The Lost Will; OR LOVE TRIUMPHS AT LAST.

CHAPTER XXXI.

"As well as could be expected, thank you, Forbes," replied Jack. "Are the ladies—Mrs. Feltham at home?"

"No, sir," responded Forbes, with a quickly-repressed air of surprise. "Mrs. Feltham and Miss Norton have left the Hall. I thought you knew, sir. Mrs. Feltham left a letter for you."

He got it from the library, and Jack tore open the envelope as he went up to his room. This was the letter:

"115, Riverview Mansions, Batterssea, S.W.

"My Dear Jack—Nora and I have taken this flat. It is very tiny, but quite comfy. I dare say you know the situation; our windows overlook the river and the park; and it is quite pleasant and amusing to watch the people enjoying themselves in a healthy and wholesome way."

Jack growled impatiently as his eye raged over the lines.

"It was Nora's idea. You see, she couldn't remain at the Hall now it had come into your possession; and so she has consented to share this flat with me—alas! I fear only for a time; for you know how terribly proud and independent she is. She talks of getting some pupils; she plays the piano delightfully, as you know; and she is quite confident that she will be able to earn her own living. But I don't know—it is terribly hard now for young girls to get their livelihood. However, I shall keep her with me as long as I can. I hope you left poor Damerfeld comforted and resigned; he must have been very glad to have you with him; for I know that he is fond of you. Of course, you must go back as soon as you can. When you are in town you must come and see us; you will be quite amused by the smallness of our domicile; it is very fortunate for us that neither Nora nor I am given to the pastime of swinging cats. The little flat is like a rabbit-hutch; but, as I say, it's quite comfy and pretty—With my best love,

"Yours affectionately,
"MADEL."

There was a P.S., and it was for Jack the most important, and at the same time the most disappointing part of the letter:

"P.S.—I tried to speak to Nora about the Chalfont estate and what you wished to do respecting Chertson and the money; but she—well, she flew at me; and I'm afraid I shan't have the courage to mention the matter again. Nora is the dearest and sweetest creature in the whole world; but she behaved like a perfect tigress to me almost as soon as I'd opened my lips."

CHASE & SANBORN MONTREAL

Jack read this postscript no fewer than three times; then he crammed on his cap, caught up a stick, and calling Jim, strode out of the house furiously.

Nora in a poky little flat in London! Going to try to earn a living by giving music lessons! What was Ferndale doing? Surely he had some authority over her, ought to be able to put a stop to this nonsense! Nora poor, and he, Jack, heir to an earldom and a vast estate, and saddled with the house and the fortune of which Nora had been deprived.

For a time Jim bounded about his restored master, yapping loudly and proclaiming his love in every possible canine way; but presently he saw that the master was gloomy and preoccupied, and he subsided into a slow and demure trot. Jack, heedless of his direction, got on to the high road, and was striding along, when he came upon the familiar pony-carriage. Lady Blanche was alone, her brother not riding beside her as usual, and Jack jumped to the conclusion that Ferndale had gone to the "poky little flat overlooking the river and the park."

At sight of him Blanche blushed, and she spoke to her old and shabby retainer, who pulled up the pony. Bare-headed, Jack went up to the carriage, and Lady Blanche held out her hand with a somewhat nervous and timorous smile.

"I am glad to see you back, Mr. Chalfont," she said, when she had replied to Jack's inquiry respecting her health. "I have to congratulate you and condole with you. It was very terrible! We read the account in the newspaper. Edward knew one of your cousins. Oh, it is very, very sad; and I fear Lord Damerfeld must be quite overwhelmed."

"Yes, it's hit my uncle pretty badly," said Jack, "but I'm glad to say he's recovering from the shock and getting stronger." There was a pause; then he said, glumly, "I suppose, when you say that you want to congratulate me, you are referring to the will Miss Norton found?"

"Yes," said Blanche quietly. "You are now the owner of Chertson and all Mr. Chalfont's money, are you not?"

"Yes, I'm afraid I am, worse luck!" said Jack. "And it's worrying me pretty badly. Look here, Lady Blanche, I hope you won't think me intrusive; but, as I said, I'm awfully worried, and I don't know where to turn for help. May I walk beside the carriage?"

"Come inside, if there's room for you," said Blanche, with her gentle smile.

"It's this way," said Jack, in his downright fashion. "You see, the place and the money was left—and very properly—to Miss Norton. There were business relations between Mr. Chalfont and her father—But I needn't go into that; let's take it that the property really ought to have gone to her. Now this ridiculous will has turned up, and taken it from her and given it to me, and I don't want it. Unfortunately—I do hope, Lady Blanche, you will think I am speaking genuinely—unfortunately, I'm booked to come into the Damerfeld title and the estates; and they're pretty big, as I daresay you know. So that, take it by and large, I shall be very well tiled in. What I mean is, that the Chalfont property is of no use to me; I don't want it, and I don't want to take it."

"I can guess what you want," said Lady Blanche.

"You do?" he said, gratefully, and his huge hand enclosed her tiny one and pressed it. "That's the best of women—they can see into a man's mind and understand what he means before he has blundered half through his explanation. Of course you see, I want Miss Norton to keep the Chalfont property. Look here, Lady Blanche, I'm an awfully clumsy kind of idiot, and I'm no good at beating about the bush. I know how it is with your brother, Lord Ferndale; like a great many more of us—how soon one grows accustomed to altered circumstances: Jack, the most modest and unassuming of men, had learned already to think of himself as an aristocrat and a prospective landowner!—"he is hard up; and Nora's—I beg her pardon, Miss Norton's—money is—er—er—necessary. What I mean is—"

"I know what you mean, Mr. Chalfont," said Blanche, smiling up at him gravely. "But you don't seem to know that all sorts of things have happened while you have been away. By the way, where have you been?"

"I've been at work on an embankment on an island off the mainland of Essex," said Jack, in his direct fashion. "But," he went on, looking straight into Blanche's blue eyes as they stared up at him perplexedly. "It doesn't matter what I've been doing; I don't count. What has happened?"

"Well, one of the happenings to us," said Blanche, with a smile at his impetuosity, "is that coal has been found on Edward's property in the North. It seems that there is a great deal of coal, and that Edward will be quite rich. But it is not only the money—it means that he has a new interest in life—"

"Oh, that's all right," said Jack, drawing a long breath. "I'm awfully glad! Oh, yes, that puts matters straight. Look here, Lady Blanche, a good deal of my worry was concerned with Miss Norton. Now that this beastly will—oh, I beg your pardon, and I beg poor Chalfont's too!—well, now that she's done out of Chertson, she has gone off with my cousin Mabel to live in a poky flat and talks about giving music lessons, or some rot of that kind. Music lessons!" He laughed indignantly and derisively. "As if anybody could get a living out of music lessons! But, of course, if Ferndale had found coal—well, there you are, you know! It's all right."

Lady Blanche looked at him with an expression in her patient, placid blue eyes which puzzled Jack.

"You don't seem to know all the happenings, Mr. Chalfont," she said in a low voice. "You don't know that Edward and Nora have broken their engagement—or, rather, that she has."

Jack stared at her and gasped.

"Broken their engagement—I beg your pardon? What? Oh, I see; she broke it off because she found that she was poor again. She did not know of this coal find."

Lady Blanche shook her head and looked straight before her, and her lips quivered slightly.

"No, Mr. Chalfont," she said; "it was not because of her loss of fortune."

"What was it, then?" demanded Jack, leaning forward and gazing at her with fevered anxiety.

"It was because—she did not love Edward."

"Did not love?"

"No, Mr. Chalfont. It comes as a surprise to you; you did not know, did not guess; but I did." She sighed. "I divined it from the first. She never loved him; and she caught at the loss of the money—Oh, don't think I blame her! She behaved as every true woman would behave who discovers the real state of her heart. She caught at this loss of her fortune as a means of escape from an engagement which—"

"Would you mind stopping the carriage?" said Jack, in a repressed frenzy. "I've—I've got to catch a train." He jumped out of the phaeton, caught Lady Blanche's hand, and pressed it. "I'm awfully obliged to you! I mean—what a very hot morning it is, isn't it? Splendid weather for this time of the year. Rattling good pony this of yours! You're looking awfully well, Lady Blanche, and much stronger. I—er—I've got to catch this train—just got time. Good-morning. Give my kind regards to your brother. Yes, awfully hot! Good—good-morning!"

He started off with the last word, and Lady Blanche dropped back and smiled. And sighed; a sigh of sympathy, not only with her brother, for the love he had lost, but with the man who was going for the love he would find.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE train which had the honour of carrying Jack Chalfont to London happened to be a slow one. As a rule that gentleman was never in a particular hurry, and, as the reader is aware, generally took things pretty easily; but, on this journey, his impatience was so great that it drove him to the length of remonstrating with the guard, of whom he requested sarcastically permission to get out and push up behind. However, most things come to an end; the train crawled into Waterloo, and Jack hurried himself into a taxi-cab, and was conveyed, at a speed which somewhat comforted him, to the row of flats overlooking the river and the park.

HP SAUCE

A trim maid-servant, whom he recognized as one from the Hall, opened Mrs. Feltham's door, and sent Jack's heart into his boots by informing him that both ladies were out. Jack said he would come in and wait, and he did so—for five minutes, which, in his present condition, drew themselves out to five hours. He sprang up and, muttering to the demure and no doubt surprised maid that "he would go for a stroll," went down the stairs and paced up and down the pavement in front of the residence of his mistress, as many a lover has done before him, and will do after him.

At last he espied Mrs. Feltham coming along in her leisurely way.

"Oh, here you are!" he exclaimed, complacently. "I've been waiting hours for you."

"I've—been gone just five-and-twenty minutes by the clock; but I'm very sorry I was out, Jack, dear."

"Well, try to look it," he said grumpily. "But you'll have something to be really sorry for when I've had my talk with you."

"If you're going to bully me, we'd better wait till we get upstairs," remarked Mrs. Feltham. "The London police are very attentive, and are sworn to protect all unprotected females. And there's a policeman looking at us now."

Jack followed her up to the flat, and, still pacing up and down, with his hands thrust in his pockets, demanded wrathfully what she "meant by it."

"Of course, you mean why I left the Hall," said Mrs. Feltham meekly, as she took off her hat and jacket and smoothed her hair at the glass.

"Won't you have something to drink, Jack, dearest? Wonderful to say, I've got some whisky—I thought you might drop in."

"I won't have anything to eat or drink," he said, indignantly. "I decline to break bread with you until you've explained this idiotic behaviour of yours; and I don't think it's very nice of you to desert a chap and—leave the cares of a big house on his inexperienced hands in the way you've done, let me tell you, Mabel."

WRONG BOTTLE AGAIN!

Mr. Thomas Wade, of Alma, N.B., accidentally applied some acid to a sore leg, thinking the bottle contained liniment. Writing of the effect, he says: "The acid burned deep into my flesh and set up poisoning, causing me intense pain. I really thought I should lose my leg, but a friend advised me to try Zam-Buk. I did so, and the effect was marvellous! Zam-Buk very quickly ended the pain and drew out the poison. Eventually it completely healed the sore place."

WILSON INFORMS CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11. The terms of the armistice with Germany were read to Congress by President Wilson at one o'clock this afternoon. The strictly military terms of the armistice are embraced in eleven specifications which include the evacuation of all invaded territory, the withdrawal of the German troops from the left bank of the Rhine and the surrender of all supplies of war. The President also provided for the abandonment by Germany of the treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk.

The people apparently were waiting for the bells to ring out the news of the close of the tragedy which has cost France two and a half millions of the flower of her sons.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

LONDON, Nov. 11. (By the A.P.)—The Irish Nationalist Party is sending to President Wilson a manifesto appealing for assistance in settling the Irish question. Note From Board of Trade.

St. John's, Nov. 11, 1918. Dear Sir,—I have been instructed by the Council if the Board of Trade to ask if you would kindly publish the enclosed copy of a letter recently written by the Council to the Reid-Newfoundland Company.

I have the honour to be, Sir, Your obedient servant, for and on behalf of the Newfoundland Board of Trade, ERNEST A. PYAN, Secy.-Treasurer, Editor Evening Telegram.

(COPY.)

Newfoundland Board of Trade, November 1st, 1918. E. W. Taylor, Esq., General Freight Agent, Reid-Newfoundland Co.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the Council held this morning, the matter of the big delay in the loading of the s.s. Fogota this week, resulting in the loss of valuable time and money to Shippers, was discussed.

In many cases cargoes who left with their loads at 9 a.m., returned with their loads at 2 p.m., resulting, not only in the loss of a whole morning's work, but also a cash loss to the Shippers of from Four to Five Dollars per load.

It appears to the Council that this state of affairs is most unreasonable, and they are of the opinion that there must be some way of eliminating the bulk of the trouble. A great deal of this trouble was without doubt due to the premises at which the vessel was loaded, which, in the Council's opinion, is totally unfit for such work.

A lot of delay to a large number of the cargoes might also have been avoided, as early in the forenoon it was quite evident that the freight was far in excess of the steamer's capacity, and the cargoes should then have been advised to bring freight back to shippers.

I am directed to write this letter as a result of complaints made to the Board by the Trade generally, and if at all possible, the Council urge that at another time more suitable premises be obtained, and more checkers be put on, so that quicker despatch may be afforded cargoes.

I have the honor to be, Sir, Your obedient servant, for and on behalf of the N.F.L.D. BOARD OF TRADE, (Sgd.) ERNEST A. PYAN, Secretary.

A new shell which was extensively used by the French in the recent offensive is said to be of British invention. The watchmaker is still to be seen in his shop, apparently oblivious of the fame which must eventually come to him.

Like many other men whose discoveries have startled the world, the inventor is of obscure station—a small watchmaker in a little Buckinghamshire village, unknown to the outside world, completely indifferent to fame, and content so long as he can earn a moderate living for himself and his wife. It is said that he made the discovery purely by accident.

The shell was elaborated and perfected. Then it was offered to our own authorities. The usual correspondence followed. Delay followed delay and obstacle on obstacle and at length the authorities "turned it down." The

The Beverley Enquiry.

J. Black, sworn and examined by Mr. Hunt.—I examined her when she first came here. She had a round bottom. It was particularly strong. She had more fastenings than any rule would call for. I examined the inside as far as possible. She had a main deck and shelter deck. Between the lower deck and the bottom she was of heavier build than on top. Between the lower and shelter decks the timbers were 8 or 9 inches. I think they were of oak. I didn't notice much pitch pine. There were doors for taking in the cargo. When unloaded these would be about 10 feet above water. When loaded the bottoms of the doors would be 3 or 4 feet above water. When she came here first the top houses were taken off her. At Piacentia she was sheathed with pitch pine, had her decks caulked and new broken and I think new tips were put on. I went over her thoroughly and recommended that her houses be strengthened. This was done with iron fastenings. I supervised the repairs. All that I had ordered had been done when she left the dock. I spent a lot of time about her while on dock. After coming off dock she took coal and some salt aboard. I went to Harbor Grace in her. In colliding with Harvey's wharf a sheathing plate was started and I was told the tips were off her propeller blades. I don't know if any material damage was done to the propeller. After my experience of her going to Mr. Grace I would recommend her going across. She made from 3 1/2 to 10 knots with 900 tons of freight in. The loss of the propeller tips would give less weight to driving. I didn't ask anyone to supervise the propeller repairs. Sometimes I engage an engineer for it. She was not classed at Lloyd's. I survey ships from an insurance standpoint. I am a surveyor of shipping for the Nid. Government. I surveyed the Beverley first of all as surveyor for the Nid. Government. I didn't classify her as there was no occasion for it. I might have recommended her for classification had I been asked. The examination for insurance is not so strict as for classification. I had some of her ceiling taken down in parts and some of the flooring. The certificate I gave the Beverley would have covered insurance if there had been any on her. A ticket of seaworthiness is given so that a captain may claim his insurance if anything happens to the ship. I would have to survey the ship whether asked by Mr. Fearn or not. I left Harbor Grace on Monday morning; she left in the afternoon. The last time I examined her was in January at the dock and the certificate I gave her extended over the visits I had made to her. I went all over her with Capt. Wilson at Harvey's on Friday before she went to Mr. Grace. There were no weak features in her as far as I know. I would go across in her if I had occasion. I heard reports that she wasn't fit to go to sea, and also that she was a splendid ship. She was capable of carrying the cargo taken at Mr. Grace. I considered her then a good cargo boat. I don't receive remuneration as a rule from ship-owners. The rules forbid it. I received nothing from Mr. Fearn and what I got from Mr. Munn was a gift. That was $150 or $200. There was a skylight over the Beverley's engine. I don't see how it could be carried away. It would take very high seas to reach it. I didn't see her when she was loaded. My instructions do not call for a test for stability.

To Capt. MacDermott: They have power in New York and London to give a vessel's class. I have power to recommend for a class at Lloyd's. I don't know what class I would have recommended the Beverley for if I had been asked. She had no class before. Expanded may mean that the class was dropped at some time because her owners had not enough money to do repairs, or for some such reason. I am not familiar with theories governing the stability of ships. If a ship were built here for a Newfoundland, I would have to survey her and make plans before she started building. I would know I think if the design would produce a seaworthy ship. The Beverley's underwater settons were different from those at an average cargo boat. She had a rise in the ceiling. It was an old-fashioned design. I saw her first when she arrived here. I didn't notice her trim, or how it compared with when she left for Gibraltar. She had exceptionally wide rubbers. When she had no cargo these were above the water. There is no Pilsbroll law here. A ship can load as deep as she likes at any time of the year. I have nothing to do with the engines or propeller. It was decided to strengthen the houses because the engineer told me it was weakening. It showed signs of weakening.

To Mr. Summers: I send a copy of my report, such as I gave to Mr. Munn, to London and New York. It is an exact copy. I survey ships for the bounty but give them no class unless they are built for it. I get fees when I give certificates. I had terms with Mr. Munn for £10. I sent the fees to London. I accepted his cheques as a present. I had a lot of extra work and expenses in connection with the Beverley. I charged Mr. Fearn £4 for a certificate. I could have charged Mr. Munn £20 or more. There is no scale except for new ships. At 5 p.m. adjournment was taken till 4 p.m. Thursday.

A Paint Brush and Unity.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Did I ever write you of the way in which a friend of mine who had to furnish several rooms on small means, and wanted them to look attractive, accomplished that miracle in this day of high prices? She had lived in a little, rented house with only two bedrooms. She bought a large, old-fashioned house, and to help pay for it planned to rent two extra rooms; but the stumbling block was the fact that she had almost no furniture for them and comparatively little money to spare for the purpose.

She made the furniture match. And this is what she did: She went to several second-hand furniture stores and in them collected most of the necessary furnishings. Next she decided on a color scheme for each of the rooms—One was to be French blue and white, the other gray and old rose. Then, armed with a paint brush, she started out to unify these furnishings.

The Blue and White Room. You cannot imagine, unless you ever saw the like done, how attractive the results were. For the blue room she had bought a very plain chest of drawers and a mirror to hang over it, a little stand, two common chairs and a rocker, a little writing desk, and a white iron bedstead. She painted this furniture (all but the bedstead, of course) blue, and hung white muslin curtains with little blue over-hangings at the window. She had had the room papered in an inexpensive but dainty blue-and-white paper, and she took some old frames from her attic, painted them blue, and put in them with which the magazines of the day constantly supply us. She bought blue and white Japanese scarfs from the ten-cent store for the bureau and stand; she put one of those inexpensive and attractive little spreads of blue and white striped crepe on the old waste basket by painting it blue; and as a finishing touch (I saw the room just before its occupant came in to it) she put a blue Japanese bowl (of ten-cent store vintage) filled with baby sunflowers on the little stand.

The Rose and Gray Room. In the rose and gray room she Painted the furniture she had collected, gray. Instead of a bed she had a couch with a gray couch-cover and several sofa cushions in rose and gray cretonne matching the over-hangings of the curtains. The paper was a soft rose on which she hung a few pictures in gray frames. When she told me how little each room had cost, even with the fresh hangings and wall papers, I could scarcely believe it.

"And you'd scarcely believe it, either, if I told you how much time it took," she said, with a sigh. "My, but I'm sick of painting! I shy at the sight of a paint brush. But, after all, I think it's worth it," she insisted, with a look of pride about her. And I agreed, with all sincerity. I have seen the same thing done in a summer cottage; and it certainly is wonderful what unity and harmony a paint brush and a little good taste and thought can create out of chaos.

Household Notes

Add two tablespoonfuls of tapioca to one quart of clear hot soup stock and cook about fifteen minutes. Carrots stuffed and baked are delicious. Cabbage salad can be made with chopped cabbage and nut meats. Raisins soaked and added to the pumpkin pulp add very much to the pie's richness. If yellow turnips are too strong beat with mashed potatoes. A hot, nourishing soup with crisp croquettes is a most excellent dish for supper on a cold autumn night. Bouillon cubes can be used for the foundation of stock soups. Chowders are made more nutritious by the addition of one or two beaten eggs.

Truth cannot be compromised with. Right cannot be compromised with wrong. For hell is low and heaven is high. Man never hates the thing he hates. Nor learns to love the thing he hates. Hawks will not mate with turtle doves. Virtue and vice are separate states. The roses die where the thistles grow. Summer and winter never meet. When sin comes in the graves go. Gall robs the honey of its sweetness. Weak links with strong destroy the chain. Night takes from men the light of day. To compromise with vice is vain. The tainted apples soon decay. Drugs never stop the cancer's course; it thrives beneath the deadened pain. And soon shall strike with doubled force. To reach some vital spot again. On shifting sands of base deceit, Truth's temple cannot safely rise. Let us not now our heroes cheat; They did not die for compromise. Use peanuts on meatless days if possible. Scalloped tapioca with cheese is an excellent new dish. Even griddle cakes can be made with tapioca.

GOOD FOR US. The rain is falling as I write, the cold November rain; it is a black and cheerless night, and tom-cats on my tin roof fight, and make a noise insane. The rain is pelting, pelting down. I hear it splash and beat; and I'm unwise to wear a frown and read my spangled dressing gown—this rain will help the wheat. All things unpleasant do us good, so all the sages say; instead of using steaks for food we ought to make a stew of wood, or boil some prairie hay. To teeter in a chair and rock is pleasant, I must say; but all the doctors come and knock and say we ought to go and walk a hundred miles a day. If there is something we despise, that is the stuff we need; we hate to sweat the silly flies, but in that task our safety lies, so runs the healthiest screed. We are all liable to ills which make us pale and thin; and while we pay the doctor's bills we know there's nothing to their pills unless they taste like sin. Sometimes I think that life's a fake, a rather sorry jest; my spirit feels a throbbing ache, for everything I ought to take is something I detest. The rain is streaming down the door, like water gone to seed; it grieves my heart, it makes me sore, and since it is a beastly bore, I know it's what we need.

We're All Lop-Sided.

Why Everyone is Odd. Are we really lop-sided? We are, every mother's son—and daughter—of us!

It comes as a bit of a shock to a pretty girl to be told that her eyes are odd, that one eyebrow is higher than the other!

But facts are stubborn things. Her only consolation is that the rule is without exception the same for all. The sight of the two eyes in the same head also varies; but it will be news to many that the ears follow suit. Our auricular organs are unequal in their power of hearing.

Each Limb and Feature. After careful investigation a scientist has recently declared that only 1 per cent of the folk whose ears he tested could hear as well with one ear as they could with the other. He thinks it may be the result of sleeping on a favourite side. There may be something in this, because we spend a third of our life in bed. He does not say, however, whether the ear we protect by lying on it is the better or the worse!

A further fact about ears: The ears on the same head differ considerably in size and contour, and in elevation.

This rule of lop-side applies to every limb as well as to every feature. For instance, one of your legs is shorter than the other. The two sides of the human body differ the one from the other in every particular, and they are governed by the two lobes of the brain. The right lobe rules the left side of the body, and the left the right.

Usually the two halves of the body differ in healthfulness; the power to combat disease, and consequently in strength. The right side is more commonly the best developed.

TO-DAY'S MESSAGES.

9.30 A. M.

SOLDIERS' OVATION TO PREMIER.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
Premier Lloyd George, addressing the cheering crowds yesterday, spoke as follows: "You are entitled to rejoice. The people of this country and of their Allies, and the people of our Overseas Dominions and of India, have won a glorious victory. It was the sons and daughters of the people who have won it. It is the most wonderful victory for Liberty in the history of the world. Let us thank God for it." Premier Lloyd George bowed and disappeared. Chancellor Bismarck, after kissing his hand to the crowd as he pulled down the window, moved away. Hardly had the Premier finished talking when a long file of shouting soldiers, British, Canadian, Australians, Americans and a few from other Allied countries, appeared their way through the throng and managed to reach the front of the Premier's house, where they gave him a great ovation.

DRIVEN OUT.
THE HAGUE, Nov. 11.
Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, Commander of the German Northern Army Group, and his staff, have fled from Liege, where the garrison has revolted, according to the Belgian newspaper Les Nouvelles. The officers at Liege, the newspaper adds, have been deposed and the red flag hoisted.

MORE ABDICATIONS.
COPENHAGEN, Nov. 11.
The Grand Duke of Oldenburg has been deposed, and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin has abdicated, according to despatches from Hamburg. The Hamburg Nachrichten, which reports the abdication of the Grand Duke, says that a Government for Mecklenburg has been formed by a Workers' and Soldiers' Council. In many towns of Northern Germany the military has refused to recognize the Soldiers' and Workers' Council. In these places the local administration has been taken over by a commissary.

THE SPIRIT OF REVOLUTION.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
The Admiralty has intercepted a German wireless, addressed from "the command and Soldiers' Council" on the cruiser 'Straasburg,' to all ships, torpedo boats, destroyers and submarines in the North Sea. The message refers to the terms of the armistice and declares "this would entail the destruction of us all. Germans, comrades, defend our country against this unheard of presumption. Strong English forces are reported off the Skaw. All submarines in the Baltic, except those on outpost duty, assemble immediately in Saesnitz Harbor." Saesnitz is a watering place on the east coast of the island of Rugen, Prussia.

BORN TO BE HANGED.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
The former German Crown Prince is reported to have been shot, according to a telegram despatched to the Central News; details are lacking.

RELEASED AFTER PEACE.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
According to the terms of the armistice, the return of German prisoners of war is to be settled by the Peace Conference.

SPREAD LIKE WILDFIRE.
WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES ON THE MOSELLE AND ROER RIVERS, Nov. 11. News that the armistice had been signed spread like wildfire along the American front, from the Moselle River to the region of Sedan. Reaching the various headquarters early in the day, the news passed by wire and wireless to division and regiment and finally from mouth to mouth to the boys in the forward lines. It was among the boys in the foremost lines who had been under shell fire for days that there was the most genuine rejoicing.

BATTLESHIP TORPEDOED.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
The British battleship Britannia was torpedoed near the west entrance to the Straits of Gibraltar on November 9, and sank three and a half hours later, according to an Admiralty announcement to-night. Thirty-nine officers and 573 men were saved.

FRANCE'S DEEM.
PARIS, Nov. 11.
The Municipal Council of Paris has the following posted on walks in all parks of the city: "Citizens, victory is here, triumphant victory. The vanquished enemy lays down his arms. Blood ceases to flow. Let Paris emerge from her ordered reserve. Let us give free course to our joy and enthusiasm and hold back our tears. Let us testify to our infinite gratitude to our grand soldiers and their incomparable chiefs by testifying our hopes in the colors of France and of our Allies. Our dead can sleep in peace. The sublime sacrifice they have made for the future of their race, and the salvation of their country, will not be in vain. The day of glory has come. Long live the Republic, long live immortal France."

RAISING TECHNICALITIES.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
In Germany, Dr. Holt said, according to German wireless despatch received here to-day that he feels it his duty to draw President Wilson's attention to the fact that the enforcement of the conditions of the armistice, especially the surrender of transport means the starvation of millions, and requests that the President's influence be directed to overcoming this danger. The President, he points out, has declared that he did not wish to make war on the German people, and did not wish to impede its peaceful development.

BRITISH NEAR FRONTIER.
LONDON, Nov. 11.
Field Marshal Haig reports as follows to-night from Headquarters: "At the cessation of hostilities this morning, we had reached the general line of the Franco-Belgian frontier, east of Avesnes, Jeumont, Stry, four miles east of Mons, Chievres, Lessines and Grammont."

GENERAL ORDER.
PARIS, To-day.
The War Office issued the following communication to-night on the cessation of hostilities: "In the fifty second month of the war without precedent in history, the French army, with the aid of the Allies, has achieved the defeat of the enemy. Our troops animated by the purest spirit of sacrifice and fighting during four years of uninterrupted fighting, a sublime example of endurance and heroism daily, have fulfilled the task confided to them by the Mother Country meeting at times with indomitable energy the enemy assaults, and at other times, when attacking, thus bringing victory. They have after a decisive offensive of four months, thrown into disorder, beaten and thrown out of France the powerful German armies."

In Memory of "Herbert."

Killed in Action Somewhere in France, September, 1918.
As I sit alone and ponder 'neath the shades of closing day,
I am thinking of a lad beloved so well,
He amongst the many others who had answered Freedom's call,
On the far-off fields of battle fought and fell.

We were comrades together in the dear old U. S. A.
In that free and happy land of Uncle Sam;
But when King and Country called him he was ready to respond
Like so many more brave boys of Newfoundland.

Many happy hours we wandered side by side in days gone by,
Light-hearted as when babes on mother's knee;
Sad reflections now surround me for that voice we loved is stilled,
But his memory will be always dear to me.

Sadly, sadly we remember all the jollity and mirth
Of that soldier boy whose death we deeply grieve;
But we have this consolation he died a weeping mother mourns that lad to-day,
That our cotrade's lying in a soldier's grave.

But what is our affection when compared with mother-love,
A weeping mother mourns that lad to-day,
But God is near to comfort her and lighten mother's heart;
He will share her sorrows all life's weary way.

O dear comrade, gone forever, thy loss we all deplore,
But commend thee to the God of earth and skies,
We hope once more to meet there where no partings ever come,
In that Country where no war-clouds ever rise. A. CASE.

HIS MAJESTY'S INSPIRING WORDS.

An Hour of Solemn Thanks Giving for Gratitude to God. An Empire on its Knees in Prayer.

LONDON, November 11, 1918.

"At the moment when the armistice is signed bringing, I trust, a final end to the hostilities which have convulsed the whole world for more than four years, I desire to send a message of greeting and heartfelt gratitude to my Overseas Peoples, whose wonderful efforts and sacrifices have contributed so greatly to secure the victory which now is won. Together we have borne this tremendous burden in the fight for Justice and Liberty. Together we can now rejoice at the realization of those great aims for which we entered the struggle. The whole Empire pledged its word not to sheathe the sword until our end was achieved. That pledge is now redeemed. The outbreak of war found the whole Empire one. I rejoice to think that the end of the struggle finds the Empire still more closely united by the common resolve, held firm through all vicissitudes by the community of suffering and sacrifice by the dangers and triumphs shared together. The hour is one of solemn thanksgiving, and of gratitude to God, whose Divine Providence has preserved us through all perils and crowned our arms with Victory. Let us bear our triumph in the same spirit of fortitude and self-control with which we have borne our dangers.

A COLD PREVENTIVE.

Have you ever come out of a theatre, or church or over-heated room and felt, immediately the cold night air caught your throat and breathing passages, that you were going to catch cold? That is the time to take Peps. Two or three Peps taken at once will prove an unfailing preventive. A cold developed means needless suffering and expense. Safeguard yourself by always keeping a box of Peps on hand. They are also best for coughs, sore throat and bronchitis. All dealers, 5c. box.

Fortune for Opening a Gate.

Big Rewards for Little Services. A Derby woman recently received a legacy of £100 "in remembrance of a bunch of flowers." Romantic rewards for little acts of kindness are by no means uncommon.

Quite lately a wealthy man called on a doctor and settled on him a thousand a year for life. Why? Just for a little act of thoughtfulness. The man who had made a fortune served in a shop when young. One day the doctor went in and asked to see some delicate ware. The young shopman accidentally let it fall, and the doctor, seeing his distress, took the blame and paid for it. This earned him an annuity of a thousand a year.

It is said that Mr. Henry Milles-Lade, brother of Lord Sondes, came to the latter half of his name and a fortune by opening a gate. One day he opened a gate to an old lady, an entire stranger, and in gratitude for this courteous action it is said she left him her whole fortune and a country house in Kent.

A Cobler's Luck. A northern cobbler lately had a surprise in the shape of a legacy of £120. The incident which produced this pleasant addition to his capital had been totally forgotten by him. When he was a journeyman shoemaker he was carrying a bunch of roses and met an invalid lady, who openly admired his flowers.

"Would you care for a few, madam?" said the kindly cobbler, at the same time handing her half the bunch.

The invalid was profuse in her thanks and inquired his name and address. He never saw her again, but time proved that she had not forgotten him.

The wife of a shipyard labourer in Newcastle came in for a fortune of £25,700 by reason of kindness shown to a sailor many years ago. The lad was then only seventeen, but he never forgot, and when he died lately of an accident in Australia, where he owned a very large sheep-run, he left it all to his benefactress of the old days.

A married woman who served as a shop assistant in one of the cities of Massachusetts, was left over £100,000 by a man who had died in Cornwall. Before her marriage she lived in the island of Bermuda with her mother, and this Cornishman visiting the island, had been kindly entertained, and mother and daughter had done all they could to make his stay agreeable. She had forgotten the incident until news came of this large bequest.

But a still more surprising case comes also from America. The pastor of an Indiana church recently received sixty acres of good land as a gift from one of his flock. For what? It was intimated by the donor that the gift was intended to mark his appreciation of the parson's brevity!

Striking Strikes.

All strikes are not big. Some are very small.

Just before the war the men in a certain work-house went on strike for new potatoes. A bread-and-water diet was tried as a strike-breaker, and at the end of twenty-four hours the strikers were ready to accept potatoes new or old.

The bellringers of Redhill went out on strike some time since. They vowed they would no longer ring the changes, no more produce the plain-bob, bob-tripe, bob-major, or even grandfire bob-major.

When the clergy rang the ringers up they simply rang off. It was reported that Redhill rather enjoyed that strike, and was sorry when the jolly bells rang for victory!

Quite lately the beer-drinkers of a little Lancashire town struck drinking because the publicans had put up beer a halfpenny, and the female prisoners of Wormwood Scrubs were reported to have struck against carrying coals for the laundry fires.

A recent strike of schoolboys was immediately followed by a strike—a series of strikes, in fact—by the parents. When the boys returned to school the indisposition of certain strike-leaders to sit down was very noticeable.

In Pittsburg fifty workmen struck for lemonade. The boss was adamant. "Next thing you'll want is icecream and hammocks to take a nap in," he said.

Not long ago the firemen of an American steamship stopped shovelling in the middle of the Atlantic because the cook insisted on sending them down boiled instead of mashed potatoes. Before the war thirty-two journalists struck work in the German Reichstag because the Colonial Secretary—whose job is now done—spoke of "the immortal soul of the negro!"

Undertakers' assistants and grave-diggers have often gone on strike and led to very serious situations until they had buried the hatchet, but a still more troublesome strike was when the waiters at a famous restaurant struck between the hors d'oeuvres and the soup.

A one-man strike took place at a theatre once. The "actor" who had to fall from a scaffold into a tank of water wanted 2s. a night instead of 2s. He was refused. Perched high up in the roof the next night preparing for his sensational fall, he paused, stuck up three fingers in sight of his manager, got a negative shake made as if he were coming down in a more orthodox way than falling, and was frantically signalled to do his stunt as the three shillings would be granted.

National Nicknames.

Brother Jonathan, the popular nickname for the United States, arose out of the person of Jonathan Trumbull, the Governor of Connecticut, whom General Washington never failed to consult in cases of emergency. He would exclaim: "We must refer this matter to Brother Jonathan," when in difficulties. Uncle Sam, another popular name for America, arose from a vulgar misconception of the letters U. S. (United States).

John Bull was derived from Dr. Arbuthnot's satire of this title of a typical Englishman, published in 1721. The name of the author of "God Save the King," is John Bull. Tommy Atkins, the popular name of the British soldier, arose because "Thomas Atkins" was a fictitious name that figured in the soldiers' monthly statement of accounts.

Sambo, a name used for a nigger, is used because Zambo is the native term used to designate the offspring of a black person and a mulatto.

Ceiling as Movie Screen.

In the wards of several American hospitals in France, where the wounded men are forced to remain in bed owing to the nature of their wounds, an arrangement has been devised, by means of portable apparatus, whereby cinema films are projected on to the ceiling.

The patients who are lying on their backs gaze upwards at the scenes thus presented, and the tedium of their position is thereby relieved.

"Whatever is the Matter, Jack; You Don't Look Well!"

"Oh, I'm all right."
"But you're not. You look so worried and tired."
"Well, I haven't been sleeping very well lately."
"No, and you don't seem to have any appetite. I think you ought to take something to tone up your system."
"Oh, no, I don't need any medicine. I guess I will soon be all right."
"But you should not neglect yourself, for that is just the way I was before I had nervous prostration, and you know what a long time I was laid up."
"Well, I haven't any time to be laid up, that's a sure thing."
"I know what I am going to do. I am going to buy half a dozen boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and see that you take it regularly."
"You know, Jack, that nothing seemed to help me like Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I am sure it will be just as good for you."
"You will take it, won't you?"

"I'll do most anything to get feeling better, for I know I have been losing my grip on business lately."
"I get up feeling tired in the mornings, and have to drive myself to do the work that used to be a pleasure for me. I have got in the way of putting off matters that need attention, and hate to meet people when I know that some energy will be required to discuss business deals with them."
"You'll take the Nerve Food, I won't you?"
"Oh, I'll let you be the doctor, and if the Nerve Food builds me up like it did you I'll soon get back my old-time vigor and be able to make things hum. I have been rather discouraged lately, but I can see now that the trouble is in the condition of my nervous system. So you get the Nerve Food and we'll see what it will do."

Wilhelm's Land, and several of the adjoining islands. The gentlemen of the Foreign Office were, of course, surprised and pained. Such a step had never been contemplated by them. But the German Chancellor of that period was not given to romantic illusions about abstractions like truth and honour. He had been hoodwinking the Foreign Office all the time, and was doubtless proud of such a coup. His name was Bismarck.

Now the whirligig of time has brought its revenge. Germany has lost all her South Sea Island Colonies. Another flag flies over the capital of Kaiser Wilhelm's Land. And the good-natured natives lying under the coconut palms by the coral sea do not lament the absence of Germanic Kultur.

Lucky Slips.

It is surprising how many useful things come into general use simply by some slip or inadvertence. Blotting-paper, for instance, was the result of a workman's spilling of a batch into which he had forgotten to put any sizing material. Nobel discovered dynamite by a slip, and the first bayonet was the result of a soldier's suggestion that, as the powder was done, they should fix their long knives into the barrels of their guns and charge. But one of the funniest of accidental discoveries relates to bottled beer. In the reign of Queen Mary a certain Dean of St. Paul's and Master of Westminster School had to fly to the Continent for his life. He was angling for the silvery Thames at the time the warning reached him. Some years later he returned not only to England, but to the very spot for the very same purpose, with rod and line. Growing thirsty, he remembered that he had left a bottle of beer in the hollow of a neighbouring tree when he had suddenly taken flight some years before. The bottle was there, but when he removed the cork it went off with such a bang as to make him think it had been changed by the fairies to a gun!

Courtship at the Front.

Even such matters as courtship and marriage are now supervised by the military authorities.

A girl who was in the Q. M. A. A. C. at Boulogne became engaged. Engaged couples are allowed to remain in France, married couples are not. After a period of courtship her fiancé was informed that he was not for the front line at a certain time.

Then the burning question arose: Should she remain at Boulogne as a fiancée and a Q. M. A. A. C. and go to the front or should they get married and go back to England?

They decided to marry. First at the Consulate and then at the garrison church, Gerlie was married in a cleaned frock with patched elbows. The three days' official honeymoon was spent at a cottage rented by the authorities for the purpose—an official home for honeymoon couples. The cottage is in the care of a French housekeeper, whose charges are moderate.

Where Trees are Milked.

In British Guiana and the West Indies, particularly on the bank of the river Demerara, there grows a tree known to the natives as the "Ya-by," which yields from its bark and pith a juice slightly richer and thicker than cow's milk. The tree is about forty feet high and eighteen inches in circumference when full grown, and the natives use its juice as we use milk, it being perfectly harmless, and mixing well with water.

The Cingalese have a tree—they call it "Kiraghuma"—which yields a fluid in all respects like milk; while in the forests of Para groks a tree called the "Massenedron," which gives a milk-like juice. It can be kept for an indefinite time, and shows no tendency to become sour.

On the other hand, certain trees in the valleys of Aragus and in Cauagus yield a similar fluid, which when exposed to the air, begins to form into a kind of cheese, which very soon becomes sour. In the Canary Islands there is a tree called "Tabaya Dolce," of which the milk, thickened into a jelly, is considered a delicacy.

Aerial Messenger

Great danger and difficulty are experienced in sending messages, observations and directions from the front-line trenches to the headquarters behind the lines. Of course, connection by telephone is maintained whenever possible. Sometimes telephone and telegraph wires are shot away. Besides, the enemy may have tapped the wires and may be able to hear every word spoken.

The Germans have used several ingenious methods for overcoming these difficulties. The men in the observation trenches in front of the first line enclose their messages in a cylindrical metal box and shoot it by means of a grenade-thrower or a mine-thrower to the rear of the lines. To the box containing the message a red fire cartridge is attached, which is ignited by the explosion of the sending charge, and by its vivid glare plainly marks the spot where the box with the message dropped. The grenade-thrower, at an elevation of thirty-two degrees, sends the box to a maximum distance of six hundred yards.

War Calculations

A statement has lately been made to the effect that the war has cost all the nations engaged on either side the sum of £32,000,000,000. Such a statement is not really impressive, because it conveys very little of actuality to the human mind. An American paper has, however, come to the rescue of poor humanity, warning in a slough of comprehensive terms.

It seems that the entire cost of the American Civil War has been duplicated every twelve weeks, and each period of five weeks of the present war would pay for the Franco-Prussian War. These thirty-two thousand millions sterling would pay for 400 Panama Canals, or would construct 92 world-encircling railways.

But the cost in human life and limb is far more terrible than any monetary cost. If the procession of the slain were to march past in battle array four deep ten years would pass and even then the procession would not be over. If, behind the dead came the host of maimed, blind, dumb and paralysed, fifty years would hardly exhaust this terrible spectacle. Yet unless we go on till the cause of this awful war is removed; that is, unless we put down Prussian militarism, all this sacrifice may be in vain.

World's Holidays

During the present year there are only eighty-four days on which the banks are open all over the world. On every one of the other 281 days some nation will be celebrating a civil or religious holiday, or observing the Sabbath.

Only one of these holidays is universal. This is New Year's Day, and eleven different dates are observed by various countries as the beginning of a new year. Five Christian countries do not observe Christmas as a legal holiday.

Brazil leads the nation in the number of its holidays. It has eighty-four, and the United States is second with fifty-four. France observes eighteen formal holidays during the year, and Italy twenty-three. Among the other belligerents Germany, it is presumed, will observe twenty days; Great Britain, sixteen; Japan fifteen, and Russia seventeen.

Among the favourite months for holidays the world over, November leads, with twenty-six out of its possible thirty days. May comes next with twenty-five.
