The Romance of a Marriage.

"A-bathing in those costumes, just like horse-riders and acrobats!" she says, with a snort, and apparently quite forgetful of the frivolity, and the days—not so very long ago—when her mistress appeared nightly in a similar costume—and the English ladies all a-doing it, too!" she says, with a shake of her head. "You might expect anything of the French; but that English ladies should join them do surprise me! Whatever would they say if they were asked to do it at Brighton?"

Paula smiles absently, only half-listening.

"This is the house, miss," says Weston, as she stops before the white house Flossie's white fingers had indicated the preceding day. "If you'll step into the morning-room, I'll go and tell my mistress you've been kind enough to come."

Paula nods, and they enter. As she does so, she notices that Acacia Villa is very different to the usual type of lodging-house in Nouvelle. The hall is carpeted with Persian rugs, and lined with ferns and exotics; the little room she is shown into is a little boudoir fit for a princess in its dainty, artistic elegance. A delicate perfume pervades the place, in which a silence, most profound and impressive, reigns unbroken.

If Paula were curious about her new acquaintance, and wished to satisfy her curiosity, there is nothing in the room to assist her. Books and music are scattered about, but there are no theatrical portraits or pictures—not one of the many displaying Flossie Hamilton in stage costume, of which the little drawing-room in Raglan Street used to be so lavish.

Weston comes in with a smile of satisfaction.

"My mistress is very pleased, indeed, miss. Will you follow me, please?"

She opens the door of the drawing-room, a room whose beauty and perfect taste strikes Paula instantly, and the slight, graceful figure rises from the sofa with outstretched hands.

"The beautiful face is very pale, all but the two spots on the cheeks, which glow brightly carmine.

"How kind of you," she says, and her thin fingers close round Paula's gracefully, almost clingingly, as she leads her to the sofa. "Do you know this was not altogether unexpected by me? I thought—I felt somehow—that you would come," and her eyes speak Paula's with an intense look.

"Did you?" says Paula, with a smile. "I am glad I came then. It is strange."

"What is strange?" asks Flossie earnestly and with suppressed eagerness.

Paula colours, then laughs.

"I have had the most intense desire to come and see you; but—I did not like to," she says. "I did not know whether you would be well enough, or—whether you would care to be bothered."

Flossie smiles strangely, then she laughs, and Paula notices that the laugh seems like music in the room, not like other laughter, but as if it were trained and cultivated without being insincere.

"Do you know that I live the life of a recluse here?" says Flossie; "that I never see a single soul; that I never go out until I am obliged; it is little wonder that I am delighted to see you, is it?"

Paula looks at her with tender sympathy. It is a strange, an awful life, for one so young and beautiful.

"Your friends?" she says in her frank fashion.

Flossie shakes her short curls, with a faint smile.

"I have none," she says, with a curious inflection.

"Well," says Paula, looking round the beautiful room and smiling. "It is scarcely surprising that you are reluctant to leave this pretty room for the hot and dusty parade. You must be very happy here."

"Oh, very!" ecstatically says Flossie, looking up at her with an awful bitterness veiled behind the smile. "But I am forgetting. You mustn't sit in this hot room in your hat and jacket. You will stay with me a little while—as long as you can, will you not? This is not a mere formal call, is it? You don't seem like one of that kind of people who sit and talk nothing for twenty minutes, and then sweep themselves out of your sight."

Paula laughs, and, just as she did in the old days, slips off her hat and jacket. Flossie snatches at them with exultant delight, and touches a bell on the table behind her, and Weston carries the hat and jacket away.

Flossie leans back and looks at the lovely face, with its golden-bronze hair fully revealed now, and a strange shadow falls over her blue eyes and plays about her clear-cut lips.

"Ah, yes," she murmurs, inwardly, "she is very beautiful. I understand now."

"What are you going to do?" she says; for Paula has risen and reached a Turkish cushion from a chair.

"I am going to put this under your head," says Paula. "You will be so much more comfortable," and she comes to the sofa with the cushion in her hand.

Flossie sits up and laughs, then suddenly she turns pale and seems to think.

"No! no!" she says. "You must not—not wait upon me. I am not worthy. I—" Then as if mastering her emotion, she laughs again. And Paula, with an air of gentle authority, puts the cushion in its place.

Flossie sinks back, pale and panting a little.

"Yes, it is much better," she says. "But—but you mustn't be deceived. I won't let you think that I am ill enough to deserve so much kindness. I am not really ill, you know, not ill to death."

Paula cannot suppress a shudder as the awful words leave the pretty lips; but Flossie laughs.

"People like myself live on for an unconscionable time."

"I hope you will," says Paula; "but still I think you are not at all well or strong."

"It is all a mistake," says Flossie, shaking her head, with laughing eyes. "It is more idleness on my part than anything else. I have been ill, of course; but I am better now. But—with feverish impatience—"don't let us waste the time talking about me; tell me something about yourself, will you? Am I rude and unkindly-like in asking?"

Paula laughs, and takes a rose from a glass and smells it.

"Not at all," she says. "I am only sorry there is so little to tell. I am the most commonplace of individuals. I haven't even a history."

"No!" says Flossie, her eyes fixed on the lovely face with an intense interest.

"Well, at any rate, it is a very poor one," says Paula, smoothing the rose leaves with her fingers. "For nearly all my life I have lived in a country village in England with my brother and sister. In such a dear old place;

"Orange Lily Saved My Life"

These words, or expressions having the same meaning, are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb; others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors of Orange Lily; and others who had suffered from suppressed menstruation, leucorrhoea, painful periods, etc. For all these and the other troubles known in general as Women's Disorders, Orange Lily furnishes a positive, scientific, never-failing cure. It is applied direct to the suffering organs, and its operation is certain and beneficial. As a trial actually proves its worth, I hereby offer to send, absolutely free, a box worth five shillings for ten days' treatment to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 3 stamps. Mrs. Lydia W. Ladd, Windsor, Ont. Sold by Leading Druggists Everywhere.

We were all our lives there!"

Lightly as she speaks, her eyes grow moist and her voice quivers. Flossie eyes her intently.

"I understand," she says in a low voice; "and why did you leave it? Why did you come to this horrid oven of a place?"

Paula laughs.

"That's simply answered, too!" she says. "We had to leave it, because we were too poor to remain."

Flossie's eyes grow meditative.

"I understand," she says. "You left Woldshire—" She stopped suddenly, arrested by Paula's look of surprise.

"You said Woldshire, didn't you?" says Flossie, innocently.

"Did I?" replies Paula, with a smile. "I was wondering how you knew. Well, we left Woldshire, my sister and I, and came here to—economise; I think that is the way to put it, and that is all."

"All?" says Flossie, with a curious smile.

Paula flushes and then turns pale.

"All of any consequence," she says. "I forgot to say that my brother is abroad."

Flossie looks at her reflectively.

"And that is all you know of life," she says. "How happy you must be."

Paula is silent a moment, then she looks up and catches the blue eyes fixed keenly upon her.

"Happy! Yes," she replies, "as happy as most people, I suppose. There is not too much of that commodity—happiness—in the world, I'm afraid."

"Not too much," admits Flossie; "but—" She stops and hesitates.

"Well?" says Paula.

"But your story is not complete. It leaves out the chief element is a woman's life—love."

Paula starts and looks at her; but the actress, skilled in controlling her face, merely smiles up at her.

"Love!" she echoes.

"Yes, love," says Flossie. "Do you mean to tell me that you don't know what it means?"

Paula looks at her, then her face grows pale.

"No," she says, "I did not say so. Let us talk of something else. That theme is—rather hackneyed, isn't it?"

Flossie nods.

"Yes," she says, with a hollow laugh, "too hackneyed, quite worn out, in fact—fit only for school-girls. Yes, let us talk of something else. Are you fond of music?"

"Very," says Paula; and her eyes turn to the cabinet piano in ivory-and-gold that stands unobtrusively in a corner of the room.

A MODEL VERY ATTRACTIVE FOR SLENDER FIGURES.

Pattern 3101, cut in 3 Sizes: 16, 18, and 20 years, is here depicted. Blue crepe de meteor was used for its development, with bead embroidery for decoration. This would be nice in brown satin or crepe, with embroidery in colors. The 16 year size will require 5 1/2 yards of 36 inches material, with 3 yards of ribbon or material 1/2 inches wide, for the sash. Width of skirt at lower edge is 1 1/2 yard.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10c. in silver or stamps.

A SMART GOWN.

Pattern 3107 here illustrated is cut in 6 Sizes: 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, and 34 inches bust measure. Size 28 will require 5 1/2 yards of 44 inch material. Width of skirt at lower edge is about 1 1/2 yard. As here shown gray taffeta was used, braided with white soutche. One could have this in brown serge or satin, with worsted, bead or chenille embroidery. Black velvet with facings of ivory satin, or taupe duvetyne with old blue piping would be very attractive for this design.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10c. in silver or stamps.

And the thin fingers touch the keys softly, and the musical voice sings a soft, flowing melody.

Paula stands amazed, touched, and—inevitably. There is something weird and unnatural in it. She cannot but remember that the performer is hovering 'twixt life and death. Who is she—what is she, that she can sing like this—change from one mood to another at will?

"Is that too mournful?" asks Flossie, with a mocking smile. "Listen!" and with an upward movement of the supple wrist she strikes the opening chords of her great song in "Old King Cole," and dashes into the first verse.

Paula stands amazed and astounded. Suddenly, in the midst of it, Flossie stops, and looks at the lovely face bent over her.

"You don't like it? No, I can understand. I will sing no more. Are you fond of dance music?"

Her fingers, straying over the keys as she speaks, strikes them now, and—oh! strange and wonderful coincidence—there floats through the room that waltz which she and Sir Herriek danced to on the gravel path outside the Court ball-room.

Wrought to an unusual pitch of excitement already, this is the climax for Paula. Every note of the familiar waltz recalls that night—recalls him who is dead to her, him who has left her forever.

With flushed cheeks and sparkling eyes Flossie plays on, unconscious that her companion's head has drooped lower, and that bitter, scalding tears are welling in the dark eyes.

At last Paula can bear it no longer. She lays a faltering hand upon Flossie's shoulder—half in command, half in entreaty—and the waltz comes suddenly to an end.

"No more!" says Flossie, laughing.

"Are you tired? That was my favourite waltz! Ah, you are crying!" she says, beneath her breath.

"No, no!" says Paula, trying to smother through her tears.

"But you were! Why? Tell me!" she eagerly.

Paula hesitates a moment, then she looks down at her through unshed tears.

To-day's Messages.

WAITING ON WASHINGTON.

LONDON, Feb. 26. It was definitely stated in the Lobby of the House of Commons to-night that the official announcement of the appointment of Sir Auckland Geddes as Minister and Ambassador to Washington, was only awaiting a notification from Washington that Sir Auckland is persona grata.

SETTLING TURKEY.

LONDON, Feb. 26. Continuing his speech in the Commons, with reference to Turkey, Lloyd George promised that when the peace terms were discussed they would be found drastic enough to satisfy Turkey's bitterest foe. The main peace aims in Turkey, the Premier went on, are first the freedom of the Straits; second, the freedom of all the non-Turkish communities from the Ottoman army; third, the preservation from Turks of self-governments in communities, which are mainly Turkish, subject to the most important reservations. Lloyd George explained that the freedom of the Straits would be secured because all of Turkey's forts would be dismantled, and she would have no troops within reach, and would not be permitted to have any navy, while the Allies would garrison the Straits. The only alternative, he said, was an international military government of Constantinople and all surrounding territory, which would be very unsatisfactory and costly to the Allies.

SYDNEY HAS BIG BLAZE.

SYDNEY, N.S., Feb. 26. Fanned by a forty mile gale, with the thermometer registering around zero, fire this afternoon completely destroyed the Bank of Nova Scotia, Oak Hall clothing establishment, legal offices of A. D. Gunn and Gillies and Hill, and the magnificent home of "Sydney" Council, Knights of Columbus, were totally destroyed.

BULGARIA'S TURN NEXT.

LONDON, Feb. 26. Lloyd George stated in the Commons to-day that the Bulgarian Peace Treaty would be laid on the table of the House next week. He said the Bill would be introduced empowering the Privy Council to take the necessary steps for carrying out the Treaty.

WILSON PRESENTS ULTIMATUM.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26. President Wilson in his reply to the British and French Premiers on the Adriatic question, adheres to his previous decision that unless the terms of the settlement are returned to the provisions of Government by December nine, he "must take under serious consideration" the withdrawal of the Treaty of Versailles and the French Alliance from the Senate.

REVOLUTION SPREADING.

LONDON, Feb. 27. A wireless message from Moscow says the revolutionary movement is growing in the Caucasus, and along the Black Sea the insurgents have occupied Chagry and Adlar and are advancing on Tuaspa. The Red troops have captured Bielaigla.

PROTECTING THE PURCHASER.

SYRACUSE, N.Y., Feb. 27. Four of this city's leading firms were indicted on a charge of profiteering yesterday. Two are retail concerns, one a shoe company and one a clothing manufacturing company.

BOLSHEVIK DEMANDS.

LONDON, Feb. 27. War Office despatches say that the Bolshevik advance in Siberia continues, and their troops have advanced to the Chinese frontier, in the Ili River district, and have demanded that the Chinese Government give up the Russian Consul and all refugees, and permit the appointment of Bolshevik Consuls in the Province of Ili. Failing compliance with this demand the Reds threatened to occupy the Province.

SUBMARINE CABLE BROKEN.

VANCOUVER, Feb. 27. The Canadian - Australian cable broke yesterday, between Fiji and the Norfolk Islands, about 800 miles from Auckland, it was said the break would be repaired within a week.

MANDATORY CLAUSE ADOPTED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27. The Republican Treaty reservations regarding mandatories was re-adopted yesterday in the Senate by a vote of 88 to 4, after the administration leaders had withdrawn their opposition to it. This was the first time a qualification of the treaty had been adopted with the acquiescence of the Democratic leaders, and the first time that more than two-thirds of the entire Senate had voted together in approving any reservation. It is noted, however, that the reservation was one of those to which the Democrats had agreed in the recent bi-partisan conference. The substance of the reservation provides that no mandate could be accepted by the United States without the consent of Congress.

THE TURKISH QUESTION AGAIN.

LONDON, Feb. 27. In the House of Commons last night, Mr. Bonar Law declared that he could not imagine anything more calculated to make the League of Nations a failure at the outset than to impose upon it the burden of Turkish problems. Williams, Liberal, asked whether the Government had any information that a report had reached the Armenian delegation in London, to the effect that twenty thousand Armenians had already been slaughtered in the evacuated district of Marash and that large Turkish forces were menacing the whole of Sialia which was in danger of a massacre. The Premier said that up to the present he had not heard anything to indicate that this deplorable rumor was true, but he added that if such news came to the conference to-day, they would have to consider what steps were necessary to arrest horrors of this kind.

SOVIET OVERTURES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26. In a new peace proposal to the Great Powers, according to official despatches received here to-day, let Russia place the establishment of democratic principles in that country and the calling of a constant constituent assembly. It appears to withdraw the decree annulling Russia's foreign debt restoring sixty per cent. of liability, and also to pay arrears of interest, giving to an Anglo-American syndicate, as a guarantee of fulfillment of its obligations, valuable platinum and silver mining concessions. In return, the Powers are asked to give up intervention in Russia and the United States is asked to allow credit to Russia conditioned upon these considerable concessions.

SINKING SHIP CALLS FOR HELP.

SYDNEY N.S., Feb. 27. S.O.S. call was received at Louisburg early this morning from the steamer Blainfield, reported in lat. 28.15 N., long. 73.30 W. in a sinking condition. The steamers message said "Leaking badly and in sinking condition; send assistance as soon as possible." The message was received by the agent for the Marine Department in Sydney, and an effort will be made to have some relief steamer go to the aid of the sinking vessel.

"No Beer, No Work."

"Let the Prohibitionists Shovel Snow," Says New York Shovelers.
New York, Feb. 11.—The difficulty that the city has had in obtaining snow shovellers was given a new explanation to-day when numerous signs were stuck in the snow banks throughout the city, carrying such inscriptions as "No beer, no work" and "Let the Prohibitionists shovel the snow."
A snow melting machine which threw streams of burning oil and which was said to have been used with success on Canadian railways, was tried on the snow barriers to-day, but proved a failure. Firemen condemned the apparatus on the grounds of the danger of the burning oil flowing in to the sewers or being scattered by a strong wind.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

WHAT THE LETTER FRIENDS THINK ABOUT IT.

RUTH CAMERON

It seems to me that I never launch one of my little talks with unusual uncertainty and hesitation that it does not bring me an unusual response from my letter friends. The latest example of this was the wave of response that my remarks on funerals—tentative-offered, for fear that it would be regarded as too gruesome a subject—brought forth. So many highly interesting comments were made that I'm going to note some of them.

The Family Wore White.

"I want to thank you," writes one letter friend, "for the suggestion that can give in upon the point of creation—I have held as a principle for many years—to calm the extreme sensitiveness of my only daughter who would carry out my wishes regardless of any pangs she would feel. I am 76 and having been a spiritualist for more than 50 years, I, too, feel that the transition is beautiful and suggests nothing painful. My sweet mother passed on at 95—still responsible: myself and my daughters and daughter-in-law wore white at her funeral."

"A friend of mine," writes another woman, "wants all her pall bearers to wear white. I have often thought of composing a brief discourse to be read by some friend, dwelling on the beauty and naturalness of the event. So it is my express desire that all present will conduct themselves as in the course of ordinary events."

Another most interesting letter, while it does not offer any suggestions for the ideal funeral, describes ordinary ones so forcefully that it is only a document worth passing on.

Vivid Description of Some Typical Funerals.
"We have had three deaths in our family recently," writes the letter friend, "and I could not help but see the foolishness and insincerity displayed at such a time. One person trying to outdo the other in floral pieces and being offended if theirs did not have the place of honor. One relative offended because another happened to go in the auto ahead of him."

"I attended the funeral of a relative of ours not long ago, the husband wanted just a simple prayer at the home, but they had to get a minister they did not know, and apparently one who was of the old school, and I never heard anything like him in my life. He prayed for almost an hour and in that time he raked up the suffering of the deceased had gone through, and all the misery the family would go through when they came home to an empty house, and how there might have been things said occasionally that were unkind (she had been sick a long while, but they were devoted to her) and how they would have all that to think about. I could see the husband, and I could see how he suffered and finally broke down and cried like a baby. And do you know, awful as it may seem, I could have taken that minister by the collar and booted him out of the window! When I came home I laid down the law about my funeral. . . . Trusting that you will understand my feelings in the matter, I remain—"

Owing to an incomplete address, I was unable to write this excellent lady, but I take this opportunity to assure her that that trust was not misplaced.

Mistaken Responsibility.

Teacher: "How is it you were not at school yesterday, Tommy?"
Tommy: "Please, teacher, when I was coming to school I saw a steam roller."

Teacher: "Well, what about it?"
Tommy: "A man touched me on the shoulder, and said: 'Mind that steam roller, boy, and I stood minding it all the afternoon.'"

COUNTRY BUTTER.

MARY MUSCH

I toil around from store to store, and country butter I demand. "We do not keep it any more, it has been banished from the land." Thus speak the grocers, one by one, and do not seem to care three dollars; "the country butter graft is done, the farmers' wives have soaked their churn. But we have butter made of glue, and butter much like axle grease; you'd better buy three pounds or two, and let your weary soul have peace. It is no use paw around and like a dotard vent your rage; we haven't seen a single pound of country butter in an age." Alas, the things of yesteryear, the precious boons we knew of yore! I've seen old landmarks disappear until my ancient heart is sore. I spread my bread, a mournful hick, with stuff that's made of tested fats; I spread the dope on good and thick, and then I feed it to the cats. They make our butter now in mills, with smokestacks fourteen inches high, but not much higher than the bills which come to weary skates who buy. "There is no country butter now," say grocers in the busy mart; "the churn is canned, the farmer's frau is scorching in her choo-choo cart!"

Admiral Wm. S. Sims

Has Won Admiration as a Man and a Sailor.

Admiral W. S. Sims, of the United States navy, has created a sensation by his refusal to accept a D. S. medal from his Government. His reason is that the recommendations he made for honors were disregarded by Secretary of the Navy Daniels. Men who should have been decorated were passed over and men who had not their claim for reward were presented with medals, he says. Admiral Sims' action has produced a departmental storm which will not be settled until President Wilson makes a decision in the matter, and perhaps not then. Sims' career has always been of especial interest to Canadians because of the fact that he was born at Port Hope, Ont., although the son of American parents. His long-established admiration for Great Britain, his brilliant service in the war and his admirable published report on it have all combined to make Admiral Sims extremely popular both in Canada and in Great Britain. In the United States he is admired both for his professional qualities, which are second to none, and because of his habit of speaking out in meetings and ignoring precedents when he thinks the interests of the service he loves demand it. In any contest with Secretary Daniels he surely will have the popular support.

Sims came first into prominence in 1910, when he was visiting England as commander of the Minnesota. He was an invited guest at a Guildhall banquet and in the course of a speech he said, "If the time ever comes when the British Empire is seriously menaced by an external enemy it is my opinion that you can count on every man, every dollar and every drop of blood of your kindred across the seas." The remarks were applauded uproariously, not only by the Britishers present but by the eight hundred American sailors who were the guests of the Lord Mayor. But when a report of the speech reached Washington, Officialdom felt that Sims had gone too far; that he had no right to make remarks which might give offence to foreign countries and involve the American Government in disclaimers and explanations. So shortly afterwards Sims was publicly reprimanded by Admiral Shroeder, though it is not on record that he made any apology. The incident did not have any effect in checking his naval career, which is perhaps evidence that his superiors were not so gravely displeased with him as their official actions indicated. Indeed, by this time Sims was recognized as one of the most brilliant officers in the American navy. He had been Roosevelt's naval aide, and when inspector of target practice with the American Asiatic fleet he had made a report which resulted in revolutionizing American naval gunnery.

Partly because of his high standing and partly because of his intimate association with high officers in the British navy, Sims was chosen a short time before the United States entered the war to go to Great Britain and learn exactly what the situation was. The British Admiralty put its cards on the table and told him frankly that the German submarine peril remained a deadly threat to ultimate victory and made certain suggestions in the event of American co-operation. Sims made a strong report to his Government, recommending that what Great Britain suggested should be done. It was done, and the honor fell to Sims to do it.

One of the first orders he issued upon reaching British waters was that any of his officers who was heard criticizing the methods of any of the Allied navies would at once be shipped home. Whether the warning was heeded we do not know, but it made for harmony and cheerful co-operation.

When the war ended Admiral Sims was offered a high decoration by King George, but he refused, although Gen. Pershing had accepted a similar honor. Upon his return to New York he was given a tremendous reception, and in the speeches he delivered in response to the welcomes that were extended to him he gave unreserved praise to the British navy and the British mercantile marine, declaring that they were the twin pillars upon which victory was reared.

CASTOR OIL.

I don't mind lickins' now an' then, An' I can even stand it when My mother calls me in from play To run some errand right away. There's things 'bout bein' just a boy That ain't all happiness an' joy, But I suppose I've got to stand My share o' troubles in this land. An' I ain't kickin' much—but say, The worst of Parents is that they Don't realize just how they spoil A feller's life with castor oil.

Of all the awful stuff, Gee Whizz! That is the very worst there is. An' every time if I complain, Or say I got a little pain, There's nothin' else that they can think 'Cept castor oil for me to drink. I notice, too, when Pa is ill, That he gets fixed up with a pill. An' Pa don't handle mother rough An' make her swallow nasty stuff; But when I've got a little ache, It's castor oil I've got to take.

I don't mind goin' up to bed Afore I get the chapter read, I don't mind being scolded, too. For lots of things I didn't do; But Gee! I hate it when they say, "Come! Swallow this an' right away!" Let poets sing about the joy It is to be a little boy, I'll tell the truth about my case: The poets here can have my place, An' I will take their life of toil, If they will take my castor oil.

Curious Clubs.

The recent announcement that an English "Bald-Headed Men's club" had just met—the first time since 1916, owing to the war—serves to recall one or two odd clubs. "The Fat Man's club," for instance, was known to exist in Paris in 1897. Its heaviest member turned the scale at 336 pounds and the chief qualification for membership was to weigh at least 230 pounds. About this time there also met in New York the "Society of the Pointed Beards"—a most exclusive club. No one was eligible unless he had a carefully cultivated beard of natural growth and terminating in one symmetrical point half an inch from the apex of the chin. At two club dinners in 1898 even the celery was served with its leaves trimmed to a point.

The Problem of the Ex-Kaiser.

The Dutch Government, though apparently steadfast in its refusal to grant the Allied request for extradition of the ex-Kaiser, is yet sufficiently swayed by international opinion to believe that it cannot hope to escape from complying in some measure with the universal demand that Wilhelm be removed from his present comfortable quarters at Amerongen, and sent to some other place not nearly so contiguous to German territory. Already the Netherlands' authorities have expressed their willingness to find another asylum for the royal criminal, their latest suggestion being that he be transferred to a more isolated region on the borders of the Zuyder Zee, where he will be kept under strict censorship and surveillance. And where perhaps friends of his may possibly attempt his relief from custody, and spirit him away to German soil, thereby relieving the Dutch of all further responsibility.

The present determination of Holland to maintain an asylum for the ex-Kaiser in European territory endangers the stability of the peace arrangements. The British Government, of itself, can scarcely insist on his surrender, because its own traditions and records in similar matters in the past, are parallels to those of Holland. A precedent was established in the case of Napoleon Buonaparte, who voluntarily gave himself up to the commander of a British ship of the line. No thought of handing the defeated and friendless Emperor over to the Royalists of France ever occurred to the English Government of that day. The most dangerous man in Europe was in their power, and notwithstanding his bloody career, they could not refuse him either shelter or protection.

tection. But they had the responsibility of guarding his person, and seeing that he was not permitted to escape to create more trouble in Europe, and consequently he was sent to St. Helena, where he died—an exile. There is this difference between Napoleon of France, and William of Germany. The former threw himself upon the mercy of his foes; the latter fled precipitately from his own territory and took refuge in a neutral state, without invitation or previous permission. Napoleon was great in disaster; William was contemptible and mean. The characters of the two men were dissimilar, as were also their actions in defeat.

And so as the Dutch are exceedingly reluctant to hand over the imperial refugee, it will be quite proper to expect that they take every precaution to prevent from getting loose and appearing in person to the numerous monarchists of the country over which he formerly held sway. But the mere fact of sending him to Doorn, as announced in the cabled despatches a few days ago, will not meet this, for as has already been said, it will be quite possible to—if it is so desired—rescue him from that place and take him to Germany, where he still has a formidable array of friends and military supporters, who are even now believed to be plotting for the restoration of the Imperial regime. Thus the presence of the ex-Kaiser anywhere in Europe is an international menace, and particularly so in Holland, which is not so very remote from the Prussian frontier. The new Allied note regarding the future of the ex-Kaiser may be accepted by the Dutch Government, or if not altogether, they may not prove unreasonable to argument, and thus bring about a satisfactory arrangement for the disposal of their uninvited guest. So long as he is placed in security, safe from plotters friendly inclined toward him, it will not matter much to the world at large. Holland has considerable non-European possessions, to either of which the ex-Kaiser might be sent. The farther he is kept away from Europe the better, unless there is a desire for a recurrence of the "one hundred days" of Napoleon, which ended at Waterloo.

Vice-Regal Visit to Wood-Working Factory.

Accompanied by Miss Harris and his Private Secretary, Capt. Hamilton, His Excellency the Governor yesterday afternoon paid a rather extended visit to the Horwood Lumber Co.'s plant. First received by the staff, the party was afterwards shown through the factory, every phase of which was explained. Although present for two hours the entire plant could not be examined and the visitors stated their intention of returning at a later date.

The Kent Mistry was dismissed by Governor Bannerman on February 27th, 1861, this action arising out of a charge made by Mr. Kent against His Excellency, to whom he subsequently refused an explanation, stating that he was not called upon to do so as a member of the Legislature.

Court Scores Anonymous Writer.

In opening the court this morning, Judge Morris passed some remarks on the anonymous correspondent signing himself "Methodist", who, writing in the "News" a day or so ago, referred to him in offensive terms. He did not usually take notice of such attacks, but this one seemed to be a desire, on the part of the writer, to prejudice members of the Methodist Church against the Bench. He wished to state emphatically that in the course of the Prohibition trials he had never said that those responsible for the bringing in of the Act were hypocrites and fanatics. He did strongly condemn the Act itself, as every lawyer who has had anything to do with it has also done. He would have taken action against the writer except that it would result only in giving the party undeserved prominence. The Inspector General, who was present during the judge's remarks, stated that he had no recollection of having heard the court use the words credited to him.

The Price of Milk.

The Food Control Board on Saturday last examined upon oath five suppliers of milk to the city. They deliver respectively 7 gals., 16 gals., 20 gals., 21 gals., and 40 gals. daily.

The price of milk had been 20 cents a quart since November, 1918. February, the first of the present year, the price was made 24 cents a quart.

Rich milkman deposed that the increase was made because of the increased price of feeds, higher labor, and general increased cost of running a farm. Each one was questioned as to the cost of feeding each day. In general terms about 12 to 14 lbs. of feed and 20 lbs. of hay is given each cow.

Say 13 lbs. of feed at 5c. 65.
Say 20 lbs. of Hay at 2c. 40 $1.05.

Against this the milkmen (with one exception) say that the average yield per cow is less than one and a half gallons per day. One and a half gallons at 96 cents per gallon brings in $1.44, giving a gross profit of 39 cents or 26 cents a gallon. The cost of delivery is a heavy item, and 20 cents a gallon will scarcely cover it. This brings the profit down to 6 cents a gallon, without reckoning any overhead expenses such as upkeep of stables, barns, horses and carts. As a matter of fact some feeds are costing to-day nearly six and a half cents a pound, and hay is selling at nearly three cents a pound. The cost of feeds has practically trebled since 1914. Hay in 1918 was $20 per ton, and now is sixty. Gluten Meal, etc., shows a similar increase. The milkmen desire that all these facts should be made known to the public.

The milkmen are also anxious that their milk should be tested more frequently so that the standard of quality may be kept high.

The low yield of milk is a great deal responsible for the high prices. One man kept the record of a herd of cows for two years, and produced figures showing that the yield was less than one and a half gallons per day. The farmers state that the only real value to them of the cows is the manure they obtain for their land. Some save by putting their cows on pasture say two months in the summer, and others continue the regular hand feeding throughout the year.

Taking these facts into consideration the Board cannot see that they are justified in recommending any reduction in the price of milk. It is regrettable that the farmers seem to have been satisfied so long with an indifferent breed of cows. It does not cost much more to feed a cow yielding three gallons a day, and with such a yield the price of milk could be just half of what it is to-day.

"Thou Shalt Not—!"

TIMELY SERMON ON EVILS OF SOCIETY.

Newfoundland's most notable claim to fame and prestige does not rest upon our material wealth, but upon the unperishable record of our valiant troops, and though the deeds of our soldiers may be already passing into the realms of memory, it is happily the kind of memory which will be handed down with pride to our children's children and will continue to awake an echoing response as long as noble deeds stand.

The great prosperity which is so widely diffused, is due in some measure, no doubt to the generous scale of our soldiers' allowance which has also helped to assuage somewhat the baleful effects of grim war. Some people affirm that because of our present material prosperity, we have lost sight to some extent of the spiritual aspect of things. May be so, yet only last week I heard St. John's humorously spoken of by an American visitor as "The Town among the Churches." The constant ever-increasing stream of church goers seem to indicate that as a people we are still aspiring for better things and striving for the ideal, and it is safe to assume that the majority of persons go to church from purely spiritual motives apart from the ordinary sense of duty, and of course, the force of a good sermon accentuates the interest people take in church going, and although this is not the highest motive for attending public worship, yet even that motive is acceptable if it helps to save Sunday from sinking to the level of a mere holiday.

Last Sunday evening the Church of St. Thomas's was crowded to the doors, and there were those who turned disappointedly away from the portals having hoped to hear the Rector's sermon dealing with the Seventh Commandment—a truly difficult subject to present judiciously to a congregation composed of men, women and children. The Rev. Dr. Jones, however, handled the problem of impurity with characteristic directness and simplicity, strongly emphasizing the particular guilt of man, the seducer, as applied to the case of innocent or ignorant young girls. The heinous sin of adultery was dwelt upon with a delicacy and reticence but with all such force as could not fail to win the approval of a sympathetic and strongly moved congregation. Dr. Jones threw into strong relief the fatal effects following close upon the social sin and the awful price which humanity has to pay not only in the suffering of in-

The Late Czar of Russia Planned Treachery.

Much has been said about the plans of a separate peace which Czar Nicholas, under the influence of his Prussianized court, intended to conclude with the Central Powers, with a view to saving his throne and dynasty from collapse. The Pester Lloyd, a prominent German newspaper published at Budapest, the Hungarian capital, not long ago contained an article purporting to give authentic particulars of these separate peace offers. The article, reprinted in London, says:—

"On October 16, 1916, the Russian Court informed Vienna and Berlin through a neutral channel that as Russia's effort already had exceeded her obligations she would henceforth reserve complete freedom of action for herself. The implication was that peace could be concluded at once. Everything depended on Germany's willingness to give way on the question of Constantinople.

"If Germany were ready to make concessions, Russia would demand nothing from Austria-Hungary and would restore all the occupied territories. Germany was either to leave Turkey to her fate, or at the very least oblige her to internationalise the narrow waters round Constantinople by means of a coastal strip on either side, five kilometres deep, administered by a sovereign international commission, in which all seaborning states were to be represented. "Stamboul was to remain under the immediate sovereignty of the Sultan and under the administration of the Porte. Armenia was to be an autonomous buffer-state under international protection, with an Armenian Nuber Pasha, for example) at its head, and with a defensive gendarmerie, for which Russia would provide the necessary instructors.

"As for Poland, Russia had no objection to an autonomous state, headed by a Pole under the protection of the three empires. Moreover the czar was prepared to restore complete independence to Finland, and to renege the connection between Russia and Finland to the original status of merely personal union. In Asiatic Turkey, Russia would leave Germany free hand south of the line Bosphorus (the Bosphorus)-Bolin-Sivas-Baja-

"These proposals were submitted to the Ball Platz, to the High Command of the Imperial and Royal Armies, the German Foreign Office at Berlin, to the General Headquarters of the German army and to the King of Bulgaria. King Ferdinand agreed to sign the High Command of the Imperial and Royal Armies gave them serious consideration, but German General Headquarters rejected them conditionally.

"On January 27, 1917, the Russian czar again made overtures through a same neutral channel.

"These new overtures were communicated to the Central Powers on February 11, 1917. The result was the same as in the preceding October. Austria was agreeable, Vienna and Budapest were not disinclined, nor did Berlin refuse a hearing—only German General Headquarters definitely rejected the offer.

"The Czar and his colleagues feared that the revolution was at hand, and they realized that peace alone could save them. On March 6, 1917, they made an appeal through the same neutral channel. They pointed out how intense the general desire for peace had become and, above all, how unwise things were for crowned heads with in Russia and elsewhere—"the position of the dynasties is nowhere so pleasant and comfortable at the present day." They implored the Central Powers to listen to reason. They were willing to extend their October peace programme in several respects. This appeal and the accompanying proposals were also communicated to Vienna, Budapest, Berlin and Spa. King Ferdinand intervened personally to induce the Kaiser and the Emperor Charles to give a favorable reply. But the German High Command remained obdurate, maintaining that the interests of the Central Powers would be better served by a revolution, which would place Russia at their mercy.

"Hardly had a week passed when the Russian revolution broke out, and on the 15th of March the Czar was expelled to abdicate.

"Nevertheless, a last despairing attempt was made by several members of the Russian imperial family, again through the same neutral channel. They expressed the conviction that if the Central Powers were willing peace could be concluded and the revolution averted. "We will not assume that overtures, however hostile they may be toward each other for the time being, are prepared to let a red chaos reign in Russia, the consequences of which would in all probability recoil on themselves." But even this offer was rejected.

Mainly About People.

Mrs. Clarissa F. Smith, of Dracut, Mass., has just celebrated her 100th birthday. She comes of a family noted for longevity through many generations. Her grandfather was a veteran of the Revolution and lived to be 95. Both of her parents lived to a good old age. She was born in Canada and went to Lowell when she was 17, travelling all the way by wagon.

George A. Long, of Dorchester, Mass., has plans for the raising of the Lusitania, and the recovery of part of the $50,000,000 lost with it. Viscount Grey has submitted these plans to his naval authorities. Mr. Long has been working on his salvaging apparatus since 1916. He was born in Northfield, Mass., in 1860.

Mabel Ragsdale, of Boston, has at the age of 13 written several short stories and is now at work on a full-length novel. She delights in the study of English and she writes because she "really can't help doing so." She is a New Yorker of Italian parentage and speaks Italian like a native.

Lawrence, Mass., has in Mrs. Mary Regan a centenarian who begins and ends each day with a pipe smoke, and eats a plate of ice cream before going to bed. She is now 103. Her father James Collins, living to be 113. Mrs. Regan is the mother of seven, grandmother of 26, and great-grandmother of five. She was born in Cork, Ireland.

The nestor of all mayors and municipal dignitaries in the world is undoubtedly the nonagenarian Marquis of Farjet, in the department of the Eure, head of one of the most illustrious houses of the old time French territorial aristocracy. He was elected in 1870, that is to say, just half a century ago, to succeed his father as mayor of the little town of Dampremont, in the neighborhood of which his chateau is situated; and unanimously re-elected every year, he has filled the office ever since. Previously he had been a member of the municipal council of the town for twenty years, that is to say, from 1850, prior to the elevation of Napoleon III, to the throne of France as emperor. The marquis has therefore an uninterrupted municipal career of exactly three-score years and ten to his account, which breaks all existing records.

Ellen Glasgow, who is generally recognized as among the foremost novelists in American, is a writer who prefers a pencil to a typewriter. Miss Glasgow always works behind a lock-door. If the door is merely closed, she confesses she cannot free herself from a consciousness of possible intrusion which makes undivided concentration on writing impossible for her. The only living thing ever permitted inside her room while she writes is her dog, Joy. Joy understands the situation perfectly, and never makes suggestions as to the proper handling of a chapter. The first draft of her novels Miss Glasgow writes very rapidly. Then she copies the pencilled version on a typewriter, revising as she goes. Sections that do not please her she insists upon doing over and over. Some chapters she rewrites more than a dozen times. Usually, though, the second, or at most third, revising produces the final version—the version that is "right."

Deserved a Reward.

Lord Dunsverick questioned a sailor called Ginty about Andrew McMunn, with whom he was about to have dealings. Ginty answered: "I've no doubt in my own mind about where Andrew will go when his time comes." "You think you know him pretty well, then?" "Ay, I do. It would seem queer if I didn't, seeing that I've sailed his ships this ten year. Andrew McMunn will go to Heaven." "Ah," said Lord Dunsverick, "he's a good man, then?" "I'll not go as far as to say precisely that," said Ginty, "but he's a man who never touches a drop of whiskey nor smokes a pipe of tobacco. It'll be very hard on him if he doesn't go to heaven after all he's missed in this world."

Dusky Paris Sweepers.

Paris streets have recently gained in picturesqueness by the employment of colored scavengers. Ebony hued Senegalese and copper colored Arabs from Algiers and Morocco, whose terra cotta fezres contrast so deliciously with the pale blue soldiers' uniform, clean or effect to clean, metropolitan thoroughfares. In one boulevard there is a giant negro, with the lordly gait of an African prince, who trails his beam behind him majestically as if it were a peacock's feather fan.—London Chronicle.

A Ship Refused to Stay Sunk.

The urgent need of ocean-going ship tonnage is illustrated in the story of the Andrina, renamed the Alejandrina. For twenty years the Andrina lay on a reef in the Straits of Magellan, where she had been beset in a terrible storm. In seven feet of water and mud one part of her lay, while another section of her hull, untouched by water, was embedded in two feet of sand and mud. Built by McQuinn & Co., in Southampton, England, the Andrina was a staunch four-masted sailing ship of beautifully curved outlines, but regarded as a total loss by her underwriters and her British owner. Unprotected during all the years, she was exposed to the ravages of wind and storm and shifting tides. With the ever-increasing and more urgent demand for cargo ship tonnage, caused by the world-war, Menendez & Co., called the wool kings of Patagonia, were hard pressed to find transportation for their product, and because of their need decided to attempt the salvage of the ship that lay on the reef near Punta Arenas.

For four months, working in ten-day periods when the tide and the light of a new moon favored, two nine-hundred-ton steamers tugged and hauled until her hull was floated, and then she was towed to Punta Arenas to be fitted for the journey so recently ended at Brooklyn.

Because of her tall masts she could not pass under Brooklyn Bridge for cargo discharge, but berthed outside, after which she was drydocked at the Morse yards for a thorough inspection for the first time since she had been tossed on the reefs twenty years before.

Her hull was found to be in a remarkable state of preservation, notwithstanding her long exposure to the

HAD BOUT WITH CARPENTIER.
Joplin, Mo., Feb. 3.—James Bronson, manager of Bob Martin heavyweight boxing champion of the American Expeditionary Forces, said last night that he had no information other than press reports of Jack Dempsey, in said to have sent him, attacking his alleged methods in "boosting" Martin in opposition to Dempsey.

"Kearns is running in circles," Bronson said. "The letter to which he refers was only a copy of the resolutions adopted by the Pueblo, Col., post of the American Legion and an announcement of a bonafide offer I have received from promoters there to stage a fight between Martin and Carpenter."

"Kearns" telegram, as reported in press dispatches, evidently takes more exception to the resolutions than to any word or act of either mine or Martin's. These resolutions were passed without my knowledge or advice. The first word I received from there was the offer of a $75,000 purse for Martin's services in a bout with Carpenter, and a copy of the resolutions was attached.

Matched Previously.
"As a matter of fact, Martin was matched with Carpenter before Dempsey won the Championship. Martin, the American representative at the Inter-Allied games, through the system of drawing used, was to have met the French soldier champion, who was representing France at the soldier Olympiad. A few days before the bout was scheduled to take place it was announced that Carpenter had injured his hand, so Journet, a stablemate of Carpenter, was substituted, and with Descamps in his corner, Martin knocked him out in three rounds. "As for Kearns' charges that I have attempted to use my influence with the American Legion, or have tried to trade on my own achievements in France, they are absolutely without foundation. I have never attempted to 'boost' Martin's stock with former soldiers in any way. They know him and his record and have followed his every fight and the actions taken by dozens of legion posts came to us as big a surprise as it did to Kearns."

TOLEDO GETS WILDE-MASON FIGHT.

Toledo, Feb. 4.—Ad Thacher promoter of the world championship fly-weight bout between Jimmy Wilde, the British title holder, and Frankie Mason, American claimant, will go to Milwaukee to-morrow to confer with Dave Hughes, Wilde's manager and to complete arrangements for staging the event here some time during the latter part of this month.

George Biemer, Mason's manager, who arrived here to-night from Ft.

Wayne, informed Thacher that Mason will meet Wilde in no place other than Toledo. This was because of an agreement between Thacher and Mason that the bout if held anywhere, would be held in Toledo, it was said.

Biemer also signed Mason's end of the agreement. Mason now is at South Bend, Biemer said, and will come here as soon as the final contracts are signed. Thacher also announced that Wilde will come at once to Toledo to compete his training.

The weight is to be 108 pounds at 8 o'clock, the afternoon of the fight. The agreement calls for a no decision bout, it is understood.

The promoter is figuring on staging the fight in the Coliseum, providing it can seat 6,000 spectators. He put in his time to-day arranging a blueprint of the floor space.

W. O. MCGEEHAN PICKS DEMPSEY FOR WINNER.

"A Tale of Two Fighters," a comparison of the war records of Georges Carpentier and Jack Dempsey—or rather the lack of Dempsey's war record—is the subject of an article by W. O. McGeehan in the January issue of The Home Sector, a magazine dedicated to the service men of the country. McGeehan is well known in San Francisco, where for a number of years he was connected with the sporting department of The Chronicle.

Later McGeehan was made sporting editor of The New York Tribune. He wields tremendous influence in sporting circles of the East. It was McGeehan who had much to do with the sentiment against Les Darcy when that Australian left his own country without enlisting and came to America to fight.

As a Spanish-American war veteran and a captain in the American army in the recent world's war, McGeehan feels keenly that men of the Dempsey type should not have enlisted. He has taken up the cudgels against Jack Dempsey.

The article in part is as follows:

Less Fit Took His Place.
When the United States entered the world war in April 1917, Jack Dempsey did not amount to much pugilistically. He had lost in one round to Jim Flynn, the ring-scarred veteran of many a losing battle. Dempsey afterward knocked out Flynn in a round.

It never occurred to William Harrison Dempsey, 22 and physically fit, that the United States army should interest him. The posters screamed at him from the dead walls and hundreds of colored lithographs of Uncle Sam pointed to him declaring, "The army wants you." But Dempsey did not take any of this as personal. Neither did Jack Kearns, who was a "sporting character" in San Francisco before he took up with Dempsey as the future heavyweight champion and the potential maker of millions.

At any rate, Dempsey never at any time displayed any surpassing interest in the army or in the war. While the first American troops were being rushed overseas, Dempsey started to box his way to fortune and to considerably more notoriety than has been accorded Fock or Pershing.

Slim, narrow-chested boys, with the divine fire in their eyes and bending under regulation packs marched away and were hurried overseas to die in order that the country might be made safe for Jack Dempsey to achieve his ring career. With over 4,000,000 men under arms, Dempsey, the physically perfect, the unencumbered, the professional fighter, escaped the call and escaped the draft.

Understand that I do not feel bitterly toward Dempsey, nor do I believe that many ex-soldiers feel bitterly toward him. Their attitude is more that of wonder that he lacked the imagination to see the incongruity of fighting petty ring battles while over there was the sublime opportunity for fighting man. I do not hold that Dempsey is a poltroon. He lacked the perspective, and the newspapers helped him hold his distorted vision of the ring and the battlefield.

At the time the United States entered the War Dempsey was at the age when most young men saw the vision of the Great Crusade and dreamed the dream of heroes from Achilles to Roosevelt. But the heroes of Dempsey's limited vision were Sullivan, Fitzsimmons and Jeffries.

War Hero Should Win.
When Dempsey and Carpenter meet, if there is any poetic justice extant, the war hero should win. But he will not. I have seen Dempsey box once when he scored Jess Willard with a punch that fractured Willard's jawbone. He sent that great giant out of the ring with his jaw dislocated, a few ribs fractured and his face beaten to a jelly in just three rounds. Unquestionably he is the most formidable of the heavyweights of several decades. He is king of the living gladiators.

I think that this tale of two fighters, which must remain unfinished until that meeting takes place, will end in a tragedy. It will bring ironical laughter and derision upon eternal justice if it ends as I think it will. What a picture that will be—Dempsey, the dullard who could not see the vision of the holy fight, gloating over the prostrate form of Georges Carpentier, allied soldier.

It has been asked of me, "Why do you hound Dempsey?"

I am not bitter over Dempsey. I think I understand and I pity him for his blindness, for when this foolish adulation of the ring fighter is swept aside, Dempsey will realize what he has missed, and he will suffer.

But I recall the first company that I equipped for a quick trip overseas. With that little group of the finest youngsters God ever touched with His hand there was one boy of 17. He had lied gloriously to get into the service. He was a frail child with a face as delicate as a girl's, but he had the courage of a man. When I saw him bowed under the pack that he had just learned to roll a day before, trudging off to join that first contingent of crusaders, I felt a few emotions that no company commander is permitted to feel in the regulations. And I vowed to myself then and there that if it should happen that I ever met any who should have been in this boy's place, I would say so as forcibly as possible.

And it should be said. For who can tell when the time may come again when the United States will need Carpentiers and the call find only Dempseys.

Thomas A'Kempis.

"Here in the service of the Lord Thomas A'Kempis lived and wrote 'The Imitation of Christ.'" are the words that appear on the foot of the monument to the author recently erected at Zwolle. In a gentle spot, surrounded by ancient oaks and firs, and with shrubbery around, this monument stands on a hill which was presented for the purpose by the van Royen family. The monument is in the shape of a cross with the monogram of Christ and the symbols of the four evangelists. The inscription on the main part is "In Cruce Salus." Many subscriptions were received for the monument as soon as the plan was suggested in 1916. Queen Wilhelmina was among those who gave.

Geography a Deterrent.

This school story concerns a little girl who could not grasp her lessons in geography. The teacher had tried various means to impart knowledge—all in vain, however, and as a last resource she one forenoon punished the girl. Perhaps the punishment "fitted the crime," but the girl's mother thought otherwise and in the afternoon she bounced into the school

A New Idea.

A British gunner, who had successfully passed a blacksmith's course, was home on furlough wearing the hammer and pincers on his arm, when he was accosted by a civilian, who asked what the decoration was for.

"Oh," replied Tommy, "I'm an army dentist!"

"I see," said the civilian. "Of course the pincers are for extracting teeth. But what is the idea of the hammer?"

"Well, you see, it's like this. Some of the chaps are a bit nervous, so we use the hammer to chloroform them," was the reply.

Stafford's Liniment for Nerralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism and all kinds of Aches and Pains.

Whenever General Pershing visits his home town of Laclede, Mo., he invariably hunts up "Aunt Susan," Susan Hewitt, for a hunk of apple pie. She remembers "John" when he was three years old. She says he resembles his mother. He always insisted on Aunt Susan being at all his receptions.
