a short time if he refuses to listen.

An hon. Member: Bring it to a vote.

Mr. Rowland: My friends on the other side suggest we should bring this to a vote.

An hon. Member: Some of them are westerners.

Mr. Rowland: This bill will come to a vote when the minister has made the changes necessary to see that it serves the needs of the western farmers. There is not one western member representing an agricultural constituency who has spoken in favour of this bill. There is a reason for that.

An hon. Member: The minister has spoken.

Mr. Rowland: Someone suggests that the minister has spoken, and he represents a western agricultural constituency. I doubt very much whether the minister's words in cabinet were the same as we heard in this House. If they were, he is not the member we thought he was because he should be fighting for western Canada. I suggest he has been shot down. He could not persuade his cabinet colleagues and now comes to us with this half-baked plan.

With the legions and legions of members on that side of the House from Ontario and Quebec, it is understandable that they may not know what this legislation will do to western Canada; but it is understood on this side of the House. We represent western Canada and we cannot allow it to pass without change.

I think there might be general agreement to call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker, since my voice is giving out.

An hon. Member: You have two minutes left.

Mr. Rowland: If there is no agreement, I will continue to croak on until the clock has run its course.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, has anyone on the government side checked with the powers-that-be and been authorized to state that we will be continuing with this bill tomorrow?

Mr. Lang: I think it can be expected that we will continue with the item that we have been debating tonight.

Mr. Dinsdale: His master's voice.

An hon. Member: He might change his mind tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you sure it will not be changed?

Mr. Horner: You had better check with the authorities.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—EXTENSION OF REGIONAL PAY DIFFERENTIALS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, before I join the rush to enjoy whatever delights there are in the west block I should like to avail myself of a few minutes to refer to a subject I raised the other day with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). I should like to state first my philosophy as an optimist, in that I live for the day. I have lived for the day with the belief that the people of Kent County in New Brunswick, where I grew up as a boy, would one day vote Conservative, with the hope that Henry Aaron would hit his 715th home run, and with the hope that the Canadian government would take seriously its objective of overcoming regional disparities and its fight against discrimination.

Today the first objective was achieved when the people of Kent County in New Brunswick voted Conservative. I suspect that Mr. Henry Aaron will hit his record breaking home run in September two years from now, or in April or May of the year following. But until there is a change of government, or a very strong change in heart on the part of this government, we will not reach the objective of seriously overcoming regional disparities in respect of pay. Let me say to the Parliamentary Secretary—no, he has left. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson) is the one who blesses us now with his presence, if I may use that phrase. I shall get around to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) in respect of one of his statements in a moment. The other day I asked the President of the Treasury Board the following question:

• (10:00 p.m.)

Will the policy of pay differentials in the regions of Canada, which has been presented as the federal position in the case of nurses, be extended as a matter of policy to other categories—

This appears at page 8353 of Hansard. It can be said about the President of the Treasury Board that he may not be wise, but at least he is sincere. The hon. gentleman's answer was the following:

The policy of pay differentials for people not required to have a high degree of mobility has been progressively introduced or proceeded with over the past four years. It is the intention of the government to continue in this direction as it produces a much better relatively and a much greater sense of fairness than attempts to equate unequal parts.

I said immediately, "Ten o'clock" and I meant ten o'clock. There are nurses—I shall deal with them first—employed by the Department of Veteran Affairs, by the Department of National Defence, where it operates hospitals, by the Department of National Health and Welfare and even by the penitentiary service where one nurse is employed. The nurse in the penitentiary service is not serving "time" but is there to assist in that service.

According to H. M. Larsen, research associate for the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, there were 2,027 nurses employed by the federal government in hospitals across Canada last year. Mr. Larsen says that 470 out of 590 nurses who left the federal government payrolls in 1970 were dissatisfied with their salaries and gave this as the reason. The turnover rate is always about 25 per cent. Their complaints boil down to this: salaries are too low, orderlies whom nurses train and supervise sometimes get more money, and nurses work for the same department at different wage levels across the country.

This is the name of whatever the President of the Treasury Board called it when I read his answer a few moments ago. The fact is that the nurses' agreement expired on December 31, 1970. They have been in a process, first of negotiation and now are before a special board consisting of Mr. Justice Andre Montpetit as chairman and Jean Massicotte and Professor S. M. Jamieson as members of a tribunal of the Public Service of Canada.

What about the view of the Treasury Board in its submission to the tribunal? This is a watershed decision. It is one of the most important decisions we will ever have in the history of Canada in so far as the legislation which is now before us, and which governs the relations of government or Parliament with the Public Service of Canada, is concerned. This is big stuff indeed. This is what the Treasury Board, the great fighter against regional disparity, said:

As a nationwide employer, it is essential that our policy on pay and benefits take into account the rates of pay and patterns of benefits applying to workers in related employment in the private sector.

I say that that is a departure from a policy that was instituted back in the days of Robert Borden when the Civil Service Commission of Canada started its work. That shows how far reaching the decision of the government is, and what little regard is paid to the amenities of the law they have operated under.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or to the cause of national unity.

Mr. McCleave: In the name of something. It is not in the name of national unity; it is in the name of computerized efficiency. I quote one paragraph from the nurses' brief, and this is where our concentration is going to be:

The concept that one level in the group should have regional rates is peculiar to this group.

I do not think that is so, but that is what the nurses thought.

Of the 28 groups in the scientific and professional category only one other group (education) has regional rates, but in the education group the rates apply at all levels. Regional rates are used because—

Here they quote the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney), as recorded in Hansard at page 7263 on June 22, 1971:

"—it has been the board's position that zone pay systems ensure that fair and competitive local rates of pay apply to its employees. It has been demonstrated that there is relatively little mobility among those nurses on zone pay rates and the board therefore feels that zone pay rates are entirely appropriate."

Of course there is little mobility among the nurses in receipt of regional rates of pay. Who in their right senses would offer to perform the same services for the same employer for more than $1,000 reduction in salary because they crossed a provincial border?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we have had examples of dealings with the dockworkers in Halifax and Esquimalt where the Treasury Board took the top of a board report for wages at Esquimalt and the bottom of the report for wages in Halifax. This computerized nonsense has to stop somewhere. I hope that I am starting to put a stop to it right now.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the matter of regional pay differentials as applied to nurses is not something new but has been in existence for a variety of occupational groups for a number of years. Examples of other groups where regional pay differentials exist are the education group, education support group, ships' officers, general labour and trades, general services, hospital services, printing operations, ship repair and ships' crews groups.

It is the intention of the government to extend the policy of regional pay differentials to other occupational groups where it is feasible and appropriate to do so, that is, to those groups where the outside pay data indicate significant regional variations from the Canadian average, where the area of recruitment and mobility of employees is limited and where the population of a group is distributed in two or more regions.

These circumstances are typically found in groups in the operational category and administrative support category, but exist in groups in other categories as well. Where these circumstances exist, it is considered more equitable and operationally more effective to establish rates of pay on a regional basis.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REPRESENTATIONS TO PREMIER KOSYGIN ON RIGHT OF SOVIET JEWS TO EMIGRATE AND RIGHTS OF OTHER ETHNIC GROUPS

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) certain questions regarding his agenda with Premier Kosygin on the occasion of his official visit to Canada. I asked the Prime Minister whether he would discuss with Premier Kosygin the problem of visits by Soviet citizens to relatives in Canada and the reunification of families split by the Iron Curtain. In reply the Prime Minister asked me what I would like him to say to Premier Kosygin. In order to rely to the Prime Minister I put this matter on for the adjournment debate this evening.

I would like the Prime Minister to ask Premier Kosygin two things: first, as a general rule, that he allow Soviet citizens to visit members of their families living in Canada; second, as a general rule, that he allow Soviet citizens to emigrate from the Soviet Union especially where this will assist in uniting families. In both these matters I think we should appeal to the humanitarian instincts of the Soviet Premier. We should also remind him that the Soviet Union agreed to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which states in article 13 (2) that everyone has a right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his own country.

From recent news reports it would appear that Premier Kosygin might agree to such a request. Yesterday there was a report that the Soviet government made a significant gesture to world Jewry by stating that it is willing to release its grip on Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate to Israel. That is one good sign, Mr. Speaker. Another good sign was reported in the newspapers to the effect that the well known Russian atomic scientist, Andrei Sakharov, states that he appealed to the Soviet government to allow Soviet citizens to emigrate if they wished, saying, "A free country cannot resemble a cage even if it is gilded and supplied with good food."

I would ask the Prime Minister, therefore, to put these matters on the agenda for discussion with Premier Kosygin when he visits this country and to put to him this important point that I have raised.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to reply to my colleague the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and to commend him for his concern on this rather important matter, one which I think concerns members on all sides of the House and from all parties.

The government intends to pursue the inquiries made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Premier Kosygin last May concerning emigration of Soviet Jewry to Israel or other countries of their choice, and to raise again the question of the reunification of Soviet citizens of all ethnic origins with their relatives in Canada. The government has always supported the principle of freedom of movement of persons between countries but recognizes that the movement of a national citizen is one of national sovereignty.

This does not detract from the concern which we all share. I had the privilege of visiting the Soviet Union with the Prime Minister when he had talks in the Kremlin and these matters were discussed, and I thought they were very well received by Premier Kosygin. At that time many people in Canada who were deeply concerned about relatives and people of like culture or religion in the Soviet Union had made representations to many of us who were going there. We appealed on behalf of Soviet citizens who had applied to come to Canada and whom Canada had agreed to accept, and received a positive response from the Soviet premier.

In subsequent discussions as we travelled through the country with Soviet officials the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon), the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) and myself had an opportunity to pursue these objectives on a personal basis. Certainly they are subjects which were discussed in May and will be discussed again on the occasion of Premier Kosygin's visit to Canada, when we hope he will receive a warm reception and realize the desire of many of our citizens to see their families and their culture flourish in their homeland that they may be able to express themselves culturally and religiously.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.16 p.m.

TRADE

TABLING OF RESTRAINT AGREEMENT FOR 1971 BETWEEN CANADA AND JAPAN

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table a press release announcing the signature of the agreement on voluntary restrictions between Canada and Japan for 1971, as the well as appendix and copies of the correspondence exchanged between the Japanese ambassador and myself.

GRAIN

ALLEGED MISLEADING ADVERTISEMENT CONCERNING STABILIZATION BILL AND WHEAT RESERVES ACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask for unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

This matter concerns a full-page presentation which appeared in the Saturday, October 2, issue of the Regina Leader-Post. This sheet is headed by the familiar exhortation, "It's your choice", which is followed by the equally familiar nostrum that is composed in equal parts of a suppression of the truth and a suggestion of the false. The subject matter is the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the prairie grain stabilization bill—a subject matter that is now before this House as well as before the courts. The blurb purports to be authorized by the "Keep the Stabilization Plan Committee". The seriously disturbing fact in this fiction is the assertion that the stabilization plan is endorsed by a farm organization which has since denied such endorsation. That assertion, in a matter before the House and the courts, is serious.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs inquire into the advertisement which appeared in the Leader-Post of the 2nd October, 1971, concerning the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the prairie grain stabilization bill with respect to the misleading allegations therein contained and report back to this House.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—PROSPECTS FOR EARLIER FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—FEDERAL PROPOSALS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister could indicate the prospects for an earlier meeting between the government of Canada and the provinces with respect to winter unemployment? For example, I understand the government of Ontario has indicated its willingness to meet earlier. Could the Prime Minister indicate the prospects for an earlier meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a fairly general willingness on the part of the provinces and the federal government to have an early meeting. The difficulty is in finding dates on which all governments can agree to meet in Ottawa. As did Premier Schreyer, Premier Davis has changed his mind on this. His first answer was that he could not see a meeting until late in November. On that basis some alternative dates were looked at. I believe he wrote me a few days ago saying that he hoped for a meeting on October 28 or soon thereafter.

Mr. Broadbent: He will be in the opposition then.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: That is not the view the hon. member's leader had a few days ago. After he wrote to me I telegraphed to all the provinces, asking them if they could agree on some further dates. I indicated that as far as I was concerned there were only two days in November on which I would be unable to meet but that any other time would be agreeable to me. I have not had final answers to that; I think half the provinces have given some answer. The only general agreement coming out of those answers is that they all think a one-day meeting would be too short. Indeed, I agree with that myself. They all seem to say that whatever meeting it was it would be good if we had some preparatory meetings such as finance ministers. Therefore we are not much further advanced. It is made all the more difficult because I have not yet received an answer from Premier Bennett of British Columbia. The federal government is doing its best to find an earlier date, but when the provinces keep switching their minds and saying that dates on which they said they would be busy now happen to be free it does not make it any easier for the secretariat.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: What order do you want to refer to?

Mr. Stanfield: I suspect there may be a growing feeling of urgency among the provinces with regard to the meeting. I ask the Prime Minister what he hopes to accomplish from such a meeting with regard to employment this winter? I ask this particularly in view of the Prime Minister's statement that he does not think one day would be long enough. Has the right hon. member some specific proposals or objectives in mind and can he indicate these very briefly?

Mr. Trudeau: This question was asked before, Mr. Speaker, and my answer is still the same. If we have specific proposals to make from the point of view of the federal government, we will make them as soon as possible, independent of any federal-provincial conference. The conference itself would be following up the desire expressed by all governments in Victoria last June to meet on the economic situation, on taxation problems and problems of the economy generally. At such a conference I take it we would be looking at schemes that would be put forth by the provinces or the federal government which have to do with co-operation of both levels of government.

Mr. Stanfield: When may the House expect to know the proposals that the federal government has to make with regard to the stimulation of employment this winter, both its proposals relating to the provinces and proposals that might be exclusively funded by the federal government and completely within federal jurisdiction? When does the Prime Minister propose to disclose to the House the government's program?

Mr. Trudeau: In the case of federal programs, Mr. Speaker, as soon as possible. In the case of federal-provincial ones, it might be somewhat later.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PILOT PROJECT TO ASSIST MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Following the recent meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities in Montreal, and since all municipalities are in a precarious situation, does the government intend to put into force, as in the past, a pilot project which would leave provinces free to participate? In other words, I would like to find out whether the federal government intends to introduce a pilot project; to which provinces could contribute.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Is the hon. member referring to a pilot project in any particular area? I apologize, Mr. Speaker, I did not understand—

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Caouette: To help Canadian municipalities.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if we established such a pilot project, we would announce it in the House of Commons as usual. If the hon. member is referring to the program in effect December last, when we made some funds available to the provinces to enable them to borrow for themselves or the municipalities, I can say that we are reconsidering that kind of program and that if it is satisfactory, we will restore it and make an announcement in that connection.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUBSTANTIAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAM TO COPE WITH PROBLEM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the announcements by Premier Davis and Premier Schreyer that they are ready to attend an earlier meeting, and in view of the proposal by Mr. Nixon, the Liberal leader, last night that a substantial winter works program be inaugurated in an effort to meet the unemployment problem, may I ask whether the government is considering undertaking on its own account or jointly with the provinces a very large program of works in the near future to try to deal with unemployment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In view of the fact that I proposed to Premier Schreyer and Premier Davis last July that we should hold meetings in October and that such meetings were not possible, I will consider the hon. gentleman's question and see whether I can provide an answer another day.

Mr. Orlikow: Will the federal government be going to the meeting with the provinces to discuss unemployment with specific proposals for joint federal-provincial-municipal programs to help meet the unemployment problem?

Mr. Trudeau: Possibly, Mr. Speaker.

DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES OF TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS AT FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask a supplementary question in light of the Prime Minister's answer. He talked about preparatory meetings. As there is an anxiety complex at the present time with reference to tax measures, will he place on the agenda the question of the sharing of tax revenues between the provinces and the federal government? I am thinking particularly about the abolition of the estate tax and whether in fact the provinces will share in the capital gains tax inasmuch as there is an anxiety complex about the shortage of revenue because of the size of social welfare rolls across the country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is a complex question. As to the first part of it concerning tax-sharing arrangements, the answer is yes. We are planning to discuss this matter, either at the meeting of first ministers or at the meeting of finance ministers should that take place beforehand.

As to the capital gains tax, estate tax and so on, there has been a request by the provinces that we do certain things. I have replied to them that we still plan to go ahead with the abolition of the estate tax by January 1 but that we would be ready to discuss any administrative arrangements which might help them over a transitional period.

UNEMPLOYMENT—COMMUNICATION TO PROVINCES OF PROGRAM TO STIMULATE EMPLOYMENT PRIOR TO ANNOUNCEMENT IN HOUSE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to communicate any proposed program to stimulate employment this winter to the provincial premiers prior to the calling of a conference and before such a proposal is announced to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would think not, Mr. Speaker. I would think that any announcement would be made to the House in the first place.

UNEMPLOYMENT—PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT PROJECTS FOR THIS WINTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary or at least a related question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statement made by the minister out west over the week-end, can he tell the House whether specific proposals for works to be undertaken by his department have reached the stage where they will be put into effect this winter?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): I do not know how I was quoted. I can tell the House how I was confronted. I was confronted by a man who told me we were going to set aside $400 million for public works and for the relief of unemployment during the winter. He said he had been assured of that by a member of the provincial Department of Labour in Victoria. I said I did not know whether it would be less or more than that, but I thought there would be some allocation of money for the relief of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize a last supplementary on this subject.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the minister say whether any of that money, and, if so, how much, will be spent by his department?

Mr. Laing: I would hope as much as possible. We had the responsibility of supervising some work last year and I am going to pay this compliment to my department: it was effectively done.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I now have the text of the address which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made in Houston, Texas, last week. The text says, in part:

• (2:20 p.m.)

—I shall just mention a few reasons why you should look very carefully to Canada as a country for investment. We offer ready access to raw materials and sources of energy, a generally stable economic and political climate, and one of the most hospitable climates in the world for foreign investment.

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether this statement represents government policy and is the basis upon which the government's program in relation to foreign investment is being predicated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these general principles do not seem to me very different from the ones which were adopted by the New Democratic Party in rejecting the Waffle proposals in Winnipeg.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Prime Minister whether the statement by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce means that the report so laboriously prepared by the Minister of National Revenue has now been discarded and that the government intends to roll out the welcome carpet for United States capital which now controls a very large part of the Canadian economy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question cannot be answered by a yes or no, because the first part calls for a no and on the second part my comment is that it is irrelevant.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister advise the House when the government expects to make known its policy on foreign investment in Canada, based on the studies which have been conducted under the direction of the Minister of National Revenue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the documents have been before cabinet for some time and we will make our views known as soon as possible.

Mr. Hees: Just as I thought, Mr. Speaker; they are getting nowhere. My supplementary question is: Has the government decided to drop the so-called Gray report and, if so, is this because of the new economic policies introduced recently by President Nixon?

Mr. Trudeau: No to the first question, Mr. Speaker, and the second one, therefore, does not make any sense.

NATURAL RESOURCES

SABLE ISLAND OIL DISCOVERY—RIGHTS OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS RESPECTING ROYALTIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman now inform the House whether or not the government and governments generally accept the position taken by the government of Nova Scotia that all of the potential royalties from the oil that it has been announced has been discovered on Sable Island in fact belong to the province of Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I missed the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Forrestall: Then may I repeat it. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether or not his government accepts the position taken by the province of Nova Scotia that the royalties from the oil and gas discovery on Sable Island do in fact belong to the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Forrestall: Can I conclude from the Prime Minister's reply that the premier of the province of Nova Scotia is talking through his hat when he says that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that under section 91(9), I believe it is, of the British North America Act, lighthouses and a few other things, including Sable Island, are the property of the Dominion of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the House who is assuming the responsibilities of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources during the minister's sickness?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is the acting minister and he is present today.

STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—FEDERAL POSITION RESPECTING SABLE ISLAND

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources inform the House whether negotiations are going forward between the governments of Nova Scotia and Canada in respect of offshore mineral rights, and will he indicate exactly what the attitude of the federal government is with regard to the status of Sable Island?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understand that these discussions started in December, 1968, and they have been going on since.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: I have a supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Just like everything else.

Mr. Coates: In view of the fact that the Premier of Nova Scotia has stated Sable Island is part of Nova Scotia, I am wondering what the exact attitude of the federal government is in respect of this question?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I referred to December, 1968, because at that time an offer was made to the provinces generally and discussions have been going on since. I think the position of the federal government in respect of Sable Island is the same as that indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who a moment ago quoted the British North America Act on the subject.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the position of the federal government with regard to offshore minerals is precisely as announced back in 1968 by the Prime Minister, or has that position been modified in any respect as a result of discussions? Could the minister indicate very briefly what the federal government's present position is and, if he cannot do that briefly, will he make a statement at a very early date indicating precisely what the federal government's present position is with regard to offshore mineral rights?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is fairly obvious that the hon. member regrets he did not stay in his last job longer. He would know all about these things if he had remained as the head of the government of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: It is pretty obvious you do not want to answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: Discussions are going on, Mr. Speaker, and we hope that a conclusion will be reached.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I take it from what the minister has said that he refuses to make a statement as to the current position of the federal Government in respect of offshore mineral rights.

An hon. Member: How about heavy water?

Mr. Stanfield: How about it? Come on now, answer.

Mr. Coates: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege. I might suggest that before we have further supplementary questions on this point the Chair should recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue as we have not yet completed the first round of questioning. For the moment we will hear the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, members of this House and the people of the country, especially those in the province of Nova Scotia, are being told a story by the Premier of Nova Scotia in respect of offshore mineral rights, but when we come into this House and ask questions about the position of the federal government we are told nothing at all. We are given the runaround. The people of Nova Scotia deserve to know exactly what the federal government's position is, and we have every right to expect the acting minister to provide us with an answer now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he may have a point of order or a point of debate, but that is not a question of privilege. I will return to the matter in a moment after having recognized the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member. He will have to wait for a moment as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is rising on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Here we go again.

Mr. MacInnis: Settle down.

An hon. Member: You are shouting again.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, made without the benefit of prepared notes, and the support given those remarks by the minister now in charge of mines.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis: The Prime Minister indicated that the situation referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre regarding Sable Island comes within the portfolio of the acting minister. For two weeks now this House has been bandying about the question of whether the government is breaking the law or, putting it in the words of the Prime Minister, reneging or defaulting. The minister now responsible for offshore mineral rights has indicated that the government is willing to overlook two other acts which support the contention that Sable Island belongs to the province of Nova Scotia. One act is—

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has sought the floor during the question period to raise a point of order and he should indicate as quickly as possible what the point of order is so that the Chair may make a ruling.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, it is very simple. The minister is now prepared to tell the House that the government is prepared to deny two pieces of legislation, one being Bill C-135 which indicates that the government gave acquisition powers to Devco to purchase land and properties beneath the sea adjacent to the island of Cape Breton.

Mr. Jamieson: He may not be offshore but he is adrift.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. This is obviously debate and not a point of order. The hon. member is debating with the minister concerned or other members the situation relating to the question raised originally. I would not think the matter can be debated as a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: On the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have to raise another point of order because I have to make the ruling that this is not a legitimate point of order. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me on that point.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I would refer to the Canada Elections Act and the indication by the minister that he is prepared to violate that act which places Sable Island within the voting area of Nova Scotia and in the constituency of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest to the hon. member that this is debate.

The Chair now recognizes the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and thanks him for his patience.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is also Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the publicity we hear day in and day out to the effect that "the hops make all the difference", and especially that seedless hops are superior, is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is in charge of trade, taking steps to ensure the sale abroad of the total Canadian production of hops with seeds?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Charlevoix.

ALLEGED REPRISALS AGAINST UNITED STATES— SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, we are informed that the government is retaliating against the U.S. following the 10 per cent surcharge on imports imposed by President Nixon. If such is the case, does the government intend to use such measures? In the affirmative, I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister if it would not be better, in order to avoid economic war, that he met soon with President Nixon in order to discuss this 10 per cent surcharge as the Canadian ministers and high officials did not succeed in convincing the U.S. administration to drop the surcharge?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Once again I thank the hon. member of the opposition for the confidence he shows in me, and I shall take his suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Asselin: I would like to ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Does the government intend to retaliate against the United States, following the refusal by the American administration to abolish the 10 per cent surtax?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer the question before considering the previous one.

INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS LAY-OFFS—REQUIREMENT BY GOVERNMENT OF ADEQUATE NOTICE AND ECONOMIC JUSTIFICATION—CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF CARS PURCHASED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Following the failure of General Motors Corporation to give adequate and accurate notice to the government concerning its recent lay-offs, has the government made it clear that in the future such action is not to be repeated and, further, that it will expect economic justification for such future lay-offs by foreign corporations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that I was clear enough on that subject at the time the events referred to by my hon. friend took place. I want to emphasize the fact that relations between my department and the automobile industry in Canada have been good in the past and that we have been kept fully informed of what was going on. So it was, as I said at the time, "un accident de parcours."

Mr. Broadbent: Not having received an answer to that one, Mr. Speaker, I will try a second one. In its discussions with the Americans on the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement is the government of Canada insisting that the auto producers in Canada increase their share of production of North American cars at least up to the level of production of cars that we actually consume in this country?

Mr. Pepin: It is terribly difficult to answer these questions because it is a fact that in Canada we produce more cars than we actually can consume by quite a large margin. So obviously this cannot be the objective. The objective is based on Canadian value added and we have emphasized all the time that we were looking, as the agreement says, for rationalization and fair distribution of advantages for both sides, Canada and the United States. Obviously we have done fairly well because some people on the other side of the border have implied that we have done too well.

ENVIRONMENTAL POLLUTION

RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY AND ECONOMIC GROWTH—CONSULTATION WITH SCIENTIFIC BODIES ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Is the view that economic growth should be placed ahead of environmental quality as expressed in the preliminary Canadian position paper submitted to the United Nations Environmental Conference now the official position of the government on this vital matter?

[Mr. Asselin.]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, no such statement was made in a government document. The headline in question was a misinterpretation of the contents of the article itself.

Mr. Dinsdale: In light of the concern among the public who are deeply involved in environmental problems, can the government assure the House that the Science Council of Canada, the Canadian Association of Human Environment and the parliamentary committee on the environment will be consulted before the government takes an official position on this matter?

Mr. Davis: I think we can assure those bodies that we will listen to them. I might add that any policy that is sound from a long-term economic point of view is also consistent with good environmental practice.

AIR TRANSPORT

OTTAWA, TORONTO AND MONTREAL—SUGGESTED AIR BUS SERVICE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the extremely heavy air traffic between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, could the minister assure the House that studies have been made or will be made with a view to operating an air bus service between these points similar to that satisfactory service which has operated between Calgary and Edmonton.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have repeatedly, and as recently as yesterday, made representations to Air Canada with a view to having an increase in the frequency of their service between Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa, with Ottawa as the central point, on the ground that I believe the nation's capital deserves very good service. I hope they will listen to these representations.

EDMONTON—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH RUSSIA ON ESTABLISHMENT OF SST. TERMINAL

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. In view of the forthcoming visit to Ottawa by Soviet Premier Kosygin does the Prime Minister plan to discuss with him the possibilities of Edmonton being considered as a possible SST. air terminal.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the agenda is not yet finalized between the Soviet government and our own.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—ALLEGED REPORT ON EFFECT OF UNITED STATES SURCHARGE—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a specially commissioned report from some of his economic advisers indicating that if the 10 per cent United States surcharge remains in effect for a year our unemployment level will be up to 7.5 per cent, and that next year about this time there will be 80,000 additional Canadians out of work in spite of the effect of the employment support bill. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to make that study public?

• (2:40 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Would the Prime Minister indicate whether he is saying no to the first part of the question, the second part, or to both parts?

Mr. Trudeau: To the first part, and therefore the second does not apply.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED PRESSURE BY BANKS TO ACCEPT CREDIT CARDS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Can the minister inform the House whether it is normal that credit institutions like banks force consumers to accept two Chargex credit cards? Furthermore, can the minister take steps to prevent such pressures to be exerted upon persons who have not applied for such cards?

Mr. Speaker: The first part of the question would be in order. As to the second part, it seems that the hon. member is making representations or suggestions to the minister.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED SUGGESTION CANADA ALLOW DOLLAR TO FLOAT ABOVE PAR AS PRECONDITION FOR REMOVAL OF UNITED STATES SURCHARGE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the Prime Minister, if I may get his attention. As a condition for the removal of the 10 per cent surcharge is the United States insisting that Canada not prevent the dollar from floating over par and to a high of $1.05 in relation to the U.S. dollar.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If I understood the question, it was whether that was the position of the United States. I am not aware of the position of the U.S.

Mr. Hees: If you spoke to President Nixon, you would find out.

Mr. Trudeau: It is doubtful.

Mr. Ryan: I take it the Prime Minister would like me to repeat the question, and following his answer I may have a supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Repeat it for George.
