CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

JUSTIFICATION FOR INCREASED FREIGHT RATES ON POTATOES AND REQUEST FOR SUBSIDIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the announcement by Canadian National that it intends to force inappropriate equipment on the maritime potato trade which will result in a significant loss of jobs in the agricultural sector of the region, in view of the fact that freight rates on potatoes shipped to the region's primary market in central Canada will rise 35 per cent in one year, costing Prince Edward Island producers alone an additional $1 million, and in view of the announcement of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) of an Atlantic provinces transportation program which seriously downgrades federal support of rail freight traffic, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That officials of Canadian National be called before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to justify these actions; that the Minister of Transport immediately bring in interim subsidies to offset the potato freight rate increase; and that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) give urgent attention to the negative impact of the declining rail service and increased rates in the economies of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

ALLEGATION BY DR. BROOKS BUREAUCRATIC SLOW MOTION STALLS CONSERVATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of energy but in his absence I will direct it either to the acting minister, if there is one, or to the Acting Prime Minister. My question to the Acting Prime Minister relates to statements printed recently in the Toronto Star by Dr. David Brooks, who was recently a senior energy adviser on conservation matters to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and a man whom the minister responsible recently described as having served the department and Canadians extremely well. In his article Dr. Brooks stated that bureaucratic slow motion continues to stall development of fair and effective energy conservation programs. In light of that condemnation of the government's action on energy conservation by the man in Canada who is in the best position to know, will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether the government accepts Dr. Brooks' criticisms and intends to adjust federal policies to meet the targets and the sense of urgency in energy matters which Dr. Brooks indicates?

• (1410)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I expect the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to be in the House momentarily and perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would get a more detailed and satisfactory answer if he put the question to the minister when he comes.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to defer, but I might make the point that we expect ministers of the Crown to be in the House at 2 p.m. when the House meets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—ALLEGED RECEIPT OF TELEGRAM ATTACHING RESPONSIBILITY TO FORCE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: And in everybody's absence.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Last Thursday, in an attempt to split hairs, the Prime Minister said that the letter sent by L'Agence de Presse Libre to the then solicitor general, at present Minister of Supply and Services, did not refer to the RCMP but rather spoke only of the police. It is worth noting that appended to the letter, the then solicitor general also received a telegram sent to the RCMP in Montreal specifically asking whether the RCMP was responsible for the break-in. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether or not this particular fact has been brought to the attention of the government by the Minister of Supply and Services, and whether or not, included in the statement to be made by the Solicitor General there will be an explanation as to why the then solicitor general did not investigate, when he in fact received the specific notice by virtue of the telegram, that the RCMP were directly involved in the raid?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): I believe the hon. member is already aware that it is the intention of the Solicitor General to make a statement on this matter following the sentencing that is expected to take place this week or next, and therefore I will draw to the minister's attention the additional information that the hon. member requires and suggests that he includes it in the statement. In the meantime, it is not my intention to add any further comments on this question.

BREAK-IN AT JAMES, LEWIS AND SAMUEL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): When the Acting Prime Minister is discussing the matter with the Solicitor General—and maybe he will now answer the question—will he ask whether, included in the statement the Solicitor General is going to make in the House with respect to the activity of the RCMP in this particular break-in, will be a statement with respect to the break-in in 1971 into the offices of James, Lewis and Samuel, a publishing company, in which files were also stolen? Can we have an undertaking from the Acting Prime Minister that included in the statement by the Solicitor General on June 9 there will be a statement with respect to that incident as well?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): I will be discussing the statement with the minister and I will ensure, as I am sure it is his intention, that he makes it as comprehensive as possible.

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—AVAILABILITY OF FORMER MINISTER AT TIME STATEMENT IS MADE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. In view of the actions of the Minister of Supply and Services and the fact that he released a press statement even though a statement was to be made by the Solicitor General—he decided unilaterally to make a statement and leave the country—and in view of the fact that this situation appears to bear strong similarities to an occurrence some two years ago when the Minister of Supply and Services tried to blame his staff for not communicating information to him, I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister would get an undertaking that the Minister of Supply and Services will make a statement in the House and will be available for examination with respect to this very important matter so that we can examine him as well as the Solicitor General at that time?

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is responsible for reporting to the House on these questions, and he will do so in the customary way.

ENERGY

ALLEGATION BY DR. BROOKS BUREAUCRATIC SLOW MOTION STALLS CONSERVATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is here, I would like to put to him a question relating to statements made in the Toronto Star by Dr. David Brooks, who is well known to the minister as an expert on energy conservation in the country. Dr. Brooks said that bureaucratic slow motion continues to stall development of fair and effective energy conservation programs for Canada. I wonder if the minister would tell the House very simply whether he accepts that fundamental criticism of Dr. Brooks and whether he intends to change government policy to reach the standards and the sense of urgency that Dr. Brooks' article communicates?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that Dr. Brooks is a very distinguished scientist in the area of energy conservation. I believe he was reflecting the frustrations of those who have been part of a very small group, and a very effective group, which has not been able to move its particular concerns faster than all the other competing claims within a very large department.

I think it is also quite clear that the target which was set by the government in the energy strategy a year ago of reducing the increase in our energy consumption to less than 3.5 per cent—and this is perhaps the sense of frustration he feels—and down to 2 per cent, which I have interpreted as a zero rate of growth per capita by 1985, is a desirable objective which is yet to be fully substantiated as possible by the economists. I think Dr. Brooks would agree with me that it is important, before we adopt a target of that kind, that we are sure of all the implications and whether in fact it is attainable. My own view—and I have stated this before—is that we should be able to approach, if not achieve, a zero rate of growth per capita in energy consumption by 1985.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO IMPLEMENT COMMITMENTS ON CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister's own views are obviously irrelevant here because he has just admitted to the House of Commons that the frustration of Dr. Brooks is due to the fact that energy conservation has such a low place on the totem pole of priority in his department that Dr. Brooks had to quit.

I would like to ask the minister to become specific for a moment. In the 1976 energy conservation program a number of objectives were defined which Dr. Brooks has properly pointed out have not been acted upon. He lists the lack of monitoring or enforcement of provisions for automobile mileage standards. He points out that in 15 months there have been no appliance efficiency standards, and no labelling plans have been announced. He asks where the minister's proposed studies on energy efficiency for air and public transit have gone. The House of Commons would like to have answers to those specific questions, and it would like to know why in 15 months the minister has not moved on those specific priorities spelled out in his own policy.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is quite untrue to suggest that nothing is happening with respect to mileage standards. The government made it very clear that it has adopted a standard of roughly 24 miles per gallon by 1980. We have every reason to believe that that will be reached. The automobile manufacturing companies are co-operating. By 1985 that mileage standard on a fleet average will be about 33 miles to the gallon, representing in over-all terms quite an increased efficiency, almost double the efficiency we had a year ago. In other words, we will get twice as many miles per gallon of gas or we will use half as much gas to go the same distance. That policy is in place, so to suggest that the government has not acted on that is quite erroneous.

With respect to the question of labelling, that policy is also well on the way. The Leader of the Opposition might like to address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, whose department is responsible for this aspect of the program.

Similarly, action has been taken with respect to insulation standards. That has been discussed. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would be the first to criticize the government if we produced a set of standards through the National Research Council which had not first been discussed fully and thoroughly with the provinces and gained their acceptance for them. That process has been going on and I think it will be possible to announce new standards within a week or two. Similarly, we have taken action in the area of home insulation in the maritimes. I think it is wrong of the Leader of the Opposition to suggest there is no sense of urgency and that this government has not taken action in the area of energy conservation.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF HOME INSULATION PROGRAM AS MEANS OF CONSERVATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): What the minister has suggested is that after waiting 15 months we should wait another week because they might have an announcement to make then. Regarding the home insulation program may I ask the minister if he has given consideration to phasing in an extension of that program outside of the two—and I emphasize two—provinces in Atlantic Canada where there is now a program in place? In particular is he following the suggestion of my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West, that priority should be given to phasing in that insulation program in high unemployment areas of the country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Leader of the Opposition has been out of the House a good deal recently. I realize he has had other things on his mind and has not been present for the question period. If he had been in the House over the last month he would realize that question has been put to me and I have answered it on at least three occasions.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, for the edification of those Canadians in high unemployment areas who might benefit from any phase-in program, could the minister bring himself to answer the question once again, concretely?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would read Hansard—concretely.

ALLEGED MEMORANDUM TO CABINET SUGGESTING CONSERVATION PROGRAM WOULD ELIMINATE NEED FOR FRONTIER EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND GAS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, even if the hon. minister is in the House, he is really out of it. I have a supplementary question for the minister. Did members of the staff of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources prepare a memorandum which went to Cabinet and which argued that a sound energy conservation program could eliminate the need for a risky exploration for oil and gas on Canada's frontiers and which claimed that an efficiency oriented program could cut the growth of energy demand in half between now and the year 2000? Did such a memorandum go to Cabinet and is it not a fact that Cabinet rejected the suggestion?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that ministers are not in a position to discuss or comment upon documents that have come before Cabinet. I want to make the point that I would hope the people in my department would be putting such position papers together for the consideration of officials of the department and for my consideration. I think that kind of activity is very important.

EFFECTIVENESS OF GOVERNMENT'S "SAVE-10" PROGRAM

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To be more specific, the minister promised on behalf of the government last year that the government would lead by example with a "Save-10" program to reduce energy consumption of government by 10 per cent and to hold it at that level for ten years. We are now in the middle of 1977 and we still see ministers going around in gargantuan gas guzzling cars which are also air conditioned. Would the minister tell the House whether he has achieved the "Save-10" target of last year and if the target is likely to be achieved this year. What is happening in connection with that statement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be making a comprehensive statement on this subject in the near future. I can say, however, that as a result of that program and the co-operation of departments of the federal government as well as of the House of Commons and its staff, there has been a very significant saving over this past year. It is a saving which runs into the millions of dollars which would not have been saved without the program.

INQUIRY WHETHER HOME INSULATION PROGRAM PUT BEFORE PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question regarding the conference he had with provincial energy ministers on May 11. Will the minister confirm that at that conference he put forward an idea in principle for a retrofit or home insulation program which he estimated would cost in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion spread over seven years? According to the minister's estimate, it would save the equivalent of one and a quarter oil sand plants. Since according to the transcript several provincial ministers were enthusiastic about the proposal, at least two of them saying, "Let's get on with it", I ask the minister if he has received his colleague's authorization to put a definitive proposal for a home insulation program before the provincial governments?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is well briefed on the proceedings of that energy conference. As he knows, it is true that I have long favoured such an approach and long favoured a co-ordinated, co-operative approach to energy conservation in this country. I took that position from the start. I have already talked with some provincial ministers and in the next few days will be holding further discussions with provincial ministers. I hope it will be possible to work out with them a set of undertakings which provincial governments would give if it is possible for the federal government to decide in favour of the significant program to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it is apparent that lack of authorization from his colleagues and not lack of co-operation from the provincial governments is the obstacle to going ahead with the program—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): How do you know?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —even though when answering previous questions the minister said that the large sums of money involved are the obstacle; since according to his own figures the $1.5 billion program would cost slightly more than $215 million a year if spread over seven years, I ask, does he not think it worthwhile to make an investment of $215 million each year, which, according to his own figures would save us some 2.5 billion gallons of oil per year, a saving of $1.25 billion annually, save as well $750 million on imports, plus relieve us of the necessity of building another tar sands plant. Is this not a good investment? Can the minister not persuade that hard-headed Scot who sits as the Minister of Finance that this would be the best investment the government could make?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not accept your description of the Scot.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have heard the hon. gentleman's representations before. That he makes strong representations is well known and understood by my colleagues. We are giving the matter consideration.

LENGTH OF TIME SUBSIDIZATION OF SYNCRUDE PRODUCT WILL CONTINUE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At the same energy ministers conference the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that when the Syncrude plant goes on stream next year, the government will be required to subsidize that plant's production in order that it can be paid the promised international price. Does that still stand? And, though the minister indicated that the government intends to go up to the international price, he has always qualified that statement by saying we would not go above the United States price, which is below the world price. Does that mean that the government intends to continue subsidizing the product of the Syncrude plant even after we have reached the United States price, and does that not indicate the real savings we can make if the minister can persuade his colleagues to put in place the home insulation program?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the commitment to the world price stands. As for the hon. member's interpretation regarding the world price exceeding the United States price, or more particularly exceeding the present Canadian price and the requirement of a subsidy from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that subsidy will be paid in the national interest.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO ASSIST FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS IN QUEBEC—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I shall direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some time ago the minister took part—indeed we took part together—in an important meeting or seminar in Victoriaville on the furniture industry, and since then that industry, which is the main industry of the region, is facing increasingly serious difficulties, particularly due to imports and the need for industries to market their products in common. Could the minister tell the House if he has had time, since the seminar, to make a very careful examination of that problem, and has he already worked out ways to help those companies?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we asked for a report on the situation of the furniture industry and the hon. member, who was with me in Victoriaville, knows that the report was already examined jointly by officials of my department and the members of the Quebec Furniture Manufacturers' Association but I have had no final answer as yet. However, as soon as that study is completed, it will be a pleasure for me to inform the hon. member.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I understand the minister's position but he will also understand the importance of this question on a situation which becomes worse each day. Would the minister be prepared to have a civil servant of his department get in touch as soon as possible with the leaders of the Quebec Furniture Manufacturers' Association to take stock of what happened since the workshop and take urgent action in this area if possible?

Mr. Chrétien: I shall be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF FRANCE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing another hon. member, I want to mention the presence in the gallery of the French delegation to the 11th meeting of the Canada-France Interparliamentary Association, headed by a member of the National Assembly, Mr. Émile Bizet.

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY WATERS TREATY

PROPOSED NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES TO INCLUDE SALTWATER BODIES WITHIN TREATY

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the problem of transboundary pollution. My concern arises from the imminent danger of United States-Canada conflicts over oil tanker traffic into Cherry Point and the extension of Dome's drilling permit in the Beaufort Sea. Will the minister give urgent consideration to opening negotiations with the United States on the extension of the definition of boundary waters in the International Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 to include saltwater bodies, such as the Strait of Juan de Fuca, through which the Canada-U.S. boundary passes?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the hon. member is more familiar with the treaty concerned and the arrangement than I am. I will certainly take this under advisement. In the meantime, I can advise him, as I advised the House last week, that there are quite comprehensive negotiations underway with the United States on a variety of issues related to the problem he has cited.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF COMPENSATION FROM UNITED STATES TO CANADIANS SUFFERING FROM OIL SPILL DAMAGE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): On May 19 I asked the Acting Prime Minister to investigate interim compensation provisions for Canadian victims of pollution of our west coast by United States. On June 2, my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question and he replied that he would have an answer ready for us the next day. I now ask the minister, will Canadian victims of oil spill damage be eligible for compensation under United States legislation and has or will the government of Canada make representation to the United States government to this effect or bring in comparable compensation legislation to protect the fisheries and foreshore of British Columbia?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I say once again, with the greatest of respect for the hon. member's justifiable concern, that obviously an answer given orally on this may well lead to some misunderstanding in the event of claims and so on. I would prefer if the hon. member and others who have asked this question would agree that I provide a written answer which would be the considered response. I think it is now in the process of preparation. If not, I will see that it is done immediately.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP MEETING ON OIL SPILLS ON PACIFIC COAST—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether he has had any kind of a report, even an informal one, from the recent meeting in Victoria of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group when they were considering this very important matter of oil spills in that area? They made the recommendation that a joint approach be made possible, even a joint bilateral agreement covering such matters as clean-up facilities properly located, a multi-million dollar compensation fund, the question of liability, traffic controls, construction and crewing standards, not to mention research into oil carriage technologies as they might affect the choice of oil ports. If he has not heard, is he prepared to react to this mini-report which I have just given him?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have heard in accordance with the word the hon. member used, informally, from members of the delegation on both sides. I was quite impressed by the obvious degree of mutual agreement there was between the Canadian and United States representatives. I am told that I am to get a written assessment or report on those meetings which will undoubtedly contain these specific suggestions. On the surface, I see nothing about them that we could not move toward achieving. Once I get the formal statement from the Canada-U.S. committee, I will deal with it at once.

TRANSPORT

REPLACEMENT FOR "WILLIAM CARSON"

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It is a follow-up to the one I asked him on Friday with regard to the sinking of the William Carson. Can the minister report now? I might say I was very pleased with the positive nature of his original answer and the sympathy he had for the situation. Can the minister now give a more substantive answer with regard to what replacement will be provided for the William Carson?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my officials and the officials of CN Marine have been discussing this matter. It now appears that it may be possible to put the Ambrose Shea into this service in place of the William Carson, at least throughout June, and have the Marine Cruiser go into operation when the ice conditions clear. These, of course, are very temporary arrangements while we look at longer term solutions.

FISHERIES

STEPS TO RECOVER CERTAIN COSTS FROM FOREIGN FLEETS OPERATING WITHIN 200-MILE ZONE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In light of the fact that a schedule of fees to be paid by foreign vessels and foreign nations fishing within 200 miles of the United States coast has been proposed by the United States national oceanographic and atmospheric administration, which it is hoped will enable the United States to recover about 40 per cent of the cost incurred in permitting foreign vessels within their zone, I ask the minister what steps he is planning to take other than charging Canadians for fishing licences while foreigners are freely catching our resources, in order to recover some of the costs borne by Canadians in providing surveillance, navigational aids and coastguard service to all ships, Canadian and foreign, operating within our economic zone.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the hon. member in the Fisheries and Forestry Committee, the decision not to charge fees for 1977 was made on the basis that this was a transition year. The decision was made by myself. We are looking at a possible fee schedule for the coming season, 1978. We are also looking at other possibilities, in place of cash payments. We might prefer research vessels or research capacity which some nations fishing off Canadian shores have in surplus at the moment. We are studying this whole business for 1978.

Mr. Crouse: Since the United States proposed schedule calls for a fixed access fee of $1 per gross registered ton, not to exceed $5,000 per vessel, plus a fee of 3.5 per cent of the total dockside value of the pounds of fish allocated to the nation based on the price paid to United States fishermen, will the minister consider a similar set of fees in order to recover part of the annual costs of research and pollution control administration, enforcement and coastguard services provided to the foreign fleets when they are operating within our 200-mile zone?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at this type of schedule and others.

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION ANY AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC CONTAIN PROVISION GRANTING IMMIGRANTS CHOICE OF LANGUAGE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In the recent draft agreement between the federal and Quebec governments on immigration and the discussion with Mr. Couture, did the minister raise the question of linguistic rights of immigrants to Quebec? Further, did he insist that if an agreement were to be formalized that all immigrants entering the province of Quebec be given the choice of learning either of Canada's two official languages?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): That matter was not discussed, Mr. Speaker.

● (1440)

Mr. Epp: The minister indicated to the House that a joint working committee had been struck in order to prepare final proposals for the formalization of the agreement. Will he insist that those guarantees be included in any agreement which is finalized?

Mr. Cullen: The subject under discussion is wide-ranging and a lot of areas will be considered.

HEALTH

PRESERVATION OF CONFIDENTIALITY OF DOCTOR-PATIENT RELATIONSHIP—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with the growth of socialized medicine requiring identification of the patient and his treatment, information which was inviolate before the advent of state medicine but which can be, and has been used by communist countries against patients. My question is: what protection has been provided to preserve the confidentiality of relations between doctors and patients in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to an area of federal responsibility, I must remind him that as far as the health of civil servants is concerned, quite specific rules compel medical officers to maintain the confidentiality of the medical information they obtain from their patients. In fact, I think the hon. member is concerned about a form which the Ontario Department of Transport is using to request those who are seeking a driver's permit to have their physicians complete a detailed form to be forwarded later to the Ontario Department of Transport. Unfortunately, because this matter is a provincial responsibility, I suggest the hon. member should raise this issue with the Ontario government.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Is the minister aware that the Ontario Medical Association has asked the provincial ministry of health to stop turning over the names of psychiatric patients to the federal government? I want to ask the minister why that practice is being followed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: I understand that the statistical data which are computed under medicare are of a quite general character and do not mention the names of the individuals, but again, I should like to inquire and verify the hon. member's assertion.

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SUGGESTING AMENDMENTS TO QUEBEC'S BILL NO. 1

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the government House leader supplementary to that directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration by my hon. friend from Provencher. It has to do with Quebec Bill No. 1. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration told us there has been no discussion with the Quebec authorities with respect to the exercising of linguistic choice by immigrants to Canada. Is any discussion being undertaken between the government of Canada and the government of Quebec in the light of the statement made by culture minister Laurin that amendments might be brought forward to Bill No. 1 in a number of areas—the Francization of business, the precedence of the language law over the charter of human rights as a means of securing compliance with education provisions and so on. The minister told me a week ago that he was not prepared to advise a representative of the government to appear before the Quebec parliamentary commission. My question is this: in the light of the statement by Mr. Laurin and of the obvious reaction to the answer given by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, does the government intend to take any public initiative with respect to possible amendments or, in the alternative, is the government prepared to make a statement in the House with respect to what amendments might be considered appropriate in the circumstances?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. At the present time, as the hon. member has pointed out, the bill is before a committee, or commission, as it is called, of the Quebec National Assembly and residents of Quebec and a variety of organizations are making their views known. It seems to us that this would be a most appropriate way to proceed at this stage and that any intervention before the committee would likely be counterproductive.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SAFEGUARDING OF JAMES BAY AGREEMENT GRANTING FREE CHOICE OF LANGUAGE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It will not have been lost on the minister that I am not suggesting that that is the only alternative. I have also suggested to him the possibility of making a statement in the House of Commons with respect to what, I hope, are the concerns of the government in connection with Bill No. 1. On another aspect, may I ask whether the question of Inuit language rights has been resolved? On Friday, the Prime Minister said that this matter had, in accordance with his understanding, been settled but I have since learned that this is not the case and that the Inuit people are not satisfied on the ground that they are not specifically excluded so as to comply with the James Bay agreement. Has any initiative been taken by the government with respect to that aspect? Has any legal opinion been obtained with regard to it? Perhaps the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will deal with the question specifically.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I met with the President of the Northern Quebec Inuit Association just before lunch. While the Quebec minister has promised to exempt them from Bill No. 1 they have not yet seen the wording of the exemption and they are concerned for this reason. They wish to examine the wording and, if necessary, make some input into it so as to ensure that they are exempted.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am glad to hear that such a meeting has taken place. Is the hon. gentleman using his offices as a federal minister of the Crown to insist that a concern which I am sure every member of the House regards as a legitimate one, is satisfied in the amendments which will be brought forward by the government of Quebec, according to the culture minister with respect to Bill No. 1?

Mr. Allmand: I told the President of the Northern Quebec Inuit Association and the representatives of the Cree that I would do everything possible, everything they required, to make sure the agreement was fully protected and that it would not be infringed upon by Bill No. 1. We are setting up certain meetings here in Ottawa to explore other possibilities in dealing with this matter. Moreover, I have agreed not to have Bill C-9 proclaimed until all these issues have been settled.

HEALTH

REPORT ON ARSENIC POISONING IN YELLOWKNIFE—REASON FOR DISSENT OF DR. BLEJER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns a report which was tabled, I think, a few days ago on the arsenic poisoning problem up in Yellowknife. One of the consultants involved in that study, Dr. Blejer, who was engaged at the insistence of both the Native Peoples Brotherhood and the United Steel Workers Union, has now dissented from the conclusions of that report, indicating that in his view there is a danger to residents of Yellowknife in connection with the mining there. Would the minister advise us whether he has accepted the general conclusions of the task force concerning the danger and whether he has had an opportunity of contacting Dr. Blejer, an eminent authority in the field of public health, to determine why he has so vigorously dissented from the report on arsenic poisoning in Yellowknife?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all the document involved has not been tabled in this House since it is not a government report but a report from the Canadian Public Health Association. I received a copy and made it public yesterday through a press release indicating my full support for the findings and recommendations of this interim report. A final report will be prepared in a few months by the committee established by the Canadian Public Health Association.

As to Dr. Blejer's comments, I read them in this morning's papers and I noticed the doctor stated he had not received a copy of that report. I would have thought that before making any such comments he would have taken the trouble to get a copy and read it. I do not have any other comments to make concerning this doctor's statement, who seems to make statements even before reading the published reports.

REPORT ON ARSENIC POISONING IN YELLOWKNIFE—USE OF COMPANY DOCTORS TO CONDUCT TESTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations of the report is that company doctors be used in the process of examining those miners who are working in that particular plant. I know the minister is familiar with the problem at Thetford Mines in Quebec where company doctors were used, and many years passed before miners were found to have asbestosis. Would the minister advise the House if he is in agreement with that recommendation, that there should be company doctors examining their own employees to determine whether there is arsenic poisoning? Does the minister accept the conflict of interest proposition, that it should be either doctors from his own department or independent doctors who conduct these examinations?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to remind the hon. member that there is within this business concern an established union legally recognized under the laws of the Northwest Territories as well as the management. I imagine the business concern and the union will examine the report and come to their own conclusions about the best way to ensure the employees' health within this concern.

With regard to the hon. member's general assertion, I would like to tell him that I have more confidence in the ethics of the doctors of this country than he seems to have.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL AID FOR ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE HERRING FISHERMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, on May 19 last, I put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment drawing his attention to the critical situation of the fishing industry, and especially the herring industry, in the Magdalen Islands, and this for the third year in a row. In his absence, the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion replied that the government was deeply interested in the problem and that, in any event, my concern would be conveyed to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment upon his return.

The situation having since deteriorated to the extent where smoke-houses and processing plants are completely for other species without work or nearly so, depriving both fishermen and other workers in the industry of their livelihood, the only one on which they can depend, can the minister or his department, in agreement with the province of Quebec which also has responsibilities in that field, put forward an assistance program to help out that hard pressed population?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we will no doubt do all we can. We have not always waited for other jurisdictions to act; we have acted unilaterally when time came to help out groups of fishermen falling under the Fisheries Prices Support Act.

I shall look into the statements of the hon. member. I shall ask that they be confirmed, not that I doubt his word, but that I should like to know exactly what the facts are, and shall then advise him or the House.

AIR TRANSPORT

BILLING OF CALPA AND CATCA FOR COSTS INCURRED DURING STRIKE NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the response he gave me on May 12 with respect to certain billings forwarded to CALPA and CATCA, in regard to their invitation by the government to come to Ottawa last June to assist the government and the ministry in the resolution of the air transport strike that was on at that particular time, I wonder if the minister is now in a position to indicate to these two organizations, and to the country, whether the government's policy will be to pick up the bills or the costs incurred for those two groups to come to Ottawa? That will indicate to us the government's policy with respect to the bringing of various groups into Ottawa for reasons of national importance.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would not speak about picking up bills because there are some costs which may well be borne by other organizations. On reviewing the file on this matter, I did conclude that there were reasons why the organizations might have been led to believe that the costs incurred by Transport Canada were going to be borne by Transport Canada, and I have directed that those costs not be pursued further with the organization.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER APPROVED DESIGN OF SILVER DOLLAR COMMEMORATING HER MAJESTY'S SILVER JUBILEE

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Supply and Services; but in his absence, I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Now that the brochure illustrating the design of the silver dollar struck to commemorate the silver jubilee of Her Majesty's accession to the throne has been released, I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister could indicate if the design, with its unfortunate symbolism of an empty throne propped up against what appears to be one of the late Mackenzie King's handcrafted ruins, was personally approved by the Minister of Supply and Services?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it was. In fact, I saw it myself and it reminded me of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. Paproski: It was a ruin, was it not?

STEPS TO ENSURE PROMPT DELIVERY OF SILVER DOLLAR COMMEMORATING HER MAJESTY'S SILVER JUBILEE

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I went down to the Senate yesterday to check it out for any similarity, and I could not find any.

My supplementary question is: assuming that collectors and people wanting souvenirs of the event may order sets featuring this coin as advertised, in spite of its design, what steps has the department taken, in conjunction with the Royal Canadian Mint, to avoid the extensive delays in delivery which have bothered those who ordered Olympic coins? I have had constituents who have waited almost a year for delivery. Now we have another offer, and one would hope we would have a better performance.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not have an immediate answer for the hon. member with respect to the delays. I will inquire today and be ready to answer him tomorrow.

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—REQUEST STATEMENT INCLUDE CHARGES AGAINST OFFICERS AND INFORMATION ON PRAXIS BREAK-IN

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. It is in regard to a question which was asked of him earlier with respect to the statement expected on June 9 by the Solicitor General. Encouraged by the commitment the hon. Minister made about the comprehensiveness of the statement which the minister will make, I would like assurance that the Acting Prime Minister will communicate to his colleagues two critical points which we consider to be important. One is that the minister will include in his statement the charge which was laid against the officers who broke into the newspaper office in Montreal, and whether it was the same charge which was laid and to which they finally pleaded guilty. The other question relates to an assurance that the comprehensive statement includes those actions which were carried on in 1971 in the office of Praxis Corporation in Toronto.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXING OF PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY BY SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Some weeks ago I raised with him the question as to whether he would consider publishing actuarial studies made by the superintendent of insurance on the proposals for full indexing of public service pensions. At that time he indicated he would take the matter under advisement. I have asked him subsequently, and now I am asking him whether a decision has been taken and when can we expect publication of these reports in light of more and better information for the administration?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, a decision has not been taken. As I indicated to the hon. member in another forum, I am committed to making public the results of the independent actuarial examination when it is completed, which I expect to be in the next few months.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, is the minister suggesting in addition thereto, and as a basis of comparison with the studies of the superintendent of insurance which was made quite some time ago and completed, that he is now waiting for further studies under the Tomenson-Alexander or whatever may be the name of the report so that the two studies will be on a comparable basis when he publishes them?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that inference is not necessarily the case.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister; but in fairness I should say first to the Chair that it might be construed as being indirectly connected to the question of privilege which I will be raising at three o'clock. If you would prefer me to defer it, I will.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED SALE BY ITALY OF LEOPARD TANKS TO LIBYA AND EXAMINATION BY SOVIET EXPERTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It has been reported that some Leopard I tanks have been sold by an Italian manufacturer to Libya, from where they not surprisingly found their way into the hands of Soviet technical military experts, who examined them thoroughly. What steps has the minister taken to discover to what extent the security and technical effectiveness of our future main battle tank have now been hopelessly compromised before we even receive delivery of the first of them? Will the minister tell the House whether he is going to raise this matter at the meeting of NATO's nuclear planning group which begins its meetings here in Ottawa tomorrow and, if not, what action does he propose to take?

[Mr. Oberle.]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the details of the case but I will be speaking on this to other NATO ministers this evening. I do not think there has been any great compromise; it would surprise me if there had because they are pretty familiar with that tank right now. They are mighty scared of it.

Mr. McKinnon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Leopard I's technical secrets have now been compromised, will the minister reconsider this purchase and instead approach the Krauss-Maffei company with a view to renegotiating our contract, so as to continue renting the Leopard I's until 1980 and then purchase the more modern Leopard II?

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker, I would not consider that because the Leopard I is onstream, the troops are happy with it. They are winning all the competitions in Europe and bringing great pride to Canada.

CUSTOMS

ALLEGED FALSE INFORMATION ON QUEBEC GIVEN BY CUSTOMS OFFICERS

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Many hunting and fishing outfitters and other tradesmen of the Maniwaki region complain about the erroneous information given to American tourists last weekend by customs officers in Sarnia and at the Thousand Islands bridge. Many tourists reported that they had been advised by them not to visit western Quebec since access to forests were forbidden because of fires and that the French language was now compulsory in Quebec. Could the minister seek information on that matter and make sure that in future the information relayed does reflect the reality, namely that forest roads were closed only from May 20 to May 28 and that the citizens of Upper Gatineau and of all western Quebec will welcome as usual the numerous visitors of our beautiful region in the language of their choice?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am a little annoyed at the idea that such situations may occur because in spite of their role customs agents are expected to extend a warm welcome to tourists. I can assure the House that they are not supposed to express any personal opinion, including giving tourist information, and unless I am mistaken it so happens that right beside one of the two bridges mentioned there is a tourist office manned by officials of one of the two implied provinces involved. I will see to it that they do their job as usual, that is without proffering political opinions.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—ALLEGATION MINISTER MISLED HOUSE CONCERNING ADMIRAL BOYLE'S RESIGNATION—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) returned to a question of privilege which he had raised earlier and had deferred in order to give the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) an opportunity to participate. Yesterday the Minister of National Defence was in the House and both members participated in the question of privilege which had been raised by the hon. member for Victoria.

The foundation of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Victoria, were it accepted as a question of privilege, would be the action of the minister in misleading the House in a response he had made earlier to a question concerning the resignation of Admiral Boyle from the national defence service. Yesterday the minister indicated that as a result of the question raised by the hon. member for Victoria he had reviewed his files, and reaffirmed to the House the position he had taken earlier.

Therefore, there could scarcely be a question of any attempt, innocent or otherwise, to mislead the House. Obviously, what is at issue is a description given by the minister yesterday that one impression was taken by the admiral and a similar impression taken by the hon. member for Victoria, which are different from the impression of the circumstances taken by the minister. Obviously, that gives rise to a difference of opinion which, of course, does not fall within the bounds of a question of privilege.

MR. BALDWIN—ALLEGED ATTEMPT BY GOVERNMENT TO INTERFERE WITH NEWS MEDIA

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, attention was drawn to a possible question of privilege by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). Part of the foundation was an article referring to certain remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal). Other references were made to actions or alleged actions taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who was not in the House yesterday. I had indicated that it would be appropriate, certainly so far as those members who wished to contribute to the question and make reference to the actions or alleged actions of the Minister of Transport were concerned, that this should await his presence. I see the minister here.

So far as the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is concerned, it does not seem to me that he is put on the defensive in the sense of being accused of anything in respect of these questions. I observe that the hon. member is not here today. There has been some indirect information to the effect that perhaps there is some explanation for this absence, but in the circumstances I wonder whether it would not be appropriate for those members who are here today and who wish to participate in the discussion to do so. Unless I hear during the course of their remarks some reason to defer until the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is present, I would prefer to have them make their contributions now. Then probably I would stand the matter over until the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is in the House, unless there is some reason to behave differently.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) telephoned me about two hours ago. He is engaged in a court action in the province of Quebec, I believe in connection with the Air Canada issue. I think he is most anxious to make some comments. There is a separation between the allegations with respect to him upon which a question of privilege might be founded, and the situation relating to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). They are quite separable. Since the Minister of Transport is here, as are others who wish to comment, it may be that the Chair might feel disposed to proceed and hear the discussion. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont did ask me to indicate to the House and to the Chair that he would appreciate the opportunity to enlarge upon the comments he has made, which he is most anxious to do in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Then I think I will proceed with the course of action I have outlined and continue with the comments, unless I see some reason to interrupt them on the basis of fairness to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to stress the fact that the most basic duty of parliament is the protection of our freedoms, not the least of which is freedom of the press; in other words, to protect the right of fair comment by the press on all matters whatsoever, including comments on members of this House or members of the cabinet.

Last weekend the Canadian magazine failed to appear in the province of Saskatchewan, directly because distribution was withheld by two newspapers which carry the supplement in that province. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the editor of the Canadian magazine, in an open-line radio program yesterday which subsequently has been quoted extensively in the news media, stated that he was advised by lawyers of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on Friday, June 3, at 6 p.m., that legal action would follow if the Canadian magazine appeared. He further stated that he had sought legal advice and was told that if the article's facts were correct there were no grounds for libel; and since he believed the facts to be correct the decision was made to publish.

I also draw attention to the fact that Mr. M. C. Sifton, president of the company which carries the Canadian magazine in Saskatchewan and which failed to carry the article in that particular issue, has been widely quoted as using these words: "The straw that broke the camel's back was when we were threatened by a legal suit for defamation. Quite frankly, we would just as soon not find ourselves in that position".

It seems to me that there is, therefore, apparently a possible attempt to prevent publication and subsequent distribution of the Canadian magazine allegedly by persons acting on behalf of the Minister of Transport. Therefore, I consider that the principle that parliament has the direct duty to protect freedom of the press may possibly have been grossly violated. If such violation has taken place, then I contend that it directly interferes with the rights and privileges of this parliament properly to perform one of its basic functions. In other words, a minister of the Crown—in this case the Minister of Transport—could possibly, either directly or indirectly, bring pressure on two newspapers to the extent that they failed to distribute the section of their paper carrying an article entitled "The Unhappy Landing of Otto Lang".

It seems to me that there is certainly nothing in the rules of this House, and certainly nothing in the traditions of British parliamentary democracy, that permits a member of the House, particularly a member of the cabinet, to have any part whatsoever in using, directly or indirectly, personal influence to stop publication or fair comment by a free press. This situation requires nothing short of a full investigation by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. In addition, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should appear as a witness before that committee so that the Canadian people know whether or not it is government policy to allow such things to happen as apparently may have happened here.

There is another aspect of this matter which I believe interferes with the privileges of every member. The duties of a member are fairly well known and rather clearly defined, and I contend that it is a breach of the privileges of all members of the House when one member, or representatives acting on behalf of that member, may have used their positions or their influence for purposes of self-interest, in that it reflects on the image that the Canadian people have of politicians in general and of members of the House in particular. That can only breed an attitude of disdain and cynicism on the part of the Canadian people toward members of parliament, and thereby hinder and damage the ability of members of the House, who have come here to work in the best interests of Canada, to perform their jobs properly.

The article referred to the Minister of Transport in various ways, but I quote only three words. It said he was "aloof", "obstinate" and "sometimes obnoxious". While the Minister of Transport obviously may not agree with this—and all of us would probably not agree with it if it were said about us in particular—nevertheless, is it not fair comment that such remarks in the press should not be suppressed, whether or not the Minister of Transport likes it or whether or not any other member of the House might like it if it were said of him?

Finally, if this incident turns out to be in fact as it has been reported, then I believe the committee on privileges and elections has no alternative not only to consider it but to come to the conclusion that the resignation of the Minister of Transport from the government or his dismissal by the Prime Minister be requested. Indeed, I would go further and say that if the facts are established as being true, the Minister of Transport should no longer hold a seat in the House. I have no hesitation in supporting the motion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that this entire situation should be examined by the committee on privileges and elections in order that the people of Canada and the House in particular will know what really happened and that the matter is being properly dealt with.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: —I believe even some of the words quoted by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) reveal the absence of any question of privilege here, since the words he quoted suggested that the distribution of these magazines was withheld by the newspapers themselves. There was a difference of view in some quarters as to whether or not that was the right legal position for them to take. But surely the hon. member is not suggesting—and I hope no hon. member would suggest—that a member of parliament is not protected also by some of the laws of the land in relation to libel or slander.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I know that many of us in politics frequently go a long way in simply turning the other cheek when various instances of defamation arise, and surely in each case it is a personal decision whether we ought to do that. In this particular case I have reached the personal conclusion that it had been done too often and that I should take a stand in exercising my legal rights, and I drew that to the attention of the people who were associated with the particular publication.

I will not say anything more about that, because the actual issues involved may well be resolved before the courts. But I want to say two things. First of all, I believe it important that I take a step such as this because of the increasing tendency of persons in political life to be maligned in such a way that it might be even less attractive for others who might regard a political career as a possibility, to enter that career. Certainly, I may say that it has very serious costs which I wish hon. members would take very carefully into consideration. It may be that as a member of parliament I could continue to turn the other cheek, but in the end I must have regard for the consequences and impact upon the attitudes and feelings of my family and my friends.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Secondly, I would like to talk about the way the allegations have been brought to the House. I presume that the switch from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to the hon. member for Leeds has meant a difference in standard and in approach between them, but you will notice that in introducing this matter the hon. member for Leeds, who ended grandly by suggesting that my seat should be put on the line over the issue, very carefully avoided following certain parliamentary procedures in making a charge by laying his seat on the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: In matters such as this, members of parliament may actually participate in the spread of remarks, innuendo and slander, with what may be fair comment in reporting by the press, by the way in which they raise these matters in this place. I suggest that the hon. member for Leeds should not be allowed from time to time to introduce matters in this way without making a charge.

Mr. Cossitt: I did.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member said that certain principles "may have possibly been grossly violated". He said, also, "... to allow such things to happen as apparently may have happened here". I wrote down these words as he said them. He also said "... may have used their positions". In all these instances he is making suggestions, charges and innuendo, of what? If he is charging wrongdoing of me as a member of parliament, let him make a charge and let him lay his seat on the line to back that charge.

• (1520)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons has just observed one of the worst examples of cloying hypocrisy since many of us came here.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said he thought the time had come to take a stand. The only time the Minister of Transport decided the time had come to take a stand on behalf of members of parliament was when the heat got so hot on him that he decided he had to climb out of his Jetstar.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): When the positions of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were distorted in the press and when his personality was examined in the press, was he defended by the Minister of Transport? No, the Minister of Transport sat on the sidelines and grinned. When the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) was leader of the opposition and an hon. member of this House of Commons, when he was attacked and when his position was distorted by the press and the public of this country in many ways, and by the Liberal party, did the minister stand up and defend the hon. member for Halifax? No. The honour of this House and the honour of members of parliament have no more glowing an advocate than when the advocate himself is attacked in the press. That is why I call it cloying hypocrisy.

Let me get to the merits of the case, now that we have disposed of the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The minister may have been upset by the fact that his story is juxtaposed beside an advertisement in the same publication saying, "Losing 78 pounds saved my marriage". I do not know whether that has anything to do with it.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That's pretty cheap.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question at stake here in this proposed question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is essentially as it concerns the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). There have been other allegations concerning statements made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), and there has been some indication of the intention of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to raise questions about some broadcasting matter in Newfoundland.

However, in so far as the Minister of Transport is concerned, the question is whether the minister has exercised that legal right which is the right of every citizen, and in so doing has done something which exceeds or in some way offends the privileges of a member of parliament. That is the issue at stake, and I think we ought to avoid arguing the matter as though we had accepted the fact that that was a question of privilege, and concentrate on whether that constitutes a question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was just clearing my throat. I am now coming to that part of the argument. I think all hon. members of the House of Commons know, when we are dealing with a matter of this kind, we are not obliged to make out a case but we are obliged to make out a prima facie case at first blush and then the matter is to be examined by the committee. Aside from the point raised by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), which I think he did in a very quiet and responsible way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —the question is whether it offends the privileges of this House for a minister of the Crown, in the exercise of what he has called his personal rights as an individual, to deal with a newspaper or to deal with a publication. Is he in any different position in this country than the ordinary citizen, particularly when the article refers directly to the minister of the Crown and his position of esteem—at least in the opinion of the journalist—in the country and to his capacity as a minister of the Crown and as a member of parliament? Is that minister in any different position today?

Is the case affected in any way by the fact that between the Canadian magazine and the newspapers which are its benefactors, in terms of articles which are published each week, there is an indemnity between F.P. Publications and the Canadian magazine so that if they, in a sense, said "Publish and be damned", the newspaper might refuse to publish on the somewhat specious grounds that it might face an action? Is the fact that, even in that event, it would face no loss, a consideration for this House and the committee in deciding the extent of the pressure which was obviously brought by the minister through his communication, by his admission, to those newspapers? Is it significant that all the other newspapers in this country except the ones in Saskatoon and Regina published that article about which the minister complains so vehemently?

Aside from the fact that there is nothing in that article other than what every member of parliament may from time to time have to put up with, I do not think there is a solicitor in this House who, even looking at it at first blush, would ever consider it libellous and slanderous. Does that make a difference in the case of a minister of the Crown? Hon. members might ask why I single out a minister of the Crown. What has happened to the publishing and news dissemination industry in this country is that great newspapers and publishing houses in Canada own radio stations and television stations, all of which are licensed by the CRTC, which is not a creature of this parliament but a creature of the government. Therefore, in those circumstances I think it weighs very heavily upon the back of any minister of the Crown, who is in a different position in that sense than anyone else to approach a newspaper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I read the article in question and I did not find, quite frankly, anything to justify the letter or to justify the hurt the minister apparently felt.

Some hon. Members: Who are you?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Apparently I am one who is not nearly as sensitive as this minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The minister appeared on television last night and said he was very concerned about this article because it might discourage others from going into public life. That is not what discourages others from going into public life; it is the hypocrisy of some ministers of the Crown.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it is a very important consideration for this House to examine the depth of impact of a threat to sue by a minister of the Crown who is much different from anyone on the street.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): When that threat is made to an organization which has interests in other publishing and information dispensing fields which are subject to the jurisdiction of a board or commission which is answerable to the government of Canada, that makes the threat a much deeper one. This is not a case of a thin-skinned minister who could not stand the heat and decided to write a letter. This is a case of limiting the publication to one area, flying in the face of an indemnity to indicate the influence, at least on a prima facie basis, that was brought to bear upon that publication by a minister of the Crown—not Otto Lang, barrister and solicitor, but the Minister of Transport: as the article says, the only one who wanted to be Minister of Finance. That is the impact. That is the point in this matter, that the minister has a responsibility not to attempt to suppress any information anywhere in this country as a result of his position.

• (1530)

I should like to see tabled the legal opinion, dated the day it was given, that the article was defamatory, with the authorities upon which the solicitor relied. The facts of the matter are that a number of other publications in this country were not intimidated by this minister, and if there was an examination, as I am sure there was, by the solicitors for those other newspapers which dared to publish in face of the threat by the minister, then I would think not all of the solicitors would be out of step but the solicitors for F.P. Publications.

I do not know whether a case will be made out before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. We are not here to decide that; we are here to decide whether there is a prima facie case.

An hon. Member: You have made up your mind.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You bet I have made up my mind. The committee on privileges and elections should decide whether it ought to examine the matter further. I think the case reeks of that prima facie quality and the matter should go to the committee where it could be dealt with fully.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for only a few minutes, and I hope what I have to say may help to clear the air a bit and get us to the point that is really before the House.

The first thing I should like to say is that I deplore the way in which cabinet ministers, almost every time a serious issue of this kind is raised, draw out the old argument that the hon. member raising the matter ought to put his seat on the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Nowhere in the Standing Orders, nowhere in the rules, nowhere in the precedents, is there a requirement that that be done. In a few cases in our history it has been done voluntarily by the member making the attack or making the charge, but there is no requirement that any time a member of the House raises an issue he should put his seat on the line.

The second thing I should like to say is that I fully support the right of any member of this House, whether a private member or minister of the Crown, to take whatever action he feels necessary under the law if he feels he has been libelled or slandered. There is no question about that. It is not so long ago that a former minister of finance, Mr. John Turner, took action against the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for something that had been said which he regarded as defamatory. I believe the matter was settled out of court. I hope I will be understood if I say, just to show that my stand is a consistent one, that some 30 years ago I sued for libel in the Supreme Court of Ontario over certain things that had been written against me. My hon. friend to my right wants to know if I won. The answer is yes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hasten to add that the court ruled I had not been damaged, so all I received was $1 and costs. Of course, when one hires a lawyer, costs are important.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to be clear on this. In my view, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has every right, if he feels he has been treated in a defamatory way, to take action under the law. But I would argue that that is not the issue before us, and just as we should not be discussing any requirement on the part of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) or the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to put their seats on the line, neither should we be questioning the right of the Minister of Transport to seek action if he feels he has been libelled.

What is at issue—and Your Honour has already made that point and asked us to address ourselves to it—is whether the privileges of parliament, the privileges of the country which we represent, are interfered with or are violated when a minister of the Crown uses his weight as a minister to stop publication by certain newspapers in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That, to me, is the whole issue. I hope the discussion will stay on that issue and that we will not be tempted to get into too many things that members might like to say about the Minister of Transport or the hon. member for Leeds. The issue is very clear. Is it true, or is it not true, that the minister, by weight of his position as minister, was able to prohibit or prevent the publication of the Canadian magazine in two newspapers in Saskatchewan last Saturday and, if so, where does that fit into our rules?

I imagine that some who take part in this debate today may ask what Standing Order or what rule says that newspapers have the right to publish no matter what it is they print. The question of whether something that has been published is libellous is decided afterwards by the courts. But surely the right to stop publication, without going to court, is as serious as putting people in jail because they might do something, because of their thoughts or because of their opposition to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what this House should be doing is referring that simple question to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have carefully read the proposed motion put yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River. That motion is based mainly, on the quotations attributed to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal), but there are references to other and related matters and it seems that it is the action of the Minister of Transport that is in question. Perhaps the motion ought to be reworded. I would be happier if it were and if we were dealing with the one simple issue: was it a violation of the rights of this parliament—more than the right of this parliament, the rights of this country—that we represent, to have the freedom to publish interfered with, as apparently was done by the action of the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Speaker, I said when I rose that I had only three things I wanted to say. Those are the three things. Let us have no more of this argument that members of the opposition lay their seats on the line. Let us not deny, no matter how strongly we may feel about the Minister of Transport on this side of the House, his right to go to the courts to seek redress for what he may feel to be libellous. But let us not in this House rest content, or rest at all, if the freedom of newspapers to publish in this country is being interfered with by the heavy hand of the Minister of Transport.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say on this question, but I think a few words ought to be said. Perhaps what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said is correct: there is no Standing Order of the House which requires a member of parliament to take responsibility for his own utterances. That may be true. But surely there is a sense of honour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: What do you people know about honour?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Surely there is a sense of honour which is more important than the Standing Orders. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a rather distinguished member of the House, but other members of the House in the past have taken an entirely different view of this question, a view entirely different from that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Andre: That is a specious argument.

Mr. MacEachen: Among them are two former prime ministers of Canada, one of them Sir Wilfrid Laurier who raised the point in a famous debate. The hon. member may recall, when he was absent from the House for a short period and was not a member of parliament, that there was a case before Mr. Speaker Michener in which the leader of the opposition of the day put down a motion asking the House of Commons to investigate the conduct of a particular member on the government side. That leader of the opposition was the late Mr. Pearson. He put a motion down asking that certain details of the conduct of an hon. member be investigated by the standing committee. What was the ruling made by Mr. Speaker Michener as he dealt with this serious question? He said that no member could be investigated in the House of Commons unless a charge was made.

It is a fundamental question. You cannot waltz around the issue by making vague motions and ask for a member's conduct to be investigated unless a charge is made. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is advocating a course of irresponsibility. That is why I do not accept his proposition that a charge is unnecessary—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is not.

Mr. MacEachen: —on the part of an hon. member if the conduct of another hon. member is to be investigated.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was a misinterpretation.

Mr. MacEachen: Therefore, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and wish to ask the minister a question. Does he not agree that I was not saying that a member did not have to lay a charge? I was contending that nothing in the rules or precedents requires such a member to put his seat on the line. That was the point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it not true that Mr. Speaker Michener's ruling did not change that position?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, of course there is no Standing Order which recommends that an hon. member should put his seat on the line. But it was advocated in the House in earlier days, when standards of honour apparently were a bit higher, that if any member falsely accused another member, and his charge could not be supported by a standing committee, he should put his seat on the line. Otherwise this is nothing but total irresponsibility.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says, "Well, it is all right for a member to take action if something is published. I did it myself". The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre makes that case. Surely, what is possible for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should be possible for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang).

Mr. Hees: Nobody is arguing against that.

Mr. MacEachen: Of course, the argument made by the official opposition is that what the Minister of Transport did in taking private legal action or seeking legal advice was improper. But there is another point I ask the House to consider. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre right in saying that if an hon. member seeks to prevent defamation from happening, that offends against the privileges of the House?

An hon. Member: Defamation of what?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. MacEachen: Defamation of character. Does it offend anyone's privileges if I, feeling that a publication will defame me or slander me, prevent that defamation or slander from taking place? Am I offending any member's privileges.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Where is the defamation in the article?

Mr. Hees: Yes, where is it?

Mr. MacEachen: It would be monstrous if any member of the House were to suggest, for example, that if the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) felt a publication coming out would damage his good name or that of any other member, he should not be entitled to the recourse of any ordinary citizen and stop it. That is the issue. I hope Mr. Speaker will not be party to that monstrous suggestion made by hon. members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has sought the floor several times. I deferred recognizing the hon. member because he indicated yesterday that he proposed to explore new ground. Therefore, I thought I ought to hear those who intended to contribute to the main question.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to debate this question with learned members who have served a long time as members of this House. Let me reinforce my point and make it clear. This question, I think, is one of the most important issues which has arisen in the five years I have served as a member of parliament. Is not the fundamental question before the House the freedom of the press of this country? It is not a question of whether the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) feels he was defamed, or if I or anybody else feel we might be defamed. Surely we are considering a fundamental question, the protection of the rights of the press of this country.

We are also considering the responsibilities of a cabinet minister who may influence events and has some power to determine what eventually happens in the press, particularly with regard to licensing arrangements. Aside from all that, what we are doing in the House is in order to be absolutely certain that the freedom of the press, the underlying foundation of liberty and democracy, is not threatened. I argue seriously that the individual member of parliament who is without administrative or legislative responsibility, except as to the manner of his voting, is in a position fundamentally different from that of a cabinet minister who may be in a position to exercise power and influence over a publication. Surely that must be taken into consideration.

I am not greatly concerned about what was or was not said in that particular article, but I am desperately concerned about the liberty of the press and if the press feels it cannot publish because of its concern. I do not want the press to feel that cabinet action may make it impossible for it to carry out its responsibilities.

I find the reaction of hon. members opposite astonishing, for I consider this one of the most important, significant questions parliament has considered in the last several years. The question is, how are we to act in this House, and what protection does this country's press have against the possibility of intimidation by cabinet ministers?

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself to several aspects of the matter before you. I suggest that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) raised not only the question concerning the conduct of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang); he raised in this House what appears to be a whole series of courses of conduct on the part of members of the government. He suggested that if Your Honour found a prima facie case of privilege, he would move the following motion:

> That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections inquire into the statement alleged to have been made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, which appear in today's edition of the Globe and Mail, and into related or other incidents, which indicate that the rights of parliament on behalf of the people to have full and unabridged reporting of the actions of government are being threatened.

I do not stand to make a charge against anyone. I do stand to put certain facts and circumstances before this House which I think should be considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I first want to address myself to the question involving the Minister of Transport. There is no question that the Minister of Transport has the right to take legal action against anyone for defamation, as we all do. No one questions that. However, that is not the issue. The issue is that through behind-the-scenes means, because of his position as a cabinet minister he was able to stop publication in a certain province of an issue of the Canadian magazine. If I objected to the publication of some article about me, because I am an opposition member and not a member of the government there would be no way I could stop publication of that article anywhere in Canada. They would pay no attention to me.

What would have happened had I gone to the Minister of Transport and told him that they were going to publish an article about me in which I was going to be slandered, libelled, called terrible things, calling me stupid and saying other things about me? If I asked the minister to stop publication of that article and to threaten on my behalf, would he do it? Not likely. The minister used his position as a minister of the Crown. Because he is a powerful minister he was able to get the publication stopped in Saskatchewan. That is the issue.

We can sue for libel and slander. I have never bothered and I never will, because I know it is useless for a politician unless it is something so horrendous that I would have no choice, a "live or die" matter where it had to go into the courts. I have had things written about me ten times worse than what appeared in that article. I am dumbfounded that the minister is so thin-skinned. It is the position of the minister that makes his course of action so distasteful.

I am not laying my seat on the line. I will lay my seat on the line at the time of the next election. The people of St. John's West will decide on my conduct at that time. However, I am not laying it on the line for the Minister of Transport or the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). The President of the Privy Council said that we are asking for an investigation of a member. We are asking for no such thing. We are asking that the Standing Committee of Privileges and Elections consider certain facts, to establish them and, once established, to decide whether the privileges of this House have been infringed because of an attempt to interfere with the free publication of stories about members of the House by members of the media. We are asking for facts to be ascertained and a decision made as to whether this is a breach of our privileges.

Another matter arises out of this motion. The other matter was already mentioned. This is a pattern of conduct by the government. It falls into line with the investigation which the CRTC was requested to make into Radio Canada with regard to alleged separatist bias. This is all part of a pattern of conduct of an arrogant, power-mad government that is going to stop anyone critical of them if they can do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There is a third matter which I wish to place before the House. It is related to other incidents which should be considered by this House. I refer to the question of whether it is proper for a member of the government to own, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) has done since 1968, 49 per cent of the shares of a second television and radio channel in the province of Newfoundland. I want to put that before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I am not charging that that hon. gentleman has done anything improper or attempted to use any improper influence. However, I submit that it is not proper for a minister of the Crown in the government which appoints the members to the Canadian Radio Television Commission under section 5 of the act. It not only appoints the members to a seven-year term, and they can be reappointed, but decides under section 7 what pay they are to get.

Should a member of the government who has that power also be involved in ownership of a communications media in this country? I submit that is a question that has to be considered by this House—whether that is a proper situation for a minister of the Crown. The hon. gentleman in question has been a member of the government since 1968. It has been nine years since that situation has been regulated. Some decisions and steps must be taken. I submit it puts the members of the CRTC in an extremely invidious position in having to decide on matters indirectly related to the minister.

It is true that the minister now has a trust: these shares are held in trust by trustees. The minister may not have anything to do with them and no influence over them, but it is not a blind trust. The minister knows he owns the shares. This is a matter that will come before the CRTC on June 21. It will involve the actual AM radio stations becoming owned by the trust if the CRTC approves. This is a matter that should be considered.

I will give an example of interference in communications and the suspicion that arises in this situation. The 51 per cent owner of Newfoundland Broadcasting Limited is Mr. Jeff Sterling, a Liberal candidate in the 1975 election—a Liberal reformed candidate. He has been a Liberal supporter since 1949. That gentleman has the most eccentric scheduling on his television and radio stations. He owns a second TV network in Newfoundland, five AM stations, and he has a licence for nine FM stations. A comparable situation would be for a member of the government to own Global TV or half of the CTV affiliates in Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: They do not like it. They do not like to be questioned. I will give an example of what can happen through Liberal establishment ownership of the television and radio media in this country. A week ago last Friday I was invited by the CTV to appear on the program "Question Period", a public affairs program. When I got to Newfoundland I looked in the paper to see when it would be shown by the CTV affiliate, CJON. It was shown in the rest of Canada on Sunday afternoon. When I looked at the paper I discovered that it was going to be shown at three o'clock Monday morning.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crosbie: I could not believe it. I did not think even Mr. Sterling could be so eccentric as to have a public affairs program shown at three a.m. on Monday. Even I would not stay up for that. On Tuesday I checked to see if the program had been shown. I was told it had not been shown because they had lost the tape, or something stupid like that. We checked again this morning and found that it still had not been shown. I guess they are looking for the tape. That may not have anything to do with the fact that I am a Progressive Conservative member of parliament, or that I have had political disagreements with members of the media, but it does arouse some suspicion.

What I am putting before the House in connection with this motion of the hon. member for Peace River is another example of Liberal government domination of the communication media, interference with the free flow of information from members on both sides of this House to the people of Canada. We all know what we say here does not matter much if it is not reported. If it is not reported, how can it have any influence on what happens in the country?

There are three matters that should be considered. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) is not in his seat today. He has alluded to some of this conspiracy. We cannot go into that in detail today. There are the actions of the Minister of Transport, using his position in the government to stop a publication. It is a new offence. It is not "lese majeste" but "lese Lang".

There is the control of TV and radio and the position of a minister of the Crown, whether a conflict of interest arises and whether it should be permitted. I had to give up my business interests when I got into public life. Does it behoove a member of the Crown, or not, particularly when it is a media that is controlled absolutely by the government or its agency? There are other matters to which the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont alluded.

● (1600)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has managed by some ingenuous connection to link this to the principal matter before the House at the present time, and I suppose on that basis it is justified. However, I must say, with respect, that it is drawing a very long bow to use this particular incident to generate discussion about a matter which I am perfectly well aware has been on the hon. member's mind for some considerable time and one which he has discussed with a great many people, excluding only myself.

First, I am grateful to the hon. member. In view of the fact that it has been brought up, I assume I am entitled to make some response. I assure Your Honour that I do not intend to do so in detail. I am grateful to the hon. member for his emphasis on the fact that he is not laying any charges, nor is he suggesting any impropriety on my part. I want to reinforce that comment of his by saying categorically at the outset that in all my time in public life I have never on a single occasion sought to do anything to influence in any way, shape or form the output of any of the broadcasting associations or organizations with which I have had a very long relationship.

I would invite any member present, including the hon. member for St. John's West, to talk to the dozens, indeed, to the hundreds of people over the years who have worked for those organizations. They will, I am sure, confirm to a man that there has never been, on my part, the slightest suggestion of interference in any way. I want to lay that idea to rest in case there should be any indication that some kind of unreasonable or improper pressure has been applied. In fact, quite the contrary. The truth of the matter is, as anyone who has been in Newfoundland will attest, that the hon. member for St. John's West, both before he entered this House and since, gets substantially more coverage—not necessarily at three o'clock in the morning—than I do. Indeed, the opposition members generally have had that experience over the years.

Incidentally, in case he does still feel there was any relationship between my association and the kind of treatment we get on "Question Period", let me assure him that I commiserate with him because I, too, had to sit up until three o'clock in the morning in the vain hope I might see myself on the program about six weeks ago. Sad to relate, my experience was precisely the same as that of the hon. member, which I believe reinforces my argument that there was no association.

Having said all that, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that hon. members are very familiar with this issue and with the problems it creates not only for me but for all members who before entering this chamber had businesses or enterprises which in some form were subject to a degree of government regulation. I have said before in this House, and I am content to repeat it now, that this represents not only a personal matter to the extent that it creates a problem for me, with my background in business, but that there is a much broader question of principle here—and the hon. member has touched on it—as to the way in which someone wishing to become a member of this House and who is engaged in a business or other enterprise which in some way is subject to regulatory applications—and there are hundreds of agencies which might very well be so involved—manages to deal with the situation.

I want to make one point in this regard to illustrate what I have sought to do over the years in this connection. The hon. member said the matter ought to have been resolved before now. I sought to resolve it, as he well knows. I sought to do so by going well beyond the guidelines. In the first place, my association with this enterprise was known long before I entered parliament. It was known to those who elected me, and it has been known since. So there was no concealment. I went beyond that in recent times when the CRTC gave me permission—a permission which was unique—to form a trust. No one has ever sought to describe it as a blind trust, for obvious reasons. But the CRTC, in what I believe was a unique decision, authorized the formation of a trust so that I could transfer to that organization the decision-making with regard to my holdings in that company. That trust made a decision to seek to sell my interest in the organization.

That is a matter of record. It is public knowledge, and hearings were held with regard to it. Far from having any control over the CRTC, the result of that hearing was a decision to turn down my trustees and deny me the right to sell my holdings in the organization. This having happened, there is clearly not very much more which can be done by my trustees other than, presumably, to seek to resolve the situation in some other way, as I gather they are now doing. Let me assure the House that I was not aware of what the trustees were seeking to do until the public announcement with regard to the new proposal was placed on public record in newspapers and the like several weeks ago. I still do not know the details, and I shall not until the hearings are held. To endeavour, through this interlocking proposal, to suggest that the hon. member may be properly aggrieved in terms of the treatment he may have received from the stations, or his views on how the stations are being operated, to the suggestion, indirectly, that I have some responsibility for that, is clearly unreasonable in the light of what I have said.

Let me end by saying this. I am not referring now to the matter of substance which brought on this particular intervention by the hon. member for St. John's West. I am answering a particular comment which was made by him. I have no argument about his raising it. I am delighted that finally he has had the opportunity to do so in the House. If he will look back to the reports in Hansard about two or three years ago when this matter was raised earlier, he will find that I invited whatever agency of the House is appropriate for the task to consider not only my situation, one which, by the way, I would be very glad to lay out in considerably more detail than I have today, but also the predicament which is created by these circumstances for someone who throughout his public life has never sought unreasonably or in any other way to influence the media and who has tried to level with members on both sides of the House.

I emphasize that if the House wishes to examine this question of the way in which people in public life have interests relating in some way to their activities as members of parliament, I would have no objection whatever to these matters being discussed. I would be more than happy to outline what my situation has been over the years and, incidentally, to put forward a few proposals which I believe might help to resolve this awkward situation, not only for me and not only for other members who might be affected but for those who in future might wish to enter public life and who might question their desire to do so given the kind of circumstances we have heard about in the House today.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly because I have had some experience of these matters, having held the portfolio which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) holds today. During the period in which I held that portfolio, any time I was described in the terms he is objecting to—I have read this article very carefully, and as far as I can see the most serious accusations I can find are those describing him as pompous, objectionable and obstinate—while I was minister of transport, any time I was only called those things was a banner day for me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Any action taken by a minister is bound to be controversial to some extent. Members of the press have a perfect right to express any opinions they may hold about what a minister is doing. That is an essential part of public life. The minister's threat that he is going to bring charges against a newspaper or a newspaper reporter because of an article which simply says that he is pompous, obstinate and obnoxious is about the most childish thing I have ever heard. It degrades the whole public life of this country. It indicates that ministers cannot take criticism as well as they can hand it out. As Harry Truman said, "If you cannot stand the heat, for God's sake get out of the kitchen and get on with the business of the country."

• (1610)

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I choose to intervene in this debate because I consider this to be a serious and fundamental right of a citizen who happens to be a member of parliament. Regardless of what has been said in the article, every citizen, whether that citizen happens to be a member of parliament, a driller or any other worker, has the right to phone a newspaper and say that he has been maligned, held in contempt and ridiculed. I have had occasion to do this myself. I cannot believe that hon. members can resort to political pettiness, venom and vindictiveness in the manner which I have seen displayed here.

An hon. Member: Like you are doing.

Mrs. Holt: I am disturbed by the fact that people in the gallery are watching this kind of political plaything on such an important point of privilege. I am not sure that this is not a matter for the civil authorities and not a question of privilege of this House under citation 113 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. I feel it is the right of every member to use the legal remedies open to every citizen, without members of this House compromising that right in any way by adding to and compounding the ridicule and the contempt. This is a basic right we all have.

I am presently involved in a lawsuit. It was a situation where I picked up the phone and said that I was going to proceed against them if, on the advice of my lawyer, I find out I had been slandered and maligned.

An hon. Member: After the publication.

Mrs. Holt: I have that right. As much as I believe in the freedom of the press, and even in the freedom of the bad press, I also have the right to challenge the press. If they are not accurate, I have that right. It is not open season on members of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Some of us chose our job with great seriousness—

An hon. Member: All of us did.

Mrs. Holt: When we chose to enter this business and to serve our country, it did not give the media or any other person—neither my colleagues nor the opposition—the right to demean me. As far as my reputation is concerned, I am not in the public domain. I have built a reputation over many years, as has the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). Nobody has the right to malign me. This is a very important point and it should not be a political plaything, with people talking Liberal or Conservative or getting even with someone they happen not to like in this House.

My serving this country does not give everybody the right to attack me, nor does it give them the right to attack a minister. That minister and I have the right to phone a newspaper. The reason a Saskatoon newspaper would withdraw a story, just as a Vancouver newspaper did in my case, is because they know the truth about us and may be very nervous that they are indeed libelling or holding an individual up for contempt.

We are free citizens, just as the press must be free. I believe very strongly in a free press, even if it is a bad press. But I disagree heartily with the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) who said that the press might fear they are being inhibited. If they are being inhibited to be accurate, that is the greatest thing that can happen. In no way should any member of this House share in the slander, the innuendo or the bad journalism which may be perpetuated here. Hon. members have contributed to it today; they have fed it and have shared in it. This may be a point of privilege, but I think it is not. We have a fundamental civil right to phone a newspaper and say that we have been slandered. I intend to pursue my lawsuit after being informed by a lawyer that I have one.

Citation 113 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition reads as follows:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" . . . It should be dealt with by a motion—

Mr. Speaker, you are aware of all this. I would like to refer to the part which deals with insults and obstructions during debate, which reads as follows:

> Libels upon members and aspersions upon them in relation to parliament and interference of any kind with their official duties, are breaches of the privileges of the members.

I suspect in that regard there may be a question of privilege.

Mr. Hees: The press gallery is filing out.

Mrs. Holt: I would like to jump one sentence in the quotation—

An hon. Member: Jump two, Simma.

Mrs. Holt: The citation continues:

> An attack in a newspaper article is not a breach of privilege, unless it comes within the definition of privileges above given, and then a member is bound to lay on the table the newspaper in which the article complained of appears.

A member's effort to get redress in the civil arena has nothing to do with the procedure of this House. I would like to end my comments today by referring to a definition of some editorial writers. Some of the opposition may be of the same ilk. They are the people who come out of the woods after the battle to shoot the wounded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have had a rather extensive contribution to this question of privilege. I know I will benefit greatly from the contributions yet to come. I would like to get us back to the point.

In so far as the motion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is concerned, there are many ingredients in it. That will have to be given some reflection because it has a rather wide-ranging suggestion containing reference to a deliberate attempt on the part of the government to affect or influence relationships with the press and the reporting of activities here. That will await contribution by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) who inspired the motion.

I do not propose to be able to deal with that motion simply. However, there is one aspect with respect to it, and that is the article which appeared in the Canadian magazine over the weekend concerning the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). In so far as that point is concerned, we have certainly had a good deal of discussion. We have all agreed that it is the right of every member, as it is the right of every citizen, to take legal redress in the courts for anything. No citizen loses that right by becoming a member of the House of Commons. It is quite clear, in all of the readings on privilege, that it is erroneous to presume that a member loses any of the rights of an ordinary citizen.

One of the most important foundations of a matter of privilege is that a member enjoys neither more nor less of the rights he enjoyed as a private citizen before coming into this chamber. That has been generally conceded today to apply to all members of the House. The question has become one of two, really. Is the Minister of Transport in some separate position from that of an ordinary member; and, second, in attempting to exercise the legal right of any citizen has the minister used an influence which is not described in the motion but has been referred to?

To suggest the minister has exercised what is no more than a legal right does not meet the point. Surely it must be suggested that the minister has used an exercise which goes beyond legal terms and legal means and has done something by the use of undue influence as a result of his position as a minister. Those are the ingredients which are important if the alleged question of privilege is to succeed on those grounds.

I have not heard much discussion on those points, but I have heard discussion on some other points which were developed before. If other hon. members want to contribute, I hope their comments will be in respect of those points.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will try to limit my remarks to the points you have just made. The question before the House is whether the minister has acted beyond what a citizen or even a member of parliament should, and whether his office, in fact, came into play in regard to these events. It is impossible to know that in terms of this debate. That is why I thought the minister would have welcomed an inquiry to determine whether he did abuse his office. Why does he protest so much if, in fact, what happened is as the minister has set forth in the House? It seems to me there is an excellent argument for examining before an objective body this most serious question as to whether a minister of the Crown was not protecting himself but protecting his office, which he has no right to do in terms of telephoning or contacting newspapers.

The second point I want to make is this. There is legal procedure which the minister could have used in the circumstances. He could have proceeded by way of ex parte interim injunction.

Mr. Lang: I did.

Mr. Leggatt: If the minister did get an injunction, no doubt he will tell us which court he went to and which judge granted him that injunction. That procedure was available to the minister and it would have put the conduct of the minister beyond question. A judge would have had the opportunity to review the facts upon which the minister was alleging libel, and the matter would not have come before the House as it has if the minister had simply instructed his lawyers to proceed forthwith to obtain an injunction of the court against that particular publication. But that is not, as I understand the facts, Mr. Speaker, what occurred. What in fact occurred is that the minister's representatives contacted the newspapers, and only an inquiry can determine whether the minister's name as minister was used and whether the office of minister was used to control what essentially is the freedom of the press.

The point made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) dealt with her own lawsuit, a lawsuit which took place after publication. This matter, of course, took place before publication. I am one of those who has criticized the press on many occasions. But ministers of the Crown, in the way they deal with the press, are in an extremely sensitive position. It is a very fine line as to whether they are protecting their office or their personality. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the only way you can determine in this case whether the minister has, in fact, abused his office is to accept the question of privilege put forward by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) so that this House and the country can be satisfied that no abuse of the privileges of the House took place, or there was no abuse of the privileges of the press. I would have expected the minister to welcome such an inquiry so that he can be completely and openly cleared.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some very brief comments. When a Crown minister makes a phone call to a judge concerning a case, his action might be interpreted as interference in the due process of justice. When a minister—

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, since both the hon. member who is speaking and the previous hon. member seem to be under a misapprehension of fact and I think it would be useful if I cleared that up for them. There has been no suggestion by anyone that I at any time telephoned any newspaper in this connection. I did discuss the issue with my solicitors. My solicitors approached the two newspapers in question and indicated that a quia timet injunction was indeed the remedy which would be sought. Faced with that suggestion on the part of my solicitors, the newspapers reviewed their position and, in effect, settled out of court by agreeing not to publish and thus not to create the issue which would have followed in a court action. I think hon. members should know that that was the procedure that was followed, which I take it the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) would agree was a reasonable approach in the circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the minister should not think we do not understand the problems. We understood very well. We know all this but I say that when a minister or an hon. member interferes with the due process of justice, be it even a mere request for information to know the status of the case, this action on the part of the member or his lawyer could be interpreted by the judge as an attempt to interfere with the due process of justice. When a member or a minister, directly or through designated persons, his lawyers, put pressure on the management of newspapers or other media to prevent the publication of some articles, I consider it as interference with the freedom of the press and particularly as a direct threat to the right to information of the Canadian public. And the situation is even worse if those articles are not favourable to the person who exerted indirectly that pressure.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) severely criticized the actions of the whole Liberal party and I consider that it legitimizes the proposed motion. In any event, in this country we shall study the right to information of the Canadian public which is obviously more and more restricted by interference and political interests.

Mr. Speaker, particularly in the province of Quebec, we just need to witness a growing trend toward concentration of powers by the press as in the case of Power Corporation which as you know is very close to our Liberal friends to understand that what occurred in the case of the minister has probably been happening for a long time and very often and it demonstrates that when you are in power you seem to have all rights.

[English]

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, having spent a couple of years in the chair of the privileges and elections committee does not make me any more competent than any other member of the House to make a contribution on this subject, but I did bear a couple of scars in that process and perhaps I can comment briefly on the matter which is before us.

The first point I want to make is that Your Honour seems to have made very clear to the members of the House that in no circumstances does becoming a member of parliament, a minister, the leader of the opposition or the prime minister in any way reduce the civil and legal rights of any citizen. I thought I had been hearing arguments which were extremely close to that proposition, and I was very glad to hear Your Honour indicate to members of the House that that was absolutely ludicrous.

A second proposition which might be made, as was made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), namely, that an action by a member of parliament in which he threatens the use of civil procedure might in some way be wrong, illegal, immoral or in some fashion be a defence of the minister's position or his office, also falls by the wayside very rapidly, for the same reason that Your Honour gave from the chair, namely, that the right to take an action is not diminished by becoming a member of parliament or a minister. That is, of course, precisely what the hon. member for New Westminster has been arguing, that once you become a member of this place you are somehow prohibited from recourse to your civil rights.

[Mr. Fortin.]

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a worthy contribution, and I should like to endorse what he said. Every time a matter of privilege comes before this House for debate we go into a kind of song and dance as to whether or not a member who makes an accusation automatically puts his seat on the line. He does not.

Mr. Speaker: I might ease the hon. member's mind on that. There is no confusion on that point; that question is clearly settled. The question whether or not a charge has to be laid in order to get a matter before a committee is a totally different question; but there is no precedent at all which supports the thesis that a member, by making such a charge, puts his seat on the line or that he has to put his seat on the line in order to make such a charge.

Mr. Blaker: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for making that point again, but I thought that since it comes up consistently and repeatedly, it was worth making. Another point I wanted to make is—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Blaker: —related to a prima facie case as to whether or not this is a question of privilege. To the best of my knowledge—and I am forced into the position of making a negative argument—I have never seen, in the two years I have had cause to look into precedents in this matter, any instance where the taking of a civil action by a member of parliament, a minister or other person of similar rank in the House of Commons, in any way constituted a diminution of the rights or privileges of any member of parliament. So far as I am aware—and I say this with great humility—the law of privilege makes it clear that it is in addition to those rights which we share with all other Canadian citizens.

The last point I want to make—it has been made by other members, but it deserves repetition—is that since the matter is raised in connection with the freedom of the press, I want to draw a comparison between the journalist or the editor who sees fit to go ahead and publish and takes the chance of having the case put before the independent judiciary for decision as to whether he is guilty of libel or defamation, and the one who does not publish. The issue is precisely whether or not there is truth and justification which will permit and encourage a free press to go ahead and print.

I gather from the comments made in the House that one of these two editors simply failed to have the courage of his profession, and instead of going ahead and publishing if he thought these accusations were truthful and valid, he showed the less attractive side of the profession of journalism and backed away in face of a threat of civil action. I think that no conclusion should be drawn from that event about the case of the civil rights of the minister, and any conclusion that members of the House want to draw should be drawn about the quality of an editor who did not give as his reason for withdrawing that he had made an error but stated his reason as being that he could not face an independent court action against him.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I terminate the discussion by putting a couple of simple questions to you? May I suggest that, in the first instance, in the reference that you made to the rights of members being the same as the rights of average citizens, while it is true that we all enjoy the same rights and, I hope, we have no additional rights, it should be understood that the role of Minister of Transport transcends the role of the average citizen, at least in the perception of the public. In that context I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks made by the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) that the actions taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) were no more and no less than an average citizen would take, what average citizen would have the opportunity to know in advance of the publication of such an article and, indeed, would have the opportunity to stop the publication of that article at least in the province of Saskatchewan? That summarizes the concern that I, at least, and other hon. members have. I would like now to see us begin the debate on the opposition day motion.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to get involved in this potentially substantive question of privilege, as was said earlier by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), but the last intervention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang)—who was formerly minister of justice—prompts me to put these few points before Your Honour. They are in line with Your Honour's admonition given earlier today and what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, that the only issue is whether or not there is a prima facie case here involving the privileges of members of the House and of the people whom we represent.

I must say that I have not seen the article. I was on the move all weekend and I was not in Saskatchewan. I have not had a chance to read it. In terms of the details of the article, I have nothing to say on that, but I am intrigued by what the minister just said, namely, that he instructed his lawyers and as a result his lawyers made a phone call to at least two papers in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lang: Not phone calls, letters.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister says his lawyers wrote letters to the papers in Saskatchewan. I would like to know when the minister was first apprised of the article. Was he given an advance copy? When did he give instructions to his solicitor? Were only the two papers in Saskatchewan involved, or were letters written to all the papers where this article would appear. And now that it has appeared, has the minister given instructions to commence a defamation suit against the papers which published the article? If he has not, is he suggesting a double-standard in defamation, that the facts in the article could defame him in Saskatchewan but could not do so in the rest of the country? I think those are most fundamental questions.

In conclusion, let me say that I think the most fundamental question, because of the weight of office that any minister has, is whether the papers in Saskatchewan—one of them being the Sifton group, F.P. Publications; and I am aware of some of their holdings—are presently involved in any regulatory functions such as share transfers or licence applications. Obviously, the minister did not talk to them and the minister's lawyers might not have known, but in the minds of the papers this might have been inferred as indirect intimidation.

I read in the paper today that Mr. Sifton said that while he did not like the articles and did not think they were good journalism, the straw that broke the camel's back and what decided the papers not to publish was, in effect, the phone call from the minister's lawyers. The inference there could be very invidious, Mr. Speaker, especially if one or both these papers are involved in a chain which has affairs, functions and relationships with some of the federal agencies which govern radio and television. Nothing is impugned against the minister today in a personal way. What is involved is his ministerial responsibility and, coming back to what was said here earlier, whether the weight of his office was used directly or indirectly to suppress the news of this land, and thereby the freedom of the press, which I think is a fundamental privilege of which we are all aware.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, it never ceases to amaze me how far we seem to be able to stray in the House from the subject matter at hand. It seems to me that we are dealing rather specifically with a conflict of rights and responsibilities. We are trying to determine whether or not the freedoms that members have so eloquently expressed in terms of freedom of the press, transgress certain freedoms that belong to individuals and to members. I think we have to examine that question very closely.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you have laid to rest doubts about the right of members to have access to the courts, but what hon. members seem to have forgotten is the right of the other party to have access to the courts as well. Hon. members opposite seem not to have respect for the judiciary or the judicial process, and seem not to realize that were the papers themselves to feel aggrieved, they also would have the right of access to the courts for redress of the grievance. It seems to me that both parties have those rights. It seems to me, as well, that the papers, if they were challenged, as they were, had the right to make the decision, if they felt they were on sound ground, to publish the article and to run the risk of whatever action might or might not be taken, regardless of who suggested it; and the reason they elected not to do so is that they felt they were not on sound ground.

To proceed, as hon. members have suggested, and to send the matter to committee, I believe, puts us into an inquisitorial system that finds anyone in the House guilty before he is proven to be so. I do not think that is the way this country is run. It seems to me that the press has certain freedoms which I as a member of parliament and, indeed, all ministers have the right and obligation to protect. However, what hon. members have failed to recognize and what they have failed to say anything about is the responsibility of the press to this country and to hon. members.

If hon. members have an obligation to protect freedom, they also have an obligation to insist upon press responsibility; and if, in fact, the rights of an hon. member are transgressed, we have an obligation to impose upon the press its responsibility either through the courts, through this House or through telephone calls. I suggest that if a minister has any responsibility beyond that of a member of parliament, it is to be more acutely aware of the freedoms and responsibilities the press has and to insist, even more strongly than a backbencher would insist, that those freedoms and responsibilities are honoured. In no way does that detract from the individual rights of hon. members of this House or of citizens of this country. In terms of protecting themselves and protecting hon. members of this House, the responsibilities of ministers are more acute because they also have to protect all the citizens of this country.

Mr. Speaker: There are other hon. members who have been encouraged to contribute at this late hour of the debate. We have now spent almost two hours on the subject. It is not that it is not an important subject, but we are prejudicing and putting in jeopardy one of the few remaining allotted days for opposition commentary in the House, and I do not want to restrict the rights of hon. members. After all, we are not dealing with the course of conduct of one minister. Reference has been made in a rather dramatic way to that course of conduct, but the reference must be taken as an indication of support for the main question which is really of a much broader context and is quite a different question. That broader question relates to some remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) who has indicated, for valid reasons, his absence and his desire to participate. Therefore, the matter will stand until then. If there are other hon. members who wish to participate at that time, perhaps they could hold their comments now so that we can observe the opposition day.

GRANTS FOR SOLAR AND WIND POWER ENERGY

Question No. 2,308—Mr. Fortin:

Does the government offer grants to those who intend to build houses that use (a) solar energy (b) wind power and, if so, under which programmes?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Urban Affairs as well as the National Research Council as follows: (a) No. (b) No. However, solar heating equipment and wind generating equipment are exempt from federal excise tax (Bill C-21, Part XVIII, January 28, 1977). See also reply to question No. 1570, March 21, 1977.

CANADA PENSION PLAN BENEFITS

Question No. 2,362—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. Are survivor benefits, paid under the Canada Pension Plan, regarded as taxable income?

2. How many individuals received (a) lump sum death benefits (b) monthly widow's pensions (c) monthly orphans' benefits (d) monthly disabled widower's pensions in (i) 1972-73 (ii) 1973-74 (iii) 1974-75 (iv) 1975-76 (v) 1976-77 and what was the total amount paid?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. Any amount, including survivor benefits, paid under the terms of the Canada Pension Plan is regarded as a pension benefit for tax purposes, and is subject to tax in the year of receipt. In addition to benefits paid to a surviving spouse, the plan makes provision for payments in respect of surviving children. Despite the fact that the latter-type payments are made to the person or agency having custody and control of a child under 18 years of age, the benefit is income of the child and not that of the actual recipient.

(a)	Number of lump-sum death benefits received by estates or individuals	Total amount paid
(i)	29,031	$12,550,000
(ii)	28,951	13,400,000
(iii)	31,601	16,500,000
(iv)	33,844	19,635,000
(v)	38,169	25,300,000

(b) and (d) In response to statutory amendments which became effective January 1, 1975, the benefit earlier paid to a disabled widower was outmoded due to the equality of status provisions contained in Bill C-22, 1974. Known as a spouse's pension from that date, both female and male surviving spouses qualify for benefits under equal criteria. The following two tables show the number of individuals in receipt of these benefits at year end, and the amounts paid for these benefit types:

	Individuals in Receipt
	Widows	Disabled Widowers	Spouse's Pension
(i)	68,241	36
(ii)	84,594	44
(iii)			101,190
(iv)			120,861
(v)			139,415

	Amount Paid
	Widows	Disabled Widowers	Spouse's Pension
(i)	$48,650,400	$31,900
(ii)	62,620,100	47,600
(iii)			$ 86,600,200
(iv)			117,140,100
(v)			150,256,900

(c)	Monthly orphans' benefits in pay	Total amount paid
(i)	61,996	$20,400,000
(ii)	70,963	25,000,000
(iii)	77,536	33,000,000
(iv)	86,541	41,200,000
(v)	92,794	50,000,000

UIC—LOUISEVILLE, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,383—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is there only one employee, who does not have the beneficiaries files, working at the office of UIC in Louiseville Quebec and, if so, what does the government intend to do to rectify the situation?

2. Is it the practice of UIC to require unemployed persons living in Louiseville to travel to Trois-Rivières, 30 miles away, to attend ICE Programme interviews and, if so, does the government intend to solve the problem?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The U.I.C. has no office in Louiseville. Some services are provided by an employee of the local Canada Manpower Centre. The question will be considered when the two organizations are integrated.

2. A certain number of beneficiaries were required to travel from Louiseville to Trois-Rivières for interviews, but this practice was discontinued in August, 1976. In 1977, these interviews are to be conducted in Louiseville by an itinerant U.I.C. officer.

FUNDS CONTRIBUTED TO WESTERN STABILIZATION PLAN

Question No. 2,402—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Are funds contributed to the Western Grain Stabilization Plan deposited in the general reserve of the government and, if so, will the government allow such funds to be deposited in Western Canada and therefore be used to benefit the Western economy?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): In so far as the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned: The funds contributed to the Western Grain Stabilization Plan are deposited in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the credit of the Western Grain Stabilization Account in accordance with the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The act only provides authority for the deposit of funds into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, on January 24 I placed starred question No. 1493 on the Order Paper. It was a very simple question as to whether the government had purchased a Gulfstream 2 executive jet. This is the third time I have raised this matter. Starred questions are supposed to be answered within a reasonable length of time. It is absolutely ridiculous that the government cannot find out whether it purchased a Gulfstream 2, and I think the parliamentary secretary should give me an answer today as to why the government is deliberately delaying answering this starred question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly check into why that question has not been answered. I can also tell the hon. member that such an aircraft, which is for calibration testing of flight equipment, was purchased. I think that was revealed in the committee some time ago.

Mr. McKenzie: That still does not answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PREMIUMS, SHARE CAPITAL, ETC.

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 2, consideration of Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize that we agreed by a previous order of the House that upon the calling of the orders of the day, which are upon us now, we would take deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-3, and immediately thereafter of Bill C-12, and that because the divisions were deferred to a specific time, the rule limiting the division bells to 15 minutes would apply. We shall, therefore, proceed now to call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—TRANSPORTATION POLICIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government's transportation policies have failed to encourage the growth of strong regional economies, and, in particular, this House condemns the Minister of Transport's Atlantic provinces transportation policy and continues to reject his attitude towards western transportation problems.

He said: Mr. Speaker, albeit we are beginning this debate a little late in the afternoon, perhaps before members representing the Atlantic provinces on the other side of the chamber wander off I could at least set the tone of the opposition motion which is before the chamber. I should have thought that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) had caught enough hell in the chamber this afternoon, whether the causes and effects were outside his realm or otherwise to have prompted his hon. friends to pay a little more attention to some of the problems which are brought them from time to time.

I address myself to this motion with the feeling that the attitudes, the policies and programs of the government in this high-priority field of transport are failing desperately to bring about the goal which, as many of us will recall, has been before the House for a number of years. I quote:

To bring about a greater balance in the distribution of people and in the creation and distribution of wealth between and within the regions of this country.

Mr. Speaker, those words were extracted from the primary study upon which the government has for the past four or five years based its transport policy in the various regions. I suggests to you with all the force I can command that the interpretation of policy in this field by the minister and by the government is having a diametrically opposite effect. Government transportation policies, or the lack of them, are seriously hindering efforts to reduce regional economic disparities. Moreover, the feeling of isolation which often exists away from major urban centres in this country is resulting in increased strains upon national unity.

The other day, in Halifax, I felt constrained to say to the transport committee that it had not come to the maritimes to examine the master transportation system alone, but was there testing national unity. My comments this afternoon centre on that statement. It is not only what is going on in the province of Quebec that is testing national unity; it is time we took account of the fact that there are other problems such as economic problems and regional disparity which are testing the national unity of this country. The thrust of my comments is a direct charge which I lay with deep regret against the present minister. Perhaps his former parliamentary secretary would sit down and allow the minister to listen to me; I am sure the people of Atlantic Canada would appreciate it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: This minister told us, back at the last conference with maritime premiers and the Newfoundland minister responsible for transportation, that we were wasting money on transportation in Atlantic Canada. He said, in the coziness of Prince Edward Island, something like this, and I want to quote from a communique issued after a meeting of the Council of Maritime Premiers in Charlottetown, P.E.I., on February 7 and 8, 1977: I quote from page 2 of this release, near the end of the section on transportation:

Mr. Lang, Mr. Morgan and the maritime premiers agreed in principle that improved passenger transportation could best be achieved by providing special assistance for upgrading bus and air services in the region, to be followed by changes to existing rail passenger services.

I will end the quotation there. It has not been taken out of context. That happened in February. About two weeks ago the transport committee, after much fanfare, showed up in Atlantic Canada to hear from the residents of the region about passenger transportation services there. The hearings were begun on a Monday in Halifax. Mr. Speaker, on the Thursday preceding the opening of those hearings, the minister—it was probably not the Minister of Transport; it is probable there was a joint release—told me in response to questions in the House that the report which I have in my hand represents the collective views of himself, his departmental advisers, the Council of Maritime Premiers and the Premier of Newfoundland through the respective transportation ministers or their representatives.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Forrestall: The province of Nova Scotia, at least, released to the general public the contents of a study entitled "Atlantic Region Intermodal Passenger Study—Final Report", dated March, 1977. It is interesting to note it was released three or four days before the transport committee commenced its hearings in Halifax by the federal-provincial committee on Atlantic region transportation consultants—I should say they are probably insultants—the IBI group in association with ADI Limited, and the Development Planning Association Limited, whoever the devil they are.

That study, Mr. Speaker, finally and irrevocably clarified the position of the minister and the government with respect to the transportation of passengers intraregionally in the maritime provinces and interregionally in Canada. The task of the transport committee was to determine how passengers could best be moved in our part of the country. That was its mandate, to examine the existing modes, including rail, and to report back. My charge is that the government gave to that group, through the Council of Maritime Premiers and Mr. Morgan, or through the so-called federal-provincial committee on Atlantic regional transportation a conclusion which it told them to justify. How can we in Atlantic Canada sit idly by and watch not only the work of the transport committee being thwarted by such action, but also the work of the Royal Commission on Transportation being carried out on behalf of the people of Canada by Dr. Sullivan of Newfoundland? The work of this commission has been prejudged, the work of the railway transport committee on passenger services has been prejudged, and the work of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was prejudged before leaving Ottawa to spend last week in the Atlantic region. These were prejudged because the Minister of Transport used his vast command to suck in poor little fellows like us in the Atlantic provinces. That is a disgusting word and I do not like it, but I like even less the fact that I believe I was sucked in by the minister, the government and its advisers. They knew exactly what they wanted and then hired some consultants to ratify it and justify it.

Some of the conclusions supporting the position of the Minister of Transport are so outdated, inadequate, and totally unacceptable that they have already raised the ire and the resentment of hundreds and hundreds of the maritimes. They have also raised the ire of organized groups in the maritimes who say the figures and the data being used are inaccurate.

On May 25, as I indicated earlier, the minister said in response to a planted question from the other side—and we are used to that—that we were going to get something in the order of $125 million in the Atlantic provinces to straighten out our transportation mess.

An hon. Member: Big deal!

Mr. Forrestall: Big deal is right. No further evidence is required by members of this Chamber on the question of the movement of people in the Atlantic provinces. Such movement in and out of the Atlantic provinces was prejudged and predirected by the Minister of Transport. He offered us $125 million—$100 million to upgrade our roadbeds, $20 million to upgrade our buses, and $4 million to upgrade our air services. The council of maritime premiers or the Atlantic provinces regional transportation committee has asked the government for $1 billion and not $100 million. They feel they need that over the next eight or ten years to achieve what the Minister of Transport has suggested is going to be achieved in the next three or four years.

It is going to cost $260 million to fix up the potholes in the TransCanada Highway from St. John's to Port aux Basques. Are we to wait ten years, 20 years, or 30 years to have that done? What do they think we are in the Atlantic provinces? Where does Canada begin? If someone in St. John's wants to take a train ride from one end of this country to the other, he cannot. He has to take a bus. The minister has had his way for the first 1,800 miles, lopping off rail service. He has to go by bus all the way to Montreal, get off the bus there and get on a train.

I see the minister is indicating no. The report recommends eliminating all of that train service which will save $30 million a year. He wants to give us $100 million a year and save $9 million, $10 million or $12 million by eliminating the run between Halifax and Sydney on the Valley highway, the Saint John River valley train, the train through western New Brunswick, through Maine and through Sherbrooke on into Montreal. Where is that money going? Will that be new money coming into the Atlantic region? The thrust of what I am saying is that this is neither reasonable nor acceptable as an alternative.

The only people who will be travelling by air in ten years time will be businessmen and probably members of parliament. I hope the people of this country have sense enough to stay away from that expensive mode of transportation. They should use the train, or hitchhike. We will not be able to afford to drive our cars in ten years, if what we are being told is true. We will not have the energy. If the energy is there in terms of gas and oil, we will not be able to afford to use it. It will be too expensive for the average person.

Faced with this, what are we doing? We are abandoning our capacity to haul passengers by rail and substituting it with buses. Of course we need good bus service. I have never heard it said that we do not have good bus service. I have never heard it said by anybody until we were told so by a group of IBIs and ADIs or whoever they are. I wonder what they got paid. Any good research assistant of any member of the House of Commons could have read that in 30 minutes and been a lot more accurate in the writing of it. For the minister to try to fob that off as a rationalization and a justification for a position the government has adopted with respect to how people in the Atlantic provinces are going to travel, is a sad mistake. It will not be accepted.

I have been railing here for the past few minutes, but in conclusion I would like to refer to the Atlantic Region Inter-Modal Passenger Study on which the minister's program is based. It fails to compare costing for rail on the same basis as that for air and road. It ignores the extremely expensive infrastructure such as highways and airports which are required for the latter two modes of transportation. It assumes that present rail patrons will shift to buses once trains are removed. No evidence for such an assumption exists. Indeed experience indicates that such passengers will turn to energy wasteful automobiles or airplanes. The claim that buses are not more energy efficient than trains may be true in certain instances. For example, the government drives people away from trains, thus forcing the railways to operate trains with a limited number of passengers on them.

The noted environmental scientist, Barry Commoner, makes a strong case for a return to the rails in his most recent book, "The Poverty of Power". I commend it to the minister and some of the members opposite. He points out that the train is by far the most efficient energy user—630 passenger miles per million BTUs compared with 340 for buses, 120 for airplanes and 110 for private autos. More important, the train is the only mode of transportation, apart from small electric cars, that lends itself to electrification for the mass movement of people.

The report makes no reference to factors in which the rail mode excels, namely, comfort, security, safety, and ease of convenience for those who are aged or crippled, and for the youth of our country. It treats the improvement of rail service as excluding improvements to other modes, creating a false impression that better air and bus service are dependent upon rail cutbacks. The study's answer to more efficient inter-modal transportation seems to be to drop one of the modes.

Finally, it asserts that rail ridership continues to decline. In fact this trend has reversed quite decisively, based on the most recent figures available to us. I commend to members a reading of the brief presented by Canadian National Railways to the railway transport committee in Halifax about ten days or two weeks ago.

I have dealt with the savings that allegedly we are going to make out of moving away from rail to bus. I have dealt with the fact that this is not new money. I would ask the minister rhetorically what happens to the lost revenue and to the lost taxes paid by the hundreds of employees who will be thrown out of a job as a result of this move. How will this money be replaced by dollars and cents already in place in our community? We want answers to some of these questions.

There is a ground swell of resentment toward the posture adopted, accidentally or otherwise, by the government. I am not suggesting the minister had control over the timing of the appearance of the railway transport committee in the maritime region, but I am suggesting it is unacceptable to us to send such a distinguished group of commissioners as the railway transport committee to the Atlantic region to examine passenger travel in the area and, at the same time, announce a $125 million program which is designed to move away from rail transport. In any event, even if it is not designed to do that, the money to pay for the program will come from what the minister refers to as the elimination of inefficient subsidies.

I suggest this is a serious charge. I am surprised that the minister permitted his advisers to put him in this position. As I say, there is a ground well of resentment over this policy which is reflected in letters which come into my office every day and which come, I am sure, into the office of every Atlantic member of parliament. Moreover, I feel very strongly that this resentment is now just starting to grow. Mr. Mingo, the distinguished chairman of the Halifax-Dartmouth port commission, put it this way the other day. He said that, contrary to the view of many in Canada, we in Atlantic Canada do not enjoy overwhelming subsidies. The port of Halifax, for example, enjoys only the subsidy of the "at and east" rates. We pay for everything else ourselves, apart from a small deficit resulting from the operation of the port.

To cut us out of passenger services will be doing not only the Atlantic provinces but Canadians in the 1980's a disservice. If what we are led to believe is about to come to pass, we will not have sufficient energy supplies in the maritimes. The energy that we do have will price transportation—vehicles, cars, buses, airplanes—beyond the means of the average Canadian. For example, we know that Air Canada is programming itself to carry no one but businessmen after 1982 or 1983, apart from a handful of jet setters who can afford to fly in any event. Certainly Air Canada will not be carrying, Mr. Speaker, my mother, your grandmother, your niece, uncle or children from Halifax to Regina, from Regina to Saskatoon, or from British Columbia back to Ontario for a vacation, because they will be unable to afford the fare. We are told costs are increasing too rapidly.

Why at this point in time are we downgrading rail travel as a means of moving passengers from one part of Canada to another? More important, are we doing it because the minister has directed that this be done? Why has he undermined the work of the railway transport committee? Why has he undermined the work presently being commenced by Dr. Sullivan in Newfoundland? Why is he so insistent, for the sake of $8 million to $12 million a year, on getting us out of the one mode of moving passengers—rail—on which, according to every shred of evidence of in front of us, we will have to rely in the early 1980's and certainly by the mid-1980's?

I do not understand, and the people of Atlantic Canada do not understand why we are cutting back when we should be attempting to improve and to upgrade our railways. We should be getting into electrification. We have to spend millions and millions of dollars on roadbed improvement, on continuing the welded rail concept. We need new switching, new signalling services. We must have better scheduling. Above all, we must have new rolling stock. If we undertake these improvements, passengers will come back to rail. Otherwise they will not move from rail to bus; they will move from rail to car, the most inefficient method of moving people around the country.

If my premise is wrong and we do have the energy to last till God only knows when—certainly to beyond our capacity to see into the future—then I wish somebody over on that side would stand up and say so. They have not done so. Instead, they confirm that we will be paying anywhere from double to triple the present cost of imported oil within the next six to eight years. This is why I cannot understand and, more important, why no one in the Atlantic provinces can understand how the minister can take such a stubborn position, how he can prejudge the work of the railway transport committee, the work of Dr. Sullivan, not to mention the work of the standing committee of this House which hopefully will report its findings regarding Atlantic Canada in the not too distant future.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in light of the importance of this debate and of other matters that have occurred to me, I wonder whether the House would agree to call it six o'clock so we can resume at eight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it so agreed?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the whip has just reminded me that we are having the late show at six, and there may be some difficulty in members reaching here.

Mr. Paproski: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is here but the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) is not.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We have lost a considerable amount of parliamentary time on an opposition day by votes and other things. There are still ten minutes till six and I think we should proceed. Frankly, if you are asking is there unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I will not give it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There not being unanimous consent, I recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that my good friend, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), would have continued until six, because we would have given him the time had he wanted it.

Mr. Paproski: You are a big sport now.

Mr. Benjamin: I am sure all hon. members would agree that they hate to have to start a speech and then resume two hours later. That is why I asked for unanimous consent; I am sorry I was not able to get it.

I want to add to and reinforce some of the remarks made by my hon. friend who just spoke. I want to commence by saying that the motion he has on the order paper certainly meets with our approval and is similar to one which has been moved by opposition parties on numerous occasions over the nine years I have been here.

• (1750)

I want to mention specifically some items which I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will deal with when he rises in his place. I hope also that he will tell the House that he is prepared, if not to change his mind completely, at least to amend to some degree his previous hard-nosed and stubborn view.

We all depend on transportation, whether directly for free movement or indirectly for employment oportunities in our regions of the country. In fact transportation is our lifeline, the same as our telephone systems, hydro, water and roads. I submit that it must be treated as a public utility, an essential public service which everyone has to use, both directly and indirectly. When the government insists on maintaining the philosophy of the 1890's about commercial viability and competition in transportation, even in the face of some of its own members who say that competition does not work in transportation, then surely in the face of all the evidence we have had and in face of the views that have been expressed to members of the House individually, to committees of the House and to the Canadian Transport Commission, it is time for the government to make a fundamental change in the direction of the policy it has followed over the last number of years.

We cannot have equity and fairness in transportation if we adopt the principle of commercial viability and competition. The following has been stated by the Economic Council of Canada:

> In Canada, great distances and a small population unevenly distributed among the various regions render markets small and fragmented. The geography of the nation reinforces this. Canadians have traditionally regarded transport policy as a major vehicle to off-set such tendencies and to foster economic growth.

While the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) exhorts all Canadians to conserve energy, to turn off the lights, and to be economical in the use of hot water to the point of almost inviting your neighbour to share your bath, the Minister of Transport and the government continue to bring about changes in our transportation system which result in a most inefficient and wasteful use of energy, which are the worst in terms of pollution, land use, safety, comfort, and convenience. In the face of all that, the government has consistently over the years brought about changes in the transportation policy that decrease the amount and quality of service which should be available to Canadians no matter where they live.

The minister and the government continue to advocate policies and legislation which will carry on what has been going on in this country for many decades. We will discriminate against people and goods because of where they happen to be or to live. We will fail to take into account our geography, our climate, where our people live, and where markets are available to us.

While there has been a great debate in most of Canada about the statutory Crowsnest Pass rates, the same thing applies to the "at and east" freight rates. They are not a misused subsidy—if I can borrow a phrase from the minister's remarks on a previous occasion—they are designed to place our country in a reasonably equitable or competitive position with our competitors in other parts of the world. The at and east freight rates allow Canadian grain producers, millers at Georgian Bay, the St. Lawrence Seaway and Atlantic coast ports, to handle grain, and mill wheat and flour in a reasonably competitive position with western Europe, the United States, Australia and Argentina, all of whom heavily subsidize, whether it be their ports, their railways or their grain prices. That is all they are intended to do. They are not a handout to farmers, a bailing out of some ports, some grain terminals or some flour mills. They take into account our geography, and they allow Canadian primary producers to be in a reasonably equitable and competitive position with other countries in the world.

In the Atlantic provinces the shifting of emphasis from rail, to the neglect of some ports, to super highways and air transportation, contributes to the misuse of energy and the misallocation of funds for transportation. When the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was in Atlantic Canada last week we heard about transportation of potatoes in the Atlantic provinces. We heard the same complaint that we have heard from potato growers ever since I came to this parliament, that there are not enough refrigerator cars and that it makes sense to ship potatoes by rail but the railroads do not have many if any refrigerator cars to move the potatoes. That is what the potato growers told the committee. They also told us that truckers are not interested in moving potatoes if it means their trucks have to sit on the docks for a week, for ten days or two weeks, waiting for a ship to arrive. The truckers told us that 200 or 300 miles was too short a distance over which to haul potatoes.

Port officials and people connected with the port of Halifax told us that storage facilities for potatoes in Halifax are inadequate. But what does the minister do? He arranges for money to be allocated to highways and airports. It will not be of much use to the potato industry in New Brunswick and P.E.I.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—CHARLOTTETOWN—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON NEW TERMINAL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, members of the House will not be surprised that I am bringing forward yet again the question of the provision of a modern, up to date airport at Charlottetown. I brought up the subject most recently on May 24 of this year, and on January 31 and December 17, 1976. Hansard will indicate frequent inquiries over many years to many ministers.

While I would not say that the airport question is the most important one facing our province, it nevertheless has the highest priority and urgency and deserves and requires immediate action.

The basic problem is that the Department of Transport has not kept pace with the airlines serving our province. Eastern Provincial Airways, a most estimable firm, brought us into the jet age by providing direct, efficient service to Montreal. Later Air Canada, through its flights 654 and 655, linked Toronto and Ottawa to the cradle of Confederation. But while the airlines were in the jet age, the airport stayed in the prop age. The terminal is far too small, there are too few seats, there is a deficiency in many of the basic amenities which a modern airport requires.

Like its sister Atlantic provinces P.E.I. would prefer to strengthen its own economy rather than depend on what are sometimes unjustly, wrongly, and outrageously called handouts from Ottawa.

One of the logical and most promising areas of self help is in the realm of tourism. But if we cannot get the people into the province with a modicum of comfort and convenience, we cannot aid the expansion of the tourist industry.

Prince Edward Islanders are friendly people and we give a warm welcome to tourists who usually number about ten times our own population. But amiable though we may be, we do not care for standing on one another's insteps at the Charlottetown airport. On previous occasions I have indicated the number of chairs in the waiting room and compared this miniscule number to the seating capacity of any one of the planes serving the airport. I will not repeat that mathematical exercise today.

Since posting this question for adjournment proceedings—indeed, just a short while ago—I received a letter from the minister which I regard as good news indeed, and I am sure he will not mind my reading it.

In reply to the question you raised in the House on Tuesday, May 24, I am pleased to report that preliminary design work of the new ATB at Charlottetown has now been completed. During this stage, there has been continued close consultation and co-operation between provincial and Transport Canada officials, and the resultant design incorporates modern passenger processing facilities in an aesthetically attractive setting.

Final agreement with all airport users on cost recovery, consistent with Transport Canada policy, is expected to be reached in the next few weeks, and is the one outstanding pre-requisite before Treasury Board approval-in-principle for the development program is requested.

I repeat that that is good news indeed. Charitable and forgiving as I am, I will omit today my usual references to delays and procrastination, and congratulate the minister for his report of progress. I am delighted that a design combining aesthetic and efficient features has been arrived at. If no one else has a kind word today for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), I do not mind breaking the train of thought in this Chamber and speaking in candor and honesty and saying that in this regard he has done a fine job. I commend him for it. I can only say to the minister, through his parliamentary secretary or whoever replies to me, press on with dispatch. We islanders deserve action, not because we are virtuous—which of course we are—but because we have waited a long time. A new, adequate airport at Charlottetown will be a major contribution to the transport element in Atlantic Canada.

If I am the only one to say so in this Chamber today, I say that at least to me this is a great deal. I say "thank you" to the minister, and God speed in his final act to give us what we need so badly.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is very gratifying to hear just before dinner such encouraging words from the hon. member. I am sure the minister will be happy, after all that has been said today, to find a member of the opposition who spoke so kindly about him, indeed, much more kindly than some of his colleagues. Mr. Speaker, in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Roy), for the information of the hon. member I should like to read the answer given by the department.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the minister wrote to the hon. member on this subject as recently as late last week, but I would like to provide some amplification at this time.

Resulting from continuing and amicable discussions between the premier of Prince Edward Island, some of his cabinet colleagues and senior provincial officials with Transport Canada officials there is now general agreement on terminal design and on the balance of the program to upgrade facilities at Charlottetown. As a result of the close consultation and co-operation, we have achieved a design which incorporates modern and efficient passenger processing facilities in an aesthetically attractive setting.

Final agreement with all airport users on cost recovery, consistent with Transport Canada policy, is expected to be reached in the next few weeks. In the meantime discussions are continuing in a close and co-operative way, and we are not unhappy with the manner in which plans are progressing.

Transport Canada will shortly be seeking approval for the extensive program, to be accomplished over a period of the next five years. The new air terminal building is expected to be the first of several projects to be completed within the next couple of years.

We all join the hon. member opposite in eagerly anticipating the day when we can fly into what will most certainly be a welcome addition to the city of Charlottetown.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MAXIMUM CLAIM RESIDENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA CAN MAKE AGAINST UNITED STATES IN EVENT OF OIL SPILL

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, this matter arises as a result of a question that was asked of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) on June 2 last. The question was in two parts, the first dealing with the maximum amount of money that British Columbia residents would be able to claim under the law against the United States government in the event of an oil spill. The question was prompted by the decision of the Kitimat consortium to withdraw their application for a pipeline at Kitimat thereby leaving the waters of British Columbia at a much higher risk because of the expected increase in the volume of crude oil that would be carried from Alaska.

We have known for a long time that the Aleskya line will have a surplus; we have known for a long time that the United States will have to find a way fo bringing that surplus to market; we have known for a long time, in fact since the days of David Anderson, who was a Liberal member of this House from Victoria back in 1968, that the waters of British Columbia would be placed at very substantial risk as a result of this project. The warning of the risk has always been there and has always been high. Yet here we are today, some eight years later, debating exactly the same thing that the Liberal member, David Anderson, debated in this House such a long time ago. That is a condemnation of the government for failing to take a co-ordinated stand in regard to the use of the waters of British Columbia, and secondly, for acting as a dog in the manger and not providing any feasible alternative for the Americans to avoid the certainty of pollution. When I say the certainty of pollution that is what I mean.

In spite of all the new radar systems that are available, in spite of the new Loran system, in spite of the $16 million that the government is presently spending in terms of water transport regulation in those waters, when a 50-mile an hour gale hits the Georgia Straits and a super tanker loses power, there will be a massive oil spill in spite of all the regulations. I am willing to concede that the United States has now developed very strict regulations for the use of its tankers. We are going to have the certainty of an oil spill in those straits, however, and our government will stand condemned when that occurs because it has had enough lead time year after year to have presented a positive proposal for carrying that oil to market.

I stress that the minister has had an opportunity to examine the whole question and I hope we will receive a specific answer on what the limits to claim are for British Columbia residents. It is not as though there were no feasible alternatives to carrying the U.S. oil to market without using the waters adjacent to British Columbia. A proposal has been made in this House by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) that Gray's Harbour should be developed as a port on the Pacific so that none of the interior waters need be used by tankers. That proposal was worthy of investigation by the government, but it did not see fit to do so.

We have the use of the port of Los Angeles to take the surplus Aleskya oil but the reason the United States is not using that port is that environmental groups in Los Angeles have more clout than our people, and have impressed the United States government about the environmental sensitivity of those waters. That is one of the reasons why they will not carry that oil to United States ports.

The pipeline for Alaskan oil should have been a feasible project, but the answer the minister gave me was that no application has been made to the National Energy Board. Surely the government can do more than that do see that we do not suffer massive oil pollution in British Columbia. Surely some leadership should be shown by the government.

Last but not least, the British Columbia government made a proposal for transporting Alaskan oil by rail. That proposal is still feasible. The original proposal was for taking oil from Prudhoe Bay, but the present proposal to take oil from Fairbanks is still feasible. You know, pipelines suck energy from one place but put nothing back for the residents. If we had built a pipeline on the prairies to carry wheat in John A. Macdonald's days, few people would now be living on the prairies. Therefore the question of the pipeline itself must be considered seriously.

The rail proposal was made back in 1973 and deserves serious study. Certainly we should have studied the proposals for alternate routes made by David Anderson and others in this House; we should have encouraged the Americans to consider them. Putting it simply, we should have shown leadership for developing with the United States a joint oil port. We may need it if we must bring oil across the Pacific, for one day we ourselves may run short of western oil. Surely the government could have sat down with its counterparts and said, "This interior channel route is entirely unacceptable to British Columbia. What can we do together to solve difficulties concerning the Juan de Fuca Islands, the American islands at risk, and our own islands?" We did not do that. We sat idly by and now are presented with a fait accompli in British Columbia. The federal government stands condemned for letting down the citizens of British Columbia and for not providing for the transport of Alaskan oil away from our waters.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the first question raised by the hon. member concerns the claims that Canadian residents can make against the United States in the event of an oil spill.

Under the U.S. Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, a fund of $100 million has been established for payment of claims for damages resulting from discharges of oil from these tankers, on a basis of strict liability without regard to fault. These remedies are expressly made available to residents of Canada.

A new bill has recently been introduced in the U.S. Congress which would supersede the liability and compensation provisions of the TAPA Act. This bill, the Comprehensive Oil Pollution Liability and Compensation Act, provides for an increased liability fund of $200 million, and some of the concerns expressed earlier by Canada have been taken into account in the drafting of the new legislation. Other concerns are under discussion between Canada and the U.S.A. while the draft legislation is under consideration by Congress.

The second question concerned negotiations with the United States on alternatives to the use of Cherry Point by oil tankers. A variety of port alternatives has been studied and preliminary conclusions reached by Canadian authorities. These studies indicate that there are no sheltered harbours or anchorages between California and the Strait of Juan de Fuca which could be practically developed as terminals for tankers above 80,000 tons. Offshore facilities such as buoys appear to be ruled out by the difficult climate and ocean conditions in the area. These conclusions unfortunately appear to rule out Gray's Harbour and other similar options.

It is our understanding the SOHIO Long Beach proposal would supply only a few of the easternmost U.S. Northern Tier refineries with the crude oil they require. The project cannot, therefore, be viewed as a satisfactory full alternative to proposed northern routes.

Among the Puget Sound options, we have concluded that Port Angeles, although not strictly satisfactory from the Canadian point of view, would be a less hazardous location than Cherry Point for a major terminal. This conclusion is know to the United States government.

DROUGHT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON PROGRAMS FOR PUMPING WATER AND DRILLING WELLS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question raised during this adjournment debate relates to the question I raised on May 5 as reported in Hansard on pages 5304 and 5305, when I dealt with the drought in southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan. In particular I raised the matter of surface water for livestock, and of domestic water requirements of rural communities and small towns in that area. I want to give the House a brief update, if I may call it that, on the western drought situation.

Over the past couple of weeks the news media and many individuals, not only in eastern or central Canada, but in parts of western Canada, have assumed that the drought is over. That is ridiculous. It is true we have had some generous rains. They have brought a happy ending to last month's drought in the west, but not across the whole drought area. I speak of that area taking a line from west of Bassano, Alberta, running into the foothills of the mountains and cutting across to Swift Current, Saskatchewan. South of that line we still have very serious drought conditions.

Most of this area has had less than two inches of rain, and some less than one inch. I live right in the centre of this area. What rain we have had has come in small local showers. There was no deeper suboil moisture to connect with these small, scanty rainfalls.

A week ago yesterday I flew from Calgary to Medicine Hat by Time Air in a light plane at low elevation. Over the next two days I drove over all of my range along the Alberta-Saskatchewan border and northeast of Medicine Hat. That is a considerable area, covering not only my own range but a good many of my neighbours.

It is true that the limited rainfall did start our grass, but only start it. That was about three weeks ago. That grass has now stopped growing. It has that pasty yellowish-green colour that I know so well that precedes the stage of drought when the leaves start shrivelling up from lack of moisture.

Our surface water situation continues to get slowly but definitely worse day by day, and this will continue throughout the summer. There was no rain run-off to help the water situation.

Many cattle producers are trucking water for their stock. Some have been doing this for up to two months. These conditions cover a large area across southern Alberta down to the American border and into southwestern Saskatchewan. I emphasize that it is very, very serious. The drought continues unabated in this area.

Following the statement in the House on May 6 by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the day after I raised this question, it was given good press coverage in the west. However, there have been few details, if any, since, especially details with regard to the well drilling and digging program and water pumping, both from wells and rivers.

The PFRA field office in Medicine Hat has had little, if any, policy instruction. The Alberta provincial assistance program has been much better publicized. Their pumps and pipelines are now available for action.

During my response to the minister's statement in this House I suggested that the minister give more emphasis to and have more publicity on this program and the need for open, regular public information on the total drought picture. There has been very little, if any, even after his Regina meeting when he met with his special action group—only a brief statement that the meeting was held. There has not been any substantial information. This suggests that the minister does not have anything to report. Either that or he feels that the drought is over. Surely he is better informed than that.

I urge the minister to authorize and indeed speed up the PFRA well program and the pumping program. He should allow special leeway for extra deep wells or wells which are likely to cost extra capital amounts, and include pumping. I am not certain, but I believe my suggestion with regard to the eligibility of dug or bored wells has been accepted. If that is the case I am most grateful and I thank the minister and his staff.

I have another serious suggestion, one which I hope will receive the same attention. The limitation of PFRA assistance to only one project a year has been relaxed, and two projects are now eligible. This is not enough. This is the time, under drought conditions, to carry out water conservation projects. It is time to get these things done, and the limitation to which I have referred should be removed completely so as to encourage more and more water storage and conservation projects. No cattle producers or grain farmers could possibly take advantage of such a special policy—the high cost of dirt moving will take care of that.

Will PFRA bring about some special water projects in the Suffield block on both sides of the river? Requests have been made for such assistance to include wells and river pumping up and over substantial river banks and distances. I hope serious attention will be given to this, soon.

Will my request for special pasture allotment for sheep in the Suffield area be given consideration? Finally, I want to comment on the fact that the new director of PFRA was announced a week or so ago as being Dr. Harry Hill. I welcome his appointment. I understand he has impressive credentials. I do not know this gentleman very well but I am told he is not to take over until September 1. I suggest to the minister and to the parliamentary secretary that this is not early enough. He should be there now.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will understand that it will not be possible for me to answer many of the points he has raised. They are well taken, especially the one about the publicity given to the federal program which we have worked out with the western provinces. I will bring the other points the hon. member has raised to the attention of the minister.

The recent rains in the prairie provinces have done much to alleviate water and feed supply shortages in the west resulting from drought conditions. However, certain areas still requiring rain and water supplies remain a major concern.

After a recent meeting in Regina with the provincial ministers concerning the drought situation, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) had received Treasury Board authority to enter into 50-50 cost-sharing agreements with the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta for two new assistance programs for rural communities and for farmers to assist them in drilling deep wells. These programs are in effect from April 1, 1977, to March 31, 1978. The total federal contribution could amount to some $2.7 million, with $1.2 million allotted to community wells and $1.5 million for the farm wells program. Assistance is availale to the three prairie provinces to finance deep wells and associated water pipelines for rural communities with a maximum federal contribution of $15,000 for each project.

The farm wells program is an extension of the existing PFRA program. It offers farmers a special incentive of up to $950 for drilling deep wells to a maximum of 440 feet. Wells, dugouts and stock watering dams have been eligible for up to $550 each, and irrigation schemes for up to $600. The maximum level of federal assistance is now $1,500. Both programs are to be administered by the PFRA administration and the Regina task force is working with the three prairie provinces to formalize agreements for the water supply program.

It is also a fact that in certain parts of the prairies no deep water is available and that the deep well assistance programs would not be suitable. Bored or dug wells are therefore to be included in the well-drilling assistance programs.

These water supply programs should provide a longer term solution to the prairie water supply problem. The pasture and winter feed supply situation is being monitored by the Regina task force, and farmers are being encouraged to produce feed from alternative sources, such as oats.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being 6.30 o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—TRANSPORTATION POLICIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Forrestall:

That in the opinion of this House the government's transportation policies have failed to encourage the growth of strong regional economies, and, in particular, this House condemns the Minister of Transport's Atlantic provinces transportation policy and continues to reject his attitude towards western transportation problems.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad at least 20 members have shown up by 11 minutes after eight, but I was hoping that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) would be here since the debate is about transportation. I was also hoping that the mover of the motion in the official opposition would be here since it is his motion.

I want to resume the comments I was making when some hon. members gratefully called it six o'clock so I could not speak any longer. I was mentioning the potato growers in the Atlantic provinces whose problems are not new.

I can remember asking questions in the House in the fall of 1968 and the spring of 1969 about refrigerator cars and storage capacity for potato growers at the ports of Saint John and Halifax, so there is nothing new about the problem. The trouble is that we still have old line parties in the government and in the official opposition.

What I want to say is that in the port of Halifax one of the things that was presented to us most clearly, when we were there with the transport committee, from various and sundry users and operators of the port, was the desperate need for a fast move on the extension of the container facilities at the port of Halifax. We were told that if it does not happen fairly soon, the port of New York will steal some of the business which should rightly be ours. When the transport committee was in the Atlantic provinces last week, we were told that this was to the detriment of the port of Saint John or anywhere else in the Atlantic provinces. I was hoping that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) would have mentioned that in his remarks earlier this afternoon. No doubt some of his colleagues will speak late this evening to expand on that.

I want to repeat my contention which I have held over a number of years, particularly since the Minister of Transport was appointed after having been minister of justice and also in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, that in every year since those desperate days every move he has made was designed to put the users of transportation in this country in a position where they were no better off and, more likely, worse off than they had been. His proposals for changes in the Transportation Act return us to the 1890's. I have heard little objection to that from the official opposition who also believe in competition, commercial viability and profitability in transportation, even though governments of different political stripes from the extreme left to the extreme right, and of every stripe in between, in at least two dozen other countries in the world have thrown out those concepts two or three decades ago.

Our country must recognize our geography and our climate and provide a system of equalized or subsidized freight rates. It must make a deliberate decision that people and goods will move in the most efficient way, whether it be on the short haul, medium haul, or long haul.

The Atlantic Provinces Truckers' Association confirmed what I have long believed, namely, that the hauling of bulk heavy commodities for anything over 200 miles was wasteful and inefficient. The railroads admit that they cannot do a better job with heavy bulk commodities because they cannot bear the capital costs of our rights of way, trackage and roadbed and recover the costs from the users. There is nothing new about that. The fact of the matter is that every mode of transportation since before Confederation has been subsidized and has required investment from the public purse at the municipal, provincial and federal level. It has always been thus.

If we are not prepared to return to the toll roads of the early 1800's or late 1700's, to return to a system where only the rich can travel or only those who can afford the cost of moving goods and services can be in business, then surely the government and the minister must get away from the nineteeth century concepts on which they are trying to operate. In fact some members of the official opposition have faced up to this. Some remarks of their spokesmen today who quoted Transport 2,000 and the submission made to the Committee on Transport and Communications in the Atlantic provinces in recent weeks indicate that there might be some members in the official opposition who are prepared to forget about commercial viability and profitability in transportation.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East spoke about the four Atlantic premiers being sucked in, and he did not like that phrase. I called it a con job. The four Atlantic premiers were either conned or they gave away the store in giving up some statutory rate provisions in the Maritime Freight Rates Act or the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act in order to get $100 million for roads and $25 million for airports. That flies in the face of energy conservation, of the most economical and efficient use of transportation. They were conned rather than sucked in. I find it passing strange how anxious those four Atlantic premiers or their representatives were to accept this package from the Minister of Transport.

I submit that the people in the Atlantic provinces have been betrayed again. A benefit they had had for many years they gave away, for what? There is some kind of biblical phrase that perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows better, which refers to a mess of pottage. That would apply to these statutory rate provisions which the maritime premiers gave up. Now it lies in the hands of the Minister of Transport to select the commodities which might or might not receive the benefits that they would otherwise receive under the statutory provisions regarding freight transportation.

The Minister of Transport, in collusion with two Liberal and two Tory premiers in eastern Canada, has betrayed the people again, and will continue the discrimination against people and products because of where they happen to live or be located. There will be no change. When you put $100 million into some more highways in the Atlantic provinces, which are relatively short compared to those in northern Ontario and western Canada, you will increase the use of energy and the cost of transportation, most of which will be borne by the provincial and municipal governments. That is why I say that if the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East thinks he has been sucked in—I chose the word conned—the fact is that the Atlantic premiers gave away the store. They have been party to a perpetuation of a transportation system operated on principles that have been shown to be not some socialist dogma but that have been shown to be inadequate, insufficient, and incorrect in dozens of other countries.

The minister is accused in a recent publication—which I will not refer to because I might be out of order—as a man who has never admitted he was wrong on anything. I do not know if he would ever admit he is wrong on the time of day even if his watch were out. It is time the Minister of Transport just once admitted that commercial viability and competition in the major modes of transportation not only do not work but also perpetuate discrimination against people in the Atlantic region, on the prairies, and in the far north. There is no way a federal government or any province can justify, for example, a dozen eggs costing $4 on an Arctic island. That is unfair and unjust. It is unfair that it costs $1.80 for two quarts of milk in Yellowknife. Surely on essential things which everyone has to have—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: I find it strange that the national government and the governments of ten provinces and two territories—so that includes all the political parties—are able to equalize the price of a bottle of whiskey. I am known as a fellow who enjoys the odd drink once a month.

The price of a bottle of whiskey at Yellowknife, Rankin Inlet and anywhere in Newfoundland, British Columbia or any other province is equalized, but when it comes to a quart of milk, a head of lettuce, a pound of tomatoes, a bag of flour, a tank of propane fuel, or a tank of heating oil, the principle of the user shall pay applies. My party and I contend that that is an indecent way to treat people in this country, and the governments of this country, of every province, or every territory, and in particular the Minister of Transport, are guilty of allowing this to continue. A system of equalized and/or subsidized freight rates which allows people a natural advantage in the production of agricultural products or mineral products whereby these products can be processed where they are found is just, decent, and fair.

Why is rapeseed processed in Toronto or Montreal? Not a bushel of it is grown there. Why can people not have fresh milk, fruit and vegetables in Labrador, in the Northwest Territories or in rural Saskatchewan for the same prices they can have them in downtown Regina or Toronto? The minister, his government and the official opposition should face up to the reality that no matter where you go in this world, competition in transportation does not work.

We should treat people fairly no matter where they live. If we are all part of this confederation, we should not charge $4 for a dozen eggs in northern Canada or $1.80 for two quarts of milk in Yellowknife. If we cannot do better under this kind of system, we should eliminate competition and profitability in transportation.

Mr. Breau: Who is going to pay for it?

Mr. Benjamin: The nation as a whole should share this cost. If hon. members do not mind this expression, it is called co-operation. It is even called co-operative federalism, or a co-operative commonwealth.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this motion this evening dealing with a very important matter. Indeed, there are not many issues in Canada which give rise to so much emotion and so many political debates as transportation. I read once a paper referring to some research made on the political interventions of members from the Atlantic area since the beginning of Confederation up to 1971 which had shown that transportation was the matter more often discussed and dealt with by the members from the Atlantic area. Of course, in a country as big as Canada, it is normal that transportation would be constantly discussed.

I find it funny when I listen to hon. members such as the member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), who were shocked because a dozen eggs and a quart of milk are apparently very costly in the north. Those people do not mention who should pay for transportation costs.

Mr. Benjamin: All of us, you dummy!

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member could use expressions that are a bit more appropriate to Parliament than the ridiculous statement he has just made. I am simply asking who should pay for all those things. If I understand him correctly, he says that everyone should pay. I say that this is idealistic and that it is very well to suggest we should as much as possible in our society absorb all costs, taxes, transportation costs, the cost of living and the cost of basic necessities on the basis of the ability to pay.

However, Mr. Speaker, this distorts reality because, for instance, someone who settles in northern Canada does not have an income that is set on the basis of equality. His income is based on the market and if a worker in northern Canada has a recognized trade, he receives a higher income and receives certain benefits. It is quite unrealistic in my opinion to think that in a country like Canada it would be possible to equalize our transportation rates for products going to the north, for instance. I say this is an example of not very realistic interventions when I think of the contribution made this afternoon by the hon. member for Darmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). I read with interest his statement before the Railway Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission when it was sitting in Halifax, and I read with interest the comments made in Moncton before this committee, which will be sitting in my constituency tomorrow.

It is quite ironical to see that those newspaper commentators and editorialists keep claiming that there is too much input on the part of the government in the economy and that this government should reduce its spendings. Hon. members opposite keep telling us that the government should reduce the number of instances when it takes action in economic matters. Those very same people are now telling us that railway passenger services between Halifax and Montreal should be maintained though they are obviously running at a deficit.

Actually, I have seen figures released no longer than six months ago showing that for each passenger travelling on the train from Halifax to Montreal, the Canadian taxpayer, through the federal treasury, has to pay some $40 on top of the price of the ticket. Mr. Speaker, these are the very same people who claim that railway passenger services should be developed despite the prevailing situation. In my opinion, this amounts to promoting a policy that would be utterly unrealistic and lacking any common sense. It is obviously necessary to maintain a railway service stretching between Halifax and Montreal and probably from Montreal to Vancouver. However, it should not be necessary to maintain two or three itineraries, as together they are not profitable. I think it is quite unreasonable to talk about stepping up operations in this field while it has been clearly demonstrated that this would not be profitable. I suggest it is right to say that the government should maintain a railway service but stating that this service should be operated on a greater scale seems to me a policy that shows a lack of realism on the part of its proponents.

[English]

I should like to deal briefly with one aspect of transportation that touches my constituency in northern New Brunswick, and suggest to the minister that he consider the possibility of a local service as well as a service from northern New Brunswick to Montreal, and connections from there to western Canada, the United States and Europe. In my view northern New Brunswick at the present time could have a local air service. By this I mean a service which operates within the maritime provinces. We are not served as well as we could be between northern New Brunswick and Montreal. I believe this is due to the fact that there was never a rational plan for the development of airports; instead they were developed through ad hoc policies. I see the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) is incensed by the fact that some decisions were ad hoc. The fact is that in 1939 an air force base was built in Chatham. The government and the public had to recognize that as a fact, but Chatham was not the geographic centre to serve northern New Brunswick. It is one of the reasons why airports were not located where they could serve all northern New Brunswick, and another airport was built at Charlo.

I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for many years, as the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) should know, and I intend to sit on it again before too long. The hon. member would do well to study the geography of the country and find out exactly where different communities are if he wants to be an expert on transportation.

Northern New Brunswick is not being as well served as it should. It is now being served by Eastern Provincial Airways with a jet service which goes Montreal-Charlo-Chatham and back to Montreal, six days a week, with only one flight per day each way—no morning or evening service. One reason the flight goes in the middle of the day is because at that time the Eastern Provincial Airways jet is not busy on more profitable routes. Because the airline has convinced the Canadian Transport Commission that this route should be eligible for subsidy, there has been no incentive to provide the kind of service that would pay for itself. There has been no encouragement to rationalize a system whereby there would be more frequent service and, at the same time as having the jet service to Montreal, have service to other points.

It seems to me that this is an example of where a subsidy given to a transportation service does not necessarily provide the most efficient and most complete service. In my view, if there were a system whereby the carrier—in this case EPA is the only one that has the possibility of providing the service—I would ask the minister to invite the Canadian Transport Commission to look at the situation and convince EPA that if they receive the subsidy they should provide the local air service to northern New Brunswick as well as to Montreal. By doing that they would improve access to Montreal.

I have suggested to the minister on earlier occasions that an airline should provide a service from Charlo-Bathurst to points south, Moncton and Fredericton, and that the passengers who travel from northern New Brunswick to Montreal be flown from Moncton or Fredericton by jet to Montreal. This would give better frequency—probably three flights a day—for the people who go to Toronto or Montreal on business and whose time is precious. They could leave northern New Brunswick in the morning and be back home in the evening. As things stand, now they have to stay overnight in Montreal or Toronto. That entails a cost and, as hon. members know, staying overnight in Montreal can entail things other than cost.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: Those who noticed what I said probably know what I am talking about. In my view this would be a better service because it would provide us with a local air service as well.

Until last October another company, Atlantic Central Airlines, was providing service from Bathurst to Fredericton. It applied to the Canadian Transport Commission to expand the service to Charlo and to Moncton. It would have provided three flights a day Charlo-Bathurst-Fredericton and two flights Charlo-Bathurst-Moncton. Unfortunately the commission sat on the application with the idea that it would only be decided when they had public hearings in the maritimes in 1976. It took them until December to make a decision, although the application had been made in March by Atlantic Central Airlines. In the meantime the airline had to halt the service because it was not economical. I am told that if they had received the other routes they could have made it pay. The airline now tells us that despite the fact they received a licence to fly Charlo to the north and Moncton to the south, it would not be possible for them to start again, because if they only have the local service they cannot make it pay while EPA continues the jet flight Montreal-Charlo-Chatham.

In view of the fact that the taxpayer is investing in this service I think we should insist upon maximum efficiency and maximum service. If Eastern Provincial Airways is to continue receiving the subsidy, they should combine with Atlantic Central Airlines, if they can still get in business and if not, EPA should provide a local air service themselves.

As I explained earlier, they could make such a service economic if they would take passengers from northern New Brunswick with more frequent flights—two or three flights per day, in the morning and evening—and fly them to Montreal from Fredericton or from Moncton. For the passenger from Charlo in the north and for the passenger from Bathurst it would mean only one hour extra travelling time. However, in return for the cost he would have the benefit of more flights, and the benefit of a local air service which he does not now have. He could use it to go to Fredericton or Halifax, although why in the world anyone would want to fly to Halifax from northern New Brunswick escapes me. I suppose if one has business in Halifax one must go. One could return home the same day.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre believes, I think, that we should grant open-ended subsidies.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not suggest that at all.

Mr. Breau: I do not think the hon. member said anything different, and I was paying attention to his remarks. I think the hon. member, members of his party and others in this House, suggested that there should be no end to subsidies and deficits and that the taxpayer should pay for uneconomic services without knowing their cost.

Mr. Benjamin: None of them is economical.

Mr. Breau: In my view, and in the view of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), we should be able to identify what it costs to transport a passenger from point A to point B. If a passenger is travelling on the train from Halifax to Montreal, say, he should know that it costs the taxpayer approximately $40. I think the subsidy is close to that figure; I do not have the exact figures at my fingertips. But that subsidy is paid from taxes. Perhaps if that passenger knew it was costing him $40 to travel by train, he might travel by air, car, or bus.

I have no quarrel with people wanting to travel by train. I enjoy train travel, but would sooner know how much it actually costs me to travel on a train. In saying this I am not suggesting we should not provide at least one basic service from coast to coast for passengers. I do not think the suggestions editorial writers and commentators made when the transport committee was in the maritimes, that our rail passenger service should be extended, make much sense. In my view, if every train passenger costs the taxpayer between $35 and $40 in subsidy, we should not expand the service. We ought to maintain the basic service, but should not expand it. Actually I think we should try to cut down uneconomic services.

Mr. Benjamin: But it is the basic service that costs all the money.

Mr. Breau: Answering the hon. member, I can only say that he and others of a like mind are being sucked in by those with a vested interest in railways.

Mr. Benjamin: No.

Mr. Breau: The hon. member says no, but I make that accusation. In the maritimes we heard people representing the railway unions appearing before the transport committee and arguing that train service should not only be maintained, but expanded. Some members of the Conservative party supported that point of view. They are entitled to their view. I understand the union's viewpoint, because it wants to protect its membership. Mr. Speaker, the interest of the public, of the citizens of Canada, is not always compatible with the interests of the unions. The public should not be taken in by the arguments of the unions. I think the railways should treat their employees humanely and sensibly, and as much as possible give them the rights of seniority; but we shall need to make adjustments to services. This will result in job dislocations. I agree that employees should be treated fairly. I have always supported fair and humane social and economic adjustment programs. That is why I am such a staunch supporter of the unemployment insurance program, the DREE program, and of other programs which will lessen the impact of job dislocation, or the dislocation of the life of a community.

I would go further, and support the establishment of adjustment programs for the benefit of communities which have depended on railway service and lost that service; for such communities will lose taxes as well as services. In my view it is foolish to maintain services which can only operate at a deficit or with a subsidy.

Mr. Benjamin: Would you include the air lines?

Mr. Breau: Yes. In some instances it is foolish to maintain such a service. I will deal with the hon. member's point in a moment. It is ludicrous to operate DC-9's, costing between $6 million and $7 million, on the Montreal-Ottawa run, especially when many flights carry no more than 30 people. Air Canada should not subsidize this unprofitable route with what it earns on more profitable runs. Air Canada should discontinue such routes or services and replace them with bus service. I fly regularly, at least two or three times a month, to the maritimes. Since I know what it costs the taxpayer to fly DC-9's from Ottawa to Montreal half empty, I would rather use a bus and perhaps take half an hour or three quarters of an hour more over-all. You must wait to get a good connection at Dorval, and wait at other points; therefore, I would rather take a bus from Ottawa. The cost of that bus service would be minimal. The capital cost of the bus is in the vicinity of $250,000; in addition, you must pay the driver perhaps $300 or $400 per week, and pay a certain amount for fuel. But that cost will be much lower than the cost of flying an expensive aircraft for which you must make a huge capital outlay and pay large operating and fuel costs.

I say that our transport system should be rationalized, which is exactly what the minister is trying to do, and I admire him for it. I hope he sticks to his program. I hope he disregards the unrealistic and sometimes nonsensical suggestions of the opposition. It is normal that it should speak on behalf of people who have a vested interest in maintaining the present service, and try to embarrass the government. That is the political game. But the people are not foolish. They realize that when a service is uneconomic, they pay for it with their taxes. Therefore it is the government's duty to rationalize these services.

I return to the situation in northeastern New Brunswick. I am not against the concept of providing a subsidy for Eastern Provincial Airways; but if Eastern Provincial is to have a subsidy from the government, it should provide both services previously mentioned to northern New Brunswick, that is to say, local air service and service to Montreal. If they don't want to do it they should let the market determine if the system is viable, let the market set the rates, and be prepared not to accept a subsidy.

If a subsidy had not been paid on the route, northern New Brunswick would be better served today. Because the subsidy was paid, the system was never rationalized. I cite this as an example. One could point to many other examples to show how subsidies provided to airlines and railways and other modes of transport have not been of benefit. Because the subsidy was paid, nobody made an effort to rationalize the system and make it profitable.

Mr. Benjamin: None of them is profitable.

Mr. Breau: With respect, some are profitable.

Mr. Benjamin: Name one.

Mr. Breau: Does the hon. member mean air routes? If the hon. member would do his homework and read Air Canada's annual report, he would see that some routes are profitable.

Mr. Benjamin: Does the airline pay for its share of airport use?

Mr. Breau: Most of the airports in the maritimes, Moncton, Saint John, Halifax and others, pay for themselves.

Mr. Benjamin: With respect, they do not.

Mr. Breau: Most direct flights from those airports to Montreal pay for themselves.

An hon. Member: How about Mirabel?

Mr. Breau: If the hon. member would do some homework, read those reports and not look for political slogans, he would see that I am correct.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Mirabel.

Mr. Breau: An hon. member mentioned Mirabel. Surely he knows Mirabel is not in the maritime provinces; obviously he does not.

I think it is the duty of the Minister of Transport to make sure this country's transport system is rationalized. I encourage him to do so, support him, and urge him again to consider the matter of Montreal-Ottawa air service. Air Canada is subsidizing this route with more profitable routes. I know fares were increased and frequency of flights reduced. But I think more should be done. If Air Canada were to consult with a bus company I am sure it could provide pretty well as good a service, at much less cost. I suggest it should make a deal with a bus company, whereby the bus company would transport passengers from Montreal to Ottawa, and between other points as well.

A lot of the arguments we hear about transportation do not make much sense. They are merely made to embarrass the government because members know what the government is trying to do is very difficult. There are groups in society, in the case of railroads the unions, which are powerful. They have influence. I understand why they want to maintain railroad service. However, the taxpayers of Canada cannot afford to provide a railroad service because it suits the unions.

Mr. Benjamin: The unions never said that. That is a dumb statement.

Mr. Breau: At certain times the taxpayers of Canada have to invest money in the transportation system, and they should. In a country like Canada we must maintain a basic service from coast to coast. However, the taxpayer should be assured that the service is rational and the money is not being wasted.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion presented by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) which reads:

> That in the opinion of this House the government's transportation policies have failed to encourage the growth of strong regional economies, and, in particular, this House condemns the Minister of Transport's Atlantic provinces transportation policy and continues to reject his attitude towards western transportation problems.

The aspect of this motion that I would like to deal with is strong regional economics. I refer to the $12 million to $15 million hangar which the federal government is building at Winnipeg.

On May 23, 1974, during the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in Winnipeg. He made a grand announcement, stating that he would be giving the people of Winnipeg a $12 million hangar and that this would create 800 jobs in the aerospace industry in Winnipeg.

There was no reason for the Prime Minister to make that promise. There was no need for such a hangar. I will deal later with a statement made by Mr. Taylor, the president of Air Canada, and the statement by the Prime Minister. It was obvious that it was an attempt to bribe the people of Manitoba with their own money. However, they were not taken in by that attempt by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stated the hangar would be built immediately. However, construction did not begin until last year. It is to be completed by the end of this year.

I am quite concerned as to how this hangar will be used. It is a monstrous hangar that will accommodate 747's and L1011's. However, Air Canada does not do any servicing of 747's or L1011's in Winnipeg. The then Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), was in Winnipeg that particular day, May 23, 1974. He was dealing with the economic issues of the day, not trying to bribe people with their own money.

I quote from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of November 1, 1976:

> Air Canada, with a $12 million hangar under construction here that it claims it doesn't need and isn't paying for is negotiating with Transair Ltd. to share the 80,000 square-foot facility, it has been learned.
> Construction is being paid for by the federal treasury. The hangar, a campaign promise of Prime Minister Trudeau and former defence minister James Richardson, will be ready in late 1977.

Transair and a representative of the national airline have had discussions on the regional air carrier setting up a separate but shared operation in the fall of next year.

It's understood a five-year lease is one of the clauses of agreement.

There is no shortage of hangars in Winnipeg. There are a number of old Air Canada hangars that can accommodate 727's, DC7's and DC8's. Also, there is a hangar which can accommodate jet aircraft up to the size of the 707. We certainly have no need for this hangar, but we are stuck with it now. We have to find out what the government is going to do with it because the taxpayers will have to pay the maintenance costs of this monstrous hangar which will no doubt become a white elephant.

Air Canada, which can see no forseeable complete utilization of the facility, feels that leasing space would see the hangar put to proper use until such time as it can incorporate the line maintenance hangar into its present system.

The line maintenance hangar is emptying ash trays and doing light work with aircraft.

The airline doesn't have any aircraft based at Winnipeg and now uses CAE aircraft facilities when it is necessary to put an aircraft inside.

If they can use the CAE facility, I do not know why we need this $15 million hangar.

There is another aspect. Transair is having negotiations with Pacific Western Airlines with regard to a merger. If the merger goes through, all the overhaul work will be done in British Columbia and Alberta. Therefore, Air Canada and Transair will not be requiring any leased space in this $15 million hangar.

As recently as last week Mr. Claude Taylor, the president of Air Canada, was in Winnipeg. He stated, and I quote:

—Air Canada now has enough maintenance staff in Winnipeg to immediately need half of the 80,000 square foot hangar being built for it at the airport.

The Air Canada president said his airline has not reached any agreement with Transair for use of part of the $12 million maintenance hangar and the takeover by PWA could change the complexion of any discussions that have taken place.

At the present time they are scrounging around trying to find some use for this monstrous hangar. I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will take part in the debate later. Due to the present unrest and uncertainty in the province of Quebec, the federal government and Air Canada should give serious consideration to moving part of the overhaul and maintenance division back to Winnipeg and at the same time make use of this monstrous hangar. We have to find some use for it. Because of the size of that hangar, overhaul work on 747's and L1011's could be carried out in Winnipeg.

There is another point I want to clear up. When I was speaking on Bill C-7 last night the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Guay) interjected. He rose on a point of order which, of course, was not a point of order at all. None of his interjections are. He said, and I quote:

I would like to go on record as saying that I am very pleased with the construction of the hangar at the Air Canada base in Winnipeg. The people of Winnipeg also wanted it.

The people of Winnipeg wanted no such thing. They never made any such representations to me or anyone else.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

The minister went on to say:

I am suprised to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre saying that it is a white elephant.

It will be a white elephant if we do not find some good use for it.

He was the one who was pushing to get it,—

I was not pushing to get a $15 million hangar. I do not know where he dreams these things up. He said "Now he is talking out of the other side of his mouth." Well, I was not. As usual, he has everything mixed up. In the campaigns of 1972 and 1974, when making representations to have part of the overhaul and maintenance division returned to Winnipeg, we certainly did not ask for any $15 million hangar to be built because there are enough hangar facilities already in Winnipeg.

I should like to go a little into the history of the removal of the overhaul operation from Winnipeg to Dorval. The final move was made in 1969 and at that time the former minister of national defence, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson), stated, "It is one of the worst decisions ever made in Canadian history." Truer words were never spoken. It will certainly prove to be one of the costliest moves ever made by an airline, and it is one which has proved disastrous for many aspects of Air Canada's operations.

Air Canada, formerly Trans-Canada Airlines, was established in 1937 by the federal Liberal government of the day. Winnipeg was chosen as the overhaul centre by a group of unbiased American aviation experts who based their choice on all pertinent factors, including the advantages of a dry climate, clear flying weather, land values, construction costs, and taxation. Presumably these experts had no axe to grind and were solely interested in locating the maintenance facilities in the most logical area of Canada, and this they did.

Before the base was located in Montreal a number of studies were carried out and a well-known firm, Wallace Clark, was hired, obviously to bring in a recommendation in favour of Montreal. I should explain why I say that. Air Canada's history shows the company's planned deception and complete disregard for truth. Its refusal to disclose the consultants' report is proof of how far they were prepared to go to achieve the ends they wanted. An added aggravation was the disclosure which finally resulted from the forced release of the Wallace Clark data according to which the Winnipeg location was the one where maintenance operations could be carried out at the lowest cost. However, Wallace Clark ruled Winnipeg out because they were told that DC-8 aircraft would not be landing there. This was not true. They have been landing there for years by the thousands. DC-8 aircraft were routed, and must continue to be routed, through Winnipeg.

I hope the minister will have some comments to make on the use to which this $15 million hangar will be put. Judging from the statements made by the Air Canada president and others, it is difficult to find out just how it will be used. Perhaps the minister will bring us up to date tonight. The minister is now involved in making decisions for Air Canada, building hangars for the corporation and paying for them out of the public treasury, so he is considerably involved in the affairs of Air Canada, together with the Prime Minister, and I trust he will enlighten us tonight as to precisely what the situation is.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned this evening, we are debating a motion which I believe is one of the understatements of the year—

That in the opinion of this House the government's transportation policies have failed to encourage the growth of strong regional economies, and, in particular, this House condemns the Minister of Transport's Atlantic provinces transportation policy and continues to reject his attitude towards western transportation problems.

As I enter this discussion on transportation policy I cannot but think of the words used by the writer of a book entitled "Canada—A Story of Challenge." This historian, describing the nature of Canada and the way in which its geography tends to have a profound impact on the social and economic fabric of the nation, wrote:

Barriers such as the mountains and the shield exact a heavy price in scattering the population. They make for sectional divisions and high transportation charges. They weaken national unity and retard national development.

Four indictments are levelled in this quotation. First, these barriers make for sectional divisions: second, they weaken national unity; third, they retard national development; and fourth, they make for high transportation charges.

It is true that in western Canada unfair and discriminatory freight rates have contributed more to western alienation and a decline in national unity than even the questions of language and culture. However, I would not attribute these unfortunate effects to the physical factors maintained by the author of the book to which I referred. Rather, I attribute them to the policies, or lack of policies, enunciated and implemented by Liberal governments in past years. In the area of transport we have shuffled from one transportation mess, to use the words of a former minister, to another, and if political prophets are correct in their predictions we shall soon see the demise of yet another minister and the installation of a successor.

Even at this point there appears to be uncertainty regarding the implementation of a comprehensive national transportation policy. The rail system is important not only for the prairie region but for all Canada since the quality of the facilities put in place primarily for the prairie provinces have a very great effect upon the economy of British Columbia and, indeed, upon that of the whole nation. The failure to maintain an adequate standard of trackage across Canada, the failure to maintain adequate rolling stock, the failure of the companies to update their facilities, the decision to make huge investments in enterprises which have little or nothing to do with transport are a matter of great concern to those whose livelihood depends to a great extent on the movement of products to and from the areas in which they live.

My comments this evening will relate chiefly to my own province of British Columbia, and in particular to the agricultural sector. Although arable land in the province is extremely limited, my riding is one of the most important agricultural areas and I wish to relate my remarks to the motion as it affects conditions there. As a background to what I have to say I should like to indicate the extent and value of the livestock and poultry sectors of the agricultural industry in British Columbia. Farm cash receipts are as follows: cattle, $66,696,000; calves, $6,055,000; hogs, $11,599,000; sheep and lambs, $789,000; dairy products, $103,157,000; poultry, $36,969,000; eggs, $34,496,000; other livestock, $9,107,000.

This indicates the extent of the livestock industry in my province and emphasizes the importance of the feed grain situation in the province of British Columbia. I do not have the figures for 1976 here, but I have figures up to 1975. An analysis of the last three crop years shows that the feeding areas of the province, other than the Peace River district, consume about 480,000 tons of feed grains per year, of which 9 per cent is locally grown, 10 per cent is terminal elevator screenings, and 81 per cent is prairie grains and millfeeds of American corn.

Because of various situations which have developed, one being the matter of transportation, the increase of the importation of American corn is very, very clearly outlined. For instance in 1972 there were 14,400 tons imported, and in 1975 there were 73,600 tons imported. The increasing use of American corn is the result of a number of factors—the cost factor, transportation costs, and interruptions in transportation through strikes and other situations which are forcing people in British Columbia to depend more and more upon imports from the United States.

The industry was incensed when the government announced a reduction of $4 per ton on feed freight assistance to British Columbia. We appreciate the fact that this was restored when it was pointed out by the industry, the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, the provincial government, members of parliament and others, that the basis upon which this decision was made was actually a false one. This was particularly important to the Fraser Valley, for 80 per cent of the subsidized grain was used mainly in the lower mainland of the province and in the poultry and dairy industries. I am indicating this to show the importance of adequate transportation as far as the agricultural economy of British Columbia is concerned.

I am stressing the input problems which are being faced by agricultural producers, rather than the marketing of their product. However, there are a great many problems which are militating against the development and maintenance of a viable agricultural economy in the province of British Columbia. I mentioned first the lower priority which is assigned to the feed grain industry. We all recognize the importance of our export industry, but we have to consider that producers in Canada are battling in order to develop an industry and to maintain an industry without which the nation would be very much the poorer. So, we think of the lower priority assigned the feed grain industry; the lower priority which is recognized by transportation companies in providing transportation facilities; the unfair aspects of the block system, which has been set up mainly to assist in the export trade and which militates against the maintenance of adequate supplies of feed grains for the domestic producers in the province of British Columbia; and the inadequate provision of modern rail cars.

Hopper cars are used for the transport of grains for export, and we believe they should be used in the domestic feed grain industry as well because they are needed there. Unfortunately the industry is left using the outmoded equipment which has been replaced by the modern hopper car for the export trade.

We think also of the inequitable application of demurrage charges, which are applied to domestic grain but not to the movement of export grain on the west coast. Finally there are the unequal transportation rates on the movement of feed grains as compared with export grains. These have been stated very clearly on many occasions.

I should like to point out the comparative rail freight costs for shipping grain from Regina, Saskatchewan, to Ottawa, 1,652 miles, is $16.40 per ton or 99 cents per ton mile; Regina, Saskatchewan, to Sherbrooke, Quebec, 1,865 miles, is $18.60 or a cents per ton mile of $1; Regina, Saskatchewan, to Truro, Nova Scotia, 2,408 miles, is $20.20, or 84 cents per ton mile; Vulcan, Alberta, to Vancouver, British Columbia, 711 miles, is $18.40, or a cents per ton mile of $2.59 for domestic grain; and Vulcan, Alberta, to Vancouver, British Columbia, 711 miles, is $4.20, or 59 cents per ton mile for export grain.

The export movements have the benefit of the Crowsnest rates to Thunder Bay and water competitive rates beyond. On westbound shipments the Crow rates apply only to export grain. Thus we find the industry in British Columbia is strenuously opposing the paying of more freight on domestic grains to Vancouver. When we put these figures together, we see the industry in British Columbia is faced with a great many problems and a great many factors which militate against the maintenance of a viable industry in that province.

One example of freight inequity may be cited in the transportation of the finished product, for example, chicken—east versus west. The rates supplied by the British Columbia Broiler Marketing Board, which I believe are for 1974 and are comparable to the present time, are 7.85 cents per pound of chicken from Vancouver to Montreal versus 2.99 cents per pound of chicken from Montreal to Vancouver. When this is converted into terms of grains required to produce this pound of chicken, we come up with a relative rate of $8.30 per ton of grain in the form of chicken coming west versus $21.82 going east. That indicates how much we are out of line in endeavouring to move our products from the west to the east, as against the movement of similar products from the east to the west. This has caused a great deal of dissension, a great deal of antagonism, and a great deal of alienation in western Canada—the unfair freight rates which exist on goods sent east versus the rates on goods transported west.

Mr. Benjamin: It is uphill both ways.

[Mr. Patterson.]

Mr. Patterson: Yes, it is uphill both ways, as far as western Canada is concerned.

I should like to make reference to a communication I received from the B.C. Livestock Producers Co-operative Association which has to do with the livestock industry. This letter reads:

> We were most concerned last fall when proposed freight rate changes were proposed for an increase of 11 per cent for B.C. . . .

The letter refers to various increases, but a flat rate was agreed upon. It continues:

> Of equal importance and concern to us, is the availability of rolling stock for livestock shipping during the fall. Since we are the western terminus in so far as eastern shipments are concerned during the heavy shipments of western feeders to Ontario, it is sometimes difficult to obtain sufficient numbers of cars.

Here again there is a shortage of transportation facilities and rolling stock for livestock shipped to marked.

The letter continues:

> I understand that there has not been a livestock car built since 1947 for an industry that has almst doubled in numbers since that time.
> It is indeed puzzling to note the thousands of cars built with federal funds for the grain industry and the potato industry in the maritimes, but not for Canada's third largest industry.

All of this has to do with the agricultural economy in British Columbia. I could go on to refer to freight rates as they affect other industries in British Columbia, such as the lumber industry. Here again this industry faces insurmountable obstacles in marketing its products, such as inadequacy of rolling stock. Many times it is unable to obtain the required transportation facilities to keep one of the greatest industries in the province of British Columbia going.

I had a situation develop locally not too long ago concerning discrimination resulting from a CPR-induced boxcar shortage. It occurred in an area of my riding, Mission, where rolling stock was unavailable. A telegram was sent to the president of the Canadian Transport Commission which read as follows:

> Sir, we in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia are experiencing an extremely dire situation in regards to boxcar supply. We feel CPR is discriminating against us because of what they refer to as an unfavourable economic situation. We would ask you for your immediate intervention on our behalf. We have forwarded a complete brief by registered mail.

The company concerned also contacted their member of parliament and, I believe, another member of parliament from British Columbia. Representations were made and the matter was resolved, but here again we have a case where a small company is endeavouring to carry on its operations and expand an industry within the community, yet is faced with discrimination and is unable to move its products.

I am very happy to have had the opportunity tonight of speaking to this motion because, as I have already pointed out, I believe the problem is not a question of geography but rather one of inadequate transportation policies which have worked to the detriment of the agricultural industry of British Columbia as well as of other industries. As I have said, there are inadequate facilities provided to move products to market and to bring into industries the input required to maintain their viability.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to enter into the debate this evening on the motion before the House, particularly as it relates to the Atlantic provinces. At the outset I might say that all too often we have considered an opposition motion which is so negative in nature that insufficient interest is shown by the opposition party to the extent that the mover of the motion, who in this case happens to represent a constituency in the Atlantic provinces, does not even remain in the House. Evidently this motion is deemed by the hon. member to be insufficiently serious enough for him to be in the House this evening. As a matter of fact, as I tally up the number of members opposite, there are something like six members—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Watch out; there may not be a quorum!

Mr. Harquail: —of the loyal opposition in attendance this evening. I feel this is a sad observation to make on this parliament. If I may quote the motion before the House, it is:

> That in the opinion of this House the government's transportation policies have failed to encourage the growth of strong regional economies, and, in particular, this House condemns the Minister of Transport's Atlantic provinces transportation policy and continues to reject his attitude towards western transportation problems.

How can maritime members, be they supporters of the government or the opposition, turn their backs on the $125 million worth of programs recently announced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), which are a positive step to assist in alleviating some of the dire transportation problems facing that region today? In terms of rationalization of transportation and alleviating transportation problems, it is beyond my comprehension how so little interest is displayed.

All the rhetoric I have listened to in recent days raises a grave question in my mind as to whether we really have an official opposition daily in attendance in this House.

Mr. Patterson: We do not often have the government in attendance either.

Mr. Harquail: In view of the way that the House leader of the official opposition spoke today, I am seriously wondering just where the opposition is in the House. Of course with the type of leadership which they have to follow, whether it be the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), or the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), or wherever it is he is from, there is no doubt hon. members opposite have a problem, but I am really distressed to see this situation develop at this point in Canadian history.

I should like to return to a more positive note—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You could not if you tried.

Mr. Harquail: —and reiterate what the minister has done on behalf of the Atlantic area. He has sat down in a very sincere and serious way with the council of maritime premiers, including the representative of the Newfoundland government, Mr. Morgan, and after many hours of debate and deliberation has arrived at a decision to provide in the order of $300 million worth of subsidies for transportation paid in the maritimes in 1976, whether it be rail transportation, air transportation, or what have you.

In addition, he has discussed freight rates and assistance to provincial ferries in the Atlantic provinces. I submit that he has made a positive contribution on behalf of a government which looks into the heart of a problem and comes up with a solution. In this way the government has assisted the Atlantic provinces to overcome their most serious transportation problems.

• (2130)

When I consider that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), who is a maritimer and is supposed to know and understand the problems of Atlantic Canada and who is called the official critic on transportation for the official opposition, would have the mitigated gall—

Mr. Benjamin: Unmitigated gall.

Mr. Harquail: —my friend, who is a member representing one of the western provinces, who has just interjected, as a matter of fact travelled with the transport committee to the Atlantic provinces this past week. I might inform members of the House that in spite of all that might be said about citizens of the Atlantic regions in this country, whether they be members of parliament or elected representatives at the municipal or provincial level, and despite all criticisms that have been expressed by people in the maritimes about not being heard, about being a voice crying in the wilderness, about not being able to bring their points of view forward—and this might be ironical or amusing—in the past week meetings have been held in St. Andrews, New Brunswick, and the CTC has conducted hearings with respect to the rail-passenger service in the maritime provinces. On top of that the government has carried out in good faith its undertaking made some time last year to visit the western provinces, particularly the port and harbour facilities in Vancouver, and we also made good our commitment to visit the east coast.

Indeed it is history now that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has just completed an in depth visit to St. John's, Newfoundland; Saint John, New Brunswick, and Halifax when the citizens of that area were given every opportunity to appear and make their voices, opinions and interventions heard before the standing committee on the question of transportation policies, transportation facilities and subsidies, as well as on any other question they might deem appropriate to bring before the committee. Indeed it was a most interesting and enlightening exercise in which I had the honor of participating as a member of the committee.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell them how they kicked Ottawa around.

Mr. Harquail: The fact of the matter is that, discouraging as it was to hear some of the witnesses who appeared before us say that they might have appreciated having had more time to present and prepare more briefs, if these people who are concerned with dry docks, shipbuilding, and transportation questions in general, as well as facilities for containerization, had been seriously involved in this business, they would have known that we had made a commitment last year to visit the east coast. Had they been more aware, they would have known that it was stated in the House, recorded in Hansard, and in the proceedings of the committee on Transport and Communications, that we fully intended to visit the east coast, to visit Newfoundland, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia to discuss these matters and to hear the views of these people. Similarly, the Canadian Transport Commission will be visiting Halifax and Fredericton on Friday, June 10. They will be in my riding of Restigouche and will come to the city of Campbellton to give an opportunity to the people there to express their views regarding the need for a future rail passenger service in eastern Canada.

I ask you, what more can the government do? It is conducting meetings in the very areas where we are being criticized. It is meeting with the various associations and organizations concerned with transportation problems in the area. The Canadian Transport Commission, under the direction of the Hon. Edgar Benson, is conducting hearings this year with respect to the rail passenger service. Last year the CTC spent many months in the Atlantic provinces deliberating on the whole question of the air passenger service in that region. On top of that the government has expended $300 million in subsidies for transportation in the Atlantic area. In addition—and this is not promise but a fact—recently the Minister of Transport announced that $125 million would be spent right away to assist the different modes of transport in the east, such as rail, air, ferry, and bus transportation.

In spite of all these positive actions by the government we see before us today this most negative motion brought in by the official opposition stating that they condemn the minister's transportation policy in the Atlantic provinces. How can a member of parliament from the Atlantic area rise in the House and make such a statement, let alone carry the responsibility of being the official transportation critic of the official opposition? It is quite beyond me to understand that. It comes right down to what I have said recently—although one who supports our democratic system would be reluctant to say this—that we have no opposition at all. They show no creativity, no innovation, no new ideas.

This is not a tired opposition; it is no opposition. They do not refer to the positive actions of the government such as the $285 million or $300 million paid out in subsidies. They do not refer to the inquiries and studies being carried out by the CTC with respect to the rail passenger service. They will not comment about the inquiry that was carried out last year with respect to the air passenger service. All they do is make measly statements here about the lack of effectiveness of the coast-guard, for example, when anyone who had the opportunity to take part in the visit of the transport committee to the Atlantic area recently would know that a substantial amount of the taxpayers' money is being invested by the government in the Atlantic area to do the best job that can be done there.

Let me say a few words about the dedication of the MOT officials. You will not find another civil servant or federal government employee who is more dedicated than the employees of the MOT, whether we talk about the people who work in the Department of Transport or about employees of Crown corporations. To a man these are good Canadians, God fearing, hard working.

Mr. Benjamin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harquail: They contribute in a most positive way to the work of the department. Yet we have to sit here and listen to the negative approach of the opposition. They do not seem capable of at least acknowledging some of the positive moves of the government. Yet the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East in introducing the motion—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I listened for a few moments to what might pass for a speech. I am referring to the remarks made by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail). I was in the House when the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), about whom he is speaking, made his speech with respect to the motion that was put forward. I listened very carefully to this speech. As a matter of fact I seconded the motion. I thought I did not hear the hon. member correctly the first time, but when he repeated that the speech of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East was negative I felt it necessary to rise on a point of order. It seems obvious to me that the hon. member for Restigouche was somewhere—I do not know where—when the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East was making his speech, but he was not in the Chamber.

Mr. Paproski: Right, he was not in the Chamber.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The speech was hardly as it was reported by the hon. member for Restigouche.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I have listened to the hon. member but I fail to find a point of order in what he said.

Mr. Harquail: I sympathize with you tonight, Mr. Speaker, when I hear you observe that you cannot see a point of order in what the hon. member said. It is not the first time that we have witnessed a dismal performance from the opposition House leader. He said that he seconded the opposition motion. Obviously he is in dire straits so far as communication with the members of his own caucus is concerned. How can he, as House leader of the official opposition, second the motion of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, and at the same time deny in the most negative terms our right to enjoy the benefits of the $125 million to alleviate some of our transportation problems in the east? Surely the hon. member can do better than to come in at this late hour and make interjections and raise points of order. He should stop and reconsider his own position in the light of the motion which is before us tonight.

I do not think it makes good sense or good parliamentary procedure for the opposition to interrupt proceedings in this manner. I suggest to hon. members opposite that perhaps they should have more meetings of their own committees to decide what is really right for this country in terms of the approach they should take in this House, and in terms of assisting in some concrete and positive way to making a contribution to this parliament, rather than trying to ridicule the government the way they do. It is really sad when we have to tolerate this type of interference.

When we were in the maritime provinces I said throughout the hearings that we should support the maritime premiers. Indeed the premier of New Brunswick has made attempts to find a solution to the whole problem of air passenger service in the four Atlantic provinces. A solution was put forward to the air branch of the Canadian Transport Commission with respect to utilizing the Canadian built de Havilland Dash-7, a 50 passenger aircraft which could be used to provide daily service between the four Atlantic provinces.

That is not to mention the possibility of utilizing the twin Otter in a way which would provide rapid transportation between the various municipalities in the province of New Brunswick. This is something I have had occasion to speak about previously. This is something I advocate and support earnestly.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought you wanted to conserve energy.

Mr. Harquail: We have to do that in every way possible. An hon. member opposite who is a member of the NDP interjects. Yes, I am for conservation of energy, and it certainly does not make sense to me, in view of the winters we are faced with, to talk about replacing rail service or air service with bus service. I am completely convinced that in every area of each of the four Atlantic provinces air service is the solution we should be looking to because bus service really does not make much sense in terms of a logical approach to the very severe winters we have. I think there should be a very close study made of the cost of the utilization of energy with respect to operating buses as opposed to an efficient air passenger service which could provide a more effective pattern of service to the travelling public. I appreciate that an in depth study should be made with respect to the scheduling of flights so that we can have load factors which will offset the costs we are faced with in these days of high fuel costs.

I appreciate having this opportunity to set the record straight with regard to some of the drib-drab we have had to listen to from some of the previous speakers opposite.

Mr. Benjamin: Is that the same as cow plats?

Mr. Harquail: Their remarks on what the government is doing have been negative. I do not care what kind of politics or dollars we are talking about; any time a government announces $125 million to alleviate a transportation problem in the Atlantic provinces, it is a darned good step, and I certainly would not have any truck with an hon. member from the Atlantic provinces who would speak in any other way, when I consider the very dedicated and sincere efforts being made by the Minister of Transport on our behalf.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is a good thing the hon. member who just spoke lives in Restigouche because he would be speaking with a forked tongue if he came from Carleton-Charlotte and if he were to discuss transportation problems as he discussed them tonight. I submit that no hon. member from the Atlantic provinces and few hon. members from eastern Quebec can take the position taken by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) with a clear conscience. It must have taken a strong application of the political whip to make a man who comes from that area talk that way.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I submit that it would be more to the advantage of the hon. member opposite if he would stick closely to the motion which is before us tonight, a motion brought in by the official opposition. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) should not make the kinds of comments he is making.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, you have given those remarks the attention to which they were entitled. You have dismissed them as they should have been dismissed, and I appreciate that.

Mr. Benjamin: As you were saying?

Mr. McCain: Has the hon. member for Restigouche received a personal political assurance that any passenger service which might be rendered in the province of New Brunswick will go up the north shore? Is that the reason he talks the way he does?

Mr. Harquail: We've got it anyway.

Mr. McCain: If the hon. member has been given that assurance, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has a board of inquiry in the Atlantic area—or perhaps it left last night—which has certainly been operating under a misconception. It was presumed in the Atlantic area that that was a meaningful trip, but if the hon. member has the assurance that the passenger service will in fact, by a predetermined policy of the government, continue to go up through the north shore of the province of New Brunswick, then he could, of course, speak as he did in his own constituency. However, he would not be helping some of his confreres who will be denuded of any passenger service by a predetermined judgment. It may be an exercise in futility for the Canadian Transport Commission to conduct any hearings whatsoever.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. I would like to set the record straight.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. This is a matter for debate, certainly not a point of order.

Mr. McCain: The hon. member has asked for some concrete proposals, and I will give him one. We should insist, as the hon. member for Restigouche has done, on behalf of the Atlantic area that the rights extended to eastern Canada under the BNA Act be exercised by a policy of the government and its minister. That has not been done. That is a constructive suggestion, and because that suggestion has not been accepted by the party which the hon. member opposite embraces, it becomes an item of criticism. Those rights should have been extended to the Atlantic area and eastern Quebec. Those areas have been conscientiously and intentionally denied those rights as a result of government policy, and the hon. member opposite is part of that government party.

Mr. Benjamin: It wasn't much different when the Tories were in.

Mr. McCain: With all due respect to the hon. member from that socialist party to my left, when a Conservative government was in power rail transportation rates made it possible to move lumber to east central Canada by rail. It left the agricultural industry in eastern Canada in a competitive position, to which we are entitled under the BNA Act, when we shipped to central Canada. That is what the policy of the Conservative party contained, and that is why the remark of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is really out of order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us examine a few individual instances and the policy of the government as it relates to them. I admit that the Atlantic area has under used the passenger service offered by the railroads, but we should look at the history of that service. I went to a little school in Wolfville called Acadia University, one of the best universities in Canada, if not the best.

Mr. MacFarlane: The second best in North America.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, that is obviously a prejudiced remark and history will reveal the cause of the prejudice. When I took a passenger train home I found myself stopped in the middle of the night, about 2 a.m., having to wait six hours in an isolated station with no services available whatsoever for the passenger service operated by the CP to connect with the CN passenger service. We went from there to Moncton and waited anything up to six hours before we moved up to the village of Juniper. It was an 18-hour trip. Had the government of that time been concerned for the people who used the passenger service there would have been a reasonable connection provided.

To proceed to more modern times, the government has—and I think intentionally—disrupted the mail service by taking it from the trains which gave overnight delivery from Ottawa to my community and provided revenue to passenger and express services as well. When the mail was removed from the passenger service it heralded the demise of that service. This is part of the structure. Maybe the hon. member for Restigouche is not aware of these things. At that time many applications were received for the cessation of the passenger service in eastern Canada. Of course it has been predetermined that it will go up the north shore and that the rest of the province of New Brunswick will go without.

Let us look now at the port facility in the city of Saint John. The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications held hearings throughout the Atlantic area. Of course the hon. member for Restigouche paid a little attention to that but did not follow it up. We were told that facilities for the movement of potatoes, which is important to the province, had been inadequate for years. The railroads have been allowed to abandon the principle of proper provision of equipment for the movement of perishables on the rails, not only in eastern Canada but in Kelowna, in Ontario, and in any part of Canada in which there are perishables to be shipped. I submit that that makes the government subject to criticism. It can buy 6,000 grain cars but it cannot manage the agricultural structure in regard to perishables. It has a particularly blind eye when it comes to Saint John.

Let us see what happened in Halifax. I do not remember seeing the hon. member for Restigouche there. We were told by the Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board that they could throw a cat through the cracks in the door. We were told that the facility was so poor that when using the available shed, one exporter had hired all the heating equipment that was for rent in the city of Halifax in order to keep his product warm in that port facility. When the shipment got to its destination he was not sure whether the potatoes had frozen in transit to the shed or had frozen in the shed in spite of all the heating equipment he had provided to keep them warm.

I am told that I should not criticize; that I should be constructive. But let us remember the BNA responsibility of government to eastern Quebec and the Atlantic provinces—then we will not be critical because we will not have to be. The reasonable obligation of government in the field of transportation will have been fulfilled if these responsibilities are faced.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not remember seeing the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) in St. John's, Newfoundland, and at some of the other meetings. If he is going to get into the semantics of who was at what meeting I think the record should show that he missed the bus that was provided for him in Halifax. I happen to have been there and I know about that.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not deduct that from my time.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, would you like me to tell all? I was there all the time.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Restigouche is absolutely correct. I was not with them in St. John's, Newfoundland, because I had been invited to attend the Canadian Forum on Transportation Research which was meeting in St. Andrews. I submit that by attending it I got an additional perspective on the responsibility of government which the hon. member for Restigouche missed. As a member of the transportation committee I paid my own way that day while he was travelling at government expense.

I should like now to talk about another aspect of government negligence in the field of transportation. One of the things we encountered in the various presentations was an opposition to the increase in freight rates. The Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board and the New Brunswick Potato Shippers' Association pointed out to the committee that in just a little over 12 months the freight rate increases on potato products had in their accumulated effect increased by over 50 per cent. I thought we had an Anti-Inflation Board, Mr. Speaker, and the potato shippers thought we had an Anti-Inflation Board. Is the transportation system above the law? Is it only the little people who are to be regulated by the Anti-Inflation Board, while the big guys are not? That 50 per cent increase again deflects the intention of the British North America Act inasumch as it may very well remove that product from competition in the Canadian market. As I have said before, and I hate to be repetitive, if one examines the cost in the State of Maine of moving the same product by rail—I see it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion have expired.

It being ten o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

FAILURE TO REINSTATE RIVER GUARDIANS IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Department of Fisheries and the Environment has not rehired approximately 50 per cent of the 163 river guardians employed on the salmon rivers in Newfoundland, resulting in the loss of 80 jobs. The increase in poaching on these rivers with fewer guardians will have a very serious effect on the salmon stocks in Newfoundland's rivers and makes a complete mockery of Canada's conservation measures. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House direct the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment to authorize the immediate reinstatement of last year's allotment for river guardians in Newfoundland, and that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FREE FLIGHTS FOR MINISTERS ON AIRCRAFT OWNED BY PRIVATE COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), to move:

That this House, noting that the Minister of National Health and Welfare enjoyed a free flight in a Seagram's aircraft, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did the same in an aircraft owned by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, and that the Minister of Transport has now flown free in a Nordair Aircraft so he could make a speech calling for the user to pay, is concerned over the conflict of interest involved in such flights, but is also of the view that all cabinet ministers should be treated equally, and this House therefore expresses the hope that some other private airline will offer a free trip by air to all members of the cabinet, anywhere in the world they want to go, one way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

MOTION TO CONGRATULATE MEMBERS OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON PENITENTIARY REFORMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I wish to put a motion dealing with an urgent matter on which I am convinced the House will be unanimous.

As the sub-committee on our penitentiary system has done a terrific job in the last few months with a view to making concrete recommendations to improve our penal system, and as the report brought down by that sub-committee is a document of superior quality, which all hon. member will recognize, though unanimous consent may not have been reached on some of its recommendations, and moreover as this report is a unique example of the cooperation of hon. members of all political parties, devoid of partisan considerations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House warmly congratulate hon. members of the sub-committee on the penitentiary system for the magnificent task they performed by cooperating without partisan bias, and also for the outstanding report they tabled in the House yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion; is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON USER-PAY CONCEPT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning press reports today of an address by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in Hamilton on the subject of the government's user pay policy for transportation and particularly the statement attributed to the minister that, and I quote:

I would like to point out to you that it's the taxpayer who's the user. I am the employee doing the user's business and therefore obviously the user pays.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Transport make a statement to the House outlining on behalf of himself and the government all the reasons justifying his illogical and strange contention that the taxpayer is the user and should therefore pay for flights he makes, including those of a personal and political nature, and finally that the government give assurances to this House that at last steps will be taken to prevent forthwith such arrogant further gross misuse of public funds by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

OPPOSITION TO FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same standing order, and I hope the same consideration will be given to my motion in terms of unanimity as that which was given to the hon. member's motion on the penitentiary matter. This motion has been canvassed by the four parties in the House.

In view of the decision of the Governor of the State of Washington reversing that state's position on the flooding of the Skagit Valley by the Seattle City Light Company, and in view of the position taken unanimously by this House and by the government of Canada on November 2, 1973 in opposition to the flooding of the Skagit Valley, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House reaffirms its unanimous decision taken on November 2, 1973 opposing any flooding of the Skagit Valley in the province of British Columbia by United States power authorities and that a copy of this motion be forwarded to the Governor of the State of Washington and the President of the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require that for the presentation for debate of such a motion the unanimous consent of the House must be given. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

PENITENTIARIES

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the atmosphere here which has seen two Standing Order 43 motions passed today, I would like first to associate myself quite explicitly with the congratulations extended to the members of the subcommittee on the penitentiary system, who did an excellent job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In addition, in posing my question to the Solicitor General, I should like to congratulate the government for taking up our initiative to appoint a committee of inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In that same spirit might I ask the minister if he accepts the general recommendations made in the report, and if he shares the explicit view in the first recommendation of the report that a crisis exists in the Canadian penitentiary system that can be met only by the implementation of large scale reforms?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his question. I, of course, associate myself with the good words he addressed to all members of the parliamentary committee which of course was set up on my initiative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Nice try.

Mr. Fox: On this side of the House the word "crisis" usually invokes concepts of both danger and opportunity. I think the report of the parliamentary committee indicates a great opportunity to continue to make changes that are necessary in the penitentiary system in Canada.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Solicitor General did not go further and embrace the explicit recommendation of the report he has endorsed which called for immediate implementation of large scale reforms which is not the same as simply proposing to carry out changes that are already in place. Is it the intention of the government to respond to this report in the spirit that there is a need for immediate implementation of large scale reforms in the Canadian penitentiary service and system?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, unlike some members of the House I only received a copy of the report yesterday. I am in the process of examining the recommendations. On first reading of the recommendations, I see that the parliamentary committee endorses some of the very far-reaching reforms that have been initiated over the past year. I will just cite one instance: The committee endorses fully the extension of the living unit concept and the team concept throughout the penitentiary system. They have also indicated that they have complete confidence in the director we named to the Millhaven institution. That institution is also going onto the team concept. As far as the other recommendations are concerned, I take them most seriously indeed. It is my intention to review them and analyze them as completely as possible and make a response to the House on them.

ALLEGED ESTABLISHMENT OF GROUP TO STUDY RECOMMENDATIONS OF SUBCOMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF MEMBERS OF GROUP

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister's parliamentary secretary is reported this morning as having said that a working group has already been established within the department to initiate recommendations that do not require legislation. Since one of the findings of the report was that some of the fault lies with existing management, and since there may well be some conflict if members of existing management were part of that working group, would the Solicitor General tell the House who the members of that working group are, what are they doing and when does he expect to receive a report for action from it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have been expecting this report in the department for some time and have been looking forward to it with a great deal of anticipation. In preparation for receiving the report we set in motion procedures to forward copies of it to all elements of the department, including those directors who met with the parliamentary committee and in whom the committee expressed confidence; it will also be directed to all senior management of the Canadian penitentiary service; and it will be discussed by the senior policy advisory committee of my department which includes the RCMP, the Parole Board and the penitentiary service. These bodies will make recommendations to me which I will evaluate. I expect the process to take approximately three weeks.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Solicitor General for his extemporaneous reply. Is there or is there not a working group? Should we believe the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General who says there is a working group, which is something other than a list for circulation of copies of the report, or do we accept the minister's response as being the totality of the situation? If there is a working group who is on it?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I have just indicated that the report affects just about every phase of the operation of the criminal justice system both within my department and I suppose to a lesser extent within the Department of Justice. Recommendations are made for changes in the Criminal Code. As I indicated, the most senior people in my department, including the minister's parliamentary secretary, are involved in analysing the report and making recommendations to me. As I said previously, I want to move as quickly as possible on those recommendations which can be implemented without legislative change, and want to look closely at others. Clearly, we have already initiated changes in the penitentiary system in the past year.

My predecessor, as well, brought about a number of changes. Among the initiatives of my predecessor are the legislative changes presently before the House, as incorporated in Bill C-51. There are in particular changes concerning the procedure of due process for inmates appearing before the parole board. I conclude by saying we are taking most seriously the report brought down at the initiative of the government and are most interested, as are members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada I am sure, in seeing greater reforms introduced into the penitentiary system of Canada.

RECOMMENDATION PRISON STAFF BECOME A PROFESSIONAL CORPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. One of the more important recommendations is the removal of the penitentiary staff from the Public Service Commission, and their integration into a professional corps of prison staff similar in nature to the RCMP. Will the minister tell the House when he will meet representatives of the PSAC to discuss the matter and, in addition, if he regards this step as central to the effective reform of our penitentiary system, as members of the subcommittee did?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the recommendation was made to me yesterday and has far-reaching consequences, as the hon. member knows. I should like to examine the recommendation in detail and consider its implications before making a statement either way on that proposal.

PROPOSAL COMMITTEE BE GIVEN MANDATE TO REVIEW IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In its last recommendation, No. 65, the committee recommended that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs should have a permanent reference during the rest of the 30th parliament and for the 31st parliament, to enable it to review the implementation of this report in the context of the criminal justice system. Since the committee worked on a non-partisan basis to make that report, will the minister assure the House he will make this recommendation to the government, and implement it as soon as possible?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to give that undertaking today. I am willing to look at the matter in greater detail. My initial reaction is this: the committee reported to me, and it then becomes my responsibility and that of the penitentiary system to implement such reforms as are appropriate in the circumstances. The parliamentary committee, or members of the justice committee, should have the opportunity to examine the implementation during the course of examination of estimates and supplementary estimates, parliament usually follows such a practice, instead of the type of innovative practice recommended.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What are you guys afraid of?

DATE WHEN LEGISLATION BASED ON COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS WILL BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister and follow up his last answer concerning final recommendation No. 65 of the report, which asks for a continuing mandate during the 30th parliament and for the 31st parliament? Since the minister is apparently unwilling to commit himself at this point to the continuing mandate; since the report itself was an all-party, unanimous report; and since all members of the committee, of all parties, want to see the government act on the report, will the minister not say today when the government will introduce legislation in this House based on the recommendations of the report? The minister said he needs three weeks to evaluate the report. Surely he can say now if during the present session of parliament we can expect positive action on those recommendations?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary committee made an in depth analysis of problems associated with the running of Canada's penitentiaries. It took the parliamentary committee at least seven months to make those recommendations. Perhaps they can bear with me for a short time while I evaluate their recommendations, to determine which require legislative action in the House. In order to answer the last part of the hon. gentleman's question I would need to know how long the present session of parliament will last.

[Mr. Fox.]

RECOMMENDED CHANGE IN SOLITARY CONFINEMENT CONDITIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Many matters raised in this report are not new. The Solicitor General and his predecessor must have been aware of difficulties within the prison system ever since many of us were elected in 1972. One problem raised was solitary confinement conditions in all maximum security institutions in Canada. The decision of Mr. Justice Heald of the Federal Court, when he looked at the situation in the British Columbia solitary confinement section, stated that it was cruel and inhuman punishment. Surely, the Solicitor General can now give some assurance to this House that at least the effect of the Federal Court decision in terms of the conditions under which people are held in solitary confinement will be expanded to the other maximum security institutions and we can civilize the conditions of solitary confinement in Canada. I would like the minister to give us some idea as to whether that recommendation has any immediate appeal to him.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have glanced at the recommendations. There are a number that have immediate appeal to me. With regard to the ones the hon. member referred to, they are of a nature that do not require legislative change. I will examine, in a priority manner, all of the recommendations that do not require immediate legislative change, for example where changes can be effected in an administrative manner.

DATE OF CLOSING OF BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the B.C. Penitentiary will have its hundredth anniversary next year. I might say the Solicitor General is invited to the celebration.

An hon. Member: In solitary.

Mr. Leggatt: In any event, the Morrow report in the sixties called for the phasing out of all of those dungeons from the 19th century yet we still have them in operation in Canada. Can the minister now give some indication in terms of the B.C. Pen, and he may want to refer to other maximum security pens, as to a final closing date of this and other archaic institutions in Canada. I would like a commitment on when we will get rid of the pen in New Westminster.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a specific date as to when we will close down any institution in this country. I take it that the hon. member and the members of his committee, through one of the recommendations they made, support the governments accelerated construction program which will see the phasing out of some of these institutions over the next three to five years.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER PROGRAM FOR ATLANTIC AREA CONDITIONAL UPON ONE TRAIN DAILY FROM HALIFAX TO MONTREAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister indicate to the House and the people in the Atlantic provinces whether the $125 million transportation program for Atlantic Canada announced recently by him is contingent upon the assumption that the CTC recommends one daily train service from Halifax to Montreal and that other rail services be abandoned?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it does not prejudge the decisions and conduct of the CTC in connection with the overall issue. It did, however, have to work on certain assumptions about financing. Of course, we had before us a document which indicated a study sponsored by the five governments and which indicated the degree of savings which would be possible if that eventuality in fact took place.

SOURCE OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE MILLION FOR ATLANTIC AREA PROGRAM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): In addressing the railway transport committee meetings on this subject in Fredericton earlier this week, Premier Hatfield denied there were any contingencies with regard to the reduction of rail passenger service and the funds. However, the background paper released from the minister's office indicates quite clearly that savings of rail subsidies will be available for other transportation programs in the region. Will there be any new money coming into the Atlantic region or will this $125 million flow from subsidies, the loss of at and east rates, the reduction of wages, the reduction of train operating costs and the reduction of those four trains, Halifax-Sydney? Is that where the money is going to come from or is the $125 million new money?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what we did in looking at transportation in the Atlantic region was to identify certain areas where logical savings could be made without any detriment to the Atlantic provinces. That money was certainly identified for further investment in the Atlantic region. In addition, the agreement and the announcement of the total $125 million does include a great deal of new money for the Atlantic region. That is what made it so astonishing for me yesterday when this whole program was criticized by members of the opposition from the Atlantic area.

Mr. Forrestall: I suggest that to clear up the fuzziness, the minister talk out of the middle of his mouth instead of both sides at once. I understand—I hope I am correct and perhaps the minister will advise me if I am not—that the $125 million is not entirely new money and that a substantial proportion of that sum will be realized through the savings arising out of the directive to the Transport Committee with respect to the establishment of a single passenger train service from the maritime provinces to Montreal.

• (1430)

Mr. Lang: I have always made it clear, Mr. Speaker, that there would be savings in other areas. For instance, when making the announcement I referred to the diversion of moneys which had been available for transport subsidies on freight where it is agreed by the five provinces that those particular subsidies were not aiding the development of the Atlantic provinces. That money would, indeed, be used in other ways. I repeat, some money was diverted but substantial sums of new money will be supplied. What should be clear to hon. members opposite, as it was clear to the premiers, is that the program we have proposed is very good for the Atlantic region in terms of total progress in spending money more effectively and adding more money for the general advantage and development of the region.

CRIMINAL CODE

ALLEGED REQUEST OF BENCHERS OF LAW SOCIETY OF UPPER CANADA TO MEET MINISTER ON CHANGES IN PRIVACY PROVISIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question.

An hon. Member: Speak up!

Mr. Woolliams: Well, if you cannot hear me over there, I can always speak louder. That is one thing I can always rely on—the same old chorus, the same old song, but no new ideas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I know the minister has something in common with everyone—he would like to see the amendments to the Criminal Code, or some of them, passed expeditiously. My question arises from the fact that the amendments to Bill C-51 would have the effect of undoing and sabotaging the good work done by the committee in reference to the ensurance of privacy and the fact that the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada as well as members of the criminal section of the Canadian Bar Association are opposing this sabotage. In these circumstances, may I ask whether the minister has seen the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada? Have they requested to see him, and has he refused to see them?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Answering the hon. member's question, for the moment, as a bencher of the Law Society of Upper Canada, let me say I am not aware that they have requested such a meeting. If they have, I will check into the matter immediately. Naturally, if they want to see me I shall readily agree, as I did in the case of three groups, somewhat similar, with which I met last week—the Civil Liberties Union, the Defence Lawyers Association of Toronto and the Criminal Law Section of the Canadian Bar Association.

Mr. Woolliams: The Minister of Justice says he is a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Well, every Minister of Justice since confederation has been an honorary member; the hon. gentleman never got there by election but only by appointment of the Prime Minister. In the light of the fact that the benchers of the Law Society are opposed to this amendment to the bill, will the minister now reconsider his position so that the measure can get through the committee expeditiously, as he is now urging should be done by recommending committee members to get on with the job?

Mr. Basford: I shall not comment on the preliminary part of the hon. member's question except to say I hope I do not detect a note of jealousy in his comment. I said I was not aware that the benchers had taken a position on Bill C-51. If they have, I would be happy to consider it and I would be happy to meet with them to discuss the matter.

The hon. member is asking me to reconsider my position on the bill. I think he will agree with me that in connection with all the bills, including this one, I have endeavoured to be as flexible and as accommodating as I can to legitimate and responsible representation. The hon. member has asked me to move from my position. I, of course, would ask him to re-examine carefully his position of unalterable opposition to determine whether there is not some common ground on which the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, in the non-partisan way in which it usually operates, can report unanimously the bill which is before it.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister has said he will see the benchers. Well, they will be coming to town tomorrow and will be seeing me. Would he meet with them tomorrow? When he talks about being jealous, let me say I have never been jealous of anyone so uninformed.

TOURISM

PROPOSAL THAT TRAVEL SUBSIDY BE GRANTED TO ALL CITIZENS TO TRAVEL WITHIN CANADA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether the government intends to follow the excellent suggestion made recently by the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Spicer, that the government should pay a travel subsidy to Canadians to encourage travel in Canada instead of abroad since this would help improve the understanding between French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians and would also reduce this country's $2 billion a year deficit on international travel as well as being of great assistance to the ailing tourist industry.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member is aware—if not, I will send him the information—of the program I announced in the House called Open House Canada. Under that program the travel costs of young people between the ages of 16 and 22 will be covered by the federal government to encourage them to visit across linguistic boundaries on an exchange basis. We will support that kind of exchange by paying transportation costs. We intend to evaluate the experience under this program and on the basis of that experience we shall consider extending it to other age categories and in other ways.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Hees: I was aware of the program the minister announced. However, as he knows, there are a great many people in this country over the age of 22 and it would benefit them very much if they could travel to French Canada and if people in French Canada could travel to other parts of the country on a similar basis. All this is obvious. Would the minister get on with the job and bring in a measure which I am sure would meet with universal support and do a great deal of good?

Mr. Roberts: We are getting on with the job. Our position is, in the first instance, to give priority to youth. But when I announced the program I indicated we were considering extending it to families. We do have in mind the extension of the program but I think it is a wise idea to see, first of all, what possible administrative difficulties might be encountered before going on to broaden its scope.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO CONGRATULATE UNITED STATES TELEVISION NETWORKS ON EARLY SHOWING OF CELEBRATION OF QUEEN'S JUBILEE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question has lost some of its tangyness due to the fact that I have tried to ask it two days in a row, but I shall proceed. I direct it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. May I ask the minister to advise the United States ambassador that thousands of Canadians are grateful that television networks in the United States began the jubilee broadcasts hours before Canadian networks paid their belated honours to Canada's Queen?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to doubt the factual content of the hon. member's question. Indeed, I would be very glad to pass that message along. While I am on my feet I may say that whoever the originators were—and I believe it was the British Broadcasting Corporation—I also ought to compliment them on one of the finest pieces of television coverage that I have seen in a long time.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE—SUGGESTION BRITISH GOVERNMENT MADE MISTAKE IN BARRING PRESIDENT AMIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is reported today by Canadian Press that Canadian government officials in London have stated that the British government made a mistake in barring President Amin from attending the Commonwealth conference. Will the minister tell the House whether he shares this point of view and whether this is the point of view of external affairs?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who made any such utterance. I would be glad to look into it but this seems to me to be another little piece of the incredible fairy tale that surrounds this man at the present time. If I were asked to give a specific answer I would say that the British government took the only action it could under the circumstances.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ATTENDANCE OF PRESIDENT AMIN AT COMMONWEALTH GAMES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I thank the minister for his answer. Considering the strong protests which the minister has made against the violation of human rights in Uganda—and I refer particularly to statements in the external affairs committee on March 3 when he was advising the Prime Minister to have the whole question of human rights violations in Uganda put on the agenda of the Commonwealth conference—I ask the minister whether he will state that President Amin should not be allowed to attend the Commonwealth games in Edmonton in 1978?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I answer the hon. gentleman in this way, that strictly speaking, I suppose, as long as he is head of a Commonwealth country you probably could not have a direct bar against his attending on that ground. I have, however, inquired as to the degree of flexibility which is present in terms of the invitations that we are required to extend and I have determined that it is not necessary for us to invite President Amin, and I think it highly unlikely that we will do so.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—SUGGESTION NO NEED TO CURTAIL EXPORTS TO THE UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with a speech made to the Canadian Propane Association by Mr. Marshall Crowe, chairman of the National Energy Board, in which he indicated that while the National Energy Board has the authority to reduce our gas exports to the United States, he felt that the new gas being found in western Canada makes any reduction unnecessary and that, to quote his words, "it is unlikely that we would have to curtail gas exports in the next five years". I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether this statement represents government policy, and does the government approve exporting 40 per cent of our gas production to the United States for at least the next five years?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that Mr. Crowe was authorized to make any statement on behalf of the government.

NATURAL GAS—PROPOSALS FOR RETAINING SURPLUS FOR DOMESTIC NEEDS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The chairman of the National Energy Board also said that western Canadian gas producers are requesting temporary gas export authorization as a means of dealing with the prevailing gas surplus, and he added that "there is a possibility such applications might be favourably considered". In light of Canada's long-term energy needs and rising energy costs, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister two questions: first, whether the government will recommend to the National Energy Board that they refuse granting any short-term export permits, excepting, of course, in the case of any emergencies such as last winter; and secondly, whether the best course to follow in meeting the justifiable request of the gas producers who need to sell the gas they have discovered in order to obtain money to proceed with further exploration would be to use Petro-Canada to buy the gas in place so that it can be kept in the ground and made available to meet the long-term and future needs of the Canadian people?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these are interesting suggestions and representations on the part of the hon. gentleman. I will be happy to draw them to the attention of the minister and I hope he will reply later.

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—DATE OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General of Canada. Undertakings have been given by the Prime Minister in the House regarding a statement to be made by the Solicitor General tomorrow in connection with the L'Agence de Presse Libre break-in which has been the subject of some discussion in this House. Is it the intention of the Solicitor General to make this statement tomorrow? I ask this in view of the fact that I understand he is scheduled to be a speaker on long-term incarceration for a period of two days. Has there been any change in the government's plans in connection with this statement?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated to the House, I do not believe I said any specific date. My answer was that I would try to make the statement as soon as possible after sentence was handed down by the judge and therefore the judicial process had come to an end. I think in fairness to all members of the House I should say it is my intention to make a statement the first day the House opens following handing down of the sentence by the judge in the affair at Montreal.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since there is some anticipation in respect to that statement, would the Solicitor General tell the House whether or not he has any information from the Crown attorney in the area that there will be delay in the sentencing which is to take place. If so, what, if any, preliminary steps have to be taken between tomorrow and the sentencing? Can the Solicitor General assure the House that what we have taken as an undertaking that a statement will be made in the House of Commons means that a statement will in fact be made prior to the adjournment of the House?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, the undertaking stands, but I will be making the statement as soon as sentence has been handed down by the trial court judge. I have no information as to when the sentence will be handed down by the trial court judge. My understanding, as I have indicated to the House, is that the Crown attorney and the attorneys for the defence will be making their pleas as to sentence tomorrow in court in Montreal. I understand also that it is normal practice—and perhaps some members of the opposition have more experience than I in these matters—sometimes for there to be some delay between the hearing of the pleas by the attorneys and the handing down of the sentence.

MULTICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO CO-ORDINATION OF DEPARTMENTS IN IMPLEMENTATION OF OBJECTIVES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). In view of the fact that the government has gone to great pains to reassert that multiculturalism is a permanent government policy, would the minister inform the House whether complete co-ordination exists between his department and other government departments so that all multicultural objectives and goals become implemented as expediently as possible?

● (1450)

Hon. Joseph-Phillippe Guay (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe because he seems to be the only one who is really interested in multiculturalism.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: On the opposite side.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): In spite of all the noise which you hear, I would like to know the stand his leader will take pertaining to multiculturalism.

Mr. Alexander: Just answer the question, Joe.

Mr. Clark: We will start with the minister.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question, the extent of co-ordination depends on the degree of the involvement in multiculturalism by individual departments and agencies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who read the speech of another member the other day, should not have anything to say about my answer today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The multicultural activities of federal cultural agencies, which received a special mandate, are co-ordinated by an Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Committee chaired by the Assistant Under-Secretary of State.

Mr. Hees: Read it like it is written, Joe.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Smile, Stanley.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I would like to name the agencies which are represented on the committee. They are: National Library, Public Archives, National Museum of Man, National Film Board, CBC, CRTC, and the Multiculturalism Directorate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring back Haidasz!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): As far as other departments are concerned, co-ordination is assured by continuous liaison in the senior staff of the Department of the Secretary of State and my own department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: One supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSED PARKING GARAGE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Last week the minister answered order paper question No. 1,979, wherein he reveals that the shuttle bus service between the parking lot and terminal building at Vancouver International Airport costs more than $500,000 per year. He also said that consideration is presently being given to the construction of a car park structure there, and when that happens the need for the shuttle bus service will be eliminated. I would like to ask the minister whether positive consideration is being given, at this time, and if so, what type of structure is being considered and what target date for commencement of the construction has been set?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we always have a positive view when we are giving consideration to any project. That is all the information I can give the hon. member at this time.

Mr. Hees: That is very reassuring, Otto!

INCOME TAX

REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE TAKEN SO REFUNDS MADE QUICKLY TO QUEBEC TAXPAYERS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue.

Since an agreement has been reached between the Department of National Revenue and its Quebec counterpart, which provides for part of the federal income tax deducted from the source to be returned to the province of Quebec whenever a taxpayer living in Quebec, as of December 31, held a job in another province during the year, could the minister tell us why income tax refunds to Quebec have been so much delayed by her department and would she undertake to have these refunds made as soon as possible?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member describes as the objective of the fiscal operation in Canada is our goal, i.e. to make income tax refunds to the individuals and the province of Quebec, as soon as possible and I want the House to know that we do our best to do so.

ALLEGED HALTING OF INVESTIGATION INTO POLITICAL PARTY KICKBACK SCHEME IN NEW BRUNSWICK—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and is in the interest of preserving some law, order and decency, as well as the good name of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and its individual members in the province of New Brunswick. What disciplinary action, precaution or amendments to regulations does the minister intend to take as a result of statements purported to be made by a former RCMP officer with "J" Division in New Brunswick, who halted investigation into an alleged political party kickback scheme?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there is presently an official investigation and a judicial inquiry under way in the province of New Brunswick into the allegation of a kickback scheme. Under the circumstances, I do not wish to make any comments on the matter, at this time.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Solicitor General. Would the Solicitor General be prepared to make a statement following the inquiry?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, once the inquiry has run its course, I will be able to decide whether a statement on my part is indeed in order.

GARRISON DIVERSION—SUGGESTION REPRESENTATIONS BE MADE TO UNITED STATES NO FURTHER FUNDS BE GRANTED FOR PROJECT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Monday, June 13, the House of Representatives in Washington will be voting on a report from the House Appropriations Committee requesting more funds for the continuing of the Garrison Diversion project in North Dakota which, if completed, will be harmful to Manitoba waters. Will the minister make immediate representations to Washington requesting that no further funds be granted until the final report of IJC is completed and presented this summer or next fall?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the hearings to which the hon. member has referred. As the hon. member knows, there have been almost continuous ongoing discussions with the United States on this matter for some time. President Carter has indicated his views with regard to the situation. His views are very much supportive of the Canadian position. Whether anything additional is required before these hearings, I am not sure. I am inclined to doubt it. I think our position is very well known. I am happy to be meeting with the chairman of the IJC tomorrow and will be very glad to take it up with him at that time.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, the House Appropriations Committee report states:

None of the funds provided for the project will affect Canadian waters.

This is not an accurate statement. I have information that the funds provided in the bill do concern project features which will affect Canadian waters, namely the Lonetree Reservoir project. Will the minister do everything possible to have the increased funding stopped? The United States is acting in very bad faith.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT RAILWAY RIGHTS OF WAY REVERT TO CROWN ONCE LINE ABANDONED

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement which the minister made to the farmers in Saskatchewan, that he would be in favour of railway rights of way reverting to the Crown once they are abandoned—an obvious change of heart since the Hall Commission—I would ask the minister if he would ask the cabinet and the government House leader if they would immediately call forth the bill which I put on the order paper last January to ensure, when passed, that the railway rights of way would revert to the Crown once they are abandoned.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that I have had no change of heart on the subject, although I did await my comments until I received the Hall report. We will be considering the necessary action to follow up on that recommendation. It may or may not require legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL THAT HUNGARIAN GOVERNMENT BE REQUESTED TO RELEASE GECZI CHILDREN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Further to a motion put in this House last week dealing with the insistence of the Hungarian government to disallow three Canadian youths, who are being held against their wills, to be reunited with their parents in Toronto, and realizing the fact that the government is aware of this case and has taken some steps, though ineffective, for the release of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Geczi, could the minister now assure this House that he will demand publicly that the Hungarian government immediately release the Gezci children in order that they may be reunited with their parents in Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the only possible exception I might take to the hon. member's question is whether I will make the demand publicly. I will certainly commit myself to taking every practical action we can take and those actions which I consider to be the most promising. I emphasize that, because the hon. member is aware that sometimes other than public declarations are more suitable in these matters. But I can assure the hon. member that we have the matter very much on our minds, that we have made representations already and I propose to make others and make them most vigorously in the most appropriate way.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF DIALOGUE ON SEPARATION ON UNEMPLOYMENT AND BUSINESS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As the minister has said on Monday before the Canadian manufacturers that uncertainty in Quebec is hurting the Canadian economy, has the minister defined to what extent the dialogue of separation is causing increased unemployment and a business slow-down in Canada and in what areas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): It would be very difficult to assess this in purely quantitative terms. Certainly, in terms of a more general reaction, particularly from the business community, there is this element of uncertainty as a factor which is evident in their comments.

TABLING OF REFERRAL TO ADMINISTRATOR CONCERNING SEVERAL COMPANIES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a referral to the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act with respect to Les Pistes de Courses Richelieu Inc., the Canadian Freightways Limited and the Collingwood Shipyards and Trailways of Canada Limited.

TABLING OF REPORT ON MIREX

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in both official languages copies of the summary, conclusions and recommendations of the task force report on Mirex to the joint Department of the Environment and Department of National Health and Welfare environmental contaminants committee.

I might say that the full report is not yet available in both official languages and that is why I cannot table it, but if hon. members are interested in existing technical copies in English, they are quite welcome to request them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in response to suggestions by a number of hon. members, including the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), I would like to make a statement on the outcome of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. The conference concluded its work last week after a dialogue of 18 months. The conclusion saw many hours of intensive negotiations which have been widely reported in the press. I wish to give you my assessment of the results of the conference and their implications.

First, I want to make it clear that there was agreement on all sides that the conference contributed to a clearer understanding of the international economic situation and that its intensive discussions were useful to all participants. This point was explicitly recognized in the communique of the conference, and in fact such recognition was the key issue in determining whether or not there would be an agreed statement or report.

The conference was able to leave rhetoric behind and come to a balanced judgment that useful progress had been made. My reading of the world press leads me to believe that they have acknowledged the progress that has been made, and in fact any criticism that has been made of the outcome has been directed more at OPEC than at the performance of the developed countries.

There were, of course, disappointments. Developing countries were disappointed that some of their proposals for a structural reform of the international economic system were not met. I believe that such disappointment was inevitable in view of the wide-ranging structural change sought by developing countries over so many different areas. Developing countries did not agree among themselves on their demands and on their priorities. Some of the things that they were asking for were probably not within the powers of industrialized governments to grant. Among these were guarantees on the purchasing power of exports and a general debt moratorium.

One of the most difficult problems at the conference was getting the developing countries to agree to focus on a number of issues where progress was both important and feasible. The positions put forward by industrialized countries, including a $1 billion special action program, support for a common fund within an integrated program for commodities, and new commitments on official development assistance, constituted a significant improvement on positions of only a few months before.

Important agreements were also reached in the areas of energy availability and energy conservation, the transition to permanent and renewable sources of energy, food and agriculture, infrastructure in Africa, and several other trade and development issues. Real and substantive progress was registered during the final stages of CIEC which exceeds progress achieved at other international conferences dealing with north-south issues in recent years. Canada in particular received very warm appreciation from the developing countries for its decision to writeoff $254 million worth of debts to the poorest countries.

Of course the industrialized countries were disappointed at the failure of OPEC to agree on an arrangement for continuing consultations in the energy field. I am disappointed that no agreement could be reached on this point. I believe, as I have stated elsewhere, that the OPEC countries, the group of 19, were in error. They made a mistake in rejecting our invitation to continue a useful energy dialogue. This was an important objective sought by the developing countries at the conference.

At a certain stage the rejection of energy consultations might have threatened all of the conference, the benefits of which were to go mainly to poorer developing countries.

One cannot easily evaluate a conference such as the Conference on International Economic Co-operation in terms of success or failure. I personally have never expected unqualified success, nor could the developing countries admit to unqualified success even if it were achieved, if only to preserve their positions for future negotiations. I have always hoped for that measure of success which is defined by real progress on the main substantive issues at play, sufficient progress on international economic problems to make it worth while to continue to pursue a constructive dialogue between developed countries.

In the course of my negotiations with the co-chairmen from the developing countries extending back many months I made it clear that in my view the best that could come out of the conference was a number of concrete results that would be regarded as progress and that that would lay a foundation for continuing a non-confrontational dialogue between north and south in other international forums. I believe that that amount of progress has been achieved. It has been achieved because of the direct interaction of ministers in the final stages of the negotiations.

I believe I should mention again that the negotiations in the three day ministerial conference or, as it turned out, in a four day plus ministerial conference, were conducted at the ministerial level. For example, the negotiations on the energy side on the part of the G8 were led by Mr. Vance. The negotiations on the integrated program were led, on the G8 side, by the British foreign secretary, Mr. Owen, and the Australian foreign secretary, Mr. Peacock, and on the other questions of debt and official development assistance, Mr. Roy Jenkins, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), and the Swedish foreign secretary, Madame Soder, were the leaders on our side.

The conference represented direct interaction between leading ministers on both sides, and I believe that a much deeper understanding has been achieved as a result of this particular ministerial negotiation. It achieved important advances in the positions of the industrialized countries in areas such as official development assistance, special action, a common fund, and mutual recognition of common problems in the energy sector. The dialogue will now be pursued in other international bodies because, as hon. members realize, the Conference on International Economic Co-operation terminated in Paris. It was intended to be a conference of one year's duration. It lasted for a year and a half, mainly because of the change of administration in the United States, but now it has terminated. I believe it provided a sound basis for work in other international bodies.

The complete results of the conference and its detailed agreements will receive careful study and will prompt follow up action in many areas, and later when the detailed agreements have been brought together, I hope to have them tabled in the House of Commons so that hon. members will have an opportunity to examine the range of issues which were discussed and the number of substantial agreements and disagreements which were registered in the course of the conference.

I believe that despite disagreements and despite failure to reach agreement on all fronts, the progress registered at CIEC justifies the continuing efforts of developed and developing countries to work out their problems in a spirit of co-operation and non-confrontation. I believe that the over-all result justifies the very considerable Canadian effort which was expended at this conference, an effort which I believe has reflected very favourably on Canada internationally.

I would like particularly to pay tribute to the Canadian delegation at the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. Throughout the conference, and especially during periods of enormous pressure and impending crisis, the Canadian team of officials performed superbly in managing the conference and Canada's relationships with its participants with great skill and dedication. In conclusion—and I hope this is listened to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson)—I believe it is important that Canada continue to play a leading role in the area of north-south relations in the post-CIEC period.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking the minister for the arduous personal efforts he made in his role as chairman for the developed countries at the North-South Conference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: Even from a distance I could appreciate the intensity of the midnight consultations. I hope the minister will not accept my criticism of the results of the conference as any diminution of his evident dedication to closing the rich-poor gap in the world.

What counts, however, is results, and the results of the North-South Conference are dismal. I suppose the minister feels he has to put the best face on things, but the disappointing communique issued at the end of CIEC tells me that it is time to stop this charade of applying cosmetics to the relations between the developed and the developing nations, for more and more people on both sides of the development gap are cynical about elaborate postponements, glamorous diversions, and grandiose schemes.

The minister hesitates to characterize CIEC as either a success or a failure. One has the feeling that he defines success as the absence of total breakdown. While the plain word "failure" may be too jarring for the minister to bear, let us at least agree that the North-South Conference was an un-success.

The developing countries—whose interests, after all, were the focus of the conference—put it plainly in the communique as follows:

> ... Most of the proposals for structural changes in the international economic system and certain of the proposals for urgent actions on pressing problems have not been agreed upon. Therefore, the Group of 19 feels that the conclusions of CIEC fall short of the objectives envisaged for a comprehensive and equitable program of action designed to establish the New International Economic Order.

There is no getting around the fact that the final communique listed 21 points of disagreement, including a failure to solve the debt burden and purchasing power problems of the developing countries, which were two issues which lay at the heart of CIEC. The communique listed 20 points of agreement, including the $1 billion special action program and support for the common fund for commodities, but even here the nature of the common fund was thrown back to UNCTAD.

In his statement today the minister indicated that a clearer understanding of the issues was a major gain, but CIEC was designed for action, on the ground that the multiple conferences of the 1970's have provided the education base. The minister himself acknowledged this when he told the sub-committee on international development last March 30 that a failure at CIEC, or even an apparent failure, would be a serious set-back in the process of international co-operation.

No international group has provided a more balanced analysis and program than the Commonwealth Experts, who have published three reports, the third one a month or two ago which called for urgent and imaginative action because prevailing growth rates will not reduce the income gap between the developed and the developing countries by the end of the century.

The government has clearly not learned enough about the cause of the rich-poor gap, or the minister would not give this House the superficial analaysis that it was the OPEC intransigence in refusing to enter into an energy dialogue that led to the CIEC disappointment. Nor would he ascribe the lack of agreement to the specious argument that guarantees on the purchasing power of exports and a general debt moratorium were beyond the powers of the industrialized countries.

The real reason that CIEC ended with a whimper was because the industrialized countries tried to buy world economic stability too cheaply. In the face of declining official development assistance, and developing countries' debts of $165 billion, the special action fund of $1 billion is a cruel joke. How can we expect the oil producing nations to co-operate with us in establishing energy prices so that we can plan ahead when we do not co-operate with the developing world in helping to rectify their trade imbalances and foreign exchange earnings? What the industrialized countries have yet to learn is that the time for rhetoric and cheap aid is past. Unrealistically low offers are not conducive to good bargaining.

Rather than glossing over these realities it would have been more useful if the minister had come into the House this afternoon and spoken in the same vein as the report on international development issued by the sub-committee, a unanimous report from all the parties in this House, which said that if the developing countries, and I quote:

> ... do not display a serious desire to reform the international economic system and if negotiations do not achieve tangible and significant progress toward that end, there is a grave danger of relations between rich countries and poor degenerating into a permanent condition of confrontation and recrimination.

Finally, what about Canada's role? We offered to write off $254 million in debts, which turns out to have a net cash effect of $35 million, and we are apparently going to make a contribution to the special action fund, although the minister avoided specifying any amount in his statement. I find it very curious that there were press reports of what the amount would be, but it is not contained in the statement. Well might we make a special contribution when official development assistance has declined from .58 to .51 per cent of GNP in the past two years—hardly the movement toward .7 per cent of GNP that Canada has promised.

I say to the minister and all the developed countries: Stop pointing the finger at others and look in the mirror. A renewed sense of commitment and urgency must permeate our approach—both as a government and a people.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had occasion to refer to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) as a hard-headed Scot. I was told afterwards that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) asked: what about a soft-headed Scot? I now propose to address myself to that problem! Seriously, I want to say to the minister that we appreciate the statement he has made. I think I would echo the sentiments of all Canadians if I told him that we are proud of the fact that one of the most able ministers in the government was selected as co-chairman of the Conference on International Economic Co-Operation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am sure he represented this country in a manner of which we can be proud, and I am confident that a man of his compassion and integrity is admirably suited to discharging the duties he was asked to assume.

Listening to the minister's statement today one could not but be impressed by the fact that he was not happy about the outcome of the conference. Of course the minister is quite right when he suggest that no one conference and no one program will settle things between the industrial nations and the developing countries.

When the minister says in his statement that he hopes we can solve these problems by co-operation and not by confrontation, I think we have to be realistic enough to recognize that in the present world situation there is bound to be confrontation. How can there be anything else but confrontation in a world in which the industrialized nations have a steadily rising standard of living and in which the income gap between the wealthy nations and the developing countries is widening? It is widening because the developing countries depend very largely upon the export of raw materials to the industrialized nations. The price of raw materials in relation to the cost of industrial products has been steadily declining, and the standard of living per capita in developing nations is receding at a time when in spite of economic difficulties, standards of living are advancing in industrialized nations.

More than 100 years ago Abraham Lincoln said that no nation can long survive half slave and half free. This world has now become a global village; a nation cannot long survive in a world that is half full and half hungry. That is the problem that faces developing nations today and, as long as it continues, in spite of the rhetoric and in spite of all the good will in the world, there will be confrontation until effective measures are taken to deal with these economic disparities.

In his statement the minister says:

> Developing countries were disappointed that some of their proposals for structural reform of the international economic system were not met.

He goes on to say:

> Some of the things which they were asking for are probably not within the powers of the governments to grant. Among these were guarantees on the purchasing power of exports and a general debt moratorium.

I am prepared to grant that no one nation can meet these requests for structural economic changes or for a general moratorium on debt, but certainly the industrialized nations together could achieve those goals. We have not really given very much of a lead in solving this request of the developing countries which, it seems to me, is perfectly justified in wanting a guarantee on the purchasing power of exports. They find the value of the things they have to sell going down so they have to sell more and more sugar, copra and other raw materials in order to buy the same amount of manufactured goods and things that are essential for modern technology.

The industrialized nations find it very convenient at certain times to enter into commodity arrangements with one another. One of the commodity arrangements from which Canadians gained a good deal of benefit was the International Wheat Agreement, which unfortunately was scuttled. It guaranteed producers a fair price and it guaranteed the consumer countries a ceiling; the selling price fluctuated between those two levels and it was beneficial to both.

Over the last 15 years some of us have been urging the Canadian government to enter into a sugar agreement which would be of great benefit to Caribbean nations. When it was first suggested we were told the price of sugar was so high that it was a bad time to enter into an agreement with sugar producing countries; when the price dropped to 4-cents per pound we were told it was a bad time for an agreement because we could buy sugar much more cheaply than the floor price.

The fact is that we are now paying the price of the failure of the industrialized countries, including Canada, to investigate and proceed with commodity agreements and arrangements which would give to the developing countries at least a guaranteed minimum price for their products and would have some relationship to the cost of things they must buy from the industrialized nations.

The same is true with reference to debt. Of course I am glad, as all Canadians are, that the Canadian government decided to cancel $254 million worth of debt of the developing countries, but this is a drop in the bucket compared to the real problem. I have seen figures which show that in some of the developing countries the amount of charges on their existing international debt is now greater than the foreign aid they receive. It may well be that if the industrialized countries want to establish a working realtionship with the developing countries, a great deal more of this debt will have to be wiped out. I do not say this in criticism of the minister; the minister could not control the policies of the industrialized nations. I think the western powers will have to recognize, however, that we are now paying the price of nearly 200 years of economic imperialism and that the developing countries still justifiably feel that they are being exploited by the industrialized nations.

I have the feeling that the proposals which were placed before this conference by the industrialized nations can be summed up in a simple phrase "too little too late" because we are working against time in trying to establish a suitable relationship between the north and the south.

● (1530)

I am sure all members are disappointed, as the minister is, by the failure on the part of OPEC countries to agree to a continuation of the dialogue. Frankly, the world is heading for a disastrous situation in energy, particularly with respect to oil. By 1990 a great part of the western world will depend largely on oil from OPEC countries, and by the end of the century Saudi Arabia will probably be the only country left with oil for export. The danger is that in endeavouring to protect themselves against the possibility of curtailment of oil supplies, the highly developed nations will turn in on themselves and resort to measures which can only lead to further conflict and misunderstanding.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

The minister said the conference has finished and its work will be carried on by other international organizations. That troubles me, for all these international organizations operate within their own limited parameters. The Conference on International Economic Co-Operation was valuable precisely because it took an over-all view and tried to make governments face the central problem, the widening gap between the incomes of the wealthy and the poorer nations of the world. I hope these other international organizations apply themselves to this task but am not optimistic about it.

I congratulate the minister on his contribution. If the conference was not the success he hoped it would be, it is not his fault. He made a genuine contribution and a worth while effort.

In closing I urge him, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), to do everything possible to make sure there is an ongoing dialogue between the rich and poor nations of the world. I say this, not from any ideology, but because we recognize that the maldistribution of income in the world can only lead to international conflict, and ongoing dialogue is not so much a matter of choice as a matter of human survival.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit Party of Canada, I wish to congratulate the minister for having completed his long and hard task, considering that the conference has lasted over eighteen months. Today he gave us his views on the work carried out and the limited success obtained but he stated at the same time that he was disappointed by that conference. Mr. Speaker, I think that if the minister seems disappointed today it is quite natural when two worlds meet, that is the underdeveloped and industrialized countries, it is evident that from the outset the latter will feel inferior and so quite suspicious.

When we read the minister's report this is what stands out from those debates. The minister referred to confrontations. I think that this is quite normal and even human since there are confrontations even between industrialized countries or members of the same government. We all recall that public confrontations took place in 1975 when Mr. Turner publicly held in check Mr. Gérin-Lajoie's decisions when the latter was president of CIDA. I believe such confrontations are necessary but they must be used to tackle problems in a spirit of co-operation, that is in a frank dialogue, and once in a while one should try to put oneself in the place of the other.

I feel that industrialized countries, and Canada is one of them, do not always put themselves in the place of the underdeveloped countries. When we say that underdeveloped countries have not responded to industrialized countries' proposals, I wonder, reading from this statement, whether the industrialized countries let the underdeveloped ones express themselves in the first place. It can happen that the stronger of the two might want to impose its own program, that is called the law of the fittest. The same thing happens even here on the federal level in respect of provinces. The federal sets its own program and then offers it to the other saying: Whether you like it or not. This is not dialogue but a laying down of conditions.

I believe the underdeveloped countries should have had the opportunity of an open door to make their propositions on an equal basis before another country took decisions. Indeed I feel that, although they are underdeveloped, these nations have their pride too. In this area of international trade, I believe that, because they are weak, these countries should not be expected to sell their resources at prices which are ridiculously low, while industrialized countries take advantage of the situation to sell them goods at prices which are often three times too high, if we compare the prices paid in underdeveloped countries with those paid in industrialized countries.

I suggest it would be interesting for the House to obtain more information. It is unfortunate that when we ask for information on these operations, we never can get them. When, for instance, CIDA spends something like $1 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money, I think hon. members of the House are entitled to get explanations, to know how the money is being spent, and also to be advised of the reactions of the beneficiaries. When we ask questions, the government often replies: "It is impossible, it would take 10 years".

However, as reported in La Presse of June 1, which I think most hon. members have read, this leaves us wondering, particularly after a conference like this which did not generate all the success the minister was rightfully expecting.

The people of Haiti, for example, a country we have been helping for years, write things like this; I quote:

MILLIONS IN CANADIAN ASSISTANCE ENTIRELY WASTED

"Canada is wasting its time and money in Haiti. The dozens of millions of dollars it is spending there under aid agreements are entirely wasted. It is like subsidizing a government made up of profiteers and incompetents who stay in power through lies and violence."

It is on this aspect of dialogue, Mr. Speaker, that I want to draw the attention of the minister to know how every individual country is using this Canadian aid. Is it used against Canada or against the population of those countries, as it happens to be the case now in Haiti as well as in other countries I could name? I am not surprised at all to see representatives of these countries coming to the conference and saying to industrialized countries: "Listen now, we are not going to go along with this anymore." This is why the conference, although it was quite a painful experience for the minister and for many others, will perhaps open new perspectives, encourage some hon. members to try to be better informed and above all induce this government to give us more concrete answers about what is happening to the $1 billion we put in CIDA, since it has been said that some Canadian citizens were paid to give out our money in Cadillacs in countries where people are starving.

Mr. Speaker, all these statements lead us to wonder whether this government has really paid all the necessary attention to this agency, which in fact is said to be another department. I think the minister did not keep a close check on the exorbitant and often unexplainable expenses of that agency. I have no intention to put the blame on CIDA but merely to draw those matters to the attention of the House and of the minister. It is not enough to say that we give $1 billion in assistance to underdeveloped countries. If we are to be blamed by the people who receive such assistance, we should keep our money and leave them alone. What do these countries want? They want technical and monetary assistance of course but they want to be free to decide on the kind of life which suits them, they want to have it their own ways in adapting the development of their industries to their way of life.

I do not believe that a Canadian could ever become a true African. He can only show them new methods, train them in electronics so they can improve their standard of living, produce more and achieve self-financing. The minister has good reasons to be disappointed but he should make the best of it for the coming conferences and try to establish a genuine dialogue. It takes two to have a dialogue and as long as both groups do not discuss frankly on an equal basis, we are bound to have this kind of disappointment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like some clarification from the Chair. I thought the new procedure provided for a short question and answer period after a statement by a minister.

Mr. Speaker: The new procedure does in fact provide for such a question and answer period at the discretion of the Chair as to whether it should take place and, if so, what duration it should be. The motivation for that adjustment to our procedures was to provide in certain circumstances a bit of a counterbalance by way of dialogue.

One of the disadvantages of the statement procedure was that the minister making a statement was met with three times the commentary from the opposition that he himself made. Therefore it was thought that by way of questions from the opposition afterward there would be some counterbalance by giving the minister an opportunity to answer such questions.

In a situation where I see no indication of a desire on the part of the opposition to put any questions, it seems to be a proper exercise of discretion by the Chair that no questions should follow. I recognize that if questions do follow and a member of the government party wishes to participate in the questioning, that member ought to be entitled to do so. I have recognized that in the past. However, I do not think it would be a proper exercise of the discretion of the Chair to allow only questions from the government side, in the spirit of the adjustments made to the procedures.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on this point of order. I understand that members of the opposition are reluctant to address questions today because it is an allotted day. I should point out that my decision to make my statement today was to meet the request of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), who will not be in the House tomorrow or the next day. I was quite prepared to make my statement tomorrow so that hon. members would have a wide opportunity to ask questions and have them answered.

I find it regrettable that a question of this magnitude has not been dealt with in the normal way. It may be useful to consider whether we should have a short question period on this subject tomorrow under motions, so that members on all sides might follow up the matter more fully.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the government House leader very much. I think that is a most commendable suggestion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it can be understood as agreed.

Mr. Speaker: That is a suggestion that I am sure will be explored in the next 24 hours and probably exposed to greater clarity during that time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,465, 2,264 and 2,306.

[Text]

COST OF TRANSLATING TECHNICAL DOCUMENTS

Question No. 1,465—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What was the cost of translating technical documents in (a) the Department of Transport (b) the Department of National Defence (c) Air Canada for (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

2. Is the translation of technical documents in (a) the Department of Transport (b) the Department of National Defence (c) Air Canada contracted out and, if so, what are the names and addresses of the firms presently holding such contracts?

3. What was the total amount of each such contract and for how long are the contracts?

4. What was the translation cost per word in each contract?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: It is difficult, in some cases, to distinguish between technical texts, scientific texts and other. To avoid any confusion, we shall consider as translation all the official languages translation done for a department. 1. Bureau operations are accounted for according to fiscal year. The answers given will therefore be for the years 1974-75 and 1975-76. The Translation Bureau does not operate on a cost recovery basis. Therefore, for the translations done right in the Bureau, it is impossible to place a real cost on the services provided to a specific department. However, it is possible, using Bureau statistics, to calculate the average cost of translation per work and the number of words translated per department. (a) The estimated cost of official languages translation done for the Department of Transport is the following: (i) 1974-75: $520,000. (ii) 1975-76: $1,056,000. (b) The estimated cost of official languages translation done for National Defence is the following: (i) 1974-75: $2,465,000. (ii) 1975-76: $2,745,000. (c) Air Canada did not call upon the Bureau's services.

2. The translation bureau contracted out certain translations for the departments in question. However, it is not customary to provide lists of approved contract translators or lists of contract translators who have provided services to a specific department, since such information might give the person receiving it an advantage over another present or potential contractor. In 1975, 42 different contract translator did official languages translations under contract for the Department of Transport, and 63 provided a similar service for National Defence. In 1976, the translation bureau awarded contracts to 31 contract translators for the Department of Transport, and to 49 for National Defence. No contracts were negotiated for Air Canada.

3. The length of the contracts varied from one day to 21 months, while the costs varied between $4.80 and $13,545.60, although most of the contracts were carried out in less than two months and for sums amounting to less than $1,000.

4. Depending on the relative difficulty of each of the texts contracted out for translation, the prices ranged between 5.5 cents ($0.055) and 8.0 cents ($0.080) a word.

The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) and (b) Not applicable. (c) No technical documents were translated in 1975 and 1976.

2. (a) and (b) Not applicable. (c) Yes. Beginning in 1977. Sud Est Traduction, Hyères, France and Technitrans, Montreal, Quebec.

3 and 4. It is Air Canada's policy to seek the best value available through competitive tenders and the airlines considers resultant prices, awards and terms confidential.

FUNDS TO "LE PATRIOTE" IN 1976/77

Question No. 2,264—Mr. Herbert:

What was the total amount of government funds contributed in (a) the 1976-77 fiscal year (b) previous years to la boîte à chanson, Le Patriote, Montreal?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: Nil.

In so far as the Canada Council is concerned: Nil.

REDUCTION IN FOREIGN CONTROL OF AUTOMOBILE AND OIL INDUSTRIES

Question No. 2,306—Mr. Fortin:

Is there any programme designed to reduce to less than 90% foreign control of the automobile and oil industries and, if so, what is it?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Nil.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—TRANSPORTATION POLICIES

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the transportation policies of this government have failed to meet the needs of urban and rural Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today is similar to others moved on past occasions and I think this indicates the importance of the subject to hon. members and to people across Canada.

The transportation policies of the government are an important cause of regional disparity. I want to spend my time today supporting the concept of the so-called Crow rate and the concept of the "at and east" rates, and advocating an expansion of this concept to other areas.

In Western Canada, Mr. Justice Hall has just reported on a rail system which is at the very heart of prairie development. I realize it is difficult to take one mode of transport and say it constitutes the real problem with which an area is faced. So let us consider the question of user-pay as it applies to different modes.

In the area of civil aviation, infrastructure costs and their proportionate revenues as a return amount to something like 31 per cent over a 15-year period; these have risen by about 15 per cent to a point at which the user is now paying 31 per cent of aviation infrastructure costs. The cost picture as it applies to roads has remained relatively constant. Some 65 per cent of costs are paid in the form of various taxes imposed on users, taxes which are well known. We do not hear much about marine transportation, but in this sector users are paying approximately 20 per cent of costs. Users of railways, if we take capital and operating costs together, pay some 72 per cent. I hope this shows we should not isolate any particular mode when considering the user-pay proposition and that, as to railroads, we really have not been doing too badly, comparatively.

There is one vital part of railway grain operations which has not often been mentioned, that is, the turn-around time taken by grain cars. Normally the grain cars generate one way freight traffic every three weeks or so, sometimes once every month in winter. If we take a freight rate of 13 cents a bushel, a 2,000-bushel car would generate about $260 every trip. A 3,000-bushel car would generate approximately $400 per trip. If some way could be devised to shorten the turn-around time, if it could be reduced by half, the revenue earned by each of the grain cars would be doubled. This is an area in which much improvement could be made by the better utilization of our grain car fleet.

As I said, I should like to support the concept of the Crow rates and the "at and east" rates and ask for its extension. I should like to do this by, first of all, looking back on Canada's transportation history, and the reasoning behind it, in the hope that the minister will change his attitude.

If we look back, we find that the railways have been used as an instrument of national policy in the development of the wealth of this country, and that they have not been treated as economic entities on the basis of the user-pay concept. We can go right back to the very beginnings of our country when Upper and Lower Canada were divided by cultural and sectional differences. They had never been intended by nature to form separate economic systems because the St. Lawrence River was bound to unify the drainage basin economically.

There are, therefore, better reasons than the political union of 1841 for discussing the pre-confederation Canada as an economic entity. New York had challenged the St. Lawrence trade route, first by the Erie Canal and then by the railways. Canada had countered, first by the canal system of the St. Lawrence built as a government project and, second, by the Grand Trunk Railway, relying heavily on government loans. Both these Canadian ventures failed to attract the trade of the American middle west, and ended in financial trouble.

To give some indication of the importance placed on transportation in the early days, I might remind the House that by 1866, if canals are included, government investments in transportation amounted to almost 60 per cent of the provincial and municipal debt.

The maritimes were stirred to link themselves to the continent behind them and their governments undertook ambitious railway programs as public works. By the eve of Confederation, transportation had overshadowed everything else in the budgets of the colonies and had seriously strained the public finance systems of Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

After Confederation the prime policy was to provide east-west channels of trade, independent of the United States, by building a transcontinental railway wholly over Canadian territory. Such a railway would open the undeveloped lands of the west for settlement and fix the political and economic destiny of the area.

The public lands of the northwest were to be used by the Dominion to promote railway expansion and rapid settlement. Land grants would provide the greater part of the public assistance required by the railways. The railways, in turn, would make the lands valuable and a free homestead system would attract a rush of settlers.

The decisions to build an all-Canadian railway and to establish a vigorous Dominion land policy were basic national decisions which, together with the adoption of the protective tariff, which was soon to follow, fixed the pattern of subsequent economic development in the Dominion of Canada. The main features were railway land grants and the free homestead system. The half-hearted policy of building a national railway piecemeal as a public work was discarded, and in 1880 a group of capitalists agreed to undertake an all-Canadian railway to the Pacific as a private enterprise. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company was promised substantial cash subsidies and grants of western lands.

Surmounting great difficulties, the railway to the Pacific was completed in 1885. Land grants and cash subsidies stimulated great railway mileage and by 1896 there were over 16,000 miles of line—one mile for every 312 persons in the country.

Between 1896 and the start of World War I, the average of the prices of all Canadian exports increased 32 per cent. That of grains and flour increased 62 per cent, and the price of wheat at Liverpool increased 33 per cent. On the other hand, the average of the prices of Canadian imports rose only 24 per cent, and of manufactured goods 20 per cent in the same period. A development of probably more far-reaching significance was the phenomenal decline in ocean freight rates. In 1896 ocean rates were only about one half of what they had been during the 1870's.

The great decline in transportation costs, the increase in the prices of cereals, and a relative cheapening of the factors which entered the costs of production, i.e. manufactured goods and imports in general, suddenly brought the virgin resources of the prairies within the scope of the international market and within the range of profitable exploitation. Capital and capital goods, the essential means for making exploitation possible, were cheaper than ever before. The prices of iron and steel, which largely determined the cost of railways and of the implements of production, were falling steadily in relation to the value of products of the farm. Interest rates were the lowest in recorded history, and the British investor was willing to lend overseas in unprecedented volume.

There was another set of circumstances in western Canada which made it available almost as soon as its attraction was felt, that is, the comparative uniformity of conditions, concentration on a single crop, and the ease with which transportation facilities could be provided and cultivation begun in a grassland terrain. There were no classifications of resources, no soil surveys, no climatic records to guide either the government or the unwary settler. The policies and methods of the Dominion were mainly designed to serve the national purpose of filling the northwest at once with as many people as possible.

The selection of land was left largely to chance and to the devices which colonization agents, railways, and land companies employed in their own immediate interests. The sectional survey, railway land grant schemes and pre-emptions illustrate a system designed for indiscriminate mass colonization. It worked with almost mechanical perfection.

Between 1896 and 1913 one million people moved into the three prairie provinces and the population increased from 7 per cent to 20 per cent of the total Dominion of Canada. The area of occupied land increased from about 10 million acres to 70 million acres, and the production of wheat from approximately 20 million bushels to over 200 million bushels. At the end of the period the value of agricultural production in western Canada reached a total of between $300 million to $400 million annually.

Looking back at the broad concept of Canadian transportation and the policy of national development, it was the unbounded optimism which led to the birth of the railway problem. The development of the northwest within so short a time brought prosperity and rapid economic expansion to the rest of Canada.

The settlement of the west took place within the framework of the national policies of all Canadian transportation and protective tariffs. The application of these policies directed the growing demands for capital equipment, for manufactured goods, for distributive and commercial services in the Canadian channels, thus bringing expansion in other parts of the Dominion. Construction of the railways, deepening of the canals and improvement of the harbours necessary to transport the increasing volume of western grain over Canadian routes stimulated economic activity in the east and gave it a large share in the moving of western products to the markets of the world. The building of towns and cities on the prairies, equipment required on the farms, and the consumption demands of the population required enlarged quantities of manufactured goods. The protective tariff enabled Canadian manufacturers to capture the greater share of the new market, thus giving a tremendous impetus to industrialization in Ontario and Quebec, to the coal and steel industries of Nova Scotia, and to the lumber industries of British Columbia.

The two national policies of all Canadian transportation and protective tariffs were closely related. The former made direct economic intercourse between the separate regions possible. The latter promoted east-west traffic, and under the stimulus of western expansion the two together produced a remarkable degree of interdependence among the widely scattered and diverse communities of which Canada is made up. So we have an economically loose transcontinental area transformed into a highly integrated national economy.

There were extensive costly duplications of railway trackage over long stretches of unproductive country. The optimism was pardonable in the days up to 1913. However, the burdens which it ultimately imposed on the federal government must be regarded as the cost of promoting the national purposes of development, national economic integration, and political unity. It may be true that many regional, provincial and local interests were served, but these were only incidental to the prosecution of larger purposes.

To attain the objectives of that costly policy it was necessary to secure a level of rates which would counteract the north-south pull of geography and, if possible, alternative routes to draw traffic over the east-west lines instead. Hence, the Dominion played an important part in shaping the railway rate structure by legislation, rulings of the railway committee, of the privy council, and of the board of railway commissioners.

The objectives of the Dominion appeared clearly in the Crowsnest Pass agreement of 1897. Under this agreement, Canadian Pacific Railway, in return for a subsidy for the construction of the Crowsnest Pass line, undertook to reduce rates on grain and flour moving from the prairies to the head of the lakes by three cents per hundred pounds, and to reduce the rates on a considerable list of settlers' household and building supplies moving westward from Fort William and points east by 10 per cent. The federal government made other agreements with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway in 1903 which stipulated "that the thru rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports".

At the same time the eastern exports rates case in 1905 and the international rates case in 1907 resulted in a decrease of about 10 per cent in export rates from Ontario and in the merchandise class rates in eastern Canada. Also, the rates between the maritimes and central Canada were directly under the control of the Dominion through its operation of the Intercolonial Railroad. Because of the location of the line and the desire to promote traffic, the tolls were kept far below the level of profitable operation.

It is impossible to relate all the detailed effects of Dominion policy on the Canadian freight rate structure. Certainly the broad decline in the level of rates was accompanied by a narrowing of regional differentials. This, together with the special concessions to certain commodities, encouraged inter-regional trade and promoted the development of new areas, particularly in western Canada. All this led to a measure of prosperity in the central provinces that had not been seen since the 1850's. The highly specialized export production in western Canada and the decline in the competitive position of the small maritime manufacturers made Ontario and Quebec the manufacturing centre of the country. The growing volume of traffic from the prairie region moved over the railways, the waterways, and out through the ports of the central provinces. Banks, insurance companies, mortgage companies and other financial institutions in these older communities quickly extended their activities to the expanding west where they came to occupy virtually the whole field.

This commercial and industrial concentration was accompanied by rapid urbanization and the growth of metropolitan centres in central Canada. It was accompanied also by the rise of great national business organizations having their headquarters in Montreal and Toronto. Manufacturing, finance, and transportation seemed to be dominated by a few large corporations whose operations extended across the entire continent.

This period saw the development of a remarkable centralization in a country of such widely separated and varied regions. This should give us reason to think when we compare our transportation situation today with what we had when the country was developed. As I have said, the railways have never been dealt with as economic entities; the government has always treated them as instruments of national policy to build and to bind our country together and to give a service. This is really what the Hall Commission proposes, and I urge the government to give some assurance soon that the main thrust of Mr. Justice Hall's report will be accepted.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are living at a time when, according to all the experts, within the next five or ten years this country will be short of energy. We will find ourselves in a situation where we will have to import oil from South America or the Middle East, paying whatever is the international price at the time—money which we can ill afford. We ought to have begun to take steps to try to reduce our consumption of oil.

Unless we find ways to cut our consumption of oil we will have to import oil in increasing amounts as we run out of the oil we now have in Canada. There are a number of important steps which could be taken, particularly in the field of transportation policies which affect our cities and rural areas. None of these policies have been implemented, or even begun by this government under this minister. In his desire to win a majority, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a large number of election promises during the 1974 election. They were promises in connection with urban transportation which, if implemented, would have had an advantageous effect on our cities and would have led to the saving of substantial amounts of gasoline. This gasoline is now being used by people in the cities, driving to and from work in their own automobiles.

I should like to quote from a report in the June 18, 1974, edition of the Montreal Gazette with reference to a speech made by the Prime Minister in Toronto on June 17. The article was written by George Radwanski, and it reads as follows:

> A Liberal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made vehicles and 50 per cent for platforms and stations, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau said here yesterday as he unveiled the second element of his transport policy for urban areas.
> The program, to cost $275 million in the next five years, aims to "help cities to grow more harmoniously, to make cities people places rather than machine and building places," Trudeau told a noon-hour crowd of about 4,000 at the outdoor plaza of the Toronto-Dominion Centre.
> Where the federal, provincial and municipal governments "agree a certain rapid system will benefit the people and is compatible with good urban planning," said Trudeau, a re-elected Liberal government would pick up its share of the tab.

It was estimated that the cost to the federal government would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $250 million to $290 million. We have seen nothing of that promise.

According to the Globe and Mail, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) was reported as saying the following in an interview on February 18, 1977, in Toronto:

> The federal government's 1974 election promise of a national $290-million mass urban transit program is dead . . . the program was killed because of spending restraints.
> "The program that we contemplated in 1974 cannot be realized within the time frame of this parliament," he said.

This was said at a luncheon meeting between some federal cabinet ministers and the chairman and mayors of metropolitan Toronto. The article continues:

> Asked about possible federal assistance for the Toronto Area Transit Authority's plans to expand the GO-transit system, Mr. Macdonald said Transport Minister Otto Lang would be making a decision on the matter shortly.
> However, when asked whether the transit authority would get the 50 per cent subsidy it is seeking for a four-year, $150-million expansion and upgrading program, Mr. Macdonald said: "That kind of money just isn't available . . . (for commuter transit) in one region of Ontario."

In the next five to ten years we must encourage a sharp reduction in the use of the private automobile. Until we have a modern, efficient, rapid urban transit system in Canadian cities, we can expect Canadians to use their own cars to get to and from work.

I would like to illustrate what I mean by referring to the situation in the city of Ottawa. Since 1974 we have had two or three increases in the price of bus fares. In 1974 the price of a single fare was 25 cents. Today it is 50 cents for a single fare or five tickets for $2, which means 40 cents per trip if one buys five tickets at a time. The transit system in Ottawa is operating at a deficit, and there will be other increases unless the federal or provincial governments will provide a subsidy for the so-called losses of the bus system.

I would like to draw the minister's attention to what is happening in my city of Winnipeg where the provincial government has paid half of the losses of the transit system for the last number of years, and is paying for half the cost of new buses purchased by the Winnipeg Transit System. Even though that policy would seem to cost money, it will help to wean and encourage people to leave their own cars at home and use the public transit system, which is much less costly in terms of cost and much more efficient in the use of gasoline or diesel fuel necessary to move a customer from one place to another.

We have had a complete repudiation by the government of promises made in 1974 during the election campaign. These promises were listened to by the people of Canada, and particularly the people of urban Canada, as they elected Liberal members to office, which gave the government a majority. That is all I have to say with regard to the lack of policy by the government in terms of urban transit.

In July, 1973, at a time when we had a minority government and at a time when the Liberal government listened to people outside its own ranks, the four western premiers met in Calgary for what they called the Western Economics Opportunities Conference. There were three NDP premiers and a Conservative premier in attendance at that conference in Alberta. Despite the fact that they had, and still have, substantial differences in their political philosophies, they agreed on a large number of issues. One of the major agreements they reached was on some of the changes which were required in national transportation policies. They published a document outlining some of the things which they believed needed doing. I should like to put on the record some of the proposals they made, which were greeted with a good deal of interest and verbal support by the then minister of transport who said publicly, at the time or about that time, that the transportation system in this country was a mess.

Some of the proposals made by the western premiers were as follows:

> National policy must recognize that an efficient and adequate transportation system, making the best use of all available modes of transportation, is essential for the economic and social well-being of Canada and its various regions. National transportation policy must recognize that competition at present acts unevenly between the various regions of Canada and between large and small users of transportation services. As a consequence, the development of the western region of Canada is inhibited by the lack of positive policy direction and the discrimination inherent in our present system of freight rates.

They asked for amendments to the National Transportation Act, something which has not been done. They said the following with regard to regional development:

> To utilize cost information which will be available, a new approach to rail pricing is required which involves:
> (a) A federal contribution to the fixed and overhead costs of comparable proportions for all modes of transportation,
> (b) The establishment of a new rate-setting procedure which will promote the economic development of western Canada. This pricing policy is to be developed by the Western Transportation Evaluation Authority to be established immediately . . .
> Every effort must be made to ensure that local western industry is protected and that no part of western Canada is unduly disadvantaged by the implementation of a new pricing technique. This requires the completion of indepth impact studies before any new method becomes effective. Export rates must be protected and statutory grain rates maintained. The Western Transportation Evaluation Authority will co-ordinate the implementation of any new pricing technique.

When I reread that report today I found it sounded familiar. It seems to me that I had heard that same kind of thing from another source, and I so looked to the news stories that were written after Mr. Justice Hall issued his report, almost four years after the Western Economic Opportunities Conference made the recommendations from which I have quoted. Here is what Nick Hills reported, in dealing with the Hall Commission report in a news story which appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune of May 18, 1977. He said the following with reference to Mr. Justice Hall's report:

> He has upheld the hallowed Crowsnest Pass freight rate and, indeed, says it should be expanded to cover all agricultural products exported out of this region.
> He has said, like the western premiers in every political strife, that the raw materials should be processed here—and not in central Canada. He has inferred, again like the western premiers, that the railways engage in duplicity—for having settled the west originally, they now want to settle the future, again to their advantage.

Then Nick Hills said, and I want to draw this particularly to the attention of the Minister of Transport:

> Mr. Justice Hall has gone almost all the way to meeting the arguments of the western premiers that the railways and Ottawa between them are the barriers to a new economic future, based on fairer tariff, tax and freight-rate policies.

In other words, what Mr. Justice Hall has done is in fact to repudiate all the policies which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has been following since he became the minister.

The directions in which we should go are clear, both in terms of urban transportation and rapid transit, in terms of commuter transportation such as the GO system and the kind of commuter service that they have had and will not have if the government permits the railways to increase the rates and discontinue the service that they have provided into the city of Montreal, and in terms of reorganization, rationalization, and planning of our rail system in western Canada.

I suggest to the minister that if the same kind of study as Mr. Justice Hall has done for western Canada were done in the maritimes, we would get the same kinds of recommendations to rationalize the system, to use the railways, to stop charging cost against the railways which are not calculated in the use of an airline buses or trucks. In other words, what Mr. Justice Hall has said, and what the western premiers were saying in 1973 is that what we need is a co-ordination of all our methods of transportation, of rails, buses, airlines, trucks and private passenger cars, so we get the most efficient use of all modes of transport so that the people will benefit, rather than one group as compared to another. We have not had that kind of thinking by the Minister of Transport and I do not believe we will have it. It is for that reason that I and my party support the motion before us today.

It is not too late. The minister can rethink his policies; he can begin to use the kind of broad policies advocated by the western premiers and by Mr. Justice Hall, and he can begin to give the kind of consideration to the transportation needs of this country which he has not given until now.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is the second day of debate on transportation questions. Yesterday's subject was a fairly broad one dealing with transportation problems in Canada, particularly the Atlantic and western regions. Today's subject is even broader since the motion refers to transportation problems in Canada, urban and rural, and I am not sure whether that is meant to leave out anything or whether a portion of central Canada has been left out in the mix between the two motions. The extraordinary thing which anyone listening to the debate must observe, and which I wish had been widely observed, is the lack of real criticism or of substance in the comments we have heard up to this point in relation to broad government policy on transportation. Transportation is such a broad field, there are so many fronts on which we are moving and so many things happening, yet so few of them have been mentioned in the debate here.

We have heard from the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) comments on the history of transportation, which presumably demonstrates the urgency of the problems with which we are dealing. Besides that, he mentioned a number of fronts on which we are moving and, generally speaking, while he did not say so in words, he was endorsing the position taken on the fronts on which we are moving. He and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), broadly embracing the principles of the Hall Commission report, have certainly picked up where the government policy stands on this. Indeed I wonder if very often action has followed so swiftly on any document or commission report as has been the case with the Hall Commission report.

As hon. members know, almost within ten days of the receipt of the report, action was taken on the first and most important recommendation of the Hall Commission in regard to the transfer of 1813 additional miles of rail to the basic rail network. The following day I met with producer groups and others in Regina to outline to them the ideas which we had and on which we thought we could move forward rapidly in relation to the other recommendations of the Hall Commission report, some of which will take further consideration and deliberation over time.

I should say that the meeting in Regina was certainly a very receptive one in terms of the reactions and attitudes of those who attended. I note, for instance, a report in the Regina Leader-Post dated Saturday, May 28, in which Boyd Anderson of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities described the meeting as a positive effort to resolve complex issues. Ted Turner of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool praised fast government action to adopt the main recommendations of the report. He said, "Establishment of a prairie rail action committee . . . is a necessary catalyst". Mr. Gordon Harrold of the Alberta Wheat Pool expressed surprise at how quickly the government had moved to implement the report. Mac Runciman, president of United Grain Growers, was impressed that only ten days after the complex Hall report was tabled, the government was already acting.

A headline in the Western Producer read "Speedy Action on Hall Report Recommendations". A Free Press report from Winnipeg carried the headline "Lang Moves Quickly on Hall Proposals". Another story in the Manitoba Co-operator is headed "Lang Moves on Hall Report", and there is a subheading above it which states "Will Retain Crow Rates". That was dated June 2, 1977.

The Hall report was an important document. It was part of an ongoing series of actions which have been taking place in the prairie area to deal with the grain handling and transportation system, and in those main things we have the support of hon. members opposite. I will come back to some of those details just to put into context the nature of the Hall report. It builds upon what we are doing throughout this country in transportation and upon matters which are under way and which are very fast moving, about which hon. members opposite have little to say.

It is true that the hon. member for Winnipeg North referred to our urban transit program, and there again he broadly endorsed and supported what we said we wanted to do, what we intended to do, and what we had already done in part in terms of the commuter program and the commitment of money for that program and other urban transportation programs.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North was critical, and I understand that. His comments were legitimate opposition criticism of the fact that, to this point, our consideration of government restraint of spending has led us to delay implementing parts of what we wanted to do and what we said we intended to do. Therefore, again on a major policy question there is agreement except on the question of timing and on the question of spending money immediately. Of course an opposition can always be more ready to spend money in particular areas, but it reserves the right to criticize government spending as a whole.

What I want to do today is briefly touch on some of the matters hon. members opposite ignore when they criticize transportation policy. The very nature of the attacks and the debate demonstrate how much agreement there would have to be on where we are moving. It is true that yesterday some hon. members were critical of the moves which have been taking place in the Atlantic region in relation to a historic agreement reached between this government and the four Atlantic governments on how we should proceed to improve transportation in those provinces. It is worth noting that it is rather historic to get that kind of agreement on a variety of steps, including the transfer of money to support the movement of certain goods, money which ought to be spent in better ways to help the Atlantic region.

We ought to spend money to help with the shipment of goods and to pay the shipper rather than to apply it to a mode of shipment, so that the producer has a choice of shipment. We ought to examine very critically each form of our spending in transportation, and in the Atlantic region we reached an important agreement to add more money because of this government's commitment to the development of the Atlantic region, where that development is so badly needed. However, we also considered the diversion of money which was spent in ways which were less efficient than was seen to be possible. Surely that is a principle which ought not to come under criticism from any sensible member who is trying to help this country grow and be more productive.

We created a commission in Newfoundland to pull together all the analyses of the many transportation problems facing that area, and the composition and the terms of reference of that commission were agreed upon with the government of Newfoundland. We do not share common partisan philosophy, but we are capable of agreeing with these governments and working with them when we are able to demonstrate, as we have in these cases, the good sense of the proposals and the benefit to Canada they have. I think hon. members should recognize that as a significant accomplishment.

It is true that in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick the issue of how to move the potatoes which come out of those areas is an extremely sensitive one, but again the setting up of a small work group to report quickly and effectively on this problem, and to pull together in a final way what has been done and studied in this area, has been warmly welcomed in those areas, and I look forward to its results.

On the other side of the country we have a similar kind of situation with British Columbia. There were years of grievances that the mainline ferries between the mainland and Vancouver Island were not receiving support when constitutional agreements for support had been arrived at with Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. This year we reached an agreement with the province of British Columbia whereby we will provide a form of assistance and support for an essential crossing connection, which would always find it difficult to pay its own way completely. That demonstrates what I have been saying constantly, and that is that while there is a general proposition that it ought to be recognized for the sake of productivity in Canada that costs ought to be reflected through a transportation system unless you have a very good reason why they ought not to be, there are these reasons for not doing so: remote areas, difficult access, and so forth.

However, as I said in Hamilton last week, hon. members should really observe—and hon. members in the Conservative party particularly—that it is practically impossible to support the market system without supporting the view that, by and large, transportation costs in relation to the doing of other things and the accomplishing of other objectives should be shown through to the people who choose one mode or another, as with shippers in the Atlantic region. Better that they who ship should choose whether they ship by rail, truck or water than that we as a government should use a bureaucratic approach to interpose particular subsidies and assistance which divert their choice from the most sensible and economic one for them to something else.

I know that Conservatives find it very easy to scoff at the particular words "user pay" because they like to lead people to fear that that means pay excessively. It does not. It means being realistic about costs. It means we should have a sensible system which reflects costs, and that is a principle which is being broadly introduced in many ways. When we introduce that in the air mode of transportation, we are actually moving to answer some of the criticisms which have been at other times aimed at government policy for distorting in favour of one mode against another and, of course, our very principle is to move against that.

Simultaneously, in the air mode I ask hon. members opposite if they have any criticism about the increased consultation which has been instituted with the airlines and with the other users of services so that their views will be fully taken into consideration in future major developments all over this country in transportation, which had not been the policy of the past? It is the policy today, and it is another example of how the government has been moving in order to make transportation more responsive, more sensible, and more an instrument of productivity of a high form.

All across this country people are interested in rail passenger services, and here again surely hon. members opposite might have some comment on the view that in order for rail passenger service to become a potential significant contributor as a means of transportation again we have had to change the policy of the past under which rail passenger service was shortchanged. We have done so. We are committed to moving to 100 per cent subsidies between what passengers can pay and what is needed to provide a good and reasonable service, rather than leave the service on a declining basis because of a shortage of revenue to the railways. That, I hope, is a policy upon which hon. members opposite will finally comment.

What we have also had to do, however, is say to the CTC, as an instrument to examine these questions in all their local aspects and implications, that there are some services for which alternatives are clearly available where the passenger load factor is not adequate to justify the kind of expense to the taxpayer which would be required to maintain the service, and that in those cases the service ought not to be continued at those great expenses. That surely is a balanced and reasonable approach. It puts on the record that the government has come down on the side of future development of rail passenger service and on the side of the hope that it can gradually attract more passengers, demonstrate its usefulness, and indeed move toward self-sufficiency in its main areas, even though it will always need assistance in more remote areas. I would ask hon. members opposite to comment on that, and to have some regard for the taxpayer and government spending. Simply paying out money from the taxpayer does not mean that the cost has been avoided; the cost is real, and those who pretend it is avoided in that way simply miss the boat.

Our ports policy statement indicated a clear intention to move toward port commissions and decentralization of all functions which can be properly decentralized, into port regions. This will minimize bureaucracy at the centre, and I would have thought this would have been commented upon and praised. Certainly those most concerned with ports have welcomed this move. They have been intimately associated with the developements taking place, and I think they will welcome the legislation which I hope will soon be introduced in this House. That broad principle of minimizing bureaucracy and decentralizing operations is being put forward very generally in our programs.

Hon. members spoke about transportation without mentioning many of the recent developments. WEOC was mentioned. I ask hon. members to remember WEOC and the claims for cost disclosure. This government has introduced cost disclosure legislation and, day by day or week by week, has been providing the provinces with the information they wanted about costs. This has laid to rest a good number of myths about a lot of cost matter where there was a fear that too many of the freight rates were ignoring costs and reality.

Bill C-33 which is before the House is likely to be delayed, because in addition to the many hours it has already taken on second reading I am told that many more will be required and so it may not be possible to get it through in this session. Some of the most important principles in that bill are the introduction of the western economic opportunities reply to the question of whether long-haul rates should be lower than short-haul rates, and the very important issue of whether some limits should be put on freight rates in a more realistic way than was done in 1967.

The railways do not like the maximum limits that would be imposed by Bill C-33 because they recognize that even those limits, which at the very beginning are fairly modest restraints, will cause the lowering of certain rail freight rates, particularly on those products where the railways say they are charging what the product can easily bear but which really means they are over-charging when the market can bear it. That is what Bill C-33 is meant to alter and if I had the co-operation of hon. members opposite we could move ahead rapidly in that regard.

I mentioned the Hall Report earlier. I could also mention the Snavely Report which dealt with the analysis of the cost of moving grain and indicated the problem of that cost being a great deal higher than the long established and often called sacred Crowsnest rate on grain.

That of course leads to a natural reference to the government proposition contained in the 1975 paper which Mr. Hall has endorsed and which provides if that rate is being prescribed which is below cost—and as a matter of policy that is being prescribed—then the government ought to pay the difference between that rate and the real cost. Certainly I have indicated desire to see that the railways have the required funds, following along the lines of the Hall recommendation, to get on with the upgrading of the rail branch lines which in the prairies is so badly needed. In the Regina meeting on May 28 I indicated that such was my intention.

Both the Hall and the Snavely reports deal with the important area of grain on the prairie provinces. Hon. members opposite did not mention the many other things that are being done to make that system work better. There is the purchase of 8,000 hopper cars which western members frequently refuse to talk about because, if they did, they would have to praise the government; nor do they stop their colleagues from other parts of the country from sounding critical because the government spends that kind of money on a western problem. This is a sign of the disunity in the policies of that party, and it spreads disunity, and suspicion, and resentment across this country.

The Conservative party is guilty of preaching disunity and preaching different views in different parts of the country at all times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has the floor and all other hon. members will have their chance to speak. I am prepared to stay here until ten o'clock if necessary.

Mr. Lang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That should just about give me time to go through the list of things that the government has done and to detail them adequately for the edification of hon. members opposite. I was going to mention a few other things in relation to the Hall and Snavely recommendations in regard to the grain handling system on the prairies.

I might mention that we were able to achieve an agreement between the two railways that would eliminate back hauls, which for a long time have been the subject of criticism. That was mentioned at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. I welcome the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) that we are about ready for another conference of that sort. Certainly it would be a good thing to review matters and remind the west of how much has been done. He and his colleagues are so numerous in their negativisms that they often mislead people in the west about how much has been accomplished. Another conference would probably be a very good idea.

Mr. Paproski: It is about time to do it because the next election is coming up.

Mr. Lang: When the boxcars of the railways were falling into disrepair we introduced a special repair program for them, and we developed a new quota system which was attacked by both opposition parties as being destructive of old values. It is now recognized in the west as being absolutely necessary for the effective movement of grain as fast as the Wheat Board needs it. The block shipping system was a marvelous addition to the usefulness of our railway equipment by reducing turn around times.

We have the Manz Report on how cars should be allocated for grain. We have the trucking program which the Canadian Wheat Board was able to institute at our cost in order to ensure that damp grain could be dried. In every area we have been moving rapidly to improve our transportation system.

These are things which have been done from one end of the country to the other, and much of it has been done through agreement with the provinces of disparate political beliefs.

There is the Atlantic agreement, the Newfoundland agreement, the task force in relation to the potato problems of PEI and New Brunswick, the historic agreement on ferries with British Columbia ending that long-standing grievance, and the creation of standing committees on transportation with each of the regions of the country. These are demonstrations of the rapid action taken by the government in regard to transportation. The Hall Commission report is another example of how quickly we will pursue matters. It is true that the transportation needs of this country are being met effectively and sensitively. The opposition's lack of ability to comment on these many programs of action is the clearest demonstration of the government's achievements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I could not help but notice with some amusement the minister's comments about the unity of policy within the Conservative party. I wonder if the minister might comment about members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, one of whom is in the Chamber at the present time. During our deliberations in eastern Canada, each member categorically, as a matter of record, divorced himself from the minister's user-pay concept and said he would do so publicly and in the House of Commons. I wonder if the minister would like to reflect upon the unity of government policies within his own party. That seems to me to be more relevant than what the minister would like to postulate as a difference of opinion and analysis.

An. hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Whiteway: It is true and I can get the record to prove it. The record is clear on it.

● (1650)

Mr. Paproski: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Whiteway: Stand up on a point of order and make the charge. It is true, and I can prove you are wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Will the hon. member please address the Chair?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) has made a serious charge about the conduct of members on my side of the House. The hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), and the hon. member from Saint John-Lancaster served on the committee in the Atlantic provinces last week. To my knowledge, and I have not read the transcripts of the reports, none of us said any of the words the hon. member attributed to us in his speech. I ask him to withdraw those remarks, because they are unfair innuendoes.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong. It is not unfair innuendo. It is actually accurate accusation.

Mr. Paproski: Put your seat on the line.

Mr. Whiteway: I am speaking only factually, and will at the earliest opportunity present to the House of Commons such documentation as is necessary from the minutes of those committee meetings—

Mr. Collenette: Do it right now.

Mr. Whiteway: They are not available. The hon. member knows they are not available, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Collenette: I think they are.

Mr. Whiteway: They have yet to be printed.

Mr. Collenette: How can the hon. member be so sure about this?

Mr. Whiteway: As soon as the documentation is available, I will make it available to the hon. member and the House of Commons.

Mr. Collenette: Then do not make a charge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest a dispute is going on between two hon. members. The hon. member for Selkirk has the floor for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Landers: Yes. Stick to your text.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I shall speak this afternoon on urban transportation. The minister spent most of his 20 minutes dealing with subjects other than urban transportation. On the shelves of this country's governments, federal, provincial and municipal, there are millions of dollars worth of studies concerning transportation, studies dealing with short and long-term plans for urban rapid transit, with systems which would provide intra-city transport facilities for industry, business and residents. It is important to consider the scope of the problem.

Apparently the minister avoided speaking substantively on urban transit. The fact remains that urban transit is of concern to the 75 per cent of Canadians living in our cities, the three largest being Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. One can think of ten other Canadian cities of substantial size. By the year 1990 at least 90 per cent of all Canadians will live in urban centres, something with which the minister neglected to deal. He did not tell the House the government's plans for urban transport. His own departments' demographic studies show that in future we shall see a concentration of industry, people and housing in our urban centres, which has serious implications for demand for land and infrastructure such as schools, recreational facilities and transport. We shall need not only a network of rapid transit; we shall need good roads as well. This concentration of Canadians in large urban centres also has implications with respect to energy costs, and the quality of the life of the citizens of those urban centres. As I say, 90 per cent of all Canadians by 1990 will live in large urban centres.

On March 4 this year I spoke in this House and used the term "crisis convergence". I said that in each of the areas I mentioned there is now a crisis or the potential for a crisis, and it is certain that in four or five years, or perhaps ten if we can postpone it that long, all the elements of crisis will converge together, to produce a crisis. Hence I used the term "crisis convergence".

To meet our difficulties, the government must produce a new, national urban policy. It should not be a piecemeal, fragmented or partial policy; it should be an all-encompassing, bold, imaginative transport policy for our cities, and we needed it yesterday, so to speak. It is certain we need it even more today.

The government cannot hide behind the classic question we have heard often: who has the jurisdictional and constitutional right in this field? Let us hear no more arguments as to whether the cities are the creatures of the provinces or if the federal government can deal directly with municipalities. These arguments are not good enough. They are but fiddling while Rome burns. Is it not ironic that city administrations are the last on the totem pole when it comes to acquiring finances, but first on the totem pole in provision of services for Canadians?

Good transportation in our cities is the underlying part of the infrastructure which can make life in our cities tolerable, which can allow Canadians to live in urban centres, or in the suburbs and travel to work. Only if you build a vast, rapid transit system in each city can people live in the suburbs and work in the city core. No matter if you talk of polycentric cities, or cities as we know them today with a central core area and outlying suburbs, rapid urban transit is necessary if the cities are to function. Indeed, what is a basic characteristic of successful cities in the world? Mr. Speaker, it is a modern, fast transit system.

Basic to this question is the government's list of priorities. As I said in the House on Monday night, the government has its priorities all screwed up. The minister said nothing to make me change my mind. If the government's priorities are what it says, it should do what it promised in the election campaign. I mentioned some of those election pledges on March 4 this year, and will repeat some of them.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made these promises on June 17, 1974. What are those pledges? I shall quote my own remarks on March 4, as reported on page 3673 of Hansard, as follows:

> The Liberal government will pay 100 per cent of the cost of new commuter vehicles. The Liberal government will pay 25 per cent of the capital cost of all vehicles purchased. Financial support will be made available to encourage Canadian design and engineering. The Liberal government will offer assistance. Canadian industry will be encouraged to develop 'off the shelf' standardized systems and equipment. The Liberal government will encourage urban transit systems. The Liberal government is committed to removing the 12 per cent sales tax. The Liberal government will offer the best use of existing railway rights of way. The Liberal government will rapidly implement the railway relocation act.

The government calls these pledges. They are not thoughts or whimsical ideas; they are a definite commitment to action, a commitment the Prime Minister made. And what has changed between June 17, 1974, and the present? Why, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals won another election.

We in Canada urgently need mass, rapid transit for our cities. We must plan for the future, when 90 per cent of Canadians will live in our cities. That being so, I say those pledges are nothing but black, foul lies. Three months ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) was in the city of Toronto, a city which critically needs a modern rapid transit system. He announced that the $190 million that had been promised and allocated for the development of a rapid transit system for Toronto was no longer available.

It is all well and good for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to stand in his place in this Chamber to tell us what he has accomplished. I know he works hard. I know there have been some accomplishments. I know that we do not sing the minister's praises often enough. Perhaps that gets him down. However, it is our responsibility to point out weaknesses, not to sing his praises. The minister was elected to act. His reward is that he has been elected. I hope the minister is not attempting to intimidate me from carrying out my responsibility and pointing out that nothing is being done in the area of urban transportation.

In addition, the minister has reneged on promises, pledges, and commitments. The government cannot make these kinds of retractions with little consequence. The results of this inaction and reneging will have serious repercussions in years to come.

I ask the minister to take seriously under advisement the task of resetting the priorities of his government. He should at least put on paper and begin to act on his commitment and priority to put in place a fast modern rapid transit system in at least the three largest cities in Canada, namely, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

Why does it make sense for us in Canada to put into action a rapid transit system? First, it is obvious that half of Canada's oil and gas consumption is used for intra-city transportation. If we were to have a mass rapid transit system in our Canadian cities, by 1985 we could cut that amount by 50 per cent. In other words, we could reduce the total consumption by 25 per cent. I realize the capital cost would be in the neighbourhood of $5 billion, but that investment would save 25 per cent of Canadian energy needs in eight to ten years. We can see the kinds of results that would have on our transfer payments, requirements of offshore oil, energy conservation, and balance of payments. It should be done if for no other reason than that it makes good economic sense.

Second, a mass rapid transit system in our Canadian cities would give us an opportunity to do something that we have already begun. We are already ahead of most of the world in our technological development of a massive rapid transit system. We have a corporation which has been doing extensive work, financed mostly by the province of Ontario, the Urban Transportation Development Corporation. We could export this technology. The world market in the next 20 years will be in excess of $25 billion. However, the $5 billion required to put a mass rapid transit system in place in our Canadian cities would be a break-even cost even if we did not sell a nickel's worth offshore. It makes good sense that we talk about a mass rapid transit system for Canada because of the potential of the industrial development in the exporting of our technology, know-how, and the kinds of jobs it could mean for years to come.

Third, it makes good sense to look at transportation in the cities because of the effect it can have on the affordability of homes. Other members have pointed out that one cannot take a job if one cannot get from where he lives to where he works. If the cost of a gallon of gasoline goes to $2 or $3 in the future, then with the high cost of housing it will be almost impossible for Canadians to own a home on the periphery of a city and drive some distance to their jobs. Even if they can buy a home, they will not be able to afford to drive to and from work. A mass rapid transit system would fill that need.

Fourth, if 90 per cent of all Canadians are going to live within our urban centres, we have to look at the quality of life ten, 15 or 20 years down the road. To a large degree the quality of life is contingent on the mobility that one has within a city. Can you get to the arena, the schools, downtown shopping, to a job, to the recreational facilities, to your friends across town, the zoo or the museums? If you are immobile, your quality of life is substantially less. Unless we have a modern transit system, that quality of life will suffer.

It is unfortunate that every city in Canada today is in debt as the result of its transit system. Not only do they have a capital debt, but they are unable to pay the interest. Every transit system in Canada that I know of is in the red.

I will use my city of Winnipeg as an example. Every year that city has a $1 million capital cost simply to replace buses. Every year it has an operational deficit of $19 million. The trend is away from our transit systems because they are awkward and cumbersome. In 1962, 44 per cent of those travelling in Winnipeg used the transit system. In 1971, our latest statistics—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, for the second time in as many days, we are discussing a motion dealing with the government transportation policy. In both cases, Mr. Speaker, the motion was introduced by a member of the Progressive Conservative Party. I wonder whether it is because the Tories have realized that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is now experiencing difficulties and, like vultures, they are trying to snatch the prey for themselves while he is in deep trouble, but that would not be gentlemanly behaviour. On the other hand, with heavenly inspiration, perhaps they have discovered that transportation is now facing some problems and they have decided to move two motions in a row to make up for their past neglect of the matter.

Whatever it may be, Mr. Speaker, it is unacceptable that the transportation policy of this government should be inadequate and fail to meet the needs and requirements of our vast country. The government cannot deny the fact, for it acknowledged it when it introduced Bill C-33 entitled:

> An Act to amend the National Transportation Act and the Department of Transport Act for the purpose of defining the objective of the transportation policy for Canada and authorizing the consequential rearrangement of powers and duties relating to transport and to amend the Transport Act and the Railway Act in respect of freight rates and other matters.

And today, the motion which is being debated reads as follows, and I quote:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the transportation policies of this government have failed to meet the needs of urban and rural Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Villeneuve, a riding in northwestern Quebec, which is far from large centres, I can certainly speak about the crucial importance of establishing a consistent transportation policy which would take the particular needs of remote areas into consideration. I would like to deal a few moments with the importance of having a coherent transportation policy in remote areas such as the area I have the honour to represent. Mr. Speaker, for some towns such as Val-d'Or, Chibougamau, Senneterre and Malartic, an efficient transportation system is a prerequisite to their development and to the survival of their people. It is absolutely necessary to improve the transportation system between northwestern Quebec and the large centres if this northwestern area is to pursue its development and if the area I represent is to continue its industrialization.

On several occasions last year, I have had the opportunity to be the spokesman for my fellow-countrymen with regard to problems of delayed freight transport between Montreal, Val-d'Or and Senneterre. I was then receiving a number of letters from merchants, manufacturers, businessmen, chambers of commerce and especially municipal councils. They were all bitterly complaining—and rightly so—about delays of several weeks between the time an item was put into the hands of the railways and the moment it arrived at its destination. It is clear that the economic life of northwest Quebec suffered many hardships.

It is regrettable that Bill C-33 does not deal with this important problem of exceedingly long delays between the moment an article is handed to the railway and the moment it arrives for delivery. The proposed legislation bears heavily on problems brought about by the rates levied by railway companies. The cost for transporting freight by railway certainly deserves our attention and I understand very well that the Canadian Transport Commission must see that shippers of freight pay reasonable rates.

Mr. Speaker, this is all the more necessary since there is no real competition in that area. If we want to prevent overly blatant inequities, it is important that maximum rates be established and that the commission be in a position to determine whether the rates applied are reasonable or not. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I regret that this bill gives no explicit authority to the Canadian Transport Commission to judge whether there is a reasonable delay between the moment the railway company takes over the item and the moment the item reaches its destination. I therefore urge the minister to consider amending the end of his bill to include provisions to that effect. Shippers would be sure that the company would not accept overdue delays in shipments. I know for a fact that it is one of the major areas of concern for all those who have to use freight transport on a regular basis.

At that time I also asked repeatedly of the then Minister of Transport to consider reducing shipping delays. I can give a concrete example to show how much a transport policy which accounts for the particular needs of isolated areas can be important for the social and economic future of one region. Mr. Speaker, I did listen a moment ago to members discussing the transport problems they encounter in their own region.

As far as we in northwestern Quebec are concerned, if we dare ask either the department or the Canadian Transport Commission how it is that an area like ours where over 200,000 people live cannot have a better railway service, the answer those people can give us is, of course, that the railway and particularly the passenger service in that area are not viable. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept that answer. But what can be said about an area as remote as ours where the only two adequate means of transport at present are the plane or the automobile when one thinks that only going from Ottawa to the closest place in my riding takes just about 15 hours by railway. Those same people are telling us that it is not viable. Of course, and it is understandable that it is not viable.

When one thinks that today, in 1977, we can still travel with locomotives dating back to the years 1900-1925—and I know what I am talking about here because I had an opportunity to take the train from Cochrane, Ontario, to Rouyn with a transfer in Taschereau, and I had an opportunity, which might never re-occur, to board a train where the seats were made of wood. When I say that the minister cannot prove that such a means of transport is viable, I would ask him to try to shorten the time that we have to spend in those cars.

Mr. Speaker, hundreds of groups, organizations, citizens in my riding are now fighting for improvement. I know this does not come under federal jurisdiction but still I would like to mention it any way. I said earlier that we had only two means of transport—the plane and the automobile. I would like to talk here a bit about what I have been most concerned with for about two years, and that is the road from Montreal to Val-d'Or. Last year, before the provincial election, we managed to get all our local provincial members of parliament under one roof to fight for a better road. Everybody, all parties recognize that the highway is in a real mess. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is an area, as I was saying, of provincial jurisdiction, but it is also an issue of transport policy which concerns all those northwesterners who travel this highway. Mr. Speaker, the condition of the road is so bad that I do not even dare use my car to cover the distance to my constituency every weekend, for heavy trucks travelling from Val-d'Or to Montreal have been banned from this road for the past five years, and—

Mr. Demers: Go and tell the PQ that this is a provincial responsibility!

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): That is what I said a while ago. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right when he says that this is a provincial responsibility, and I repeat, he is right.

But, if this matter comes under provincial jurisdiction, why is it that in another field such as that of education the federal government interferes to finance teaching in the provinces? The federal government should be able to help financially the provinces whose budgets are insufficient to ensure the creation of a basic highway network to join outlying areas to the larger centres, especially in the area that I mentioned earlier, the one I represent in the House.

The federal government spends a lot of money for higher education even though this comes under provincial jurisdiction. In my opinion, it could just as easily offer credits or subsidies to the provinces to improve the highway networks when this becomes necessary. As I said some time ago, even if this comes under provincial jurisdiction, the increase in the price of gasoline, as the hon. member who has just spoken said, the oil price increase comes under federal jurisdiction. Yet, people in northwestern Quebec have to pay for this increase, even though they were not even consulted to see if they were prepared to pay more. I would ask the minister to consult his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to consider using the revenue generated by higher gas prices in northwestern Quebec to help the provincial government provide suitable roads for the people that I have the honour to represent, so that they may get where they want safely.

As concerns Highway 117, the provincial government has been saying for years that they do not have the money for repairs. Yet, the situation is terrible and greatly hinders the economic development of northwestern Quebec. Mr. Speaker, this is why I believe our national transportation policy cannot ignore this problem which is extremely important for the survival of northwestern Quebec.

I would therefore urge the Minister of Transport to consider meeting his provincial counterparts as soon as possible with a view to establishing some form of financial cooperation to improve the road system in the area. I am convinced that all the people in northwestern Quebec would be grateful to the Canadian government if this led to concrete results.

Mr. Speaker, in a somewhat different line of thought, I would like to refer to a problem submitted to me by Nordair aviation, a company serving my area. Nordair president André Lizotte wrote to me recently about a clause that was inserted in their operating licence by the Canadian Transport Commission. Under that condition, Nordair is prevented from providing a direct flight between Montreal and Val-d'Or only. The flight must continue through to Matagami which means the plane cannot fly Montreal through Val-d'Or and return.

The effect of that condition is that Nordair must cancel the flight when weather conditions are unfavourable between Montreal and Matagami. Even if there is perfect weather between Montreal and Val-d'Or, only Val-d'Or passengers are prevented from taking that flight. That condition in Nordair's licence is unfair in my view and in the company's also. I feel that the Canadian Transport Commission, if they have the interests of northwestern Quebec residents at heart, must delete that condition and allow Nordair to use jets.

In fact, the only thing that prevents the company from using jets or faster planes is the fact that the Matagami airport cannot handle that type of plane. As a result, passengers on the Montreal-Val-d'Or line do without the comfort of jets merely because of that restriction written in on Nordair's permit. I trust the commission is willing to cancel that condition which deprives the people in northwestern Quebec from quality service in that field.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to make at this point in the debate on the motion before the House today. As for the other airlines, I should merely like to ask the minister what is going on today with the discussions the Chibougamau people had with the former Minister of Transport, as well as the present minister, about the Chibougamau airport which, it will be remembered, we in northwestern Quebec, at the time of the 1974 election, when the then minister went about the area—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, before I get into my remarks it is interesting to note that the motion before the House reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the transportation policies of this government have failed to meet the needs of urban and rural Canada.

This is a very serious charge indeed for the Conservative party to make, Mr. Speaker, yet at this hour they have but three members sitting in this Chamber. I am sorry, four. This is the party which brought this motion before us today, and there are only four or five of its members present in the Chamber. I consider that to be an absolute disgrace.

● (1730)

An hon. Member: There is also one member behind the curtain.

Mr. Collenette: Can the people of Canada believe in the sincerity of this motion when the opposition cannot muster the required number of members to listen to the debate, no matter which side is speaking? It indicates the great disarray which is evident on the other side.

Before getting into the basic meat of my remarks, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) made a very serious charge. Unfortunately he has left the Chamber and will not be able to hear my remarks. I find that to be quite discourteous on his part. He made the charge that hon. members who were in the Altantic region last week with the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers), and myself—were flatly opposed to the government's transportation policies, especially with reference to the user-pay concept. This is not true, and the record will show that none of the four members who were in the House at that time made those remarks. Before the hon. member for Selkirk makes any future charges, I think he should check his facts.

The eclectic nature of this motion is such that I can speak about any aspect of the transportation policy. The minister talked about a general transportation policy, the hon. member who introduced the motion talked about a transportation policy in the rural context, and the hon. member for Selkirk dealt extensively with urban transit. I do not want to repeat remarks I made on March 2 in this Chamber in regard to urban transit, although I will make a few references to what I said at that time. Along with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), I have been foremost on the government side in pressuring the government to come up somehow with some commitment in the field of urban and commuter transit.

The promises uttered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in June, 1974, were somewhat unrealistic. If you add up all the costs of the promises announced, the government would be virtually bankrupt if they were implemented within a short span of time. On March 2 in the House I made an argument to the effect that we must partly discharge our obligations in order to preserve some good faith and credibility with Canadians in the larger cities, especially in metropolitan Toronto.

The charge has been made that the government has done nothing in the field of urban commuter transit, and this is another falsehood uttered by the opposition. Grants were first made available by the government in the fiscal year 1972-73 for research and demonstration projects. About a year and a half ago the government announced a program of capital assistance for various commuter projects. The first grant under this program was made available on April 1 of this year. The purpose of this program is to assist provincial and municipal authorities in designing and developing new technology, operations and innovations for urban transit. It was also to assist those authorities in the purchase of commuter vehicles and related facilities. The provisions of this program are manifold.

Under the Department of Transport Act, the Transportation Development Agency may enter into agreements with the provinces or municipalities to share the costs of transportation research over a set period of time. Besides providing financial support, the agency is to participate in the project, as a member of the steering committee. It is to monitor progress and provide advice and policy direction for urban commuter services. Grants are to be made to provinces and municipalities to assist in the purchase of commuter vehicles and related facilities. At the beginning of April this year this program covered about $100 million. This is simply not enough. I allude to the $290 million figure which has been referred to in the press and in the media over the last couple of years, which is the amount the government should be sinking into urban commuter transit.

In Toronto we have about $58 million of improvements which are required for the Union Station operation—80 per cent under the great separation program for the Bathurst Street bridge and a 50-50 split on the renovations of the Union Station. The minister is sympathetic to the government providing this assistance and is very sympathetic to the whole question of federal financial assistance to urban commuter transit. But the minister cannot live in a vacuum. He has to operate within the context of the cabinet and has to live within the severe financial restraints which the cabinet has imposed upon him over the last year. They have taken a very commendable approach in terms of government restraint. Contrary to what the hon. member for Selkirk said, the Prime Minister has not closed the door to any federal financial assistance to urban commuter transit. I am sure some aid will be forthcoming in the near future.

I should like to talk about the government's transportation policy in the urban corridor between Windsor and Quebec City, which is the most populated section of this country and is a section which could support a high development of mass transit services, specifically rail. Hon. members in the Chamber who know me and know what I have said in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications over the last few years, are aware of the fact that I am very partial to the enhancement of passenger rail services, especially where they can pay their way in the urban corridor. The government has started to change its thinking and has started to make an effort to upgrade passenger-rail services in the corridor. Unfortunately the government has to do a somersault and completely change its thinking over the past 25 years, which has emphasized the development of air services in this country. I should say that is to the government's credit, because air services in this country have done a lot for Canadian unity.

Last week when returning from the maritimes I flew Air Canada from Halifax to Toronto. Within two hours I was transported from a very distinctive region of Canada, which is isolated in many respects, to the heart of Toronto. This was the result of very fast, efficient air service. Air services have brought the country together. Canada is second to none in the world in the development of air facilities. Perhaps we have been a bit too generous in the amount of money we have made available, especially for airport terminals. I am thinking of the expansion of the Toronto airport, Dorval, and now Mirabel. I understand there is also expansion under way in Edmonton. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), if he is paying attention, would be most interested in hearing that. I believe we spent a lot of money in Calgary as well on improving their air terminal.

Having established these terminals, having established this high quality of air service, I think it is incumbent upon the government, especially at a time when energy shortages are quite apparent, that we must develop more energy efficient forms of transportation. In the urban areas, in the highly populated corridor, rail is the only answer. As a result of the over emphasis on air, rail service has deteriorated in the corridor, as it has deteriorated across the rest of the country. But air services themselves in the corridor do not necessarily make money, and the best figures that I could get from Air Canada show that in the last few years they have been losing around $10 a seat on their service between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, which anyone in the Chamber who travels the route would find quite astounding considering the amount of patronage given to the air service in that corridor. But it is purely a question of economics.

To put planes up in the air between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal is very costly, and it is the long-haul passengers from the west and from the east who, for many years, have subsidized the travel of intercity passengers in the corridor region from Quebec to Windsor, and especially in the Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto region. It is my contention that the government should be doing even more to upgrade rail services, increase speeds and general efficiency, and computerize reservations for passenger rail service in the corridor.

The minister has announced a couple of programs which will help to achieve that end. One is the $30 million capital assistance program for new equipment which, I understand, initially was to be used in the Quebec, Montreal service, but which apparently will be used for the purchase of equipment throughout the corridor. The second is the introduction of a 100 per cent subsidy, the rationalization of non-profitable services, and in general the bringing together of the subsidy money that the government pays for passenger rail service now and putting it into services that have some form of commercial viability.

At the same time that the government is doing this, I am quite worried that it is perhaps undoing a lot of the good work that it has set out to do. I refer specifically to the proposed development of a STOL service between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal. I think the government should do a lot of soul-searching about its equity position in de Havilland aircraft in Toronto and in encouraging STOL service in the corridor region.

As we know, the government owns about 80 per cent of de Havilland. Of course it wants to sell these planes but until now it has not been able to do so. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) said in the finance committee recently that we only have a firm commitment for the sale of one Dash-7, and the reason we cannot sell the planes is that we do not have purchasers in Canada. I suppose the thinking of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is that if we do have a full fledged service between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal using the Dash-7, this will encourage foreign buyers.

The Dash-7 is a very good plane. I understand it has some energy limitations and it is quite expensive, but it is good for use in the maritimes, in the rural communities, or in the outports in Newfoundland. It could be used, I am sure, on the west coast of B.C., and could perhaps help to phase out some of the high costs of operating a ferry service on the west coast. The Twin Otter is used by Nordair in northern Ontario, and I understand the province of Ontario wants to set up another service in northwestern Ontario. This is how the Dash-7 and the Twin Otter can best be used. They should not be used for commuter type service from a city downtown to another city downtown, because if the STOL service between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal is allowed to operate from the Toronto Island airport, it will cut into the potential patronage of the rail services, this at a time when, as I have explained, the government is trying to upgrade passenger rail services in the corridor.

As far as I am concerned, a businessman travelling between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal—his ticket is always paid by expense account—should have no option. He should just be able to go to the international airport and take the conventional jet service and pay for that privilege. I do not particularly want to make it easier for businessmen to travel between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal if it means that we will take away a potential source of revenue for railways, because rail does not serve the businessman on a business account, it serves the ordinary wage earner, the person who cannot afford to travel by plane between Montreal and Toronto.

The train is very versatile. You can have one coach with a dining car facility with all manner of food and beverage service for which the businessman can pay, and you can have the coach and other forms of accommodation which are considerably cheaper. Therefore rail is a much more popular mode of transit.

Secondly, and this is a more parochial issue because I represent a constituency in the east end of Toronto, if the STOL service is to operate out of the island airport we will not be bothered too much by the noise. I am sure the two constituencies to the south represented by members of the New Democratic Party would have more noise from an increase in the traffic flow to the Toronto Island airport. What concerns me is that, representing as I do a constituency which is not a particularly wealthy one, the average working men and women cannot afford to travel outside of the city by car or bus to cottages but seek their recreation on Toronto Island.

Anyone in the House who knows Toronto very well knows that Toronto Island parks have become very crowded over the past few years, and to increase air traffic at the island airport would mean the building of parking facilities and a bridge over the western gap. A bridge under it would be difficult to build since boats use the principal channel. It would mean also the development of a great infrastructure for the island airport. This would destroy the recreational compenent of Toronto Island which is so dear to the people of metropolitan Toronto.

I can see that my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), who is a great proponent of STOL service, does not agree with my sentiments. I do not disagree with regional STOL services operating out of the island airport to small points such as Bruce County, Parry Sound or Peterborough, using Twin Otters, but what I do object to is a mass movement of people by Dash-7, which seats 50 passengers, between the major cities because I see that this is merely an attempt by government officials—I say government officials because I want to draw the distinction between government officials and ministers who, I am not sure, are fully aware of the implications of the development of a STOL service on the Toronto Island—of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Transport to bail themselves out of the difficulties, such as the whole question arising out of the expansion of the Toronto International Airport at Malton.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent.

• (1750)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, with only ten minutes left I am afraid I had to deny the hon. member more time. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) suggested that nobody from the government side in the Transport Committee was willing to oppose the user pay concept. Had he been in his seat at the time the statement was made he would have heard it loud and clear, and I submit that the silence of other Liberal members on that committee at that moment, and the applause of other members from the House of Commons, gave assent to the statement that they did not support the user pay concept, so the caucus opposite is somewhat divided. The hon. member should not have accused the hon. gentleman from Selkirk as he did.

The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) covered a great deal of the ground I wanted to cover. Time prohibits me from covering all the ground I would like to cover, but I commend that speech to the minister. I ask him to read it because therein lies the fault Canadians are finding with the transportation structure of Canada. Individual lines are not serviced, roads are not good enough, air service is regulated to a degree which is ridiculous in certain areas, and that is also the case in the Atlantic area. I submit that if the transport system in the Atlantic area had been as good as the minister implied in his remarks, then the Transport Committee of the House of Commons would have flown by public carrier and would not have used a government plane to take its members from place to place. With the existing air schedules in Atlantic Canada, had they resorted to public carriers, they would have spent their time in airplanes and airports, and would have had little time to consider the interests of the public in the transportation field.

The minister referred to Bill C-33. If I am not mistaken, it was introduced on March 1, and when it was introduced the minister was not here to introduce it. The subject has not been addressed as yet by the minister. It was debated three or four days in the House, and then it disappeared from sight.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is true that I was unavoidably absent when the bill was introduced, and I was grateful to the acting minister for delivering the speech I would have delivered had I been here. However, I think it is quite unfair for the hon. member to imply that I have not taken an opportunity to speak since, because the rules of the House very clearly would only allow me to speak as the mover of the motion once all other speakers who wished to participate had done so, and it is clear—from all indications there are many hon. members opposite who are ready to filibuster that important bill—that that would be a long time from now.

Mr. McCain: That bill disappeared from sight on March 7, and the government has not seen fit to bring it to the surface since. To blame the opposition for the disappearance of that bill from public consideration is grossly unfair, and the public is asking why it happened. It conflicts with the budget, the supplementary estimates and other business of the House which, by government standards, have higher priority. As evidenced by this week's conduct of the House, the government does not know what to bring forward, and Bill C-33 could have come forward on a dozen occasions.

I wish there were time to cover the whole matter, but there is one thing which has to be clarified completely. This House has been led to believe—by statements emanating if not from the minister at least from his department—that there was a deal made between the premiers of the Atlantic area and the Department of Transport whereby in lieu of $125 million there would be a trade-off in passenger service. At the CTC hearings in Fredericton Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick said that the four Atlantic provinces did not make any agreement with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to trade off the federal aid to rail services in order to get $125 million in highway and airport improvements.

This morning Premier Campbell stated that no agreement had been reached between the four Atlantic premiers and the Minister of Transport. He said the offer was inadequate. He also stated that Premier Moores agreed with his remarks of that day and that they were looking for a better deal. Premier Campbell also stated this morning, "We are meeting every two weeks and getting nowhere". Negotiations which the minister referred to in the Atlantic area have not been able to make progress virtually since the day they were established because the Government of Canada, through its successive ministers of transport, has chosen to exert the force of its size upon the minute sections of Canada and has imposed upon them restrictions, regulations, and deprivations which are not in any way merited.

Let us consider this $125 million for airports and roads. The highway budget of the province of New Brunswick for 1976-77 was $123 million. For 1977-78 the estimate is $145.2 million. Over a three-year period the province of New Brunswick could therefore look forward to receiving 5.5 per cent of its highways budget, if it was lucky, out of the $125 million offered by the Government of Canada.

All this is done in the name of austerity, but in spite of advice to the contrary and in spite of the need for austerity at that time, Mirabel was built. In spite of the need for austerity in the present budget year, a $200 million skyscraper is being built in the city of Montreal. Added to that expenditure the announcement of some other project in Montreal was made, I suppose in an effort to return a member from Verdun. Austerity is an excuse when it is required, and expenditure is a policital weapon to bribe the public when it is in the best interest of the government. So the minister should not throw austerity at us again, and he should not say that austerity is in any way restricting the efforts of the Department of Transport.

While we were in the Atlantic area we received complaints about our ports, those under the Harbours Board and those which are not. We also received complaints about the rates for the transportation of goods within the Atlantic area as compared with the rates in British Columbia. When wood products are transported by the same railroad in B.C. the cost is 60 per cent less than that charged in the province of New Brunswick. We were told that if there was an emergency in Bathurst, we would have to drive either to Montreal or to Toronto, or charter a private plane, because the transportation system of Canada would not provide emergency service.

We were told that air freight was inadequate, that space was not available, and that when air freight parcels were moved into the province of New Brunswick, they were moved by truck from Moncton to Saint John and to the airport, and they could be picked up two days later, with luck. As suggested by the hon. member for Villeneuve, the minister has not been getting down to the nitty-gritty of transport. He does not understand what is going on.

There is only one solution to the problem of having proper port service in Canada so that transportation can be used as an instrument of development and that is service. The Atlantic area requires $100 million to $150 million to be spent on its ports. Rails in Atlantic Canada require improvement, just as they do across Canada. The Conservative party believes that transportation is an instrument of development, and excuses are not adequate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this afternoon during my speech the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) challenged some comments I made with respect to certain comments made in the Transport Committee on Tuesday, May 31, in Saint John, New Brunswick. I told him I would undertake, as I am doing right now on a point of order, to quote from the Minutes of that meeting, which read as follows:—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) that this is not a point of order, but a matter for debate.

Transportation Policies

With the conclusion of this debate proceedings on the motion before the House have expired pursuant to Standing Order 58 (11). It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11.00 a.m., pursuant to the order made Monday, May 30, 1977.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 9, 1977

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed, from Monday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (for Mr. Chrétien) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, rather than speak on the bill at this time I would like to raise a point of order with you, sir, that I believe you have already said you would consider. In view of the fact that in my opinion this House should not be asked to deal with the bill in its present form at this time, with your permission, sir, I would like to return to the discussion that has taken place in the House on the bill. I would refer, first of all, to Hansard of April 21, 1977, at page 4844 where the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) asked the following question of the minister:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. In view of the great concern that still exists amongst people in western Canada regarding the changes from acres to hectares and bushels to tonnes, as evidenced by the many letters that are being received by the western members, and I assume by the minister himself, and in view of the importance of cabinet solidarity, I wonder if the hon. minister has any intention of withdrawing the metric bill?

The Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand) answered:

Mr. Speaker, at this stage we have no intention of withdrawing the bill. I know that the Minister without Portfolio has some concerns. I will be listening to them because he knows very well what the farmers want.

The point I want to make is that the minister said he would be listening. Further to that, as reported at page 5226 of Hansard of May 3, 1977, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) posed the same question:

● (1110)

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State (Small Business). In view of the acceleration of widespread protest emanating from the producers of western Canada against the conversion to metric in the grains industry, is the minister giving any consideration whatsoever to the various representations he and other members have received and has he now reached the conclusion that the producer organizations upon which he relied when considering this particular piece of legislation did not actually reflect the wishes of the producers in western Canada?

The reply of the minister was this:

Mr. Speaker, without accepting all the premises of the question, I want to say to the hon. member that I have been listening to the representations members made to me and the government, and particularly more recently to the representation made to me by the Minister without Portfolio from Crowfoot and ... other members of parliament on this side of the House from the prairie region. A decision has been made not to proclaim that section of the bill on metric conversion relating to the grains industry ... until after further consultation ... It will not be until further consultations have been held with the grain industry, and especially the farmers.

Then the hon. member for Vegreville said the following:

Can the minister outline to the House what form these consultations will take? What mechanism does the minister have in mind for ensuring that the views of the actual producers will be taken into consideration? Will he rely on the hon. member for Crowfoot, or will he consider as well representations made from my side of the House?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, the exact mechanism has not yet been decided. I assure the hon. member opposite that I will be happy to receive suggestions from him on how he feels this matter ought to be dealt with.

Then as reported at page 5230 of Hansard, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said:

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It relates to the business of the House. It arises out of the incredible answer that was given by the Minister of State responsible for Small Business with respect to the government's plans for the metric conversion bill.

On the same day I made a representation to the Chair as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order related to the one raised earlier by my House leader. It has to do with the metric bill. It really concerns me that the President of the Privy Council should suggest that the bill is going to pass third reading and that the Minister of State in charge of small business should tell us that it will not be proclaimed until such time as negotiations have been carried on with the business and agricultural communities. Does this mean that the House of Commons will become so irrelevant that after third reading hon. members will not have the opportunity to participate in these discussions? Does it mean there will be changes made between the time of third reading and the time at which the bill is proclaimed? This is an important point. I believe it arose during the question period. It is one with regard to which Your Honour will be called upon to rule in order to ensure that the House is not completely emasculated.

You, sir, said the following:

If the issue arises in the way the hon. member has described, there may be some judgment which I shall be called upon to make, and I will make it at that time.

The point I am trying to make is that if this bill leaves this place, it has to go to the other place to be proclaimed, but the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand) has suggested that there are going to be some changes made, and if this happens the House of Commons will be totally emasculated. Further, I would like to refer to Beauchesne's citation 426 as follows:

> In order to give legal force to a bill, or, in other words, make it a statutory enactment, the following legal and constitutional conditions are imperative:
> (a) That the bill has passed through all its stages in both Houses and is consequently ready for the royal assent. If it should receive the assent of the Governor General and be afterwards discovered not to have passed its proper stages in both Houses or be otherwise not in conformity with the constitutional procedure governing such cases, it is so much waste paper.

I contend that this bill is not in proper form, in view of the statements made by the Minister of State for Small Business who has stated in this House that he intends to make changes to the bill after third reading. I contend that this cannot legitimately be done.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I simply point out to hon. members that this bill provides for quite a number of different possible proclamation times. Some clauses are to come into force immediately and a number of others are to come into force by proclamation. It is a somewhat unusual bill in the sense that the proclamation clause and the possibility of proclamation is repeated in relation to different parts of the bill. So it was contemplated that there might be different proclamation times. What the minister did was indicate a process we would follow before we actually proclaimed particular clauses. It is our intention and our hope to have a good number of clauses in force and in effect at a time which is orderly. Some are to be proclaimed immediately upon the coming into effect of the law. That is why it makes good sense to proceed with the bill at this time.

It is useful to recognize that hon. members opposite, in the debate, did not, as I took it, oppose the basic move toward metric conversion. Indeed, they supported it again and raised an amendment in relation to timing more than anything else. Of course, we will be giving that further consideration in the form of consultations before proceedings. But the bill is still very relevant and very important, and in those terms I think there is in no way an abuse of the House.

Mr. Speaker: This point is raised at this stage as we enter into further consideration of the third reading motion. I must say that on its face there is nothing extraordinary in the language of the clauses which have been referred to by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). The fear that the bill might be changed in a period of delayed proclamation is one which I do not fully recognize, because I cannot visualize—at least, it is not clear to me—how the bill could be changed at any time except by amendment, once the bill is passed. Therefore, if such substantive changes to the bill are to be made, they would have to be made by amendments which would have to be introduced and put through all stages here as an amending bill, as would be the case with amendments to any other statute.

The decision on proclamation is not a new aspect of our procedure. As the Minister of Transport has pointed out, not very many bills have more than one proclamation clause; but it is quite ordinary that bills have the kind of clause which appears at the end of this bill at page 8, which reads as follows:

> This section shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

That is not an extraordinary clause, by any means, and as I understand the fear of the hon. member, it is not that in a delayed proclamation of certain clauses there would not be time for consultation only on the subject of the date of the proclamation itself, but that those consultations might lead to suggested changes in the bill and that those changes might be made after the bill had been passed but before it was proclaimed, which somehow would be an affront to parliament. I cannot fully recognize that, because my understanding is that the motivation for this is to receive representations solely on the actual date of proclamation.

Again, the principle of metric conversion is not the problem, but the phasing in of metric conversion as it applies to different areas of the country is a matter upon which further consultation might be had. If, indeed, the hon. member is right and those consultations go to substantive matters, then it seems to me that we should know what they actually are. I am anticipating, and we are into hypothetical territory to a certain extent because without knowing exactly what suggested alterations there might be, and if they are in fact substantive changes to the legislation, it would be readily agreed that we would have to do that by amendments which would be brought before the House for consideration.

I do not know if I have alleviated the concerns of the hon. member. If there is a point that I have failed to recognize fully or have failed to deal with, I think it would be in order for the House to proceed at this time with third reading discussion.

Mr. Towers: I do not wish to belabour the point, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I did not make myself clear. I am not so much concerned about the timing of the royal proclamation, as about the fact that changes will be made in this bill in relation to tons, hectares and bushels. The minister has stated that he is going back to the grains industry and the farmers to see what they want in this bill. The issue is that these changes be made, otherwise the bill will go through in its present form, which is not acceptable to much of the agricultural industry in western Canada.

As the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) said last night, we are dealing with the very culture of western Canada when we deal with acres. The land has been measured in acres and sections. This is what the minister is talking about when he goes back to the farmers and the grains industry. To my knowledge, there is no way that these substantive changes can be made in the bill after third reading and prior to the royal proclamation. It is an insult or an affront to this House to be asked to do this. I think the logical way to handle the bill would be to send it back to committee and have it divided.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, as I understand it, the hon. member is making a representation that he is entitled to make by way of amendment to the third reading motion and he wants to bring the attention of the House to that. He expresses a point of view that is quite legitimate but, with respect, I do not think the point has procedural application. Whether it is wise to proceed at this time, whether it is a proper approach, whether it respects the point of view of western farmers in respect of a cultural heritage that is very dear to them, are all arguments that might be addressed for or against the bill or by amendments to the third reading motion, or, indeed, by amendments when the bill has had three readings and is in the Senate.

Those are valid considerations and arguments for or against the bill or an amendment to the motion for third reading. From a procedural point of view, however, I can only say, again, that the approach of a proclamation date that follows some time after three readings in both Houses is not an extraordinary procedural ramification. From a strictly procedural point of view, therefore, I do not see grounds upon which I can arrest progress of the discussion on the bill at this time.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) has the floor on the substantive argument on the motion for third reading.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have your permission for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) to lead off debate. I could be recognized later as a speaker on third reading.

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the situation, the hon. member for Red Deer had the floor, having been recognized, but had not started to speak. If that is so, I am sure the House would have no objection if the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) were called now and the hon. member for Red Deer were called later in the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think Bill C-23 is supported in general principle by all parties in the House. It is really an example of how not to put legislation through that affects the culture of the people. I do not want to belabour that point, but it is my intention to put forward an amendment to try to get the subject back on the rails and, hopefully, to get the support of all members of the House so that conversion to the metric system can go forward in a sensible, democratic way.

When the resolution regarding the metric system was brought in, we in the official opposition asked that legislation be introduced so that we would know what we were doing, where the responsibility lay and what compensation would be made to the people who were going to be forced to suffer in an economic sense as a result of the legislation. When the legislation was introduced before the Christmas recess a protest was raised by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). That was the last we heard of this bill until January 26, when we were suddenly informed that it had to be passed very quickly because it was to take effect five days later, on February 1, 1977.

At that time I asked in the House the reason for this obscene haste, and suggested that if the government wanted to get the bill through, they would at least have to agree to taking the word "hectares" out, first, because it was not necessary and, second, because farmers all across Canada, not just in western Canada, would be opposed to it. I understood that the government thought well of the idea, which was supported by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) of the New Democratic Party. We agreed to drop debate at that stage and let the bill go to committee.

When we got to committee, farm leaders and union representatives took the very strong position that we had to put the bill through immediately because they had spent a lot of money converting the scales and papers and it would cost more money to go back to the original position. This annoyed members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, at least, because they knew this was not the view of farmers on the prairies. To repeat, on behalf of this party I said we would go out and share with the government in the explanation and try to persuade people that in the national interest we had to accept the concept of working in an international community that would use this international system. Because of our opposition in committee the matter came to the attention of people in the west, and now literally 95 per cent of farmers on the prairies are opposed to this metric conversion.

Some farmers are opposed to the whole thing and some are only opposed to the land measurements. The government has said that land measurement is a provincial matter. That is true, but it was a federal agency, the metric commission, that went to the provinces and got Alberta, Ontario and Saskatchewan to agree to conversion to the metric system in regard to land. In the case of Ontario, it was permissive legislation. In the United States it is also permissive legislation. No person in the United States, whether he is a farmer in the Spanish surveyed lands of Southern California, the French surveyed lands of Louisiana, or the imperial system of most of the United States has to convert his land measurement unless it is to his economic advantage to do so.

In the case of Alberta, the legislation was changed, but never proclaimed. In the case of Saskatchewan, after the legislature adjourned last year, distracted by a big debate on the potash takeover, it was put through by order in council.

The great majority of the people of Saskatchewan living in our cities, towns and on farms do not know this change has been made. The person who has bought a group of lots, say in the town of Kamsack or a farm north of Runnymede, will find he cannot register that new ownership unless he gets the land surveyed in the metric system, according to Saskatchewan regulations coming under the land titles act. This means that the farmer or person buying the land is forced to hire a surveyor. We have not had much to do with surveyors in the last 70 or 80 years, having nearly always accepted the original surveys.

If you live in an area which is predominantly forest or bush, a survey is expensive and takes a long time. This requirement will create economic loss and eventually will make people resent tremendously attempts at metric conversion. Clearly, the provincial government blundered. It made people feel that governments do not care about people's feelings, that they will not consult people. In years to come this will be the root of tremendous antagonism. True, farmers think this is being done by the federal government, not the Saskatchewan government. The difficulty can be resolved if the minister does what he said on May 3. Answering the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand) said, as reported in Hansard for May 3, page 5226:

A decision has been made not to proclaim that section of the bill on metric conversion relating to the grain industry—

That comment concerns five statutes coming under this bill. He continued that remark by saying it would not be done "until after further consultation." He finished that part of his answer with these words:

It will not be until further consultations have been held with the grain industry, and especially the farmers.

That is a promise and a threat. In saying all this, I am thinking more of the farmers than of the heads of the grain industry who have spent several hundred thousand dollars converting their equipment and could use the new system immediately if it suits their operations. Members of parliament should think more of the plight of the farmers, because they make up 99 per cent of the people in the grain industry who could be adversely affected. We cannot consider the vested interests of the grain companies, companies which showed bad judgment in believing the representatives of the federal government who told them this law would be in force by February 1, 1977.

We do not want to harm the grain companies. At the same time, we should not proceed with metric conversion until we have removed some of the obstacles I have mentioned. One such obstacle or difficulty is the attack on the land measurement system. Mr. Speaker, we are not selling our lands on world markets. As the hon. member for Vegreville said, our land measurement system has its roots in antiquity and is part of our culture. If you think our western farmers are annoyed, just wait for the reaction of farmers in Ontario and Quebec where they use various systems of land measurement. In Quebec they measure land in the arpent and the acre. In Ontario they use many different systems of surveying. For instance, boundaries are described as running from this boulder to that oak tree, or to that bend in the river. They use leaps and bounds and jumps, and almost every measurement of which you can think.

From time to time in Ontario and rural Quebec townships set up what are known as fence viewing committees which are composed of leading citizens who settle boundary disputes between farmers. If you force the people of Ontario and Quebec to accept the metric system for measuring land not sold on world markets you will create an economic storm and eventually a political storm.

Not all metric measurements are to endure internationally. The pamphlet "The international system of units (SI), an outline of Canadian usage", published by the Canadian Standards Association, points out that seven units of metric measurement will be used a limited time only. Included among them are the nautical mile, the knot, a unit of speed measurement used at sea and in the air, the angström, the pronunciation of which escapes me but which ought to be printed in Hansard, the hectare and the are. A side note accompanying the table to which I referred reads: Although the are and hectare, by international agreement, have been shown as units to be used for a limited period of time, those units are not to be permanent parts of the international system of measurement.

What does this mean? It means that although the hectare will not be used internationally as a unit of measurement, we shall enforce it on our farmers, create a great political uproar for no reason, and force farmers to take an economic loss in connection with a measurement system nobody else will be using. As I told the minister privately, when he keeps the promise he made on May 3 he should tell officials of Saskatchewan, Alberta and other provinces contemplating metric conversion that the hectare is not to be a permanent unit of measurement. Therefore, we should do in Canada what is done in the United Kingdom and the United States. We should adhere to our traditional arpent or acre. True, final responsibility in this field rests on the provinces, not on the federal government. However, we must let the provincial governments working on metric conversion know that the hectare, part of the present metric system, will not be part of the international metric system in future.

In a moment I shall move an amendment which will bring this debate back on the rails, as it were. My proposed amendment will be consistent with the minister's promise. I say he ought to consult the farmers. We are not so greatly concerned about the heads of grain companies, and by grain companies I mean private as well as co-operative companies which are interested mainly in profit. Their interest in the farmer is secondary. We members of this federal parliament should bear in mind what is good for our farmers, their costs, their political feelings, and try to influence the provinces to eliminate hectares from provincial legislation and provincial orders in council.

It would give the minister time, without wasting the time of parliament in useless debate. When we proposed, in committee, amendments to make the clauses dealing with the grain industry permissive, the Liberal members of the committee turned them down. Naturally, if we are going to vote party or partisan on this issue we have to realize that they can force it through. However, they force us to fight like tigers to stop them. If the government really wants to get this metric conversion back on the path again, it should co-operate in trying to do it properly. The grain companies do not want the government to proclaim the legislation until the slack season in the fall, any way. I ask that we take some time in the summer and the fall to get to the farmers directly and use the occasion to explain the advantages of the metric system.

Mr. Mazankowski: Use it to call an election.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Be honest about the difficulties. Guarantee the farmers that you are not going to ask them to change the land measurement system. If the government did this, we would all take part in trying to persuade people. After several years we would get used to using tonnes instead of bushels. It would not hurt too much; it would be a mental exercise. We would have great difficulty persuading the farmers who use very accurate measurements in the spraying of their fields and use ounces per acre, the precise amount, the precise pressure and the precise speed in putting on that spray. If he does not do it accurately, he loses his crop and his whole year's living. If you shift him into millilitres per hectare, he has to do this calculation in the fields without the quiet serenity of an office with a calculator. He might make mistakes and he would have a tremendous economic loss.

All these jobs of persuasion and education at the face to face level have to be done, and the politicians should play a part. If the procedure of consultation is not followed in getting them persuaded, willingingly or at least half willingly, we are in for a terrific fight. What we in the opposition want to do is make sure that the government does not use its majority to force through legislation which, in the minds of the people, was not properly prepared. That is our purpose.

There is one thing we will not accept. That is the land measurement. It is not needed. It is uneconomic. It will raise a political storm that will add one more factor to the divisions in this country and the alienation of people toward this parliament and this government. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer:

That all the word after "That" be struck out and following substituted therefor:

"Bill C-23, an act to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 2, 6, 8 and 10 in the light of further evidence which may be heard from the grain industry, and especially the farmers."

That, in essence, is putting the minister's promise into the legislation. I conclude by pointing out as stronly as I can that this is not a matter of life and death to the nation. It was primarily an effort to assist international companies which buy and sell on world markets to work in units acceptable to the whole world. It was to increase our productivity and efficiency as part of the whole of business. I do not think it was ever designed to be an effort to attack the cultural attachments of people which go back into the centuries.

In spite of what I have been told by farmers and people in my constituency about their opposition to the use of tonnes and millilitres instead of ounces, I am prepared to go out and say that in the long run it will be simpler and better, and if they are careful and do not make mistakes they can learn it. Certainly, their children will have an easier system to work with than the Imperial system.

I think I speak for a good many people on that issue. However, I know that the antagonism toward myself and others who take that stand will be pronounced. This government has stirred the people up on this issue to such a degree that it is very difficult to talk rationally. That is because of the government's mishandling of this matter. The government did not accept my proposal during second reading debate to take out the word "hectare". They did not accept our seven or eight amendments in committee. They turned them down, with every member of the Liberal party voting against them. In spite of all this, I hope they will consider and accept this hoist until the minister completes what he has promised to do and then brings back the legislation. With the views of the farmers we can then push it forward to the degree that they will let us.

Do not force this system on the farmers. It will not help the country. We have always sold our grain on the metric system. For a hundred years we have used the system, but we have never bothered the elevator man or the man at the farm gate. Now we are asking him to be bothered, in the name of economic unity. Let us get this matter back on the rails again. All parties support the principle. Let us have all parties support the conversion, instead of trying to ram it through. My views are well known. If you turn things over to a certain type of civil servant, he is trained in only one thing, that is, to have everything minutely complete and in place. Civil servants want everything neat and tidy. Sometimes that causes those of us in the political field a lot of trouble. If the politicians did their job and spoke for the people, we could get this back on the rails.

There is a further matter. The government has welcomed into its midst a leading opponent of the metric system. Everyone across the west knows that if metric conversion is not stopped, it is evidence he has no weight in the cabinet, and he is destroyed. Maybe that is the purpose of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); I do not know. But I do know the politics of western Canada. If the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) cannot stop this metric conversion, they say the whole purpose of his entering the cabinet is nullified and all this talk about getting leading citizens in western Canada to join the Liberal Party dies because there is no trust in the implied promise of the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Crowfoot at the time of his appointment.

This is a critical matter, it is an economic matter and a matter of plain common sense.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As well as a matter of conscience.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Since the government has made this mistake in the handling of the matter, for heaven's sake let it consider this amendment seriously, accept it in the House, stop the debate and get on to other business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope the House will allow me to consider the amendment. The first part corresponds to the normal practice of asking that a bill be referred back to committee, with a special instruction to reconsider certain clauses. What concerns me are other conditions attached to the amendment: I am not sure they meet the requirements of a third reading amendment. If the House agrees, I will recognize the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and put the amendment, if need be, at a later time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to speak in support of the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I was very optimistic back on May 3 when the minister who is piloting this bill through the House indicated that he intended to have further consultation with interested parties. As recorded at page 5227 of Hansard, he said:

> The mechanism has not been decided. I assure the hon. member I shall be happy to receive suggestions from him as to how he feels this matter ought to be dealt with.

Our party's recommendation has gone forward to the minister. It is incorporated in the amendment proposed a few moments ago by my hon. friend, namely, that certain clauses of the bill be referred back to committee for consideration. Frankly, I can see no other way in which consultation can take place with the grain companies and with the farmers in the west. The farmers are extremely upset about this bill. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said that in his opinion 95 per cent of the farm population was opposed to it, specifically to the change from bushels to tonnes and from acres to hectares.

I would agree with that figure, because of all the letters I have received on the subject—and I have received many—I think only one of them indicates support for the bill. If one reads the western press, the Western Producer and some of the other papers, one finds that week after week, month after month, contributors have been sending letter after letter to the editors opposing the metric system as it relates to the farm. Initially, members opposite said that the majority of the farm population was in favour of the bill. I recall the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) saying that all his farmers were in favour—

Mr. Goodale: I said "farm organizations".

Mr. Neil: I would have to look up Hansard and reread what the hon. member said, but my recollection is that he said "the majority of my farmers". It makes sense to me, if there is such a backlash, that a committee of the House of Commons should reconsider the matter. After all, that is the logical forum to hear evidence from the interested parties. If the minister would look back through the committee hearings held in Ottawa when the bill was before the finance committee, he would find it was the farm organizations and the grain trade which were represented. The only two individuals who attended representing the farmer were from the Association of Rural Municipalities and the Association of Urban Municipalities, and their reading was that the majority of the farmers were opposed to this bill.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

If the clauses to which objection is taken are not referred back to the committee for consideration, what other procedure could be followed? Does the minister feel he could send around western Canada a group from the metric conversion committee to meet with the farmers? I suggest that if he did that he would be sending out a group of biased individuals who have only one thought in mind, and that is to force their point of view upon the farmers. I presume that Mr. Earl Baxter might be a member of such a group. It was with interest that I read a news report in the Western Producer of May 26 about a meeting held in Winnipeg at which Mr. Baxter was present. An account in that paper of an interview with him reads in part as follows:

> He said in an interview the $300,000 figure is what industry spokesmen estimate they have spent preparing for the metric conversion they thought would happen last February 1.

Later in the report Mr. Baxter is quoted as saying that in his view the legislation should have been introduced early. He said:

> I don't know why the government decided to wait so long with it.

That is the attitude of the civil servants. He says that politicians in Ottawa are playing politics. I should like to point out that we on this side are not playing politics. What we are doing is attempting to express the views of 90 per cent of our constituents. We are speaking here in the House of Commons on behalf of our constituents. If the members on the government side read the correspondence they are getting from the farmers of western Canada, they will understand that the farmers do not accept this bill. Mr. Baxter will probably be one of those appointed, if the amendment is not accepted, to go out to western Canada to meet the farmers. But he is biased. He has made up his mind. He is accusing parliamentarians of playing politics. He does not understand the democratic system. To say that because members of parliament debate a bill they are playing politics is a disgraceful statement for a member of the civil service of this country to make.

I will not prolong my remarks, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to say this. An attempt has been made by people such as Mr. Baxter and some members of the grain trade to give the impression that because this bill has not been passed it has cost the grain trade and the grain companies money. For many years we have sold grain on the international market using the metric system. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board, during the time that the bill was before the committee and subsequent to the amendments put forth by this party asking for a dual system, issued a news release, a copy of which I have before me. It is undated, but basically it states that the minister has instructed the board to use a dual system for permit books and quotas when making announcements, and in every other facet of the trade. Those instructions were issued without legislation having to be passed. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if you talk to a farmer or you visit an elevator and examine a permit book which was issued last fall, several months before this legislation was introduced in the House, you would find that the permit book records the size of fields in both acres and hectares. Obviously, the minister did not feel that it required legislation to make that change in the Wheat Board documents. As I say, this release was issued after the bill went to committee, but before it had passed.

I should like to tell the grain companies that it does not require any legislation for them to record and to deal with grain in the metric system from the elevator to the point of export. There is no law preventing use of the metric system. When a farmer delivers his load of grain to the elevator, it is a simple matter for the elevator agent to issue a cash purchase ticket or a storage ticket in both bushels and tonnes. That is perfectly legitimate. From that point on the grain company can do all its recording in the metric system. So when news announcements and public statements are made to the effect that the delay in the passage of this bill has prevented the grain trade from converting to the metric system and has cost them money, that is a pack of nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

I want to close by addressing some remarks to the minister. I am sure that the volume of correspondence which he has received from farmers, as well as the representations made to him by members on this side of the House, are an indication to him that the western farmer is not prepared to accept this bill, particularly the change from acres to hectares. In fairness—I know the minister is fair—I am sure he will accept the motion presented a few moments ago by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain to enable the finance committee to hear representations from the farmers to confirm what their letters have said and what we on this side of the House have told the minister. Indeed, I do not think the matter needs confirmation; the minister has himself received sufficient letters on the subject, and possibly the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) has put to him very strongly the feelings of the western farmers.

This is not a political matter, Mr. Speaker, but a matter that affects every farmer in western Canada and, indirectly, every owner or potential owner of land in Canada. I ask the House to set politics aside, to accept this amendment, to refer the bill back to committee and to let us for once bring forth legislation which the majority of the people of Canada want.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to speak on this piece of legislation once again, first of all to support the amendment moved by my good friend and colleague for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). I hope Your Honour will, in your deliberations, see fit to find the amendment in order. I think it is fair to say that, if there is some slight modification of wording required, this would be quite acceptable in order that we may implement the principal purpose of the motion.

I am also compelled to rise and speak to this legislation once again in view of the statements of the minister in the House since this bill has moved into third reading. The minister indicated that he has some slight reservations about certain sections of the legislation, sections which, I might add, we in this party have vigorously opposed on behalf of the farmers of western Canada. The minister has also said he is receptive to suggestions from the opposition regarding how he might engage in those consultations which he spoke of when he answered my question in the House on May 3. If I may quote precisely what the minister said, I had asked him what mechanism he had in mind for ensuring that the views of the producers would be taken into consideration, and as reported at page 5227 of Hansard he replied:

—the exact mechanism has not yet been decided. I assure the hon. member opposite that I will be happy to receive suggestions from him on how he feels this matter ought to be dealt with.

The amendment we have proposed really answers that request. We have taken a position wherein we presented to the minister a mechanism in which he may be able to engage in the consultations he referred to. I hope the minister will not rely upon the members of the metric commission, the bureaucrats, to engage in the kind of consultation he refers to with western producers. As the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) pointed out, these people have a rather biased and bent view on this particular issue. The farmers of western Canada would rather be dealing with elected representatives than paid representatives of the metric commission.

My second purpose in rising to speak on this legislation once again is the fact that the opposition to the provisions we have fought has not lessened. In fact, it has intensified. We have received countless numbers of letters and representations from producers who are concerned and who want to retain, particularly, the acre. They see absolutely no justification for changing the acre to hectare. Quite frankly, they do not see much reason in changing from bushels to tonnes, but the feeling is not quite as strong as it is in the case of acres to hectares. The farmers do not sell their land in the international market, and it will not make one iota of difference as to the amount of grain we sell. It will not involve any greater or lesser convenience or inconvenience on the part of the grain trade whether the producer is producing his grain by acres or hectares. It does make a tremendous amount of difference to the producers.

The opposition is widespread. While there was a growing amount of support for the whole question of metric conversion in western Canada because of the attitude of the government in this particular issue the support for a total metric conversion program has somewhat diminished. I am in the process of conducting a survey on a number of important issues in my riding. These are issues which affect the people in my riding. I have asked the question whether or not they favour the metric conversion system as a whole. Over 65 per cent said no. On the question of the conversion of acres to hectares, 74.3 per cent are opposed to the conversion, and 69 per cent are opposed to the conversion from bushels to tonnes.

I do not apologize for recording my constituents' feelings in this chamber. For anyone to suggest we are playing politics when we are telegraphing the feelings of our constituents is absolute and utter nonsense. I know the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) speaks on behalf of his constituents. He is quite outspoken at times on certain issues, even if it means he has to take a position contrary to that of the government. I see no reason for him to engage in the sort of triviality that he engaged in during the crossfire which took place earlier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) on a point of order.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether this is a question of privilege or a point of order. The hon. member should not have the impression, because of an interjection on my part, that I was suggesting hon. members on the opposite side were playing politics with this bill. The hon. member mentioned that a public servant had said that and I actually said that it was a terrible thing to say. The hon. member smiled when I said that, and I smiled back. I did not say hon. members opposite were playing politics with this bill.

Mr. Goodale: Hansard should record the smile.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the hon. member is still a gentleman. I certainly appreciate the fact that he has clarified that issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: This legislation has been referred to as metric conversion. It would be more fashionable to refer to it as metric coercion. We have a situation in which the process of conversion has taken place without legislation. That is unfortunate. This is what has confused many people affected by the process of conversion. Many people in the grain trade, particularly elevator agents and producers, can see no reason for proceeding with such indecent haste with conversion in the grain industry when our major trading partner to the south was not embarking thereon in tandem.

As reported in the Friday, June 3, 1977, edition of the Globe and Mail, Mr. MacMillan, chairman of the Canada Grains Council, said the following:

> Businesswise, there were no advantages for the grain industry to change to metric—it was just an expense item. We have many of our transactions with the United States where they are still dealing in bushels. But the government pushed us into the new system ahead of the U.S. and then backed away so easily. This was very disappointing and it has left feelings running high in western Canada.

That has been the thrust of our argument all along. I have it on absolute authority that the United States is not going to proceed with the conversion of the acre to the hectare. The bill was presented as a fait accompli. There was an attempt to rush the bill through, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out. The minister tried to push this bill through on December 21. The fact of the matter is that we know this particular piece of legislation was drafted in February, 1976. It was not introduced in the House of Commons for first reading until November 22, and then it was called for debate and second reading on December 21 late in the evening. There was a request to sit extended hours in order to pass the bill through all stages, but many of us had comments to make on the measure. It did not appear again until January 26. The legislation was to become law on February 1. That was not sufficient time adequately to explore all the implications of this particular piece of legislation.

The government, and indeed this parliament, has not served the best interests of the farmers of Canada in this piece of legislation. Farm organizations have not served their memberships well. A vast majority of the producers in western Canada do not support the major provisions of this bill, namely, metric conversion in respect of the grain trade. Thus, their wishes have been ignored. In short, I should like to say, on the part of the producers, that they have been ignored by the government and, their own organizations, and parliament has been unable to alter the direction in which the government is proceeding on this measure. There is a feeling of mistrust and disappointment in the minds of the producers of western Canada simply because they have been ignored. It is in that connection we see diminishing confidence in this institution. Many times people who are being affected by legislation are not listened to and their views are not taken into consideration. This is causing tremendous erosion of public confidence in this place. Surely it is the duty of members who are elected to the House to reflect the views of their constituents. That is what we are doing on this occasion.

As I have pointed out, the farm organizations, in my opinion, have not served the best interests of the producers of western Canada, and I regret that. In a weekly paper entitled Alberta Farm Life of Saturday, March 5, the Unifarm organization was seeking direction from Alberta farmers in an effort to assess the impact of metric conversion on the agricultural industry. This bill was supposed to have been law on February 1. This clearly shows that they did not engage in any real and active consultation with their membership prior to its intended implementation. I could quote letters that I have received from a number of farm unions and grain company locals. For example, I have a letter here from Two Hills district Unifarm No. 65-42 which reads:

> At this convention one resolution was made and passed unanimously. As secretary I was asked to pass this resolution on to you. The resolution reads as follows:
> "We are opposed to the metric system, especially pertaining to agricultural production. We would like the bushel, acre, and the mile retained.
> Yours truly,
> Ed. Sokalski

I have another letter here from the Unifarm district No. 64-22 which reads:

> It was brought to our attention that you are not in favour of adopting the metric system in the grain trades. I am writing to you on behalf of local and neighbouring farmers that we full-heartedly support your stance in that respect. We believe that adoption of the metric system will do nothing more than cause great and agonizing confusion to the agricultural industry and even more so to farmers in general.

I have a letter here from a local of the United Grain Growers which reads:

At the 1977 annual meeting of Kitscoty UGG local a motion was passed that we are against the metric conversion and that we write you and Mr. Runciman in this regard.

Yours truly,

Ernest Lang

Another member of the National Farmers' Union, in a letter to the editor in the Two Hills County Star of Wednesday, February 9, 1977, had this to say:

The acre, the bushel, the mile, is Canada's culture, it is Canada's way of life, it is just as important to Canada as bilingualism, let us keep it that way.

Metro Shepansky

He went on to say:

There isn't one farmer in the country who wants to convert to metric, or was asked if he wants to go metric. The metric conversion is just being shoved down his throat. The railways do not want it and will not accept it now. The elevator scale beams which are in pounds, have not been replaced by metric scale beams, and may never be replaced in some elevators. A farmer brings a load of grain to the elevator which is weighed in pounds, then has it converted to tonnes, which is 2204.622 lbs. or 1000 kilograms in order to get paid, the elevator agent has to convert it back to pounds when he loads cars because the railways are not going into metric conversion.

There will be much confusion and distrust, because people do not know the metric system. Why not leave the farmer continue to use "acres", "bushels", and "miles"?

The County of Vermilion River, supported unanimously by the council, sent a wire to me which I want to place on the record. It reads:

Please be advised of the passage of the following resolution by the council of the county Vermilion River No. 24 at a meeting held on February 10, 1977:

Whereas the producers of cereal crops in western Canada have not been consulted to a sufficient degree and thus have not been enabled to express constructive views on the subject of the advisability of converting from the "acre" to the "hectare" in describing the area of prairie farmland;

And whereas the system of describing the area of the vast stetches of farmland in the prairie region of western Canada is somewhat unique, easily understood by those in and being trained for the agricultural industry and is wholly satisfactory to them;

And whereas the definition of an "acre" as used in western Canadian agriculture has no effect on either international suppliers to the industry or the customers for its product;

And whereas the complexity of the industry is so great the balance between the application rates for chemicals commonly used in the industry and the successful production of cereal grains is critical, the penalty for mistakes so great in the loss of food production for an entire twelve months period and the effect of such loss on world population so drastic that human manipulations not even remotely associated with food production should not be permitted to jeopardize the output of even one tonne of grain;

Now therefore be it resolved that the council of the county of Vermilion No. 24 expresses in a most emphatic and sincere manner its opposition to the implementation of the program to convert the "acre" to the "hectare" in describing the area of agricultural land in the prairie region of western Canada.

We have received countless numbers of representations from individuals, from farm union locals, from counties and municipalities. From the amendment that was placed before the House this morning by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) it can be clearly seen that we in this party have adopted a practical and reasonable approach to this problem. Quite frankly, I think it is no surprise to members on the other side of the House that we sincerely want to see the acre retained and we see aboslutely no reason for the conversion of the acre to the hectare under the provisions of this legislation.

I might say that I detected some support on the Liberal side during the committee meetings, particularly among urban members. I think some of them were sincerely trying to work out a reasonable solution, but unfortunately farm organizations lost touch with their own supporters, their own memberships and the agricultural community and came out very strongly in favour of the conversion process. However, I think they have now found that they have not reflected the views of the producers, those who will be affected.

We have heard in this debate much about the importance of adopting a pure metric system. We all know that other countries too, are engaged in the conversion process, some of them with a greater or lesser degree of success. But it should be noted that in Great Britain, because of the difficulty they have had in selling the metric conversion program, they have adopted a flexibility that is necessary in order to sell the program. In the Sunday Telegraph of November 7, in an article entitled "Metrication Muzzled and Delayed" we are told:

—a number of changes have been made to the bill as it fought its way through House committees. In order to ensure its progress, the British government has conceded one major point: It has agreed that the mile, the inch, the pint and the gallon will be preserved and exempted from statutory metrication.

I think it is fair to say that other countries have adopted a similar stance. We hear from the minister about the progress that is being made in the United States. I am not sure that they will adopt a totally pure metric system either. In a letter that I have received from Congressman Don Fuqua, dated February 7, 1977, he said:

In neither of these cases has it been found advantageous to switch to the English system in the past, and there are not now any plans to switch those measurements or any land measurements elsewhere in the United States to metric measurements.

He was referring to the land system measurement in Louisiana which still employs the French system, and to the California land measure which employs the Spanish system. He indicated that even at this point in time there has not been total acceptance of the Imperial measurement in that great country. The letter is written on stationery of the committee on science and technology of the U.S. House of Representatives. He goes on to say:

In regard to possible changeover to the metric system by the board of trade in Chicago, and the possible effect on grain and other commodity trades, there are, to the best of my knowledge, no plans in existence at this time for a changeover.

There has been a fair amount of debate about final payments and the pricing structure of the Canadian Wheat Board. Forrest Hetland, one of the commissioners, said that his best advice to farmers is that if they want to know price trends, they should follow the price card of the Canadian Wheat Board and the prices set on the Chicago, Kansas and Minneapolis futures markets; that the futures markets are guides for world prices of wheat, and that reality forces the board's prices to bear a close relationship to these prices. What he was really doing was this: while we are transferring to the metric system of measurement and pricing, he was asking farmers to compare prices here with prices in the United States which is going to maintain the Imperial system. What a bunch of nonsense and confusion! It is unnecessary. If we are going to make the changeover, I think it is important that we be co-ordinated and synchronized with our major trading partners. The government has completely and totally ignored that.

I could quote many more letters. Before I conclude I must say that I take exception to a document called "Metric Monitor". Its reporting of the proceedings of the standing committee were certainly biased and slanted with one view in mind. It recorded every point of view which was in support of metric conversion. It certainly did not give a balanced reporting of the opposition point of view and the point of view of other hon. members who expressed reservations. Everything in the "Metric Monitor" is totally biased and I think it is unfair that we as taxpayers are paying for it. The "Metric Monitor" has not given the Canadian people an accurate reflection of the proceedings in the committee which considered this bill. I think that is very unfortunate.

That is the kind of thing we will have if the minister allows bureaucrats to engage in this kind of consultative process. The minister says he wants consultation. We have provided an avenue so that he may proceed that way. We believe the consultation should be with elected members of parliament, and not with bureaucrats. We believe the committee should travel and that it should hear any and all available evidence. Any producer or any group should be able to come before that committee and make his or their position known. Then, and only then, will the minister have a clear record of the views of the grassroots producers, those who will be affected by this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before I call on the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) I would like to make my decision on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton).

I still feel that I should resist the amendment in its present form. The latter part of the amendment limits the instruction to the committee. The hon. member proposes that this bill be referred back to the committee for the purpose of reconsidering clauses 2, 6, 8 and 10 in the light of further evidence. It is that portion which worries me a little.

I am not very satisfied with the precedents I have found, but in recent years, on occasions like this, the Chair has had the tendency to resist this kind of limiting instruction. I do not think it renders a service to the committee to suggest that it get the bill back for the purpose of hearing evidence only from the grain industry and especially farmers. This might leave the impression with the committee that other witnesses might not be welcome or might not be included in the instructions of the House. Without really having good precedents to back up my decision, that alone should be a good reason for it.

Citation 418 of Beauchesne's says, in effect, that there are things we can do more easily at second reading than at third reading. That does not really touch on this point particularly, but it might be worth while to read the citation to the House. It is found at page 288 of Beauchesne's. Beginning on the sixth line, the citation reads as follows:

> On the second reading of a bill, an amendment may be moved expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution, or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees or commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or the opinion of judges. This cannot be done on the third reading because it is not directly connected with any provision of the bill.

That does not really go to the point I want to make, but I feel that the way the amendment is worded it is half a recommittal amendment and half a reasoned amendment. I find it difficult to accept that in the same amendment. We perhaps tend, by this limitation, to indicate a reason why we tend to support a motion to prevent the third reading of a bill by implying that it might not correspond with the wishes of a special group of people, the grain industry or farmers, and I would consider that more on the side of a reasoned amendment.

This amendment would refer the bill back to the committee with a specific instruction to reconsider clauses 2, 6 and 8, and 10, and there is also a limitation. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) at the outset of his remarks indicated that hon. members who support the amendment might accept the suggestion of the Chair to modify it, with the unanimous consent of the House, by eliminating all the words after "and 10", which does not preclude any hon. member speaking in favour of the amendment from saying whatever he wishes and repeating what has been taken out of the amendment.

If it is satisfactory to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and if there is unanimous consent, I would be prepared to accept the amendment in this limited form.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your ruling. We are quite prepared to cut off my amendment after the number 10, but I wonder if the Chair would object to putting in the word "thereof", following the pattern of a precedent on January 26, 1976. Whatever the word "thereof" means, it seems to make the motion sound very good.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree thereto.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I thought for a minute that the minister was going to agree to the amendment, but then I saw him ready to jump to his feet. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was speaking, I could see that he was capturing the heart of the minister. It was a tremendous speech which outlined the opinions and wishes of farmers in western Canada.

During second reading of the bill I was amazed that the minister did not accept the reasoned amendments of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) who suggested that because conversion to the metric system is a painful process there should be a dual system for a period to allow the western farmer to get used to metric. We already have cans and boxes labelled in two languages, so it would not seem much of a problem to have them labelled in two forms of measurement as well until farmers converted to the metric system. The government's rejection of that suggestion reflected its inflexible approach to conversion. We hope they will look more seriously at the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

The minister decided that rather than accept the amendments, certain clauses of the bill would not be proclaimed until the farmers had been consulted again. I see this as an admission that the metric commission did not consult all the farmers of western Canada in the first instance, but accepted the views of a few farm leaders as being the general view. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) mentioned that he felt the farm organizations had not represented the wishes of their memberships in the way they should, and now the farmers are approaching those organizations saying they are opposed to metric conversion and that the organizations misrepresented them. The only option left to us was to have the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain move an amendment to have clauses 2, 6, 8 and 10 reinstated in the bill so that farmers and farm organizations can be called before the committee again to ensure there is adequate consultation with the people affected.

We should not be asked to accept the promise of the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand) that parts of the bill will not be proclaimed if we pass it. I think that is a lot to ask. The need for consultation is very clear. It became evident during committee hearings that the government had done little to ascertain the feelings of producer groups, despite the fact that the mandate of the metric commission in the first instance stated that the benefits of conversion to the metric system should be achieved at minimal cost and, second, that conversion to the metric system as a whole should be effected to the best advantage to Canada. It has been stated very clearly today that we have no objection to conversion as far as international trade is concerned. Many companies in this country and the United States have already converted. There seems to be no advantage to Canada to convert the acre and the mile, however, as these are part of our culture and the system we grew up with.

Consultation should not consist of post facto information sessions wherein the government instructs farmers on the benefits of metrication. Consultation is, by definition, a two-way process—a give and take dialogue whereby mutually acceptable solutions are arrived at. I do not think the government has the slightest intention of establishing this kind of constructive dialogue.

The government continually turned a deaf ear to any arguments for duality made by members in committee. The minister's recent commitment to meet groups which will be affected by any Wheat Board changes obliges him at least to listen to the arguments in favour of retaining the terms "acre" and "bushel". I think he will be astounded at the intensity of feeling in the prairies and the intensity of the argument western farmers will offer for retention of these two terms.

I should like to offer the government a taste of some of the reactions I have received from farmers in my constituency concerning the change to the metric system. Recently I sent a questionnaire to constituents and received a large return, chiefly from rural areas. The following comments were pretty standard: "Poor idea and too costly, conditions being such as they are. We need metric like a cat needs ten tails. It costs millions and confuses millions. It is the worst thing that could happen to agriculture. It will be a financial disaster to many persons. The movement to tonnes and hectares is to much". I could go on and on Mr. Speaker, but this is the gist of the replies I received. Farmers are not in favour of changing to the metric system of measurement at the present time. These people are angry that their opinions have been ignored, and they are bitter at the federal government's insensitivity to their special problems.

I do not understand the logic of arguments for wholesale conversion to the metric systems. It seems to boil down to consistency for consistency's sake. Surely it is time we moved beyond this closed-mind approach. One of the major principles of democratic governments is that they are responsive to the wishes of the people who elected them to govern. In this case the government seems a little slow to acknowledge the wishes of the people. All we are doing here is providing them with time to consult the people again. I know the minister is scratching his head, and I believe he is serious about attempting to meet these requirements.

The government of the United Kingdom should serve as a good example. It made major concessions to groups which sought the same thing western farmers are seeking, and agreed that the mile, the inch, the pint and the gallon would be exempt from statutory metrication. The governments of Sweden and the government of the United States have also indicated their willingness to have a mixed system of measurement in certain areas. If other nations can demonstrate this kind of flexibility, why not the government of Canada?

Judging by the outcry from farmers in my constituency the need to retain the acre is evident. These men and women are very upset about the change from acres to hectares. Since the first day on their land they have dealt in terms of acres, measured their pesticides, bought their seed and sown their crops all with reference to the unit of the acre. Now they are being asked to make their calculations in terms of hectares.

The farmers of this country are already in a precarious position. The spiralling cost of almost all major farm inputs, combined with inflation in other sectors, means the farmer is involved in a continual struggle to make ends meet. He cannot afford the energy, time or expense needed to learn a new system which offers him no tangible benefits. The metric system will not make his land more productive, nor his cattle healthier, nor gain him a single extra dollar on market day. Is it any wonder he is resentful?

In previous debates the government attempted to slough off the concern of my colleagues about the effect the proposed change from acres to hectares will have on the land titles system in western Canada. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain dealt with some of those effects. It has been argued that provincial and municipal officials will not necessarily need to change their system of land measurement, to keep in tune with Wheat Board changes. However, such changes are already discussed in provincial legislatures.

I agree with my colleague for Vegreville who said during the committee hearings on this bill that if a farmer will have to use hectares in his quota allocations and in his dealings with the Canadian Wheat Board, it only follows suit that the municipalities and the countries will use the same measurement to be consistent. I say that the cost of such changes will be enormous, and the end results extremely confusing. As land is sold, new titles will have to be drawn up in terms of hectares. A patchwork system of land registry will be the outcome, some parcels of land being measured in acres and others in hectares. This will lead to unnecessary confusion.

The grid system of land measurement, with its sections, square miles and acres has served us well for many years. It is a simple system which all of us in western Canada understand. We all know our roads are laid out in distances of one mile by two miles, that each square mile encompasses 640 acres and each township encompasses 36 sections. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) during the second reading debate discussed the origin of this system of land measurements. The benefits of its simplicity have been apparent over the years. Its worth has been shown time and again. I might add that the western land titles system is the envy of a number of other Canadian provinces—indeed, of some other countries.

It would be foolhardy if the government, for the sake of consistency, were to replace a tried and trusted system with one which bears no relationship to the existing method of land registry. What are the benefits of the proposed change? I am having a hard time discovering what benefits are to be gained from such a system of land measurement as the government proposes.

We should consider the very idea of change most seriously. Before we cast out old methods and introduce new ones we should evaluate carefully the costs and benefits involved and ask ourselves: What price are we paying for this change? True, in much of the history of the western world it has been held that change is inherently good in and of itself. Today we are re-examining this idea, calling it in question. Environmentalists have argued that the ecological costs of some industrial innovations are prohibitive. Educators have begun to discard so-called new teaching methods and are reverting to the old, tried and true system.

That the new system is a failure is demonstrated by the fact that today some students can hardly read or write even when they seek to enter university. We now know that hasty, ill-advised change can hinder, rather than hasten, progress. That is why I urge the government to accept the amendment proposed today by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and thereby do the Canadian people a great service.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, since I was unable to participate in the debate on second reading by reason of attendance at committee meetings, I am particularly pleased to have the opportunity to speak on third reading of this bill. As hon. members know, the constraints of committee attendance sometimes make it impossible for members to participate in debates in this House.

Since first introducing this legislation the government has paused, has delayed, as it were. That delay has been to the good for it has enabled grain producers, especially those in western Canada, to let their members of parliament know their gut reaction to this bill. I have been made aware of the reaction of constituents as a result of correspondence and personal visits. I point out that nearly all this reaction became evident after the second reading debate, after news of these changes had become known to constituents and to the shirt-sleeved grain farmers of western Canada.

May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

REASON FOR FAILURE OF COPIES OF TORONTO "SUN" TO APPEAR IN OTTAWA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move the following motion seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the government advise the House of the whereabouts of 700 copies of the Toronto Sun dated June 9, 1977, placed on an Air Canada flight to Ottawa early this morning, and, in particular whether or not anyone in the government or in the Liberal Party, acting on behalf of the government had anything to do with this paper not appearing on Ottawa newstands, and, finally, whether or not the reason was that the newspaper contained an article which might be embarrassing to the Liberal Party and damaging to its campaign director, Senator Keith Davey.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: No!

An hon. Member: Cover up!

CONFEDERATION

REQUEST THAT THE ALLEGED QUARREL OVER ACCOUNTING WITH QUEBEC COME TO AN END—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that some federal ministers, especially the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) have launched a real campaign on the advantages of Confederation for Quebec in spite of the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the effect that his government would not quarrel over figures; considering that those ministers are making a disgraceful show by throwing figures at each other like children throwing stones and as such behaviour is inconsistent with the dignity and seriousness which the people expect from their representatives, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House ask ministers of the Crown to refrain immediately from quarrelling about figures with the Quebec government, since this quarrel, far from contributing to the englightenment of the debate, only reflects on the credibility and dignity of the people's representatives.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF ALLEGATION OF POOR DEPLOYMENT OF ICEBREAKERS AROUND NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the serious charges, in essence of negligence and maladministration, made by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who is also Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, against the Ministry of Transport in respect of icebreaker services off the east coast of Canada and the charge that the sinking of the William Carson could have been prevented if there were better deployment of icebreakers off Newfoundland and Labrador, that the present deployment is "scandalous" and that there is only one icebreaker operating off Newfoundland, with one on lease and four or five lying idle in Dartmouth, I therefore wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That these charges be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for examination of the hon. member and the Minister of Transport and for investigation and report back to the House as to the validity or otherwise of the charges.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF EARLY AGREEMENT WITH JAPAN ON EXPORT OF URANIUM AND NUCLEAR REACTORS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the minister of external affairs. I should like to commence by thanking the minister for agreeing to postpone his statement on nuclear safeguards in general at the specific request of our party; I appreciate that very much. There are one or two matters I should like to raise which may perhaps be pertinent because of their timing.

First of all, I understand the minister is against starting negotiations with Japan, and I would like to ask him whether it is probable that Canada will reach some understanding with Japan about nuclear exports of uranium and reactors, either formally or informally, before the Group of Seven report promised after the summit meetings in London comes down?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to return the compliment by thanking the hon. member for giving me notice. The position is that I would hope we can make progress at the Vancouver meetings next Monday with Japan. The bilateral agreements are not necessarily hinged on the results of the Group of Seven study. The problems between our two points of view have been identified. Perhaps the most substantive one at the moment is the question of double labelling; that is to say, when supplies from Canada go into the United States, it is the Canadian position that they remain under Canadian control, and also through the full life and into the Japanese cycle. The Japanese are maintaining that the Canadian regulations should not go that far, but it is possible that in the talks next week we will arrive at some mutual agreement which will enable us to resume shipments.

POSSIBILITY OF RESUMPTION OF SALES OF SUPPLIES TO INDIA FOR NUCLEAR REACTOR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Again in relation to the immediacy of these negotiations, I understand that the Prime Minister is now talking to the prime minister of India about Canada's role in exporting to that country. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what is the likelihood of the resumption of Canada's dealing with India in the field of nuclear supplies, given the fact that we had an unfortunate experience with that country in the past.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the likelihood of an immediate resumption is slight if one is speaking in terms of months. However, prior to the Prime Minister's leaving for London we were encouraged by some of the statements which had been made by the new administration in India. It is these statements on which the Prime Minister is seeking additional clarification. I do not think it is an improper disclosure to say that the Prime Minister will obviously be urging that the Indian government adopt the Canadian policy, namely that of full scope safeguards. I have not as yet heard anything from London on the outcome of what I gather were quite preliminary discussions yesterday, but I understand that more substantive talks between the two prime ministers will take place this weekend.

ENERGY

ALLEGED PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN INTERNATIONAL URANIUM PRICE-FIXING CARTEL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it relates to the statement made last week by the president of Gulf Oil Corporation that he had been ordered by the government to participate in an international uranium price-fixing cartel which operated between 1972 and 1975. In view of the federal grand jury investigations into anti-trust allegations involving the Canadian government, the congressional investigations and the $2.5 billion worth of litigation carried on by Westinghouse in the United States, will the minister tell the House what action the government is taking to resolve this situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I will answer that question because it affects certain aspects of the administration of my department. There is no secret about the fact that Canada was engaged in a producers group or producers club aimed at trying to provide a stability of price for uranium, and indeed the survival of certain communities in Canada. The question which has been highlighted by the president of Gulf in a recent statement is that the Canadian subsidiary passed information to the United States parent corporation and that some of that information may be made public in the United States. It is confidential information originating from government sources. It is something I regret very much, and we took action to prevent it happening.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF CONTROLS ON OWNERSHIPS OF URANIUM MINES AND FACILITIES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that this answer of the minister is completely contradictory to an earlier answer he made in which he denied the existence of any arrangements whatsoever.

I want to ask the minister, in light of the problem of extraterritoriality facing the uranium industry, when the government intends to bring forward the controls on foreign ownership of Canadian uranium which have been promised for so long? The former minister, the Hon. J. J. Greene, made a statement of policy in 1970, but there has been no indication of legislation being brought forth to put into place a precise policy respecting the ownership of uranium mines and facilities in Canada.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to bring it forth in this current session. As the hon. member knows, there is clearly no possibility of introducing such legislation and getting it through before this session rises. As a consequence, therefore, I would expect that we would have to wait until the next session to introduce the legislation. I hope to have the co-operation of the House to proceed expeditiously.

ALLEGED PRICE-FIXING ARRANGEMENT FOR SALE OF URANIUM—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the statement which has just been made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the effect that there has been in place a price arrangement with respect to the sale of uranium, I wonder whether the minister could advise the House as to whether his department has investigated this arrangement; whether they are in a position to come forward with a report as to whether this particular activity contravenes any Canadian regulation or legislation with respect to price fixing; and whether there will be a statement made to clarify this situation because of the image of our country with foreign customers and also with respect to the impact on consumers in Canada?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the director of investigations conducts frequent inquiries into various things and has frequently reviewed different sectors of industry. As the hon. member is well aware, the uranium industry has been the subject of an action in the United States asserting that there have been combinations of price-fixing. Needless to say, our department is most interested in the subject. I cannot offer the hon. member any comment at this time; but I will take notice of it and bring the matter to the attention of the director of investigations and report to him.

ALLEGED ILLEGAL BUGGING OF HOTEL ROOMS OF EDMONTON POLICE OFFICERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and concerns the evidence which was given before Mr. Justice Laycraft in Edmonton on June 7, that RCMP officers had illegally bugged the hotel rooms of three Edmonton city police officers. I wonder if the Solicitor General could advise the House as to whether he has conducted an inquiry into that most serious allegation which was made in front of Mr. Justice Laycraft, an Edmonton judge, and if so, could he advise whether charges will be laid or whether an offence took place?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have read the reports of the evidence given before Mr. Justice Laycraft during the inquiry in Alberta. One RCMP corporal gave evidence that he had second hand information to the effect that the room had been bugged. This matter was looked into by the top management of the RCMP. The deputy commissioner of RCMP was delegated by the commissioner of the force to investigate the matter fully and as a result of his investigation it was found that no acts of bugging in connection with the investigation which the hon. member mentioned have occurred. However, the matter, as I understand it, is being investigated by the royal commission inquiry into the Royal American Road Shows in Alberta, and if any evidence comes to light of illegal bugging, immediate action will be taken.

INVESTIGATION OF ROYAL AMERICAN ROAD SHOWS—REFUSAL TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS ON GROUNDS OF NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): My information—I hope the Solicitor General will correct me if I am wrong—is that certain evidence was not introduced at that hearing because of a certificate that it involved questions of national security. Could the Solicitor General advise me if my information is correct and, if it is, what was the matter of national security that the Solicitor General was seeking to protect?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet been advised as to whether the affidavit to which I subscribed has yet been produced in the court. There was a request for documents from me which related to matters looked into by the security service of the RCMP which have absolutely nothing to do whatsoever with the case of the Royal American Road Shows. The affidavit was subscribed to by me on grounds of national security as I am authorized to do under section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act.

BREAK-IN AT PRAXIS CORPORATION—POSSIBILITY OF CHARGES BEING LAID AS RESULT OF RETENTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): In the case of the Praxis break-in in Toronto the documents that were obtained by the RCMP at that time were held for a period of some years before being made available to their rightful owners, or the Toronto police for that matter. Would the Solicitor General advise the House whether he has received any opinion from the law officers of the Crown as to whether an offence took place in terms of receiving stolen property in view of the fact the force itself retained those documents? Coming into their possession, they would appear to have the legitimate right to examine the information in terms of their information gathering responsibility. Has any advice been given to the Solicitor General that a crime took place because of the failure to return the property to Praxis Corporation, and will charges follow?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): I have not received an opinion from the law officers of the Crown to the effect that a crime has been committed. I immediately consulted the law officers of the Crown following knowledge of the fact that some of these documents were still in the possession of the RCMP. The advice I received from the Department of Justice at that time was that the documents ought to be turned over to the Metropolitan Toronto Police department immediately, which was done. That department had the responsibility of investigating the question of a possible break-in and the matter of the retention of documents, and I understand that the Metropolitan Toronto Police department has now concluded its investigation, has had the opinion of a Crown attorney in the department of the provincial attorney general of Ontario to the effect that there was no criminal act involved in the retention of the documents.

FINANCE

REASON FOR PROSPERITY OF BANKS IN VIEW OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND INCREASE IN NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

According to the official Gazette of Canada, within the five-month period between October 31, 1976 and March 31, 1977, chartered banks' assets went up from $121 billion to $133 billion, an increase of $12 billion over the previous year. Can the Minister of Finance explain why chartered banks in this country are so prosperous while Canada's debts are increasing and unemployment is so disastrous?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a relation between both facts.

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—DATE OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General arising out of the line of questions involving the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, specifically with respect to L'Agence de Presse Libre matter. I understand that the sentencing of the three police officers in question, including one from the RCMP, will be delayed now until June 16. Would the minister be prepared to confirm this, and will he also be prepared to confirm that immediately following that event he will be making a statement in the House giving a full disclosure, as was undertaken by the Prime Minister and indeed the minister himself?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, on both counts. I have been informed by the attorneys of the Department of Justice that the trial judge in Montreal heard the arguments of the defence attorneys and the Crown attorneys this morning in Montreal and decided to postpone handing down the sentence until June 16. It will be my intention to make a statement in the House on June 17, the day following the handing down of the sentence.

REASON FOR FAILURE OF FORMER MINISTER TO BE INFORMED OF PLANS FOR VIOLENT DEMONSTRATION OF ANNIVERSARY OF 1970 CRISIS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the news report also indicates that counsel at the hearing today representing Chief Superintendent Donald Cobb said that the special anti-terrorist squad had received information that a violent celebration of the second anniversary of the 1970 crisis was planned by FLQ members and that that anti-terrorist squad had received that information some five months earlier. I emphasize the fact that it was five months earlier. If this is true—and I think the statement should cover that—would the minister make some special inquiries to ascertain how this information which was in the hands of the RCMP some five months earlier could not have been in the hands of the then solicitor general, who was responsible for the RCMP?

While I am on my feet, I would like to ask the minister to undertake that the special prosecutor in the case was not binding the Solicitor General and, indeed, the government when he is alleged to have told the trial judge—and I am now quoting from the release—that the break-in and the nature of the operation will not be made public because of the special nature of this affair and because it involves state secrets. Is the minister bound by this statement? Has he had anything to do with instructing the special prosecutor with respect to this matter? Does he accept that limitation? In other words, is the Solicitor General's statement to be a full statement as has been originally promised by the Solicitor General and, indeed, by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that the special prosecutor who handled the matter before the court in Montreal was appointed by the attorney general of the province of Quebec, and as such I have not been in touch with him, nor have I given instructions. It would not be proper for me to be in touch with him or to give him instructions. What he said in the course of his argument is not binding on the government of Canada.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF CLAUSES IN BILL C-51 IN VIEW OF NUMBER OF UNAUTHORIZED WIRETAPES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the answers given by the Solicitor General to the hon. member for New Westminster and in light of the fact that we heard powerful evidence today from Mr. Chappel, Mr. Cartwright and Mr. Cooper, members of the Law Society of Upper Canada and distinguished Queen's Counsel, as to the number of unauthorized buggings or wiretappings, would the Minister of Justice now consider repenting and withdrawing those clauses in Bill C-51 which would usurp the civil rights of Canadians everywhere?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the evidence to which the hon. member referred because I was obviously not in the committee. Those amendments which are in committee are being studied, and in due course the committee will report. I have had an opportunity to read the brief from the Advocates Society of Ontario. Some of it I find to be a very useful contribution, namely, the latter part which proposes that where an application for a wiretap is made, notification must be given of previous applications. However, I take very considerable exception to the part about solicitor-client communications. I indicated at second reading that it seemed to me to be fundamental to our system that the citizen must have the right to communicate with his counsel without the fear of interception, and it is for that precise reason that the amendments are being proposed. With the greatest respect to the Advocates Society of Ontario I do not understand that submission.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice and I are good friends, but I think what he said today was tommy-rot. In light of the decision in the Wray case in the Supreme Court of Canada that any evidence which is relevant is admissible and in light of the fact that unauthorized wiretapping is going on—and we have no way of determining to what extent—I ask the minister again whether he will repent, stop the rhetoric and give us an answer.

HEALTH

SWINE INFLUENZA VACCINATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF REINTRODUCTION—REASON FOR SHORTAGE OF RUBELLA VACCINE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to figures provided by his department almost ten million doses of swine 'flu vaccine were prepared for the 1976 season but less than six million doses were sent to the provinces. Would the minister tell the House what happened to the remaining four million doses and what he plans to use them for—if he knows where they are? Since there has been a death from swine 'flu in the United States recently, does he intend introducing a swine 'flu vaccination program for this year as well?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the quantity of vaccine referred to by the hon. member is kept in stock and a review of the situation is made regularly. The case reported in the United States has been investigated and it seems that it is a known case of New Jersey type flu. But we feel there is no reason yet to launch another vaccination campaign. However, if other cases were reported in the next few months, we probably should restart the program.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order please. I wonder if I might be able to hear the questions and answers, please. The hon. member for Athabasca has a supplementary question.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain why the country is currently experiencing a shortage of rubella or German measles vaccine? Is it because the Canadian facilities were all turned to the packaging and processing of swine 'flu vaccine? The shortage has been so severe that no province has been able to obtain adequate supplies for the last three months. In view of the risk of deformities in children that may occur if German measles is contracted in the early stages of pregnancy, what is the minister going to do about this problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that the reason for the shortage is not related to the production of the New Jersey type vaccine involved last fall. As to what the present situation is, I shall inquire and gladly report to the hon. member at the first opportunity.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARRANGEMENTS WITH UNITED STATES FOR FISHING RIGHTS ON GEORGES BANK—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the United States and Canada agreed to a status quo arrangement regarding the Georges Bank only for this year, an arrangement which I understand has not yet been ratified by the United States Congress, can the minister indicate if he has "lit a fire" to use his own words, under the negotiators on both sides through his special representative who I believe has been appointed in place of Mr. Beasley and if so, will he inform the House of the progress being made to resolve the ownership of this bank whose resources of groundfish, scallops and deepsea lobster are worth many millions of dollars annually to Canadian fishermen?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to give a progress report. The preliminary negotiations have been continuing and as the hon. member says the "fire" is burning a little more brightly on our side than on the United States side. I was advised by the State Department a few days ago that they must undertake a series of preliminary discussions with their regional councils and other departments which they now believe will be finished in short order. This means that the actual negotiations should soon begin and I estimate this will take place before the end of the month or certainly early in July.

ARRANGEMENTS WITH UNITED STATES FOR FISHING RIGHTS ON GEORGES BANK—POSSIBILITY OF THIRD COUNTRY MEDIATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): In light of the uncertainty hanging over the fishing industry in Canada and the United States—an uncertainty which I submit hampers the future progress and development of the industry—as a result of this impasse, has the minister given any thought to calling on a third country to assist in mediating this dispute?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the interim agreement to which the hon. member referred was agreed to sometime ago and, as he said, is now in the process of going through the United States Congress. It has a provision in it that if agreement has not been reached by the end of this year or if it is apparent toward the end of the year that agreement will not be reached, it is open to one or both parties to make use of third country arbitration. There was no specific agreement as to the form of arbitration that might be employed but the means are available to settle that particular question.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Place Guy Favreau project in Montreal has not been dropped. However, we are considering a more modest project, which may have various uses.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IMPRISONMENT OF ANATOLY SCHARANSKY IN SOVIET UNION—EFFORTS TO OBTAIN RELEASE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has his attention been drawn to the case of Anatoly Scharansky, founding member of the Soviet group monitoring the Helsinki Agreement who has been imprisoned and charged with espionage despite the fact that his only offence was his application for a visa to emigrate from the Soviet Union? If the minister is aware of this, has he given consideration to making representations to the government of the Soviet Union urging it to live up to the commitment it made when it signed the Helsinki Agreement and to permit Mr. Scharansky to leave the Soviet Union?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course I am familiar with the case in question which has been widely publicized and has been called to my attention by the hon. member and other members of the House. We have not made representations to the Soviet Union on this particular case but it is our judgment that the general representations I have made repeatedly with regard to the treatment of dissidents as well, of course, as on family reunification, covers situations such as this one. In our preparations for the Belgrade conference we have to assess the ongoing effects of the Helsinki Agreement and I have no doubt that Canada, along with many other countries, will be making the same kind of strong representations at Belgrade.

Mr. Orlikow: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the United States government which is also assessing the position it will take at the Belgrade conference, has already expressed its views to the government of the Soviet Union in connection with this case, will the minister consider making direct representations to let the Soviet Union know that its actions will be a factor in the attitude of the Canadian representatives at that conference?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider that but as I have said many times in the House there is no question from my point of view and, I am sure, of hon. members, that there is a certain amount of satisfaction which comes from commenting on individual cases. It has been our experience, however, that it is more effective in most circumstances to make the kinds of representations to which I referred earlier. If there is something to be gained by joining with other countries in a specific reference to an individual, certainly I will be glad to look into it.

STABBING AND POLICE HARASSMENT OF MRS. NORMA MASON IN TIJUANA, MEXICO—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Just over two months ago Mrs. Norma Mason from Surrey was visiting Tijuana, Mexico and was stabbed by an unknown assailant. I have asked the minister whether he has lodged a formal protest with the Mexican government regarding this incident because it followed that in her semi-paralytic state she was harassed by the police. Has the minister lodged a formal protest with the Mexican government and is the government going to give her some kind of compensation for that harassment?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice. That is all the more reason why I am sorry to have to say to him that after he talked to me there was not time to get the full details. I will get them as quickly as possible, however. On the question of representations, I am quite certain although it is not of my personal knowledge that we have made representations already. I will get an up-to-date report from our ambassador in Mexico and from our local officials on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This must be one of those rare parliamentary occasions on which notice can be given in advance of a supplementary question.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES ON POTATOES AND PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL EQUIPMENT—REASON FOR TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Minister of Transport has heard of this question in advance. I raised the matter with him on May 2. It concerned the recent announcement of the railways concerning an increase of 34 per cent to be implemented in the next six months for Maritime potatoes, and the provision of new equipment. Has the minister conferred with the CNR or was he notified about the announcement to do with the replacement of reefer cars with 110,000 pound insulated boxcars, which are totally inappropriate to the needs of eastern producers? Can he explain why this announcement was made literally hours before the first meeting took place between his task force and representatives of the Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick potato industry?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National had indicated to me their belief that some of the insulated boxcars would be suitable equipment for moving potatoes and that compensatory rate requirements would lead to certain increases in rates, of 20 per cent and later, I think, 12 per cent. The increases will be imposed in two phases. It was intended that the notice of increase would give advance notice to potato shippers and also to have the increases on the table, since Canadian National intends to proceed with discussions with shippers and others on the subject of equipment and its availability.

JUSTIFICATION FOR PROVISION OF NEW EQUIPMENT TO TRANSPORT POTATOES—CONSULTATIONS WITH PRODUCERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it took six months for the minister's committee to become operational in the consideration of this question, and since there is now to be an extensive study of equipment and costs in the next few months and a report is to be made to the minister I believe by the middle of August, can the minister say in what way the CNR was able to justify the provision of new equipment under those two subsidies, in September and January, when, as I understand it, there is no authority for this to take place? Second, was any determination made with the potato industry of New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island as to whether the equipment which is to be substituted will be adequate or effective, given the potato industry's great objections concerning the use of that equipment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what extent the objections relate to the rate increase rather than to the equipment. The equipment was used in different places previously. It was used to ship potatoes. The equipment Canadian National acquired is not new. By and large, this equipment was in use for the movement of other goods eastward, and it had not been used on the back haul. That meant that Canadian National could offer lower rates than would otherwise be required under the law, which requires rates to be compensatory. As I said, there have been informal probings concerning the suitability of the equipment, but the announcement of the rates and discussions which are to follow are designed to look at that question more completely.

TELEGLOBE CANADA

REASON FOR REFUSAL OF COMPANY TO ARBITRATE STRIKE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Communications is not in the House and has been in France I think these past few days I direct my question to the acting Minister of Communications, whoever that may be. Why has Teleglobe refused to go to arbitration in the matter of the strike presently under way by members of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Union against Teleglobe? Was the strike among the reasons for the disappointing television coverage of the Jubilee events taking place on the other side of the Atlantic?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to know who the acting Minister of Communications is—so long as he knows what he is. Since the minister has taken my previous question as notice, could he also draw to the minister's attention my supplementary representation, to prevent an unfortunate situation being further exacerbated? Since the present strike will expand rather than shrink unless certain questions are resolved, I suggest that government facilities, that is to say coastguard equipment and/or helicopters, should not be used to transfer supplies and/or personnel in certain areas in order to maintain some existing plants. I suggest this so that the government of Canada will not be involved in strike-breaking aimed against one of its own Crown corporations.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to pass that representation on, too.

PROPOSED REFINERY AT EASTPORT, MAINE—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON RISK OF ENVIRONMENTAL DAMAGE

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerns the approval by the Main Board of Environmental Protection of a licence for the Pittson Refinery near Eastport, Maine. In light of the massive environmental threat that this operation poses to the Head Harbour Passage and neighbouring parts of the New Brunswick coastline and in light of the uncertainty that now exists as to whether the Canadian veto power over the project still applies in respect of international waters, will the minister immediately contact his U.S. counterpart to obtain binding legal assurances that no refinery will be built until this country is satisfied that the level of risk is acceptable?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that that is the route to follow but will certainly look at that possibility. I understand that licences as issued by the state of Maine are conditional upon clearance being obtained from Canada with regard to the transiting of Head Harbour Passage. Our position on it remains, as it has been consistently, that we do not consider this waterway safe for the transit of large oil laden vessels and we have no reason to change our attitude in that regard. The company and other interested parties were all advised of this position some time ago.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer, and ask this supplementary question: In view of the increasing level of hazards posed by tanker routes, tanker ports and off-shore drilling operations to both the United States and Canadian coastlines, will the minister be prepared to consider undertaking discussions with the United States with a view to forming a specific joint consultation procedure to deal with high risk projects which are increasingly affecting the adjacent waters of the two countries?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member no doubt knows and as has been mentioned in the House several times in recent weeks in relation to west coast tanker traffic, such discussions with the United States are under way already. They may not take precisely the form the hon. member outlined but we are making progress and I am still of the view that we can reach some satisfactory arrangement with the Americans.

MULTICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for multiculturalism. I refer to an address given by the minister at the Indians of Toronto conference on May 14, I believe, in which he vaguely suggested the government's policy on multiculturalism. I wonder if the minister could be more specific and indicate to the House what the government's permanent policy is on multiculturalism?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question surely, by its very terms, asks the minister to make a general statement on policy.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I remind the minister of his statement in this House on May 2, in which he stated he would provide me with written notice of details of the government's permanent policy on multiculturalism. I have not yet received a reply. Does this means that the government's policies are too numerous to mention or that the government has not any policy on multiculturalism?

[Mr. Howie.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking the minister to set out certain policies. This would have to be done at some time other than during the question period.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF ECONOMIC SITUATION ON EMPLOYMENT IN MANUFACTURING—POSSIBILITY OF EARLY BUDGET

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister reviewed the remarks made by the economist Douglas Peters, particularly those remarks to the effect that manufacturing, which previously accounted for 27 per cent of employment and now accounts for 22 per cent, could account for only 15 per cent in future years if economic conditions are not put right?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without confirming those specific figures I would have to say that yes, indeed, that is the trend about which the government is concerned. That trend, and the impact on it of inflation, has been very much the reason for our concern about inflation in Canada.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister also note Mr. Peters' comments about Canada being half a million jobs short of reasonably full employment levels by the mid-1980s, which would mean Canada is heading for a 10 per cent unemployment rate? Mr. Peters made the point that that will happen unless there are tax reductions including further tax credits, federal sales tax cuts and, in general, more buoyant budgets implemented at the Ottawa level?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I pointed out to Mr. Peters and his companion on the panel who was recommending a cut in personal income tax that, of course, everyone would like a general reduction in taxation, but nobody likes a general reduction in services.

Mr. Stevens: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since inflation is at higher levels than anticipated, unemployment is higher than anticipated and real growth is lower, is consideration being given to the introduction of an early budget?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING BROILER MARKETING BOARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Since the broiler producers' association has been waiting a long time now for the decision of the cabinet on the creation of a marketing board which would meet the long-term interests of consumers, and since the Minister of Agriculture said he was in favour of such a project, is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs prepared today to support the Minister of Agriculture, so that the project may be announced as soon as possible?

[English]

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member that he is correct in referring to the Minister of Agriculture because this particular policy falls under his jurisdiction. I believe his last answer is that cabinet will be considering the matter soon.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed again to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As that marketing board will have interesting consequences for consumers, can the minister tell the House whether he is willing to support the Minister of Agriculture who seems to need it before he can make the long-awaited announcement?

POSSIBILITY OF IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATIONS OF SUBCOMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

In view of the questions put yesterday in the House, and in particular further to one of his replies to the effect that an advisory group made up of representatives of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian Penitentiary Service and the Parole Board will be set up to study the recommendations of the subcommittee on justice and legal affairs, can the minister tell the House whether, after those three weeks have elapsed, when this study group makes recommendations to him on the recommendations of the subcommittee, he will implement the recommendations of the subcommittee or those of the study group, and also whether he will consult the subcommittee? I ask that because the newspapers spoke of the matter this morning leading to some confusion.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. Of course, if there is confusion I should like to dispel it as soon as possible. I assigned a group of senior officials in my department the task of studying as quickly as possible the recommendations of the subcommittee and letting me know as soon as possible which of them can be implemented without delay. I gave specific instructions that I be given recommendations to that effect, and not I be given the reasons for which recommendations could not be implemented. Instead, I asked them to indicate which recommendations, of which I am sure there will be a number, could be implemented quickly.

SUGGESTION BANKS LOWER INTEREST RATE ON CONSUMER LOANS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance and invite the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. My question is based on the fact that although the bank rate in the last two or three years has come down from a high of 9.5 per cent to 7.5 per cent, the chartered banks are still charging 13.5 per cent for consumer loans. Will the government take steps to see to it that ordinary Canadians get the benefit of the reduction in the bank rate?

In view of the hardships being encountered by the handicapped of this country, particularly the blind, will the minister advise what progress is being made with regard to the report "Vision Canada"? Is any action being taken on recommendations that seem to be justified?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations concerning my department and coming under its responsibility have been acted upon. A number of other recommendations are directed to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, which is now considering some and acting upon others. We are working closely with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind to implement the recommendations of this report.

Oral Questions

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING ALLOWANCES FOR THE BLIND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): One of the main recommendations was with regard to the financial restrictions placed on the blind because of their special needs. Is there any agreement between the minister and the provincial ministers with regard to increasing the allowances afforded to the blind in all provinces, even though the provinces have opted to include them under social assistance?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There is nothing to prevent the provinces from increasing their special allowances to the blind. If they decided to go ahead with this, these allowances would remain eligible for the 50 per cent sharing of the costs with the federal government, under the Canada Assistance Plan; the initiative must come from the provinces.

CANADIAN POSITION AT GATT TALKS IN GENEVA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is Canada's trading position in the current GATT round of talks in Geneva aimed at trading gains in processing of our resources in exchange for opening Canadian markets to manufactured goods from abroad? This is the impression coming out of the talks on Canada's position at the present time. If this is the case, does the minister realize that under present economic conditions in Canada such a policy will mean the end to much manufacturing in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, our objectives are much more complex than that. They would include not only securing better access for Canadian manufactured goods but, as the hon. member mentioned, more highly processed goods in foreign markets. It will also, to an important degree, be directed at trying to reduce the non-tariff restrictions to the importation of Canadian exports which have been so effective in some countries, much more effective than the tariffs in keeping out Canadian exports. Naturally, we expect that we in turn will have to pay for these further advantages in terms of tariff changes in Canada. As I say, our objectives are far more complex than the simple proposition with which the hon. member prefaced his question.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I realize the objectives are more complex than I stated in my question. However, I wanted to see if I could put that particular feeling on the record in the time available to me. Is Canada still pressing ahead with its sector negotiations and will the United States support Canada's position in pressing for sector talks?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, Canada has indeed put forward a proposal of these specific sectors which might be the basis for negotiations as opposed to across the board tariff cuts. The procedures to be followed not only by Canada but other countries in the multinational trade negotiations are still under negotiation. In other words, there is not yet an agreement on rules. It is too early to say whether the United States or any other country will give that support. I think it is fair to say there is a very full understanding of Canada's position in this regard.

DATE WHEN GATT TALKS LIKELY TO BE COMPLETED

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Can the minister say when he expects the GATT talks going on at Geneva to be completed? Some months ago it was thought that the end of 1978 might be the final date for the completion of the talks and we would move into the new economic order in the early eighties. Is this still the timeframe being looked at or will the talks possibly go as late as 1980?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope they can be brought to an end before 1980. However, given the experience in the Kennedy and Tokyo rounds up to this point, I think the expectation indicated in Puerto Rico that they would be finished in 1977 is now realized as being unrealistic. Perhaps 1978 may be optimistic.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have asked the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Guay) a couple of questions in the last month or so since he has assumed the office. He undertook to write me a letter showing that the government has a permanent policy on multiculturalism. On May 2, 1977, as reported at page 5171 of Hansard, he said:

It will take me the better part of about an hour to give all the details the hon. member is requesting. If you will permit me to do so, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give them to him. If not, I will give them to him in writing.

I just wanted to ask the minister today whether he really has a policy and, if so, how long must those who are neither Anglophone nor Francophone in this country have to wait until they learn what it is. Will they have to wait until the next election?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): The reason I did not answer the hon. member is this: he is making a farce of this important subject. That is why I demanded to know yesterday where the hon. member's party stands with regard to multiculturalism.

Mr. Paproski: Where do you stand?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Everybody in this House knows what our policy is with regard to multiculturalism. If the hon. member wishes to have additional information I am quite prepared to meet with him at any time and explain anything he wants to know in relation to the multiculturalism policy because if he is that far behind I believe I should spend a lot of time with him explaining what is going on in my department.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT—WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-6 FROM STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May I ask the government House leader the usual question as to forthcoming business? I do not know whether he is in a position today to designate opposition days, but if he is not perhaps he could do that a little later. Could he tell us, though, what the government business is for today and subsequent days?

Mr. MacEachen: We shall continue today with the third reading of the bill on metric conversion. After that, certainly beginning tomorrow at the latest, we shall call Bill C-6 having to do with diplomatic immunities. Depending on the outcome of a proposal I shall make to the House in a few moments, we shall then go on with Bill C-3 in relation to Deposit Insurance, Bill C-36 on motor vehicle safety which, I understand, we can deal with through at least the second reading and committee stages, and Bill C-40, the aeronautics bill, which I understand we can also deal with in all stages at least up to third reading, tomorrow.

As hon. members are aware, Bill C-6 is presently before the standing committee. If I am given consent I should like to make a motion to withdraw the bill from the committee so that it can be referred to committee of the whole and dealt with here tomorrow, hopefully through third reading.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On behalf of the Official Opposition, I consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are some comments I wish to make later but I rise to indicate our agreement with the proposal regarding Bill C-6.

Mr. MacEachen: May I, then, move:

That Bill C-6, an act respecting diplomatic and consular privileges and immunities in Canada be withdrawn from the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and be referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can only be put by unanimous consent. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With regard to the business announced for today and tomorrow, there is a comment I should like to make. I have no objection to the bills he has called but I object very strenuously to his continuing refusal to call Bill C-30 which has to do with the Holidays Act. Some weeks ago the minister gave us a list of the bills he wanted passed before the end of the session. By implication, this left a number of bills which were not considered important. Bill C-30 was on the "wanted" list. In the last few days we have dealt with a number of bills which were on the "unimportant" list, while the government refuses to call Bill C-30. I suggest that instead of scraping the barrel the hon. gentleman should bring forward Bill C-30 and let us see whether we can do something about the proposals it contains.

Mr. MacEachen: I believe the division of bills into categories of wanted and unwanted is quite unwarranted. I have not refused to call Bill C-30. I have explained to the hon. member that the moment has not yet arrived. The occasion is not right to call that bill. It may occur later in the session.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): One question to clarify a statement made earlier by the minister. Is it his intention to call Bill C-6, that is the diplomatic privileges bill, as the first item of government business tomorrow in any event?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, except that if we conclude the debate on the metric conversion bill we would have to consider what business from the list I have given we would call later in the day. Otherwise, that list will be in place tomorrow beginning with the diplomatic privileges measure.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to make a comment on one other point. The House leader for the Official Opposition made reference to the opposition days which remain. Perhaps by tomorrow we can reach an understanding as to which day might be designated next week for us. We would like it to be Thursday, June 16. I understand there is some objection to that day because it would mean the loss of the private members' hour. Discussions are taking place as to whether that private members' hour might be shifted or whether something else might be done along those lines. But I hope it can be Thursday, June 16, without the loss of the private members' hour. Obviously the designation cannot be made today but at least the House now knows what is in store.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I understood yesterday there was agreement in the House that after the minister made his statement on the North-South Conference there would be an opportunity for a limited time to direct questions to the Minister. I was wondering whether this would be an appropriate time at which to proceed along those lines.

Mr. Speaker: If the House were to agree perhaps we could go ahead with the questions customarily allowed at the end of a ministerial statement. We might do that on orders of the day. Is that agreed?

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF REFERENCE TO ADMINISTRATOR FOR SOURIS VALLEY SCHOOL DIVISION NO. 42

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am now in a position to table a reference to the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act with respect to the Souris Valley School Division No. 42.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: This being the customary time to receive petitions, there is some obvious indication of the intention of some members from Newfoundland to table at this time petitions in rather impressive numbers. In order of seniority of entrance into the House—I have some concern about the first two though I am more clear about the last two—and without trying to decide whether the ridings should be announced in alphabetical order or otherwise, the four members are the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie): I understand they now have petitions to table which will be received in the usual way.

FISHERIES

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS REQUESTING GREATER PROTECTION FOR SEALERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67, I wish to present a petition on behalf of my constituents praying that greater protection be given through law to sealers by amending the Fisheries Act and regulations, wherefore it would be an offence for any person in any vehicle or aircraft or boat to come within a defined sealing area without a permit from the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I too, in order of seniority, wish pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 67 to present a petition signed by 15,536 citizens of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, praying that greater protection be given through law to sealers by amending the Fisheries Act and regulations, and that all ways and means of tightening the Fisheries Act and sealing regulations to give adequate support and protection to sealers be explored.

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I want also to present a petition on behalf of the constituents of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, to the effect that the law be tightened in order to give greater protection to sealers, and to keep away from the sealing area those who are not going there with a bona fide purpose but simply to interfere with people in the lawful carrying out of their work.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67 I should like to present a petition to the House, 1,871 petitions from 6,024 Newfoundlanders in St. John's West to the same effect, asking for protection for our sealers from publicity seekers and scandal mongers.

The commission would consider any application meeting these eligibility requirements. The commission has asked for applications from anyone meeting these requirements to establish: (a) third TV services in various locations (Vancouver, Edmonton, Montreal, Quebec). (b) Cable systems in many areas. (c) FM stations following the FM policy.

3. The commission has frequently expressed the view that while the Canadian Broadcasting system will of necessity contain a certain number of large units, there must be maintained within it a degree of diversity of ownership etc. This view is expressed in commission's decisions CRTC 72-316 and CRTC 68-39.

CABLE TV OPERATORS AND COMPENSATION TO CJON RADIO AND TV NETWORK IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 1,796—Mr. Crosbie:

1. Did the CRTC announce a decision that cable TV operators are required to pay 25 cents to the CJON Radio and TV Network in Newfoundland as compensation for each person hooked up to the system and, if so, what are the reasons for the decision?

2. Was a decision made by CRTC to award FM radio station licences to the CJON Network and, if so (a) on what date (b) how many licences were awarded (c) were all the licences issued to the owners of the CJON Radio and TV Network and, for what reasons?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) has submitted the following: 1. The commission granted monthly subscriber fees which would include a subsidy to the off-air broadcaster (25 cents per subscriber per month when 15,000 subscribers are attained and for five years thereafter.) However, this portion of the fee may only be charged to the subscriber at such time as the licensee actually transfers these funds to the broadcasters—This applies to the St. John's and Corner Brook licensees. (It should be noted that the 25¢ per subscriber per month was proposed by the applicant and subsequently approved by the Commission).

EDUCATION OF INDIAN STUDENTS IN PROVINCIAL SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,824—Mr. Smith (Churchill):

1. What is being done to ensure that provincial schools are providing the best possible education for the approximately 37,000 Indian children in their schools?

2. How many Indian students have graduated from provincial high schools in the past 10 years and how many lived at home and commuted to nearby provincial schools?

3. At what level is the drop-out rate the greatest in schools (a) on reserves (b) off reserves attended by Indian children who commute from home daily?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The department has taken a number of steps to ensure that provincial schools are providing the best possible education for Indian children attending provincial schools. These steps include (a) the introduction of tuition agreements between the Department and individual school boards negotiated with the full participation of the Indian bands whose children attend the schools. These tuition agreements provided for special educational needs as indicated by the parents of the children. The special services provided under these agreements are varied but include such curriculum areas as language training, cultural curriculum content related to the background of the Indian children, Indian history, etc. (b) The Department is regularly providing provincial school boards with information regarding the sources of materials which they can include in their school program, their libraries, etc. For example, the Department has compiled lists of books written for, by or about Indians and made these lists available to provincial school boards and other interested parties. (c) In the provinces of Manitoba and New Brunswick general agreements between this Department and the provincial Departments of Education have been entered into covering the attendance of Indian children in the schools of those provinces. The agreements were drawn up with the full participation of the provincial Indian organizations. In the case of Manitoba the agreement is re-negotiated annually and the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood is a third party signatory to the agreement. (d) In British Columbia a general agreement between the Department and the Provincial Department of Education has been in effect since 1969 but is currently under review by the Provincial Department, the Indians of British Columbia and this Department—the review being for the purpose of finding a vehicle for the delivery of special programs to meet the special needs of Indian children attending provincial schools there.

2. The Department does not maintain records in such a manner to permit a complete response to this question. We can only indicate that the enrolment of Indian students at the high school level has been increasing at the rate of approximately 8.6% annually. This figure applies to Indians in attendance at all high schools and includes those who commute and those who board away from home for school attendance purposes. The figures for those who commute are not segregated in our records.

3. We do not have accurate information, but from the material which we have reviewed and from discussions with the regions, it is estimated that the drop-out rate by Indian students from all schools is greatest at the grade 9 level.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 1,923?

*SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT AND CITIZEN PARTICIPATION

Question No. 1,923—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is consideration being given to reducing or ending the financial commitment to encourage social development and citizen participation?

2. Does the Secretary of State agree that through citizen participation and voluntary initiative, voluntary organizations help strengthen Canadian unity?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. No. A task Force has recently terminated its examination of departmental objectives, programs and structures and although no final decision has yet been taken with respect to its recommendations, the report does foresee continued support for and reliance on the voluntary sector to enable the department to achieve its objectives.

2. See Beauchesne No. 171 (w) and (bb).

3. See reply 1.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I rose in the House to draw attention to the fact that questions 29, 30, 41 and a number of others pertaining to the use of government aircraft for private and political purposes by members of the cabinet had not been answered. I drew attention to the fact that I had risen on this matter a number of times without gaining any reply. I ended my remarks by asking whether the parliamentary secretary would please give an indication at that time when these questions would be answered. His reply does not appear in Hansard and I feel it must be an error of some sort, but he replied very clearly, as heard by all members on this side of the House, in these words: "When the member for Leeds becomes civil".

It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that questions in this House asked by members of the opposition should be answered in the interest of parliament and the Canadian people not on the basis of what the government happens to think politically of a member of the opposition. This destroys the whole purpose of asking questions in the House. Questions should be answered when the information is ready. This information should not be withheld from public and from parliament, Mr. Speaker, simply because somebody over there does not like somebody over here. I think that is a pretty invalid excuse. If that is the way things are going to continue, then I think it explains exactly why so many questions stand on the order paper unanswered for so many months. I think it is high time something was done in this House to bring to a head the fact that questions are outstanding for a year, some going on for two years, including the ones to which I am referring. Obviously, the government has the information and has had plenty of time to compile it. It can only be withholding the information because it is politically embarrassing. I think it is a very poor excuse; the government should follow proper parliamentary process.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, the gratuitous explanation which the hon. member has just given as to his imagined reasons why the answers to those particular questions have not yet been forthcoming in the House is just that—gratuitous and imagined. I think it is important to note that on the final day of the last session of this parliament we were in a position to provide responses to, I believe, nearly 600 questions on the order paper. On that day last fall I rose in my place and asked for the required unanimous consent to allow us to provide the answers to these questions; that unanimous consent was denied notably by the hon. member for Leeds. As a result, those questions could not be answered at that time.

It has been suggested that that really did not cause very great difficulty because all we needed to do was take a little correcting fluid and change the dates and the numbers of the questions, xerox them all over again and produce them in the House a few days later. This process, as those who have preceded me in the position of parliamentary secretary know, is not that simple; it does require that the questions be reprocessed. It is significant that most of these questions are not simple one-line questions requiring simple one-line answers. In many cases they are multiple part questions which are directed not just to one minister or to one agency but possibly to 40 or more agencies. We do require some time to reprocess and update these answers, to make the changes in the timeframe required so as to make sure the answers are complete and accurate in every respect. So it is not a simple job of xeroxing.

As I pointed out in the House last fall, the fact that the answers could not be given on the last day of the last session probably cost, in terms of manpower and office and clerical time, something in the order of $170,000 to process the questions again. Many of these questions appeared on the order paper in the new session of parliament, along with some 2,300 new questions on the order paper. So we have a situation where there is a very substantial volume of work which has to be done.

If my memory serves me correctly, as at the beginning of this week something in the order of 2,700 questions had been asked in this session of parliament since it began last fall. It is significant that nearly 70 per cent of those questions have in fact been answered to this date, which leaves a small number outstanding at the moment. Many of the questions which are still outstanding appeared on the order paper only in the course of the last couple of weeks when many multiple part questions appeared on the order paper, adding to the list of questions which now have to be answered. There are not many in the category of questions outstanding for a lengthy period of time. I can assure Your Honour, the House and hon. members who have voiced their concern about this question today and in the past, that we are attempting to provide answers to all questions within the shortest possible time.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) had the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct one thing said by the parliamentary secretary, which I believe is inaccurate in his quoting of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cossitt: He has made a statement I did not make, and I feel I should have the right to correct it.

Mr. Speaker: That may be a matter of dispute between the parties, which can be taken up at some other time. Each has contributed to the point of order, and there is no machinery for the process to continue any farther than that.

Mr. Cossitt: Then, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I do not want to take any further time of the House, but I want to say that the questions I referred to were not the ones to which the parliamentary secretary referred. Therefore, I feel my remarks have been distorted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for Leeds is clearly taking up a disagreement with the hon. parliamentary secretary. That is a matter of debate and disagreement. It is not a matter of order and it is not a question of privilege.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the revised procedure for the month of June, I wish to inform the House that the questions to be raised at six o'clock p.m. are as follows: the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson)—Health—Possibility of controlling use of tobacco; the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Basis on which funds distributed to provinces; and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Veterans Affairs—Inquiry whether disability pension will be restored to 1972 value.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) raised some time ago a question of privilege in regard to the release of certain information in connection with the work of the subcommittee on penitentiaries. At that time, I indicated it might be opportune to leave that question until the report of the subcommittee on penitentiaries had been received here in the House. That report has been received, and I should like to indicate that I will be prepared to hear further discussion on the point from any members who wish to contribute. The most convenient time for doing that will be Tuesday upon orders of the day. Therefore, if there are any members who wish to contribute to that point before I make a decision on it, I will hear discussion on Tuesday at approximately three o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement made earlier today, we can now proceed with questions to the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) with respect to the statement he made yesterday. At the conclusion of these proceedings yesterday, I believe the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) was about to ask a question.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the hon. Minister which I will pose concurrently, if the Chair agrees. First, I would like to ask the minister if the $1 billion special action program will cover the demands or the requests of developing countries for better compensatory financing facilities, or will this be in the area of special direct assistance? If not, I would like to ask the minister, while there was no agreement on compensatory facilities, does he expect that the International Monetary Fund or other bodies, other than United Nations agencies, will be discussing this matter shortly?

My second question is in regard to the disagreement on adjustment assistance programs. This seems to be something which will be national in scope, and I am wondering what the nature of that disagreement was. Does it mean that western industrialized countries have not agreed as to the kind of adjustment program they would implement, or was there a disagreement between the developing countries and the developed countries on that point?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the special action program in the amount of $1 billion, subscribed to by the industrialized countries, is not a form of compensatory financing. It is a rapidly dispersing outlay of funds through multilateral and bilateral channels in order to help the poorest countries and indirectly assist them with their debt problems.

On the question of compensatory financing, it is unfortunate that we did not reach an agreement on this question. We were very close to an agreement in the final stages of the conference. Even though the item is registered as disagreed, we were almost at agreement. The agreement was not possible because of difficulties which certain G8 members had with respect to the possible role of UNCTAD in the development committee of the International Monetary Fund. It indicates that an assessment solely based upon the listing of agreed or disagreed items is not a very good way of looking at the results. In certain areas we did make a good deal of progress, although total agreement was not reached, and compensatory financing was one of them.

On the question of adjustment assistance, I must confess to a certain lack of knowledge on that question because I was not involved directly in the negotiations on adjustment assistance at any time. The general question which was dealt with in that particular negotiating group was adjustment in terms of the production of industrialized countries or the withdrawal from production of certain lines in industrialized countries in order to permit equivalent production to be undertaken in developing countries. It was not possible to reach agreement on that over-all question because of the difficulties that such a radical decision, taken at this stage, would have on the employment of developed countries. I am sure this is another item which will be continued in future dialogue between the North and South.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the question posed by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) concerning the special action program. In view of the fact there has been a decline in our official development assistance in the past couple of years from .58 to .51, even in spite of the minister's own commitment in September of 1975 when the government was officially committed to reaching .7, can the minister indicate whether contribution through the special action fund will represent any kind of significant increase in our official development assistance? I would also like to know whether we made any further commitments or indicated whether we would attempt to reverse the present trend with respect to official development assistance?

Since the minister indicated that some of the items in the "not agreed" column were very close to agreement, such as compensatory financing, and since there is nothing specific in the communiqué about a follow-up, can he indicate what kind of follow-up might take place in light of his comments when he spoke directly to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning Canada playing a continuing lead in the North-South dialogue initiated in Paris? Can he indicate specifically what he had in mind and how that will take place?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, unfortunalety or fortunately, the conference on international economic co-operation terminated even though, at a certain stage in the closing of the conference, there was an increasing desire on both sides to continue the conference. In a few months or longer, it may be that we will all regret that the conference has not been maintained.

At the present time, the follow-up is taking place in one form, for example, at the heads of government meeting in London. There will be a session of the General Assembly of the United Nations this fall on development in which the results of this conference will be assessed. There will be a negotiating session in November, I believe, in Geneva on the common fund. Beyond that I do not have further details, except, I believe, it would be a good thing for Canada to maintain its role, a leading role in this dialogue, I hope.

On the question of special action, the hon. member has raised some questions about Canada's commitment. As did most G8 countries at the conference, we have reaffirmed our decision to reach the 0.7 per cent target, and we also, as I recollect, undertook an annual increase in our aid budget. Hon. members should bear in mind that last year and in the current year we have increased the aid budget by more than $100 million, so that the budget now is in excess of $1,100 million. We will strive to maintain that in volume terms, and, as a matter of fact, by reaffirming our decision to reach the objective we will attempt, obviously, to reverse any further declines.

On the question of aid flows I hope it will not be overlooked that in the case of Japan, for example, that country undertook to double its aid flows in the next five years. The United States undertook to increase its aid flows substantially over the next several years. The two commitments from these two industrial powers represent a transfer of resources in the billions of dollars. These are all results of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. I feel, therefore, that the industrialized countries, if their rather enormous efforts at the conference are not recognized, will be discouraged from making further additional efforts, and that is why I think it rather unfortunate that more recognition was not given in our communique to efforts that have been made by the western countries in the field of aid flows in the sense that it was somewhat revolutionary when we consider the state of play about three or four months ago.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister who has already given his best guess as to where the dialogue will go from here and how it will be conducted. I would like to ask the minister whether he would take some opportunity, if it is going to be his continued responsibility, to outline to parliament on some occasion this summer just what Canada's global approach to this problem of international disparity is, bearing in mind that direct aid is important and bearing in mind that, in my judgment, the expectations of the developing countries from commodity agreements are vastly inflated. They are likely to lead to considerable disappointment because I cannot imagine those agreements having the effect that any such countries might expect.

Bearing in mind also that so much of what transpires in the country depends on social structures and many other aspects, I would like to ask the minister whether it is not possible, even in our own country, to move from rhetoric to something more concrete. I do not minimize the difficulties of this because most of us realize the difficulty in dealing satisfactorily with regional disparity in our own country, but perhaps the minister could respond in this way. Are we not engaged to a very considerable extent in rhetoric in this international area? Admittedly some countries are paying large sums of money and doing something. Are we not engaged mostly in rhetoric and very little in concrete programs that would give some hope of substantially reducing international disparity?

Mr. MacEachen: I agree that there has been a great deal of rhetoric in the field of international development. One of the advantages of this restricted but representative forum of 27 nations is that rhetoric has been considerably reduced, although there is still some. All through CIEC we have not heard much about apartheid or these other important political questions that have always come up in the discussion of north-south relations.

The hon. member asked when we will get down to concrete cases. I will name just a certain number of concrete situations or concrete results. There was a commitment on the part of all participants to support the common fund as a new entity and a key instrument in the field of commodity stabilization. That is concrete. There have been very concrete results in the field of food and agriculture, and there has been a new commitment to a decade of infrastructure in Africa, particularly in the field of transportation. I believe that what CIEC has yielded is a more concrete approach in specific areas than has hitherto been the case. I would agree with the opening comment made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), which in a sense re-echoes the statement made by the foreign minister of France following the conference when he said that CIEC has ended with a positive result and valuable gains have been acquired, such as the common fund, the special action, the African decade of transportation and communication.

Then, he went on to say that the disappointments expressed by some G19 countries have been expressed against unrealistic hopes, or, as the hon. member says, unrealistic expectations. One of the difficulties is that there are unreal expectations. It seems to me that because of the interaction and the negotiating between senior political people from both groups of countries a good deal of rhetoric has been swept aside, but I do not think the job has been finished by any means.

Mr. Sharp: I would like to follow with a question similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Halifax. It is related to two specific proposals that have been before the CIEC conference. It seems to me that in Canada and in many other countries there has been a good deal of what might be termed as unnatural optimism about the possibility of certain proposals being accepted. I want to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) therefore, two questions related to these proposals. The first is related to the question of stabilization and indexation of the export price of commodities. Like the hon. member for Halifax I have been rather skeptical. The question I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is whether in his view there was any clarification of the implications of these proposals at that time. For example, would the export commodities of Canada be stabilized and indexed if such a system were to be brought into effect?

The second question relates to debt moratoria, and one of the neglected aspects of this has been the effect upon the credit standing of countries which go in for debt moratoria. I want to ask whether at the conference there was any meeting of the minds on the extent to which forgiveness of debts or debt moratoria affects the credit standing of the countries concerned and their ability to finance their future development.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the two questions raised by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) were uppermost at a certain stage in the thinking of the developing countries, but it was the objective of the industrialized countries, even before the ministerial conference to make it clear that it would be impossible to meet their requests on indexation and on over-all debt forgiveness. It is clear, as the hon. member said, that certain developing countries, even though they generally espouse the position, were not very keen on themselves being subjected to an over-all debt relief because of the risks the hon. member mentioned.

Certainly at no point did the industrialized countries conceal from the developing countries the position we took on both these points, but it is interesting that on price stabilization here again we clarified the situation to the point where we had a good deal of agreement, even though we were unable to reach a final agreement. A future forum will perhaps determine that. What the industrialized countries were talking about particularly was the possibility of price stabilization around a long-term market trend, to make that the guide and then to relate that factor and other factors to individual commodity agreements. The Europeans and the Americans circulated a paper on debt, and I think the situation has been clarified. Discussions were quite intense on this point. I think the next time we have a discussion on debt, we will be having it on a new threshold. The general request for a debt moratorium will be realized as one of the unachievable expectations of the developing countries, and I think these are achievements in clarifying what we can do together.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it would be unfair not to recognize those who sought to be recognized yesterday, and today we will conclude the questioning with the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a request and two questions to put to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McEachen). The request has to do with the communiqué. Because of the importance of the communiqué and the interest of hon. members in it, I suggest that it be tabled and become part of Hansard. If that cannot be done within the rules, I suggest that it be made part of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence because, as the minister knows, we are studying this particular matter in the subcommittee.

My first question deals with facing the debt problems. While the minister did mention his disappointment that the OPEC countries did not agree to deal with the energy aspect and their contribution to our present problems, the OPEC countries do make contributions to debt relief for the less favoured countries of this world, and I wonder whether there are any figures or proportions the minister can give us to show the contribution of the OPEC countries either to the common fund or to the debt problem to assist the less favoured nations to meet their great burdens brought on by the increase in energy prices.

My second question relates to how I should interpret the last phrase in the minister's statement, which is as follows:

> In conclusion—and I hope this is listened to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson)—I believe it is important that Canada continue to play a leading role in the area of north-south relations in the post-CIEC period.

This suggests to me that this is a handover from the President of the Privy Council to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) of those responsibilities which he had in this conference.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not if he could help it.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, when I left the Department of External Affairs, if that is the correct way of putting it—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not the way we understood it.

Mr. MacEachen: —I was asked if I would continue with my responsibility for the Conference on International Economic Co-operation, and now that that conference is terminated, I am really defunct in that field. I have no more responsibilities except the final flourishes to the conference which may take place at the United Nations or elsewhere. That is why I was, as it were, handing the torch to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Directly on the quetion of the OPEC contribution, we had very interesting negotiations in the final hours of the conference on two texts, one on the general text on official development assistance and the other on the special action, in which the industrialized countries wanted to broaden the definition of the contributors to include all others, and the developing countries fought very hard to have these broadened references taken out of the text. For example, the OPEC ministers argued with me that even though they have been making very substantial contributions—and they have been—they are not in the same position as developed countries because they are underdeveloped countries, as many of them are, and their assets are derived from a non-renewable or a declining resource. For those reasons they were not ready to have their role in this field put on a par with that of the developed countries. As a matter of fact, in the interests of a positive conclusion the industrialized countries withdrew some definitions from the text on official development assistance. It did not seem to be an issue large enough to break up hope, and that is really what happened.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And the communiqué?

Mr. MacEachen: When it is available in both official languages, I think it would be a good idea to have the communique appended to Hansard, and I would like one or two other documents appended at the same time, possibly the Canadian statement and the Canadian conclusion.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is now in a position to put forward the documents which have been suggested or whether we ought to see the documents first to determine whether it is feasible to append them to Hansard. If it works out that it is feasible to append them, perhaps permission could be sought tomorrow.

● (1550)

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I should like to warmly congratulate the minister—

Mr. Paproski: We have already done that.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) would not object if I, as chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, add my congratulations to the minister for his leadership. He is also to be congratulated for his great patience because this international conference demanded it. I do not share the defeatism of those who believe that this conference was not a success. To be able to have 19 developing countries sitting with eight countries—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member that the provisions under which we are operating provide the opportunity for the minister to make a statement and members to ask questions. It is therefore open to the hon. member to ask questions and that is all.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the minister to the report on the debt problems of developing countries recently submitted by the subcommittee on International Development, which I have the honour to chair. The minister's statement showed clearly that he shared the subcommittee's assessment of the importance of the debt issue and of the need for concrete action in this area at CIEC. Canada's welcome announcement that it would write off the $254 million of debt owed by the least developed countries was in accord with one of the subcommittee's recommendations—in fact, as a unilateral action, this bold Canadian initiative went even further than suggested by the subcommittee.

In light of this, Mr. Speaker, was the minister able to persuade some of the other industrialized countries at CIEC to re-examine the debt problems of these countries in the near future—to, perhaps, consider a write-off, or the postponement of payments on debt related to aid, or other measures suggested by the subcommittee?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Canadian position on the debt was well received by the developing countries. In fact in the final commentary following the presentation by the industrialized countries, the co-chairman of the conference, Dr. Perez Guerrero singled out Canada for special reference in the field of the debt and in the field of agriculture. We took this decision as Canadians but we knew the enormous difficulty that other countries might have which have greater volume of debt, to take similar action.

There are still some constructive proposals on the table and the debt problem will be considered in the near future. I think there is some hope that workable arrangements can be achieved through the proposals that have been put forward by the community and the United States. My reference to the Venezuelan co-chairman of the conference leads me to express my appreciation for his work and my admiration for his great dedication and flexibility throughout the whole conference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand for Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-23, an act to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for lunch I had just begun my remarks. I pointed out for the benefit of my colleagues that I had been unable to participate in any part of the second reading debate or the committee proceedings on Bill C-23 which deals with the metric changeover in the grains system in Canada. I pointed out also that the considerable delay since the time of first reading has been beneficial. It allowed the groundswell of opinion from grain farmers in western Canada where most of the interest is, to get back to parliament.

It has also been a delayed reaction, as through second reading debate and at committee there was very little if any response or comment from the grain farming public. It now seems clear that grain farmers in particular and farmers in general resent the manner in which this metric change was introduced. They resent it because it is the first major metric changeover in Canada. They ask why some other sector of society was not affected first and that is a valid question. They resent it because they feel they were not consulted about it first of all and especially not by their own leaders. Finally, they resent it because they feel their own farm leaders moved as fast as they did on the assumption of grassroots support which simply was not there.

Members of this House may recall the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which was held last winter in Ottawa at the same time as second reading of this bill was being debated. There were numerous delegates from Saskatchewan and Alberta at that very large convention. Those delegates were critical of Bill C-23 and were asking why there was such a rush and why representatives of the agricultural industry from western Canada were not consulted on their home ground. A motion before the convention that would have brought the issue to a vote was tabled without debate and the issue was not resolved at that convention. Of course it may not be resolved by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture until their next convention, probably next February. The executive of the federation obviously were not prepared to see a vote go against their previous stand in support of what I call a premature bill.

I should like to refer to some correspondence I have received and to quote from four letters that are typical of the response to this metric conversion bill.

The first letter dated February 1, 1977 from Bow Island, Alberta reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Hargrave:

With the announcement today that the metric measure for grain has been delayed I wish to register with you my resentment for the manner in which the Canadian people are being expected to accept this metric malarky. I feel as well as all the people I can talk to, that we do not need the metric system.

As much as we have been brainwashed to believe that the U.S. will follow our footsteps I have read articles on this conversion in several major U.S. papers and the consensus is that the conversion to the metric system there will never pass Congress.

● (1600)

This country was never designed originally for the metric system and barring the fact that the people of Canada will have to pay millions of dollars I do not believe it is necessary to have the system to compete in world trade.

In the issue of the Western Producer of December 2 the editorial states that Britain has not passed their metric bill and has been kicking this around since 1965.

Please consider my opinions and that of most or all of my neighbours.

I quote another letter from Acadia Valley, Alberta, dated March 29, 1977. It reads in part:

The main reason for my letter however is in regard to the metric system. In this democratic country there are always hearings into pipeline building, railway abandonment, etc., etc., so I would like to know ... why the metric system has been forced upon the people of this land. In discussions with my neighbours not one has been in favour of the metric system and no one was ever asked if they wanted it or not. The elevators have already changed their scales and tickets, and yet this has not yet become law. I would like to suggest that you discuss this with the people of your area, they are entitled to express their opinions on this matter, and I am sure you are in favour of people voicing their opinions.

I quote from another letter written by a resident of Foremost, Alberta, on March 22 this year:

I am writing to you to express my feeling in regard to the proposed legislation by the members of national government, and its supporters in the House. We learn through our Canadian news media that we are to have the so-called metric system imposed in our way of life by our most faithful members of our government.

I wish to express my own personal opinion in regard to the proposed changes which will greatly affect all our daily problems. Firstly our economic angles, and secondly our ability to cope with this new measure regardless of how simple it is made to appear. I am a farmer and have been educated to our old and reliable system of farm mathematics, and never found this method in error. I am confident that I can speak for a great many other people in this matter who are all severely affected by this proposed change.

One does not have to study this new proposal very far to realize what a cost it will be to our economy as farmers, also the gradual cost effect to our equipment with which we have established our operations.

I would suggest that all our opposition members in the House oppose this measure and forestall this wild dream of simplicity until the next election, and then bring this matter before the people in a special plebiscite ballot and await the outcome. Let the majority decide whether Canada wants this change.

I hope you will give this matter your utmost consideration in your influence in government matters and consider us ignorant farmers who need your support.

I quote one more letter written by a farm leader of Bow Island, Alberta, who is held in exceptionally high regard by his community. The letter, dated February 23, reads in part:

An additional comment that I would like to make is with regard to the metric conversion in Canada. I realize that objections should have been voiced long ago, but I was unaware that parliamentary approval had not yet been achieved. I can see no valid reason why Canada should change to the metric system. The excuse that we must go metric because of our dependence on foreign markets is hogwash. In this computerized world that presents no problem whatsoever. In spite of what proponents of the metric system say, there will be nothing but confusion for many people, and many will never accept the system. It is interesting to note that Britain and Denmark have never fully changed to the metric system, and it would appear that they probably never will. Our whole land area is surveyed on the Imperial system and obviously cannot be resurveyed under the metric system and maintain the same rural road network, etc.

It just doesn't make sense to change a logical, evenly laid-out land mass to a factional system. It is easily conceivable, too, that a number of "entrepreneurs" will victimize a great many consumers who are not familiar with a new system of weights, volumes and measurements. Much more could be said in defence of the Imperial system. Suffice it to say I am certainly not in favour of the metric conversion. Change, merely for the sake of change is foolish. I can see no benefit whatsoever to the average Canadian in a metric conversion, and after all is it not the average Canadian we are most concerned about?

I point out that the letter referred to "our computerized world" and suggested it was not difficult to convert from the Imperial to the metric system. That point is valid. It is well known that our international grain trade for many years has been conducted in metric units; therefore, the comment concerning "our computerized world" is valid indeed.

I raise one particular item of concern. I learned of this in personal conversations with farmers, especially those who own their own land, which includes most of them. They are deeply concerned about the implications of the metric changeover for our land measurement or survey system in western Canada. I do not know the official plans in this respect, but I say that if any exist, western farm owners are not aware of them. Most farmers are of the opinion that our lands will be resurveyed, if not after passage of the appropriate legislation at least after land is sold and before a new land title is issued, in metric measurement units. This should never happen. Consider all the implications of undertaking a physical resurvey of land. I repeat, it should never happen. I may not be a dominion land surveyor—I think that is the official title—but I happen to be a professional engineer and know something of our western Canadian third land survey system.

I know from practical experience how to locate section and township monuments and road allowance requirements. I know how to "jiggle in" a surveyor's transit or theodolite over an official government land survey benchmark monument. I know all about the projections of straight lines, correction lines by survey instruments and surveyors' chains for calculating distance and area. I know the history of the projection of the fourth reference meridian, which was a separate true north meridian running north from the American border for 720 miles, established in 1896. Later, this line became the boundary between Alberta and Saskatchewan.

I know this history because the surveyed meridian went right through the ranch on which I still live; it went through it some ten years after that ranch was established. I am certain no such surveys are anticipated, but that is my personal opinion. If they are, farmers should be so notified. If not, they should still be informed. Will land titles be changed to kilometres, metres and hectares? If so, when? Will it be after new legislation becomes law, after the sale of land and before transfer of title, or will there be no change at all? We should be told. All landowners, especially western farm landowners, want to know these answers now. If this information is now available, farmers are not aware of it. That is because of the information put out about this bill. I am fully aware of the fact that land is the responsibility of our provincial governments, including land titles, assignments and taxation. However, I point out that the first western survey was the responsibility of the federal government.

I draw to the attention of hon. members on both sides of the House the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) before lunch with regard to the question of legality of land ownership, the legislation which supports that type of ownership of land and the basis on which it is done in western Canada. I received a message by correspondence and by personal communication from farmers in the west with whom I discussed this question. I might point out that I received no comments from my city friends or academic friends. The message is that if a metric change is to be made, let it be made after the grain is delivered to the country elevator. That means the continued use of miles, acres, bushels and pounds. That message clearly questions the need for any change to any portion of the metric system unless and until the United States is ready to make a similar change at the same time. It has been suggested that after the withdrawal of the first effective date for this metric bill, the new date will be the end of the crop year, or July 31, 1977. If this is so, the minister responsible for small business should say so now, if possible.

I want to make some brief comments on a front page story in the May 26 edition of the Western Producer dealing with the metric grain issue. This has been mentioned by some of my colleagues but I think it important to again draw attention to it. The article reported on a recent meeting of the Canadian Grain Commission Metric Conversion Committee in Winnipeg. The chairman, Earl Baxter, indicated that his committee was a little bitter about the confusion respecting the progress of this bill through parliament. The article points out that the grain industry has already spent $300,000 in anticipation of metric grain conversion; that it is highly unlikely the changeover can take place before August, and the next likely date is February, 1978.

Mr. Baxter blamed both the government and the opposition for these problems. He speculated that with a federal election next year—that is the reference in the article—he had doubts about that 1978 date. I have considerable sympathy for Mr. Baxter and his metric grain conversion committee. I am sure he followed very faithfully the terms of reference assigned to his committee. The explanation for his bitterness is obvious. Some groups in very high places in both farm organizations and governments forgot to communicate with the largest sector of our society directly concerned with the consequences of this proposed legislation, namely, the farmers.

In the meantime, I am certain that my grain farming constituents will want me firmly to support the third reading amendment introduced by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. It makes the reasonable suggestion that the bill be returned to committee to further assess the somewhat delayed but very genuine views of the people who will be directly affected by this legislation. Let us never forget that. It is not we in this House who will be directly affected, but the grain producers.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate on third reading of this very controversial bill. I support the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) that the bill be returned to committee for further study of certain very limited areas.

Never was more blatant political power used than in the introduction of this bill. It appears as though the metric committee only contacted one or two large civil service-oriented groups such as the Wheat Board and suggested that metric conversion be introduced. The grain trade did not see anything particularly wrong, because the metric system had been used in the selling of grain for decades. It is probably an ideal means of selling grain because of the large volumes involved. However, they did not realize the effect it would have on the 200,000 permit holders.

The grain trade fell over itself trying to do what it had been told by the government, not realizing that it had a choice. The various grain people and companies which promote grain sales and act with regard to quality control did not realize the widespread resentment toward this legislation. Only bilingualism and gun control has created more animosity in western Canada at the rural level than the introduction of the metric system. While this is no disadvantage to the grain trade, it certainly is to the person on the farm.

It has not been proven that changing to the metric system will increase production on the farm. In fact, for many years it will have exactly the opposite effect. It will increase the possibility of error such as using too much herbicide or weed killer, and too little fertilizer. This is because farmers are accustomed to using bushels, acres, pounds and gallons.

North America has a common machinery market. All our seed drills, all our herbicide applicators are, naturally, based on the very large American market to the south. The manufacturers will not be using hectares, litres or kilograms until a changeover takes place in America, and this will perhaps take many years, particularly in the field of agriculture. The introduction of the metric system in the United States will, I understand, be largely voluntary. In other words, the system will have to prove itself to be the best before it is widely used.

The Canadian farmer is not averse to new ideas. Indications are that agriculture in general, and grain farming in particular, are among the most scientifically managed industries and certainly among the most productive industries. Farmers resent this change to the metric system because they feel it will be a barrier to their ability to produce. It is significant that in Britain, a much smaller country and one in which the introduction of the metric system will be met with considerably more acceptance than in Canada because of its dependence upon foreign markets for manufactured goods, they intend to keep the mile, the inch, the pound and the gallon. If those measurements were retained in Canada, it would certainly help western farmers through the transition period.

I would point out that the metric system is merely another means of measuring. It is certainly convenient in a computer age, but the metric measurements are often incomprehensible to people accustomed to working with their hands. For example, everyone knows that a bushel basket represents a certain volume. The farmer does not know how much a kilogram or a litre represents. A tonne is too large for him to visualize easily, but a bushel represents a familiar volume; he can look at a bag and form an immediate judgment of what it contains. But a tonne of grain represents anything from 38 bushels of wheat to 50 or so bushels or another grain such as oats. Metric is not a good system of measurement for those who work with their hands on a farm.

Moreover, the metric system is confusing in itself. This is shown by a letter from the deputy minister of agriculture in Manitoba to Mr. Baxter, chairman of the metric committee of the Canadian Grain Commission. This is what the deputy minister had to say:

> I understand that the Canada Grains Council Metric Committee has made a tentative decision to adopt the kg/hl as the unit for measuring grain densities. Since Canada, along with most of the other countries in the world is adopting the SI metric system it is clear that we should be using SI units in our grains industry. The hectolitre is not an SI unit and should not be used. The official Metric Practice Guide which is a national standard of Canada gives the kg/m^3 as the correct unit for density (see pages 11, 15, and 25). The introduction of another density unit would only add confusion and extra calculations to the designation of grain densities.
> I also understand that your committee is proposing to give grain storage volumes in metric tonnes equivalent of wheat. The arguments against the hectolitre also apply to this unit. The unit you are proposing is, in fact, $1.34m^3$, and the only way to determine the volume of a bin in metric tonnes equivalent of wheat is to measure it in m^3 and divide the result by 1.34. This is obviously an unnecessary calculation, and results in a long, confusing unit. To state the volume simply in m^3 is according to approved SI practice, and given as the national standard of Canada. To determine the amount of grain in a storage, with the density given in kg/m^3 and the volume in m^3, one simple multiplication is required. To determine the amount of grain in a storage, with the density given in kg/hl and the volume in metric tonnes equivalent of wheat, many complex calculations are required, as well as knowledge of the appropriate conversion factors. The logic in selecting the approved SI units is clear.

This shows there is division of opinion among the experts as to how this issue should be used. If there is division among experts, how can we expect the farmer to understand the significance of these distinctions? The letter continues:

> I also understand that the Canadian Wheat Board is proposing to use metric tonnes per acre as the unit for grain yield. Any combinations of metric and Imperial units are totally unacceptable and I trust that you will use your influence to have the acres replaced by hectares. All of our department publications since January, 1974, have been giving yields and chemical application rates in tonnes or kilograms per hectare and we will continue to do so.

That was from the deputy minister of agriculture in Manitoba. It shows that the Manitoba government is behind this move and agrees to the introduction of metric. But it has not been accepted wholeheartedly by the western farmer. No one complains about the grain trade using the metric system once the grain is in the elevator. But it seems foolish and useless to introduce the system at a time when the railways have indicated that it will be many years, five at least, before they themselves go metric. In other words, even if grain is brought to them in metric tonnes, this will be changed when it is loaded into the boxcars. Then when it is unloaded at the terminals the contents will be translated again into metric terms. So there seems no reason for introducing the change at this time, particularly since other parts of the North American continent, of which the great plains are a part, will continue to use the Imperial system for some years to come.

In his press release of February 1, 1977, the minister undertook to move gradually. He said:

> While I believe the proposed legislative changes should be implemented as quickly as possible, I also want to ensure that producer interests are not prejudiced and that farmers are not subjected to an unreasonable burden.

He should be as good as his word. What does he propose to do about this unreasonable burden of which he speaks? The minister has not told us. He said he will not have certain aspects of the bill proclaimed until some time in the future. This is not good enough. We want to know what he intends to do, and see it in writing in the legislation. The bill has had a rough ride in rural areas. They feel let down and put upon by the bureaucracy. They feel let down by their own farm organizations which have not, apparently, felt the weight of their members' opinions but are more interested in complying with what they regard as a fait accompli. They were told that they would save a little money; but in the end, of course, the farmer always has to pay because the expense of handling grain is eventually reflected in the price the farmer receives. Therefore, his wishes should be paramount and every effort should be made to accommodate him.

This legislation is being greeted with a tremendous amount of unhappiness on the part of the farmers. I hope the House will see fit to return the legislation to committee so the minister can tell us exactly what he intends to do to relieve the burden on the farmers.

Metric System

Mr. Peter P. Masniuk (Portage): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-23, an act to facilitate conversion to the metric system in Canada. The debate on this bill during second reading was very extensive, and the bill has had a very interesting history since it left this House following second reading. We are now aware that it has been the subject of some very active cabinet discussions as well. At any rate, the government has now decided that agricultural measurements will not be converted to metric right away.

A few months ago metric conversion was a pressing necessity, of top priority, but today we are told that metric conversion in agriculture can wait a little longer and that the acre and the bushel will be with us for a while yet. Of course, what this amounts to is an admission by this government of something we have been telling them constantly since this bill was first introduced—that the Canadian farmer is totally opposed to metric conversion. With an election only a year or less away, what was of top priority yesterday has become politically inexpedient today. At the present time, Liberals have become an endangered species on the prairies, and just before an election is certainly the wrong time to do something which has aroused so much antagonism and anger among the prairie farmers as has metric conversion.

Canada is a nation that lives by trade, and she must be in step with the rest of her trading partners if she is to survive and prosper in an interdependent world. I truly think that the metric system for Canada is inevitable and, in the long run, even desirable. But most Canadians, if my mail is any indication, are not in favour of the metric system and the Canadian farmer—the western farmer certainly—is actively opposed to it. In these circumstances, metrication just cannot be imposed on the country in the way proposed by Bill C-23. Canadians must first be accustomed to it on a gradual basis over a period of time.

An entirely new system of measurement is, after all, a major change and requires major adjustment, adjustment which is neither easy nor painless. Our position, then, should be to try to make the best adjustment we can. This sensible and reasonable approach has been the position taken by our party right from the beginning. These latest developments indicate that perhaps the government has listened to some of the things we said during second reading, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-23 is described as "an act to facilitate conversion to the metric system". But despite this title it does nothing to facilitate our conversion to the metric system. Instead, it imposes this system on the nation in the most arbitrary and dictatorial manner imaginable; in a way which can only produce the maximum confusion, bitterness and disruption. It was the purpose of the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) to put some truth into the title of Bill C-23 and to really facilitate conversion to the metric system and make that conversion less painful.

The amendments of my colleague from Moose Jaw would have done this by providing for a dual system, Imperial and metric, in agriculture. The intent of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was to facilitate the conversion of Canadian consumers to the new system by providing for a three-year transition period using both systems, during which period the metric system would be phased in while the Imperial system was phased out. We think that these amendments were entirely reasonable and practical, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-23 as presently framed is really one of the most cold, heartless, humanless pieces of legislation which I have ever seen. It is not legislation at all; it is a bureaucratic edict which says, in effect, "In order to comply with certain requirements," etc., etc. —the language of the bureaucrats— "henceforth things shall be done thus and so". One of my constituents told me that he thought the metric system must have been invented by Ottawa bureaucrats, and while we know that that is not true, it certainly is tailor-made for them.

In the immigration bill we saw a bit of philosophy and rationale for the legislation; but in this bill, which legislates a complete change, conversion to a totally new system of measurement, where such a rationale really is necessary and important and would have been welcome there is no humanness at all. We are, after all, doing more than just changing a system of measurement; we are trying to effect a change in people as well.

This government has just not faced up to the tremendous problems which metric conversion is going to cause, and the horrendous human inequities which it will create. I am not suggesting that we stop conversion. That is not realistic. We cannot turn the clock back and we cannot stop it, either. But to continue with the clock analogy, Mr. Speaker, metric conversion involves more than just turning our measurement clocks to another system, as we do in the spring when we switch to daylight saving time. That is all this bill does; it just sets Canada's measurements on another system and says, "Learn to swim in it in a hurry, or sink".

The same "You're on your own" principle is the one which the government has adopted regarding the cost of conversion, Mr. Speaker. It is to be borne individually by each sector—business, labour, manufacturing, agriculture. Of course, it is not reasonable to expect government to bear the major cost of conversion, but the present approach, the rigid imposition of the metric system on every sector, is not the right way to bring about the change. We would not be going metric at all if there were not at least some consensus among us that it will be in our best interests over the long run—and I believe that it will. But I am troubled by the suggestion I have heard, that the original pressure and the major impetus for metric conversion came from the big, multinationals because a completely metric world is in their interests. If this is so, then the result will be that the groups which metrication will most serve—the very big companies, the multinationals—will be the ones who can most afford the cost of conversion, and the smaller national and local industries which will realize the least benefit from metrication are the ones who can least afford it.

The unorganized, little guy who is not part of any group—the farmer and the consumer—will not realize any benefits from the conversion and, in fact, will be actively hurt by it. This does seem like a Canadianized version of that familiar old American theme, "What's good for General Motors is good for the U.S.A.", inasmuch as an endeavour that we have embarked upon because it is supposed to be in our national interest will most serve those who have the least concern for any strictly national Canadian interest.

It is impossible for us to calculate just how much metric conversion is going to cost, Mr. Speaker, because there are no reliable cost estimates available from any source, that I am aware of. The experiences of other countries are not of much help, either, except perhaps in a somewhat negative way. It seems that those countries which converted the fastest, Australia and South Africa, suffered the least expense; whereas in Britain, where the conversion process has been long and delayed, and is still going on, costs have been very great. Of course, the costs in social and human terms of a very fast, disruptive conversion for which this country's people are unprepared would surely be high and must be taken into account with the dollars and cents' expense. The costs of conversion will be different in each industry, of course. It might not be that expensive in the food industry because much of the packaging is of a disposable, non-durable nature. Paper packages, cardboard cartons and so-called "soft" conversion—that is, dual labelling—with metric equivalents marked on Imperial measurement cartons is now almost complete.

One of our amendments which was defeated, would have provided for the continuation of dual labelling when "hard" conversion, the switch to metric-sized containers, takes place. We feel that having the Imperial equivalents marked on metric containers would have protected Canadian consumers against the commercial rip-offs which will most surely take place when manufacturers begin to sell products in containers that look like the old Imperial cartons but are, in fact, smaller and continue to charge the same price. We have dual labelling now with Imperial packages. Why could it not be continued with metric?

The situation regarding metric conversion in durable goods manufacturing is very different from the food industry, but here it depends upon which manufacturing sector one considers. In the Canadian steel industry, for instance, I understand that the view is fairly optimistic. The industry started to convert more than a year and a half ago and feels that the three-year conversion period which they have adopted will give them adequate time to minimize the costs of conversion to metric sizing for steel products. The three-year timeframe was chosen in 1975 because new rates for steel products cannot be introduced until approved by the Canadian Standards Association, which the industry does not expect to come before 1978.

The situation in the automotive industry with regard to metric conversion is a very interesting one. All automobile companies began at least planning for the conversion some time ago—General Motors about three years ago. The problems in the automobile industry will be mostly due to differing paces toward metrication between this country and the United States, since the two industries are so highly integrated. At any rate, this industry should experience the least hardship in absorbing the extra costs of metric conversion.

Unfortunately, the same optimism cannot be felt about the situation of the industrial worker. Regardless of the size of the industry, whether a national or multinational corporation or a local business enterprise down the street, the worker is going to suffer hardship. The additional cash outlay for metric-size tools, which can easily go as high as $3,000, will be an initial financial hardship. The frustration of trying to work in a new system, and the resultant work slowdown and time loss, as well as the inevitable increase in work error and the accompanying production loss, must also be considered.

For self-employed workers at present, the full value of tools can be used as a tax deduction, while salaried employees can deduct 3 per cent of the value, up to a maximum of $250 a year. At the present and very rapidly increasing costs of industrial tools and equipment, this is now inadequate to prevent financial hardship for many salaried workers. Perhaps a special tax exemption might be provided for the Canadian worker to cover this particular expense of metric conversion. In addition, this would demonstrate in a very real and concrete way the government's full support for the metric conversion process and provide the worker with the best of all possible psychological boosts to support metrication—a financial incentive.

When one considers the costs of metric conversion in our society and economy it is, unfortunately, all too easy to foresee a vicious chain developing. The organized workers will, naturally, expect the employer to shoulder the major cost of the conversion and the employer will, in turn, pass on the cost to the consumer. The odd man out will be the unorganized worker, the Canadian farmer and the consumer. Both Canadian labour and consumer legislation may require some revision if we are to prevent these inequalities from developing.

For the Canadian farmer metrication will have few benefits. He uses measurements constantly every day to an extent perhaps greater than in very few other occupations. Now he is expected to stop using an old, familiar system which has been used for generations and start using an entirely new and strange system of measurement with which he has no experience. He must now stop farming acres of land and begin farming hectares. No longer will he harvest bushels of grain. Now it is metric tons, or tonnes. His land will not be measured in miles any more; now it is kilometres. Fuel must now be bought in litres, not gallons; and fertilizer and feed, not in pounds but kilograms.

All these measurements are strange and none has an easy or direct equivalent in the Imperial system. Is it any wonder that the Canadian farmer is so unhappy and so much opposed to the metric system, Mr. Speaker? This is why our party proposed that both the imperial and the metric system be used in agriculture in order to somewhat lessen the confusion and disruption which is going to be very great in any case. We suggested that both systems be used for a limited time in order to ease farmers gradually into the use of the metric system. We suggested a three-year conversion period of dual usage, during which farmers would become familiar with the new measurements. This is not an unfair or unreasonable suggestion, but it is certainly very unfair and dictatorial just to impose the metric system on the farmer, to tell him he must use it and that the old system is no longer valid and cannot be used, as this bill does.

However, the government has now decided that it will consult with the farmers before metrication is introduced into farming and then reserve the option of not proclaiming those clauses of this bill which have to do with agriculture. While I suppose that consultation with farmers is some sort of progress for this government, this latest twist of reserving proclamation of certain parts of this legislation is certainly not acceptable to us. Metrication is either introduced, or it is not introduced. There is no way we are going to accept having a metric law on the statute books and have this government hold it over the heads of the western farmer like a club, threatening to bring it in at any time, or alternately suggesting or implying that it may not be brought in at all. This is blackmail and it is completely unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Masniuk: For the Canadian consumer, metric conversion will be neither easy nor painless, as I have said. Familiar goods packaged and sold by unfamiliar measurements will almost inevitably create confusion at first. Housewives will not easily adjust to buying milk by the litre, vegetables and meat by the kilo, and dress fabric by the metre. Motorists will not easily become accustomed to travelling kilometres to work, putting litres of gasoline in the tank and kilopascals of pressure in the tires. More serious than this initial confusion, however, will be the great danger metrication will pose for price gouging when the consumer does not know how much he is actually buying.

An example of this confusion occurred a few years ago in Toronto when a service station began selling gasoline by the litre but marked the price on an outdoor sign as a fraction of a gallon. To a casual observer it appeared at first as if the station had discounted the price to an unbelievable extent and was selling gas at less than 15 cents a gallon. There was nothing dishonest going on in this particular instance, as far as I know. It was an example of genuine confusion. But it does demonstrate very well the opportunity that will be afforded to some unscrupulous businesses to raise their prices unnecessarily.

It will happen, as was shown by what occurred in Britain when she converted her currency to the decimal system. Included in the new decimal prices was an unjustified price increase in many cases, but even after the British consumer had begun to understand the decimal money system a little better and realized that there had been a price increase, the increase stayed. There was no reduction. I am afraid that we are going to experience similar situations here in Canada when metrication is fully under way. This is why the Progressive Conservative party proposed a system of dual labelling of both metric and Imperial measurements, not as a crutch, as some government spokesmen have said, but so that conversion takes place fairly and the consumer is treated fairly and can see that he is being treated fairly.

I feel that the cost of metric conversion will fall heaviest on the Canadian consumer. I do not see how this can be otherwise, since the governing principle regarding metric conversion as far as the government is concerned is to let the costs lie where they fall. Since it is only good business to minimize costs and maximize profits, it seems inevitable that retailers will pass on the increased costs in the form of higher prices to the consumer. There really does not seem to be anything that one can suggest as a solution to this. If we are really committed to metrication for Canada, we will just have to realize in all honesty that it will cost money.

Unjustified price increases, however, price gouging under the guise of conversion costs, might be controlled perhaps to a certain extent by a price surveillance program. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or, more appropriately, the metric commission, would conduct this program. Since the commission already exists and is, we are given to understand, experiencing morale problems arising out of some confusion as to its role and purpose, this might be an ideal function for it. There are many details which would have to be worked out, of course, but I think that this idea should be considered. Canadians might then feel that metrication is doing something for them, rather than to them, as many do now.

I would like to conclude my remarks on this very important subject, Mr. Speaker, by stating, as I did earlier, that I believe in the inevitability of metrication in Canada and, in the long-term, the desirability of it. However, I do not think that we should fool ourselves that this change will not be costly and disruptive. It will be. But I do not take that attitude, either, which I have heard expressed by some, that we should not convert, that we should ignore the rest of the world and content ourselves with the old system. This is a very provincial and insular attitude, not befiting an outward-looking, progressive country like Canada. For us in Canada the metric system may not be absolutely necessary but we, least of any nation which lives by trading, cannot be an island unto ourselves. In an interdependent world it is necessary that Canada be in step with her trading and business partners who are, after all, in today's global village, her neighbours.

I believe that most Canadians are astute enough and responsible enough to recognize this. But we must also be responsible in our approach to metrication and realistic about what it is going to cost both in economic and social terms, because I do not think that the government's approach to bringing the metric system to Canada is either responsible or realistic; and, as I have tried to explain, it will surely create more confusion, frustration and misery than it should.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, with your consent, since only a few minutes are left to me to participate in the debate, I wonder if I could call it five o'clock and begin my speech after the dinner adjournment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House agreed that we call it five o'clock and proceed immediately to private members' business?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that provided I am assured that the members who are ordinarily expected to be here at five o'clock are here.

Mr. Kaplan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the House might agree to continue for a few minutes after five o'clock to give the hon. member a chance to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Paproski: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is unfair to allow the hon. member to commence speaking at three minutes to five, because this will break up his speech. It would be simple courtesy on the part of the House to allow him to commence his speech at eight o'clock, particularly on a subject as important as metrication.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To reassure hon. members, I might say that I have noticed the presence of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) who it has been suggested would be the government speaker. Does the House agree to proceed with private members' business at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, private bills and public bills.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there has been agreement to allow all motions to stand, at the request of the government, and to commence with the debate on motion No. 46 standing in the name of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), that we stand motions Nos. 1, 14, 35, 8, 23, 2, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, and 42, at the request of the government, and proceed to consideration of motion No. 46 in the name of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

INVESTIGATION CONCERNING PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the contents of the file or files in the possession of the Department of the Solicitor General and/or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police relating to the investigation concerning Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this debate today came about as a result of the refusal of this government to state or reveal the facts of a serious matter which was first brought to the attention of this House by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) on December 9, 1974. Since then an interesting series of questions, evasive answers, an investigation and cover-ups has taken place. One could compare the actions of this government through more than one government department and the ministers to the behaviour of a child who broke a dish and hid the pieces in the hope the misdemeanour would not be known. In the case of the child, the broken dish was accidental. So far as the government is concerned, the evasion and cover-up were intentional. One can only assume there is guilt. Otherwise, why would the government treat the PFAA issue as one which is too hot to handle? We do not doubt that revelation of the facts would cause embarrassment to certain people and to the ministers who are supposed to be responsible.

When members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police visited my House of Commons office, at my request, to view the evidence I had in my possession—evidence of wrongdoing on the part of PFAA employees—they decided to check into it further. We had to prod the then solicitor general to order an investigation by that force. The RCMP officers deserve commendation for the thoroughness with which they delved into this affair, particularly in view of the political ramifications and the fact that they were directly responsible to the then solicitor general. These are dedicated men who are interested only in carrying out their duty, regardless of the difficulties they encounter. They did their job well. They were the only ones who could do the job unless the government established an official inquiry by an appointed commission, which up until now the government has refused to appoint.

I mentioned evasiveness and covering up by this government. This unfortunate and unacceptable administration within PFAA also caused three field inspectors to be asked to retire before their terms had terminated, and one individual who refused to retire was fired. He was fired, not because of incompetence or for just cause but because of the questionable policy of this government. That is an excellent example of the just society, which some people thought meant justice. Perhaps it is just in the eyes of the federal cabinet, just because it suits its purpose and hides its political manoeuvring at the expense of taxpayers. Why are loyal, competent employees removed from their jobs to protect the guilty, whether at the cabinet level or not? That question has not been answered.

When an individual is hired to work on a specific program or within a department and under that guise that person works for the Liberal party of Canada in a political campaign, at the same time being paid by Canadians' tax dollars, something is drastically wrong. We all know that there could be an error, a wrongdoing or a breaking of rules in anyone's daily job, but the misuse of funds and the underhanded manner in which that person campaigned for the Liberal party while pretending to be doing legitimate work cannot be shrugged off, excused, ignored or pushed under the rug merely because this government thinks it is all right to follow that devious and dishonest policy. Surely someone in this government has a conscience and a feeling of responsibility to those who elected him into office. Surely there is one sincere man of integrity who will stand up and admit that there was wrongdoing, punish the one who was involved, apologize and reveal the facts. That has not been the case. Everyone apparently chose to punish innocent employees to protect the one who sacrificed his name and his integrity to assist the Liberals.

We often hear inside and outside this House that the opposition is wasting time. Why are members of parliament voted into this chamber? Are we not here to protect the electorate against crime, injustice and unnecessary secrecy? If we are not, I am afraid the voters have been given a false impression and, unfortunately, some of them are being represented in a shoddy way. As a last resort I asked for copies of correspondence and other documents related to the PFAA incident, but that attempt was not successful either. The security of this country is not at stake. There is no need for secrecy except to hide the misdemeanours of this government through an employee who is the unfortunate victim. As a member of parliament, and therefore as a protector of those whom I was elected to represent, I have the right to see the RCMP files relating to the PFAA investigation, and I hereby demand to see their contents. I repeat that the security of Canada is not involved. Dishonesty is.

I question whether there not was a violation of the Financial Administration Act, in spite of denials by the former president of the treasury board. How do we know for certain, when we are not permitted to see the evidence? Why the cover-up?

The RCMP decided there was evidence of wrongdoing. The RCMP experienced difficulties, but through their tireless efforts evidence was made available and a preliminary hearing was held on July 17, 1975, when the accused was committed to stand trial on a charge of fraud before a judge and jury. For some reason, the Saskatchewan attorney general's department decided not to proceed further with the matter and a stay of proceedings was entered on December 2, 1975, in the district court judges' criminal court, Regina. How odd, indeed, this should happen when evidence was sufficient to order the accused to stand trial. To add to the unusal, this government chooses to be secretive. If there is nothing to hide, why follow this procedure which can only add to the suspicion, rather than remove it?

Getting back to waste of time—which is a favourite complaint of this government—yes, there has been waste of time. The RCMP spent considerable time performing its duties. The time of this House was used on numerous occasions in an attempt to have this incident treated in an open-minded way. Even the careers of four competent and decent PFAA employees were wasted by forced early retirement or firing. Most of us do not mind using time when it is necessary to reach a worthy goal—in this case, justice—but we do criticize when that time is spent to no avail due to the arrogance, secretiveness, evasiveness and questionable procedures adopted by the ministers under whose jurisdiction the PFAA administration was placed.

Here is a definite example of the daily problem experienced by parliamentarians under this government when it will not divulge information which should be available to the general public. Taxpayers' dollars were used in a political campaign under the cover of a federal government program. If the government persists in saying the employee in question did not do anything illegal, there is no question in my mind that the incident was politically immoral.

I will close my remarks by saying that this government, by this example of devious cover-up, has left its entire administration and every one of its ministers under a cloud. If we cannot trust the government on this one evident misdemeanour, why or how should we be compelled to trust the federal government at any time on any issue? Anyone can cower, cringe, hide and be evasive. It takes a man to stand up to say he was wrong.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) for giving me the opportunity today not only to review this specific case but also to discuss the very important general issue of availability of information. I know that he and other hon. members of the House will understand if I refer directly to my notes sometimes because this is a rather technical subject. The hon. member has asked that an order do issue for a copy of the contents of the file or files in the possession of the Department of the Solicitor General and/or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police relating to the investigation concerning the Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration. Production of the files has been denied for the reasons recorded in answer to the notice of motion on February 23, 1977. The hon. member refused to withdraw his motion and, Mr. Speaker, transferred the matter for debate.

It behooves me, therefore, to elaborate upon the reasons for the denial already stated. Historically, the question of the release of information to hon. members in order to enable them to secure factual information about the operations of government, to carry out their parliamentary duties, has been balanced against the equally important need to protect the security of the state and the rights to privacy of its citizens. When, in the judgment of the government, the need for production is outweighed by the need to protect security or privacy, it becomes the public responsibility of that government to claim an exemption from production.

There has been a long-standing public policy that investigations conducted by police forces and the data gathered during those investigations be treated confidentially. It follows that this policy protects such information from disclosure to the public and to members of the House of Commons. The necessity for the preservation of this confidentiality was aptly described by the prime minister of the day in Great Britain, Lord Palmerston, in 1865 when he commented:

As a general rule no doubt, they—

That is, police reports.

—are not laid before parliament, and for this reason, not because it would be against any order of the House, but because law officers would be more cautious in expressing an opinion if they knew it was to be laid before parliament and the public.

This stated reason, and others as cogent, can be rallied in support of a case for exemption from production in this matter. The passage of time and the continuation of the practice of this exemption continues to reinforce the sensibleness of the reasoning of Lord Palmerston. Production would surely jeopardize the orderly conduct of the administration of justice both federally and provincially and would seriously impair the course of future police investigations of this nature.

Inquiries by the police of the nature in question necessarily involve the acquisition of information from a large number of individuals. Candidness is encouraged, and protection of the interviewee is often considered. In this process of interview and meticulous recording, half-truths may be recorded, hearsay acquired and allegations made that may never be substantiated. The careful recording of this information becomes essential to the production of evidence if, upon substantiation and admissibility as evidence, it will lead to a formal public charge. It is obvious that those matters which cannot be substantiated but were necessarily recorded in the investigative process must be withheld from publication. Yet these matters may appear in a police report side by side. Confidentiality is preserved if necessary between the Crown and its informants in order to save the latter from those who may become accused. Only information that is relevant, admissible and safe to publish will be brought forward at a preliminary hearing of the charges or trial. To do otherwise could cause irreparable damage to the reputation of honest citizens and discourage them and many others from co-operating with future investigations of criminal activities.

The production of police reports in the manner requested would inevitably lead to the laundering of police reports by investigators in an honest and therefore necessary attempt by police to protect their sources of information from exposure. The essential need for a full and complete exchange of information between the police and the Crown would be irreparably damaged as a result. Potential charges could be missed and the ability of the Crown or police to bring charges forward becomes crippled in the process.

In projecting these inherent difficulties the government has directed a claim for exemptions to be made in relation to reports and other documents the release of which would be detrimental to the security of the state. In 1969, the commissioners of the Royal Commission on Security addressed this issue as follows:

The duty of the state to protect ... its information from unauthorized disclosure ... is indisputable; what are matters for dispute are the procedures established by the state to meet this responsibility in an area which can touch closely upon the fundamental freedoms of the individual.

The duty here was emphatically exercised by declining to produce the documents requested. The importance of this particular case pales in the wake of the fundamental duty of the government to protect the public interest by supporting the condidentiality of police informants, other than those that must necessarily give evidence in support of the case for the Crown.

It is the responsibility and duty of the attorney general in a province to prosecute charges under the provisions of the Criminal Code. The evidence given in support of a charge is thereby published and a transcript of that evidence is available to all and is a matter of public record. Anything beyond this which is made available to the public is dispersed entirely at the discretion of the attorney general of that province, in his capacity as the chief law enforcement officer with the responsibility of the administration of justice within that province. It can be readily appreciated therefore, that any material which may be in the possession of the Department of the Solicitor General and/or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should not be released by order of this House. To do so would be to subvert the authority and public duty ensconced in that attorney general.

In the particular case in question, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police conducted an investigation into alleged misuse of funds under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act in Saskatchewan. As a result of this investigation, a criminal charge of fraud under section 338(1) of the Criminal Code, was laid against an individual. We are all aware that such a charge is clearly the responsibility of the attorney general of Saskatchewan, and that as such the federal government has no right to force any further information to be made public regarding this case. The transcript of the preliminary hearing is available upon request and is a matter of public record.

The balancing of the basic rights of individuals vis-à-vis the interests of the state must be handled with delicacy. This is invariably difficult. But when the revelation of information undermines the rights of individuals to confidentiality in their capacities as witnesses, or when release of information can inevitably harm individuals without any apparent benefit accruing to the state or anyone else, the choice becomes obvious.

This House cannot arbitrarily usurp the power vested in the attorney general of Saskatchewan or any other province without seriously damaging its relationship with the provincial governments, in addition to destroying its relationship with the police forces in Canada and elsewhere. If investigators feel that any information they accumulate can be, at any moment, made public, then efforts at investigations into, for example, organized crime, will be seriously hampered. The confidentiality of contacts in such a case is vital to the ability of enforcement agencies to monitor situations and obtain information. We depend on co-operation among police forces, as well as public co-operation with the police for the effective administration of justice and law enforcement. If private information, given in confidence, can be made public at will, public confidence and the public's co-operation in good faith can only be lost and channels of communication blocked. We must not violate the faith of the public in such a manner.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the extent to which I have come to know the police force in my hometown of Oakville, in the riding of Halton. Working with them I gained a great deal of respect for them and came to realize what some of their problems and concerns are in terms of dealing with organized crime and using information effectively—and that means confidentially. I realize their feelings about such matters as the peace and security legislation, Bill C-51, that is on its way through the House and, in particular, the wiretapping aspects of that bill.

I have known these policemen since we were all very young, and I know them to be people of great integrity, sensitivity and discretion, yet in this particular case they plead very strongly to have representations made, through their member of parliament, for example, in order to ensure that they have enough power to work with. Wiretapping or electronic surveillance would help them cope with new, powerful and sophisticated areas of organized crime and would help them to protect the Canadian people under their responsibility. I see a parallel here and that is why I find the debate today so interesting. The cases are analogous and I have no hesitation in pleading for some reasonable and sensible restriction of the availability of information so that our law enforcement agencies can do their job properly on our behalf.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and once again I should like to thank the hon. member for Red Deer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this motion for the production of papers has been described by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) as a technical matter. He gave an explanation that would be suitable for a newly graduated lawyer.

Mr. Philbrook: That's not bad for a doctor.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I think lawyers and the medical profession have learned that the best business is gobbledygook. To bring before this House all the traditions of parliamentary procedure as an excuse for not responding to the motion of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) is an act that demands plain speaking. I want to put it to the hon. member for Halton that he should listen to the facts and decide in this always grey area whether the purely technical answer he gave to a technical problem is not a cover-up for a very evil-smelling operation.

• (1720)

Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lee: Yes, let's hear the facts first.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have before me a document the contents of which I shall read into the record. The hon. member for Red Deer seeks information. In this case we know what we want and know what is in the documents. That is not the point. The document in front of me comes from the court in Saskatchewan. Let me give some background to the document.

During the 1974 election campaign, Liberal supporters, employed by a government agency, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act agency, or PFAA, engaged in certain political activities in the hope of electing to parliament Liberal members in the three western provinces. I knew what was going on and asked colleagues in this House and one member of the NDP to watch what was happening. Sure enough, those Liberal campaign workers made a mistake. Mr. Speaker, they were not doing these things for the love of the Liberal party. They were doing it to make money. What was the source of the money? It was not the taxpayers of Canada but a fund belonging to farmers. It was accumulated over the years when a 1 per cent fee was charged on farm sales to elevators.

Mr. Paproski: Somebody was engaged in a little hanky-panky.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): This $11 million was the source of the money these people were to get. They were to steal from that fund. The day after the election, several of them—and we have evidence concerning five—asked their supervisor to pay their expenses. The supervisors refused, because they had been sent a letter, as had these individuals, saying there was to be no political activity of any kind in the period immediately before the election. But these men ignored the directive in that letter and were observed not to follow its directions. When the supervisors refused to pay their expenses, the next day after the election they told them, or someone in that office, they were going to phone a certain man in Regina appointed by this government and now sitting in front of you as a Privy Councillor to Her Majesty. When the telephone call was made, this man said, "Ignore that supervisor. Send me your expense forms. I know they are fictitious and against orders, but I will sign them and you will be paid". And they were paid.

If you consult the records of this House, you will find that I, to some extent, and the hon. member for Red Deer to a greater extent pushed hard to draw this matter to the Auditor General's attention. The Auditor General reacted immediately. His staff were in there, broke in and took photographs of the particular documents. The hon. member for Red Deer and others exerted pressure for this matter to be drawn to the attention of the RCMP fraud squad. The hon. member acted perfectly honourably and perfectly legally. He said the citizens of this country should be protected against wrongdoing on the part of certain persons at election time. He protested against using the money of farmers which should be held in trust to pay for the improper activities of those political wardheelers.

The hon. member for Red Deer acted honourably and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) acted honourably. All of us, as politicians, acting on principles of British equity and justice, kept our mouths shut. Why? The matter was before the Auditor General and the fraud squad of the RCMP and we trusted our national police force to do the proper thing. They tried hard and succeeded partially. Only five substantive bits of evidence were collected. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to get a man accused of criminal fraud to convict himself. The police did their duty, investigated the charge and turned the matter over to the representatives of the attorney general of Saskatchewan. Several of us have read the transcript of that preliminary hearing before the judge, and even a layman can tell that the particular representative of the Crown attorney's office acting as prosecutor should be sent back to school. The judge listened to the evidence. It was transcribed; the transcript is 68 pages long. The judge said there was enough evidence to commit this man for trial and so recommended.

We acted properly, kept our mouths shut, turned what evidence we had over to the legal people, and supplied more. There is still more to come. The police did their duty, the Auditor General's department did its duty, and the judge did his duty. I ask, why has the trial not proceeded? Why has it not taken place? Rarely, indeed, does a provincial attorney general not proceed with a trial if a judge recommends it should go ahead. The usual reason for not proceeding is that one of the main witnesses dies, flees the country or is bumped off. Our laws afford every protection possible to the criminal. These men are not criminals. They are typical examples of Liberal wardheelers, typical examples of the sort of people who have been active in politics in Saskatchewan in the last 40 years. They are protegés of the Gardiner machine.

When the Liberals were thrown out in Saskatchewan, and then at the federal level, we thought that machine was finished. But, by gosh, when the Liberals were returned federally in 1963, and particularly in 1968, they tried to rebuild it. I have lived under machine politics and do not like it. I remember the days when, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) observed our only protection lay in the game laws of the province. As a young man I worked as a hired help on the farm. I wanted to move up in the world and become a municipal secretary. I even thought I might become a teacher after some training. Mr. Speaker, I could not become a municipal secretary. I could not even get into school unless I had the approval of the local Liberal MLA. My freedom to seek the employment I liked was curtailed. Now you know why I and others like me sit on this side of the House.

Mr. Kaplan: Do you mean that you would be a Liberal if you were in Ontario?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have tried to show what happens under machine-type politics. Wherever a machine rears its head, you will find me fighting against it. I do not like it. What we are witnessing here in response to the hon. member's motion is a cover-up, by members on the government side, of what is legitimate information.

● (1730)

I am going to read into the record the charge against just one man. This has the stamp of the Department of the Attorney General in Saskatchewan. The document is dated October 1, 1975. I am not a lawyer so hon. members will pardon me if I just give the big print. The information reads:

On behalf of Her Majesty the Queen

This is the information of Inspector J. Keith DANE of Regina, Saskatchewan, peace officer, hereinafter called the informant.

He had done his duty, he collected his evidence.

The informant says that he has reasonable and probable grounds to believe and does believe that Howard Ernest Buchan of Regina, Saskatchewan between the 1st day of May A.D. 1974 and the 16th day of August A.D. 1974—

Purely by accident, that is the period covering the election.

—at Regina in the Province of Saskatchewan did by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means defraud the public in general and the Government of Canada of the sum of three hundred and ninety nine dollars and seventy eight cents ($399.78) by making or causing to be made, false and fictitious travelling expense accounts and work reports for John Kormendy contrary to Section 338(1) of the Criminal Code of Canada.

That was the charge. The judge listened to the evidence of this man. It points to Buchan, an appointee of this government, for no other reason than he was part of the Gardiner machine, trusted to look after the farmers' money under PFAA.

The judge said there should be a trial; the Attorney General said no. He will have to answer for that. I became concerned about it and wrote to him. He replied on July 14, 1976, and I quote:

The decision to enter the Stay of Proceedings was made on the basis of the recommendations of this department's legal staff—

If we have to rely on that, God help this country.

—which were based entirely upon a consideration of evidential and legal matters. I am advised that there was not at any time any communication between any federal department or official, and any member of my department with respect to this prosecution.

Why would the Attorney General put in a gratuitous observation like that? I had not asked that question. What was bothering him to offer that proposal? No one from Ottawa approached me about this. It is a purely legal matter. He went on, and this is the key:

It is the duty of the prosecutor, notwithstanding an order of committal for trial, to review the evidence after the preliminary hearing to determine whether or not there is in fact a proper case to place before the trial court. The prosecution's allegations in this case were based entirely upon certain statements made by a Mr. John Kormendy, an accomplice.

I am not in a position to express an opinion on the quality of this evidence, but in substance the Attorney General turned down this request for a trial by the judge on the ground that the evidence came from one of the partners in the crime. This is known as a corroborative evidence concept. It means that if you catch five guys robbing a bank—they are caught with all the cash in their hands—and if you take the matter into court and only one guy gives evidence against the other four, the court will not accept that evidence because there is no corroborative evidence from someone other than an accomplice. You need someone else to corroborate the evidence.

We have the evidence of the cash in the hands. If they cashed those cheques, we want that evidence. We know they did but we would like to see it officially from the government. We know the orders were sent out that they must not work even on their job let alone politically. They disobeyed that. We know the money came from a fund that belonged to the farmers.

We feel that we, as Canadians, have done our duty in the legal course, stymied by this tendency not only of civil servants but of legal civil servants following the well known principle of CYA to cover themselves with paper in this type of letter.

This issue cannot die. We have before parliament a motion on the part of government to repeal the PFAA. In 1975 I asked parliament, and the government acceded, because it took it out, to take out the repeal of the PFAA from this House until this criminal fraud matter was cleared up, and not only the charges of criminal fraud, the documents about which the hon. member is after, meaning types of statements similar to what I read into the record regarding the whole file, but also political fraud. He hinted at it.

We want to find out whether the director sent the letter as ordered by the minister's office to every person, saying that he must not participate in any activity whatsoever, either legitimate or otherwise, before the election. Was that letter sent out?

Second, we would like to talk to the supervisors. Why did they refuse to sign those expense vouchers? Third, we would like to ask the staff, the people in the office in Regina, why it was, when this got into the hands of the police, that just before Christmas all the girls who had worked in that office for years, close to pension, were suddenly dismissed. What was happening in that office that would make them want to dismiss those secretaries who had been there for years? This is not criminal fraud. It is not required in this question.

We would like to ask the minister before we repeal this legislation why they kept a director of PFAA on staff, paid him $25,000 a year, yet locked him out of his own office and did not allow him in there. Why?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a serious subject. We would like to ask a whole series of questions. It is not criminal fraud but political fraud. Why were the payments made under the summer fallow program in 1972 before the election and the farmers then told they had been overpaid and had to pay part of it back?

● (1740)

We would like to ask about any of the special instructions which were sent out—why some people who were overpaid were treated differently from others. And in the 1974 election, when they were overpaid before the election, all the farmers got their money. But after the election was over they were told they had been overpaid and would have to give some back. What were the instructions which allowed that in certain cases they would negotiate, and what were the terms of those negotiations under which they would not have to pay back what they owed the government? This is not criminal fraud. It is up to us as members of parliament to try to get it out of the government when they come before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. But we cannot take the question before the Committee on Privileges and Elections until the matter of the criminal fraud is cleared up.

I know the police are angry at the incompetence of the men in the Attorney General's office in presenting the case. I know the people in the Attorney General's office don't believe the police gave all the evidence they could have given. But I do not think that on a sensitive political matter like this, affecting not only the taxpayers' money but the farmers' money, that any Attorney General, for whatever reason, should have denied justice to the people of Canada.

This man who was charged with criminal fraud should have a chance to be tried by judge and jury. That is why it is important to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) that we get access to these things because we are dealing with documents that are official—not just information we know about. We have had telephone conversations with the various people involved, and so on.

Our request is a reasonable one and does not affect the question of security of the state. It is not a question affecting the relationship between the law officers of the Crown and the minister. It is a question of getting documents which are similar to the one from which I have just quoted. We have a job to do in Saskatchewan as well, to straighten out this question of legal niceties and technicalities being used as devices to keep justice from being done. If we are to do our job as citizens in Saskatchewan it would be a big help if the government in Ottawa did not deny us what we believe to be a reasonable request, access to the four or five documents which give us the facts of each case so that the people will know it is not an isolated case but part of a wider plan. There may have been others over and above the five, but the documents we want are on the five that are actually tangible cases.

I believe reasonable people would say that there is nothing in these documents beyond the fact that they acted in this case against orders, it was improper, illegal, and they got the money and cashed it. That is all. They stole it. They call it criminal fraud. But we have another job—one we cannot do until we clear up the criminal fraud. If we are to do our duty here and bring the matter before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and call before it not only the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who acted as an innocent bystander in this whole thing, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who knows the situation well, then we have to face up to the fact that we cannot let die on the Hansard record the question of what happened on that awful day, July 8, 1976.

When I asked the Minister of Agriculture about the burning of the documents, he said, "Well, the police took all they wanted, anything we needed we kept and everything else which was irrelevant or trivial—"insignificant" was his word—was destroyed." I asked him who instructed the burning of these papers. Here is his answer, as reported on page 15157 of Hansard:

> The information which was given to me was that no instructions were given to the person in charge who decided that all insignificant documents should be destroyed.

So no instructions were given by the Minister of Agriculture to destroy those documents. But somebody down in the office who had fired all the girls, kept the director out of his office, on his own initiative burned all the documents. I would think that with that type of evidence before us we have to face the fact that we are dealing with a serious political situation in the west. We know the close tie-up between the major newspapers in Saskatchewan and this political machine. And just last week we saw more evidence of it. A minister of the Crown, knowing that all these things are riding forward and will maybe come to light one of these days, suddenly issued a warning to two newspapers: "You publish or distribute that particular document and my lawyers will have words to say to you." And these two docile papers agreed not to distribute the document. But that same warning was not thrust on every other newpaper in Canada—because they are not part of the machine in Saskatchewan.

We are fighting a messy situation out there, Mr. Speaker. We ask the government and parliament to back us in cleaning it up. That is all we are asking. It is a serious matter, and I do not want to see it resting on the conscience of this parliament that we will not face up to it but prefer to follow the technical explanation that the documents cannot be given because to do so would destroy the relationship between the police and the minister. That is not good enough.

I could go on and develop the various arguments I have raised in these last minutes. But I think I have made my case as well as I can. We do have some responsibility to our country and to the legal system. Also we have responsibility to see that justice is done, and in this case justice is not being done because smart lawyers and teachers of lawyers use superficial legal reasons to avoid justice in this country. Whether it be in the province of Saskatchewan or at the federal government level this must be fought, and I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer for having the courage to bring it up.

Mr. Kaplan: I know that the time of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain has expired but I wonder if I might be permitted to ask him a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As an extension of time was permitted the hon. member, I suppose I can take it upon myself to allow a question.

Mr. Kaplan: At the beginning of his remarks, did the hon. member indicate that he already had some or all of the documents whose production he is seeking?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I made it clear in my remarks that we know what is contained in the documents. We were the ones who got the Auditor General and the police moving on this. We know that we do not have the official documents on the basis of which we can speak and say that our record is the authentic one. The only way in which a member of parliament can get the official documents is by putting down a motion for the prodution of papers. We do not have the official documents but, for example, in the case of Saskatchewan they sent us a full transcript of the case. We have something with which to debate. The answer to the hon. member's question, in simple terms, is this: we know what the documents are, and they are no more serious than what we have here. It is not just an isolated case. We know there are other people involved who are not giving evidence and whom we would, naturally, like to attract.

Since some people are doing their duty and giving evidence for the state, others should come forward too to play their part, not by protecting these people with motives which are not proper, but by turning them loose on to the justice system. Let the judges and juries decide whether they are guilty of criminal fraud and not an attorney general nor an ex-minister of justice in a de facto sense interfering with our justice system. Even though the amounts are small, just $300 for a couple of weeks work, the fact is they did that, and had the colossal gall to steal that little bit of money in trust that should go to the farmers.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the arguments and allegations put forward by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). They were alleging a cover-up and evasion, which is a very serious allegation indeed. I found it rather interesting that they could make this charge in view of the fact that it was the attorney general of Saskatchewan who decided to stay the proceedings. The hon. member pointed out in a letter he referred to from the attorney general of Saskatchewan that the reason why the attorney general stayed the proceedings was that the rationale or basis for the commitment to trial was based on the evidence of an accomplice who was involved in allegations of fraud. Surely that matter is properly within the jurisdiction of the attorney general of Saskatchewan.

What the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain is asking of us I think he should ask of the attorney general of Saskatchewan. He is asking us about cover-up and evasion when it is the attorney general of Saskatchewan who stayed the proceedings and who is responsible for the administration of justice in that province. It is a very serious charge and allegation that the hon. member is putting forward.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): It is indeed.

Mr. Lee: Mr. Speaker, the motion put before us by the hon. member for Red Deer is one requiring extremely careful consideration. I say that in view of the fact that we are involving ourselves in the matter when, as I have said, it is the attorney general of Saskatchewan who is responsible for the administration of justice in that province. Indeed the motion must be weighed very carefully in terms of an area which has always been highly productive of controversy. I refer, of course, to the area of provincial as opposed to federal jurisdiction.

During the time allotted I shall endeavour to touch upon those particular aspects of the problem to which this motion would seem to relate. These, I believe, lie in the contractual responsibilities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to provide provincial police services to certain provinces; secondly, in the traditional responsibility of provinces for the administration of criminal justice; and thirdly, in the effective delivery of police services.

Effectually, a paramount aspect of the question to be resolved would seem to be whether or not this House may appropriately order that there be tabled the contents of a file or files which are under the control and subject to the direction of the attorney general of a province. It is granted that the investigation in question was carried out by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in respect of a federal statute, but both the investigation and subsequent judicial proceedings were made under the jurisdiction of the attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan. Under such circumstances we must ask ourselves this critical question: Would the House of Commons be justified in ordering case files clearly under a provincial jurisdiction to be produced here?

As I said, the investigation in this connection was with respect to a federal statute but the alleged offence was criminal in nature and resulted in fact in a charge of fraud being laid under section 338(1) of the Criminal Code of Canada. Responsibility for prosecution was, therefore, clearly that of the attorney general of Saskatchewan, not that of the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox).

Let us for the moment examine the responsibility of the RCMP in such instances. The contract under which police services are provided by the force to a province by virtue of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act reads in fact:

1. Canada shall, for the purposes of this agreement and subject to the terms herein, provide and maintain provincial police services within the province during the term of this agreement.

2. The internal management of the Provincial Police Services, including the administration and application of professional police procedures, shall remain under the control of Canada.

From this we see that only the internal management of the services remains under federal control. Obviously, this does not include the operation of the police service and operations include the investigative processes. These processes in turn include investigative files and materials. The maintenance of these files is an administrative matter, but use of the contents of the files, in my view, must be considered as operational.

Examining the federal-provincial contract for police services further, we find that:

1. The Commanding Officer of the Provincial Police Services shall for the purposes of this agreement act under the direction of the Attorney General in the administration of justice in the province.

2. Nothing in this agreement shall be interpreted as limiting in any way the powers of the Attorney General, relating to the administration of justice within the province.

By these terms, there can be no doubt that the RCMP in the administration of justice in a contracting province act as agents of the attorney general of that province.

Pertaining to case files and other relevant data, may I quote further from the contracts which are entered into between the two levels of government:

3. Any information

(a) in possession of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and

(b) which affects the administration of justice in the Province shall be provided to the Attorney General in a manner and form to be agreed upon by the Commanding Officer and the Attorney General.

The services of the RCMP to the contracting provinces have been provided for many years, in Saskatchewan since 1905 in fact, and continue to be provided under these or similar terms. To the best of my knowledge, these terms have heretofore always been scrupulously adhered to by the contracting parties. Would we then, by asking for production of documents rightfully under control of a provincial authority, be contributing to a breach of contract—in the process demeaning, it seems to me, the traditional bond of trust which has historically existed between the force and the provinces it has so faithfully served?

This, in effect, is exactly what the hon. members for Red Deer and Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain are asking. I seriously put to them whether they have considered the full consequences of what they are requesting. I am fully confident that if the hon. members were in full grasp of all the facts, they would not make such a request. We have had excellent relations with the provinces and surely we must continue to ensure that we do not disrupt this state of affairs.

In examining the motion before us, we must be truly conscious of the irreparable harm that could result from what may well be interpreted in some quarters as encroachment upon a subject which, under section 92 of the British North America Act, has traditionally been exclusive to provincial legislation:

In each province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subject next herein-after enumerated; that is to say, and referring to our particular concern here today:

—the Administration of Justice in the Province, including the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organization of Provincial Courts, both of Civil and of Criminal Jurisdiction, and including Procedure in Civil Matters in those Courts.

The matter in question was investigated and prosecuted under the jurisdiction of the attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan, a jurisdiction whose sources are found at the very roots of our Constitution. If we accept, as I think we all do, that the administration of justice is a subject of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, then we must accept that only the responsible provincial authorities are empowered to produce material relating to this particular case, and indeed all such cases.

As I indicated when this motion was tabled on February 23, 1977, and I quote from page 3345 of Hansard:

—the transcript of the preliminary hearing will be made available to the hon. member, upon request, by the office of the deputy attorney general, Regina, Saskatchewan.

The hon. member has a copy of the transcript because he referred to it.

To request that papers under the control and direction of the attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan be produced in this House would, I submit, sorely test, and be highly detrimental to the conduct of relations with the province of Saskatchewan and, because of the unprecedented character of such an action within the area of administration of justice, with all the other provinces that contract for the services of the RCMP.

Federal-provincial respect of jurisdictional boundaries is vital to an effective policing system in Canada. The police battle against crime grows daily more complex and demanding. Its successful prosecution depends upon a wide variety of factors, not the least of which is a clear division of responsibilities and jurisdictions. Accordingly, if we were to accede to the hon. member for Red Deer's motion, I submit we would disrupt the clear lines of jurisdiction. Certainly this is not what we need in this nation. If we are to be successful in combatting crime—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to cut in to—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I just interrupt to ask a very important and brief question. Did the hon. member through his department ask the attorney general to produce these documents so that he can supply them to us?

Mr. Towers: Yes or no.

Mr. Lee: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that; I would have to check into that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. members are aware that we have gone beyond the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business, and if we are to pursue questions or speeches we would need unanimous consent. Therefore, I think the House had better proceed now with the adjournment motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—POSSIBILITY OF CONTROLLING USE OF TOBACCO

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) on May 26, 1977, which appears in Hansard at page 5964 as follows:

In view of the known dangers of smoking to health, is the minister considering the possibility of controlling tobacco under the Food and Drugs Act?

The minister's answer was: "Not at this time". This answer is most unfortunate when the matter is so serious. I should point out to the members of the House that this same matter was presented before the United States Senate on the same date as I presented it here in the House of Commons.

Over the past 70 years people have become increasingly concerned with the quality of their environment. Techonological developments have given scientists the means to protect society from once dreaded diseases, and in many cases these maladies are now almost unheard of. One of the reasons for this vast improvement in public health is the discovery and availability of drugs to prevent and cure. However, there is also another component which is often forgotten, and that is the regulation of the purity of food and water.

Perhaps one of the most common defences used to protect our health is the strict standards which our drinking water must measure up to. This same type of protection is also provided to ensure that the food we eat, and the drugs we must take from time to time, will benefit rather than harm us. Similarly, we are exceedingly cautious in the types of chemicals available for general use.

The success of those who administer the statutes and regulations concerning water, food, and chemicals is recognized by everyone. We are constantly made aware by the various media of the concerns of the scientists who are continually examining and evaluating the many new substances which may affect some aspect of our lives. Often we do not fully understand the technicalities involved, but because of the track record of our authorities we accept and respect their warnings.

I would like to turn to a particular warning that has been expressed by health authorities around the world. I refer to the specified danger of inhaling the smoke of tobacco. This danger is, according to those who know, one that is avoidable. However, unlike our water and food, which we also take into our bodies, with a few exceptions the air we breathe is not protected by similar health standards.

It is generally recognized that the use of tobacco products has a long history of social acceptance. Moreover, smoking has become a type of status symbol. We also use smoking to celebrate a happy event—a proud new father passing out cigars—a carton of cigarettes or a pipe for a Christmas present. However, it is now a well-established fact that smoke can be harmful to smokers, and recent studies indicate almost equally as harmful to non-smokers.

A report completed by Dr. Brunneman and Dr. Hoffman, of the Naylor Dana Institute for Disease Prevention of the American Health Foundation in New York, suggests that non-smokers are suffering seriously if they are subjected to smoke-filled spaces. Their report warns that:

> . . . during one hour in a smoke-polluted indoor environment, we may inhale air polluted with volatile nitrosamines—a possible cancer inducing agent—in amounts equal to those in the sum of 5 to 30 cigarettes.

A report in the Montreal Gazette on May 31, 1977, quoted the scientists' paper noting:

> The sidestream smoke of cigarettes and cigars contains at least a ten times higher quantity of volatile nitrosamines than inhaled smoke.

Many Canadians have become increasingly curious as to why their governments, both federal and provincial, have not as yet enacted preventative legislation which could require advertising of tobacco products to include details of the make up of tobacco smoke which could affect smokers and non-smokers alike.

There is a need for authority to control the classes, quantities and qualities of the chemicals in tobacco sold to the smoker, and consideration should be given to the method by which tobacco products are distributed. Tobacco smoke in crowded places used by governments and places under governments' jurisdiction, such as post offices and other public services, aircraft, trains, buses, and marine vessels, ought to be legally restricted. Without such legislation the public cannot sense or believe that their health authorities have a real interest in the dangers of this product.

The Royal College of Physicians recently reported that:

> A cigarette smoker shortens his life span by about 5.5 minutes for each cigarette smoked. Still-births and deaths in the first week of life occur nearly 30 percent more often in the babies of mothers who smoke regularly after the fourth month of pregnancy.

Recently a number of organizations opposed to cigarette smoking tried to force the U.S. food and drug administration to regulate the sale of cigarettes as strictly as the agency plans to regulate saccharin. Two former surgeons-general, Dr. Jesse Steinfield and Dr. Luther Terry, supported the move.

In the June 4 issue of the Toronto Star there were several letters supporting the restriction of tobacco smoke in public places.

Ottawa City Council has recently passed a municipal bylaw which prohibits smoking in banks, service areas of retail outlets, office reception areas, elevators, escalators or stairways, and limits smoking to designated areas in restaurants and hospitals. Taxi drivers may request passengers not to smoke, and similarly passengers may ask the drivers to refrain. Toronto has also passed the same type of restrictions, and I understand that Salmon Arm, British Columbia; Richmond, British Columbia; and Calgary, Alberta, are also considering restrictions on the use of tobacco in public places.

[Mr. Robinson.]

Not too long ago I received a letter from a constituent who wondered why we continue to spend millions of dollars on health care for smoking related diseases when these illnesses can so easily be controlled.

With increased medical findings that indicate tobacco smoke does harm to those who do not smoke; when surgeons-general endorse a plan to restrict the availability of tobacco products; when many Canadian municipalities are presently taking it upon themselves to provide for non-smokers, we cannot stand to one side. A failure to enact legislation to regulate tobacco smoke, a move which is receiving great public support, on inter-provincial aircraft, trains, highway buses, and marine vessels indicates that there is a lack of conviction on our part in the concern we have expressed on this matter.

I know that there is great concern for the person who suffers from tobacco smoke. If a hockey stick manufacturer in Quebec can provide a $500-employee bonus as an incentive to stop smoking, then surely we can provide for the non-smoker who does not wish to breathe tobacco smoke. The best way to do this is to regulate the use of tobacco in public places under federal jurisdiction.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for his interest in the issue of smoking. He himself last year was the proponent of a bill which would have given legal authority for public transporters to regulate smoking aboard their vehicles of transportation. Unfortunately, the opposition delayed the debate so long—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The official opposition.

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, the official opposition delayed the debate so long that the bill was not passed. Since then we have been considering the possibility of getting an agreement to have the bill considered and passed quickly in the House by all the parties. I note, however, that contrary to the question raised by the hon. member the other day, this is not something that can be done through the Food and Drug Act; it requires a special piece of legislation.

So far as regulating under the Food and Drug Act is concerned, we have been acting through the means of education and co-operation from industry in the last few years, always with the power to regulate if necessary. But it has been shown, I believe, in one of the steps that has been taken that we can achieve as much by education and by co-operation with the industry. In fact, we can show a natural decrease of 11 per cent among males 15 years and over between 1965 and 1975, declining to 43 per cent in the later years. We see among adult women that the percentage has remained about the same. In the population between the years 15 to 19 the proportion of smokers among young men has dropped from 36 per cent to 30 per cent between 1970 and 1975, and the 1975 survey confirmed that smoking among young women has levelled off at 27 per cent to 28 per cent.

I can also report that the tar and nicotine content in cigarettes has been going down consistently over the last few years, and now there are two cigarettes on the market with tar and nicotine levels as low as 1 and 0.1 milligram respectively. As hon. members know, there has been a discontinuation of radio and television advertising of cigarettes, and there are warnings of tar and nicotine on packages and in printed media advertisements. More recently, manufacturers have been giving particular emphasis to promoting low tar and nicotine cigarettes.

I am not going to say that I am satisfied with the progress which has been made. Warnings, and tar and nicotine statements are too often difficult to read or even recognize, and there is room for further reductions in tar, nicotine, carbon monoxide and other smoke constituents. I would also like to see less emphasis on promoting higher tar brands. We are involved in very active negotiations with the manufacturers on these and other matters, and I am expecting a report on this subject later this month or early in July.

As I have said, I would prefer to see our further goals achieved as much as possible by negotiation rather than by legislation. However, I will not hesitate to consider legislation, including the use of the Food and Drugs Act, if it appears that satisfactory progress cannot be maintained by voluntary measures.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—BASIS ON WHICH FUNDS DISTRIBUTED TO PROVINCES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on May 30 I put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) inquiring as to what criteria were used in the disbursement of the capital budget commitment for funding under CMHC. The minister stated that the allotment of funds was made in accordance with programs established under the National Housing Act.

The reason I asked that question was that the minister of housing and public works of Alberta has suggested on several occasions that Albertans have been treated less than equitably in past CMHC funding. All one has to do is look at the figures which are available. When we do so, we find that the capital budget commitment for funding under CMHC on a nation-wide per capita basis is $82.68. Albertans receive, on an average per capita basis, $56.94. The province of Quebec receives $80 on a per capita basis. Saskatchewan receives $112, and British Columbia receives $86. Judging by these figures Alberta obviously is not getting its fair share.

The Alberta minister wrote a letter to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs indicating that Alberta is not being treated equitably in this regard. He stated that Alberta is a leading province in economic activity, and that there is good reason to believe that the influx of people into that province will not subside in the near future and may in fact accelerate. The Alberta minister stated that he would appreciate the assurance that, irrespective of the Alberta government's increased initiatives in the housing field, the federal government would make available to Albertans an equitable share of national government initiatives in housing and in related fields. I have stated that on a national average the disbursement by CMHC is $82.68 and that Alberta's disbursement is $56.94, I find it extremely disappointing that a national program like this is disbursed on an unequal basis.

In the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on provincial economic accounts it was indicated that Albertans contributed four times more than any other resident in Canada on a per capita basis. The tab for every Albertan in 1974 was $1,093. British Columbia residents, combined with Yukon and Northwest Territories residents, contributed on a per capita basis $268, and Ontario residents contributed $172. We realize that we have to contribute more because we have a stable, economic climate, no thanks to the federal government. We are deeply disturbed when a national program is extended on an unfair basis nation-wide with Alberta receiving less than its share.

What happened with the Central Mortgage and Housing capital commitment program is happening in many areas. One has only to look at the Department of Supply and Services. Alberta has almost 8 per cent of the population of Canada yet it receives only 4 per cent of the contracts awarded by that department. The same is true of the capital construction program under the Department of Public Works; Alberta receives only about 4 per cent of the total expended under this program.

With the economic activity in Alberta being what it is, we need housing initiatives. I ask the parliamentary secretary to let us know the basis on which the capital budget commitment for funding under CMHC is disbursed to the provinces, what the criteria for programs are under the National Housing Act, and if they are such that some provinces are treated unjustly, then would the department re-evaluate the program so that it is fair to all instead of making second-class citizens of some?

Mr. Walter Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to the question put by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga).

There are several factors which must be examined and weighed carefully in the process of allocating the CMHC capital budget to the provinces. No single factor can be selected as being the most important determinant of the final allocation.

Amongst the most prominent factors are housing needs and demand. The housing needs of the provinces vary greatly not only on the basis of population size, incomes, the condition of the housing stock, and the level of demand, but also in respect of the need for specific programs which are offered by CMHC.

In capacity and performance the provinces vary greatly in their ability to take up funds which they are allocated. In deciding on the appropriate level of support in each province, past performance in the programs is examined as well as the prospects for the coming year.

Consultation between federal and provincial housing officials occurs regularly, and provincial housing agencies are formally consulted on their views and plans with respect to funding levels in each program during the budget preparation process.

As far as the known future activity and federal-provincial agreements is concerned, CMHC, through its regional and local offices, is able to identify in several programs when applications will be submitted for funding. Moreover, some programs operate under agreements between the federal and provincial governments, and these must be taken into account.

In addition to these considerations, CMHC does monitor performance in each province throughout the year and periodically re-examines the allocations in light of provincial intentions and changing market circumstances.

This question stems from remarks made in April by Mr. Yurko, minister of housing and public works in Alberta, in which he suggested that the province did not receive its fair share on a per capita basis of the CMHC allocation. He did acknowledge, however, that Alberta's share had been gradually increased from past years' levels. While it is true that Alberta does receive the lowest per capita share of the capital budget, Mr. Yurko failed to note the high proportion of grants which Alberta receives under the sewage treatment program and which are not reported as part of the capital budget. In 1977, the allocation to Alberta under the sewage treatment program grants is $15 million, or 24 per cent of the national grant budget for the program.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—INQUIRY WHETHER DISABILITY PENSION WILL BE RESTORED TO 1972 VALUE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) the question I put to him on Tuesday, March 1, as reported in Hansard at page 3516. My question concerns the rate of the war disability pension.

As the minister knows, the beginnings of a pension on the basis of disability for veterans who had active service were established in the early 1920's, shortly after World War I. At that time the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension was geared to the wage or salary paid to cleaners in the federal public service. During the years which followed many increases were made in that basis rate, but it got so far out of line with wages paid in the public service that, 50 years later, it was a crying shame. Fortunately, in 1972, 50 years later, this was corrected.

The correction established an even better basis than had been established back in the early 1920's. The rate of a 100 per cent war disability pension was established in relation to the composite wage or the average wage of five selected categories in the public service. The rate of the pension is not precisely the same number of dollars, because the fact that the war disability pension is free of income tax was taken into consideration. At any rate, that was the basis on which the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension was established in 1972. It was done after an extensive study of the question had been made by a special tripartite committee.

One of the things the Committee recommended was that once the rate was established on this new basis, it should stay there, that is to say, it should continue to be the average of salaries and wages paid to those five groups in the public service. I was elated with that recommendation and delighted that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs approved it and recommended it to the House. But when the minister brought in the bill which had been approved by the government—there is a meaning in there which I hope is not lost, because I am sure the minister would like to have done better—the provision was not to keep the rate of the 100 per cent war disability pension tied to the wage and salary scale to which I referred but, instead, simply to increase that 1972 rate on the basis of the rise in the consumer price index. That happened between 1972 and 1977.

What some of us were afraid would happen and predicted has come to pass. The fact is that now there is a gap of nearly $45 a month, or about $540 a year, between the composite of the wages and salaries of the five groups in the public service and the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension. I know this is only four or five years down the road since the new scale was set, but I hope it will not take until the year 2022 to get the rate back to the basis we established earlier. The minister and I may still be here, but we may have some new colleagues around to whom we shall need to tell the whole story.

I know the minister is interested in this topic. He has answered questions on it a number of times, usually to tell us he is reviewing it. The matter was raised at the last meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs by the representatives of the National Council of Veterans Organizations and at that point the minister again said the question was under review. It disappoints me a bit that up to this point all we have been able to get from the minister is the acknowledgement that this question is still under review. I am sure he agrees with me that this cannot go on.

We must not let the same thing happen from 1972 on that happened from the early 1920's on. Let us get the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension for our veterans back where we put it in 1972. I do not like the government forever telling us that it is restraint that stands in the way, because there are a lot of places in government spending where restraint is not practised. That certainly should not be an excuse for not dealing with this important issue.

I am grateful to the minister for being here at this time of the day. I look forward to an answer in which I hope this time he will say something more than that it is under review. At least he has three minutes to say it. I look forward hopefully to the minister's answer.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as many of our colleagues are aware, prior to 1972 the basic rate of pension was amended from time to time, usually following representations by veterans organizations that the rates had become out of date because of the advancing economy. These increases were usually on a flat percentage basis approximating what was considered to be fair and reasonable at the time.

In January, 1968, the rate of pension for a veteran whose pensioned disabilities were assessed at 100 per cent, and who was unmarried with no dependants, was $265 a month. A 10 per cent increase was granted on April 1, 1971, to bring the rate to $292 a month. The indexing of pensions was instituted, so that because of changes in the consumer price index the rate was increased to $302.51 a month, effective January 1, 1972.

It was recognized that some better method of determining the basic amount of disability pension had to be found, and in 1972 a joint study group on the basic rate of pension was established. This study group had representation from the veterans organizations as well as from the Canadian Pension Commission and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Their report referred to the historic principle that pension was based on the earning power of a man in the class of an untrained labourer. On the basis that it would be more meaningful and simpler to administer, the joint study group recommended that the basic rate of pension be directly related to the earning power or unskilled categories of public servants. It also recommended that neither the pre-enlistment nor post-discharge financial condition of the disabled veteran should affect the amount of pension, but that it continue to be paid on the basis of the percentage of incapacity caused by the pensioned disability to perform work in the general labour market. If, for example, a veteran lost a limb, he should be pensioned for the loss of the limb and not because it was or was not particularly useful in his trade or profession.

In the upshot, the joint study group recommended that the salary, after tax, of a composite group, composed of five classes of unskilled public servants be accepted as the basis on which the disability pension should be based. This was done, and in June, 1973, Bill C-202 was enacted which established the basic rate of pension in relation to five named classes of unskilled public servants. This resulted in an over-all increase of pension at that time of some 24 per cent. Since then, there have been annual increases based on consumer price index changes, so that today the 100 per cent disability pensioner, unmarried with no dependants or other allowances, receives $556.62 a month.

In 1974, 1975 and 1976, because the pension rate was tied to the consumer price index, it was slightly more than it would have been if it had been tied only to the five categories of unskilled public servant. This year, however, after deduction of income tax, the spread between the income of the unskilled public servant and the pensioner has reached the point where the pension rate is $44.72 a month behind that of the composite group of unskilled public servants.

I am well aware of the spread and have the matter under study. Members of the House are aware, I am sure, that the Canadian Pension Commission and the Department of Veterans Affairs, and the other agencies for which I am responsible, are constantly seeking ways and means of improving the lot of the veterans.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.30 o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.31 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (for Mr. Chrétien) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton).

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-23 and the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), suggesting that the bill should not be read the third time now but that the committee should have an opportunity to reconsider certain of its clauses.

I have followed the debate closely and I appreciate what has been said by the majority of members taking part. It is obvious to me, from listening to the debate, that the farmers have nobody to speak for them on the government side since no one on that side has participated in the debate on this amendment.

Mr. Paproski: Either that or they are afraid.

Mr. Elzinga: Had it not been for the official opposition, this bill would have been already enacted into legislation and our farming population would have found on February 1 that they would have to keep their figures in terms of hectares and tonnes. The Liberal administration thought that this bill would go through with a short debate prior to the Christmas recess, but as is so often the case western members sensed that this was something to which the prairie farmer was bitterly opposed.

This amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act will not sell another bushel of wheat for the western farmer or raise the price of that wheat by one cent. It simply reduces the cost to the grain companies which have to convert bushels into tonnes for international markets, which they have been doing for years. If this bill is enacted into legislation as it presently stands, we will have many angry individuals in western Canada. I have a stack of letters on this issue, all expressing opposition to it.

Our friends opposite so often talk about democracy, but I think this legislation gives us a fine example of the way the government believes in participatory democracy. I say the government does not believe in participatory democracy. I have a stack of letters close to a foot high and I hope to send out my speech to each one of these letter writers, though if hon. members wish I could tabulate them for the House.

Mr. Paproski: I have some here which I can read too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) has the floor for the purpose of making a speech, and I think we should all listen.

Mr. Elzinga: Anyone who travels in western Canada realizes that the majority of the western farmers are opposed to this legislation. I was in my constituency this past week discussing various issues with the farming population, and this was one of their main areas of concern. As the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) pointed out earlier, they were very disappointed when the government pushed the abolition of capital punishment down their throats, and this is another issue which is being pushed down their throats.

Mr. Marchand: There was a free vote on capital punishment.

Mr. Elzinga: There was no free vote on capital punishment in the cabinet. That was the biggest farce there ever was, and you know it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Pembina will please address the Chair.

Mr. Elzinga: There was no free vote.

Mr. Roy (Laval): I voted for retention, and that was a free vote.

Mr. Elzinga: A free vote—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I suggest we get back to the bill under discussion. Capital punishment is now in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: As I was saying a little earlier, Mr. Speaker, I have a stack of letters about a foot high all expressing opposition to metric conversion. Rather than read them all into the record, let me refer to one brief letter from Pibroch, Alberta, which is in my constituency, which expresses the sentiments of the correspondence that I have received.

Dear Sir:

I understand that the bills concerning metric changeover have not yet passed in the House of Commons, and I would like to register my complete opposition to the passing of any legislation which would put this metric system into operation. Farming is difficult enough without any further complications, such as this would cause.

I trust that you as my representative in Ottawa will vote against any passing of bills to further change over to metric, especially where it concerns the farming industry in any way.

This is exactly what the amendment seeks. We wish further to consider the clauses affecting the farming population. Clauses 2, 6, 8 and 10 refer to the farming sector and deal specifically with tonnes and hectares.

I believe the minister stated on second reading that all of the farm organizations were in favour of this legislation. The heads of these farm organizations were about as in tune with the people as this Liberal administration is; they did not bother to gather a consensus among their own membership. What happened was that they were brainwashed by our friends opposite to consent to this metric legislation. They followed the foolish advice of the present government.

Since then the locals of the many farm organizations have gathered together in opposition to this legislation. I have a letter from the Westlock District 32 Unifarm which I wish to put on record; it challenges what the minister has said in this House, namely, that the farm organizations were in favour of this legislation. This is another example of hon. members opposite misleading this Chamber. This is a letter from Mrs. Donna-Faye Brown, secretary of the Westlock District 32 Unifarm:

At a recent director's meeting of Westlock District 32 Unifarm a motion was carried that the understated resolution be submitted to Unifarm Region 3 Convention to be held at Freedom Hall on April 5, 1977. A subsequent motion was carried instructing the secretary to forward to yourself a copy of the same resolution.

The resolution herewith reads:

Be it resolved that, in Canada, both the mile and the acre be retained as the unit of measure in our system of measurement.

It is our hope that the resolution may add strength to the arguments of yourself and your colleagues in the debate concerning metric conversion.

I am encouraged to see the membership rise up in opposition to this legislation. I think that the leaders of various farm organizations have now found that they put themselves in a difficult position in consenting to this legislation at the beginning. We are finding with this legislation, as with so many pieces of legislation which the government brings forward, that the government has no idea of the cost involved. All we can do is estimate the cost. In reality, I do not believe the present administration has even inquired what the estimate is. In the United States the metric conversion cost estimate ranges from $40 billion to $100 billion. Taking the usual ten to one differential between Canada and the United States, that means that between $4 billion and $10 billion will have to be spent here to convert to the metric system.

As I said earlier, it appears that the government, even though we are facing inflationary times and massive government spending, is not concerned at all with the cost of converting to the metric system. One has only to look at the record of the government to be rather hesitant to support anything that it brings forward.

Sidestepping the issue of metrication for a moment, if we review some of the past happenings on the part of this administration we see that in this country we are facing record inflation, record unemployment, record trade deficits, record budgetary deficits—

Mr. McKenzie: Record deficits everywhere.

Mr. Elzinga: —record interest rates, record mortgage rates, and record over-all prices. We have the highest level of foreign borrowing of any industrialized nation. The way this government has driven us into debt is indeed frightening. As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) said, we have record budgetary deficits. We find eight out of the last nine budgets presented by this government to this House were deficit budgets. When the minister decides to enter into this debate, I hope he will share with us exactly what metrication is going to cost Canadians.

● (2020)

We received a commitment from the minister that certain portions of this legislation will not be proclaimed until he consults with the various farm organizations. We on this side of the House want more than just what he says. We want some specifics so that we can be assured they will abide by what they are saying to us. We have seen them talking out of both sides of their mouths too often. One only has to look back at the 1974 election, and the flip-flop which occurred shortly after that election in regard to wage and price controls. One can go further back than that and look at the 1972 election when we advocated a modest increase for pensioners and the indexing of personal income taxes. At that time we were severely criticized by our honourable opponents.

Mr. McKenzie: Honourable? Come off it.

Mr. Elzinga: Maybe I should say "not so honourable". Immediately after the 1972 election, when they formed their minority position, we found them implementing exactly what they had criticized us for. On many occasions our party has attempted to be helpful in dealing with this legislation, but we find Liberal members opposite are not willing to take a little bit of good advice and give in to the wishes of the western farmer. Since they have refused to abide by the good advice we have shared with them in respect to this legislation, I can assure hon. members opposite that we are going to put up a strenuous fight in opposition to this bill. If they have any hope of recessing on June 30 with this legislation passed as it is, I think they should seriously reconsider it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: It is obvious some Canadians are going to be hurt more than others when we convert to the metric system.

Mr. Marchand: Sharpen up your arrows.

Mr. Elzinga: Oh, we shall.

Mr. Paproski: Look who is sharpening the arrows.

Mr. Elzinga: The over-all cost in the end is going to be assumed by the consumer because of the increase in commodity prices. This is another example of the lack of concern which this administration has for the western farmer. As I said earlier, I have not heard one member opposite speaking to this amendment. That only leads me to believe that there is no one on that side who is seriously interested in representing the view of the western Canadian farmer.

In closing, I commend the hon. member for Red Deer and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain for bringing forward the amendment. It was encouraging to see the discussion we had in private members' hour also. We found much the same thing as we are finding in this debate, two western individuals in the Progressive Conservative party put forward a proposition to the government respecting production of papers, and hon. members on that side of the House did not see fit to respond with a western member even though it concerned allegations in the province of Saskatchewan. It is extremely disappointing that a government hoping to govern a nation does not recognize the views of a certain segment of our population, that specifically being western Canadians.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure tonight in rising to support the amendment to refer this bill back to committee. I also take pleasure in the fact that some great members of parliament who sat in this House came from the constituency in which I was born. As a member of parliament, I spoke first as the member for Bow River, Alberta, and now I speak as the member for Calgary North, which is a seat which was created in 1968. My grandfather settled there in 1883.

Like many hundreds of thousands of people, my father went out to western Canada. He stopped at a place called Saskatoon. At that time there were two houses, a few tents and a slew on Second Avenue. My father was a city boy, a chartered accountant from London, although he was Welsh. He met a man by the name of MacMillan from Glengarry, Ontario. They had a discussion concerning where he should settle and decided to go southwest of Saskatoon. At that time in 1905 there was no railroad. On that site today there is a town by the name of Rosetown. There used to be a constituency by the name of Rosetown-Biggar. A very distinguished gentleman used to have breakfast at my home on many occasions, a Mr. M. J. Coldwell.

An hon. Member: A great Canadian!

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, he was a great Canadian. He was a very able member of parliament and was always a gentleman.

I take great pride in entering this debate tonight because I hold in my hand Christie's Assessment and Tax Roll for Saskatchewan. When the settlers flocked from Europe, Ontario and Quebec to settle the west, they came from various walks of life.

Mr. Marchand: We were there first.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know what you are talking about, but I am talking about history which the prairie people are proud of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I would hope the minister would be as proud of the prairie provinces as I am. That is where I was reared. I was one of the grandsons of people who came from Quebec, Ontario, Europe and Asia.

The first school established at Rosetown was 2196 Muirland school. Last summer I was back visiting the old homestead, which is a beautiful home but no one is living there, and I went into the old library. It touched my heart to find the Christie's Assessment and Tax Roll which goes back to 1906. My father put together the list of the first settlers who settled there. In those days each settler was given a quarter section of land under the Torrens Land System, the metric system. If you did certain things to the land, then you could buy another quarter at $1 an acre. That country, which I am talking about with great pride, became the bread basket of the world. At 17 years of age I had the privilege of teaching school in a place called Zealandial, Saskatchewan, and 90 per cent of the people there were French Canadians, and great settlers.

In the area just south of there where I was raised, the settlers came from Ontario and Europe. When I look down the list of names of people past and gone, I see names like the Russells, the Ritchies, Frank Woolliams, Charlie Palmer and many others. They put together a school in western Canada—Muirland school 2196. The taxes on each quarter were $8 in those years. It is all written down as to who paid and where.

The Torrens Land System was not something created by Canada, and that is why I mention it. It was created by a man from New Zealand, Mr. Toms, Q.C., who is also gone now. His partner, Frank Bestido, Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan, wrote a book, "The Torrens Land System". Long before people came from Ontario, Quebec, and various countries in Europe, surveyors carved out a system called the registration system according to which they divided the country into sections of 640 acres, each quarter section being 160 acres. That is the history of the west, the history of the bread basket of the world.

The bread basket of Canada has poured millions of dollars into Ontario and the industrial centres, buying farm machinery, cars and trucks. I see today in western Canada—I was home on May 24—a man with a tractor pulling 85 feet of drills, and I think of my father who told me that when he landed in Saskatoon he saw a mile and a half of Van Brunt drills for sale and I think of the government which is ready to destroy our history. I think of the history of the development of the west, and I think of the time when telephones came in 1915. I remember hearing my father tell me when I was a boy that if you seeded land between one telephone pole and another at the edge of a quarter section of land, you had seeded ten acres and you had done half a day's work. That is the history of the west which the government is about to destroy with the metric system.

Today a farmer in the west and his family take great pride in speaking of their acres. He speaks about having threshed and combined the grain and having 30, 40 or 50 bushels of wheat to the acre or, if it was oats, of having 80 or 90 bushels to the acre. It is a great thrill, yet all that is to be done away with. Why, I do not know. Sometimes a person should use stronger language. I have crossed Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. If the minister, who is here tonight and who heckled me when I rose, does not believe that people have a great feeling and a great affection for that region which gave this country power and money from the grain—

Mr. Marchand: I know a little bit about history too.

Mr. Woolliams: Then don't heckle and don't support this bill which will destroy the history of the west. If you want to make a speech I will listen to you. What I am saying to you is that the government is bringing in the metric system. What does it all mean?

Mr. Marchand: Logic.

Mr. Woolliams: It will destroy all we stood for, destroy our traditions. That is what the minister wants. Let him go out and make a speech anywhere in the farm belt and he will find out the reaction.

Mr. Paproski: What do they know about the farm belt?

Mr. Woolliams: I want to talk about the metric system for a few moments. Until now I have discussed the history of the west. I will read from an article which was written in 1906 which is pasted to the cover of the book. What does it mean? All the farms are divided into 160 acres. If they have more than a quarter section, say a section, that would be a farm of 640 acres. Every township has 36 sections. There are nine townships to a municipality, and of late they have formed countries. That has been the history and tradition of the west. Now, my friend, the minister, who says I must not lecture him, says, "What does it matter? This change is logical." In time, as my good friend who just finished speaking said, there will be a deficit of $6 billion or $7 billion. When I spoke on second reading I said it will cost each province at the very least $100 million to convert to the metric system.

Every seed drill will have to be changed. You know what a seed drill costs today? It used to cost $90. Now it costs $14,000. You know that every seed drill has a little gadget on it that has not been changed in 60 or 70 years. You move it when you put in the grain and it shows what you seed per acre. All that will be gone. What is history to this government?

What does the government feel? They put the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) in the cabinet. Where is he tonight? When he sat on this side, did he speak out on the metric system? No. His father was made a senator. R. B. Bennett would know, his brothers and his sisters would know. He was supposed to save the west. All I can say is that little Jack Horner sat in his corner playing with his metric system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that when he refers to members of the House he must refer to them by riding, not by name.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not refer to his riding because at one time I represented Bow River which was half of Crowfoot. I just quoted a little poem and I did not know whether Mr. Speaker would appreciate that I was referring directly to the new Minister without Portfolio who will try to take credit if this bill dies.

The people who will save western Canada from this bill and from this kind of legislation which will destroy our history are creating impossible situations which I will deal with in a few minutes. They said, "If we had a voice from Alberta in the cabinet, what we could do". They are still running over us. As I said, every parcel of land was surveyed. There are 160 acres to a quarter, 640 acres to a section, 36 sections to a township, and nine townships to a municipality. Now we have counties. As a lawyer I can tell you that you can go into any land titles office in western Canada and you can do an historic search.

You can see here that Mr. Wotherspoon from Harris, Saskatchewan, has a south east quarter, section 18, 160 acres. If his name is on that title in the land titles office and nothing is stamped on the back of the title, he knows he has a clear title to his land. Even if someone had a mortgage or a debt, unless he is registered, when that land is transferred, it can be done with ease because by law it goes to whoever the person is to whom the land is transferred. That system has been admired not only in Canada but throughout the world. In fact in Ontario, which has a different system of measuring land, you have to go back 200 or 300 years, and unless you have been practising law that long, you would have difficulty finding the title. Some of the firms in Toronto can tell you that that file contains a historic search of the land title and in 1960 they proved it was clear, but a young lawyer would have to go to the beginning of time to find out how many chains long that land is.

Our system is our history and our tradition. Every farmer and every person who lives in the city knows that if you go to the land titles office, you can check a title in two minutes and make a transfer with ease.

I dealt with how land was surveyed. If you go north or south in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta, every two miles there is a road allowance. If you go east or west, there is a road allowance every mile. The roads are measured in rods and feet, and land is measured in acres, not hectares. I checked with my son-in-law to find out what he is earning per hour as a surveyor. He earns about $18 an hour to re-survey western Canada on this new system. I said this would cost $100 million. I apologize. To change quarter sections, sections, townships, municipalities and counties to the new system would probably cost $500 million.

The minister, who has left the House, said the new system was logical, but the government says it does not want to upset anybody politically because it now has a new minister from the west. The government wants to create more Liberals for the Liberal party, so it will not force people who now measure in acres and rods to use hectares and metres. That is only to be done when people sell their farms.

I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) talk about lawyers. If there ever was a chance for lawyers to make a fortune on estates, this is it. Every time somebody dies in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, acres have to be converted to hectares and rods to metres, and what will the legal bills amount to? The governments of the provinces I spoke of are going to have to fork out money, but the man who owns the land will have to pay as well.

Let me go to another problem. The cities of Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Regina, Red Deer and others have the same system. There are lots within blocks, the same as with farmlands. The minister said the new system was logical. It is not only not logical; it will destroy the history and the very fabric of what western Canada was built on, and it is going to cost every taxpayer, whether he lives in the city or on the farm in western Canada. It will cost each taxpayer hundreds of dollars just because somebody likes the idea of changing acres to hectares and rods to metres. If ever there was a bill which should be defeated, this is it. There is no reason for it.

In 1928 we produced a great crop, 600 million bushels. Since then, in the 1960's and 1970's we produced 700 million to 800 million bushels, but in 1928 it took hard work to grow that grain. Men worked with horses and small machines and built this country to the point where it is known as the finest breadbasket in the world. Everything is measured in bushels per acre when the cars take the grain to the ports. Nobody has complained internationally.

I hear many cries in this House about culture in certain areas of the country, but it does not matter about our culture in western Canada. People from Ontario, Quebec, Europe and Asia came and settled in the west, and they built the roads. I am told that if we took all the roads in the rest of Canada, there would not be as many as there are in Saskatchewan. All the roads in Saskatchewan are measured in rods and feet, and the land is measured in acres.

I am glad that my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), is in the House. I paid a great compliment to a former leader of his. However, I wish that a farm member from his party had stood and spoken as I have spoken tonight. The NDP government in Saskatchewan has beaten this government in the race. Perhaps St. Laurent was right that members of the CCF were only Liberals in a hurry.

I have in my hand the Saskatchewan Gazette for April 30, 1976. Under "Regulations Under the Regulations Act" it says:

All plans submitted for registration purposes in any of the Land Titles Offices shall be subject to the approval of the Chief Surveyor—

Nobody complains about that.

—and all surveys, performed on or after July 1, 1976, plans of which are intended for registration purposes, shall be drawn with Metric measurements . . .

What a pitiful situation for the farmers. They are only now waking up to this. The only reason farmers and city people know what is happening today is that there has been a week of debate. The farmers do not want this, and neither do city people. Members of the NDP are Liberals in a hurry. Whether the provincial government will enforce metrication without this federal legislation, I do not know.

I see that someone has called the Minister without Portfolio, and I hope the minister from Crowfoot will take a position because he did not speak in the House on the metric system when he was a member of my party. I hope he speaks tonight, and I hope he speaks in cabinet. I want the Minister without Portfolio to call the deputy premier of Alberta, who is a great personal friend of mine, Hugh Horner. I want the minister to tell him that he supports what I am saying.

Mr. Marchand: He is a good friend of Jack's, too.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sure he is.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Not politically.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know about that. I am not getting into that subject.

Mr. Fox: Let's keep politics out of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let brotherly love continue.

Mr. Woolliams: I underestimated what this is going to cost the country, but apart from the cost, surely the history of western Canada, which was started by my own family in one area, is important. Mr. Coldwell from Saskatoon-Biggar was part of that history. I have records here from the Muirland School District 2196, and they show quarter sections being sold for $8. All the settlers' names are here. They came from Ontario, from Quebec, from Europe and from Asia. We all started out together. They raised their sons and daughters. Now the grandchildren and the great-grandchildren are on the land. That land is measured in acres, quarter sections and sections.

The minister scoffed. He said it was logical to do this. It is the most illogical thing I have seen put forward, and although the political philosophies of the Minister without Portfolio differ from mine today, I am sure he will speak in cabinet and in this House and lend his voice and all the ability he has at his command to fight this kind of legislation.

• (2050)

I should like somebody to explain why we must have a metric system. Surely the farmers could be exempted and the lots and blocks in the cities could be exempted from registration. Can we not go that far? If ever there was a justifiable and reasonable motion it is this one which calls on the House to send this bill back to the committee for further study.

I want the people of western Canada to know that the Progressive Conservative Party stands alone in opposing this legislation tonight. I want western Canadians to know where the minister from Saskatchewan and the minister from Alberta stand—I want them to stand against this bill.

Just because the Minister without Portfolio crossed the floor does not mean we are not still friends. I admire him and I want him to stand in this House now and tell us that this is one thing he will not sacrifice for a cabinet post—the destruction of the historical background of our country. I want him to stand for the farmers, but I do not want him ever to stand on a platform and claim he spoke out the way my colleagues did this afternoon and as I am attempting to do in my own inimical way tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: We hear a lot of talk about national unity these days, Mr. Speaker. Is there anything that would destroy national unity in the prairie provinces faster than this bill? It is a short and simple bill but is very destructive of everything for which we stand.

This is an historic night because there is an election going on in Ontario, Mr. Speaker, and I can understand that members want to know how things stand there. When I finish my remarks I will go and see for myself.

Mrs. Holt: It is a minority.

Mr. Woolliams: We do not know that. Even if we are a minority we stand against this kind of dictatorial authoritarian government that wants to destroy the fabric of our country. From the bottom of my heart I plead with the government to drop this bill. Get it out of the way. Even voting Conservative should not be such a crime that the fabric of our history and traditions is to be destroyed. That is my plea.

In the early 1900's the President of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association addressed that body in Regina. He said:

In referring to this subject in my address to you a year ago, I made the statement that what was wanted was "a general recognition by all classes of the importance of agriculture, and an honest endeavor by all to place it in the position to which it belongs." The importance of agriculture is now fully recognized, it being admitted by all that only thru the prosperity of agriculture can our country as a whole be prosperous. What is being done in the way of permanent assistance? Very little. However, there is an abundance of advice from almost innumerable sources, and no doubt of good intention, yet of such a conflicting nature that the farmer has about come to the conclusion that he had better follow his own dictates. Mixed farming has been the cry—raise hogs, etc. What do we find in connection with the marketing of hogs? Exactly the same conditions as with wheat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I can end on that note. I just want to add that the foregoing address was published on February 17, 1915, but the same problems exist today. I wanted to speak tonight because of the destruction of the history of our country.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to speak tonight but the Grecian eloquence of the hon. gentleman who just spoke has brought me to my feet, magnetized by his magnificent oratory and the plea he made to the stoney hearts of the government to stop this attempt to crush the western farmer beneath their grinding heel.

I do not think there have been many speakers from the east in this debate and I believe it is the time for Newfoundland to come to the aid and assistance of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: It is quite obvious that the elevation of our late colleague to the late cabinet is not working; the western farmer is as deserted as ever. Despite the movement of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) across the hallowed precincts of this Chamber, the western farmer is still left without a friend in cabinet.

I had hoped that the Minister without Portfolio would speak tonight and explain to the House what his policy is with respect to this legislation. So far we have not noticed any great changes in it. The House has been promised that if the legislation is passed—that if members of the House endorse this attempt to impose the metric system on the western farmer—the relevant clauses will not be proclaimed until sometime in the future. We do not know when, but probably when the government is satisfied that the western farmer is properly quiescent it can sneak the proclamation through by order in council. It will not proclaim these sections of the act immediately, ministers promise. That is the inducement held out to members on this side to go along with this pernicious piece of puffery. We are not going to be taken in by that, Mr. Speaker.

The same gentlemen who brought us wage and price controls now attempt to bring in the metric system for western Canada in the same way. They promise it will not be proclaimed, but in a few months time we will hear that there is a national emergency and that if they do not proclaim it the country is going to collapse. They will go ahead and proclaim it. Surely they cannot expect anyone on this side of the House to buy that proposition.

I have not spoken on behalf of the Newfoundland farmer before; this is a new departure for me, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad to speak on their behalf. We do have farmers in Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker, although I know that is hardly expected when one realizes the sophistication of the Newfoundland members in this Chamber. We are an extremely sophisticated group—even the Liberals—but still we do represent farmers and fishermen. And our fishermen are quite sophisticated too, just as western farmers are sophisticated.

The western farmer is not going to have the sheep's wool pulled over his eyes—he is quite well aware that what someone is attempting to pull over his eyes is made out of false wool.

In my district of St. John's West the farmers unilaterally oppose this attempt to inflict the Liberal metric system on them. The dairy farmers in my corner of the world—and we have in the houlds at least 20 or 25 dairy farms—expect a gallon of milk from a cow, not some kind of metre or millimetre or whatever amount they are going to get in the future. They are used to milking their cows and getting a gallon.

The farmers of the houlds are dairy farmers, but we also have fine farmers in my district who grow potatoes. There are some ignorant people in this House who think we have no agriculture. We grow a magnificent root crop; our soil is ideally suited for root crops. We have the glorious potato, brought in from Ireland in the 19th century. It grows well in Newfoundland, and we are used to gallons of potatoes, not litres. We use the peck and the bushel, and we do not want the metric system imposed on top of these measurements until there has been some period of education and some public money spent to educate the public beforehand.

This legislation is all of a piece with the Minister of Transport's policy of user-pay. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is also the minister responsible for libel and slander, and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. He was here this afternoon but is not here this evening. He is not here this evening because the minister who is not responsible for anything, the hon. member for Crowfoot, is here this evening, and we are hoping that the minister not responsible for anything will be speaking this evening on this bill, because we understood that the main reason he crossed the floor of the House was to see this piece of legislation stopped. So far it has not happened.

How does this legislation tie in with user-pay? It ties in in this manner. If this legislation passes, the user will not know what he is paying. It is too obscure. It is like the user-pay principle, from which the Minister of Transport is now pulling back. But he wants this honourable Chamber to pass this legislation. How do I conclude that the user of products will not know how much he is paying for something? He will not know, because he is not familiar with the units of measurement measuring the goods for which he is asked to pay. I have here, in this Chamber, proof of a sinister Liberal plot whereby the consumers of Canada will not know what they are paying for what they use.

In my hand I hold an advertisement from the Advocate Farms News and Shopper, that world famous newspaper published in Alberta, I believe. It shows that you can buy a Chun King dinner, in a 1.13 kg. tin—I presume that's a kilogram tin—for $1.65. Mr. Speaker, how am I to know how that translates into an ordinary tin? What's a "kg.?" Here I am, an ordinary little shopper going into the ordinary shop to buy a tin of Chun King dinner, and I am faced with a 1.13 kg. tin which costs $1.65. How can I compare that to what I bought last week? How am I going to know if the price has gone up or gone down? How am I going to know if I am getting a bargain or not getting a bargain? Your average housewife is going to go berserk when she faces this sort of thing, when she goes to the supermarket and has to figure it out.

Let's say she goes in to look for coffee. We all know how high coffee has climbed recently. It has got more and more expensive. We even have to pay 20 cents for a cup of coffee in these hallowed precincts. The only reason why so many people are fighting to get in here is that they can buy cheap coffee, at 20 cents a cup. We get a real bargain here in coffee. Everywhere else in the world the price of coffee has gone sky high. Brazilian coffee is now very expensive.

Let's say the poor housewife goes into the supermarket and wants to buy some coffee. She sees this very attractive advertisement I hold in my hand, printed in black and white. The white letters say "Don't forget"; I don't know what they are asking you not to forget, but that's what it says, "Don't forget." Looking below that, she sees coffee listed. She can get Airway whole bean coffee; that surely is a good brand of coffee. Then she sees she can get a 907 g. bag. What in the name of heaven is the poor soul going to do when she sees that? How does she know how a 907 g. bag compares with a tin of coffee? We used to be able to call them tins. You went in the shop and you bought a tin of coffee. Now a 907 g. bag costs $4.69.

Well, let's say she wants to drink crystals. She may be a crystal drinker. I believe out west they drink a lot of crystals. They have a lot of dry weather out there, a lot of dust. It makes them drink crystals. You can buy Empress orange flavours. You can get 4 × 9.2g. pkg., apparently for 77 cents. What in the name of heaven is she to make of this? That's why I say this is an accompaniment to the user-pay policy, that is to say, the user will not know what he is paying under this policy. And it has been brought in because the Liberal government has been able to control inflation.

If the government has been able to control inflation, we would never have had this bill before us, never. Inflation was at 10 per cent; now it is at 7.8 per cent, I believe, and going up. The wage and price controls have failed. They are an utter and abysmal failure and not working. Inflation is vibrating through the economy again and the government, aware it cannot control inflation, does not want the public to know inflation is still going on, so it is changing the whole measurement system to make sure nobody can tell if it has gone up or gone down.

What is going to happen to Statistics Canada if this barbaric plot is enacted in legislation? I do not want Mr. Speaker to think that I am not being relevant to this bill. I relate my remarks to Clause 3 of the bill, the amendments to the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act. I would have thought the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) would have gone off his rocker when he saw his name used like this in this bill, I imagine even without his permission. These amendments to the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act would remove the reference to Canadian units of measurements and would thereby eliminate obligatory dual marking in favour of single metric marking. Ah, Mr. Speaker, they think we can't read, that we can't understand what that means. That means that we will not have two systems of marking, one alongside the other, so that the person used to the original system can see how the original compares with the new, and therefore know the new means. That is what the dual system would do. But they are going to eliminate that in favour of single metric marking.

Mr. Speaker, with single metric marking there will not be a mother in the country who will know what she is paying. What is the Minister of Small Business (Mr. Marchand) doing about this? He is assisting the business community to give every mother the "business," if he allows this to go through the House. I ask the minister to look at Clause 3 of the bill. I will bet you it was not discussed in the sacred precincts of the cabinet room in the East Block, or wherever the cabinet meets. Perhaps it meets in the West Block now since the Minister without Portfolio has joined the cabinet. I am sure he would not meet in the East Block, so it would have to be the West Block.

Did the cabinet study this clause providing for the elimination of obligatory dual marking in favour of single metric marking, because not a consumer in the country will know what he is paying, except the CBC. The CBC will be able to figure it out; it has a staff of tens of thousands. Perhaps 10,000 of them will be put to work figuring this system out, figuring out what single metric marking amounts to. But the rest of us do not employ staffs of tens of thousands. CTV does not have that large a staff. I don't know how CTV is going to do it.

Mr. Paproski: What happened to your film?

Mr. Crosbie: I will come to that in a moment.

The next item in the advertisement is very serious for those who like pancakes and waffles. You can buy Empress syrup for pancakes and waffles in 1.25 kg. bottles. Even the Russians are coming into it; they talk about the kg. Then, you can get tomato juice, Libby's Canada Fancy in a 540 ml. tin, for 39 cents. How is anyone to make sense of that? Are the constituents of the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) in Nova Scotia to go into a food store and know what a 540 ml. tin for 39 cents is? How will the housewife compare that tin with last week's ordinary, human tin, with the tin she understood, a tin that had some warmth, a tin she could recognize, the cost of which she knew? When she sees this tomato juice listed at 39 cents she will think, "My God, this is a bargain!" She is going to buy a 540 ml. tin, but it may cost twice as much as it cost the week before.

The western farmer does not want to engage in this conspiracy against the consumer. It is the Liberal government that is engaging in this conspiracy. The western farmer wants to sell his products honestly, in acres, or bushels per acre. He doesn't want to sell it per hectare. Whoever heard of the likes of it?

He wants to sell his produce in an honest fashion. He wants the housewife to know how much she is buying when she buys a bushel. He is not interested in the hectare—I have trouble enough pronouncing the word. Anyway, I don't like it.

Mrs. Holt: What do you like?

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member for Vancouver—whatever it is—will have her chance to speak in the debate.

An hon. Member: It is Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Crosbie: Since the hon. lady will be here only a few more months, until the next election, she had better speak as often as she can.

● (2110)

Mrs. Holt: Don't you ever worry?

Mr. Crosbie: I have heard from Vancouver that the hon. lady is finished.

Mrs. Holt: I don't deal in irrelevance like you do.

Mr. Crosbie: That is why the hon. lady is finished. Is the hon. lady going to vote for the bill which will blindfold the consumer? I always understood that she—

Mrs. Holt: Baloney.

Mr. Crosbie: You won't even know how much baloney you are getting.

Mrs. Holt: No matter how you slice it, it is still baloney.

Mr. Crosbie: When you go to caucus every Wednesday you don't know how much baloney you are getting.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): The hon. member does not know that "pkg" means package.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you. It is like the Liberals to help us underprivileged.

Mrs. Holt: And they are truly endowed intellectually.

Mr. Crosbie: The Chamber will be descending several millilitres if the hon. lady continues to heckle me. We never had any ladies in the Newfoundland legislature. Now I have to watch my language all the time.

Mrs. Holt: Some day I will tell a Newfie joke.

Mr. Crosbie: I have a British Columbia joke, but I will not tell it here. Since the opposition will be taking all the British Columbia seats in the next election, I do not want to interfere with that.

Mrs. Holt: I will compare my majority with yours any day, my friend.

Mr. Crosbie: I will accept a majority of one if it is held up in the courts. As long as I lead by one vote, I do not mind. I do not want to give up being in this Chamber every Thursday. I would miss terribly being here, listening to the debate, seeing the fate of the government hanging on every breath. That is what I would miss the most.

I want to get back to what I was saying in connection with Clause 3 of this bill. When the average consumer of fruit cocktail goes into a store, he wants to know what he is getting. When he sees a Libby's Canada Fancy U.S.A. 796 ml. tin, if he does not leave the store before he gets that far, he finds it is 75 cents. He will not know how to compare that tin with a tin that last week would have been something else if it was not in ml's., which I presume is millilitres.

On and on it goes. They have even done it with the mushroom soup. Nothing is sacred any more. Now I will get to the hon. lady for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt).

Mrs. Holt: Come on.

Mr. Crosbie: Served with sodas. The 284 ml. tin of mushroom soup, Campbell's condensed, sells at four for $1. It will certainly be condensed if it is in millilitres. I do not want to bore the House.

Mrs. Holt: You have done that already. You do not even have to try.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want hon. members to think my remarks are not well founded. This was referred to in a brief submitted to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs by the Consumers' Association of Canada. I am not making this up. I do not have that kind of imagination. This is a serious point.

The Consumers' Association of Canada, an association with tens of thousands of members across the country, stated in their brief, and I quote:

> We do not want to impede the progress of the bill—

I do not want to impede the progress of this bill. None of us want to do that. We do not want to impede the progress of the government. The government has done a good enough job of that itself. We do not want to impede the progress of the government until the next election.

I continue the quote:

> —but urge the deletion of clause 3 the intent of which is to "Remove the reference to Canadian units of measurements—"

In the United States that would be called un-Americanism. They have a committee on un-American activities. We should have a committee on un-Canadian activities.

> "—(in the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act) and would thereby eliminate obligatory dual marking in favour of single metric marking."

Wait until the media find out what is happening in Clause 3. I do not know whether it will be on the CTV national news tonight. Pass the message to CTV that I will be available in fifteen minutes.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): They are not looking for a silly filler.

Mr. Crosbie: I would cause a quick reversal of this bill.

Many people thought there would be an evident change of policy with reference to the western farmer once one of the most well known western farmers got into the government. I often hear the hon. member for Crowfoot being sung about, in the famous song "Them Boots was made for Walking." He walked over to the other side into the cabinet.

The farmers of western Canada, the farmers of eastern Canada, those who grow wheat, those who grow barley, those who raise beef on the hoof, those who raise poultry, those who raise chickens, those who raise ducks, those who raise pork, and those who raise pigs, are waiting to see what change there will be in government policy.

Will the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) finally be brought to his knees? Will the minister responsible for the wheat board be brought to his knees as well? They were both on their knees before the hon. member for Crowfoot crossed, praying that he would not cross. Will they be brought to their knees again by the hon. member for Crowfoot and have a little humanity introduced into their policies as well as a little consideration for the western farmer who made this country what it is?

One of the great representatives, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), is on this very day in London, England. While he is gone they are attempting to sneak this through the House. I wish he were here tonight with his eloquence. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) misses the right hon. member for Prince Albert in view of the attention he paid him a week or two ago in a debate in this House.

We are all waiting to see what the Minister without Portfolio will announce in connection with this bill. Is he going to let us talk until 10.15 before he gets to his feet to announce that while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been away there has been a dramatic coup, we have a new Prime Minister, and the metric bill is being withdrawn? Is that what is going to happen?

The Prime Minister of the Seychelles went to the Commonwealth Conference in London. Lo and behold, two or three days later he was no longer the prime minister of the Seychelles. He did not have a "Sey" and he did not have a "chelles". He is out in the cold. Could the same thing happen to the right hon. member for Mount Royal? Could he be removed while in London at this Commonwealth Conference? Will the Minister without Portfolio carry out his promise to the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) that there would be a coup d'état as soon as the Prime Minister left the country?

We are not interested in the Ontario election tonight. We have another hour and ten minutes to see whether the Minister without Portfolio will announce a dramatic reversal of government policy. Is that why the Minister of Agriculture tonight is somewhere in deepest Ontario hiding? Is that why the minister responsible for the wheat board is not here this evening? Is that the reason why the Minister of Transport is so touchy these days about an ordinary insulting article about him? Is that what is driving him to wild chicanery, using his cabinet influence on the newspapers of his fair province? Is that why he is so irritable? Is it because not only his user-pay but the user not knowing what he is going to pay is going to be reversed?

To get back to the bill, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that the west is the grain basket of Canada. It is not Newfoundland. We know we cannot compete with Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in growing wheat, barley or corn.

Mr. Mazankowski: Or rape?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, we can compete with rape. We will match them with rape.

Mrs. Holt: Rape what?

Mr. Crosbie: However, we cannot compete in most other agricultural products.

I also want to mention the fishermen because I am sure they are involved in this diabolical plot. Fish are sold in quintals. What will happen to the quintal? Is the quintal to be tossed aside as though it were an abandoned wife? Is the quintal to be no more, just because a Liberal government in Ottawa has been in office for 30 years, arrogant and drunk with power? Does it intend to slash the quintal away? The quintal has stood us in good stead since 1497 when the first Italian immigrant came to Newfoundland, John Cabot. I want the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Guay) to note that the descendants of Cabot are waiting in Newfoundland for a multicultural policy that will do something for the Cabots.

An hon. Member: Does a squid squirt metric?

Mr. Crosbie: That is a neat question, Mr. Speaker. What is going to happen to the quintal? What is going to happen to the hundredweight if this vile piece of legislation passes the House tonight? What is going to happen to the fishing industry if this vile piece of legislation passes this House tonight? Hon. members opposite will have a lot to answer for.

I want to point out something else in the bill. I do not want hon. gentlemen to think I have not read the bill. I have read every bill in this book. I spend my nights reading bills.

An hon. Member: How about paying them?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I try to avoid paying them. Let us turn our attention to a very liberal clause in this bill, Clause 4, the gas inspection part of the bill. Every Liberal will be familiar with that. Every Wednesday morning they get injected with a little Liberal gas at the caucus so that they will all say "Hear, hear" and "Hurrah, hurrah" every time they get a new convert to the cabinet. Clause 4 says—listen to this; I do not want any heckling while I am reading these sacred clauses of the legislation.

Mr. Goodale: What is a megajoule?

Mr. Crosbie: My golly, he is right on the bit, there. It says:

The unit of measure for the sale of gas by energy units shall be the megajoule or the British thermal unit.

Well, on behalf of the right hon. member for Prince Albert I am glad to see the word British left there. What is this word "megajoule"? What language is that? Is the minister who was formerly without portfolio and is now without culture here tonight to explain to us what language the megajoule is?

Mrs. Holt: Talk about lack of culture, for heaven's sake!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) is definitely a jewel. I don't know whether she is a megajoule or not. But who will explain what a megajoule is?

Here is an even better example that we should notice:

The unit of measure for the sale of gas by mass shall be the kilogram.

What does that mean? I ask the minister from Alberta: does the oil and gas industry know about this? Have they been alerted to this? Do they know that the btu's are going to be megajoules—that the family jewels are going to be btu's, or whatever, and that gas is going to be sold en masse by the kilogram? Have the lobbyists been paying so much attention to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline that legislation like this is going through the House without their knowledge?

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway wants to rise on a point of order I see no reason why she should not. She is sitting there, mumbling away, disturbing my train of thought to the point at which I have not been able to put together a disconnected sentence tonight.

Mrs. Holt: How can you put it together when you haven't a thought to begin with?

Mr. Crosbie: How much is beef on the hoof going to be under the new system? The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) spoke eloquently earlier today. He has a lot of beef on the hoof and he is a worried gentleman. He is a productive member of this Chamber, and there are a lot of productive people in Western Canada who will be considerably less productive if this bill goes through. I do not know how long it will take to get people used to this system.

Another thing. I am sick and tired of hearing the temperature here in centigrade, or whatever it is. Let us have the old fahrenheit given with the old centigrade. I get up in the morning and hear it is seven degrees. So I get out my muffler, my coat, my hat and my boots, and out I go. I find it is not seven degrees, but something like 30 degrees.

Mr. Horner: Forty-seven!

Mr. Crosbie: Then I hear it is 22 degrees. I still go out in my coat and my muffler and find it is well in the seventies. I am fed up with it. If I am to live here in Ottawa I want to know what the temperature is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. If he wishes to continue he must get the consent of all hon. members. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mrs. Holt: Twenty minutes of nothing is enough.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up the time of the House for too long after that excellent address by my hon. friend from St. John's West. It was a pleasure to listen to. In fact it gave us the same kind of joy as the results of the Ontario provincial election tonight—the splendid victory of the Progressive Conservative party, justifying again the decision to go to the people for a mandate to carry on the good work in the province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have not spoken on this legislation before tonight and I wish to express my concern with respect to this exercise in futility in which the government is engaged. The minister stated in response to my hon. friend from Vegreville that the government had no intention of proclaiming the legislation until, as I understand it, he had gone through a process of consultation with the farmers of Western Canada. The government House leader was in the Chamber earlier tonight. We have heard him rant and rage about the irrelevance of parliament, the fact that parliament is not really accomplishing its legislative tasks. Yet he has the audacity to bring forward a bill for discussion this evening which the responsible minister tells us he has no intention of having proclaimed until further consultation has taken place. I have not seen a greater waste of the time of parliament since I came here.

The consultative process in which the minister proposes to engage will not take place overnight. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) will recall the discussion we had in connection with the western grains stabilization bill. I might say that although I reject the hon. member's position absolutely with respect to crossing the floor, I still have respect for him as a man whom I have known for a long period of time, a man whom I like personally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am not unhappy about saying that. We have been friends for a long time. He will recall the fights we put up to get consultation with the western farmer with respect to the western grains stabilization bill. He will remember that our efforts were rejected by the government. He will remember what a fight we had to put up to get the agricultural committee of this House to visit western Canada. Only after the greatest pressure was brought to bear on the minister responsible for the legislation was there a condescension to allow members of parliament to go to western Canada and hold hearings, receive briefs, and to bring about an educational process.

● (2130)

An hon. Member: We even went to your house.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, they even went to my house. As a matter of fact, I lost a silver knife. It was only a $50 silver knife but I am not going to suggest that one of the Liberal members took it. That is how generous I feel tonight.

In a more serious vein, Mr. Speaker, the minister knows that the consultation process with the western farmers will not take place overnight. Why is he wasting the time of this parliament by bringing forward this legislation before he is in a position to tell us categorically what amendments he will make to the legislation and regulations to accommodate the western farmers? His statement is an absolute admission of the failure of the government properly to explain the metric legislation to the western farmers. It is a failure, and the minister knows it.

I do not take any great pleasure in saying that. Parliament should be able to work and the government should always try to do the best thing. But when there is failure and the minister admits it, then he has the responsibility for withdrawing the legislation and bringing in new legislation after he has consulted the western farmers. Wasting the time of parliament when we should be trying to get through more important legislation now before committee is an absolute travesty. If I ever hear the government House leader stand up and talk about wasting time, I will remind him of the kind of planning that leaves him with nothing else to present but this metrication bill.

It is my own impression from watching the implementation of metrication that the root problem is the method by which the government brought forward the general adoption of the metric system in Canada. I refer not only to the western farmers but to metrication generally. It has been pointed out on a number of occasions that the correct way to introduce metrication would be to bring in not a resolution, as convenient and appropriate as resolutions are in certain circumstances, allowing for the creation of a metric commission with what I consider to be wide, sweeping powers, but rather to bring in a bill which would specify precisely what steps would be taken, which in turn would be enshrined within the statute books of this country. In this way each step in the introduction of the metric system in Canada could have been considered, rather than the government's bringing in a bill setting up arbitrarily a metric commission which, although accountable to parliament somehow, does not appear before parliament on a regular basis. As far as I know it has never appeared before any standing committee of this House or reported to the House directly.

The reason we are in this predicament today is that this is another example of the government's attempting to impose from above a system of metric conversion, as much as I approve of such a conversion, by regulation instead of by legislation. It is the function of each and every one of us in this parliament to ensure that so far as possible—

Mr. Marchand: You are contradicting yourself.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The minister talks about contradictions. I could, of course, deal with the many contradictions on the part of the government with regard to this whole program, but I will not. Introducing the metric system through a group of civil servants who apparently are not accountable to parliament is the reason we are now facing difficulties, particularly so far as the western farmer is concerned.

The western farmer is a unique breed of person. I suggest he is the last of the really legitimate small, independent businessmen in this country. The western farmers generally across the country make a very substantial capital investment. As a result of monetary inflation, inflated land values and cost of equipment and materials, in order to get into operation even in a very modest way in western Canada a farmer must spend at least $150,000. This kind of capital investment produces for him an income which often is not all that great. He is now facing additional expense and additional concern in his operation.

The minister opposite is from western Canada and can understand how the small farmer is reacting to this process. A farmer does not have an easy life; he works hard for the money he makes. The minister talked about consulting with the farmer, and I was pleased to hear him say that because I believe that is absolutely necessary. This is why I am mystified that we are discussing this bill this evening and wasting the time of the House. I am mystified why the minister did not stand in his place immediately after my colleague from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain moved his amendment, which gave the minister an ideal opportunity to consult with the western farmer through the vehicle of a standing committee, and say that he would accept it. Instead he kept silent in his place and told us nothing of the kind of consultation he has in mind.

We are all reasonable people in this House, Mr. Speaker; at least I would accept that as a basic proposition. But what the minister is asking us to do in terms of political reality is to accept his word in regard to what consultation will be held. I do not think the minister should treat us in this way; certainly I would not treat him that way. I want to know what the minister has in mind so far as consultations with the western farmer are concerned. As a representative of a western constituency I want to hear, assess and judge that particular proposal. I am not going to sit here like a puppet and give him carte blanche to consult with the western farmers. We have seen what the consultation has consisted of thus far, and it has not been very impressive. Therefore, I ask the minister whether he is really serious about consulting with the western farmer. Why does he not stand up in parliament, which I suggest is the proper place, and say what he has in mind? What kind of amendments would he be receptive to? What kind of implementation does he have in mind? What kind of time frame would he accept in the application of the metric system?

The government has put itself into a very peculiar situation. As a result of this announcement it has seriously antagonized the farm organizations of western Canada. Without exception, the farmers, the representative associations and the farm organizations across western Canada have condemned the minister and the government with respect to its inability to state clearly what it intends to do with respect to this legislation.

● (2140)

There are a number of articles which have been written in western newspapers and various agricultural newspapers across Canada. I would like to refer to the most recent article, which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on June 3, 1977, entitled "Grain Men 'Fed Up To The Teeth' With Ottawa's Delay Over Metric". Mr. Bruce MacMillan, the chairman of the Canadian Grains Council, is highly critical of the way in which the government has dealt with this particular matter. This gentleman is the chairman of a group which has been set up by this government.

Mr. Marchand: Why don't you let it go through?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If the hon. minister would only listen and stop talking, I would appreciate it. As a member of parliament I expect to be treated with the same degree of respect that I give the minister on every occasion. I want to know what the minister is going to do with respect to the implementation of this bill. For him to say that it will be all right and for me to trust him is not acceptable. As much as I like the hon. minister, I am not going to accept that type of proposition from him. I would not expect him to accept that from me, as logical and as reasonable a person as I am, in all modesty.

Mr. Paproski: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would not expect the minister to accept that kind of carte blanche undertaking from me without having some idea. One has a responsibility to explain to his own constituents what is happening in parliament and what is going to happen with respect to any particular piece of legislation. My constituents are going to ask me: what has the minister got in mind? According to the minister, I am to go to my constituents and say that he says to trust him, that it will be all right and there will be some consultation. Who is he going to consult with? Is he going to consult with a group of Liberal supporters? Is he going to consult with a group of Liberal farmers? Is it going to be a group of Conservative farmers? Is it going to be a group of farmers from the Kamloops district? Is it going to be a group of farmers from Saskatoon-Biggar? I have no idea. I am not in a position to report to my constituents exactly what the minister has in mind. I do not think that is an unreasonable request.

The minister wants to know exactly what we should do to get this bill through. What time frame has the minister in mind? Is he going to consult for a week, a year, or ten years? I am interested in finding out what is going on. That is the reason I am speaking tonight. I am not simply standing up and talking to prevent the passage of this bill. On the contrary. I am speaking on an amendment which is a responsible amendment on the part of our party, as represented by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

I should like the minister to have the opportunity of consultation which he said will take place. What is a more appropriate vehicle than a standing committee of this House of Commons going out to western Canada to hear the rank and file and give them an opportunity to bring forward their points of view with respect to this particular bill? That would give the standing committee an opportunity to digest this information and report it back to the House. There could be recommendations with respect to amendments to the bill, or conceivably there could be no amendments to the bill. We may be satisfied, after going out, that the bill in its present form is quite satisfactory. I do not reject that possibility. For the minister to sit in his place and wonder why we are not passing the bill is not acceptable, as far as I am concerned.

When this whole process started the farm organizations came forward at the request of the government and co-operated. Often at their own expense they allowed senior management personnel from these organizations to be seconded to the Metric Commission for the purpose of the implementation of the metric conversion in the farm industry. I can understand that sense of responsibility when requested by the government to come forward and serve. They are prepared to do so at their own expense in many instances. Those organizations were helping to talk about metric conversion, as far as the farm segment of our society is concerned.

I think, and the minister might agree, that they thought the government would be taking initiatives through the Metric Commission to deal with the average farmer and whether he would be represented by the farm organizations in question or not. Was this to happen by some process of osmosis? Was it thought that everybody in Saskatoon-Biggar comprehended completely, by the process of mental telepathy, what was going on in Ottawa? Was it thought that they understood and accepted the fact that these people were speaking on their behalf? It does not take a very large intellect to understand that it was clearly the responsibility of the government to undertake an educational process and let people know precisely what was in store.

The original date for the implementation of the metric system was to be February 1 of this year. The Western Producer, which is a newspaper published by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, carried an article on January 27, 1977, entitled "But Are The Farmers Ready For It?" The article reads as follows:

> Two spokesmen for the grain industry say their only concern about the Feb. 1 metric conversion in the grain industry is that farmers are not ready for the change.

That is an indication at the beginning of this year of the failure of the government to inform, educate, and apprise western farmers of what was involved in metric conversion. The government should have indicated to them what type of expenses would be incurred and what relief would be available in terms of tax, if any, for metric conversion.

The article goes on to say:

> "Our impression is that things are pretty well ready to roll; what we're wondering about is how much discussion there'll have to be with farmers," says

Metric System

Bob Moffat, president of the Western Grain Elevator Association, made up of the general managers of elevator companies with country and terminal operations. (Mr. Moffat is general manager of Manitoba Pool Elevators.)

Here is a man who is a spokesman on behalf of farmers saying that the farmers are not ready for it. I am sorry the hon. member for Crowfoot is not here. Before he decided to become a member of this administration and to cross the floor, I recall very vividly the position he took with respect to this bill. He was adamant, and I think that is a fair word, with respect to the strategy that we should block this bill at any cost. I want to inquire now of the government and of the minister precisely what is happening. I do not want any more equivocation that if we pass this bill, they will not proclaim it. That is a lunatic proposition in my view.

In view of the strong feelings of the hon. member for Crowfoot with respect to this bill—because when he was on this side of the House he spoke very movingly and strongly about the western farmer resenting this bill and he said that it should be blocked at any cost, regardless of the time involved—I would like to know exactly whether or not the Minister without Portfolio—and in fact he is coming into the Chamber—will speak in cabinet on the bill.

As I mentioned at the outset, I like the Minister without Portfolio from Crowfoot. I was interested to read the article by Richard Gwynn in which he speculated about the minister's friend, Mr. Jim Coutts, and his motives in bringing the Minister without Portfolio into the party. I think the scenario is that Mr. Coutts wants to get a seat. He wants to run in Calgary, and he hopes the hon. member for Crowfoot will have sufficient political clout to help him. Perhaps the hon. member for Crowfoot feels that he will be successful in the election because he will stand side by side with a shorter, more corpulent city boy, the confidant of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who will be running in Calgary next to the western rancher, the farmer from Crowfoot, or whatever his constituency will be.

I do not want to see the hon. member for Crowfoot get hurt by the Liberals. I know how cynical they are. I do not want to see this man Coutts elected, because there can only be one cabinet minister from the west, and the next thing you know it will not be the hon. member from Crowfoot but our friend, Coutts. I am saying that while he is in the cabinet I hope the Minister without Portfolio will try to talk some sense into his colleagues and will tell them, as he told us before he crossed the floor, what the western farmer thinks of this legislation, how strongly he opposes it, and that the time of parliament should not be wasted any further. I know that the hon. member for Crowfoot has a high respect for parliament—he believes in parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I do not think he would want to be part of any government that wasted the time of parliament with this kind of insult to parliament, the metric conversion bill, which they have no intention of proclaiming. He is not that kind of man, and if he were I would be most surprised.

What I am saying is that so far as the consultative process is concerned, we in the Conservative party have put an amendment before the House which allows for consultation with the average farmer, and this is an ideal vehicle. I imagine that the minister would be anxious to get this bill to the next logical stage in its journey through the House by referring the bill back to the standing committee dealing with the bill so that during the course of the summer they can re-examine it when they would not be interfering with the farmers' operations.

Mr. Fox: And the winter and the spring.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, it may take some time. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) has a farming background.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, in Morrin Heights.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He has a rural background and he will know that sometimes when there is real consultation it cannot happen in the course of a week. It is something that takes a little time. When people are first aware of the fact that they have the right to come before the committee, they will not be intimidated and they will come forward and give their point of view. But this is a two-way process. Not only are we as a committee going out and hearing representations, I suggest, but we are also going out to learn, on behalf of our colleagues in parliament, precisely what the problems are, and what has to be done, on a first hand basis. We will be involved in the hearings not only with farmers but also with those responsible for the implementation of the metric system.

I do not want to take too much time but I felt compelled to participate in this debate, not having done so before, because I was prepared to listen and hear with an open mind the proposal of the government. But eventually even those of us who are prepared to give the government the benefit of the doubt have to stand up and say: just a moment, you have gone too far, you must tell us what you have in mind, you cannot expect us to go through the whole farce of arguing in parliament on the understanding that we are supposed to pass the bill which eventually will not be proclaimed. If you said that to some stranger who came to parliament, he would suggest that you should take medical advice because this is a lunatic proposal.

I see you are rising to your feet, Mr. Speaker. I want to conclude by urging that the minister take advantage of the offer made in this amendment, that he support it, and that he let us get on to the next piece of business. Then the metric conversion process will be a lot easier and more straightforward.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak tonight on the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and on this important subject of metric conversion and the impact that this program is having on all sectors of our society, I must point out that when I speak of all sectors of our society I include people in the northern parts of Canada where there is some farming and some ranching. They are the ones who are not up to date on what is happening with regard to the metric conversion for the simple reason that the news media are lacking in that part of the country so that most of them do not even know what is happening with the bill which is at present before us, nor do they know the fact that the bill will not be proclaimed. As the hon. member who spoke before me said, this is just a waste of time of the House.

The Canadian program for metric conversion has been implemented in a different manner than similar programs in the U.S. For example, in the U.S. they are making greater headway in terms of the conversion, but at the same time they have introduced subsidies to help small business in the conversion. This is one way in which metric conversion will certainly harm the industry of our country, and especially small businessmen.

I have to relate this directly to the northern part of the provinces where at present the cost of living is higher than in any other part of Canada. Conversion to the metric system will cost every taxpayer in the country, whether he pays for it with goods that will cost more from the main industry or from suppliers or whether he pays for it directly, and it is the people in the north who will be the ones to suffer most. Canadian industry views metrication favourably, and Canada's progress towards SI measurement is more advanced than in the United States, although U.S. industry is moving toward metrication at a faster pace than industry in Canada. It is unfortunate, however, that the Canadian manufacturing industry will be so hard hit by metrication. Some small firms will be harnessed with undue expenses in adapting to metric which will result in added costs. This will affect their competitive status and disrupt profits, with the added possibility of business failure in many cases.

Large corporations will be able to absorb the added costs incurred by conversion, and it is estimated that their competitiveness and market status should remain the same. It is small business about which I am most concerned.

Besides the adverse affect on small business, automobile dealerships, service stations, garages and especially mechanics will bear the brunt of metric conversion. This is of particular importance to the riding of Churchill, where service costs and the price of gasoline and automobile parts are higher than they are in the south. The people of the north, especially those in the Churchill constituency, can ill afford the increased costs which may be passed on to them as a result of increased operating costs due to the conversion of equipment and so forth to metric.

I am sure that farmers in the Churchill constituency are not up to date or even aware of what is happening with regard to metric conversion. They are not ready for it. They really do not want it at this time because they are just now completing their seeding, and they have not had an opportunity to be brought up to date on just how the metric system is going to affect them. It might be different where there is mass media, but many locations in the north have no television, no newspaper, and very limited radio service. If they depend on the mail service to carry any information, they might as well scrap that because our mail service is worse now than it was when we had to depend on dog teams to carry the mail in the north.

Lack of communications has a bad effect on small businessmen, small ranchers and small farmers in the north. Many of them have heard metric conversion mentioned, but that is about the extent of it. Metric conversion is certainly being pushed down the throats of farmers, and at this time they are not ready for it. Farmers and grain handling people should have another opportunity to come before the standing committee to discuss this bill more thoroughly.

The general economy of the north, where the cost of living is astronomically high compared with other settled parts of Canada, is being adversely affected. Most municipalities in the north have resigned themselves to the fact that equipment will have to be converted to metric and that there is going to be a tough transition period. Many town councils are still unwilling to acknowledge that metric measurement is on the way. Many municipalities are lost in the confusion of metric conversion, and many are afraid of the effect such a transition will have on unsophisticated small communities with small budgets. These communities are faced with having to convert to the metric system without any help from the government in the transition period.

When I speak of the economy, I refer to the effects metric conversion will have on prices. I am afraid increased costs will be passed on to consumers in the form of increased prices, and this will contribute to already serious inflation problems. As many hon. members can imagine, inflation is very serious in the northern parts of Canada. The effects of this legislation to facilitate conversion on agriculture are as important as they are on industry.

In the interlake region of Manitoba which is an area between Lake Winnipeg and Lake Manitoba, there is mixed farming, while the area around The Pas in the region known as the Carrot River Valley, is also an important agricultural region. I am not talking about farmers who own many, many sections of land but about those on small farms. They have had numerous crop failures in the last few years due to flood or drought. This year there has been substantial rain, and as a result they have been so busy they have not had the opportunity to find out much about the metric system.

The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) issued a circular to farmers which carried a lot of information. Although the same information was shown on television and was in the newspapers it does not reach them all. There must be more sophisticated means to train and teach farmers about metric conversion. Farmers are not ready to accept it at this time; they are more interested in trying to make ends meet and getting their crops planted. This metric conversion should have been introduced at a future date and not now.

In both the regions I mentioned farmers complain that they have not had an opportunity to be brought up to date on what is happening with metric conversion, land measurement and so on, and if this bill is proclaimed they will be left behind the rest of society. Of course the government says it has no intention of proclaiming the bill.

The clauses in the bill that pertain to farmers have not been widely accepted in the farming community in western Canada. Both the farmers and the grain industry feel these measures are being imposed too quickly, without enough orientation or break-in time. In the northern parts of Manitoba because of the lack of adequate media outlets and possibly because they are not considered to be the more prosperous regions of Canada, the farmers have not had the opportunity to keep abreast with the changes that are taking place. The government expected them to set their work aside and take a course in metric conversion, but of course farmers do not have the time for this.

Although some farmers in my area have adapted very well to other changes that have taken place, many are confused and frustrated by the fact that no one from the department has visited them to explain the program. Goodness knows there are enough federal civil servants running around northern Manitoba that some could have met with farm organizations and brought them up-to-date on what is happening, especially when the media are not available to carry the information.

The Minister of State responsible for Small Business issued a statement earlier this year which denied the charge that farmers are not being informed about metric conversion. I confirm that the farmers I represent have not been informed about metric conversion, or not informed in the way they should have been. I am thinking especially of small farmers, ranchers, and small grain producers.

The statement outlines several programs on which the government has embarked to inform farmers of progress being made in conversion. The main program is called the "Awareness Program." I am sure many farmers in the Interlake and Carrot River regions are not even aware of the "Awareness Program", which was implemented from Ottawa. Anyone wanting information on the program had better write to the Metric Commission on Elgin Street in Ottawa. It is up to the government to see that the program is well publicized before it is implemented.

I say that farmers and people in the grain handling industry should be given the opportunity to appear before the standing committee in order to discuss metric conversion. The "Awareness Program" as implemented by the Minister of State responsible for Small Business is not sufficient to bring people up to date on what is happening in metric conversion. In any event I feel this bill should be referred back to the committee for further study so that farmers, large and small, can give voice to their concerns relating to metric conversion. We ought to see a greater degree of consultation with the grain industry, especially with farmers, and such consultation ought to take place before we continue our discussions on metric conversion.

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

The Hall Commission report recommended a doubling of the capacity of the Churchill elevator within the next few years. That recommendation is of concern to the bulk grain handling industry which depends on the port of Churchill. I understand that the conversion of this grain handling capacity to the metric system has not taken place. That conversion at Churchill was supposed to take place during the winter, since the elevator does not operate then. However, I understand the conversion is to take place some time this summer. I suggest it should not take place then, for we are trying to ship at least 30 million bushels of grain through this terminal, and I feel that conversion during the summer months could affect the movement of grain, or the amount of grain shipped through that facility in the summer. Of course if this conversion must take place it should be done during the late fall or early winter months and so not disrupt the grain shipping season.

Let me mention what metric conversion will mean to the people living on the 30 Indian reservations in the constituency of Churchill in northern Manitoba. As I said previously, many of these reservations are not served by any form of communication. They have no radio, television or newspapers. There are schools run by the federal and provincial governments. When I visited one of these communities not long ago, I asked what was happening with regard to metric conversion. The people there had no idea what I was talking about.

I do not know how we are going to get this message across to people in outlying areas who do not have access to the media. How will we get the message of metric conversion to them when it is only a few short years that they have been attending schools in many communities? This is a completely different system. It will probably be easy to adapt to, but it will be a change that many isolated areas just will not be able to accept or adapt to at the same speed as other parts of Canada. We need to have a stepped up campaign in the media and the schools if we are going to meet any sort of commitment.

While some Canadians will be hurt more than others by the conversion, eventually all will be affected. Increased costs will be passed on to the consumer in the form of increased prices. Although the exact impact is unknown, the conversion is certain to contribute to an already serious inflation problem. I end my remarks by stating my support for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Mr. Bert Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to make some remarks on this bill. Unfortunately I was absent from the committee and therefore not able to take the active part I would like to have taken when the bill was at committee stage. However, I did follow it very closely.

While in my constituency I was unable to find anyone in support of this bill. A few said that, no matter what they thought, it would come and they would have to accept it. However, no one stated that we should be accepting it at this time, jumping the gun before the country is ready for it.

This metric legislation which has been before the House for some time will affect the western grain farmer to the greatest extent. The Metric Commission instructed the grain trade to convert to the metric system as of February 1 of this year. However, this has been delayed for some time because the bill is not yet through the House.

Members can find ammunition with regard to this bill. All they have to do is read Open Forum or the Western Producer to see where westerners stand on this matter. I do not know why the minister and the government want to railroad this through the House.

In effect, the main change for farmers will be that his acres will be no more. They will be replaced by hectares, 2.2 acres, while the buying of grain from the farmer will be in tonnes, which is about 2,200 pounds. From the time the bill has been in committee, the official opposition have been pointing out the unfairness of trying to railroad this bill through the House at this time. We attempted to stop the bill since it would appear to be of little use to those who deal with country elevators. The system will cause nothing but confusion to the farmer who, of all segments of the grain trade, is least able to cope with it.

Furthermore, the United States is not likely to convert to hectares or tonnes for a considerable time, so we shall be out of step when it comes to farm machinery, herbicides and fertilizer. The prime mover in this chain seems to have been the Metric Commission, followed by the Wheat Board and the Grain Commissioners; the various grain handling companies have acquiesced.

The railways will still ship in bushels as they have no intention of changing over until 1981.

The Wheat Board has given as its reason for the changeover that it will save $1,000,000 in computations.

The Conservatives have asked that the acre be retained and that the farmer sell grain at the country elevator at the bushel measure until we standardize with the United States. The Metric Commission, however, with the Wheat Board agreeing, say this will not be as tidy a system and that it is necessary to introduce the metric system for grain across the board.

The Liberal members of the committee supported the changes aggressively but it is interesting to note that this change from acres and bushels only affects the designated Wheat Board area, while the rest of Canada will not likely face any changes for some years so far as acres to hectares is concerned.

I am rather suspicious that the government instituted it in the Wheat Board area to see how it will be accepted. We saw this going on at the committee stage. When I look at the bill and think of the effect it will have on all classes of people, I am sure those who have been supporting it have not been reading their mail or taking note of what has been going on at home.

Like my hon. friend from Churchill I also represent a northern riding and I have no doubt as to how the bill will be accepted in the north. It will not be well received. The fishermen will certainly be against it, too. This is something which the government cannot railroad through the House. I am reminded of an elderly woman I heard from and who was downright disgusted with the whole thing. She was just about heartbroken. This is about the truest way in which I can explain it. She said, "We will never know how much our grandchildren weighed, how tall they were."

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And its all your fault over there.

Mr. Cadieu: I enjoyed the speech made tonight by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). His comments were so close to public opinion with respect to their needs when marketing and making their purchases. Such confusion I have never heard of, and I cannot understand it for the life of me. I congratulate the members on this side for the wonderful speeches they have made on the bill, and I congratulate the hon. member for Qu'appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) on his amendment. He has offered the government a way of getting out of the mess into which it has put us. The government should strongly consider withdrawing this bill altogether at this time and bringing it back again when the time is right, which is likely to be some while to come.

If I had received any encouragement from my constituents to accept this bill, Mr. Speaker, I would have a different view of it. I believe in advancement and in promotion, but I cannot understand what the government is trying to do at this time. I have received no encouragement regarding this bill from any segment of the population in my riding. This is why the minister should consider withdrawing this ridiculous bill.

I used to hear some of the people from European countries in my constituency saying that this bill would be all right, but even they do not want it now. They have learned the system we use and are backing away from this bill. They have been so long away from the metric system which is used in Europe that they are not so happy about adopting it again. I have not found one person who is really happy with it. They have changed their minds and I should like to see the government change its mind, instead of trying to railroad this bill through.

I know the confusion that exists about it. I was in my constituency last week and spoke to people who will be affected by this bill, the various measurements for fertilizers, herbicides and so on, hectares and tonnes and all the rest of it. The whole thing is a mess. The government should listen to the enlightened advice given it by the official opposition regarding what the bill means to the country as a whole. It is not too late to accept this amendment and to get down to some common sense thinking. May I call it 10.30, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting House leader what business it is the intention of the government to call tomorrow?

Business of the House

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, as indicated earlier in the day by the government House leader, tomorrow we intend to begin with Bill C-6 dealing with diplomatic immunities. We have adopted the necessary motion to bring that legislation back from the standing committee so it can be dealt with tomorrow on the floor of the House. After concluding Bill C-6 we intend to move to Bill S-3, dealing with the Deposit Insurance Corporation and conclude third reading. We will then move to Bill C-36 dealing with motor vehicle safety, and Bill C-40, the aeronautics legislation. I believe there is a disposition in the House to proceed with both those items through all stages, or at least as far as through to third reading stage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And if we complete all that, Mr. Speaker, will we then deal with Bill C-30?

Mr. Goodale: We will consider that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 10.30, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.31 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT OF OPTION FOR OBSERVANCE OF ST-JEAN BAPTISTE DAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity affecting public servants who reside in the province of Ontario but who work in Hull, Quebec, who, without consultation or reasons are required to observe St-Jean Baptiste Day and who have been denied the option they formerly had with respect to that day. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the government rescind this new directive, which requires public servants who reside in Ontario to observe Saint-Jean Baptiste Day and reinstate the optional policy which has worked so well in former years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PROPOSAL TO END PROGRAM IMMEDIATELY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning the consumer price index figures which were released today. In light of the fact that prices have risen in the last three months at an annual rate of 10.4 per cent, that fuel and utility prices have risen in the last year by 15.8 per cent, that the cost of home ownership has risen by 11.3 per cent in the last year, that the cost of food is now beginning to rise at a rate even faster than other prices and considering that the government persists in holding down the wages and salaries of ordinary Canadians at a time when it will not hold down prices of such basic commodities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the government to end its unfair and unworkable anti-inflation program immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

INTEREST OF SENATOR DAVEY IN BLUE WATER RACING ASSOCIATES LTD.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of press reports that Senator Keith Davey, chief campaign director for the Liberal Party and confidant of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has a controlling interest in the Blue Water Racing Associates Ltd. and has made representations to the Department of Agriculture, specifically Mr. Sid Pratt, director of parimutuel betting in the Department of Agriculture, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

● (1110)

That the Minister of Agriculture make a full statement on motions, giving full particulars of the disclosure of the interest of Senator Keith Davey in Blue Water Racing Associates Ltd. to the government, on the nature of Senator Davey's representations to the Department of Agriculture and any resulting decisions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present a motion under Standing Order 43 which I believe the House will be happy to approve. So sure am I that the House will approve it, that I am going to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) if I may name him as the seconder of the motion.

I therefore move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen):

That this House extends its congratulations to the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Saint-Henri (Mr. Loiselle), the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), and the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), on the anniversary of their first election to parliament 20 years ago today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such a "controversial" motion requires the unanimous consent of the House pursuant to the Standing Order. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and seconded by the President of the Privy Council that this House extend its congratulations to those hon. members mentioned on the 20th anniversary, today, of their election to this House.

Motion agreed to.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTION CONTROL PROGRAM BE ABANDONED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since figures on today's consumer price index show that prices are up over 10 per cent on an annualized basis and controls are no longer working to slow inflation, and since the minister recently said that the underlying trend to lower inflation is evident despite today's higher prices, will he now concede controls are no longer the solution to inflation but perhaps part of the problem and announce the date immediately on which he proposes to begin decontrol?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to point out that the hon. gentleman's analysis is faulty. While it is true that there has been an increase on the food price side, as he and other members have often recognized publicly the cost of imported food cannot be restrained with a controls program.

Mr. Broadbent: This was true last year, too.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It was true indeed, and the price of food will go up and down; but to blame or credit the program for that would be a mistake, and nobody has ever done that. I point out to the hon. member on the other hand that the part of the price index most effectively controlled, that is to say the non-food sector, is exactly on target with the 1977 guideline of the program.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not so.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is down to an annual rise of 6 per cent. Perhaps I should not go further at this point, except to say that I look forward to starting the debate on this particular question on Monday, as a result of the petition which I gather hon. members will be putting forward, and we shall have, all have an opportunity on Monday to debate these issues.

INFLATION—POSSIBLE REVISION OF TARGET FOR NEXT YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Bearing in mind today's background figure of 7.6 per cent annual inflation, will the minister say if he foresees such a relatively high level of inflation continuing for the balance of the calendar year and, based on these disappointing figures, does the government plan to revise its 4 per cent inflation target for next year? If so, what is its new target?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Act makes specific provision for this. I would point out that we expect the impact of the increase due to imported food prices to diminish as the Canadian crop comes on, assuming it is a favourable Canadian crop. In this regard, while it may be difficult to make the six per cent target on the overall food consumer price index we do expect a turndown.

INFLATION—DATE WHEN CONTROLS WILL BE REMOVED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Two weeks ago the minister stated in committee that "the economic situation throughout 1977 and into 1978 looks relatively favourable for exit from the controls program". Will the minister indicate if in view of today's inflation figures he still holds this view?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I also indicated both in committee and elsewhere, including in the green paper, other conditions which are important. As I said, I indicated to the President of the Privy Council my wish that we start the debate on the petition which, according to the media, the hon. member is ready to present. We could start that debate on Monday. On Monday I would be quite happy to go through in some detail the circumstances that will be necessary to be sure that inflation will be restrained when the controls come off. Of course, it will be useful at that time to find out what, if any, views the opposition has about that.

FOOD PRICES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. It relates to the scandalous increase in food prices during the first part of 1977, now running at a 15.2 per cent annual rate during the last three months. As everyone in this House knows, this can only act as a heavy blow to low income families, old age pensioners and others on fixed income. In spite of everything that has been said by the government, it is clear in the green paper that some further upward impact of price levels in Canada will arise from high energy costs and food prices. Again there will be obvious implications for low income Canadians and Canadians living on fixed incomes who will be prejudiced by government policy and inaction. Notwithstanding the motherhood statement we are about to get on food policy in the House in a few minutes, what immediate action can we anticipate from the government to alleviate this situation, specifically in the area of food prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously patently wrong with respect to government policy having adversely affected those at the bottom end of the income scale. The policies of this government have been substantially directed to supporting the incomes of pensioners or recipients of family allowances at the bottom end of the income scale. Whatever effect the application of controls may have had upon the more affluent in our society, it is quite clear that the controls program specifically favoured those in a position least able to protect themselves from inflationary increases.

FINANCE

PROPOSED CHANGE IN BASIS FOR INDEXATION OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): It is obvious the minister has not talked to low income Canadians and those living on fixed incomes recently. It is now apparent that the prices of basic items are rising far faster than the official rate of inflation. We know that today fuel is up 15.8 per cent, housing 9.7 per cent for the year and food up 15.2 per cent on an annual rate for the last three months. Pension indexing is falling behind the real cost of living for our senior citizens. Will the minister tell the House whether he will tie the indexation of old age security to an index which better reflects the needs of elderly Canadians, especially in view of what we obviously have today?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not I am in touch, I might say I have been in touch with those in the low income group and old age pensioners in the course of the recent Ontario provincial election in the constituency of St. George. If anybody is out of touch with the feelings in that part of Ontario, it is the hon. member and his party, as indicated by last night's vote. If there are changes to be made in the consumer price index or the impact of it on the indexing of old age pensions and other escalators, I will of course give full consideration to that with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICE INDEX—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I note he is delighted that the Liberals managed to win two seats in all metro Toronto; that is some victory! In an earlier answer he indicated he was happy with the controls program with the exception of its effect on food prices over which, he finally admitted, there was no control at all. Is the minister happy about the fact that fuel and utilities have gone up 15.8 per cent over the last year and the cost of home ownership has gone up 11.3 per cent? Or is he happy simply because under the controls program wages and salaries will be held down to 6 per cent, meaning a decline in real purchasing power of workers right across the country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): With regard to the Ontario election, what did please me was that the Ontario leader of the NDP looks the same kind of leader as the hon. member does, namely, that he is going backwards.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With regard to important additional costs in the community, the hon. gentleman knows with regard to energy prices, for example, that these are additional costs which we in our community will have to absorb. I would be very much happier if the world trend in fuel prices were toward a decrease rather than an increase, but we live in a world of reality, and the reality is that fuel prices are increasing. If hon. members opposite do not understand basic things like that, we can expect a very interesting debate next week when they attempt to explain how, in the face of the reality of increasing fuel prices, the cost of utilities can go down.

REQUEST THAT NO INCREASE BE ALLOWED IN PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): The minister has mentioned the one area over which the government does have control, namely, oil prices. A large part of the monumental increase in fuel and utility costs in the past year is the direct result of the government's fuel pricing policy. Would the minister now reconsider the decision to permit a further increase in the price of oil on July 1? May I remind him that if the price of oil goes up by a dollar a barrel it will mean an increase of at least one per cent in the consumer price index and lead directly to the loss of thousands of jobs? Will he assure Canadians that no price increase will be permitted in the price of oil as of July 1?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The hon. member should know, as the premier of Saskatchewan knows, that it is important to continue to provide supplies of oil for Canada in the future. The kind of policy he advocates, that of reducing oil prices, would ensure that before very long there would not be adequate supplies of oil to meet Canadian needs.

INFLATION—ALLEGED FAILURE OF CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Is it, then, official government policy that wages and salaries should remain controlled at 6 per cent while the consumer price index is to be permitted, as has been the case for the last three months, to go up at an annual rate of about 10 per cent causing working people across the country to experience a continuing decline in their standard of living, or will the minister recognize that the controls program as it now exists is not only unworkable in terms of restraining prices but is unfair to Canadians everywhere?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would dispute the conclusions reached by the hon. gentleman and refer him to the trend on the non-food side of the index. The fact of the matter is that we in Canada will have to pay higher costs for imported goods as a result of the depreciation in the value of the Canadian dollar and higher energy prices. These increases have to be borne by all Canadians. We, as a government, believe that the people will recognize and accept the fact that these additional cost increases have to be met and that they cannot expect the government to cushion the community against all the changes.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

DIFFERENCE IN PRICES OF GASOLINE BETWEEN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on May 13 last and he replied that the price of gas at the Quebec and Ontario border indicated a difference of over 15 cents a gallon which was due to competition. Could the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs launch an inquiry to see why there is such a difference and who pockets the money?

[English]

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to ask the director of investigations to look into this matter and report back to me, and I will be getting in touch with the hon. member.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE OF SENATOR DAVEY'S INTEREST IN BLUE WATER RACING ASSOCIATION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It has to do with press reports that Senator Keith Davey, who is a well known confidant of the Prime Minister and chief Liberal campaign director, has the controlling interest in Blue Water Racing Associates, and that Senator Davey has in fact made representations to the branch of the minister's department concerned with parimutuel betting licensing and saliva testing administration. Can the minister advise the House whether these press reports are correct and if his department has knowledge of Senator Davey's interest in this particular company?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the press report the hon. member is talking about, all I can remember of that paper is that when I was first appointed Minister of Agriculture they wanted to know where Amherstburg, Ontario was. I have no knowledge of what is in this press report because I do not read that paper very often. However, since the matter has been brought to my attention I will check. I have no recollection of Senator Davey ever making any representations to me concerning racing but I will check with the department. Several authorities in Ontario having to do with racing have made representations to me about racing matters, but the one I am particularly thinking of is the Jockey Club which continually makes representations about offtrack betting. But I have no recollection of this report at all.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister would be interested in seeing that justice not only be done but appear to be done, so I would ask him to look into the matter and report to the House with respect to this particular allegation. When he is doing that, would the minister undertake to make a statement to the House with respect to this matter, possibly on motions, so he can clarify it; and would he let us have what details he is able to obtain through his department respecting the nature of the representations made, if any, by Senator Davey and the results of those representations.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I will use my good offices to make an investigation to find out what representations were made. I am not sure which race track or racing authority the hon. member is talking about, but I will ask for a complete breakdown of those people who have made representations to me and will follow the proper course to allow the hon. member to be informed.

INTEREST OF SENATOR DAVEY IN BLUE WATER RACING ASSOCIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question which I will address to the Acting Prime Minister. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether he considers on behalf of the government, that there is a potential conflict of interest situation here, where the campaign director supporting the government party and advising the Prime Minister, in fact controls a company which has dealings with a department of the federal government in the area of racing, parimutuel betting licensing and saliva testing administration. Would the Acting Prime Minister consider this to be a genuine conflict of interest, and would he say whether directives will be coming out regarding the relationship between people holding positions of this nature and government departments?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not examined this case and therefore I am not in a position to say whether it represents a conflict of interest. I am sure that Senator Davey has behaved in accordance with proper standards, as is his custom. However, the general question of conflict of interest with respect to members of parliament has been, as the hon. member knows, the subject of a green paper. It has gone through parliamentary committee in the House of Commons and in the Senate. At the present time, as the hon. member knows, there is under preparation a bill which will be coming forward, dealing with the general question of the independence of parliament. Until that bill is passed, there is certainly a good deal of opinion and guidelines to be derived from the green paper and from the proceedings of the committees of both Houses.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN BASIC RATE OF PENSION AND CHANGE IN PROVISION GOVERNING WIDOW'S PENSION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact the increase in the cost of living is affecting those veterans on fixed incomes, I wonder if the minister could indicate to the House when he is going to correct the inequity in the basic rate of pension which is related to the five lowest categories in the public service. Those veterans are falling behind by hundreds of dollars a year, and I wonder if the minister can indicate when he is going to correct that inequity in the veterans' legislation.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we have had a study made in our department of this question and a lot of work has been done. As far as the exact time it will be implemented, I am not prepared to say at this time.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that veterans' spouses are faced with an inequity because they cannot get widows' pensions if their veteran husbands died when their pension was based on 48 per cent disability, I wonder if the minister could indicate, in line with the basic rate of pension, whether we will see changes in the legislation before the end of this session?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is not anticipated that there will be changes in legislation pertaining to either of those questions during this session.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF MANUFACTURING, IMPORTING OR PROCESSING OF MIREX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. It relates to the task force report to the environmental contaminants committee regarding Mirex. One recommendation made by the task force concerning the control of Mirex is contained in one short sentence, wherein the task force recommends a prohibition against importation, manufacturing and processing of Mirex which might lead to its dispersal into the environment.

Is there any manufacturing or processing of Mirex in Canada, and if so, will the minister respond positively to the recommendation? Is there importation of Mirex which might be dispersed into the environment, and will he respond positively to the task force recommendation that such importation be prohibited?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the use of Mirex in Canada ceased some time ago. If my memory is correct, it was 1969. Thus, there is no utilization and no manufacturing. As for importation, that has stopped also. The complete prohibition is something which I will be discussing with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but we are favourably disposed to this recommendation.

SUGGESTION INDUSTRIAL WORKERS, NURSING MOTHERS AND THEIR BABIES EXPOSED TO MIREX BE MONITORED—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, there were two recommendations by the task force concerning information on Mirex, and in particular, the recommendation that certain Canadians be scrutinized in terms of their health very carefully. Recommendation No. 2 refers specifically to nursing mothers and their babies. Recommendation No. 3 deals with industrial workers known to have been occupationally exposed to Mirex.

Is it the responsibility of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment or the Department of National Health and Welfare, in which case the Minister of National Health and Welfare may want to answer this, to monitor those two groups? Are there immediate steps being taken as a result of the task force recommendations to monitor those two groups of Canadians?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a joint effort between the Department of National Health and Welfare and ourselves. In one conversation with them, we have already mentioned this important factor. This is a joint report because of our concern about this problem. We are obviously working on this.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, can either the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment or the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell me whether these two groups of people have been identified? In other words, in order to monitor one must identify those Canadians—the mothers on the one hand and the workers on the other—who may have been exposed to Mirex? Have these two groups been identified as of this date? Is it necessary, before any monitoring can take place, to identify individuals within those two groups?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the report did identify areas in which the exposure had been greatest. These are the areas in which we are now involved and looking at.

AIR TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN AIR FREIGHT RATES TO ARCTIC COMMUNITIES—REASON FOR FAILURE TO REFER TO AIR TRANSPORT BOARD

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It might be difficult for him to give me an answer today, but I would ask him to take notice of the question. My question relates to a recent increase in air freight to $1.11 a pound to certain points in the northern part of our country, as a result of a rate increase which was applied for by a company called Surf Air, which is wholly owned by Nordair. I would like to ask the minister what special evidence or circumstance was contained in the application which prevented this rate increase from being referred to the Air Transport Board and what special evidence there was which prevented the application from going to the Anti-Inflation Board for scrutiny as well?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to review these rates. There was an earlier reference to them in the House and I found, while some of the increases were indeed very large, that in part those were adjustments in schedules and there were some increases which were not nearly so large. However, on examination it did appear that there may not have been adequate advance notice of the increases for people to take a position in opposition to them. Since there was notice and no intervention against them at all, the Canadian Transport Commission had not acted. They are now reviewing that situation to see whether in fact the people in question were given adequate notice of the proposed rate increases.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

INCREASE IN AIR FREIGHT RATES TO ARCTIC COMMUNITIES—POSSIBILITY OF SUBSIDY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer. In fact there was no advertising of the proposed rates before they came into effect. In light of recent increases in the cost of living index, and particularly food, which affects people in the northern regions of our country three times as much as it does people in the southern part, will the minister undertake to discuss with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development the possibility, if these rates are allowed to continue, that there should be a subsidy for the people who are affected by this rate?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in the House before that the whole question of remote areas and the cost of transportation in relation to them is something we are reviewing. I will be interested in the views of my colleague representing the northern areas.

PERFORMING ARTS

PROTEST AGAINST SUMMER PROGRAM OF CANADIAN FILM INSTITUTE

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. In view of a statement attributed to an official of the Canadian Film Institute that the institute would consider very seriously any complaint by the government about films being shown in the auditorium of the National Archives, has the minister taken any initiative in approaching the institute regarding its current summer program, much of which is described by the institute's own program as pornographic?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I believe I referred the member's previous indication of discontent with the policy of the archives in renting the auditorium for this particular series of films with which he disagrees to the archives. I gather he is asking me to make a similar representation to the Canadian Film Institute. I would be happy to pass on his remarks to them.

POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST FROM ONTARIO AT SHOWING OF FILM "SWEET MOVIE"

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in knowing the direction of the reference by the minister to the National Archives. Has the minister received any protest from the government of Ontario or the Board of Film Review at the attempt to use the auditorium of the National Archives to show the film "Sweet Movie", specifically banned in Ontario?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, I have received no such representation. However, I have received a representation from one of my colleagues sitting on this side of the House, the hon. member for Vancouver East.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGATIONS OF ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN FORCE AND GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Given the fact that the Solicitor General has indicated he will be making a statement next week with regard to the Montreal break-in by the RCMP, and given the fact that in addition to the incidents surrounding the break-in in Montreal, we still find there are allegations against the RCMP in the Praxis matter in Toronto, and there is an inquiry going on at present in New Brunswick, and there are allegations of illegal wiretapping in Edmonton, would the minister give some assurance to the House that he or the Solicitor General will make a statement on motions in addition to the Montreal matter, on all these other matters that are showing up in the press so that he can give some assurance to the Canadian people that there is still civil and political authority over illegal activities and over the RCMP itself so that we can have a full explanation from the government on what is the relationship between the government and the RCMP in dealing with these matters?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member has really answered his question. He has referred to the Solicitor General's statement which is to be made following sentencing in the Montreal case, and I suggest that that statement will deal with the matters to which the hon. member refers. In terms of assurances to the public, the Solicitor General has made it very clear in the House and outside the House, as have I and as has the Prime Minister, that the police forces of this country, including the RCMP, are as subject to the criminal law of the country as is any other citizen, and that where there are indications of any breach of law by people holding authority, the proper action will be taken.

INVESTIGATION OF ROYAL AMERICAN SHOWS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE USE OF NATIONAL SECURITY PROVISION NOT RELATED TO ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): I hope that the Minister of Justice will examine carefully the evidence given yesterday in Montreal concerning the lack of any consultation with political authority in terms of that illegal break-in.

My supplementary question is as follows. Yesterday the Solicitor General indicated that he is filing an affidavit in the case of the inquiry in Edmonton into the Royal American Shows that certain evidence should not be produced because it is sensitive to national security. Can the Minister of Justice, on behalf of this government, now give some assurance to the House that the use of the national security provision to stop introduction of evidence that may be relevant has nothing to do with the use of electronic devices surrounding the surveillance in that case?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I have not seen the Solicitor General's affidavit in that case, and before answering the question I would like to see it.

INCOME TAX ACT

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING BILL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the end of June is soon approaching and the income tax amendment bill following his recent budget would have to be handled entirely in the House, can the minister advise us when he intends to introduce it and obtain its first reading?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I expect to have the document brought forward for first reading next Wednesday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BELGRADE CONFERENCE ON HELSINKI AGREEMENT—PARTICIPATION BY PARLIAMENTARIANS AND CANADIAN POSITION AT CONFERENCE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is with respect to the follow-up of the Helsinki conference, the Belgrade meetings which are approaching shortly and the great interest with respect to Basket 3 and the human rights provision. In view of the fact that at the recent meetings of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group a congressional representative indicated that the U.S. was taking a very active part, both in the formation of the policies that would be laid before that meeting, as well as having a direct participation in the conference, has the minister given consideration to parliamentary representation at the Belgrade meetings, and will there be some opportunity prior to those meetings for there to be some notification to parliament of the stand which the government intends to take at that time?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the matter of the representation and the make-up of the Canadian delegation, no final decision has been made as yet. The hon. member is quite right that in view of the structure of the United States there are some members of the Congress who are actually part of their delegation in an official and formal way which, I am advised, cannot be done in terms of the Canadian system.

Mr. Paproski: Why?

Mr. Jamieson: Because their structure is quite different from ours. I will deal with the hon. member's question, if he wishes to put a supplementary, in just a moment.

Certainly from a personal point of view I have no objection to considering parliamentary representation and I think it would be a good thing. I should add that there is also some question as to whether it will be at the ministerial level, and we are looking into that question as well.

On the second point, yesterday I gave to the chairman of the committee the most recent monitoring process and some background material on the post-Helsinki agreement. I have also said that I would be glad to have members of the committee briefed. At that kind of meeting before the Belgrade conference, I hope we can decide whether we wish to have any kind of resolution of the House or any airing of it in the House, which again I would be quite happy to support.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I appreciate very much the minister's frank and thoughtful answer. I am very interested in this inasmuch as not only will there be U.S. parliamentary participation but, I understand, there will be some European parliamentary groups as well, perhaps, as the minister has indicated, not in the same way because of the different functional set-up of the U.S. Congress and administration. But since there have been a number of useful precedents with respect to parliamentary representation at various U.N. forums, such as the Law of the Sea Conference and UNCTAD and other events, I hope the minister will give serious consideration to an all party representation at this event. But I hope as well that perhaps the minister might indicate whether he would be prepared to see either a reference or some opportunity established for the Committee on External Affairs to meet with him and his officials, both in a formal way and, perhaps if necessary, in an in-camera session, because of the importance of this event not only to parliament but to the Canadian people.

Mr. Jamieson: That was what I was seeking to convey in my last answer. In other words, whatever the committee decides is the most fruitful approach I am prepared to accept by way of briefings and the like. I was not aware there were any parliamentarians planning to attend the conference other than those from the United States. But it may be that this is a more recent development which has come out of discussions which have taken place on the make up of the delegations.

MULTICULTURALISM

PROPOSAL THAT DEPARTMENTS ADVERTISE IN ETHNIC PRESS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). I refer to a speech made by the former minister in charge of multiculturalism to the Canada Ethnic Press Federation on March 11, 1977. In his address, the hon. member for Hamilton East indicated the following:

> There is agreement that many more government departments should advertise in the ethnic press and media... (and that) this will lead to additional revenues over and above the $500,000 spent by the multicultural program and the specific campaigns run by such departments as the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

Would the minister inform the House whether he is actively promoting this policy among government departments?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, this is under active review at the moment by officials of the department and members of the Department of the Secretary of State. It has been followed very closely. An announcement will be made on that, I hope, soon.

Mr. Paproski: My supplementary question is to ask the minister whether he will inform the House what revenues over and above the $500,000 have been spent on the ethnic press and media advertising to date, and would the minister indicate how much money will be allocated by his department for the ethnic press and media advertising?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The answer to that question can be sought in another way.

PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE REQUIREMENT THAT VETERINARIANS INSPECT MEAT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I think the minister would be the first one to agree with me that animals suffering from diseases should be kept out of the food supply, and to achieve this end inspection of abattoirs must be carried out under close supervision of people trained in the diagnosis of disease, such as veterinarians. In view of this, it has come to my attention that it is proposed to revise the regulations under the Canada Meat Inspection Act to eliminate the requirement that antemortem inspection be done by a veterinary inspector and as well eliminate post-mortem inspection by a veterinarian or under the direct supervision of a veterinary inspector. If that is true I would like to ask the minister if he would take whatever action is necessary to stop this proposed revision before irreversible actions are taken that will adversely affect our ability to assure the public of a continuing wholesome and disease-free meat supply.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I will check that to make doubly sure that nothing is being done to lower the high standard of inspection which we provide for meat products in Canada. I do know that there has been some discussion about training technicians. We do use many highly trained technicians to do this work, but I will look into this and report to the hon. member.

● (1150)

Mr. Mitges: The minister knows that without competent veterinary inspection in our abattoirs our meat exports to many countries would be adversely affected, and I ask the minister to do everything possible to see that this is done.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NEGOTIATIONS FOR RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES—DATE AGREEMENTS EFFECTIVE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On February 8 in the House of Commons when discussing Bill C-35 which deals with reciprocal agreements for pensioners the minister stated that France, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States have expressed interest in having reciprocal social security agreements with us, and that preliminary discussions among officials had resulted in proposals. I wonder if the minister could tell us if the agreements will be effective by the date the bill becomes effective, I believe July 1. If not, why not, and when does he hope that the agreements will be effective?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no. I personally met the ministers of the countries concerned last month. I exerted some pressure upon these governments to accelerate the settlement of agreements between our respective countries. There will be a meeting of senior officials in the coming months. We hope these agreements will be concluded very shortly, but, of course, I cannot in any way force a country to sign such an agreement. On the aspect in which the hon. member is interested, British citizens living in Canada, I obtained an agreement in principle from my British colleague, but he indicated his concern about the availability of funds in England for that purpose. I asked that the matter be raised again by our two governments, in order that the British government may make available the necessary funds so as to enable us to reach an agreement as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO USE CANADAIR CL-215 TO FIGHT FOREST FIRES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that there are approximately 115 aircraft of many types used in dropping water or chemical retardants on or in advance of forest fires, most of them being modified military surplus aircraft such as the Canso or Tracker or commercial aircraft like the Beaver and the Otter, while the only aircraft in the world designed specifically to combat forest fires is the Canadair CL-215, designed and built in the sixties under advice from experts in the Canadian forestry service, but which has been purchased in Canada only by the Quebec department of lands and forests which now has 15 in operation, I would like to ask the minister if he would indicate why this aircraft is not used by other provinces in Canada and what steps he is taking to help finance the purchase of this aircraft for use in what I term a very important protection measure for our forest industries?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is alluding to the use of these aircraft for water bombing to fight forest fires. This question came up at the meeting of the Canadian Council of Resources and Environment Ministers in Saskatoon. Everyone recognizes that there is a need to co-ordinate this type of equipment and to have it available on a national basis when emergencies do warrant it. The problem is that the provinces have tended to go their separate ways with regard to fire protection. If we can come to a national plan for forest protection, I hope it would be very much part of this plan to have very expensive equipment of this nature available on a demand basis under some shared-cost formula.

TARIFF ON TOMATOES—POSSIBILITY OF EXTENSION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I would like to ask the minister if the program with regard to the tariff on tomatoes, which was implemented earlier this year after repeated requests from both processers and producers, is being reviewed. Is it going to be extended?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice, but I undertake to get back to the hon. member personally on that point.

PROPOSED FORMATION OF PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION TO ACQUIRE GOVERNMENT'S INTEREST IN CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Will the government consider taking the lead of the British Columbia government, which is planning to form a private investment corporation which will not be a Crown corporation to take over the government's interests—in the case of British Columbia acquired through the interventionist policies of the previous socialist government—in a number of industrial concerns and to offer the shares to individual investors who currently, in British Columbia's case, have nearly $6 billion in savings accounts, thus providing investment opportunity for other Canadians and relieving the Canadian taxpayers of the need to subsidize the bad management currently exhibited by some Crown corporations and agencies?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. gentleman that some years ago the government did just that with the creation of the Canada Development Corporation, and we included among the CDC's assets the Polysar operation. As the hon. member knows, CDC has since had a public distribution of shares, and depending upon the circumstances of the market and the fortunes of the various investments it would seek to distribute even more of the shares to the general public. I can say that in general terms the principle is one which has been accepted here for some time, and it is one we hope to further.

LABELS ON POST BOXES IN TORONTO ASSURING NEXT DAY DELIVERY IN TORONTO AREA—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Given the fact that thousands of post boxes in Toronto have labels on them indicating that local first class mail posted before 5.30 p.m. will be delivered the next day in Toronto, including Long Branch, East York, Leaside and North Toronto, and given the fact that this is patently false, is the Postmaster General planning to change the labelling of those boxes in Toronto?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out following the hon. gentleman's question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that surely does not constitute the assurance or the guarantee that that mail is going to be delivered by that time. It is an indication as to when the mail should be dropped into those particular boxes so that effective delivery can be made.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as studies have shown that four out of ten times that does not happen, why does the Postmaster General continue to indicate on the boxes that it will happen? It does not happen in four out of ten cases. It should be changed.

Mr. Blais: I do not know what studies the hon. gentleman is referring to, but if he wants to communicate with me, I will provide him with studies which prove quite the contrary.

ALLEGED FEDERAL COMMITMENT TO AID URBAN TRANSIT PROJECTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that in the next decade Canada will become a net importer of oil at higher and higher prices, which will have a serious effect on our foreign exchange situation, will the government reconsider its decision not to implement the promise made by the Prime Minister during the 1974 election campaign that the federal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made vehicles for urban transit and other things to the extent of $275 million over five years?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there have been under discussion within the government some possible options with regard to urban policies in which not only the possibilities for urban transit but also the grade crossing fund, rail line relocation and other questions have been considered from the standpoint of priority of government expenditures. However, I cannot say at this point whether there will be any additional funds made available for urban transportation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a number of provincial governments have already instituted programs to share the cost of extending their urban transit systems or to share the cost of meeting the deficit so that the price of fares will not go up, all of which programs help to discourage the increased use of private automobiles and the increased use of petroleum, of which there is a scarcity, will the government be announcing in the near future programs in which it will participate so that municipalities and provincial governments can be encouraged to move toward expanding their urban transit systems.

● (1200)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The real question is whether with the limited amount of funds available for federal expenditures of this kind the maximum impact can be attained by a new shared-cost program in the area of urban transportation or whether federal funds might more properly be directed to the kind of programs to which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands referred, such as the reinsulation program. Obviously, it would be desirable if there were unlimited funds available to attempt to do so but given the absence of that situation it is a question of determining priorities.

DEER LODGE HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH MANITOBA FOR TRANSFER

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Could he bring us up to date on the state of negotiations between his department and the province of Manitoba with regard to transferring Deer Lodge military hospital to the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no negotiations as such with regard to the transfer of Deer Lodge to the province. There have been some preliminary discussions between my department and provincial officials. The purpose of those discussions is more or less to determine if the province is interested and if things can be worked out to the satisfaction of all concerned. It would have to be agreed that a certain number of beds be made available to the veterans and the staff we have employed there would have to be to guaranteed employment. All these things have to be worked out.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—ALLEGED ATTEMPT BY GOVERNMENT TO INTERFERE WITH NEWS MEDIA

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont on a question of privilege.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, on Monday the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) raised a question of privilege about an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of June 6 and which reported statements I supposedly made in Montreal on Saturday, June 4. First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for waiting for me until this morning to continue this debate. As my colleague from Peace River said, my responsibilities in the case of mechanics against Air Canada held me before the Superior Court of Quebec until this morning.

However, let me repeat the substance of my remarks, since I did not read a text which might have circulated and the contents of which I cannot therefore table here this morning. I might recall Mr. Speaker, that on that occasion I was taking part in a "Vigilance Day" organized by the Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec regarding the CRTC inquiry into the CBC and Bill C-43 on telecommunications. I had been invited along with some of my colleagues on this side of the House.

My statements had a double purpose: first, a legal analysis of some of the provisions in Bill C-43 with regard to Bills C-24 and C-25; second, a discussion on the political circumstances which led to the CRTC inquiry into the CBC. The object of Bill C-43 is to regulate the telecommunications system in this country. This is a legislation of capital importance since it deals with the very bases of our political society's structure.

Not so long ago, constitutional law was still restricted to the discussion of the three traditional powers, that is the legislative, the executive and the judiciary, with emphasis on their required independence in principle as a guarantee of popular sovereignty which itself finds its mandatory expression in the most important thing the British law gave us, the rule of law.

[English]

We like to boast—

—wrote the Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court last March—

[English]

—that we are living in a political régime where the rule of law is alpha and omega and where the political process does actually respect and bow under the rule of law.

It is by the rigorous application of this rule of law to specific decisions or bills that we can assess the duty of the political power to abide by the rule of the primacy of law and its necessary sanction by the courts. Justice Deschesne gave a proper definition when he stated that "our ancestors understood quite well that our political system requires the presence of a court of higher jurisdiction having over physical and moral persons as well as over the courts what was called at that time a power of control meant to ensure that everyone performs the duties required by law but also that everyone stays within the limits of the authority conferred upon him by law.

Should public institution violate the rule of law, transgress its prerogatives, go beyond its powers or be guilty of a patently illegal act, then the confidence of the public in those who are responsible for enacting and implementing the law is destroyed. I will not linger on the incident of L'Agence de Presse Libre du Québec or on others which underline the malaise we feel when those who are responsible for implementing the law violate, deliberately or not, its letter and spirit.

Therefore, in a democratic society, we should be able to rely on clear statutes which are compulsory for everyone and on an independent magistrature, with the power to supervise and control the administration of the law, which recalls the existence of restrictions as far as individual prerogatives are concerned, in brief, which ensures compliance with the law.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not insist on the part of the press, and in particular of the electronic media, in this moving and flowing process, which is difficult to understand and which contributes to public opinion and to the balance which is very difficult to establish between both parts, namely to inform on the one side and to analyse, comment and dissect on the other side. In fact, nobody doubts anymore the fact that the press is a fourth power and that it is essential to the health of our political institutions. Very often it will play part of the role which is theoretically the responsibility of the opposition, when it is not in itself one of the basic mechanisms of control over public administration. All contemporary authors in administrative law recognize the importance of having an alert press in the control process of the administration. I shall mention only Mr. René Dussault and Mr. Gilles Pépin: who stressed adequately the role of the press as an extraparliamentary control instrument.

Now, contrary to those having the legislative, executive and judiciary powers who, in our system, are tied to one another, even though there exists among them a real independence, the power of the press has evolved progressively in an almost empiric fashion and today it has an outstanding role to play within the body politic. The power of the press has forced itself upon political institutions. To remain a genuine force in our democratic process, the press must obviously be subject to the rule of law and maintain a necessary independence.

Bill C-43 on Canadian telecommunications, because it is intended to regulate all the area of electronic media in Canada, affects the very nature of the relationships that ought to exist between the political entity and the press, the responsibilities they have towards one another and the institutions responsible for ensuring their respective independence. Therefore, we have to make sure that this bill provides the necessary guarantees so that one should not be subject to the other, that each may know the conditions of their respective endeavours and make sure that the rule of law guarantees strict compliance with their particular privileges.

Now, Bill C-43 contains provisions which, if they were to be passed in their present form, would in my opinion allow the political power to disregard totally or partially the legislation in the telecommunications area, without the political power having to prove before anybody, Parliament or the courts, the existence of certain conditions of fact or law which make compliance impossible and without any time limit restricting their duration. Those provisions are found specially in clauses 4 and 5 of Bill C-43 which stipulates that "the governor in council may, by order, subject to any terms and conditions specified in the order, exempt Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province and any agent thereof from the application of this act or any provisions thereof." Now, Mr. Speaker, that provision, stipulating an extraordinary exception to the effect that the governor in council need not require the authorization of the House or any court to justify his decision, was not incorporated in the Broadcasting Act passed in 1967. It strikes me as unconscionable and contrary to our rule of law tradition. When the law exists, it applies to all equally, and only for cause or proof can authorization be given to suspend its application for a time.

However, Bill C-43 in fact changes radically the nature of the CRTC. From an independent and quasi-judicial body that it has always been to date, the CRTC would become more or less an executory instrument partially subjected to the power of tutelage of the government; clause 11 of the bill would authorize the government to slough off the decisions of the CRTC, and oblige it to change them in all or in part; clause 10 would even require the CRTC to convey to the government all information obtained in the exercise of its functions. In short, the bill would in effect strip that body from part of the independence which was its strength and protected it from political interference.

One of the fundamental weaknesses of Bill C-43 lies in the fact that it does not recognize clearly, specifically, the right of the Canadian public to information. Need we be reminded that there is an important difference between the right of expression as mentioned in clause 3(f) of the bill, and the right of the public to be informed, a right clearly and openly expressed which could be enunciated in the first clause, and be the very foundation of the bill. Mr. Speaker, the right of the public to information can be guaranteed in several ways. First of all, it could be legislated at the newspaper ownership level. Regulations could also apply setting admission criteria—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The feelings of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) on such an important subject are certainly interesting and most sensible but we are now dealing only with the question of privilege. Any remarks he has to make, not on a general sense but on the question of privilege, are quite welcome. We are now listening to the hon. member speak on the general subject of deficiencies or otherwise in some legislation which is the very subject of the debate.

Mr. Joyal: I am grateful to you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief. I merely wanted to remind the House, which did not have the opportunity to hear me previously on the very subject of my intervention, in what context I did suggest that Bills C-43, C-24 and C-25, which had been the object of my remarks on that particular occasion, did in my opinion contain excessive provisions which escape the powers of surveillance and control of the courts, which are the traditional tenets of our constitutional law, and in which manner it seems to me necessary to point out to this House the importance of a continuous surveillance and control by democratic institutions or by institutions empowered to ensure the primacy of the law, in which manner, I repeat, this house should continuously concern itself with incorporating provisions to that effect in any legislation that comes before us.

I will conclude my remarks rather briefly, Mr. Speaker. As many others in the House who care about setting up in this country a philosophy based upon human rights and liberties which could be the essence of our national unity, I am concerned to see in so many examples and in so many basic aspects of our political system an increasing trend towards powers of exception and intervention to deal with essential aspects of our democratic life.

[English]

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my contribution will be brief. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) presented the House with a learned dissertation on the apprehension which most individual members, regardless of party affiliation, sometimes feel. I suggest that possibly the majority of members of this House are concerned about the public's right to know what is said in parliament. Hon. members want to be certain that comments made in the House can be reported to the general public in an unfettered way, free of any suggestion of arbitrary government interference.

My point is this: there have been discussions on the question of privilege raised by my colleague from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) which show that hon. members are concerned about this question. We in this House sometimes tend to look at events from day to day, we tend to consider how the news media reports our daily activities and how they report the current crises which arise from time to time in the House, and overlook basic questions concerning fundamental freedoms which we have come to accept in our country. One such freedom is the freedom of the general public to have absolutely unequivocal and unfettered access to reports concerning the proceedings of the parliament of Canada and the legislatures of Canada.

The words of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, he being a supporter of the government party and aware of the activities of government from his vantage point, underline how necessary it is for members of this House to support the motion moved. Let us allow the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to assess any possibility of abuse, or the possibility of the government arbitrarily restricting the reporting of the proceedings of this House and the availability of such reports to the general public.

Sir, I submit that since you have heard each of the representatives of the parties in this House speak in support of the motion, you should give the matter serious consideration—which I know you will do—accept the proposition that a prima facie case has been made and thereby allow us to investigate in the standing committee this serious and fundamental question. After the committee has considered the matter it can report back to the House, and the House can, if it wishes, approve the committee's report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I said earlier that I was awaiting the intervention of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal). I will give the matter further consideration and very likely give my decision on Tuesday at three o'clock.

NATIONAL FOOD POLICY

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government and, in particular, my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) who will also be making a statement, I am pleased to table a dicussion paper outlining the principal elements of a national food strategy to reinforce the basic objectives of our existing food policy. I should stress that while the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and I are most directly involved in the formulation of any such strategy, other ministers, most especially those representing Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) and, of course, Finance (Mr. Macdonald), have contributed to this document.

Over the past months concern has been expressed in certain quarters about a national food policy. I have repeatedly drawn attention to the fact that such a policy does exist and has existed for years, but it is clear that until the objectives are emphasized publicly, and the strategy for attaining those goals defined, there will be many who will not be content. As Minister of Agriculture I am very much aware of the responsibility that must be taken by the government to ensure the viability of any policy which touches Canadians at all levels and in all regions.

Over the years the role of agriculture has broadened and its scope has increased. Today agriculture is intricately linked with food marketing in the larger agribusiness context involving the processing, packaging and distributing sectors. One in every four Canadians is now employed somewhere in the food production, processing and distribution chain or in the industries supplying machinery, fertilizer and other food industry inputs. Out of every consumer dollar spent on food, 62 cents goes to the food manufacturers, wholesalers, distributors and retailers. There are slightly more than 200,000 workers employed in the food processing sector today, making it the largest manufacturing industry in Canada.

Despite the decline in the number of fishermen and farmers who constitute the very foundation of the food industry, the industry continues to grow. Why? Because of the greatly increased productivity of those farmers and fishermen who remain. They have discovered that there is no room in today's economic climate for the inefficient producer. This high level of productivity has kept Canada in the enviable position of being one of the very few net exporters of food in the world today. In 1976, agricultural exports totalled $4 billion, and we had a $1 billion surplus which helped offset some of the adverse impact of the deficit in other areas—especially oil.

So food is big business. More than that, apart from the cash value it is an industry which forms an integral part of this country's economic, industrial and social life. The farmer on the land is the first link in a chain which brings the food from the farm to the table in a form that is nutritious, wholesome and affordable. Today's food industry has evolved to meet the increasingly sophisticated demands of today's consumer.

Acceptable food today implies a far more sophisticated set of quality standards than were required, 20, 10 or even 5 years ago. To meet those demands, our own food standards have changed. Food inspection, for example, remains a vital topic of concern and it may be necessary to reinforce standards that are required with today's advanced food technology and changing consumer patterns.

Consumers today are also concerned with rising food costs. They are concerned with getting value for their money. They are concerned about food freshness, availability and quality. They are concerned when they see more of their dollars going into the grocery basket. I would ask hon. members and all Canadians to pay close attention as I outline for this House the basic objectives of a food policy which has been in place and working well for some time past.

The first and prime concern of this policy, a concern which has been and continues to be of great importance to me and my department, is that consumers are assured at all times of high quality food at reasonable prices. The second objective is to assure efficient farmers a decent living. The third aim is to provide aid to countries where people cannot adequately feed themselves; and the fourth is to produce products in which we have a competitive advantage for commercial export. In all instances we must ensure that the many middlemen between the producer and the consumer are operating fairly and effectively in a competitive atmosphere. We have met, are meeting and will continue to meet those objectives. But in the changing international and domestic economic climate our strategy to meet those objectives has to change to meet the challenge of the times.

First of all, it must be clear that any strategy to implement this policy must go beyond agriculture and fisheries programs to include the processing, distribution and retailing sectors; and, very importantly, the strategy must cover consumer concerns. To achieve the goals of our food policy we must continually re-examine, change and update our food strategy. If necessary, new programs must be developed to cover food trade, processing, distributing, retailing, and so on.

For those agricultural products that are traded internationally and continue to be subject to external influences so far as domestic supplies and prices are concerned, international stabilization schemes might not only be discussed, but implemented. As an example, I would cite the Canadian dairy industry which depends upon a strong world market for dairy products if it is to function with less federal economic support.

As to domestic products, to be able to provide quality food at reasonable costs farmers must have assurance that their incomes will not fluctuate from season to season. Some programs already provide the assurances they seek. The Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the amended Farm Credit Corporation Act already give the farmer some of the economic backing he needs. To deal with income instability, this government is ready to maintain and develop policies which will improve orderly marketing while protecting domestic markets from short-term inflated world market prices. After review, programs will be introduced to extend the protection already given to efficient producers to guard them from production uncertainties, specifically in the areas of crop and disease insurance and resource restoration.

I am aware that any approach to income stabilization must include trade policy and safeguards. Our trade policy will be assessed so that consumers and producers can benefit from a fast, effective system of legislation whenever specific international market disruptions occur that could temporarily distort our own domestic markets. Different protection may be required for some food commodities that are of considerable economic importance in certain regions. For instance, some products of the horticultural industry have excellent prospects of becoming competitive in the longer term, but will require assistance to help them reach the point where they can stand alone.

There is no doubt that better access to foreign markets where our agricultural products enjoy a competitive advantage will have to be negotiated. At the same time, international multilateral or bilateral commodity agreements should be considered where they are in the interest of the Canadian economy. But no matter how good our efforts to improve existing conditions are, the determination to achieve the aims of the food policy will result in less than total success unless we also review and revise our marketing systems. Market information for producers and consumers alike must be readily available and up to date. The role played by marketing boards in achieving this end is certainly of importance. As well as reviewing the total marketing structure, the processing, distributing and retailing sectors will be reviewed according to certain criteria. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be highlighting some of them.

We are still a young country, and it is my intention that agriculture will continue to develop so that more and more we can play a greater part in feeding the hungry of the world. We have a challenge to meet. The document which I am tabling in this House today is a step toward meeting that challenge. This paper examines in detail the many elements involved in creating a practical food strategy to serve, not only the fisherman and the farmer but all those involved in the food chain up to and including, the Canadian consumer.

This strategy stresses the need for consultation with interested groups. Therefore, this fall or early winter, I, in conjunction with my colleagues from the other departments involved, will be calling a working seminar to consider the implications and direction of the effective strategy described in the document being tabled today. Representatives from non-governmental organizations will be invited to attend so that we can establish a productive and continuing dialogue among all sectors concerned with food.

Through continuing communication I am convinced that the elements of the food policy which have to date served Canadians so well can be further strengthened, not only to the benefit of this country but the world.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is some disposition to allow two statements to be made consecutively, and then have questions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the second time in the last few days where we have had the Alphonse-Gaston or Mutt and Jeff routine, or whatever you want to call it, with respect to statements. This is not the time to deal with the matter directly, but it does have some effect on the matter of questioning. I realize there are problems between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott). Perhaps one cannot speak for the government. Maybe no one over there can speak for the government. I hope this is a practice that will not be followed further.

I note that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intends to speak. We intend to reply to both statements. When the government is making a statement with respect to a matter of policy, that statement should be made by one minister. If there is some disagreement in the government between two ministries as to what the policy is, perhaps the government House leader could make the statement rather than have two ministers bouncing around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We could have a whole field day if we allowed the practice to continue.

Mr. Clark: Wait until Goyer gets back.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I can foresee a bad parliamentary practice. I rise now to put in a caveat in the friendliest way I know, given the difficulties the government has reconciling these two points of view. It has now been augmented and stirred up with the entry of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) who is against everything. That hon. member is not even on speaking terms with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and probably a few others. I know this causes difficulty, but we ought to observe the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) is prepared to make a statement on motions. The practice is for a minister to make a statement. If the House wants to accommodate the making of both statements and follow with questions on both statements, it can do so. However, if the House does not want to do that it is not compelled to do so. It is a question of whether it is convenient for those members who want to receive the information before putting questions. I presume it is a departure from our regular practice and therefore requires consent.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I was aware of what the practice was going to be in this case. I spoke to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and they very kindly delivered two statements. What I am doing now is filing a caveat for the future so that this kind of practice will not continue. Somehow or other ministers ought to get together and make one statement. This is important for the rules of the House of Commons. We are having two statements today: tomorrow we could have three. Frankly, I think this is a bad practice. However, because of the discussions I am prepared to let the matter go today. In any event, I want to enter that caveat as strongly as I can.

Mr. McGrath: Since this represents a departure from normal practice, Mr. Speaker, I should like some guidance from the Chair. Apparently we are to hear statements from two ministers. If that is the intention, with your consent, since you are the custodian of the practices of the House, I should like to know whether it is Your Honour's intention to allow members who wish to ask questions afterwards, in accordance with the provisions of the Standing Order, extra time in which to address questions to both ministers, as compared with the time usually allocated when one minister makes a statement.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their indulgence. I am pleased to have the opportunity of making a statement at this stage. As hon. members are aware, the food strategy document has been published over the names of myself and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), so I am pleased to have the opportunity to add a few words to what he has said and to give my full support to the document which he has just tabled. Before commenting on the particular interest of consumers I should like to make some general observations about food policy.

I have long been an advocate of a national food policy for Canada and believe we need a strategy for food just as we need national policies for defence, energy or transportation. Our food policy must apply to all parts or components of the food system: to consumers as well as to farmers, to processors and to retailers, to the suppliers of farm inputs and to the exporters and importers of food products and agricultural commodities. Nor should we overlook the role of the fishing industry in our food system.

From the point of view of consumers, a food strategy should assure them of the right to reasonable prices and nutritious food. At the same time, the strategy must be designed to maintain a strong and competitive agricultural industry in Canada and to promote greater efficiency and productivity in food processing, distribution and retailing. But we should not forget that the interests of these various components of the food system do not always coincide. A food strategy is, thus, something of a compromise based on good relations and close co-operation between the various departments and ministers, each with a role in food policy operation and development. I am very pleased that we have been able to develop a food strategy for Canada. It is a clear demonstration of the importance the government attaches to the concerns urban consumers have expressed about the supply, price and quality of their food. This document we have put before the House today provides us with a basic guide for development of policies and programs for the food sector.

Turning, now, to the strategy itself and to those aspects of special interest to consumers, I would begin by reminding the House that while there is concern about the importance of good nutrition to the health of Canadians about new foods and additives, and about food quality generally, in recent years the main concern of consumers has been with the level of food prices. In the period 1972-75, food prices increased 50 per cent, due largely to events in international grain markets and general inflationary trends. The action taken by the government to protect consumers against these price increases included subsidies on some important foodstuffs including milk and bread. Food prices decreased between mid-1975 and the end of 1976, but there has been a resurgence of food price increases in recent months. The food component of the consumer price index is now over 70 per cent higher than in 1971. It is important, therefore, that the government's food policies and programs assure all Canadians of an adequate supply of safe and nutritious food at prices which are reasonable to consumers and producers alike. We believe our guidelines will enable us to give that assurance.

The government's food strategy represents a set of basic principles to guide the development of policies and programs for the food sector. For consumers, the primary aim is to reassure them that not only is the food marketing system fair and efficient, but also that their interests are taken into account along with those of producers, processors and others, in any government involvement in the food industry.

I would now like to highlight those principles that are of particular interest to consumers. While Canadian consumers need not worry unduly about the sufficiency of food resources or supplies for the foreseeable future, the government intends to work to conserve and restore, where necessary, scarce resources which are essential to food production. The government will use and develop its food policies to encourage the food system to provide food and food services in the simplest, most economical and most direct manner and in the most nutritious and useful form to meet the needs and demands of consumers.

Let me highlight a few new plans of direct value to consumers. We will provide regular price information to consumers on basic foods. We will strengthen the food inspection services. We will work with the provinces to develop national food inspection guidelines. We will strive to improve the productivity, efficiency and competitiveness of food production, processing, distribution and retailing. We will ensure that all appointments to boards, agencies and other institutions utilize widely experienced persons and that the views of producers, processors and consumers are adequately represented.

Mr. Fraser: Aren't you doing that now?

Mr. Abbott: We will improve the structure, procedures and public knowledge of these bodies. We will give increased emphasis to food safety and good nutrition both federally and in collaboration with provincial governments.

[Mr. Abbott.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the strategy represents only a beginning. Much work remains to be done to flesh out the principles we have enunciated in our food strategy into specific policies and programs. This we will be doing over the next months and years. I hope that initially the strategy will stimulate public debate and provide a basis for consultation between the federal government, the provinces and the private sector. For my own part, I would invite consumers and their representatives to communicate to me their views on the strategy, the principles it contains and the next steps to be taken.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a delight to see we now have the "Bobsy Twins" in the cabinet. I was reminded by statements this morning of the ancient Chinese proverb, "Talk does not cook rice". It is ironic that these statements by the two ministers with direct responsibility for food policy should have been made on the same morning that Statistics Canada reports a further major increase in food costs in the country. That is one side of the problem. The other is that the continuing escalation in food prices is occurring during a period in which net farm incomes in Canada are actually declining. As is so often the case with this government, here, too, it has managed to give us the worst of both worlds.

In this unhappy situation one would have hoped the statement might have provided us with some evidence that the government has a clear sense of direction with regard to the all-important question of a national food policy. But, again, this is not a government which has a sense of direction on anything. Thus, predictably, we are given yet another discussion paper full of the kinds of generalities which have marked the publications put out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on the basic course of economic policy.

It is worth recording that when the anti-inflation program was announced some 20 months ago, the government in its white paper at that time drew attention to food policy as one of the major sectors to be dealt with during the "breathing space" provided by wage and price controls. Yet it has taken us until today, more than 20 months later, to get even a discussion paper out of the government. The reason for this delay is, of course, known to all of us. It is simply that the two ministers involved, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott), are in total disagreement over the basic issues at stake here.

Notably absent from the front page of this document are the names of the other ministers who one would expect to be concerned with these issues. Where is there mention of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc)? Where is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien)? Where is the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand)? Where is the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang)? As for the ministers from whom we have just heard, I must congratulate them for at least getting their two names together on the same title page. I only hope there is some evidence that they had got their heads together, too. In fact, they cannot even agree on the basic question of whether we even have a food policy. Today we had a statement by the Minister of Agriculture saying we have one, and another statement by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs saying we need one. So much for cabinet solidarity!

Given the fact that these two gentlemen cannot agree on a question as basic as that, it is hardly surprising that the document seeks to come down on both sides of virtually every question involved here. The government is committed to the free market system, but it also favours supply management. It wants freer world trade in agricultural products, but it is determined to strengthen mechanisms to protect our domestic markets. So it goes on. Not only do we have a collection of generalities in this document, but even at the level of generalities the government is simply adding confusion and contradiction to questions which so urgently demand some clarity and direction.

We on this side of the House have never suggested that there is a simple cure-all for a national food policy. The issues here are both difficult and complex. The truth of the matter is that it is going to require a long-term, comprehensive approach in a climate of co-operation, not confrontation. There must be consultation if we are to bring some sense of order and stability to this whole area. Indeed, issues which are outside the direct purview of either of these two ministers and which, as I said before, are hardly touched on in this paper—transportation, land use, income support and subsidies—all have to be considered if we are to have a co-ordinated and sensible approach toward food production and consumption in this country.

To be perfectly honest, Mr. Speaker, I felt very sad when I read this paper. I really thought there was going to be a ringing declaration of how we had to expand the food industry. In 35 years we will be facing a doubled population in this world—seven billion persons in the space of a lifetime. During that time we must construct all of the infrastructure to feed those people. Here we are not talking about that. There is an old saying in my family: Lift the level of the lake and all canoes float higher. Somehow that quality is not in this document.

This document does not even talk about research and development. We have never utilized this approach. Incredible things have been happening in food technology which were utilized in the space program. Where does this document say that we are going to use the science and technology that is available? This is a rather incomplete and sad document. Some of the matters touched on in this paper, even in a general way, are necessary elements in any workable policy. No one will dispute the need for more and better consumer information about food, or the need for better public education on costs and nutrition. Now would anyone dispute the fact, given the shared jurisdictions in so many areas involved here, effective federal-provincial consultation and co-ordination is essential. We all can agree on those general goals. We will have to wait and see how the government plans to implement them in specific terms.

The Minister of Agriculture talks about "working seminars", as he calls them, some time in the late fall or early winter—bless his heart—as if that were the next stage in the process. I say to him that there simply is not enough in this document to warrant waiting until late fall to get things moving. We have all seen just how heavy a price the country has had to pay for the government's indecision and procrastination on major economic issues. I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture, along with his brothers and sisters in the cabinet, that rather than dilly-dallying for another six months he get down to business immediately. Why does the minister not refer this paper to a parliamentary committee and give it an immediate mandate to receive submissions from all groups with a direct interest in these questions? This paper is simply an agenda for discussion. Why do we not have serious debate? Who knows, Mr. Speaker, perhaps a parliamentary committee could make recommendations that even the two ministers could agree on. One is reminded that sometimes no matter how you slice certain kinds of pork, it is still baloney.

If these statements show one thing about the minister's knowledge of the food system, it is that he certainly knows, how to package. One wonders whether this is the first document in the election campaign literature. However, as anyone in the food industry can tell you, Mr. Speaker, packaging is nothing without delivery. This government must deliver on a food policy.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the most important thing about this document is its timing. It is brought before the House the day after massive publicity regarding the Ontario election. With all the papers full of the election coverage, the minister announces a new food strategy. I sympathize with the government. If I were a member of the government I would not dare release this information on a slow moving news day; it just would not be worth while.

We do not have anything new in this package, Mr. Speaker. It is simply a further study of some of our food problems, a cataloguing of some of the programs that are in place. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) argues that we already have a food policy. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) says that we do not have one. We still have disagreement between the two ministers in their statements to the House. As I say, there is nothing new in them. They are a typical piece of Liberal rhetoric for whenever the election campaign comes. They summarize existing policies.

About a year ago we had the DM Ten report which talked about a number of aspects of food policy. I think it is relevant to ask what the government has been doing for the last year, because the conclusion reached by this food strategy paper tabled today is that we need further assessment of food production in this country before we come up with a definitive program.

The statements are also full of all kinds of beautiful platitudes about food production in this country. As has already been said, some of these platitudes are conflicting. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in his statement, speaks about a market system. The Minister of Agriculture refers to marketing boards and orderly marketing. There seem to be conflicting objectives. Perhaps the statement made by Walter Stewart in his book is quite relevant; he said "divide and con" is one of the objectives of this government's food policy. They are dividing the consumer and the farmer, and at the same time trying to con both of them.

This food policy statement, if it is such a thing, is based on the same old market system we have had for years. It does not analyse any of the problems of that old market system. It does not offer any changes at all. The minister may say that changes are made, but let me analyse some of the changes that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is suggesting today. He says, first of all that the government will provide regular price information to consumers on basic foods. What does he mean by that? If he were going to provide some price information on a store by store basis, then that might be helpful to consumers; but I am sure he will not do that.

Secondly, he says the government will strengthen food inspection services. What does he mean by that? Is he going to tackle some of the junk and artificial foods sold in this country? He does not say. Thirdly, he says the government will work with the provinces to develop national food inspection guidelines. For goodness sake, Mr. Speaker, I hope he does work with the provinces: What is so new about that? Fourthly, he says the government will strive to improve the productivity, efficiency and competitiveness of food production, processing, distribution and retailing. The government has said that, probably for the last 110 years. Fifthly, he says the government will ensure that all appointments to boards, agencies and other institutions will utilize widely experienced persons, and that there will be a balanced view. I hope the government is already doing this. I hope that not all the people appointed to these boards are defeated Liberal candidates, and that some of them do have balanced views.

The final point the minister makes is that the government is going to give increased emphasis to food safety and good nutrition, both federally and in collaboration with provincial governments. Again, Mr. Speaker, that is a nice platitude; but what is the government going to do about it? All governments in this country last year spent about $1 million on nutrition information and education, while the private food chains spent about $90 million on advertising their products. What is the government going to do in this area? Again, it does not say.

In the statement of the Minister of Agriculture these same types of platitudes are made, but he does not elaborate on any specific policy. For example, he says that we need an international stabilization scheme. The government has always said this. But what new action is being taken to stabilize food prices around the world? He is saying that the problems of the farmers can all be looked after by the Agricultural Stabilization Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act, these great and wonderful programs which are in place and which will be maintained. He does not talk about improving them, despite the fact that gross farm incomes fell by 31 per cent in January, 1977, compared with January, 1976. Nothing new is being proposed in this regard. We know those programs are not fair or equitable and that they will not improve the incomes of farmers in this country.

The minister also talks about our trade policy and says it must be reassessed. How is he going to reassess this policy? What new things is he going to propose? What is he going to do about tariffs? The average tariff on farm goods in this country is less than one-half of 1 per cent, and the average manufacturing tariff is something like 20 per cent or more. What is he going to do in this area? Everything he is talking about in this food policy is really a bunch of platitudes and generalizations. It is a "nothing" statement, with nothing new in it.

We have had about one year of speculation concerning a food strategy for our country. It was supposed to co-ordinate things in Canada and do something about the crisis which I think is imminent. We have had two ministers scrapping and fighting with each other for the last year. They have let us see some of the documents and the conflicting views. Now they have come up with a statement which is a compromise and a mish-mash of ideas. It is a document which is absolutely, totally irrelevant. It is a typical Liberal gimmick as we go into an election campaign.

In the meantime, there are a lot of things which should be done. As the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) mentioned, there is a problem of food availability in the world. How are we going to feed those people? We cannot feed them now. How are we going to feed them when I am on the old age pension? The ministers should turn their attention to that problem. They do not do anything about land use. The minister's own department talks about 250 acres a day of good farmland going out of production in Canada. There is no leadership by the federal government to preserve good land for the production of food. They do nothing about the availability of food in this country, despite the fact we are already a net importer of food in Canada, if you take away grains and oilseeds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said that we will have no problem with the supply of food in the foreseeable future. We had a deficit last year of $1.5 billion. If you look at the government's own statement on food strategy for the same year, you will see they indicate the deficit is $1.9 billion. They cannot even get their figures straight. That is the situation we face in this country.

There is also the question of energy. The government did not talk about the impact of energy prices or the shortage of energy. That is important—its impact on the food strategy. The food sector uses about 15 per cent of the energy in this country. What is going to happen to prices when the cost of energy climbs? What are they doing about conservation in the food area? What are they doing about alternative sources of energy for producing food?

Already we are aware of what increased fuel costs have done to some of the fruit and vegetable growers in Ontario. That is the minister's own province, and still he has not looked at it. What are they doing about the environmental effects? We have soil erosion in this country. The quality of our soil is going down because of increased use of pesticides in Canada. That raises some serious questions about the quality of food in the future and the quality of our soil. What are they doing about that? I have already mentioned tariffs. What are they doing about tariffs? Canada is becoming less and less efficient in the production of food.

Aside from the availability of food, the government should have dealt with the quality of food. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said that consumers are becoming more and more conscious and concerned about the quality of food in this country. He did not say what they were going to do about it. Some 1,800 different chemicals are put into our food on a routine basis, and there are hundreds of others which are used. There is more and more linkage of some of our diseases today to the type of foods we are eating in this country. Nothing is being done about this. There are no new policies in terms of the quality of food in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, before you rise to cut me off, there are no changes in the manner in which we produce food in this country. The government is not going to change the old market system which has created a lot of our problems. They are not going to bring more equity into the food system for farmers, on one side, and for the consumers on the other side, despite the fact that we have had a drop in farm income and an up and down bouncing of prices over the years.

There are many problems to be faced if we want to have a good food policy in this country. The farmers of my area are concerned about the so-called government ideas regarding bigness, efficiency and competition. Farmers believe the most efficient way of producing food is through the family farm unit. What new ideas and policies do we have to protect that method of producing food? The government sits idly by while there are certain forces in the west promoting huge inland terminals to replace the country elevators. Huge companies are coming in to to squeeze out the wheat pools. What new policy is there to protect the family farms across this country? Those are the questions which have to be raised. It has been a sham and a public relations job by the government as they enter an election campaign.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning food safety and good nutrition. Some time ago I asked the minister, due to the fact that offshore meat was of an inferior quality, what the position of the government was as to the labelling of that meat. At that time he said he was going to have a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell us whether he has had that meeting with the minister, and what the results of it were?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I did not meet directly with the minister, but I asked officials of my department to consult with his officials. The question as to the quality of meat from offshore would be principally that of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the reaction of the Minister of Agriculture and his position in regard to the labelling of offshore meat, so that the Canadian consumer will be aware whether it is inferior quality meat which is being purchased or whether it is domestic quality meat.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is concerned about labelling, that it is going to be labelled as inferior quality, etc., we could not do that because the protein content is practically the same as it is in Canada. The nourishment and nutrition in that meat is practically the same as you would get from a similar kind of meat in Canada. It meets those standards, and there is nothing one can do to change that. If frozen meat is brought in and put on a meat counter, it changes colour and it is easily recognized as compared to a fresh Canadian meat product.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question. What are the possibilities of having it labelled as offshore meat?

Mr. Whelan: It would be an additional cost to the consumer, mainly. I do not know what advantage it would be to them.

Mr. Towers: Oh, come on.

Mr. Whelan: It is being considered. We are looking at many different foods being brought into Canada. We have had requests from many consumers in Canada similar to the request the hon. member has made. They want to have a label which indicates whether it is a product of Canada or whether it is an imported product. There is no denying that. There is a general trend in the consuming public to want that form of labelling on any product they buy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is one o'clock, and there are several members who have indicated a desire to ask questions. There has been a double statement. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) made a point earlier with respect to the expectation of quite a number of questions with respect to these statements. It is always possible to continue in an attempt to finish such questions. If there were a suggestion to continue, I could take it under consideration. I must have some indication of consensus as to the House rising now in the ordinary way and returning at two o'clock in order to complete this matter, together with the remaining routine proceedings. Is there unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At one o'clock hon. members were questioning the ministers upon the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott). The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has the floor.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if, in the pursuit of a food strategy and the concomitant investigation into the food industry in Canada, he can tell the House, as the minister responsible for the protection of consumer interests in the government, whether he favours the supply-management concept as exemplified by the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, and if he can tell the House whether he has satisfied himself, bearing in mind the fact that his department has made a study of this, that the supply-management concept is in the best interests of the consumer.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, the present supply-management scheme is operating in eggs, turkeys and milk. I think they are operating with varying degrees of success. As the hon. member knows, we have examined to some extent the competitive aspects of marketing as well as other sectors of the food economy, and I would want to correct the impression which was created by news reports that this strategy implies that we will launch an over-all investigation into the food industry. That is not the case. But we are going to take, consistent with this strategy, a very close look at the whole area of retailing, processing, manufacturing and marketing. I think that is in the best interests of Canadian consumers. The hon. member asks about my general enthusiasm for supply-marketing as it might be extended to other areas. I would say that I think there are preferable methods of marketing.

Mr. McGrath: In October, 1975, the Food Prices Review Board addressed itself to the question of broiler chicken prices and made specific recommendations, one of which came out against the inclusion of broiler chickens under the Farm Producers Marketing Board and, among other recommendations, they recommended that the federal government should take more vigorous action to combat and eliminate the constraints of interprovincial and international trade in the broiler industry which are contrary to the BNA Act. I would like to ask the minister if he, as the minister responsible for the protection of consumer interests, has looked into the question of interprovincial and international trade constraints by agreement which are clearly contrary to the BNA Act and which in most instances are contrary to the best interests of the consumer.

Mr. Abbott: I confess that I have not taken the opportunity to analyse closely this aspect of the marketing of poultry products in Canada. As the hon. member is aware, perhaps, cabinet is currently considering the whole question of existing poultry marketing boards, so I am somewhat limited in my capacity to respond to this question.

Mr. McGrath: The last time the government seriously addressed itself to this question was in 1972 when it established the special committee on trends in food prices. That committee made a number of recommendations. The last recommendation, which was made in 1973, was the following:

> That the federal government give consideration to the advisability of establishing a comprehensive and realistic long-term food policy for Canada, coordinated through the Department of Agriculture and that the government give consideration to having this matter referred to appropriate standing committees.

Can the minister tell the House why the government did not act on that recommendation of the committee?

Mr. Abbott: I assume the hon. member means the recommendation to refer this food strategy policy that they recommended being developed to a particular committee or to other committees.

Mr. McGrath: No.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I did not grasp the hon. member's question. This is the first step in producing a food strategy. It is not necessarily evident from this that we will not be referring it or parts of it on occasion to standing committees, consistent with that recommendation.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on that point. I will direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. The whole question of a food policy is too broad for a single parliamentary committee. Is the government giving any consideration either before the House adjourns or certainly in the fall to setting up a committee which could take possibly a few months to look into the whole aspect of a food policy for Canada and which would report back to the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or other ministers involved?

This committee could touch on the whole question of food policy. The matter is probably too complex to allow one specific department to be involved. There are too many people and groups of people who want to have some input into the question of a food policy, and to my way of thinking a parliamentary committee struck by the House of Commons would be the most realistic way of doing it. Has the government given consideration to this and can we look for that type of committee as a result of the recommendation?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, this has been discussed and I tend to favour some kind of committee. The hon. member for St. John's East referred to a committee recommendation of 1973. I was a member of the former joint committee of the House of Commons and the other place at that time. There has been much talk of a food policy and a food strategy. As I said earlier, there will probably be much more talk; but as far as I am concerned, if a committee can be informative and if it can make information available to the people of Canada with regard to our food policy and with regard to what kind of strategy we should have to improve that food policy, that might be a good thing.

Mention was made here earlier about the things we are doing in scientific research. I think we are too quiet about that, because people from many other parts of the world and people from much larger nations than ours come here to see what our agricultural scientists and research people are doing. We are the envy of the world because we live in the northern hemisphere and are as productive as we are. I tend to lean toward the hon. member's suggestion, but how quickly we can get on with it is another matter. The hon. member is aware of the committees we have and the backlog of work they have. However, we will certainly be discussing this matter further.

Mr. Murta: I am glad to hear the minister say that. I concur with him, and I think the idea most of us here would have for a committee would be to use knowledgeable people from the various sectors of the food industry. We should use producers, processors and consumers. We should strike a special committee. In that way the whole question could be put before the public and discussion could be generated.

It has been adequately expressed that it was a very watered down and a somewhat limp statement made this morning by the two ministers involved. It really was a statement of the obvious, except that the Minister of Agriculture mentioned that a working committee would be struck this fall. As I understand it, this committee will consist of intergovernmental people. What prompted this kind of statement in the first place? It was really a statement of the obvious. Certainly, those of us who have been involved with agriculture and food policy want to know what the government is doing and what the various political parties are doing. Much time has been consumed, and the various roles of the various segments of our food industry have not been clarified. Did consumers ask for this statement? Did producers ask for it? Did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs want this kind of statement? What was the reason for it?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a result of a series of occurrences. There have been requests from various groups in Canada. It is the result of political commitments of the government of Canada. The government committed itself to putting this kind of program together. The hon. member says he wants an interparliamentary committee of the Senate and the House. Perhaps the hon. member did not say the Senate: perhaps I am putting words in his mouth. However, that would probably be a satisfactory committee as far as I am concerned and bearing in mind my philosophy on the other place. A paper was referred to this morning by two hon. members who spoke before we adjourned at one o'clock. When we speak of a paper in terms of its being a political document, I do not think the hon. member would suggest that we should use any such thing as a political document unless we are afraid of its substance.

Mr. Fraser: There was not much substance.

Mr. Whelan: When one studies the facts which have been put together in the document and the recommendations which are made in it, one can see that this is the first time such a document has been put together. It was put together in co-operation with the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Finance and all the other departments directly involved in this program. The program involves food production, processing, distribution, transportation, and so forth. The food industry is the largest industry we have, and many people have to be involved in it. So the statement came about as a result of requests from many different sources.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I do not know whether I am putting words into his mouth, but I think he alluded to a preference for other methods of marketing besides supply-management. I would like to ask the minister whether the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has a group of public servants assessing, from the department's point of view, methods of marketing other than the supply management concept which, of course, is based on supply and demand. Is anybody looking at other methods of marketing which may be applicable to the Canadian agricultural situation?

Mr. Abbott: As I understand the definition of supply-management, in contrast to the hon. member's point, the government attempts, through a board, to judge what the supply and the demand will be and to allocate quotas for supply, and so forth. This is an innovative technique which, if it were based on any further application, would be less preferred than other methods. This does not mean, contrary to the popular view, that I am opposed to the general concept of marketing boards, and I have said that on many occasions.

I have what is known in the department as a food policy group composed of some very able people who advise me on specific food matters. They do not spend their time studying alternative methods of supply-management, however, because we honestly believe that for the majority of commodities in Canada we already have a marketing system which has proved very effective. We also have emergency procedures for border protection of imported products which may come in at distress or dump prices, and we have stabilization plans for producers to protect them from market fluctuations. It is not a matter of dreaming up some revolutionary, new scheme for marketing. There is an existing apparatus that has proved very effective, and I am somewhat reluctant to move into supply-management for a greater number of products than it already applies to.

Food Policy

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have questions for both ministers, but I will start with a good Conservative. Would the minister be willing to have his food policy advisory group appear before the standing committee on agriculture so that the committee could have some input?

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry; would the hon. member repeat his question, please?

Mr. Nystrom: Would the minister be in favour of letting the food advisory group appear before the committee so that they can be questioned? This might be valuable to the committee.

Mr. Abbott: This is a new idea, Mr. Speaker. Certainly I do not regard myself as a good Conservative; in fact, I have rarely met a good Conservative. I do not think it would be reasonable to ask policy advisers to appear before the committee. They really do not have any responsibility as civil servants apart from advising the department.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my next question concerns the suggestion in the policy statement about investigation into the processing, retailing and distribution industries. What is meant by an investigation? The competition bureau already has some power, so is the minister going to make changes?

Mr. Abbott: What we stated is that the government undertakes to concentrate on the competitiveness of food processing, distribution and retailing by monitoring the performance of the sector, including a variety of other definitions. In no case does the paper say it is going to do more than direct the bureau of competition, also falling under my responsibility, in an appropriate manner to study this sector. This is not, as was stated on radio, an investigation or any sort of witch-hunt. We are simply going to look across the board at the competition features of that economy, or lack thereof, and direct the competition bureau to keep a vigilant eye and carry out inquiries as it intends to do in a variety of economic areas in various parts of the country.

Mr. Nystrom: I will switch now to the more progressive minister. There was a gap in the policy, and I should like to ask about this area, that is, self-sufficiency in food production. According to the stance of the government in the paper tabled this morning, if we take away grains and oilseeds we had a deficit of $1.9 billion last year. I think that is important in terms of the balance of payments and jobs. What plans does the government have to produce more food and become self-sufficient? The deficit will probably increase because the price of grain is falling. It will probably be over $2 billion next year.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, one thing I want to make clear is that everybody on this side of the House is very forward-thinking. I would not be found guilty of using that word the Conservative party has used so often and that has proved so false—"progressive." We have done all kinds of studies. We know that we import more food than we need in order to have a proper diet in Canada. The minister from Prince Edward Island is not here, and I do not see any other members from that province in the House, although there are some from New Brunswick. For their benefit, I want to say that one medium-sized potato, without gravy or any other garnish, will provide all the vitamin C one person needs in a day—and it is not fattening. We import too much of that sort of thing into Canada.

Mr. Fraser: The "one spud a day" boys march again.

Mr. Whelan: I did not hear what the hon. member said. If it was as great as his contribution to the Conservative leadership campaign, maybe it does not matter. We are exploring trade with developing countries which produce things we cannot produce here. The hon. member from western Canada stated that if it were not for cereal grains we would not have the balance of trade that we enjoy in food. I would point out, however, that without the other farmers we would have to import all our food and would be paying high prices for it.

I think his suggestion is ridiculous. He spoke about vegetable oilseeds, etc. But, Mr. Speaker, we are in a very fortunate position. Our agricultural industry is very productive. I apologize for what I said about the hon. member being ridiculous, if he was referring to the great productive capacity of farmers in western Canada. Even Ontario is rapidly becoming as great a grain producer as Manitoba. Production has gone from 30 million bushels of corn to 160 million or 180 million bushels in Ontario alone. There is no reason why we cannot be self-sufficient in oil-bearing seeds and even export more than we do at present. These are some of the things that our scientists and researchers are constantly working on.

The hon. member put a question regarding supply-management to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I do not know why he did not ask me, because I would like to comment on that. I do not think we need any more supply-management in agriculture than in any other industry—the taxi business in Ottawa, for instance.

Mr. Nystrom: A last question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister what policy he had to produce more food in Canada. He talked about grain, corn and potatoes, but did not answer the question. The paper he tabled today shows that if grains and oil seeds were omitted, the deficit would be $1.9 billion. Is it the policy of the government to produce more food in this country, or is it not? That is very important, not only for farmers but in order to create jobs in the processing industry, the balance of trade, and so on.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House. When the hon. member talks about producing more food, I hope he is not suggesting that we produce it, just pile it up then hope somebody will buy it. That would be acting like Santa Claus. If we just use stabilization, then efficient producers will take advantage of the program and we will end up with piles of food that have to be distributed, or dumped. Is that what the hon. member means by more food production? I know that my farmers—our farmers, I should say, or my farmers, because I am the Minister of Agriculture, or at least part of the Minister of Agriculture—

An hon. Member: Don't forget Otto.

Mr. Whelan: If they were given the proper incentive for nearly any of those things that our climatic conditions will allow us to grow, productivity could be increased by 50 per cent in five years. But we must make sure they get a proper return. That is what we point out in the strategy paper. It is wasteful and uneconomic to let the producer think that the food will be thrown on the world market in distress form. This is what happened with skim milk powder. The OPEC countries, Japan and everybody else got tremendous bargains, but it cost our producers money because of the biological entity we were dealing with called the cow.

● (1430)

You learn from experience. You can store grain for years so long as you store it in good condition and keep it dry. But you cannot store all commodities. It sounds grand and charitable to say "Store the food you produce." But, Mr. Speaker, some of it you cannot store, some of it you cannot sell, and some you can't even give away. I say, be realistic instead of making such wild, far-out suggestions.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture requested a question on supply-management. Is the Minister of Agriculture's concept of supply-management the same as that just enunciated by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we do not differ very much on that, but I am sure even identical twins differ somewhat. We have been called identical twins, but there is nothing identical about us. Just look! When I was talking to the Toronto board of trade about all the things I am trying to do, someone sent me a note saying, "Keep talking, you sound like a Tory." Needless to say, I sat down.

Mr. Elzinga: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It was nice to hear the minister confirm, for a change, that he agrees with the concept the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs just explained, for that minister told the House he believed that we should have government-operated boards for supply-management, instead of producer-operated boards. Apparently the minister agrees with this, and I am glad he put it on record. If he disagrees, I suggest that it is time for the minister to listen more and not talk so much.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the same to the hon. member. I said we differ. I said that basically I agree with his principles concerning supply-management. But you cannot have a rigid society totally based on supply-management. However, the hon. member knows exactly, because he asked me in committee if I supported the concept of producer-run marketing boards. I certainly do. I do not believe in bureaucrats running them. They do not run any for which I am responsible.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not state that I do not believe in producer-operated boards. I said I do not favour a wide expansion of supply-management whereby bureaucrats essentially would set the estimates of demand levels. That is the only reference I made on the point, and I want to correct any possible misapprehension.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I say to the minister—and the record will show, I suggest—that he said "government operated boards."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members ought to be aware that this is a time set aside for questions and answers, not for statements to be made from both sides of the House. If the hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question, I will recognize him. If nobody wishes to ask questions, we shall proceed to orders of the day.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, may I direct one further question to the Minister of Agriculture? What does the minister think of Bill C-42, and how does he think it will affect the food policy he just enunciated in the House?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should discuss Bill C-42 as it was presented to the House. I am willing to wait until that diligent, thorough and intelligent committee of the House of Commons has finished its studies and brings in its recommendations.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs just confirmed he does not favour wider application of the supply-management concept, such statement originally having been made in reply to my question concerning the possibility of setting up a broiler marketing board, I ask the minister if he favours the establishment of a broiler marketing board under the farm products marketing act. If so, how can he be of that view, considering the dichotomy developing between himself and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? Finally, will the minister tell the House—since we shall probably never see a repetition of today's double act in which two ministers make a statement—which minister will be responsible for implementing this strategy? Will it be himself, as Minister of Agriculture, or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, my colleague said the question of a broiler marketing board is before cabinet. I am surprised at the hon. member even asking the question. Perhaps the hon. member is trying to cast doubt on this question. The hon. member for Elgin and others have raised this question under our Standing Order 43 procedures. They want to know why I am not going ahead with the establishment of a broiler marketing board. I suggest the hon. member should consult some of the people in his party who are concerned about broiler production, because perhaps they can lend a helping hand. When I have talked on this subject to members of his party outside the House and asked, "Have you spoken to the hon. member for St. John's East?" they have told me, "We have our own problems, too."

Mr. McGrath: Yes, but where does the minister stand?

Mr. Whelan: Parliament passed a law allowing poultry producers to make representations to the government, to say if they want to come under the national farm products marketing act. The poultry producers of this nation followed the proper procedure and held hearings across the country. They made representations to the Minister of Agriculture and I forwarded those to the cabinet. I say that our food strategy will be a harmonious strategy worked out by myself, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and other ministers concerned. One of the hon. member's colleagues this morning suggested that we are the people involved in the question. We are very much involved in this strategy paper and will be involved in attempts to make our food strategy work even better.

Mr. McGrath: If that is harmony, you are playing off-key.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture has often spoken of oversupply of a commodity, but I think neither he nor the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs considered the question of undersupply. The minister said we can increase the production of certain commodities by several hundred per cent—I forget the exact figure. I ask, what strategy does the government propose to assure supply? Will that strategy penalize producers for underproduction, for not producing enough? For instance, three dairy seasons ago we encountered real difficulty when the production costs of milk supplements and concentrates rose steeply and milk production for the first time in our history actually decreased. Will any part of the strategy ensure certain specific levels of production? Further, does the minister propose to penalize producers who underproduce? So far he has talked about surpluses but not about underproduction.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the production of several commodities is governed by marketing boards. Let us be fair. Federally, we exercise control over the production of eggs and turkeys which come under the National Farm Products Marketing Board. The production of milk comes under the Canadian Dairy Commission established by an act of this parliament. Also, we have the Canadian Wheat Board, established in 1935 by the government headed by R. B. Bennett. However, no action was taken with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board Act until 1948.

Mr. Justice Emmett Hall said in his recently handed down report that the people of western Canada are unanimous in their support of the Canadian Wheat Board, a marketing board. No matter what anyone says, the Canadian Wheat Board is a marketing board. The hon. member sitting on my left said, at the recent dinner held in Toronto honouring him, that he was proud because as a civil servant he had been able to assist farmers. He was speaking of the setting up of the Canadian Wheat Board. The hon. member opposite talked of penalties for underproduction. Underproduction of what?

Mr. Jarvis: Milk.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Whelan: I have nothing to do with penalizing for underproduction of milk, as the hon. member knows. There is a milk marketing system in Ontario, and Ontario just went through an election. The Conservative premier did not win the election outright, as he thought he would. I was surprised to note that not one of the party leaders fighting that election mentioned marketing boards, especially since 80 commodities produced in Ontario come under some sort of marketing board. Was this question raised as an issue? The provincial minister of agriculture, Mr. Newman, made a statement on marketing boards. He sent me a copy of it during the election campaign and said, "Gene, I am 100 per cent behind you in what you are trying to do for agriculture. However, that does not mean you have to be that rigid about marketing boards. The options with regard to marketing boards are as varied as the colours of the rainbow. The farmers can make that selection. The hon. member says the producers should make that selection, but do not foist anything on them. The beef producers in western Canada expressed the opinion that they do not want one. No one will foist anything on them as was done in 1935 with the Canadian Wheat Board. It is a fact that that happened at that time.

● (1440)

Mr. Jarvis: What about milk?

Mr. Whelan: Milk is one of the most difficult products in the world to market. In our society we are throwing away food that is very costly to produce. It requires energy to manufacture the machinery, till the soil and do the planting. Even though it takes all that energy, we throw away 300 pounds of food per man, woman and child in all of Canada. We talk about penalizing these people because they do not produce enough. There is nothing in any program for which I would be responsible that would be so ridiculous. I do not know of any provincial program that penalizes if they are short of production. They are penalized at the bank.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, the minister has given a speech. I will not ask for equal time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, there is unlimited time in this question and answer period. It is all right for the minister to say he does not want to take the time of the House, but I think he has had adequate time. We want to get on to the regular proceedings. I will permit one last question.

Mr. Jarvis: The minister knows full well that had it not been for the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, production would have dropped substantially because of the threat of the lower quota. Do not let him tell me or anyone else that marketing boards have not been penalized for underproduction. That is absolute nonsense. The minister used milk as an example. I will use the same example. The minister says he has no control in the province of Ontario or any other province. Every cheddar cheese plant in Ontario is short of milk. The minister is aware of the figures; they are available in his department. How can he say there has been overproduction, when cheddar cheese plants in my constituency and those of my friend to my left—and probably in the minister's own riding—are short? How can he justify that shortage and at the same time import millions of pounds of offshore cheese? I think it is 50 million pounds.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board distributes milk in Ontario. They distribute their share of the national quota; we do not distribute it. They say whether it will go to the cheese factories. At the present time their quota is reviewed every three months. They can make application to have it increased if they wish. They can do that if the production needs are there. Don't blame the dairy commission for that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the minister to resume his seat. This is developing into a debate, and it is not the time for debate. We have had a statement by two ministers. Questions should be related to those statements, and not to all policies of both departments. I see that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, of whom a question has not been asked, wishes to comment on an answer by the minister. Unless he is rising on a point of order, we should proceed immediately to the introduction of bills.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. To use the words of the late C. D. Howe, perhaps this is degenerating into a debate. At the same time, I feel I should have an opportunity to clarify one answer to a question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East. The answer of the Minister of Agriculture was incomplete. He has taken words out of my mouth and used them in his own statement. I will not take very long, perhaps a minute or a minute and a half.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister is not to generate another debate and bring the hon. member for St. John's East to his feet, I will give him the opportunity, as I would any hon. member, to make a point of clarification. However, I invite him to do it briefly and be to the point.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, the point of clarification I want to make is that the Minister of Agriculture is quite right to support the schemes that now exist. He stated, quite accurately, the broiler marketing plan has been the subject of public hearings and is up for consideration by cabinet; but I said, expressing a personal view, that I would regret it if the supply-management concept was extended to many more commodities than it now applies to.

Mr. McGrath: That is exactly what he said.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my impression that this question period is not limited to people on only one side of the House. I wish to ask a question related to the statements that have been made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member did not rise in his place during the time of the question period. After I told the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot that he was the last questioner, and the hon. member saw an argument developing, he saw a reason to ask a question. In order to be fair to members of the government as well, I will recognize the hon. member, but on principle and not because the hon. member has helped himself to be recognized.

Mr. Gray: I appreciate your courtesy, Mr. Speaker. I guess I was not popping up high enough earlier in the period. I wish to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a brief question. He said it was not a case of the government launching an over-all investigation into the food industry. I recall the statement by the Minister of Agriculture that there was to be a "review" of the "total marketing structure", including marketing boards. Can the minister assist us by explaining exactly what kind of study is going to be carried on? Will it be anything more than the usual attention of the director of competition policies with regard to certain sectors of the economy or will it be, as implied by the Minister of Agriculture, something new, extensive and total in line with the spirit I understand is intended for this green paper?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, the director of combines and inquiries was perhaps highlighted by the fact that he did decide to make a study of the whole area of marketing boards and their effect on competition. Pursuant to this, he held a seminar which was within his authority. That seminar or inquiry was just one more aspect of his inquiry. I do not think it implies there will be a profound investigation in this area.

PETITIONS REQUESTING GREATER PROTECTION FOR SEALERS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY ACT

AMENDMENTS AND DEFINITIONS

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-36, an act to amend the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief remarks concerning this measure. The motor vehicle safety law emerged as a result of co-operative action between the provinces and the federal government in an attempt to come to grips with the need to improve the standard of motor vehicles in terms of general safety. This co-operation has been shown in the preparation of the legislation and, as well, in the general enforcement of its provisions. We sought to improve safety standards by imposing a variety of requirements on manufacturers and others. Close liaison between the governments continues as we work together in this important field. We hold regular meetings in connection with vehicle safety and we have set a number of targets in an attempt to lower the rate of vehicle accidents and deaths. I am delighted that these measures seem to be having the desired effect.

The safety standards take into account a variety of features including specifications for crash avoidance and crashworthiness as well as environmental protection. Examples of crash avoidance standards are those related to steering, braking and vision. Crashworthiness standards are related to interior padding, bumpers, side-door strength, roof-crashing resistance and, of course, seat belts and their availability. The placement of seat belts throughout automobiles and similar vehicles has, I am sure, contributed to the diminution of injuries and deaths in accidents.

Since the proclamation of the act on January 1, 1971, the number of motor vehicles registered in Canada has grown from 8.5 million to 12.5 million, an increase of almost 50 per cent, which means that traffic density has greatly increased on our roads. Notwithstanding this, I am pleased to say that over the same period of time the number of deaths per 100 million vehicle miles has fallen from 6.7 to an estimated 4.7, a decrease of 30 per cent. I believe that activity under the act accounts for a significant portion of this welcome improvement. I have in mind steps such as the following: 76 new safety regulations and amendments were issued and implemented; 3.7 million vehicles were recalled to correct safety-related deficiencies; 4,545 public complaints on possible safety-related defects were investigated and resolved; 3,500 audit inspections of manufacturers and imports were performed; and 9,800 tests of vehicles and their components were carried out to determine whether federal safety standards had been complied with.

In the amending bill we propose to make improvements and provide clarification to make the legislation even more effective. I refer to matters which have become apparent during the six years of the administration of the act. The specific objectives of the present bill are to remove doubts as to whom the act addresses, to require the retention of records, to make the notice of defect requirements more effective, to provide exemptions from some requirements in order to permit technological development without inhibition, and to make the penalty for violating the notice of defect requirements consistent with other penalties under the act and in similar federal statutes.

I can assure hon. members that the co-operative attitude existing between the provinces and the federal government will continue. I think many members will welcome the improvement in relation to seat belts and their general use. While there will be differences of opinion about whether mandatory legislation in this field is the desired route to take—and the provinces have gone both ways in this regard—there is unanimous agreement about the desire for education and encouragement, and our recent campaigns, advertising and encouragement of the use of seat belts, have had their part to play, I think.

I therefore commend the bill at second reading to the House, and I believe there is general agreement that the bill be referred to the committee of the whole so that we may complete that stage in this House at this time as well.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister most heartily for his remarks and let him know that what he has already said is correct, that the bill has the general approval of those of us on this side of the House. Before we pass it at this stage I should like to make some fairly important comments, in my view, on the main principles and thrusts of the original legislation and this amending bill as it passes through the House of Commons.

On September 13, 1899, a certain H. H. Bliss, a real estate agent broker in Central Park West, New York City, stepped down from what was then called a horse drawn tramway. He was struck down and killed by what was referred to in the New York Times the next day as a "horseless carriage". As far as we know, Mr. Speaker, his was the first recorded automobile death in North American history.

Since 1899 there have been more victims killed on the roads of North America in or by motor vehicles than there were in all the wars in history. It is a world-wide epidemic. Dr. Wilder Penfield and his successors at the Montreal Neurological Institute called the epidemic of highway motor vehicle deaths and injuries "an uncontrolled world-wide epidemic." We are talking about the number one killer of our young people under 35. After cancer and heart disease we are talking about the number three killer in the entire population.

Suffice it to say that at one time or another we all attempt to place blame for motor vehicle deaths or injuries sometimes on the driver, sometimes on the road, and sometimes on the vehicle. That is an easy thing to do. We are not so much interested in blame as we are in taking what most people term today the epidemiological approach to this world-wide, uncontrolled epidemic, treating the road and surroundings as the atmosphere in the epidemic, the driver as the agent, and the car as the microbe.

In terms of this world-wide epidemic we are dealing today more particularly with the automobile, and I would commend the minister for a very progressive step forward. When man took to the air there was no question whatever that aircraft were manufactured, altered, and inspected under the strictest rules of law at all levels. The same is true of rolling stock on railways. From the very beginning all over the world you could not build, alter or touch a piece of rolling stock on a railway without the highest degree of regulation in terms of building, inspection, and alteration.

Somehow or other—and there is no use analysing it too profoundly today—the automobile per se, at least until very recent history, in terms of its manufacture, alteration, and inspection has been outside the rule of law and public regulation. As I say, I want to move away from the notion of who is to blame, whether a disinterested public, an inactive governmental authority or an irresponsible industry. I have been talking about that for years. Today I think we are going to make progress by co-operation.

In these days of contemporary consumerism we realize that we have the right to expect from government and the automobile industry production of the safest and best possible motor vehicles that science and technology and industry can produce. It is all very well to say that the consumer should know. To a great extent, with a high degree of public information the consumer should be made to know. But in the very technical area of the manufacture of motor vehicles it is incumbent on government and industry to produce the best and the safest motor vehicles possible in terms of safety and consumer protection, in view of the world-wide epidemic to which I have just referred.

Another footnote might be this, Mr. Speaker, that it is the only world-wide epidemic we know of today which is compounding at, say, a 5 per cent annual increase in many places, though not necessarily in Canada.

Before terminating my remarks I want to refer specifically to some of the aspects of this amending bill. I am very interested in safety features and the motor vehicles safety branch. The government has largely done a good job of making sure that safety features on motor vehicles are mandated, but I hope that in co-operation with the provinces and the government the motor vehicle industry will stop talking about safety features and start talking about performance standards, because what we are often doing is adding after the fact safety features to intrinsically unsafe motor vehicles.

While we are making progress with safety features, I repeat that we are adding these safety features in many instances to motor vehicles, be they trucks, cars or whatever, which already by design and by marketing and advertising concepts are unsafe. In future I hope we will talk about more than simply adding safety features to intrinsically unsafe motor vehicles. Rather, we should be talking about the government mandating, at the design stage, performance standards for our motor vehicles.

I want to add my full support to the concept of air bags. I regret to say that while I think many of the shoulder harnesses and restraints that we have already are very good, a great improvement over what we had ten years ago, they can be improved. For example, the moment the occupant of a vehicle locks the doors of the vehicle and secures his seat belt, in terms of percentages the risk of death on the highway is reduced by about 40 per cent. We know that 65 per cent of the deaths on highways are produced at collision speeds under 45 miles an hour, believe it or not, when an occupant is thrown out of a vehicle. Thus the restraint systems are very important.

I have heard the industry's rebuttal to the air bag system, that it is imperfect and at times it may function when you do not want it to function. There is also the problem, vis-à-vis the air bags, of damage being caused to the ears if it goes off when it should not. From the research I have made with my assistants, and those who have been so kind as to help me in those areas, no matter what is happening in the United States the minister should come forth and support air bags in motor vehicles. It is the most advantageous restraint system we know of at the present time. As I say, in the whole area of building safer cars, we should insist on performance standards as opposed to adding safety features to intrinsically unsafe motor vehicles.

There are specific amendments in the bill relating to the whole notion of recalls. We on this side are concerned about that, and the minister is as well. In the United States when any one of the automobile industries announces a recall, they make sure by surveying industry procedures that the recall is not only made but is effectively made in terms of the regulations which require the filing of registered letters at the central commission in Washington by industry and others. We are not quite up to that mark in Canada, but I would like the minister, when we go through the committee stage, to assure us that the recall amendments mean effective recall in terms of Canadian performance.

In conjunction with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) I should like to see, under the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, a more regular public reporting system whereby there will be requirements under the regulations for the motor vehicle safety branch to make public its findings, even though they are not totally completed, at certain given intervals. Thus the public, the government, and industry in some instances, will know exactly where we are going in terms of safety features and standards in automobiles.

In our committee members on this side of the House have discussed this. I am not suggesting that part of one empire should go to another without great consideration, but because of the very specific work the motor vehicle safety branch is doing, I am wondering whether this specific branch and its group of dedicated and available people should not be under the aegis of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I know it is a transport matter, but as I see that section of the minister's department developing and doing its good work, it would be more effective if the motor vehicle safety branch reported directly, as things are now, to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I realize it was difficult to visualize that two or three years ago, but I feel it should be considered.

In terms of the world-wide epidemic of motor vehicle and highway deaths and injuries, everyone has a pet theory. We have heard them in conversations, but we really do not know. We have heard reference to drunken driving and this sort of thing. If we were to take an epidemiological approach, most accidents involve the road, the car, and the driver. Very often we do not know why people get into accidents, and once in an accident, what kills or injures them.

One of the basic things we need here in Ottawa, without building up a bureaucracy to touch upon the whole area of accident prevention, is a co-ordinated accident prevention research collecting bureau in order to get much more co-ordinated data before we move into the area of accident prevention. I am referring to data in terms of why people get into accidents and what are the causes of injuries and deaths once in them. We know today we are talking about standards and many features in automobiles which will help prevent people getting into motor vehicle accidents in the first place. It is all very well to say people were silly to get in them, but they do get in them. We should look into reducing the possibility of death, injury and/or serious injury. Perhaps the minister would agree that this is a step forward vis-à-vis a very serious problem. We hope this is just a small step forward and that we can expect bigger and better things in relation to a very important problem in the months and years ahead.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have known occasions, believe it or not, when this House has spent a great deal of time on something not really very important. This afternoon I think we are doing the reverse of that. We are in a mood to pass, within a reasonably short period of time, a measure which is quite important.

Although the motion, as it was read from the Chair, called for the reference of this bill after second reading to the appropriate standing committee, when that time comes, Mr. Speaker, you will find that there is consent on all sides of the House to refer it to the committee of the whole so that we can put the bill through all of its stages today.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) has pointed out in his speech today, and on many other occasions, that one of the very serious problems facing the human race is coping with accidents which take place on the highways. It strikes me that the short debate we are having this afternoon is, in a sense, a sequel to a very important debate we had a week ago today on a motion introduced in private members' hour by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan). There were a number of speeches, which I think were very important and constructive, on that occasion. I should like to mention in particular the speech of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres) who gave us the statistics which make action in the field of motor vehicle safety extremely important. We had also worth while contributions by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas), the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook). What we are doing this afternoon is a case of acting, at least in part, on the pleas made last Friday afternoon.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has emphasized that there are three elements with respect to motor vehicle travel—there is the motor vehicle itself, the highway, and the driver. What we are concerned with this afternoon is of course the motor vehicle. We are glad that the minister is able to report that the co-operation among the various levels of government in this country is good. We understand from that that the provincial governments are prepared to accept the amendments which are being made this afternoon in the bill which is before us.

We welcome the extent to which the standards are being raised and the enforcement procedures being tightened, and I join the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi in expressing the hope that the recall provision and other measures contained in this legislation will really be implemented.

So, as I have already said, this is one of those cases where we are dealing with something that is extremely important, but we do not have to spin it out to emphasize that fact, and we are glad to give our support to this bill.

I have just one other word which I should like to offer, and again it is a case of recalling the excellent debate that we had a week ago today on the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth during which the statement was made on several occasions that alcohol and gasoline do not mix. I hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will give his support to the campaign which the Minister of National health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is waging in that respect.

It is an important measure that we have before us this afternoon. We are prepared to give it second reading, to put it through committee of the whole, and to give it third reading before four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Lang: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I seek unanimous consent of the House to amend the motion to change the reference to the committee of the whole.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion put by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is that the bill be referred to committee of the whole. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

On Clause 1.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I did not take part in the second reading debate on this bill because I understood it was going into committee of the whole and at that time I would have the opportunity to make some remarks on behalf of my colleagues, the hon. member for Pembina and the hon. member for Vegreville, the latter having had discussions with the minister regarding this bill.

We are in general agreement with what the government is proposing in this legislation. Nevertheless there are one or two sleepers there on which we would like to have some answers, and I understand the hon. member for Vegreville, who is not able to be here at this time, has discussed them with the Minister of Transport.

It is my understanding that the minister would be prepared to accept an amendment to Clause 1(2) to exclude farm tractors from this legislation. Some of us who are closely related to agriculture are concerned about this clause as it relates to farm tractors and the inclusion of the definition of manufacturing as it relates to farm tractors. It is my understanding, as well as that of my colleagues, that if a farmer renovates a machine in any way, he can be considered, under this piece of legislation, as a manufacturer. In other words, if you have a tractor and you put a cab on it or change the cab or do something along that line, then according to the definition in this bill you are considered a manufacturer and considered liable in case of any accident.

Therefore, so that we do not have to come back to this piece of legislation some time in the future to request the exemption of farm tractors, I suggest that we should amend it now, and I would ask the minister whether there is any requirement for the inclusion of farm tractors. Also, can the minister tell us whether there is any incompatibility in the definitions of federal and provincial jurisdictions.

Another point that I should like to make is that it is difficult to differentiate between farm tractors and other motorized farm vehicles such as swathers, combines, bale wagons, power balers, and so on. We should take a really serious look at this.

If the minister has had a discussion with the hon. member for Vegreville in this regard and is prepared to accept this amendment, perhaps I should not prolong the debate any further but move the following amendment:

That Clause 1 be amended by striking out lines 21 and 22 at page 1 thereof, and substituting therefor the following:

"motorized snow vehicles, but does not include any vehicle"

All the amendment does is to omit farm tractors from this legislation.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to concur with the amendment of the hon. member for Red Deer which has the effect of removing farm tractors from the bill. They had been included with the general thought of imposing obligations on the manufacturer which can only benefit the farmers and farm community. However, the hon. member for Vegreville raised the question of whether the word "manufacturer" was accurately or sufficiently defined to exclude the dealer who happens to put a cab upon a tractor. I think it could be argued that that is not in fact a manufacturer, even within this definition, but rather than leave that point in doubt, and with the knowledge that we might want to come back to deal further with combines and other motorized machinery which goes on the road, it seems to me quite satisfactory to accept this amendment at this point and therefore to eliminate farm tractors and to proceed with the bill.

● (1530)

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, no one would indicate that there is any division whatsoever on this side in terms of the amendment to the amendment which would now exempt in the definition—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not the minister's amendment.

Mr. Grafftey: I said the amendment to the amendment. I would just like to put a proviso. I feel obliged to bring before the House very briefly the fact that while we are excluding farm tractors from the definition—and I assume we would not to be able to mandate standards—I hope farm tractor manufacturers will be cognizant of the importance of roll bars on tractors.

[Mr. Towers.]

Far too many farmers, under fatigued conditions or whatever, roll their tractors and are killed, and I hope that while we are not including farm tractors in the definition, in the future the industry will, wherever possible, voluntarily include as standard equipment roll bars to prevent what is a very serious thing on far too many farms, rolling tractors which kill drivers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I too should like to indicate my unhappiness with the amendment, namely, the elimination of farm tractors from the definition of a motor vehicle. However, if that is necessary in order to get the legislation through, I am not going to stand in its way, but I am pleased that the Minister of Transport has suggested that possibly later on there can be other amendments covering all motorized farm equipment. As the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi pointed out, what we are concerned about here is not how the operators of farm machinery behave; we are concerned about putting an onus on the manufacturer.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 1, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On Clause 3.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister exactly what changes this particular amendment would make in terms of government involvement in recall procedures. Would the minister briefly inform the House to what extent the motor vehicle safety branch of his department is involved in recalls? Very often we read in the newspapers that half a million cars which have a certain defect are being recalled. What actions does the department take to make sure that these recalls are not only made but also that the defects or potential defects are rectified at the distributor level?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the amendment would require that notice come to the department as well as to all of the people who may have a particular model of vehicle, and in that sense it is a clarification which will assure that the notice reaches out. This will allow the department to deal with the issue of whether the matter is being properly handled and rectified, and I think that should allow for a better administration of the legislation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, in keeping with some concerns I have had with regard to other legislation put forward by various departments—particularly put forward by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—I am ever conscious that in imposing controls on products there is a tendency for almost massive over-kill. In other words, it is one thing to produce a commodity and another to use it properly. There is another matter of producing a commodity and saying that it must be absolutely safe. Rule upon rule is piled up, and control upon control is piled up.

While these rules may be aimed at the absolute in safety, they should, in my view, also be aimed at those who do not make proper use of products. After all, there is no such thing as introducing a feature into a vehicle without cost, and the more we have tinkered with requirements, the more costly it has been.

Some brainstorms have hit some legislatures in North America with regard to so-called safety standards, and legislation has been passed. Perhaps everybody was out golfing and there were only a handful of interested people around, much like this afternoon, who pushed something through in the urgency of their consideration. The net result is that when they wake up on Monday morning they realize what they have done, and the whole thing is impractical. It must be remembered that all of those so-called safety standards do cost, and who pays for them? The consumer. When designing regulations there is a tendency on the part of bureaucrats to think that those regulations are for the benefit of the public. Certainly they are for the benefit of the public, but not for the benefit of the public's purse.

Bill C-16, Bill C-42, and other proposals not only from this year but from prior years have all resulted in massive cost increases which are borne by the public, and we are not sure those measures actually meet the safety needs because there are so many accidents which result from the misuse and abuse of vehicles. There is no such thing as making a vehicle safe for the fool, and not only for the fool but also for the person who deliberately misuses machines and equipment. I think reasonableness has to be introduced into all of these standards. I am not saying these things with particular respect to what the minister proposes here.

In considering the guidelines we want to impose with regard to motor vehicle safety I would be one of the first to say that manufacturers must be careful. However, as careful as they might be, there will be many recalls for the purpose of replacing certain equipment. Perhaps we should err on the side of safety, but there have been accidents which were caused by lack of caution, by mental fatigue or mental failure. It is only by the continued misuse of certain equipment that there may be breakdowns. Bearing that in mind, I hope we are not going to impose standards which will cause totally unnecessary costs to the manufacturers of equipment, particularly automobiles, whether they be produced domestically or whether they come from abroad. Those are matters that we also have to consider because everyone has a bottom line figure for the cost of their living each year.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment briefly on the standards set for snowmobiles. In the last ten years these machines have become the main means of transportation in northern Canada in a quite revolutionary manner.

We have seen many models come into the north and some do not meet our safety standards. This has led to numerous accidents. Some manufacturers may regard these as pleasure vehicles but that is not the case in the north were 75 per cent or 80 per cent are working vehicles. The vehicles used by hunters and trappers need not have standards as restrictive as those imposed on racing vehicles, but there should be a reasonable standard. We do not have snow removal service for the roads in northern communities so nearly every family has a snowmobile. Dog teams are a thing of the past. An exceptionally high standard imposed on working snowmobiles would cause economic hardship for trappers and fishermen.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I should like to assure hon. members that just as we have been having very good co-operation and consultation with the provinces, so we have with manufacturers. I agree that we need to know the cost of changes and additions. This is a general problem with regulations, and I am stressing it with the department and warning them to take it into consideration.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I should like to rectify what I think is a public misconception based on industry misrepresentation. Motor vehicle research in the United States, corroborated by good research in Canada, has consistently shown that if we design safe vehicles and put the safest product on the road, costs would decline. We are told it is the marketing procedures and the expectations of north Americans that increase the costs of motor vehicles. I think this argument should be demolished very quickly.

I have heard the industry argue in front of United States subcommittees, where I too have argued, that people can be given a safe car if they will pay the price. I regret that my colleagues have fallen for that because I can prove that if safety were the priority item it could be provided in a less expensive vehicle than is on the market today. I caution my colleagues not to accept the industry argument that building safe design standards into automobiles can or should have a great effect on the price.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On Clause 4.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, who has been closely associated with the automotive industry, I would like to get clarification of Clause 4 from the minister as there seems to be an inconsistency in the legislation. Safety standards were to be prescribed by law and at the same time steps were being taken to allow some vehicles to be exempted. Proposed section 9.1 reads as follows:

"(1) On application by a manufacturer or importer of motor vehicles of a class for which safety standards have been prescribed under section 4 or 7, the Governor in Council may by order exempt any particular model of motor vehicle from compliance with any prescribed safety standards applicable to that model of motor vehicle where compliance with such safety standards would, in the opinion of the Governor in Council,

(a) create substantial financial hardship for the manufacturer or importer applying for the exemption;

(b) prevent the development of new safety features that are equivalent to or superior to prescribed safety standards;

Then I go to proposed section 9.1(4) which reads as follows:

(4) Where a manufacturer or importer applies for an exemption under paragraph (1)(a), an exemption shall not be granted if

(a) the world production of motor vehicles by the manufacturer exceeds ten thousand motor vehicles per year; or

(b) the total number of motor vehicles manufactured for or imported into the Canadian market by the manufacturer or importer exceeds one thousand motor vehicles per year.

The hon. member for Vegreville was concerned about this discrepancy and perhaps the minister could help us with this.

Mr. Lang: The problem is that in certain cases it may be desirable to allow vehicles into Canada without meeting all the standards in order that various tests and experiments can take place. This is certainly not intended as a wide application but rather to deal with special cases.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I may have some misconceptions concerning Clause 4 and I am sure the minister can clear them up. I have often been concerned about the problem of imports, especially of small cars. It seems impossible for any of them even to begin measuring up to our safety and performance standards. I have some very strong personal notions about this. We know for example that a person in a small car that gets hit by a large car is more apt to be injured or killed.

What kind of discretion does the minister intend be given here? I hope there will not be blanket permission to import motor vehicles that, because of design features, cannot meet the standards of north American vehicles. First, I have always said that the size and design of North American motor vehicles suits our roads. Second, I am concerned in case we should harm the North American industry. I want to see adequate safety standards maintained on our highways. What kind of discretion would this clause give the minister? I am thinking of discretion relating to the importation of foreign manufactured motor vehicles which do not meet the performance and safety standards of domestically produced motor vehicles.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the clause is drafted in such a way as to show the narrow spirit in which it is to be interpreted. The minister and the department were concerned about the exemption, since without adequate limitations there might be an undue number of requests coming forward under the section. I suggest that the limitation in terms of the time period, the need for assurance that good faith has been shown in attempts to meet standards where they may not have been applicable, and the fact that proposed subsection (5) imposes a limit with respect to 1,000 units of a particular model, means that this clause cannot be used successfully for the ordinary introduction of a commercial vehicle in the ordinary way.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I understand, therefore, that the minister does not visualize any discretionary powers under this clause which would allow the wholesale importation to Canada of cars which do not meet the performance and safety standards of domestically manufactured vehicles.

[Mr. Towers.]

Mr. Lang: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. The clause really has to do with the exceptional case.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister this question—it is somewhat similar to the question raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. Will this provision allow for the importation of non-North American manufactured cars incorporating safety devices different from those found on domestic vehicles? For example, some foreign units are easily crushed, whereas domestic cars are equipped with bumpers designed to withstand impacts at speeds up to five miles per hour. Will this provision allow foreign companies which have incorporated, shall we say, novel safety features in their design to demonstrate their vehicles in the Canadian market? I ask this since the safety concepts of foreign manufacturers are as valid as those of North American manufacturers. Will those vehicles be allowed entry to this country?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, perhaps such vehicles could be brought in for testing and demonstration under Canadian conditions, but the clause is not intended to allow other types of safety standards. If we are persuaded other types of safety features are adequate, the regulations applying to Canadian, North American and foreign imports will need to be broadened to allow for that alternative safety feature. I think that would be the orderly approach.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. Lang moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is a general disposition to call it four o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is general agreement on all sides to proceed with Bill C-239 this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed to proceed with Bill No. C-239 and that all preceding bills shall stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING UNION MEMBERSHIP AND DUES

Mr. Frank Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) moved that Bill C-239, to amend the Canada Labour Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I read into the record the main portions of the bill I should like to see referred to committee. The language of the bill is as follows:

1. The Canada Labour Code is amended by adding the following immediately after section 186:

186.1 (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this act, no provision in a collective agreement requiring an employer

(a) to discharge an employee because such employee refuses to become a member of, or to undertake to become a member of a specified trade union, or

(b) to discharge an employee because such employee is or continues to be a member of, or engages in activities on behalf of a union other than a specified trade union, is valid.

(2) No provision in a collective agreement requiring an employer to make a deduction or deductions from the remuneration paid to an employee to be credited to a specified trade union, is valid unless such deduction or deductions are authorized by the employee.

This bill could have far-reaching implications for our traditional industrial relations and entire social order. Much is written and said these days about the difficulties encountered in our country's industrial relations process. Therefore I shall quote two paragraphs of an article Mr. Paul Johnson wrote in the New Statesman. He wrote:

The compulsory enforcement of the closed shop by parliamentary statute is the greatest disaster which has befallen liberty in my lifetime . . .

In his article he also referred to the decision of the mother of parliaments, the Parliament of the United Kingdom, compelling every worker in that country to belong to a trade union. He went on to say that what the Government of the United Kingdom did "is very likely illegal under the European Rights Convention, of which Britain is a signatory."

I suggest that union closed shops and certain other provisions we have included both in federal and provincial labour codes contravene the Canadian Bill of Rights because they offend against one of democracy's cardinal principles, the right to freedom of association. In my considered opinion we need to restructure our present system to make it work better so that all sectors of our economic community can work more closely together.

Recently there has been talk of certain tripartite negotiations which, in my opinion, would be a step in the right direction. There are two sides to the bargaining table, each side has to yield equally. The difficulties our nation has experienced owing to labour strikes are well known and need not be expanded on, for they are irrefutable fact. What alarms me more is what may happen in the future.

I am proposing this legislation that is Bill C-239 in an attempt to bring co-operation and harmony into the industrial labour relations process. Labour unrest is often the result of failure of our economic policy to satisfy labour, management, and government.

The present collective bargaining process is too often based on confrontation. As we were told in the last week by the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais), the postal union even has an adversary clause in their contract. The minister is engaged in his annual battle with that particular union, trying to arrive at an agreement which will fit into the context of our contemporary law and rules.

The union card is becoming more important than the parliamentary vote in the sense that it confers a greater amount of political power. This is a very dangerous development. We are moving away from a society based on the freely signed contract in which one man pledges to work for another and the other man pledges to provide him with work. We are moving to a more restricted society where a man can no longer freely sell his labour.

The principles which outline the union organization are hardly democratic. The concepts of compulsory membership, compulsory union dues, and closed shop unions are essentially a denial of individual rights and freedoms of every citizen. Union bureaucrats enjoy an enormous amount of power over the rank and file members of their organizations.

The closed shop union is a most powerful weapon. It effectively deprives the organized worker of his individual options, in other words, his fundamental rights. Unions seem reluctant to consider themselves part of the economy. More impetus is directed toward profits through wages. Little is gained in terms of co-operation and development of sensible policy goals.

The unions argue that they need this power for which they have worked hard and to which they were entitled at one time to maintain their democratic posture and rights. They need this power to achieve their collective goals. I am more concerned about the goals and the rights of the individual. If the government could make it compulsory for every citizen who achieves the benefits of what we do here in the House of Commons or what the government does to belong to the Liberal party, it would streamline the operation immensely. It could be streamlined to the point that it is streamlined in other parts of the world where we have that kind of autocratic and demogogic system. Members opposite agree that everyone would benefit from the achievements the government thinks it is producing for our country. The union argues that everyone who shares in the benefits should contribute. Therefore, it would be a logical argument that everyone should join the Liberal party. Even my friends across the aisle would not agree with that ill-conceived logic.

If we examine the union movement in Great Britain we can observe the virtual destruction of an economy by self-centered unions. Rule by trade union bureaucrats, who necessarily think in terms of their members only, has crippled the economy of the United Kingdom, with disastrous effects for the ordinary citizen, the unorganized. Today in Canada the union movement involves about one third of the labour force, but demands, and receives two thirds of the gross national product which is labour's share. The concern of all of us in this House has to be for the other two thirds.

The other two thirds, who contribute most to our economy and the development of this country, work for companies that are not oligopolies or monopolies. They work for the small businessmen. That sector of our economy does not have the same power as the larger corporations which are trying to compete with the government in the power play in this country.

We are concerned that this kind of system should exist where two thirds of the economy, two thirds of the enterprise system, is not unionized; two thirds of business, and two thirds of labour. We are establishing a situation where we sit down with one third of the labour force, one third of the business community, and share with them the power given to us by all Canadians. This can only mean that the unorganized worker is left out in the cold, much like the small elite businessman who faces a giant corporation; only the scraps are left for the most vital elements of the economy.

The European community have managed to solve many of their labour problems by combining the union leaders and business directors together under a neutral chairman, on the board of directors. It is not a bargaining process but a joint decision-making process. The worker has an insight into internal operations, something which is almost totally absent in our system. This also ensures that unions do not take more out of the economy than the economy can reasonably provide. In these times of high inflation it is important that we instill a similar spirit of co-operation, not confrontation, into our own industrial process. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the government know that.

I greeted with a certain degree of enthusiasm the announcement by the Minister of Labour that $10 million would be taken out of the taxpayer's purse to provide unions with the means of training their representatives to take part in this co-operative spirit. I wonder if an equal amount of money will be set aside for the small businessman. He too will have to play a more active role if we are to succeed in the objectives we have set for ourselves.

[Mr. Oberle.]

Workers in most unions in Canada are not only compelled to be members but also to support a political party. This is the crux of the whole system. The political party that is supported may not meet individual approval, but nonetheless it receives funds from the union for election campaigns. Of course it is no secret that the party which is supported by the unions is not the Liberal party, but the NDP. This is not only very dangerous but is extremely undemocratic. One of the cardinal principles of democracy is the freedom of association. In my opinion, unions deny that privilege. Looking again at the European labour model, it is illegal for unions to involve themselves in the political process in that way.

Instead of compulsory membership in any one union we must ensure that every Canadian worker has voluntary access to a union. That is the crux of the whole thing. Every Canadian worker needs to be unionized in some way, but he does not need to be compelled; he needs voluntary access. Right to work legislation in the United States has actually increased union membership. Every study I have made of the various states which have adopted legislation of this kind shows that union memberships have increased. It does not infringe upon the democratic process. Rather, it substantiates it. There is evidence to indicate that union members themselves support such measures and often feel that leaders of the unions do not express the true desire of the rank and file.

A high percentage of Vancouver area residents, for example, including over half of the trade union members interviewed in a survey carried out by Sterling Press, favoured the introduction of right to work legislation in British Columbia, a province where unions are firmly entrenched. Over 79 per cent of those expressing an opinion favoured this sort of legislation.

In another survey, carried out in Saskatchewan by the Public Relations and Communications Associates of Regina for the Employers Association of Saskatchewan, it was shown that almost 80 per cent of the union members polled felt too much power was concentrated in the hands of their labour leaders and of big unions in Canada.

What I would like to see established in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a voluntary union structure whereby all Canadians would have potential access to union membership. Of those polled in Regina, 69 per cent felt that a man or woman should be able to hold a job whether or not they belonged to a union. This is only equitable. Our society has been built on a system of co-operation.

A former NDP labour minister in British Columbia, Mr. King, used to describe B.C. workers as little capitalists, determined to maximize their profits through wages. This is not an appropriate analogy because the capitalist does not maximize his profit at the risk of endangering the health and vigour of his enterprise. He uses profits to expand and modernize his facilities. Selfish union demands have led to high wages in British Columbia and have cost the province much of its edge in international trade. I may add it has had the same effect on trade within our country as well. Our labour costs now run about 25 per cent higher, enabling neighbouring states within the United States to market the same resources, often to the same customers, at lower prices that we can offer. The resulting slump in the economic activity only adds to the umemployment and inflation rates recently registered in British Columbia.

Let us endeavour to develop a system based upon participation and co-operation. In 1975 only Italy had a higher percentage of man-hours lost due to strikes than did Canada-among industrial nations surveyed. If we do not stand to benefit from the current program then we are foolish to maintain it. I do not wish to destroy the bargaining power which unions possess. In all fairness, many of our labour leaders have exhibited a great deal of restraint and intelligence in recent years. Meetings between members on this side of the House and labour leaders have been held in recent years and they understand some of the problems which are facing us. They know there is a need to compromise and to restructure the system, but they have little faith in a government which is offering the kinds of negotiations which have so far been inherent in the industrial relations process.

The unorganized worker is simply not getting his fair share. Public confidence in collective bargaining as a method of reaching agreement on wages and benefits is sagging. Union leaders are not satisying half their members, and high wages are blamed for the economic woes we are experiencing. These factors indicate to me that the time is ripe to restructure the framework within which unions operate—not to restrict their activity but to expand it in a co-operative way.

Unions are not the only ones guilty of irresponsibility today. We all must shoulder a certain amount of the blame for our present problems, especially those members who sit on the opposite side of the House. I urge my colleagues to support the measure before us in the public and the national interest. We have seen the beneficial effects that right to work legislation has had in other parts of the world. We know that it is viable both in theory and in practice. It is time we awoke to the reality of our dilemma and developed new tools to improve our situation. That is our duty and our purpose for being here. I appeal to all hon. members to support this legislation, which would constitute a most important first step toward a more up-to-date, fluid, and cohesive industrial relations system.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, in presenting the bill before us, presents a tidy package, one tied up with a presentable and attractive bow. But I think that when it is opened ,one finds a degree of cynicism which makes it rather unacceptable. The hon. member seems to start from a position which it would appear he would not want to be seen to support, that is, that the unions should not have rights with respect to security in terms of those areas where they now enjoy certification.

The hon. member says he does not want to see certain rights removed from the unions—their security—but he feels that by tying up his package in terms of right to work legislation he will be able to make the terms of Bill C-239 acceptable. I find I cannot take that candy pill. It seems to me that what we are dealing with here is perhaps, in some form, a misconception by the hon. member in terms of the current state of the law in Canada.

Looking at the Canada Labour Code, one reads under certain sections, such as section 161, that nothing prohibits parties to a collective agreement from including in the collective agreement a provision requiring, as a condition of employment, membership in a specified trade union, or granting a preference for employment to members of a specified trade union. This is permissive legislation, not mandatory legislation requiring that when certification takes place only a certain number from a union may work in a shop.

It is true there are situations where negotiations have taken place which have resulted in a closed shop. But surely that is as a result of negotiation, not as a result of any kind of mandatory decision by the government, management or the union. It would seem to me that labourers have the right, first of all, to join a union—the hon. member has admitted that. In addition, labourers enjoy the expanded right to negotiate with employers a situation in which they are the only source of labour. I see nothing wrong in that, provided it is not imposed. It seems to me all the legislation provides the format and the mechanism whereby, if that situation is being abused, decertification of a union could take place and control could once again be gained by the labourers.

More important is subsection (2) of the amendment proposed by the hon. member. I quote:

> No provision in a collective agreement requiring an employer to make a deduction or deductions from the remuneration paid to an employee to be credited to a specified trade union, is valid unless such deduction or deductions are authorized by the employee.

I am a product of a law school which had the honour to have as its first dean, Dean Rand, the noted Supreme Court Judge who, after retirement from the bench, went on to teach men and women such as myself what the law was all about. I had the pleasure to study law under the man who, as hon. members know, was the author of the Rand report which emanated from my part of Ontario, Windsor, during the Ford strike. He came up with what has since that time been known as the Rand formula, which has been heralded in all corners of the world as probably one of the most progressive pieces of judicial decision-making that has ever been made in the field of labour-management relations. I hearken back to that decision and note that, among other things, it has this to say:

> That we cannot draw back and try to reverse the whole progress of the last 100 years in labour-employer relations, that we must go through to a higher evolution of them must, I think, be accepted as axiomatic. On that assumption there are two fundamental views to be taken on the mode of bringing that progress about: either to leave it as the issue of economic war in all its ferocity and waste or as the gradual rationalization of an area where interests are both common and conflicting. That we must have some sort of law or convention regarding these relations is inescapable:—

It seems to me that that formula derived by Judge Rand, which brought the Ford strike to an end and allowed the principle of compulsory checkoff, reasoned that if an individual were to work in a plant which was not a closed shop and were to sustain the benefits derived from a contract negotiated by a particular union, he should not get a free ride, as it were, but should be required to pay part of the costs of the union by having the union dues checked off and paid to the union notwithstanding he is not a member.

It seems to me that to adopt the second part of the hon. member's bill today would be to throw that principle out. It would say that we are prepared to allow an individual who works for a particular employer, in a place where there is a union, to accept and receive all the benefits negotiated by the union and, in essence, pay nothing for them. I think that would be both inequitable and unfair and would be a regressive step which would take us not just to the position we were in in the late 1940's, when Mr. Justice Rand reached his decision, but indeed beyond that and lead us more into the confrontation type of negotiation which we have now.

The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has made a very important contribution, but his comment I am unable to hear. Perhaps when I have finished he can pose a question to me and I will answer it, but in the interim might I be permitted to continue.

It seems to me the hon. member makes good sense when he speaks of right to work legislation. I would not want to be one to deny anyone the right to work. At the same time I would not want to be labelled as having a great deal of cynicism for organized labour. I see behind this kind of legislation a tremendous amount of cynicism. I see, in effect, the attachment of blame almost exclusively—though the hon. member says he is not trying to do this—to the organized labour movement for the ills of our economic system today.

Mr. Oberle: That is not what I said.

Mr. Daudlin: I cannot buy that.

Mr. Oberle: That is what you are saying.

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member says that is what I am saying, and he has been quite eloquent in saying that he did not say that. But if one goes beyond what he says he is saying to what he is trying to get us to adopt today, one finds that is exactly what he is saying, though he protests very much that it is not.

I think the principles laid down in the Rand decision are sound and should continue to be adopted and, indeed, be built upon. I think that is what we are talking about in terms of the 14 points which the labour minister brought forward regarding what he would like to see done by labour and management in this country. He, like the hon. member, is agreed that we want to get away from and have less of the confrontation type negotiations than we have had in the past. He, like the hon. member, wants to ensure that organized labour has a voice and is represented. But I suggest to the hon. member that it is open to unorganized labour to organize. It is open to them to form groups of their own and attach themselves to what are currently known and recognized as labour unions. If they choose not to, perhaps they may do so at their peril; but no one imposes on them an obligation to do so or not to do so. I see that also as a right that should be protected by members here.

I have become very concerned about where we are and what the labour unions have requested we do in order to achieve what we have been talking about. I believe one of my colleagues may be speaking about the Woods task force on labour relations of 1966. It seems to me that following that task force certain recommendations were made which were not adopted because they went too far to deny the rights of unions and members of unions to belong to labour organizations and to look for union security.

I have never been one to argue that we should have total security, that we should not have the possibility of decertification. But I ask the hon. member to consider that the democratic process is alive and well not only in this institution but surely in labour unions as well. The right still exists within those unions to elect an executive and, yes, a labour bureaucracy of the kind described by my hon. friend. If members of those unions make the determination that they are not adequately represented by their leaders, by their executive or bureaucrats, have they not the right to put them out? Have they indeed not done that? Do we not all recognize examples where that has been done over the last few years?

Are we to presume that we should sit here and disallow them that right as well, to say to them that the system obviously cannot work and that we are not going to give it a chance to work, that instead we want to pass this kind of legislation to protect them from themselves? I do not think that we should be presuming to pass that kind of legislation.

Mr. Oberle: Look around and see what the Postmaster General is saying about the system working.

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member discusses the situation in the Post Office and asks me to consider what the Postmaster General is saying. I suggest to him that the Postmaster General has said that we have to put an end to confrontation; that confrontation type negotiations are not the route to go. I do not think I am saying anything to the contrary today. Neither do I think the bill put forward by the hon. member will assist that purpose. All it will do is to so weaken the ability of the work force as to preclude its being able to negotiate from any position of strength. It is abundantly clear that when the position of either labour or management is so increased in strength as to make the other side impotent, all that results is trouble in the labour force and nothing is obtained from that.

What we have to look for, is equity, and I submit that what we have now is approaching that. It is not entirely that; there are a lot of improvements which have to be made. As I said before, one has to look at the 14 point program put forward by the labour minister to see what it is we on this side of the House are supporting and trying to do better to improve the labour situation. This is our answer; this is our mandate to solve that problem. It is also a statement of our recognition that there is a problem. No one is turning a blind eye. I suppose, in short, that what we are saying is that this bill is not the way to answer the problem.

With respect to the practice in other jurisdictions, it is true that there are jurisdictions which are adopting right to work legislation. In the United States, for instance, in the current legislation respecting rights of employees, the national labour relations act, section 7 provides:

● (1630)

Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join or assist labour organizations; to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, and shall also have the right to refrain from any or all of the above activities except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labour organization as a condition of employment . . .

The same holds true for the U.S. railway labour act and the Norris-Laguardia act.

There have been pieces of legislation passed in terms of controls on union coercion and discrimination. That particular legislation is to prohibit the situation where unions have demanded of employers that they fire labourers who fail to pay their union dues. At the same time the legislation has also protected the labourers to ensure that unions, in an effort to get rid of particular employees, should not impose on them certain labour dues or certain entrance requirements in excess of the usual requirements. In effect, that would provide some kind of reverse discrimination.

I am certain there are others who would like to join in this debate this afternoon, and I am sure they have matters which will add to the problem. The matter I would like to highlight today is that, in my view, this legislation signals a difficulty we all recognize, and would be a regressive piece of legislation because of the damage it would do to the principles enunciated by Mr. Rand when he settled the Ford strike. Those principles, which are recognized by all labour management forums, nationally and internationally, have indicated that this is a formula which should not be toyed with; is something which should be held in high regard; and should be seen by us as a signpost of the hope we are working toward, and that is labour-management peace.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) will not be surprised at my saying that I do not support his bill. I am afraid I cannot even indulge in the nicety that is sometimes suggested in private members' hour about a member having rendered a service by bringing the matter before us. As far as I am concerned, the sooner we can get rid of this bill, the better.

Mr. Ellis: Stanley, that is 21 minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a matter of fact, I do not think hon. members need to talk the bill out. I would be quite happy for it to come to a vote and find out what the House thinks about this measure.

Mr. Oberle: Call in the members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), who is the labour spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party, will have a few words to say and will let us know where he stands on this issue.

As the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin) has just said in his speech, which I endorse whole-heartedly, it took labour a long while to win the right to collective bargaining. If collective bargaining means anything, it includes the right to reach agreement on certain matters.

An hon. Member: It includes the right to intimidate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Canada Labour Code enshrines that right in giving to the parties to collective bargaining—labour on one side and management on the other—the right to draw up certain kinds of agreements. One of those is a closed shop, another is a union shop, there are maintenance and memberhip provisions, and the new development in our generation is the Rand formula to which the previous speaker has referred. It is clear that all of this is all voluntary.

Unions are not required by law to make any of these provisions or any of these agreements, but these are the options which are open to them. The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River would take away one of those options or one of those rights, and if he were to succeed in doing that, I suggest it would throw the whole business of employee-employer relationships into a tailspin. From my point of view, his comments on trade unions reveal a complete lack of understanding of how trade unions operate, just as I thought he was dreaming a bit when he told us about the virtues of those on the other side and what they do with their profits. The viewpoint of my hon. friend is that labour unions are bad and management is all good. I disagree. As I say, I would be quite happy if the motion for the second reading of this bill could come to a vote and we could get rid of it. To deny the right of a union on a voluntary basis, if it can get agreement with management, to get whatever kind of contract can be worked out, is a thoroughly regressive step.

As for the second part of the bill, which has to do with the payment of dues, the hon. member who has just taken his seat has gone into that at some length in his discussion of the formula produced by Mr. Justice Rand. I submit it makes sense that those who benefit from what an organization does on their behalf should not be given a free ride.

I do not happen to approve of or support the government we have in Canada today. Therefore, does that mean I should be excused from paying taxes? Actually, there are benefits, which all of us enjoy, because there is government in a civilized society providing certain protections, benefits and so on. The fact that I disagree with that government does not give me the right not to pay taxes and not to pay my share of what that government does for the country as a whole. By the same token, those who get better wages, shorter hours and better working conditions, because of a union organization working on their behalf, should be required to pay their share. If they do not want to belong and if they do not want to be members, that is their right.

As to the suggestion of the hon. member a while ago that these members are forced to pay contributions to a certain political party, I hope he is intelligent enough to know that that statement is not correct. In this day and age when we are trying to move things forward in terms of employer-employee relationships, the hon. member has done a disservice by bringing in this bill.

In the course of the speech made by the hon. member for Kent-Essex, there was a question from this side of the House about the Post Office. That was supposed to flatten the argument made by the hon. member for Kent-Essex. As an aside I would like to make the point that one of the reasons there is so much difficulty in labour relations, with regard to the Post Office, is because the members of the postal unions have been unhappy that their labour relations are not governed by the Canada Labour Code. They come under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. They do not feel that legislation fits an industrial operation such as theirs. Thus, any suggestion that the troubles in the Post Office constitute a reflection on the Canada Labour Code is one which fails to take these facts into recognition.

The bill which has been put in this afternoon is not in the interests of improving labour relations in this country. I am glad I held back and let an hon. member from the other side speak first, because the position I take would be assumed in this House. It has been a pleasure to hear such a good statement on the position of trade unions by the hon. member for Kent-Essex, and I hope the House will reject this ill-advised bill in one way or another.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the private bill introduced by my colleague and fellow member of my party, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), I want to speak quietly but to make some comments which will be of help in the debate taking place this afternoon.

First of all I have to say with reluctance, because the bill is introduced by a colleague of mine, that, as the labour critic in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I cannot agree with the bill. But, having said that, I think it is also fair to say that the bill represents a point of view which is, in many respects, increasing in many parts of our society, and I think it behooves everybody here not to take the attitude that this issue should not be debated but rather to ask why it is that an hon. member on this side of the House who, I happen to know, has business interests in the province of B.C., who employs workmen and has an excellent record of employment, feels compelled to introduce this bill and to open this debate in the Chamber this afternoon. It is no use saying that the issue which my friend has raised by introducing the bill is not one that concerns people in the country, because it most certainly does.

My friend has made reference to certain studies and polls, and I can assure you that I have seen these studies and polls as well. I have also had occasion to talk with strong trade union people who, reacting out of frustration and anger, sometimes to situations within their particular unions, have said that maybe union leaders would be better union leaders if there were no closed shop. The reason that I am saying there is no use avoiding the issue is that the issue is there, it is in the country. I am saying this as the labour critic in the official opposition.

I am saying that I cannot support the bill for several reasons. First of all, in the vast majority of unions in this country democracy functions, and it functions well. The strike record that we had had in Canada,—which has improved recently—was extremely serious 18 months ago. I see some hon. members on the government side nodding in agreement. It may very well be serious again, but I am not sure, and I am not persuaded from anything that I have learned that this bill would necessarily eliminate strikes in this country or eliminate the incidence of strikes.

The problems that have created much of the industrial strife in this country have little to do with the so-called right to work laws. They have to do with a number of other things. In 1975 they had to do with the fact that, if you take a look at the figures, labour's share of the gross national product was declining, wage demands were increasing because costs were increasing, and any good labour leader, including Mr. Morris of the CLC, will be quick to point out that one of the reasons why costs were going up was that inflation was taking hold and, as Mr. Morris has said repeatedly, the blame for that lay very much in this Chamber because the government was printing money beyond productivity and inducing a good deal of domestic inflation.

When we look at the situation in the management-labour world in this country and when we take the time to speak with and listen to both sides, we find an amazing amount of common sense, if you can put these people in some room where their common sense statements will not be reported by the media. The average labour leader in this country lives in a highly political and sometimes very difficult world within his or her own union, and the long history in this country of a militant adversary system has made it extremely difficult for many labour leaders to be what I could call "reasonable" because they are afraid of being attacked by their own rank and file as not being tough with the boss.

On the other side of the coin is the fact that a good many people in management have, for too long, dealt at arm's length with trade union representatives, trade union leaders, or through people who are hired to do all the negotiating, and often management has been too far removed from the bargaining table.

I suppose that another cause of some of the strife has been that expectations in this country have, for some time, run ahead of the reality of the situation, although having said that I recognized that there are some people who believe there is no limit and that increases on an annual basis can go on forever. Let me assure all hon. members that the most sensible and responsible people within the trade union movement today know that that is not so, and that a great deal of their concern now is not just in trying to scramble to keep up with inflation, although that is very important, it is also the very serious concern as to whether or not our industrial society will produce enough jobs for their fellow workers and for the sons and daughters of all of us.

Some reference has been made to the situation in European countries. I think it is fair to point out that in one of the countries in Europe where they have a high degree of unionism—at least as high as our own, or perhaps a little more—that is in West Germany—there is no compulsory, manadatory, union membership. But we have to remember, when we look at the situation in Europe, just as we have to do in other things that are being talked about today, including co-determination, industrial democracy, workers' councils, and all that sort of thing, that it is not easy to transplant a system which may work in another milieu and with another cultural background into our industrial milieu, because our tradition has been very different.

Lastly, I want to emphasize, because it has to be remembered, that law makers have an obligation not to just work out on a theoretical basis what they believe would necessarily be the best of all possible worlds for all possible people. You cannot pass laws that will create so much strife and antagonism that the social damage done as a result of those laws exceeds any benevolent objective that the law makers may have.

I say bluntly that if this House should decide to impose so-called right to work laws across the boards on the parts of organized labour which lie within the federal jurisdiction, it would be taken as an attack on union security by every trade union person in this country.

I do not need to remind hon. members that within the organized trade union movement in this country there are approximately 3.2 million people. I ask the House also to remember that those are just the men or women who work in the force and belong to trade unions, and that the trade union family is much larger than that. That family is composed of the spouses, the children and the parents of those people, and I can assure hon. members that 3.2 million trade union members in this country and their families do not consider themselves undemocratic or somehow alien to the civil traditions of our society.

In closing I want to come back to my opening point and say that I hope all hon. members will recognize that my colleague, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River, has done this House a service by bringing this bill here, because there is a reason it has been introduced. The reason is that many people are demanding this kind of legislation. That is a warning to us.

It is a warning to management, and it is a warning to the trade union movement. There is no part of the civil community, in which we have so much pride in Canada, that can very long withstand the scrutiny of public opinion if the perception should grow—and if it should become solidified—that democracy is not working within it. The same applies to the trade union movement if the public should begin to believe that the industrial relations system of our country is not working—in fact, even worse, if the public decides it is working against the public interest—then there is no question that the pressure upon all of us in this Chamber to pass laws to do something about it will increase.

I want to thank the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River for introducing this bill and initiating this debate. I want to thank other hon. members for taking part. I hope that when I say—regretfully, because the hon. member is a colleague of mine—I cannot support the bill, all hon. members will, after listening to my remarks, understand the reasons for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roger Young (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, nearing the end of the day and entering the debate as I do at this moment, I must say that I have had the benefit of listening to the previous speakers, and I say very sincerely that I enjoyed that benefit.

When I gave my maiden speech in this House a couple of years ago, I followed the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). We did not entirely agree on principle or on specifics at that time, but I have always appreciated his wisdom, his intellect and, by and large, the soundness of his judgment, even at the times when I have disagreed with him. I think I can say on his behalf that he spoke this afternoon probably with some reluctance because he spoke in opposition to a bill proposed by one of the backbench members of his own party. However, he spoke with such cogency and was so lucid in his remarks that there is little else to be said.

This afternoon I also find myself in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I do not always agree with him, but today he spoke very appropriately.

I do not mean to condemn the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), but I too disagree with the specifics of the bill, and I would fear the result which would be brought upon the Canadian scene.

The hon. member for Vancouver South said he was glad the bill was brought forward for debate this afternoon, and I agree. He spoke of the growing feeling in the country that perhaps a change in labour law legislation is needed. I think it is true that there are people who feel that there has been too much confrontation and too much economic disruption and that we are all involved in this. However, as the things in which we are involved grow more numerous, sometimes we forget some of the lessons of history, and we are so wrapped up in the problems we have today that we forget the set of facts which originally gave rise to the type of labour code we have today, to the Rand formula, and to the system we now operate under. It may not be a perfect system. Few things are ever perfect. They may look that way on the surface, but there is a point where, because of human fallibility, they begin to break down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a brief moment to raise a question of privilege. This morning the House was good enough to endorse a motion which I offered congratulating the eight hon. members who were elected 20 years ago today and who have been here during that period of time. Because of the way my motion was actually worded, referring to those who were elected the first time 20 years ago today, I should have included at least one other hon. member who was first elected that day. I suppose the reason I did not include him this morning was that he has not been here all the 20 years in between, but we congratulate him as well, and I should like to pay tribute as well to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on still being with us, even if he had a couple of terms out after having been first elected 20 years ago today. If there are any others, I include them as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to the order made Monday, May 30, 1977.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 13, 1977

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE ACT BINDING ON HER MAJESTY IN RIGHT OF CANADA OR A PROVINCE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-46, to amend the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Lang moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of delaying this bill any further. However, I wish to comment that it is another regulatory piece of legislation that is not required. We feel that the CTC has enough authority to handle these matters in regard to the provinces dealing with airlines, but we are prepared to let the bill go through on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHARGES FOR USE OF AIRPORTS, ETC.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-40, to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for co-operating in moving forward this legislation. There may be agreement to amend the second reading motion, to provide for this bill to be considered in committee of the whole. When I finish my remarks I shall propose such a change in the second reading motion.

Bill C-40, to amend the Aeronautics Act, deals with several important matters, the first and most important of which is the introduction of more effective zoning provisions under federal jurisdiction. Our airports are important facilities and, obviously, the manner in which land surrounding them is used is important to their future use, and to people who may want to use the land. Sometimes after an airport is built it has been difficult to expand it, because houses have been built there and other activities engaged in. Since airports represent a large public investment it is important for land to be so zoned as not to endanger future development of an airport. We want to avoid such difficulties.

We think you can most effectively zone land through the action of municipalities and provinces which ordinarily concern themselves in the many issues which arise from time to time in communities. Bill C-40, which will allow for the additional exercise of federal jurisdiction, shows clearly that we intend ordinarily to rely on municipalities and provinces to do the appropriate zoning of our airports in order to protect the land. Ordinarily, they will do this after we discuss these questions with them. Sometimes, however, there may not be provincial legislation in existence, or a province may be unwilling to act in a certain way, and we therefore feel that there must be provision for federal jurisdiction under which zoning in such cases can be done. Alberta, after a good deal of discussion, enacted comprehensive zoning legislation which will be fully effective in allowing us to do what we need in the way of zoning around airports.

We have included compensation provisions in this bill which essentially follow compensation patterns provinces ordinarily use in their own zoning. We did not want to set different standards, even though in our judgment sometimes a different scale of compensation would be appropriate. It seems only logical to retain the provincial approach to compensation, since we want provincial governments and municipalities ordinarily to do the zoning. It would not do to have a different standard of compensation, depending on the nature of the jurisdiction, its location, and so on.

These provisions therefore will allow us to work with the provinces. We shall ordinarily enter into discussions with them, and use our zoning provisions when it is either impossible or difficult for a province to do this.

A number of other changes in the bill are highly technical and deal with questions which have arisen in practice, in the course of our administering safety and licensing aspects of legislation. One clause deals with the collection of fees and the imposition of interest charges on obligations carriers have not paid. This is particularly intended to deal with foreign carriers which have resisted the payment of appropriate fees for the use of our services and airports. The prospect of interest charges will give them an incentive to pay early and promptly, instead of delaying payment and so forcing our collection agencies to seek payment.

That, essentially, is the heart of the bill. I commend it to hon. members.

I now ask if hon. members would be willing to change the second reading motion, to provide for the bill to be referred to committee of the whole, so that it may proceed through all stages. There have been certain discussions and I understand there may be agreement to do this. If I am right, and I would appreciate if it could be determined, I will so move.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand there was agreement for this bill to be considered in committee of the whole and pass all stages. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) cannot be here today. This bill came on suddenly. We understood other legislation was to be considered this morning, and this bill later. It is true there have been discussions, but so far as we are concerned this bill should go to committee where certain groups and organizations may appear to make representation on parts of it.

This bill, Clause 2 in particular, has this in common with other legislation governing transportation: it extends the government's broad and sweeping powers to make charges for airport facilities and services, and presumably is consistent with the minister's user-pay concept. Although it is agreed generally that the cost of such services should be reflected in the charge for them, one must bear in mind the ability of the user to pay. Users should not be forced to pay for extravagance and waste, particularly for exotic, ultra-modern facilities, so-called, like Mirabel and other airports, built without consultation and without considering how users would employ such facilities. The government has acted unilaterally and has imposed undue burdens on airlines. These burdens have been passed on to the actual people who use the facilities, in the form of increased costs.

People in the airline industry will tell you that there has been much overbuilding of airport facilities in this country, particularly in some areas. The result has been extravagantly increased charges. The industry has had to pay a much higher scale of landing fees, as well as increased fees for other services. One year ago, in 1976, the minister wanted to increase by 600 per cent the landing fees for some who use certain airport facilities. Again the government acted unilaterally, without considering the industry. The minister has been laying his heavy hand on the industry and it is fair to say he has hurt particularly the general aviation industry. Under this legislation the powers are so broad that he can continue to make increases in the charges on a day-to-day or week-to-week basis without any consultation with the industry. That should be examined.

What we have to consider is that it is ultimately the consumer who has to pay for the services, the user. The one who rides on the airplane has to pay. It is interesting to note that in the March edition of En Route magazine put out by Air Canada, United States air lines pay an average of $1.95 per passenger for landing fees and terminal assessments, while Air Canada pays to the federal government something like $2.94 for each of the 4.2 million boarding passengers. That is about $1 per passenger more for landing fees.

I wish to quote from the December, 1976, edition of "Government and Military Business". In one article the president of the Airline Transport Association, A. C. Morrison, is reported as pointing out, in addition to user charges and public service labour problems, that the industry has been shouldering added taxes. I quote from the article by Cliff Cowan as follows:

> It is now estimated to cost more than $4,000 to land a Boeing 747 at Mirabel.
> Mirabel airport is a story in itself—enough to make an airline weep. Poor planning and esthetic design make industry wary of government help. Indeed ATAC in its annual report stated, "measures instigated by the government show little evidence of concern for the financial state of the industry... lack of concern and support is reflected in the reduced rate and limitation in the application of the capital cost allowance."
> Mirabel, the industry feels, was a politically motivated decision that was constructed prematurely and against the advice of the air industry at too great a cost.
> Some planes are now over-flying Mirabel and going on west to Toronto. Mirabel, has been estimated, will have a possible loss of $46-million in this fiscal year.
> Mirabel, too, is isolated. Badly-needed road links between it and Montreal have been planned and announced but remain not built.
>
> The former Quebec government came up with plans for a new commuter train system linking Montreal and environs with Mirabel. Both the federal and provincial governments agreed to the plan and sponsored a respected Ottawa public servant, Douglas Fullerton, to draw the program up.
> He estimated the cost would be in excess of $500-million, but money, he learned, wasn't the major problem—local politics had to be considered.
> The city of Montreal wanted to expand its Metro line and put a block on the Fullerton plan.
> As a result, Mirabel remains an exotic and costly structure . . . but aloof.

The statement with regard to the possible loss of $46 million in this fiscal year has certainly been quite accurate.

Under this legislation there will be more power in the hands of the minister to pay for exotic and costly mistakes perpetrated by this government, an extravagance that Canadians can ill afford. We do not object to the government imposing fair and reasonable fees upon the users of the services. However, this sort of waste is less than desirable.

Under proposed subsections (2) and (3) in section 5, the minister will ask the owners and operators to provide bonds to ensure for the payment of services, and provides for the imposition of liens. We can only assume that the ministry has had trouble collecting for services. We should have some clarification with regard to who are the offenders and to what extent this has taken place. A proper place for this to be considered will be in committee.

Some of the users who have been involved in this sort of thing should appear before the committee. We would like to know how much money has been involved. Why have we been lax in the past, if there have been losses as a result of our inability to collect? Or is this overkill? If not, why have we waited so long? Why is it necessary to force this issue at this time? Is part of the problem that some of the costs are inordinately high and sometimes unjustified? I heard the minister say there were some 40 carriers.

Mr. Lang: Four.

Mr. Mazankowski: Four carriers. We should know who the carriers are and why there has been disagreement over the application of costs.

Clause 3 provides that owners and operators will be required to carry liability insurance. We do not find any disagreement with that. If you are compelled to carry liability insurance for a passenger car, surely no less should be required of an operator of an aircraft. Therefore, I see no problem in that regard.

Clause 4 deals with the maintenance, design or manufacture of aircraft or aeronautical products. That too seems to be a rather natural and logical requirement. However, in most cases these individuals are already licensed. I am not sure whether a duplication of licensing is being proposed here. This bothers me, as do many other pieces of legislation of this nature. It is nothing more than multiplying the bureaucracy.

We have a tremendous boon here to the bureaucratic development of the government. Frankly, I do not see why we need double licensing. Perhaps there is a legitimate reason. If so, this should be brought out and dealt with in committee.

Proposed subsection (5) provides that owners and operators involved in accidents or incidents must report them. It would seem that this is more or less a general understanding. Anyone involved in an accident must report that. In terms of reporting incidents, this might cause some concern, particularly for those involved in the training of pilots, such as the flying clubs across Canada.

In the process of carrying out flying lessons, I am sure that there are many incidents. If every incident must be reported, much will depend upon the definition of an incident. This may involve a tremendous amount of reporting and bureaucratic red tape which may or may not be necessary. I hope that this will be clarified.

It would only be natural that those engaged in the training of pilots in flying clubs be brought before the committee so that we can hear their version of this provision. Perhaps they can assist the committee in putting together an amendment to clarify the provision in that clause. With the sweeping powers the minister has under regulations and the penalties that could be provided, it could be rather intimidating and frightening if this provision got out of hand. I hope this will be looked at as well.

Clause 4:6.(1) primarily deals with zoning regulations. I understand the organizations known as People Over Planes has some serious misgivings about that particular problem. I would like to quote from a document presented by that organization, which reads as follows:

> Land use planning and property rights are clearly a provincial responsibility under our constitution. This act has far-ranging powers. By publication of the intent to impose a zoning restriction and by passing an order in council the federal government can restrict land use anywhere—"adjacent to or in the vicinity" of an airport. Thousands of acres can be affected. The purpose is to keep owners from building houses on properties they already own.
> The act allows no hearing of necessity—presumably a draftsman in the Ministry of Transport will determine whose properties are affected. There is no appeal procedure or no consultation required with the affected owners or municipalities. A federal bureaucracy will determine detailed land use in Ontario communities near airports.

Without going into too much detail, there are some questions which have to be clarified. We must understand how far we are going under that particular section. It is urgent and very important that we undertake to have this bill presented to committee in order that witnesses may appear and give evidence of their concerns.

Turning to clause 5.8(1), it deals with boards of inquiry and reads as follows:

> The minister may
> (a) establish a board of inquiry to inquire into the circumstances of
> (i) any accident or incident involving an aircraft . . .

In this connection it is unfortunate the government has not seen fit to adopt the very sensible private member's bill which is now before the House, Bill C-220, which was introduced by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. This bill was debated in the House on April 1. The hon. member has campaigned long, hard, and diligently for this legislation. The purpose of this particular bill would be to establish a permanent and impartial commission of inquiry to investigate transport accidents within federal jurisdiction. Under the present law, many of these transport accidents are investigated by the federal body responsible for making and enforcing the rules under which transport operated when the accident occurred. Many of these accidents involve the loss of lives.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has always contended there is a conflict of interest and it should be mandatory that we establish an independent board of inquiry which would sit, independent of the Department of Transport and all other federal regulation agencies, so that there could be an in-depth, impartial, and objective inquiry into all accidents or incidents, particularly in the case where there is a loss of life.

This particular measure was promised in the throne speech of 1974. While there has been a lot of talk about changes in the transportation policy, amendments to the National Transportation Act and various amendments to the Aeronautics Act, the government has not acted very quickly in this particular area. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East introduced a measure of similar substance back in October, 1970. It was known as Bill C-66 at that time. It was reintroduced as

Bill C-85, Bill C-33, Bill C-109, Bill C-226, and now it is Bill C-220.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): History moves on.

Mr. Mazankowski: Surely in an area as important as safety and the concern of getting to the bottom of accidents which take lives of individuals, a step in this direction is long overdue. Surely it is high time the government took the initiative and enacted this very important principle. I am sure the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East would not mind if the government stole his idea and brought it forth in the form of government legislation. He would be happy if the government would accept his particular bill and enshrine it into law. It is a good bill which has a broad base of support, not only in the industry but in many of the regulatory agencies as well.

There is no branch of the Department of Transport or any other federal agency which has over-all responsibility for ensuring that a systematic, comprehensive, and high standard of investigation is under way. It is important to ensure that safety is practised at all times and, when there is an error, that we get to the bottom of it so that we can avoid future catastrophes.

At page 9 of the bill, Clause 6 sets out to impose terms and conditions on a licence which is already issued. There is some concern here, because unilaterally the commission can change the licence by imposing restrictions, and new terms and conditions on licences which come up for renewal. While there may be some degree of necessity in this regard, it is important to ensure that there is proper access to appeals for those who have licences and find their licences restricted or almost withdrawn, as a result of the restrictions and the regulations added thereto.

At page 10, Clause 7 deals with the licensing of commercial air service. The thing which bothers us on this side of the House is the fact that we have no third level air carrier policy in this country and we have no clearly stated regional air policy. In June, 1975, the former minister of transport said that a regional and third level carrier policy would be forthcoming soon. There has been no mention of this fact ever since. We are asking the Canadian Transport Commission to deal on an ad hoc basis without any set government policy in terms of a third level air carrier policy. When you tie that in with the thrust of Bill C-33, under which the minister is emasculating and abrogating many of the powers in the hands of the CTC, probably the consequene will be that the licensing of these air carriers will be done more on the basis of political considerations, rather than the realities of economics, geography, and need. We should be pressing for a clear definition and statement of regional and third level carrier policy so that it can be meshed into the regulations which are enshrined within this piece of legislation.

It is clear the bill requires a great deal of clarification. It is important that it go to committee and that witnesses be heard. Amendments to some clauses will probably be required with a view to clarifying the major thrusts of the intended legislation. I hope we can count upon the minister to ensure that there will be an opportunity to deal with witnesses and carry out a thorough, full-scale hearing into the many facets of the bill. In effect, we have been asked to deal with omnibus legislation and we should look at it in that light.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I do not want to take very long, Mr. Speaker, but I am interested in some of the comments the previous speaker made, particularly those concerning the new powers being sought by the minister as they would likely affect regional carriers. The suggestion was made that the minister would, in effect, be taking over the powers of the CTC.

I have been watching with some interest applications which have been made to the CTC by these second-line carriers—I use that term to distinguish them from CPA and Air Canada which might be considered first-line carriers. Some time ago I attended hearings which were held in Sudbury concerning an application by Nordair, which had offered a return flight daily from Montreal to Winnipeg via Sudbury and Thunder Bay. I was interested at that time to find that the minister of the day involved himself in those hearings, though in absentia, by sending a letter indicating that no matter what was decided he would not allow the Nordair aircraft to land at some of the airports scheduled because they were not capable of handling the Boeing 737. Apparently it was O.K. for a DC-9 to land there, though everyone knows there is only a difference of a few hundred pounds between the Boeing 737 and the DC-9.

I mentioned to the chairman of the CTC, who had been a colleague of mine in this House for a number of years, that there really wasn't any point in continuing the hearing, the minister having made a decision that the aircraft would not be allowed to land. What would be the sense of discussing whether Nordair should be given the opportunity to service the area or not? The whole exercise seemed foolish. I twitted the chairman of the commission about the matter. The intervention was clumsy, it seemed to me, because those responsible did not even bother to clear it with the district offices. The manager at Sudbury telephoned the district office in Toronto responsible for the safety and conditions of the runways in Sudbury, and the officials there informed him that the Sudbury runway could, of course, carry the Boeing 737. There had been no structural damage and it was not anticipated there would be.

It is interesting to remember, of course, that Air Canada was the operator intervening in that case. However, Air Canada only operated the flights for two months; it has since dropped the service, so the people of Montreal, Sudbury, Thunder Bay and Winnipeg are not able to take advantage of that run. The route is now directed through Toronto rather than through the northern part of the province, passing through Ottawa.

This tells me that if the minister cares to use the power he possesses over the licensing of airports it is he, really, who is able to control the entire operations of the air industry. He would be able to decide who was going to fly, where they were to fly from, and where they would go.

There are other aspects of the bill which interest me. One of them is the provision the minister is seeking in connection with the zoning of areas surrounding airports. I am, of course, aware of the need to maintain air clearance in such areas, but I have always been of the opinion that this could largely be ensured by agreement and consultation. When a community asks for an airport it is obviously ready to bear these considerations in mind. It is in favour of the project. Otherwise, it is not likely to be particularly successful. For instance, when a new airport was built in Japan the public in the area surrounding it were violently against it; riots at the approaches to the airport have already resulted in a number of serious injuries. Protestors built a high tower to express their feelings. It was torn down, but only after a great furor.

Canada, it seems to me, is large enough to enable airports to be put in locations about which there is agreement. To begin by contemplating buying up land around the approaches to an airport under the Expropriation Act indicates that the government intends to go ahead and make these decisions whether there is agreement or not. I suppose this particular proposal relates to Pickering. I suppose it means that the minister still has in the back of his mind, being the type of person he is, the intention to build Pickering whether the people around there want it or not. If he gets the power sought in this bill he would have no need to ask for any co-operation from the surrounding municipalities. All he needs to do is use the expropriation powers given in this bill and he would be able to make decisions as to the height of buildings surrounding an airport or do anything else he may wish to do.

I imagine that much of this bill arises from the fact that Mirabel has been such a disaster. For us to lose $43 million—

Mr. Béchard: It is not a disaster.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says it is not a disaster.

Mr. Béchard: You will see in ten years.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member comes from that area and he says we shall see in ten years. It seems to me we should not have to wait ten years. Why should we pay $430 million over the next ten years? If we extend the $43 million we are losing this year that would be the cost. Why should we make that kind of contribution when we could probably solve the problem?

● (1150)

We either have to shut down Dorval and operate Mirabel or shut down Mirabel and operate Dorval. No matter how we cut it, there are fewer landings now than there were two years ago. That being the case, we should close one of them and operate out of the other one. The people of Quebec are going to find themselves in a very odd position if no international carriers land in that mess and go to Toronto instead. That would create another disaster in Toronto because that airport is overloaded now.

We do not want to transfer all international traffic to Toronto, but we had better do something about the Montreal situation because it is a disaster. To reach Mirabel, in Montreal a person gets on a bus and travels around the city for a long time. The time varies according to the traffic, but it is not very easy to get from Dorval to Mirabel or back. It is very expensive. If you go by taxi it costs a lot of money to transfer from one airport to the other.

I personally have not encountered any difficulty at Mirabel. It is a totally different concept, and I have not had any difficulty with the airport itself. It may very well be that we can use Mirabel to its full capacity, but if we do, we cannot operate those two airports so close together. The minister should know about this because it happened in New York, Chicago, and everywhere a second airport has been built. The only ones which are operating efficiently are the small ones, like the ones in Calgary and Edmonton were some carriers operate only out of the municipal airports and move all the local traffic. The local air carriers do not use the international airports. At one of those cities the international airport is about 12 miles out and therefore cannot handle short-run traffic because ground traffic would have to be used for a longer period of time than the air traffic.

We have not been able to operate Mirabel satisfactorily, and we are not doing anything to solve the problem. The minister can say he has this in hand. He can be as callous about it as he wants to be, but it is costing a lot of money. This makes many people unhappy, and we are no closer to a solution than we were the day we opened that airport. I think some hon. members from that area would like to see some of the long-range problems which are developing solved.

There will be a difficulty because international traffic will be going into Toronto where it cannot be handled. I do not think the answer is to build another airport at Pickering, or at Camp Borden, for international traffic. If we did that, we would have the same problem, and we probably would not be any better at solving it. If we move people from Barrie to Toronto or from Pickering to Toronto, we will have the same situation we now have with Mirabel and Dorval, because the minister has no expertise in handling ground transportation. We do not have any rapid ground transportation in this country. We do not seem to be able to buy it from anybody who will operate it in this country satisfactorily.

Let us hope that this bill does not allow the minister to go back into Pickering. If he had the power to eliminate municipal objections which might arise, if he could expropriate, and if we are talking about supersonic aircraft, the minister could get control of a radius of 20 miles or 30 miles around that proposed airport. If we plan to land Concorde aircraft, airports have to be away from large population centres. This legislation provides a considerable amount of control. Before the minister gets that kind of control, I think he has a responsibility to say what he is going to do about the problem he now has which is not being solved.

It really would not be advantageous to limit the CTC's control, as limited as it may already be. I remember what the department did in Sudbury. The municipal airport there was under the direct control of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), through regulation. Sudbury was not putting any money into this airport, it was not controlling it or operating it, but because of safety regulations the department said the airport could not handle Nordair aircraft. Therefore it was decided that Air Canada would use that airport. Air Canada got the route, and what happened in that regard is interesting. It operated for several months during a disadvantageous period of time. There was no traffic on the route, and Air Canada was able to drop it within a matter of four or five months. Perhaps Nordair would have had to drop it as well. I am not expert on the financial structure of that route and on how it would operate at a better time. However, Montreal, Ottawa, Sudbury, Thunder Bay and Winnipeg do not have the benefit of that service now because a second line carrier was not able to get the licence because its aircraft would not be permitted to land at the Sudbury airport.

There are a number of other factors which have been mentioned by previous speakers. I think all of us are interested in them. How can there be an accident in which the CTC is involved but which is investigated by the department? There is no question that the government was involved in that famous inquiry into a disaster which happened very recently in the Northwest Territories. The government was involved in compensation as well. There was obviously a conflict of interest, and I do not think we will ever know the truth about that accident because I do not think the inquiry was impartial.

I agree with those who say that there should be full and impartial inquiries into accidents, and that people involved in non-fatal accidents and people dealing with the estates of those involved in fatal accidents should be totally informed and convinced that inquiries are impartial. All the facts should be made available. I think that is not the case at the present time, and there are many people who agree.

Another clause in this bill which surprised me has to do with overflights. If everyone making an overflight had to make a deposit, that would mean Russia would have to deposit with Canada a large sum of money. These deposits would be for flights into Canadian territory, whether by helicopters operating off Russian ships in our coastal waters—

Mr. Ellis: Spy planes.

Mr. Peters: —or by aircraft which land in the Arctic to do supervision there because we do not have that capability. The Russians are in that area to quite an extent, and so are the Americans. Do we get a deposit from them, or what are we talking about? Are we talking about John Blow who has a $5,000 aircraft and who will have to pay these $100 landing fees at airports? Will he be the guy who will have to put up a bond, or will we get one from the U.S.S.R. or the United States for their overflights? If we think so, then we are dreaming.

● (1200)

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Peters: Yes, I was thinking of the U-2 flight. It would have been interesting. If Turkey had a deposit, they would have been able to charge Cuba, and Cuba would have been able to collect on their U-2 because they shot it down. The Americans say it never flew over and that there was no such plane. In talking to the Cuban officials—and that was some time ago—they told us that they still had the body which they kept in deep freeze, and any time the relatives of the deceased want to have the body back, they would be happy to send it back, but the Americans will have to admit there was a plane. They would have been able to collect on the bond on delivery of the body from the aircraft, but they will not collect from the U.S. because the U.S. would not agree to such a bond, nor will Canada collect from the U.S., nor will Russia.

Even the minister is smart enough to know that if he were going to collect that kind of levy for overflights he would need an international agreement. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) would have to negotiate such an agreement in a proper way because it would be difficult to get agreement from countries which have sovereignty as well. They are not supposed to be flying over another country without permission. That is the way things are.

The other section, which is connected with this, deals with the other services for which we will now be able to charge. I suppose this has something to do with the minister's cockeyed idea about user-pay. It is true that the weather reports cost money and that they are used mainly by the flying public, but they are used for a number of other purposes as well. Aircraft in this country provide a service. If we eliminated all the aircraft, we would slow down our country considerably. For aircraft to fly, some services are needed, regardless of whether or not they land at a certain airport. Even if they have a private landing strip of their own somewhere, they need to have the services that are provided at the airports. They need weather reports, radio beams, radar control, and all the other services provided at a modern airport.

You may remember that a former minister of transport not long ago proposed that landing fees be paid at airports. That would have eliminated all training schools in the country. There was talk about a landing fee being paid every time a plane touched down. If a plane made several circuits and bumps on landing, it would have to pay a landing fee for each one. A training pilot has to make 50 or 60 landings, and each landing would cost some money.

We are helping in the financing of pilot training through other programs, and I think rightly so. I think that a country the size of Canada needs to train as many pilots as possible. A person in training to become a pilot today is making quite a contribution to the industry, as well as eventually to the country. He has to learn something about navigation, about the operation of airports, as well as about the operation of the industry in general. He may become a commercial pilot or someone involved in the field of aeronautics, in design, testing and research, and that will be of advantage to Canada.

We should know whether the minister is really talking about the licensing of airports in accordance with the user-pay concept, because there are many airports in this country and training schools are attached to airports and they bring no real income to them. Airports at training schools could be used as emergency landing fields, a sort of auxiliary field to a major airport, but they are used mainly by the training schools.

You might remember that during the war there were hundreds and hundreds of small airfields across the country which were maintained solely for the purpose of emergencies. Nobody landed on some of them for years, but they were maintained, the grass was cut, and a certain amount of gas was kept for emergency purposes. Many of these small fields were later developed into training fields, and I think this is advantageous. I believe it would be a very bad idea if we were to charge them for the use of radar and for the wages of the guy who operates the radar, because they cannot use it; it is of no value to them. In some cases we would not be able to charge them for the use of radio because they are not properly equipped, and certainly they would not be able to use the sophisticated landing devices for which other aircraft have to pay.

I suggest we should be very careful in the way we implement the user-pay concept at airports. This is particularly true with regard to the small non-government operated airports. It appears to me that the minister wishes to obtain control over those as well.

The minister is asking for powers that are not justifiable and are certainly not needed, nor is it in the best interests of the industry and of the people who are using the facilities for the minister to have such powers. While it is close to the end of the session and most hon. members want to go on holidays—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Peters: Well, the attendance here today indicates that I am more correct than those who say no.

Mr. Goodale: Only members of the NDP have that in mind.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are here.

Mr. Peters: There are only a couple of airports in my riding, and one of them is a fairly good sized airport. I am sure there are other members of the House who have municipal airports in their ridings. I am sure there are a few in whose ridings there are pilot training schools. I am sure they have been shocked by the way we have conducted the inquiry into the accident that occurred in the Arctic, and by the way we have conducted the inquiry into the accident that occurred between James Bay and Timmins not long ago in which nine people were killed. I am sure that many people are shocked at the services, or lack of them, at airports.

I am sure members are well aware of the problems in their areas. I am suggesting that they are willing to give the Minister of Transport anything he wants, for two reasons. One is that there is not much they can do about it, because he will take these powers anyway. He is the most dictatorial Minister of Transport we have ever had. The other is that they want to go on their holidays and they are not greatly interested in speaking on this subject. If I am wrong, I am sure I will hear denials from a number of members who have more at stake in this bill than I have, and who represent people who are directly concerned with this piece of legislation. I am sure that they will have something to say, so I shall sit down and let them speak.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my interjection in this debate will be relatively brief. I intend to look at some of the clauses of the bill before I spend time on the two main portions that I am basically concerned with, one regarding investigation of accidents and one regarding licensing of proposed scheduled airports.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) went into a couple of matters in considerable detail. He spent some time talking about the liability insurance clause. I have no objection to the fact that aircraft owners should have liability insurance. As an owner of many years standing I have always felt it absolutely essential, and I think anyone who does not carry it is being irresponsible. But I am concerned that the department is getting involved in this and not the CTC which would seem to be the regulatory body that should be involved.

I am also curious about the level of insurance that individuals will have to carry. It seems to me that if this is to be set arbitrarily by the department, this House should have some idea of the level before the legislation is passed.

The hon. member of Vegreville also dealt with the licensing of persons engaged in the design, manufacture, or maintenance of aircraft. In the past two decades there has been an increase in the number of home-built aircraft. These are built by very dedicated people who use their tremendous skills as machinists, carpenters, or as other types of tradesmen. They are usually built in basements, garages, backyards, or sometimes in a spare building at a small airport. These people have traditionally built very fine aircraft for their own recreation. Are they each to be separately licensed as a manufacturer under this legislation? This is something we want to find out. The same question comes up about licensing the premises on which an aircraft is manufactured. Does the department want to license the basement of a home because someone is building an airplane there? I agree that the legislation should go to committee for long and thorough examination.

A particularly interesting portion of the bill concerns the licensing of airports. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) mentioned that there are not many airports in his area, but he was concerned about the user-pay principle. There are only a few airports in my area but there are other places where planes land. The Flying Farmers frequently come in on a grass strip owned by one of their group. Perhaps on a Sunday afternoon a farmer invites eight or ten others in the area to land on his field; they have a barbecue, and then fly off again. Is there to be an inspection of this type of field as well as of major airports?

And what about the fixed base operators? They perform a useful service in the small airports across the country. Are they to be affected by these regulations?

One of the things that I have encountered as a pilot, and which has been brought to my attention by other pilots, is that the Department of Transport seems to practise a policy of frustration or an adversary way of doing things. Whenever a private pilot wants a change in his licence, a change in the medical designation, it would appear that he is in an adversary situation with the department. The first answer to his request is always no, and then he must prove his case.

Not long ago I had an encounter with the department over my medical designation. It has since been changed, but the first notice I had was when my licence came through with an entirely different grade on it. I did not receive any indication that they were concerned about my medical adequacy for flying, before the licence came. There was no chance to provide further medical evidence, no chance to get a second medical opinion, just the licence with the new grade. I have not done much flying over the past 15 or 20 years so this was not a critical matter, but if I were flying for a living my livelihood would be affected. I get the same complaint from other pilots.

Then there is the matter of zoning regulations, which I think are worthwhile. I think the amount of building that has taken place around Malton Airport should have been curtailed, and I know I am supported by many people when I say there is no need for an airport at Pickering. The twinning of the north-south strip at Malton would provide all the service we need in the next two or three decades. As a private pilot I do not use Malton very much, but when I do I can get in and out without difficulty. It is not as busy as O'Hare or Kennedy, or some of the other large airports in the United States.

Zoning regulations vary from province to province. It is fine for the federal government to encourage universal zoning, which might be accepted as the National Building Code has been accepted, but I do not think it is necessary.

The hon. member for Vegreville also mentioned the People Over Planes Group. I do not have a great deal of sympathy for some of the leaders of that group who espouse politics rather different from mine, and who turn up in all parts of the country as troublemakers at various hearings. Nevertheless, they have a point. Presumably a draftsman from the Department of Transport would draw a line around an airport and determine which properties are affected. As I understand the legislation, there is no provision for appeal, and there is no consultation with the affected owners or municipalities. The federal bureaucracy will determine the detailed land use in any province near an airport. From the way the compensation clauses are written it would appear that the federal government could weasel out of paying compensation.

I shall speak mainly on two topics, the first being the licensing of a proposed, scheduled commercial air service. I think the Department of Transport could do much more to promote third level services. A few years ago we used Twin Otters in an experimental air service between Ottawa and Montreal. There was so much wrong with the service that I have not time to enumerate all the complaints. If the department is interested in such air services it might consider using the new Dash-7 on a scheduled, hourly commuter service in the Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto corridor, with a stop-over at Trenton as well. Colleagues from western Ontario may wish the service to extend as far as London, to which I would not object. But we should provide a service for the cities named in the corridor, which are strung out at between 125 and 150 miles intervals. I think the Dash-7 is the right aircraft to use.

The Twin Otter is a delightful aircraft but not suitable for commercial use. It is not comfortable, has fixed landing gears, and is not equipped properly for use as a commercial aircraft. The Twin Otter service between Montreal and Ottawa was an experiment, but not too successful. If that kind of service is to succeed it must operate from top notch airports. The Twin Otter service was grounded so often because of bad weather and other factors that it could hardly be called reliable.

The Dash-7 service could operate from Dorval, in Montreal, Ottawa International Airport CFB Trenton, and Toronto International Airport, all of which are equipped with the finest air navigation and landing devices in North America. I suggest Trenton as a stop-over, because it is half way between Ottawa and Toronto, and would serve a growing community of about 350,000 people in the Kingston-Cobourg corridor who want the service. Industrialists in the area sometimes complain to me that their means of access to Montreal and Toronto is inadequate. True, they can use the train, but the Via CN train service is not yet operational. The people of the area need an air service to link them with major air services departing for overseas points from Dorval or Toronto international. At present businessmen must either drive a car, or take a train. An industrialist in Belleville told me recently that when he returned from his trip overseas, his parking charge was approximately $38. Surely that $38 could have bought him a seat on an aircraft going from Trenton to Toronto or Montreal.

I do not make my suggestion lightly, for I intend to urge the department, with all the strength at my command, to begin such a service. I want to see a regular, commuter airline service serving the points I mentioned. At CFB Trenton we already have one of the finest airports and facilities in all Canada. There is a magnificent landing instrument system in place so that the service should not cost a great deal to install. We would need some facilities on the south side of the main base for civilian use. Some security measures will need to be taken, but there is lots of space. Although I have not had a chance recently to discuss this question with the people at the national headquarters, or with the base commander, I know from my experience in the past that there would be general agreement for such a service. Knowing how anxious the members of our forces are to do what is good for all Canada, not just for the military establishment, I am sure we can get their agreement.

That brings me to my last point, which the hon. member for Vegreville perhaps did not cover in sufficient depth. We did not know this bill was to come forward so soon and he and I have spoken off the cuff, without benefit of the research which would enable us to scrutinize more narrowly and perhaps attack some parts of the bill.

I am concerned about aircraft incidents, and their reporting. I am thinking of accidents. I was intrigued to find that a little document on aviation safety had this to say some time ago:

> Transport Canada has set up an interim aircraft accident review board pending the establishment of an independent transportation accident investigation board which was approved in principle by cabinet in April 1975 . . .

If the cabinet approved the establishment in 1975 of an independent review board, what business has the department in setting up its own board? I disagree with this entirely, and I do not think the department should be setting up its own review board. I am not proud to remember that once I flew an aircraft upside down into a pasture; I walked away from the crash, relatively unhurt. At least, here I stand.

Mr. Fraser: But not unaffected!

Mr. Ellis: I am sure damage was done, but I walked away. The investigation was cursory. I reported the accident to the nearest airport, answered a few questions, and that seemed to be the end of it. Perhaps that was a relatively minor accident which happened many years ago. However, in the accident with which the hon. member for Timiskaming dealt, there was an obvious and definite conflict, in the sense that you can hardly have an impartial review when the body which is going to look into the accident and lay charges arising from it is also involved in the making of regulations.

I point out that in 1974 the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) introduced a private member's bill for establishing a permanent and impartial commission whose job would be to look into and investigate transport accidents. The cabinet approved in 1975 the setting up of an independent investigation board. Why did it not act on the hon. member's recommendation?

Although I have not discussed the point with my colleagues, I am sure they will agree to fight long and hard over this bill, as the minister well knows. I realize we are approaching the summer recess. I am aware the government is most anxious to be out of here by the first week of July so that certain alterations can be made to this Chamber. I have no objection one way or the other. My constituency is close. I travel back and forth every week. I can be here on Mondays and Fridays when the House is a little thin, so I am not worried if we stay here all summer. I want to go on record as saying that I intend to debate this bill for a good long time.

We want to induce the minister to take cognizance of the very worth-while bill introduced by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. We would like to see that legislation accepted, or a government bill put in place to do that job.

There is a conflict here that has to be resolved. The way to resolve it is obvious; sometimes it is not obvious in other pieces of legislation. I am prepared to spend as much time as necessary to try to convince the minister that this step should be taken.

I see my time is almost up. I close by saying that I have always had a very strong concern with regard to the area of regulation. Canada is a free country. By and large, Canadians are a free people. However, we seem to be faced with more and more restrictive regulations that are very difficult to justify. A number of regulations contained in this bill are difficult to justify. I look forward to dealing with some of them in committee and to receiving a reply from the minister as to whether this area that is so basic and important can be handled in an entirely different way, either the way suggested by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East or something akin to it, so that we might have a proper review court.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to carry on this debate from where my colleague, the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis), left off, and to reinforce his plea that all members of this House pay attention to the necessity of establishing an independent board for the examination of accidents involving aircraft in Canada.

In the bill before us, Bill C-40, Section 8 of the Aeronautics Act is amended. It provides authority for the minister to establish a board of inquiry to investigate the circumstances of an accident. It is completely permissive. It does not carry with it the mandatory provision to establish an investigatory board which would be completely independent of the department or the divisions within it.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has repeatedly been advocating in this House, commencing in the year 1970, that an independent review board be established. It is a matter of considerable regret to all members of my party that the hon. member, not knowing that Bill C-40 was coming forward today, is unable to be here today to speak on it.

The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East first introduced a private member's bill calling for an independent board to investigate accidents on October 20, 1970, Bill C-66. The substance of that bill has been in front of the House ever since, once as Bill C-85, subsequent to that as Bill C-333, Bill C-109, and Bill C-226. It was debated in the House on April 1, 1977 as Bill C-220. The opening of that debate is reported in Hansard for April 1, 1977, at page 4581.

If you look at the debate which the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East led on April 1, 1977, you will see that the arguments in favour of an independent board are overwhelming. The arguments were so well stated at that time by the hon. member that, in the reply on behalf of the government by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Gauthier), the following was said, and I shall quote his reply. Under the circumstances I think this should again be placed on the record for hon. members on the government side. This is the spokesman for the government putting forward the government's view of the hon. member's private bill calling for an independent tribunal. I ask all hon. members to pay attention to this, especially members on the government side.

The parliamentary secretary said, and I quote:

> At the outset I wish to thank the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) for his patience and co-operation with us in dealing with this bill concerning the creation of an organization for impartial investigation of transport accidents. He must be setting a parliamentary record of sorts as this is, I believe, the sixth time the bill has been considered at private members' hour. However, unlike many other bills that are presented, the objective of this bill does command broad support from all parties, and we wish it to receive further consideration.

I emphasize that because the government is now on record as supporting in principle the substance of the bill which the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East submitted to this House, as the parliamentary secretary pointed out, six times.

We have before us Bill C-40 which, as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said, is a multifaceted bill. There was no reason why the substance of the private bill to which we have been referring could not have formed part of this bill. There is no excuse in the world, especially now that the government has indicated it supports the substance of that bill in principle.

I do not have to tell anyone in this House how often the media and the public laugh at the whole situation of the private members' hour. However, when a private member, no matter from which side of the House, brings in a bill six times, and the substance of it meets with the approval of the government, it seems incredible, when there is an opportunity to put the substance of that bill into a bill put in front of the entire Chamber, that it is ignored. No doubt somebody from the government will say it is still being considered. The question is whether it is being considered sincerely, whether the government's words that it supports it in principle are sincere. I notice the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is indicating by nodding his head that they are considering it sincerely.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question? I appreciate his reference to the investigation review board and to the government's commitment to it. I wonder if he recalls, first of all, the announcement of the interim board, which was clearly a step pending the development of the legislation to provide for an over-all, independent investigation review board. In his reference to the possibility of including a provision here, would he not agree that it is desirable to broaden the scope of the application to cover aspects other than air and that this would be a good reason to come forward—an early date, I agree—with a bill rather than an amendment to the Aeronautics Act?

Mr. Fraser: I thank the minister for his intervention. It might well be that what he suggests is appropriate. I am just reminding him and members of the government that this has now been under consideration since 1971—there are many references to it in the record. If the minister's remarks are to be taken as an indication of his own concern, and the concern of the government, I welcome them and thank him for his intervention. But so that neither he nor any other member of the government may forget when this debate is over the assurances which have been given, let me remind them they are on record as supporting the principle of the bill put forward by my hon. friend from Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Let me recall that in the Speech from the Throne of September 30, 1974, reference was made to the intention to establish an independent accident investigation board. Then, in May, 1975, the minister of transport of that day assured the House that his department was "exercising pressure on the government House leader to bring in legislation as soon as possible". In October of 1975 the present Minister of Transport said in response to a question in the House that work on the legislation was "going forward". Later, on December 2, 1976, the matter was raised again at a meeting of the standing committee when questions were directed to the deputy minister, who said that the matter of an independent accident investigation board was still under consideration in the department. He added that a memorandum to the cabinet should be ready in six to eight weeks, in other words, by the end of January, 1977.

I take it from what the Minister of Transport has just said that the government is finally taking this matter seriously. It is my plea to the minister, and to all hon. members, to maintain reasonable pressure on the government to bring forward this legislation, or take immediate steps to consult with members on this side and, perhaps, with members on the government side who support the principle, with a view to bringing about any necessary fine point adjustments in the private bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. That bill could then be sent to committee, and brought back to the House for passage.

It has been a privilege to take part in this debate. This in an issue in connection with which the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has worked diligently and with great concern over a number of years. It would appear from the minister's remarks that this long and diligent service in a necessary cause may at last come to fruition, and I am sure hon. members generally will join with me in applauding the efforts of my hon. friend in this regard.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate in order to supplement representations I have made to the minister by way of correspondence in relation to the topic I have in mind—I refer to the Mount Hope airport which serves the area I represent.

Bill C-40 gives me an opportunity to do this because it would provide the minister with extended authority in connection with planning development around airports and certain of the facilities required in connection with the expansion of airports. Almost a year ago the minister appointed an ad hoc committee, composed of representatives of various municipalities surrounding Mount Hope, to consider whether a new site should be allocated to serve Hamilton and my area, or whether the facilities at Mount Hope should be extended. The minister has had the report in his hands for some time, and everyone in my area is wondering why no decision has yet been announced.

The report says that Mount Hope could be expanded. We are wondering why he has given no indication as to what he intends to do. This is a matter of particular significance to the municipalities which I have the honour to represent because should the minister, for some unknown reason, decide to select a new site, he will be upsetting the regional plan for the Norfolk-Haldimand region which I represent. Officials and municipal representatives have been working for almost a year to bring out this plan and, as I say, it would be totally upset were the minister to decide of another location for the airport. The mayor of the Township of Haldimand, Mr. Dave Pearson, spoke to me some time ago asking me to do all in my power to persuade the minister to make an early decision, hopefully, to expand the airport at Mount Hope.

The need is urgent since more sophisticated electronic equipment for instrument landing is badly needed at Mount Hope. Many a time I have stood at the airport there waiting for a plane to come from Windsor or Pittsburgh, or Ottawa or Montreal, only to see the airplane make a pass at the airport, find the fog too dense to land, and fly on to Ottawa or Malton where suitable installations were in place to enable a landing to be made. This caused personal inconvenience, but I was only one of many who were unable to get aboard.

Expansion of the facilities is necessary to serve not only the great industrial city of Hamilton, and the Niagara area, but also to meet the needs of the new industrial complex which is taking shape in Nanticoke in the midst of my riding. There, Hydro has built the largest thermo-generating plant in North America; Stelco is installing a rolling mill and a totally new steel-making process which will come into operation very shortly. In addition, Texaco Canada is building the largest oil refinery in North America on this site. All these new facilities are looking to be served from the nearest airport, which is at Mount Hope. This being the case, it is surely incumbent upon the minister to get on with the job and let us know when Mount Hope is to be expanded. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I have written to the minister on this matter. I think I wrote him as long ago as February but have not yet received a reply. We are wondering why a decision has not been announced.

Let us not leave the municipalities hanging in limbo and in uncertainty. Let us say we are going to expand Mount Hope. I have talked to residents living in the little village of Mount Hope, and they tell me they have become accustomed to aircraft landing and taking off. Many of them live there and do not even notice it is happening. In addition to that, there are new homes which have been built in that village with full knowledge that the airport was there. Therefore the argument cannot logically be made that it is going to do any great harm to the local residents in the immediate area of Mount Hope. This is where the ad hoc committee is going to recommend to the minister that the least resistance is coming from in that particular area, so let us get on with Mount Hope.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a few things I want to say on Bill C-40. Let me say at the outset that one of the difficulties and dangers we are facing in Canada is the continuous build-up of bureaucratic boards and tribunals, and the build-up of power in the hands of the minister or the governor in council to regulate or change regulations, without reference to parliament and without provisions for appeal. The regulations have the force of statute and remove from parliament much of its power and authority. There is no reason, in my mind, why regulations cannot be attached to legislation, debated, and be examined by a committee before the legislation proceeds to its final stages. In Bill C-40 we see a move away from this direction once again.

I want to read into the record a letter I received from a constituent, on the contents of Bill C-40. This gentleman is an aviation consultant, and his letter to me covered the bill so completely that I think it is proper to read it into the record in its entirety. The letter is dated May 3, and it reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Kempling:

BILL C-40, AN ACT TO AMEND THE AERONAUTICS ACT

On March 9th, 1977, Bill C-40 was given first reading in the House of Commons in an effort by the government to effect certain amendments to the Aeronautics Act that would result in the provision to the Minister of Transport powers that would have far-reaching consequences for the aviation community. I have read this bill carefully and I have grave concerns over its content and the ultimate effects to the Canadian people should it become law.

For several years, Transport Canada has been attempting to implement a full cost-recovery program with respect to the utilization of airport and aviation facilities in Canada, and on page 1, paragraph 2, you will find legislation proposed that would empower the minister to impose charges for airport facilities and services. If the existing Aeronautics Act is not appropriate for these purposes, then one must ask about the minister's authority to levy the current charges. It may well be that Transport Canada would find it easier to implement its own charges under this proposed legislation without involving Treasury Board, and this may be the case. If so, then this amendment would not be in the best interests of Canadians or the government that represents them. A minister should not be allowed to set up his own charging schemes without opportunity for scrutiny by the House and Treasury Board. In recent years, we have become increasingly concerned over the high cost of administrative activities within Transport Canada that seems to drain the minister's resources, not to mention the operational cost and debt that is attached to Montreal's Mirabel airport, and this new attempt by the minister to establish his own authority for the setting up of user charges cannot be allowed to take place.

Further, in this section 5, you will find the following subsections which, I believe, encroach upon the rights of all Canadians:

> Subsection 2 provides that owners and operators of aircraft may be required to deposit security with the minister to ensure full payment of charges to be imposed upon such owners and operators in the next following year.

Since all pilots, duly licensed, are, in fact, operators when they are at the controls of an aircraft, this legislation would mean that the minister could force every pilot in Canada to place a bond or cash on deposit with his office before re-issue of the pilot's flying licence could take place each year or every six months, depending upon the type of certificate held, even if there was no planned intent by that pilot of requiring use of those airports and/or facilities which might attract payment for services. What about the thousands of pilots who fly for recreation and personal transportation and never use DOT facilities? What about the thousands of Flying Farmers whose aircraft are operated solely from private aerodromes and often are not even equipped with the avionic equipment necessary for operating into and out of DOT airports? Should these Canadians be forced to deposit $100 or $500 each year as a security bond? That would be ludicrous!

In these regards, what has happened to the accepted manner of doing business of paying for goods or services rendered when those goods or services have been provided to the satisfaction of the customer? Just because one might consider buying a certain commodity, should that person be required by legislation to place on deposit a security bond for the, as yet, unpurchased commodity? Will the minister's wishes be granted and he be allowed to force every pilot to place a deposit with him, and if so, will not the income tax department be next? We all know for—

I have to read the writing here.

An hon. Member: You had better start writing your own stuff.

Mr. Kempling: No. This is an excellent letter which gets to the heart of this matter. It continues:

We all know for almost certainty that we will have to pay personal income tax next year. Would it not be nice if the income tax department could force us all to remit in advance rather than as we earn the income as is the present practice? One can, of course come up with all kinds of silly examples in these regards, but the plain, simple fact is that this proposed legislation is stupid.

May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURAL POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the meaningless food strategy for Canada statement presented to the House of Commons on Friday, June 10, by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Because of the importance to Canada of a well thought-out food and agricultural policy, and because the government, through its policy statement, has clearly shown it does not have such a policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That a special House of Commons committee be formed to study and report back to parliament their findings on a national food strategy for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENTS BY ORDER IN COUNCIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. It is based on a study done by Douglas Nixon on order in council appointments made by this government since 1968. He found that at least 200 of the order in council appointments since 1968 have gone to former Liberal candidates in federal and provincial elections, or their spouses. The study did not include the big plum of the Senate appointments or appointments to the prime minister's staff or cabinet ministers' offices. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the subject matter of the Douglas Nixon study be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO ENSURE ANNUAL GUARANTEED INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the number of unemployed is constantly increasing and that minumum wages which vary from one province to another are unlikely to solve that serious problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to introduce immediately a bill for the establishment of an annual guaranteed income to give decent living conditions to every Canadian citizen and enable those who can do so to work without being penalized as is the case in the social legislation now in effect.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED DISRESPECT IN COVERAGE OF HER MAJESTY'S SILVER JUBILEE CELEBRATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the failure of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to provide live coverage of the jubilee celebrations for Her Majesty, the Queen of Canada, which other North American networks managed to do, and of its failure, once it began to carry the program, to do so without a breakdown—a technical shortcoming that other networks, whether in Canada or the United States, did not experience—and in view, further, of the attitude of many of the CBC announcers and program directors, epitomized, perhaps, in the needlessly disrespectful program on Sunday morning satirizing the entire jubilee festivities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That an investigation be ordered into the CBC's technical and program activities related to these incidents to determine where responsibility lies for thus downgrading and otherwise undermining one of Canada's most revered and honourable institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent of the House for the presentation for debate of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED ILLEGAL ACTIONS BY FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter that I believe is becoming more urgent every day. In view of the continuing concern over the role of the RCMP in the following matters, the illegal break-in at L'Agence de Presse Libre in Montreal, allegations surrounding the Praxis break-in in Toronto, allegations of illegal bugging given at the inquiry in Edmonton, the conviction of RCMP officer Samson in Montreal, the inquiry into RCMP activities in New Brunswick, and in view of the information revealed by the CBC last night of the growing influence of organized crime in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House recommends a royal commission to be commenced into the question of political control over the RCMP, either in camera or otherwise as may be appropriate, and further that the specific role of the RCMP as previously referred to in the motion be included in the subject of the inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate under the provisions of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENTS BY ORDER IN COUNCIL

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Acting Prime Minister relates to the research study published this morning which states that since 1968 some 200 ex-Liberal candidates or their spouses have been appointed to a variety of positions within the Canadian judiciary, regulatory agencies and the public service. No one pretends that this is a complete list. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he and the government condone this type of massive patronage, and whether this administration plans to continue a patronage policy which in effect will allow loyalty to the Liberal party to be such a primary qualification for appointment to public positions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not regard the facts the hon. member refers to as constituting massive patronage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What would you call it?

Mr. MacEachen: Since 1968, I understand that on average the governor in council has made 600-plus such appointments per year.

An hon. Member: Give us the whole list, then.

Mr. MacEachen: When you look at the list of persons, whom I regard as highly qualified, the result shows considerable restraint.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I presume the Acting Prime Minister is saying that one or two former Liberal candidates might have been overlooked. I am sure he will consult their qualifications and find some useful reward for them. This, clearly, is a government that relies upon the practice of patronage, to the detriment of the public service. One of the aspects which concerns us very much is the effect of these political appointments to regulatory bodies and appeal agencies that are presumed to be and can be respected only if they are independent of the political party that is in office.

I ask the Acting Prime Minister, who has now defended this practice of patronage and indicates that it is intended to continue it as usual, to tell the House how the people of Canada can be guaranteed that regulatory and appeal agencies will be able to function free of suspicion and bias when so many members of those regulatory and appeal agencies are affiliated with the political party which forms the government whose actions are being regulated or appealed?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has a good point when he raises the question of the competence of individuals who may be appointed. I have never thought that participation in the public life of Canada should constitute a bar to appointments in various aspects of the public service. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe, experience gained in public life often constitutes a useful "plus" in the filling of these appointments. If you examine the list of persons enumerated in this morning's newspaper, you will find a collection of talented people who may have served in the Liberal party. They may have been ministers or candidates. At the same time, they should not be barred from public service. Among the persons on the list to which the hon. member referred are appointees to the courts. I do not think the hon. member would suggest that persons appointed to the courts by either party would demonstrate, or in the past have demonstrated, any bias in their work.

I believe the same judgment applies to those who may be appointed to regulatory agencies. Perhaps I have a little longer memory than the hon. member has, because I was in the House when the right hon. member for Prince Albert used to appoint eminent gentlemen of the Conservative party to such bodies.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary question? I cannot dispute the length of the memory of the Acting Prime Minister. Indeed, the length of that memory has probably contributed to the appointment of a number of the people whose qualifications we have some cause to question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Name one.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are really feeling the heat on the government side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, nobody would dispute that participation in public life should not be a bar to those kinds of appointments. The question is whether participation in public life during that intensive two-month training period which people go through as candidates in the losing cause of the Liberal party should in itself be regarded as the only qualification for appointment to the public service. I notice the Acting Prime Minister avoided, or tried to put aside, the question of the reputation of freedom from bias of regulatory agencies and appeal bodies. I should like him to address his mind to the response to this question: How are we going to guarantee that the reputation or independence, so essential for regulatory agencies and appeal bodies, will be safeguarded when so many members of those bodies have been appointed for reasons which, on the face of it, appear to relate strongly—too strongly—to political loyalty to the party whose decisions as a government are being appealed or regulated? How are we to have that safeguarding of the reputation of bodies which, unless known by the public of Canada to be functioning independently, are not able to do their jobs?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the strongest guarantee against such evidence of bias is the integrity of the persons appointed. I do not think there is any other guarantee.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is the point.

Mr. MacEachen: I have already referred to appointments to the judiciary. I think it is the experience of all of us that when you select persons of integrity, as we attempt to do, for that work and for other regulatory bodies, they shed their bias and do their job in the public interest. If the hon. member has any evidence to the contrary, I am sure he will bring it to the attention of the government.

● (1420)

Mr. Clark: What is of concern to us is not so much the integrity of the individuals appointed as the integrity of the government appointing them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We on this side of the House question that. Another aspect on which I would like to allow the Acting Prime Minister to try his hand, if he will, is the matter of Crown corporations. The list this morning indicates—again make it clear that it was not a complete list—that that has been a guiding factor, to say the least, in the appointment of members to the boards of directors of Crown corporations in this country. In recent months there has been much concern about the efficiency and the regularity, in some cases, of the operation of Canadian Crown corporations. Can the Acting Prime Minister in his eloquent, long-minded, long-memoried, defence of patronage tell this House and the people of Canada so that they can have a guarantee that Canadian money will not be wasted and that Canadian policy will not be made badly by boards of directors of Crown corporations when they are appointed, not because of their knowledge of the subject matter with which that Crown corporation deals but because of their loyalty to the Liberal party of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition and I disagree on that point. I believe these persons are selected on the basis of the contribution they make to the work of the public service. I must say that when I looked at the list this morning I was quite impressed with the quality of persons who were available for this kind of service in Canada. The hon. member should keep this in perspective by recalling the fact which I mentioned earlier, namely, that on the average about 600 such appointments are made per year. If the list is complete—and the hon. member would know that better than I—then it constitutes a relatively small portion of the total number of appointments.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING APPOINTMENTS TO PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Undoubtedly, this morning's newspaper report also missed the rolls of Liberal campaign managers, bagmen, PR men and party hacks of various descriptions. My question to the Acting Prime Minister is simply whether it is government policy to create a partisan public service. If not, will he at the earliest opportunity be bringing under the Public Service Commission the bulk of order in council appointments to prevent this from happening?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: By the most basic definition of supplementary questions, they must arise out of the response to the original question.

CBC PROGRAM ON ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Yesterday's CBC program on organized crime revealed that the major chemical drug capital of the world world—I think those were the words used—was Toronto. In view of the responsibility of the RCMP in terms of narcotic control, will the Solicitor General advise whether any charges have been laid in the past with regard to the operation which the CBC seemed to be able to get inside of and take pictures? If no charges have been laid, can he explain why no such action has been taken in the Toronto area?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): As the hon. member knows, the RCMP is widely engaged in the fight against organized crime not only in Toronto but throughout Canada. The RCMP takes part in the fight against organized crime particularly through joint force operations which includes the joint use of all personnel and equipment against selected targets. This type of operation has led to charges being laid against numerous people believed to be involved in organized crime throughout the country. As far as the drug trade in particular is concerned, one of the main objectives of the RCMP is the fight against the importation of narcotics, particularly heavy drugs, and I think that just by day to day reading of their newspapers hon. members know the extent to which this type of work is carried on by the force. There are a number of ongoing investigations by the RCMP into the drug trade in all provinces but I am sure the hon. member does not wish me to divulge the type of investigations which are going on at the moment.

Mr. Leggatt: I should like the Solicitor General to zero in on the question which was asked. He has given us a non-responsive answer. I asked him about one specific operation. Apparently the U.S. food and drug administration knew so much about it they were able to provide slides to their operatives showing the way in which Toronto was supplying illicit drugs to the world. The question I asked was this: Have any charges been laid by the Ontario authorities or by the RCMP with regard to that specific operation, or would the minister at least contact the CBC, without wire-tap help or any other help we know except their own investigative ability as to how they were able to receive so much information while no charges appear to have been laid by our own police force?

Mr. Fox: I suppose the hon. member's question is also a plea in favour of the amendments presently before the House in Bill C-51 which seeks to provide to police forces of this country additional help in their investigations of this particular type of crime.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: The hon. member referred to information which was provided to the CBC apparently by drug enforcement officials in the United States. We are continuously in touch with these people. As to the question of the laying of specific charges, I would want to check the present state of the affair before giving a specific answer.

Mr. Leggatt: The Solicitor General refers to bugging powers. The police have this power, it was granted by this House in 1973. They had all the bugging powers they needed with regard to that operation. I am still interested in the question as to why no charges seem to have been developed, and the Solicitor General has not been responsive to that inquiry. Therefore, we had better ask ourselves whether additional powers are needed, considering we have already granted them. On June 9 the Solicitor General revealed—this deals with bugging by the RCMP—that he was filing an affidavit at the hearing in Edmonton before Mr. Justice Laycraft to prevent relevant evidence going before that inquiry on the grounds of national security, under section 41(2). Is the Solicitor General now willing to give an absolute commitment to the House that the affidavit did not relate in any way to bugging, illicit or otherwise, in relation to people involved in that inquiry?

Mr. Fox: As to the first part of the question, the hon. member obviously feels it would be my job to determine why, when and at what stage the RCMP ought to lay charges in a case. It has not been my practice to interfere with the day to day operations of the RCMP but, rather, to let the RCMP develop the case, as a police force ought to do in a democratic society, and to lay charges when the relevant evidence has been brought forward. The hon. member, coming as he does from British Columbia, ought to know the extent to which wire-tapping is necessary in completing inquiries, particularly into the importation of hard drugs, into the province and the high rate of success the force has had in dealing with the problem as a result of these investigational aids. As to the question concerning the affidavit I filed in the Alberta inquiry, I filed one affidavit under section 41(2), having read the document myself, and it in no way relates to the inquiry presently being undertaken in that province.

● (1430)

I have signed a second affidavit, under section 41(1) of the Federal Court Act, which brings to the attention of the inquiry certain documents and leaves it up to the discretion of the court to decide whether or not those documents ought to be made public.

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO ENSURE GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He guessed it, because he is resuming his seat.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I always guess.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The minister says that he always guesses. Here is my question: Since the Department of National Health and Welfare as well as the provincial ministers and health officials have been considering for a few years the possibility of establishing a guaranteed annual income plan—many documents have been sent to us on the matter—would the minister be in a position to tell the House whether all these studies and discussions which have taken place with the provinces will come to a head soon; will the minister introduce a bill to this effect in the near future?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, a great many studies have been conducted with the provinces. During the last federal-provincial conference, all provinces approved this plan, except one, Ontario, which opposed the suggested formula. Since then, we have been examining various other possibilities for the development of a form of guaranteed income, especially for underprivileged workers.

These studies of other alternatives are not yet concluded; but I hope they will be this year. I am not in a position at this very moment to give the hon. member an assurance that a bill will be introduced in the House in the very near future.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Fox.]

In view of the answer he just gave, could the minister indicate if a divided bill could be presented and adopted by the House concerning particularly the underprivileged workers, notwithstanding other sectors upon which the governments are disagreeing?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is in fact one of the alternatives now being considered, that is the possibility to initiate a program concerning underprivileged workers.

Once again, I must say to the hon. member that he must not expect such a bill to be submitted in the coming months. I hope to table in the House, next week or even this week the new legislation on social services. This is the first priority that we will submit to the House, that is to say a great improvement of the cost sharing formula for social services in Canada. This legislation is a major step in the revision of social security and once again, I hope to be able to table it this week.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary. In view of the answer of the minister with regard to the lack of agreement on the part of the province of Ontario, can he tell the House whether there is agreement with the province of Quebec? If on the contrary there are difficulties what are they?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there was agreement with the Quebec government on the basic formula proposed in June of last year. Since then, I have not been advised to the contrary, I therefore presume that it still agrees with that formula.

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have one supplementary question in order to clarify the minister's timetable. Did I understand him to say, in terms of priority, that the social services legislation would be introduced next week? I would bring to the minister's attention that I am under the impression from the chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that amendments to the Canada Pension Plan will be introduced at committee stage on Wednesday, June 15. Can the minister clarify this position for me, so that we can be prepared?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker. The amendments to the Canada Pension Plan will be studied by the standing committee this coming Wednesday, I believe, and we hope they will be passed by the House in the near future. As for the act on social services, it will be brought in for first reading this week, I hope.

ALLEGATIONS MADE IN CBC DOCUMENTARY "CONNECTIONS"

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Given the startling revelations and allegations made in the CBC documentary "Connections" last night, can the minister say when we can expect a statement by him as to the extent of organized crime in Canada? Could I ask him if he saw the program and, as a result, did he meet with his officials this morning to discuss what new initiatives might be taken to control these criminal abuses against Canadian society?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I watched the program with a great deal of interest and would generally like to commend the CBC for bringing the matters of organized crime in this country to the attention of the public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Is someone applauding the CBC? We had better have another inquiry.

Mr. Basford: However, a great deal of the program, as far as I could see, was taken from testimony obtained by wire-tap evidence in the Quebec crime inquiry. It is for that specific reason that attorneys general have been recommending for three years that the wire-tap laws of this country be changed so that they can deal more effectively with organized crime. With regard to the passage of the provisions of Bill C-51—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: —the most important initiative this parliament could take would be to pass those initiatives as quickly as possible.

Mr. Fraser: That is a cheap shot.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It does not wash.

Mr. Fraser: You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Vancouver South says that I do not know what I am talking about.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is nothing wrong with your hearing.

Mr. Basford: I am quoting the annual reports from the ten provincial attorneys general, all of whom have recommended these kinds of provisions.

Mr. Fraser: When did you ever defend in a criminal court?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I might say the minister's response is more by way of an excuse rather than to give an explanation as to what the federal government is doing at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Could I ask the minister to respond to the question I put to him originally, as to when we can expect a statement from him about the extent of organized crime in Canada, or will he just depend on what is told him by provincial attorneys general?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me to be more useful, in dealing with organized crime, that we have legislation rather than statements.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Solicitor General is this. Would he make recommendations to his colleague to view the second half of the program which will be shown tonight?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to whom that question was directed.

Mr. Clark: Duck it anyway, Ron.

Mr. Basford: I certainly intend to watch the second version, and I would ask members of the House to do so, particularly members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

ACTIVITIES OF SENATOR DAVEY RESPECTING CERTAIN COMPANIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is now in a position to convey to the House any of the information requested by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, with regard to the connections and activities of Senator Keith Davey or his company, York Sporting Investments, vis-à-vis Blue Water Racing Associates Ltd., incorporated on April 16, 1975, with the chief place of business in London, Ontario.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, not a complete report, but I am sure one will be completed in a day or so. I know from the preliminary report that the so-called raceway operated, I believe, one year and lost $70,000.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, the raceway is behaving like the government in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, since the Acting Prime Minister referred in his answer last Friday to the green paper in connection with conflict of interest problems in this matter, I should like to ask if he can indicate whether Senator Davey has been content with the perks of the Senate in so far as his dealings with the government of Canada are concerned, or whether the senator or any of his companies are involved in any business enterprises which are also deriving revenues from doing business with the government of Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on that subject.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CMHC—LIBEL SUIT INITIATED BY EMPLOYEE AGAINST SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General of Canada. Is the Solicitor General aware that Ian Keith Carruthers of CMHC, one of the public servants who is alleged to have been named in the infamous letter by his paranoiac predecessor, has now issued a writ in the courts suing the present Solicitor General for libel and for negligence, and also joining in that suit the minister's predecessor, the Minister of Supply and Services? Is he aware of that, and has that writ been served upon him as yet? Furthermore, would he make himself available for service?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, no writ has been served on me in connection with that. A few hon. members have been nice enough to forewarn me that that seems to be in process.

CRIMINAL CODE—POSSIBLE OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICE BY GOVERNMENT MEMBERS OR EMPLOYEES RESPECTING BREAK-INS, ETC.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister examined the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with obstruction of justice and the jurisprudence under that section in order to see if members of the government at any level, or anyone with knowledge of such offences as break-ins, have done nothing and have not revealed the facts which were brought to their attention, in order to see if criminal charges could be brought against them? Has the minister examined that section, and if not, does he intend to do so?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that section and its application have been examined with reference to the various instances in which a number of Crown officers either federal or provincial have been involved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SYDNEY STEEL PLANT—PAYMENT OF UIC BENEFITS TO EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTION CNR ACT TO PREVENT SHUTDOWN

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Sydney Steel Corporation has announced that it will close down its plant for five weeks commencing July 1. In view of the fact that unemployment in the area of the plant is running near 25 per cent, and in view of the fact that many of the steelworkers will go two weeks without vacation pay or UIC benefits, will the cabinet instruct the CNR to buy and stockpile rails so that this shutdown does not have to occur?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is in the nature of a representation, which we will consider.

CNR ACTION TO ALLEVIATE EMPLOYMENT SITUATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH SYSCO

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Transport. Since even steelworkers with 25 and 30 years' seniority at the plant will be affected because the company scheduled vacations earlier in the year so that too many vacations would not occur at the same time, will the Minister of Transport advise the House if he has requested the CNR to give special consideration to SYSCO to avert this situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have drawn the problems of SYSCO to the attention of Canadian National and I believe some discussions have been held. In addition, more discussions will be held to see what can be done. The Canadian National management is extremely sympathetic to the problem.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ORGANIZED CRIME—REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION STUDY SITUATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to direct a question either to the Solicitor General or to the Minister of Justice. I have listened to the various questions and answers in connection with the revelations last night, and I must say that I am perturbed by the indifference shown by both ministers.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Only recently it was said that Canada was a happy hunting-ground for international thugs. Having regard to recommendations made some years ago by Judge Macdonald and his commission in Windsor, and also having regard to the crime commission meetings in the province of Quebec which did a magnificent job, it is apparent that the problem has become overwhelmingly difficult for the government of Canada, and apparently for the ministers. Under the circumstances, and in order to clarify the whole situation, will the government appoint a royal commission, as recommended eight years ago and also as suggested by the Quebec commission, so that Canada will cease to be, among the western nations of the world, a country in which international wrongdoers and criminals can carry on with a higher degree of impunity than they can in any other part of the world?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the right hon. gentleman's suggestion about indifference. We in this government have been concerned about organized crime for some time. We co-operated fully with the crime inquiry in the province of Quebec. The last round of Criminal Code amendments indicated that we were prepared to give statutory form to provincial crime inquiries, but as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada such amendments were unnecessary. It has been generally felt by law enforcement officials and others that such an inquiry is most effectively conducted by provincial attorneys general who have within their hands the administration and enforcement of the Criminal Code. The Quebec inquiry is an example of the type of action which is suggested. Contrary to indifference, no one on this side has made the kind of statement we heard on television last night. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has said that there is no organized crime in Ontario.

An hon. Member: Don't be such a cheap politician.

An hon. Member: That was five years ago.

Mr. Basford: It is as a result of the recommendations of and the consultations with the ten provincial attorneys general representing all parties in Canada that we proposed in this House changes in the wire-tap law. Law enforcement agencies across this country have said that they are hampered in dealing with the organizers of organized crime. Rather than looking for parliamentary pyrotechnics, I hope the right hon. gentleman will see that that legislation is passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have not listened to an example of pyrotechnics on the part of the minister; we have listened to the usual alibi that he adopts. Let us face the fact that international crime covers all of Canada and that the attorneys general have jurisdiction only within their provinces. I come back to this simple question: Will the minister follow the recommendations of two commissions and set up a royal commission so that wherever the wrongdoers are, they will not be concealed either directly or indirectly?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question should be faced.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Clark: You flushed him out.

Mr. Basford: The right hon. gentleman did not ask a question; he simply repeated a previous comment. I answered previously by saying that it is the advice of law enforcement officers that such an inquiry is best conducted at the provincial level by provincial attorneys general. I will be meeting with provincial attorneys general shortly. If they should make such recommendations, I will consider them. In the meantime, I am saying to the right hon. gentleman that it seems to be preferable to accept the advice of every law enforcement agency in this country and amend the Criminal Code in the way suggested by this government, so that the law enforcement agencies of Canada can more effectively deal with organized crime.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister covering up?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Go back to London.

CBC TELEVISION PROGRAM ON ORGANIZED CRIME—GOVERNMENT REACTION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Justice address himself to the fact that several aspects of last night's film dealt with areas which are clearly of federal responsibility—loan-sharking, the whole aspect of narcotics control, and so on—and that the wire-tapping provisions the minister so highly recommends to us have been found unacceptable in the United States, and yet in the United States they have been able to deal with these issues more forthrightly than this government?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it appears that part of the hon. gentleman's question is correct. On the basis of various reports, including that of the Quebec crime inquiry and the work of CLEU in British Columbia, it seems that loan-sharking is increasingly becoming a front-end operation of organized crime. It is for that reason that sections 3 and 20 of the Small Loans Act are included in the wire-tap amendments which are now before parliament.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Your only answer is wire-tapping.

FINANCE

REPORTED INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With the United States reporting last week its lowest unemployment in 30 months, while Canada has its highest in 37 years, and with inflation continuing to be higher here than in the United States, is the minister in a position today to confirm the finding in OECD material to be released later this month in Paris indicating that worse is in store for Canada, with real growth expected to be below 4 per cent and with high inflation and deficits persisting well into 1978?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the story from which the hon. gentleman has quoted indicated, that material will not be released to us until later this month.

Mr. Fraser: That's pretty good.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as the OECD figures indicate that a further 75,000 Canadians will be added to the one million out of work already during this year and next, maintaining our lead as the number one OECD major country for unemployment, would the minister indicate if this project is enough to cause him to change his budgetary stance and allow a personal income tax cut in this country which could be afforded if there was more government restraint?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the hon. gentleman, the figures that that reporter has referred to have not yet been made public. Considering the past performance of that particular reporter, I caution all hon. members to consider with care any of his reports in this regard. I will be participating at the OECD meeting and we will be glad to pursue with OECD officials the analysis, not only for Canada but also for the other OECD member countries.

● (1450)

With respect to the concept of the tax cut, I find the hon. gentleman's representation a little hard to understand, since he voted against one just a few weeks ago.

GOVERNMENT BOND ISSUE—EFFECT ON INFLATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, another question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the data released today regarding the $1 billion fresh bond issue put out by the government of Canada, would the minister indicate if he feels it is inflationary or not that the Bank of Canada, which institution is responsible to him, has purchased a net $178 million of that issue which would appear to be monetizing the debt still further?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman really plays both sides of the river. At one point he is critical of the government for not taking reflationary steps, for example by running a higher deficit, and the next minute he is insisting we should cut it down. I wish he would get his stories straight one way or the other.

Mr. Stevens: You will not get away with that, Donald.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—HYDROELECTRIC POWER—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Secretary of State for External Affairs last Monday made a speech in St. John's, Newfoundland, in which he said that the federal government had presented to Newfoundland a "comprehensive package" to develop the hydro power potential of Labrador as a "number one priority" in helping to solve Canada's energy crisis. I ask the minister whether such a comprehensive package has been presented to the government of Newfoundland, and what are the elements of that package? Does it include financing of transmission lines and hydro site work, loans or grants for payment of equity, and does the minister agree that this is a number one priority of the government of Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The principles of the package of benefits and development of generation and transmission of power with respect to Gull Island and with respect to the hydro resources in Newfoundland and Labrador were discussed with the premier and his delegation. At that time it was agreed he would have work done which would be presented to us so that we could take the particular discussion a step further.

Mr. Crosbie: The statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, a senior cabinet minister, is that a comprehensive package to develop the hydro power of Labrador has been presented to the government of Newfoundland. The minister of mines and energy of Newfoundland has said that no comprehensive package for the development of Labrador hydroelectric power has been presented to the province by Ottawa. Does the hon. gentleman agree that the Newfoundland minister is correct, that no comprehensive package has been developed, and that his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs has misled the public of Newfoundland by the statement he made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

RETURN OF MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can the Acting Prime Minister advise the House of the approximate date of the return of the Minister of Supply and Services, keeping in mind that there are a number of questions which hon. members would no doubt wish to ask that minister? We would not want to be left in the position of thinking that perhaps the minister's visit to another continent would last beyond the expiration of this session.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): I am sure the Minister of Supply and Services will appreciate the hon. member's desire to have him back in Ottawa. I think he will be back at the end of the week.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACTIONS OF B.C. HYDRO IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED DAMAGE TO ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, to whom I have given notice. In view of the fact that the inland water directorate of the ministry of the environment bears certain responsibilities for the proper conduct of the Columbia River treaty, is the minister aware of the seemingly irresponsible actions of B.C. Hydro in its control of the lake levels on the upper Arrow Lake which have destroyed the beaches of Nakusp, ruined its tourist industry and created massive mud flats which have now, with the prevailing winds, become enormous dust bowls?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): I thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. The question requires an answer in two parts: first, the responsibility of this department and, second, why the upper Arrow Lake is so low. With regard to the first part of the question, under the 1964 Columbia River treaty, B.C. Hydro has been designated as the Canadian entity for the operation of the resource reservoirs in Canada. The Columbia River treaty permanent engineering board is responsible for ensuring that B.C. Hydro's operations are consistent with Canada's international responsibility under the treaty. The inland water directorate of this department provides technical and engineering support to the engineering board.

On the second question regarding the low levels on the upper Arrow Lake, this is due to the very low run-off in southern British Columbia this year because of low winter snow-packs and early spring drought conditions which extended from western Ontario across the prairies to southern B.C. The upper Arrow Lake is a little higher at this time of the year than the low level experienced in 1973, but the situation is still serious.

Mr. Brisco: I thank the minister for his response. I am aware that the snow-packs are unusually low this year, but this has not been reflected in the levels of Kootenay Lake, controlled by IJC. Therefore, I would ask the minister if he is prepared to take action with reference to the interpretation of the Columbia River treaty, and whether perhaps he is considering, or would consider, the possible reopening of the Columbia River treaty to better protect Canadian interests in this regard.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly endeavour to take whatever action we have legal authority to take. As for the suggestion of the hon. member, that is not the sort of thing I would answer "à brûle-pourpoint", as we say in French. I would want to take a look at all the facts.

INDUSTRY

TRANSFER OF WESTINGHOUSE, U.S.A., TO WHITE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It relates to the decision by Westinghouse, U.S.A. to transfer the rights to its name to White Industries rather than CAMCO industries. In view of the fact that the government has been concerned with establishing more Canadian production facilities and a greater rationalization of the appliance industry, and for that purpose has been encouraging the new company, CAMCO, may I ask the minister whether he intends to intervene in this trademark decision or, alternatively, because of the importance of trademarks in regard to Canadian ownership, does he intend to empower FIRA to deal with this critical issue which impedes transfers from foreign to Canadian operations?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with an extremely complex problem, the trade marks issue, and unfortunately it does not look as if I have the power to take any action at this point, since it is considered as a perfectly legal transaction under the present law that Westinghouse sells the right to its name to White Industries. However, we are considering the situation to see whether it might be appropriate to amend our legislation to avoid such a situation in the future.

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, as an indication of the seriousness of this matter, and since the minister has indicated that he is going to study some amendments, may I ask when he will be in a position to announce those amendments or inform the House in this regard?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know when we will be able to make an announcement about these amendments, if there is going to be any. I can only tell the House how concerned I am about this kind of problem which is somewhat changing the trade practice and tradition in Canada.

TRANSPORT

SINKING OF "WILLIAM CARSON"—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which arises out of the very serious charges made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue regarding the sinking of the CN ship the William Carson, whereby the hon. gentleman claimed that the present deployment of icebreakers is scandalous and that the sinking of the William Carson is an example of this deficiency. That is a serious charge, made over a week ago, so I ask the minister if it is his intention to order a judicial inquiry into the circumstances surrounding this sinking.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I need not say that I do not agree with the words quoted by the hon. member, however much I respect their source and his conveying them. I will say, however, that it is our intention to proceed with the recommendation for a judicial inquiry.

SINKING OF "WILLIAM CARSON"—COMPENSATION TO PASSENGERS AND CREW

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question. Is the minister prepared, on behalf of Canadian National, to tell the House if a decision has been made by the company with regard to compensation to the passengers and crew for the belongings they lost through that sinking?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately it is not possible to make a complete statement of the situation at this time. I understand the Canadian National is attempting to deal with individual passengers in relation to their personal belongings, but that some rather more complex questions arise in relation to freight and general cargo that involve legal claims and insurance liability. It may take a while to sort out these matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Davenport rises on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CACCIA—PERMISSION TO APPEND COPIES OF LETTER TO HANSARD

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last night, in a program entitled "Connections", reference was made to representations made by me on behalf of a young constituent of mine, an inmate of Millhaven penitentiary. This morning I went through my file on this young man. I have with me copies of letters I have written to the Solicitor General about this case since 1973. I am seeking, now, the permission of this House to have this correspondence printed and appended to today's Hansard. Mr. Speaker, I believe that by making these letters public, the record would be set straight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As much as the hon. member's suggestion is most worthy in support of the proposition he puts forward and in support of his quite legitimate representations on the matter, it is entirely a departure from our practice to extend to members, even with the consent of the House, the authority to table or append documents to Hansard. That authority rests with ministers, although not always even with them unless the matter falls within their administrative competence.

With respect, I very much fear that despite the very legitimate reasons for this particular request there would be a very grave danger if—even with the consent of the House—a member was entitled to table or append documents to Hansard. Requests to do so would, naturally, increase considerably. I have to take this decision myself. Rather than putting that responsibility, which is a difficult one, upon the House, for I am sure in this particular circumstance no hon. member would want to withhold consent, and rather than putting that extension of our practice upon the House on this occasion, which would invite similar extensions to other members in the future, it seems to me I should, rather, invite the hon. member to make available copies of his correspondence which I am sure explains and supports his position.

We would be happy to arrange for distribution of these through the distribution system of the House of Commons as he desires, and to the press gallery and members of the press including, of course, the CBC which is involved. We will put at his disposal, as we would with any member, whatever services we have to make this distribution effective and immediate. I do not think, however, that I ought to put to the House the choice of extending our practices by appending this correspondence to Hansard or printing in Hansard as if it has been read.

MR. LAWRENCE—CBC PROGRAM ON ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I rise, regretfully, on a question of privilege arising out of the very worth-while and well-intentioned CBC television exposé of internationally organized crime in Canada. I do so at this time mainly because of the reference to this matter by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and to certain purported remarks of mine as broadcast on that program. I rise regretfully because, as I have informed you, Mr. Speaker, I have attempted and am still attempting to get certain information from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation respecting the transcript or the full screening of the old interview they showed last night. I may say I think it is a question of privilege because to my mind it certainly damaged me personally and damaged my effectiveness in this House as a member of parliament. I therefore believe it is a matter of privilege for the House.

First of all, may I say that for all my adult political life I have attempted to fight and expose this human scum, this element in Canada of internationally organized crime, as much as if not more than most other hon. members, because in another jurisdiction I have had the opportunity to attempt to do exactly that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I believe the minister's impression of what he heard last night is shared not only by members of the House but also by many people in this country. I am sure he believes he heard me say that there was no internationally organized crime in this country, in this province or indeed, in metropolitan Toronto. Of course, that is exactly opposite to the impression I attempted to give in the statement I made which was filmed in early 1972 by the CBC and other media in this country. It was exactly the opposite because at that time, prior to the death of Magaddino in Buffalo, and certainly long after the New York family had well established itself in Montreal and had been extending its control and jurisdiction into the French-speaking areas of the province of Ontario, I was attempting to use that office at that time to impress upon the law enforcement agencies, the government of which I was a member, other governments and the people of this country and especially southern Ontario, that many elements of crime were already under United States influence, internationally organized crime.

That film clip that you saw last night on the CBC was a very small segment of a larger statement that I made at that time. The longer statement was to the effect that internationally organized crime was well established in Canada and in Ontario at that time. I also indicated, in that statement, certain moves, certain procedures and certain governmental organization at both the federal and provincial levels that I thought should be taken to cure this sickness that we had then, and still have, in this country.

I feel that even though I have asked the CBC to screen the whole of that statement or at least to give me the transcript of that statement—and so far they have not been able to do that—nevertheless, that small film clip last night was taken far out of context and damaged me to the extent that if they do not provide me with that full statement I may have to take the matter up outside the jurisdiction of this House by proceeding on other grounds. I shall obtain legal advice in that respect. I feel that program damaged my reputation so much that it affects my capabilities in this House. I would, therefore, like to move, if I may, that the matter of the reference in that CBC program last night as it pertained to me be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that I may have an opportunity of clearing what I think is the very great stigma that attaches to my reputation and to my name.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. The hon. member, in raising the matter of the CBC, made reference to my use of the CBC clip. Obviously, that was the only information before me and before the others. He has in this House given a full explanation of his position on that matter, which I accept unreservedly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The questions of privilege raised by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) raise, again, the question of the relationship between membership in the House of Commons and the press, and a further, more complex and additional relationship, that of a question of privilege respecting the proceedings of the House and the right of members in regard to the special relationship among members of the House and the freedom of the press generally. We have now in abeyance, under my considered study, two other questions relating to the same problem. In respect of both I will, as I will in respect of this matter, attempt to render a decision tomorrow afternoon.

Hon. Donald S. ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY OF MIDDLESEX-LONDON-LAMBTON

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-422, respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Condon: Mr. Speaker, I present this bill to the House because of certain changes to be made to the new riding and representations for changing its boundaries. These would change the riding from one which is partially rural in make-up to one which encompasses a large part of the city of London. For that reason I bring this bill forward in the House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AEROSOL SPRAYS

Question No. 2,076—Mr. Howie:

1. Have government studies been published regarding the effects of propellant gasses used in aerosol sprays and, if so, what was the finding in each case?

2. Have measures been taken to control, limit or prohibit the sale of products using propellant gasses and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of the Environment is concerned: 1. Yes. The report by the Atmospheric Environment Service Advisory Committee on Stratospheric Pollution, dealing with the effect of chlorofluorocarbons on the ozone layer, was tabled in the House of Commons in December 1976. The report concludes that "the scientific evidence is sufficiently strong to warrant the government making a decision on regulation of chlorofluorocarbons" and that "if scientific evidence were the only consideration, the committee would recommend immediate regulations to achieve a significant reduction in fluorocarbon release rates".

2. The minister announced in December that the government will move immediately to phase down the use of fluorocarbons F 11 and 12 in Canada. Industry has begun voluntarily to reduce by one half the consumption of F 11 and 12 in the aerosol industry. Regulations will be developed which would prohibit non-essential uses of F 11 and 12 in aerosol products in 1978.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: 1. Results of a study carried out for the Health Protection Branch by a consulting laboratory indicated no adverse effects to housewives using a large number of aerosol products for a period of six weeks. These results were published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal in July 1974.

2. An interdepartmental ad hoc group of experts is studying all facets of aerosol products containing F 11 and F 12 fluorocarbons. Industry has agreed to decrease by one-half their usage of such materials during 1977, and all but essential uses of fluorocarbons as aerosol propellants will be phased out by December 1978.

FEDERAL COAL MINE INSPECTORS

Question No. 2,175—Mr. Stevens:

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, what was the number of federal employees engaged to inspect coal mines?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned: (a) Nil. (b) 3.

In so far as the Department of Labour is concerned: (a) Mine inspections were carried out for Labour Canada under contract with department of mines of Nova Scotia. (b) Four federal government employees were engaged in inspection of coal mines of Cape Breton Development Corporation. In addition, there were: one chief inspector, one laboratory technician and two support employees. Notwithstanding the above reply, most mining activities in Canada are within provincial jurisdiction.

MR. GABRIEL BELAND

Question No. 2,382—Mr. Fortin:

Did Mr. Gabriel Beland, Director General of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, in the Quebec area, tell some close associates that he had to get rid of the UIC workers' union president for the Quebec Chapter, Mr. Robert Goyette, because the latter was a dangerous revolutionary?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No.

IMMIGRANTS FROM ANGOLA

Question No. 2,469—Mr. Caccia:

How many immigrants, whose last or second last country of residence was Angola, have arrived in Canada since 1974?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): One thousand ninety five immigrants, whose country of last permanent residence was Angola, have arrived in Canada since 1974. Statistics are not kept on the second last country of residence of immigrants.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHARGES FOR USE OF AIRPORTS, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-40, to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at one o'clock I had been quoting an excellent letter written by a constituent, an aviation consultant. So excellent was the letter and so much on point that I felt impelled to read it into the record. I shall continue reading, as follows:

Subsection 3 would provide that all charges imposed upon the owners or operators (pilots) of aircraft would constitute a lien upon the aircraft in respect of which charges have been incurred and may be collected by the seizure and sale of the aircraft under a warrant or order of the federal court.

I am pleased to see that the minister finally has realized that this country still has courts of law. Notwithstanding, legislation incorporating this proposed amendment would give Transport Canada horrendous power. During the past several years, the number of erroneously-charged landing fee charges which many pilots have received is appalling, many of which have been due to incorrect registrations being recorded. What protection does the owner/operator/pilot have in such cases? Absolutely none. There isn't even stipulated processes for appeal. No, you can just see it coming: an owner/operator/pilot fails to pay his $1.50 landing fee, the RCMP seize the aircraft concerned and in the process damage it, an experience which many complain of today with the problems caused by legislated faulty ELT's, and place the aircraft up for auction. The owner attempts to rectify the situation when it turns out that the charge was wrongly made, but his only recourse at that point is through the courts, at his own expense. Our convicted criminals seem to enjoy more rights than that.

At the present time, there are due processes of law concerning the establishment of liens against chattels to which all Canadian citizens and corporations must adhere. I suggest that the government may not be allowed to set itself up as a law unto itself. Rather, this subsection 3 should not be permitted.

Subsection 4 would allow for the automatic attraction of interest at the rate of one and one-half per cent per month, calculated from the day that is one month after the date on which the charges were imposed.

Notwithstanding the automatic contractual obligations to which owners/operators/pilots would be subscribing to under this proposed legislation should they make use of any DOT facilities for which a user-charge is associated—the legality of which may have to be contested in the courts—what happens to all of the securities deposited with the minister as set out in subsection 2? Is the minister prepared to pay each owner/operator/pilot monthly interest at the same rate on the deposit? And what about the administrative requirements to handle these matters? What is the additional cost that will ultimately be passed along as another user-charge to establish offices across the country to keep track of every deposit, every user-charge, every lien, the cancellation of each lien as the accounts are settled, and the processing of seizure and sale of the hundreds of aircraft? One more excuse to further the government's self-indulgence and self-justification.

● (1520)

Next we come, on page 2, to section 5.2 which would permit the establishment of regulations that would require private aircraft owners and operators (pilots) to subscribe for and carry liability insurance. I certainly agree that third party liability insurance is a very important and common-sense thing for owners/operators/pilots to have, but I would be very interested in the numbers of such owners/operators/pilots who do not now have such coverage. I suggest that it would be an extremely small percentage of persons, and therefore, Transport Canada should be required, firstly, to substantiate this proposed legislation with factual evidence, including full details about accidents and insurance statistics that might support the minister's claim. And, what kind of level of insurance would we be talking about here? Enough to cover the claims if an accident occurred between a private aircraft and a 747?

[Mr. Speaker.]

You know, on our navigable waterways, lakes and rivers, you see kids and irresponsible adults—a vast majority of whom have never had any instruction in small boat handling—playing the fool with high-powered single and twin-engine inboards and outboards. Most of them do not even know and do not care about the rules of the road. What about their liability? Federal jurisdiction prevails there, too, but you do not have to bother answering that question because we all know what the answer would be. The small boat manufacturers and operators is such a large group of voters which the government doesn't want to lose, just like the case two years ago with the then new 10 per cent excise tax. Hit the aircraft owners, but exempt the boats because the latter's lobby is too strong. Heck, it's the private aircraft which can and is providing the alternative viable form of fast and economical transportation, not the small boats.

Further, on page 2, under paragraph 4, reference is made to the proposed licensing of persons engaged in the design of aircraft and the premises in which that design takes place. Every community college and university in this country with an approved engineering technology or undergraduate or graduate course might well be considered to come under such legislation. What about the innovative inventor? Before he even starts to "design" from his ideas, must he apply for a licence first? Of course not, but some over-reactive official is sure to come along one day and then what? Later in this section, you will also find reference to proposed licensing requirements for premises used in the maintenance of aeronautical products for the purpose of determining the airworthiness of such products. The law already prescribes for the licensing standards of maintenance/engineering personnel, but is it now going to be that a farmer must license his barn in which he hangars his Piper J-3 in order that routine maintenance work may be carried out on his aircraft on his premises by an already-licensed engineer? A little absurd, perhaps, but that is what might well take place under proposed amendment.

Despite the obvious new restrictions and legislative controls that these proposed amendments would put into effect, it is amazing that nowhere does the Bill C-40 provide for a route of appeal. If a citizen does not like a decision or action which may have been taken against him arbitrarily, to whom does he appeal? The current sad situation with respect to medicals is a prime example. Do we always have to resort to the Federal Court of Appeal Act under section 28 with all of its associated expense? If so, then rest assured, the aviation community is sick and tired of having new and more expensive legislations rammed down its throat, and the moment that we can find just cause under any implied contract which may be deemed to exist if this Bill goes through, we will consider every possible recourse of action, including the initiation of class action suits.

On pages 5 through 9, you will find amendments proposed in respect of the jurisdiction over protection of areas adjacent to airports. Some of these articles may be considered worthwhile, and although I have not sufficient background that allows me to comment vis-à-vis the provincial and municipal jurisdictions in these matters, this part should be examined carefully because finally, we may get some common sense zoning regulations for lands and buildings located around airports.

Following these matters, on page 9, we find the long-awaited reference to the board of inquiry! Regrettably, despite the grammatical change, there is really no change. When are we going to get an independent and proper board of inquiry for aircraft accidents that will not be tied to the apronstrings of the Ministry of Transport, oftentimes susceptible to Transport Canada influence? This is long overdue, and the proposed amendment here accomplishes nothing but a little housecleaning.

Mr. Kempling, this proposed legislation under Bill C-40 has too many items in it of contentious issue, items that would provide Transport Canada with increased, autonomous powers that may not be used to further and promote the growth of aviation in this country. I request that you, as my representative in Ottawa, do everything to see that it is defeated.

Thank you for consideration of these matters.

I thank the House for its indulgence in allowing me to read that letter into the record. If hon. members have an opportunity to reread it tomorrow, they will see that many of the points contained in the letter are valid and should be considered. We want this bill referred to a committee. We want witnesses called to deal with the areas of concern about which many members have spoken. Those in the aviation industry who wish to present briefs and make representations should be permitted to appear before the committee.

I understand that difficulties have been experienced with four air carriers with regard to the collection of fees for services. The minister's solution to this seems to be to require all pilots and owners of aircraft to fall under the umbrella of these charges even though the difficulty was only experienced with four air carriers. That is most regrettable. It is a further example of overkill and will have an extremely detrimental effect on aviation in Canada.

There are other members who wish to speak on this bill and bring forward other points of interest. I will yield the floor to them at this time. I just want to state that when this matter comes before the committee, as I am sure it will, we will be adamant with regard to having witnesses and briefs presented from those in the aviation industry who will be affected by this bill. We will endeavour to amend it and change it in such a way that it will not be detrimental to the Canadian aviation industry. If left in its present form, I am afraid it will have a rough passage.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on second reading of Bill C-40, a bill which gives to the minister and his officials much greater powers to improve regional air services, such as Montreal-Mirabel, but I must say that very few clauses in this bill promote the establishment of airports in remote areas like the Gaspé peninsula, northern Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments contained in this bill give much more power to the minister and his officials to give a negative answer to realistic projects that may come from some municipalities. The current situation of runways in the Gaspé peninsula does not allow for an adequate service. The length of runways and the lack of sufficient navigation aids result in many delays and flight cancellations in Gaspé and Sainte-Anne-des-Monts as well. The regional air carrier for Gaspé, Quebecair, had to cancel 12 per cent of its flights in 1976 because of bad weather conditions.

Since 1974, Department of Transport officials and even ministers have been stating that the federal government will provide for the financing of the 6,000-foot extension of the runway in Gaspé and that this runway will be provided with facilities and with better navigational aids. In 1977, the same officials of the Department of Transport say that according to the existing regulations, the present site does not meet the security standards for navigation and that after having invested $1.5 million for building an airport and an air terminal we should try to find another site.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Department of Transport is perhaps the only one among all departments here in Ottawa which is so independent that it can see to its own operations without consulting people or experts from outside. The department submits regulations, has them passed by Parliament, applies these regulations and no independent body has in any way the right to interfere in their files. In one word, as the scouts said before, this department is taboo.

The Chamber of Commerce of Gaspé, in a brief presented on April 1977, states this, and I shall quote a few parts from it:

> Following the representations which have been made for the last six years for a 6,000-foot extension to the runway in Gaspé airport, it appears to us necessary to inform the Minister of Transport of the results of some research and to formulate once again our requests.
> We will give you first some data on the previous studies on the establishment of an airport in Gaspé. We will then give you the results of the test flights which have been made to check the conditions of air navigation in the immediate vicinity of the present runway. Finally we will formulate our requests for the immediate future.

In its previous studies, the Gaspé Chamber of Commerce states that the plans were accepted in 1952. Other plans were also developed and signed by the department; the land survey took place in 1965. Moreover, an expropriation plan and a development plan were set up in 1965 and 1969 respectively.

The brief states further:

> What is to be inferred from these works?
>
> We cannot resign ourselves to admitting that federal Department of Transport engineers approved these development and construction plans for an airport without making use of the proper site.
>
> If such were the case, the people of the Gaspé area should not be penalized because of these actions.
> The land surveys, as well as the development, expropriation and construction plans to which we have referred indicate that the current site of the landing strip, without being ideal, is quite adequate and improvable.

Mr. Speaker, I could talk for hours about our air services in Gaspé, but I find it rather disappointing, and the population too, to see all those conflicting reports which have been submitted for 10 years, and while the competence of department officials cannot be questioned, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that before making a consistent decision on all those files the minister should seek advice and ask for some assessments by independent consultants.

Gaspé is over 500 miles away from large centres like Montreal, and we have been waiting for years for the federal government to take action and give a better service to our people. How is it possible that people still trust a department which has been submitting conflicting reports for 10 years now? I feel it is incumbent on the minister, with the powers he will derive from this new bill, Bill C-40 now under study, that from time to time he seek consultants' advice to assess whether regulations or regulations enforcement are consistent with reality. We doubt whether some officials could have been overzealous to the point that they have shelved certain projects which our people had called for many years. On this, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude.

● (1530)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill. It is one which I believe to be considerably more important than one might think at first blush. If there is any form of transport which is regulated or overregulated, it must be air transport. There seem to be commissions and regulatory bodies extending throughout its operations, and the bill before us further increases the scope and power of those who make decisions. Above all, it increases the power of the minister to intervene.

I think the measure should certainly go to committee in order to give us an opportunity to hear further explanations of the way in which it will operate and also, in particular, to hear representations from the people likely to be affected. I should like to comment on the clause which has to do with zoning, having run into these circumstances in a small way in connection with one of the airports in my riding. The present method of zoning leaves much to be desired. Little guidance is offered to those directly concerned. Numerous restrictions may be imposed, sometimes without explanation it would seem, and those upon whom the rules are imposed often find them onerous and difficult to understand. It would appear that if this bill passes, the owner of any type of airplane, even if he keeps it in his own garage, will have to hold a permit and that he may, if he files a flight plan, be liable to pay certain fees. This is on the ground that he is using government services and therefore a charge should be made.

In my area a considerable number of people are flying—so-called flying farmers—who use their flying machines for pleasure and for business purposes. The problem of crop spraying has become important. This seems to be a dangerous type of flying. There always seem to be a few pilots killed every year. One was killed just last week in the interlake country of Manitoba when he was crop-spraying. There is also the problem of the incompetence of flyers in dealing with pesticides and herbicides which are used by them. This is being regulated partly at the provincial level. There is a statute at that level which will soon be promulgated, and no one will be able to fly while crop-spraying without having attended a provincial course on the use of pesticides and herbicides. This is a step in the right direction in that the business of herbicides is very important.

I would like to turn to the bill at page 10 under clause 7 where it mentions the rule of the Canadian Transport Commission on licensing for proposed scheduled commercial air service and also for proposed commercial air service without a schedule. This is important and is coming to the fore at this time, because we are finding a good deal of competition between our airlines in Canada. There is widespread unrest among our airlines and a feeling that Air Canada, having 75 per cent of the cross-country passengers by regulation, is not working in the interests of air travel in this country. This is being particularly voiced in western Canada. This rule that 75 per cent of all passengers across the country must go by Air Canada is working against the best interests of the competing airlines and is not all that successful for Air Canada because it is in the red, as well. One of the important comments which was reported on the CBC not so long ago is as follows:

> In a vignette offered on Air Canada recently by the CBC radio program, the Royal Canadian Air Force, in a sturdy voice declaimed, "When you hear nasty things which put down our national airline, then stand up straight and tall and proud and demand in a loud, clear voice so all can hear: Do you know where my luggage is?"

This is indicative of our feelings on the service Air Canada has given. Air Canada has often been, seemingly, in charge of the negotiations of the Department of Transport. This was evident some time ago when the transporter routes were allocated between Canada and the United States. The allocation of those transporter routes, wherein Air Canada received all but one, has certainly made other airlines very bitter. Their feeling is that an airline with a government-supported monopoly and charged to the Department of Transport is not the best thing. In my province of Manitoba, Transair president Arthur Mauro said:

> "It seems pretty well it's what Air Canada wants that determines what the cabinet decides."
> Mauro said that shutting out Winnipeg-based Transair from the hope for trans-border routes—which went to American carriers has resulted in "the most tragic lack of Canadian carrier participation in the central Canadian-U.S. traffic".
> Transair wanted to serve Denver, Chicago, Minneapolis, and Milwaukee but the government "did not even have the courtesy of placing our request before the Americans", he added.

At the other end of the country, Mr. Robert Chartland, the public affairs director of Quebecair, said:

> We're really disappointed—maybe we'll have our turn one of these days.

This details some of the problems we have with many regulatory bodies in Canada. We have an airline which we protect through the government and we are restricting privately-owned airlines which give competition to that airline. I would hope we would have this bill in committee and have important and knowledgeable briefs from people who know what this means. I would like to make sure we do not in any way impede or curtail private airlines and small private operators which have contributed so much to the development of aviation in this country.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is with some regret that I rise once again to express my views about the absence of radar at Victoria international airport. I seem to be getting nowhere with a problem which has been bothering me since the beginning of this year. I should refer to the first clause of this bill which grants the power to construct and maintain all government aerodromes and airports, including all plant machinery and buildings necessary for their efficient equipment and upkeep. I am referring to the plant required for the efficient equipment and upkeep of an international airport.

As long ago as January of this year I raised this question. Actually, I raised it in September of 1976, so it has been standing almost a year now. I had a special cause to raise it again in January because of an incident which occurred when I was aboard an aircraft leaving Victoria international airport bound for Vancouver. On a number of occasions since then I have asked what is required to trigger an inquiry into an incident—I put "incident" here in quotation marks—affecting two aircraft in the area.

Perhaps there should be some automatic triggering mechanism which would cause an inquiry to be made. I would have thought that when either a controller or a pilot of an aircraft involved in an incident—and I am sure they all make reports of these incidents which occur during their flights—uses the words "collision", "near collision", "possible collision" or "near miss" in his report, and when that report reaches the superintendent of air safety, that would cause an inquiry into that particular incident to be made. I would have thought this inquiry would bring together the visual records and the accounts from the taped flight-deck electronic equipment to determine whether there were means of avoiding a recurrence of incidents of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, you were not with us when we approached Victoria international airport at the end of May. A group of parliamentarians from this House and the other place were on board a service aircraft. As we reached my riding, I felt it would be courteous for me to rise and welcome my colleagues to my riding. I informed them that they did not have to worry, that they would soon be within binocular range of the airport and that we would be brought down safely. There was no problem at all; it was a clear day. However, as soon as I used the word "binocular" in connection with the landing of that aircraft, a prominent member on the government side asked, "Are you suggesting that there is no radar at Victoria international airport? That upset me deeply because there has been correspondence, questions in this House and bills relating to air navigation. I have spoken on the "late show" and I have endeavoured by every conceivable means to bring this lack to the attention of the minister and to have him rectify a situation which I think is inexcusable.

I think it is worth mentioning to the minister, since he is here this afternoon, that there have been other incidents since. If I remember correctly, one occurred during the stay of a Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group in Victoria. The incident occurred over Active Pass. The incident involved a scheduled flight of a float-plane from Victoria harbour to Vancouver harbour. It was a very near miss. I am not suggesting that these flights be directed from the ground. That is not the point of my reiterating this plea. The point is that the pilots who are in the air should be informed of what else is in the air so that they may know what is above them, below them, to one side, crossing their path or otherwise in the general area of their flight.

This particular incident took place when the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group was meeting in Victoria during the last weekend in May. I understand that the separation was something in the order of 100 feet, which is very close. It is much too close for comfort. Those who were on board the aircraft were distressed to learn that there was no radar which could have informed the pilot of the aircraft that there was another aircraft in the area. I am informed that the area between Active Pass and Victoria is within the control area of the control tower at Victoria international airport.

It is asking quite a lot to ask the controllers in that tower to cover the 360 degrees around the tower to the depth that is required for the distance from the tower to Active Pass and to identify all aircraft flying in that area in order to notify other aircraft that are approaching or transiting. This is one other matter which is neglected by the minister. I see that he has left the House. Perhaps his officials will make a record of some of these comments. I hope they bring them to the attention of the minister and to the safety committee.

It is not just traffic in and out of Victoria international airport which concerns me. Traffic transiting through the air space above and around that control area, perhaps on its way from Portland or Seattle to Alaska, concerns me as well. I agree that that traffic is generally very high, but incidents could occur which could cause those aircraft to descend into the paths of aircraft which are doing normal scheduled flights, practice flights or sport flights in and out of the Victoria international airport.

Therefore, I appeal once again on the ground of absolute traffic requirements that surveillance radar be placed in Victoria international airport to cover the contingencies which could arise because of transiting traffic in that general area. I am not talking about IFR, I am talking about VFR, and I am aware that it is up to the pilots to avoid problems. It is not up to the controllers to cause separation, under VFR; I know that. That is not the point. However, the pilot should know what else is in the air. He should be informed that there might be an aircraft which has a capacity to fly at a certain rate, travelling on a certain course, at a certain height, and which is likely to be very near the path of another aircraft. These two facts can be taken into account by the pilots, and can avoid collision.

Let us not forget that sometimes our commercial pilots who after long flights are just landing at the Victoria international airport are fatigued, and their reaction might not be as hasty as it should be. I thank them for their speed of reaction on January 21, 1977, when a collision was avoided, and again I ask, if the word "collision" appears in the report—and I can swear that it did—why was there not an inquiry into that incident?

I am not attempting to have IVR control taken over from Vancouver—they do it very effectively—but the fact remains that IVR control in Victoria has had to proceed with the same number of personnel, despite the near doubling of traffic in and out of that airport. I suggest that a surveillance radar, properly positioned and feeding into a screen in the control tower, would provide the missing security link which is needed to give absolute assurance to the controllers and the crews of the aircraft, and of course to the passengers, that is so essential for a security record of which Canada can be proud. We must maintain it.

One other comment is that we must get this bill quickly to committee where we could have witnesses to inquire into matters such as I am raising here today, and also into other much more mundane matters affecting the territory of airports. I refer to the security fence. It is almost a dead issue. It was built half way around the airport and, despite a good many objections that were raised locally, it does nothing to increase the security of the airport in cases of hijacking because it is only half way around. I thought the whole thing had been forgotten, but then I learned last week end that one of the fields granted by the Department of Transport and the airport manager to a community group as a soccer field has now been divided down the middle by that useless fence.

I secured the permission of the minister and of the manager of the airport to have that soccer field left free so that the children of the community could have a place where they could gather on lovely days such as we have today, or even on wet days, to play soccer. Now I find that the only large area available to them for that purpose has been virtually destroyed by the building of a fence right down the middle of it.

When the bill goes to committee I will have some evidence brought forward respecting these two matters, and the power that the minister is exercising, or ought not to exercise except after he has taken into account the needs and requirements of the users of the airport.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the last time I spoke when you were in the chair we were also talking about aircraft, only it was the transportation of parrots to Yugoslavia. However, I find that the air regulations in Canada, especially northern Manitoba, are about as obsolete and out of date as they are in Yugoslavia.

Coming from northern and central Manitoba I must point out that airports are our lifelines because we do not have road systems in the north and we depend entirely on aircraft for transportation of people to the large centres, transportation of children attending school, and transportation of food supplies to the various communities. Over the last 20 years we have seen an increase in air travel throughout northern and central Manitoba to the extent that we now have approximately ten different airlines flying in the area, some of them serving the smaller communities and others serving the larger communities such as The Pas, Flin Flon, Thompson, Churchill, and Gillam. Those are larger communities that had airports prior to 20 years ago.

However, in 1966 the then premier of Manitoba, Duff Roblin, said that on Manitoba's centennial, which was in 1970, every community of over 100 people would have an emergency airport. This would consist of a landing strip which would measure some 2,000 feet long, be approximately 350 feet wide, and would be classed as an emergency airstrip. This emergency airstrip program got under way and was nearly completed by 1970. There was an emergency airstrip in each community.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

We found that we had revolutionized travel in northern and central Manitoba to the extent that wheel equipped aircraft were circulating these airstrips before they were completed. Prior to the landing strips being built, aircraft only equipped with floats could land on the lakes, and aircraft equipped with skis in the winter could land on frozen lakes. They were the only means of transportation. This resulted in long periods in the spring, called break up in the north—this is the breaking up of ice—and in the fall, when aircraft could not land. In many instances the medical requirements of these communities were not available. Of course in later years helicopters were used to transport patients out to nearby hospitals. However, the airstrips in northern Manitoba have been brought up to a standard so that even the Department of Transport recognizes some of them.

The biggest problem that we are experiencing right now is that, of the 25 airports in Manitoba, the federal government will only recognize five or six. The remaining airports operate under the restrictions of the Department of Transport with regard to the size of aircraft that can use these airports, the type of licences given to these particular airports, and so on. This brings me to the point where I really feel I must speak on Bill C-40, and once it is in committee we hope there will be sufficient witnesses to bring us up to date on exactly what is happening in air transport with regard to isolated and inland areas of Canada.

Some months ago Transair sold out to Pacific Western Airlines and a portion of their company, called Midwest Aviation, was sold, or is in the process of being sold, to Perimeter Aviation of Winnipeg. What took place is a real mystery so far as other operators in Manitoba are concerned because we have people like Taylor Airways operating out of a place called Gods Lake Narrows, who have serviced that community for 15 years, not always with wheel equipped aircraft but, prior to that, with ski equipped aircraft in winter and float equipped aircraft in summer, to fly people out during emergencies, to fly trappers out to their trap lines and fishermen out to the various lakes where they fish commercially in the summer time, and also to transport their fish to the market. What has happened is that now that the Midwest portion of Transair has been sold to Perimeter Aviation there is some agreement between Perimeter Aviation, Midwest and CTC that seems to dictate that if they buy Midwest they will want all the flying rights to the northeastern portion of Manitoba which is presently being serviced not only by Taylor Airways out of Gods Lake Narrows but by St. Andrews Airways out of Island Lake. Incidentally, St. Andrews fly approximately 3,000 passengers a year out of Island Lake, St. Theresa, Wasaganac and Red Sucker. The total population of those four small communities is approximately 2,500 people.

The problem arises when one aircraft company wants to take over a particular area of northern and central Manitoba. The company we are talking about that is planning to do this is Winnipeg Airlines. It is based in Winnipeg, whereas Taylor Aircraft is based in the community of Gods Lake Narrows, and St. Andrews Airways Ltd. is based 25 miles outside Winnipeg. St. Andrews Airways Ltd. applied to the CTC for permission to operate out of Winnipeg International Airport and was turned down. This is an inconvenience to the people who fly into Island Lake and St. Theresa Point. This is approximately 300 miles, and then of course they have to pay additional costs to get out to the St. Andrews airstrip. This poses problems for the aircraft company as it means they cannot be competitive with other companies that operate out of the Winnipeg International Airport. After the application was refused by the CTC, St. Andrews Airways Ltd. received a cease and desist order which limited them to operating out of St. Andrews.

The ironic thing is that the St. Andrews airport is of limited size, and St. Andrews Airways Ltd. is using aircraft that are the maximum allowable size for operating in that area. I feel that heavy duty aircraft are not safe to operate there with loads of passengers. The company has given excellent service to the people of Island Lake over the years, and it should be remembered that these people have no other means of transportation. I cannot see the rationale behind refusing St. Andrews Airways Ltd. permission to fly out of Winnipeg International Airport. There seems to be a move afoot to eliminate all the small operators in northern and central Manitoba and to give the business to one big company.

Taylor Airways have four aircraft that operate entirely out of Gods Lake Narrows. They employ local people, and money is spent in the community. This is the kind of operation we should have in the north, and we are not satisfied with only the larger companies operating our transport system.

Air Canada is a good example of a large company running at a deficit. I can see the same thing happening if we turn all the business over to other larger companies. We should keep some of the small operators who provide excellent service to the community.

Cross Lake Airways operates out of Wabowden, Manitoba, and provides excellent service to Cross Lake and Norway House. These little airways that operate in the north do not fight with each other; each has its own base of operation and they all provide good service, so I think we should leave them alone. They are subject to the same regulations as anyone else; their aircraft have to be up to standard and they have to meet the regulations. I am sure a larger company would have difficulty meeting their standard of service. The fact that an aircraft is sitting in the community day and night, and is there in the event of a serious accident, means that the people do not have to call out on the two-way radio to Winnipeg for an aircraft. In a lot of cases an aircraft might not arrive from Winnipeg until the next morning, but when there is one in the community an emergency is taken care of immediately. The bush pilots know the terrain and how to operate under conditions peculiar to the north.

Aero Trades operates out of Oxford House with a small aircraft, and Calm Air Ltd. operates out of Lynn Lake and Thompson into other small communities. I do not think it is sensible to replace these small operators with a larger air carrier.

Judging by the regulations imposed by the Department of Transport over the last few years, it would almost seem as if the department is jealous of the fact that in 1966 Manitoba built airstrips in remote communities that were not serviced by other means. A good example of the strict regulations imposed by the department is found at the Oxford House airstrip. Five others were closed, but Oxford House was left. The departmental engineers went up there for 24 hours and then issued a report saying that the airstrip was not suitable for particular types of aircraft. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in safety, but we must realize that all airstrips in the north cannot be equipped with radar. When we talk about IFR in the north we joke that it means "I follow the railway" or "I follow the river" because the isolated communities just do not have the modern IFR systems.

After 1967 the Oxford House airstrip was hampered by regulations. Apparently only one type of aircraft could operate there. The province of Manitoba was responsible for doing the work on the airstrip required by the report from the Department of Transport—the building had to be moved, the airstrip lengthened and widened, a certain type of aggregate put on it, and many other things that could not be done in one year because the heavy equipment required was not available.

There were two years when the community could not be served on a regular basis by a certain classification of air carrier. Then out of the blue, some four months ago, the Oxford House airstrip received a clean bill of health from the inspectors. It may be that the inspectors had changed and finally there was somebody who could relate to the north and the development taking place there. Now the community is serviced with a regular schedule. There are three flights a week into the community and the people do not have to charter a plane every time they want to leave.

Why should the community of Oxford House have gone without regular air service for two years? The buildings were not first moved in accordance with the stipulation of the inspector visiting the area, and to my recollection the airstrip was not extended. A bit of gravel was put on it, which would be helpful on a wet day. But most airstrips in that part of the country are frozen solid seven months out of 12, and some are located in regions of permafrost. This community suffered two years because it was said its airstrip did not meet Department of Transport standards. Then, out of the clear blue sky, the community got a clean bill of health and was told its airstrip was adequate for bigger aircraft.

We must watch air transport developments in the north closely. We do not want large operators shoving our smaller operators aside and taking all their business, for we need small operators in many remote communities which can only be serviced adequately by small operators operating a few small aircraft. People want to be reassured they can fly their sick children to hospital. Many small communities are served by small nursing stations, but their staff is not qualified to handle major emergencies.

When the bill is in committee I hope witnesses will appear to say what is happening in the field of air traffic in northern Manitoba, indeed, all across the north. It seems that the Department of Transport people look jealously on Manitoba's program these past few years to develop airstrips in remote places. That this has happened at all is owing to the forward thinking of Duff Roblin in 1966 who said every remote community of 100 or more should be equipped with an emergency airstrip. We have grown, and the department should keep up to date with developments in the north. It should know how important small aircraft companies operating several aircraft are to remote communities, and how they provide those communities with services they need.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on Bill C-40. A previous speaker read into the record a letter an aircraft consultant sent him, a letter which said many of the things I want to say.

In my particular part of the country we have many small aircraft owners and many flying farmers. They own and fly small aircraft sometimes for pleasure; often they use them for crop spraying, or for going to a larger centre to pick up repair parts for farm machinery. Most of their flying is done from an airstrip on the farm, or from a small airport not operated by DOT. From time to time they occasionnally use Department of Transport facilities.

I am particularly concerned about clause 2 of the bill which gives the minister authority to impose charges on the owners and operators of aircraft. It says the governor in council may imposes charges with respect to "any facility or service provided by the minister or on his behalf for or in respect of any aircraft during flight . . ." That is a broad section and needs clarifying. Does it mean that if a pilot of a small aircraft calls a DOT aerodrome for a weather report, he will be charged for that service; or if he calls the control tower for a bearing, to check his position in relation to the airport, he will be charged for that service?

Perhaps there is nothing wrong with the user-pay concept in general but, for owners of small aircraft, I wonder.

Reading Clause 2, I note that the owner or operator of an aircraft will need to deposit each year with the minister "security in the form of a bond or letter of credit . . ." Further, all charges imposed upon the owners or operators of aircraft constitute a lien upon the aircraft. This means that if the charge is not paid, the aircraft could be seized and sold for payment of the charge.

Many private pilots and flying farmers use Department of Transport facilities perhaps only once or twice a year. I don't know what the charge will be—perhaps it will vary from $1.50 to $3. Every time one of these small aircraft pilots uses the service, it will have been recorded. The Department will need to set up an administration to do this, either at some central location in the west, or down east. Each time a pilot uses a service, it will be recorded. The question is, how much will it cost to administer the system for recording every instance a small aircraft pilot uses a DOT facility—when he may run up a bill of, say, $5? In addition the pilot will need to file a bond or letter of credit each year. I assume someone will have to check out those letters of credit to make sure they are valid. In cases where no security is filed, the department will need to institute some follow-up procedure. I visualize a burgeoning bureaucracy for recording such charges and collecting fees from pilots and operators, and it seems to me that the administration costs will exceed greatly any revenue the Department of Transport may collect for these services.

The minister should reconsider those provisions applying to private owners or flying farmers and make an exemption in their case. Granted, the language of the bill does not go into great detail. I therefore hope, when the minister or his officials appear before the committee, we shall see some clarification of various clauses.

Another clause which gives me some concern is the one which requires the licensing of facilities where aircraft are being serviced or repaired. This might be necessary in cases where a commercial operation is being carried on. However, on the face of this clause, it appears as though an individual who has repair work carried out in his own hangar on his farm would be required to have his facilities licensed.

I can think of one particular individual who lives in the vicinity of Moose Jaw, a flying farmer who refurbishes antique aircraft. He is a qualified engineer. All the work is done on his own farm by himself. Does he need to have the building in which this work is carried out licensed? That would be a ridiculous situation. I can understand the requirement for licensing aero engineers or air-frame engineers. However, to require the licensing of a particular building where the work is carried out is rather ridiculous.

Clause 3 also gives me some concern. It requires owners or operators of aircraft to carry liability insurance. Most owners and operators of private aircraft do in fact carry liability insurance. I do not know the reason for this clause. It may be to ensure that those operators who are the exception to the rule have insurance coverage. Surely the bill should state the extent of the coverage required. This will be done by regulation, however.

This bill is typical of most legislation that comes before the House. It is in general terms. The meat of the legislation, what you need to know, will be put into law by regulations that do not come before the House. Members will not have the opportunity to discuss, debate, and receive feedback from their constituents. This is one of the faults of this bill, as with many other bills that come before this House.

I look forward to seeing this bill in committee. Hopefully when the minister appears he will give a detailed explanation of the various clauses or, alternatively, the members of his department will do that. This bill should remain in committee long enough so that interested pilots, operators, and groups will have an opportunity to make representations, whether verbal or by way of written brief, to the committee. I repeat, I look forward to seeing this bill being discussed in committee in the near future.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-40 I do so with two distinct interests. The first is with regard to Clause 2 which appears on page one of this bill. It refers to the misnomer "user pay" which the government uses so often. I suggest it is a misnomer because the government very carefully never defines what the user is going to be expected to pay with regard to the so-called government service being supplied.

Speaking about user pay, I must recall for hon. members what happened over the last week or so. The minister sponsoring this bill chose to fly to the Hamilton area aboard Nordair, a free flight. On arrival, he explained to those in Hamilton why he felt user pay was a good concept.

I rise to speak with regard to the user pay reference in this bill, the extension of authority in that connection which the minister is asking for, and the extended authority the minister is asking for with regard to the zoning of lands involved in airport development. The reason is that we have witnessed the federal government running our airports in an unsatisfactory way. For several years they have been in a deficit position. It is time that the government be called on to state why our airports continue to lose money while those of the United States, of comparable size and activity, are making money.

In my remarks today I want to cite certain examples in the United States where local airport authorities find the operation of airports one of the most profitable things they are doing. Because of this obsession with centralization in Ottawa, our airports, especially the larger ones, are now starting to go heavily into deficit.

I suggest that local authorities be established not only for the administration of airports in an area such as Toronto, but that the local authorities be given authority over commuter transit as far as the railways are concerned and, in the case of Toronto, authority over the local harbour facilities. In short, it should be a transportation authority that the federal and provincial governments should be working towards, as opposed to this outdated concept that, frankly, is a hangover from the depression when airports were accepted as a responsibility of the federal government. I say that because the evidence is clear. This government is not competent to run a local airport efficiently. Certainly in the case of Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver that goes without question.

When we are asked to consider a bill such as C-40, we must ask some questions. Is the time not right to turn away from this centralist approach with regard to Canadian airports and accept the local transportation authority concept for the running of facilities in such urban areas such as Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver? In advancing that, and I relate it to Clause 2 which speaks about user pay, I do so because the average Canadian has no objection to paying for whatever services he feels he is using.

However, I feel that the average Canadian takes great exception to paying for so-called costs that are needless. Frankly, that is now the case with our airports in Canada. It is not only the Post Office that is running up huge deficits, but airport activities.

● (1640)

If we go back in the history of the operation of the transportation department we find that the government at one time set up what was called a revolving fund in connection with Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver airports, a fund which was to be self-sustaining. And for a time it seemed to work. There was roughly sufficient income coming in to cover the expense of running these airports. But in the year just passed, that is, the fiscal year 1977, the expenditure in the three cities to which I have referred is expected to total $227.6 million and the revenue amounts to $121.5 million, leaving a deficit on the operation of airport facilities in those three cities of $106.1 million.

Let us get it straight. When the minister, in this bill, says the user should pay, what he is saying is that users should be required to pay for such deficits as these incurred in the operation of airports in Canada. It is as simple as that. So I think it behooves every member here to ask the critical question: has the government been prudent in running this show in a manner which has resulted in a $106 million deficit?

The deficit is broken down as follows: in Mirabel expenditures will amount to approximately $78 million and revenues will be about $22 million. There you have a loss of something like $56 million in the operation of Mirabel alone. Dorval made a small profit—about $5 million in the year to which I have referred. Toronto No. 1 at Malton, which used to make money, is now losing money to the extent of about $22 million under the guidance of the present minister and his predecessors. Pickering, that aborted white elephant which the government intended to place northeast of Toronto, is losing $18 million, according to the figures to which I have referred, and Vancouver shows a loss of approximately $14 million.

In short, in each of our cities, every one is losing money. For example, Toronto is the ninth busiest airport in North America; Montreal is the tenth busiest. Is it not unbelievable that these should be the only two airports on the entire continent of comparable size which are losing money? Surely the federal government and the minister who sits here today must accept some of the responsibility for this sad state of affairs.

In Chicago, Midway and O'Hare airports, for example, handle more passengers than the entire industry in the Dominion of Canada. O'Hare handles 54 million passengers and it is making money. In fact Chicago claims that this is one of its most profitable municipal ventures. I should like to point out that O'Hare is operated by a city department and is entirely a municipal responsibility. I would also point out that the Chicago airports are not funded even by the municipality. They are entirely self-supporting. This brings me to a point which hon. members should bear in mind.

In the United States they do not propose to expand airports or build new airports until sufficient revenue is guaranteed by the carriers wishing to use those airports to pay all the interest charges, all the depreciation, and to retire the bonds which would be required to finance the undertaking. In short, each airport has to be self-sufficient and capable of standing on its own feet, or it is simply not built.

In this connection, at the time the government was pressing so hard to build Pickering in the Toronto area, we on this side consulted with the Commissioner of Aviation in Chicago. Bearing in mind that at that time his airport was carrying seven times the number of passengers who were going through Malton I asked him whether any consideration had been given to the building of a new airport. He told me the matter had been considered but the decision had been taken in the negative, partly for environmental reasons, partly because it was felt that any need for a new airport would not surface before 1990. Moreover, the Chicago Commissioner for Aviation told me—and I felt this was most interesting, "Frankly, we could not afford a new airport such as you are contemplating at Pickering, or such as you have built at Mirabel."

Why should we in Canada assume that we can afford to do these things because a department of transport here in Ottawa says we should build an airport? Why should we assume we can afford an airport in circumstances in which, as the minister now tells us, the users will be required to pay? The fact is that if we wish to win tourists from other countries, particularly from the United States, we ought to be providing cheap transportation facilities. We ought not to start building white elephants such as Mirabel or the one proposed at Pickering.

Let us go back to the Chicago situation. In Chicago the airport authority is completely self-funding. The principal airport in Chicago, O'Hare, is the busiest in the world, as far as I know. From its conception it has been funded by floating revenue bonds, as they are called, and was the first airport to finance expenditures entirely out of income revenue. Those bonds are backed entirely by the ability of the airport to generate revenue. To this end, the bonding agreement requires O'Hare to break even each year; revenue always equal expenditures, and any surplus as it is called, is immediately distributed to the bond holders as interest.

To ensure that revenues are always sufficient to cover expenditures, landing fees are adjusted twice yearly. This system has proved so successful that the bonds, which were initially to be due in 1990, will probably be paid off in ten years—some have said they will be paid off even earlier, leading city officials to expect that the airport facilities in Chicago will become a significant source of income for the city itself.

What a contrast when we look to Canada, Mr. Speaker! In Chicago they regard their airport as a potential source of significant income. Yet we have a government which, acting through the present minister, is so incompetent that it is telling us that new powers are now needed to impose charges on a user-pay basis in connection with airports which should properly be running at a surplus, not a deficit. The phenomenal growth at O'Hare has seen traffic expand from roughly 10 million passengers—approximately the level at Mirabel at the present time—to some 44 million passengers in 1976. Approximately 700,000 operations are handled annually at that airport, or on an average about two a minute. There is an airport that is handling approximately two aircraft movements or operations per minute—700,000 in a full year—and they do not feel the need a new airport. They say they cannot afford it. Yet Toronto, which has a fifth of that volume, is said to be in such a state that they must have further development and the building of a second airport in the Toronto area.

I should mention two other airports in Chicago—Midway and Mieggs Field—which are both operating at a slight profit. In Chicago they have demonstrated they can operate their airports at a substantial profit, and not at a deficit such as this government is experiencing. If I had more time I would continue and tell you about the situation in Los Angeles, which is essentially the same as I have indicated. They are making money. Atlanta is making money and Boston is making money.

The New York Port Authority has published its 1976 annual report entitled "The Port Authority" and I recommend to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) that he read it. Presumably he has not read it to date. That report spells out the activities in the three main airports in the New York area—Kennedy, LaGuardia and Newark. Two of those airports have activities larger than those handled at Malton, and one is smaller. Newark is smaller in that it handled 6,753,000 last year. LaGuardia handled 14 million passengers, and of course is bigger. Kennedy handled 21 million, roughly half domestic, half overseas, in 1976. All three airports make money. How come we in Canada, in comparison to those three airports I have mentioned, are losing money? I am referring to Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. They are losing money, yet airports which are being handled by the Port Authority in New York and New Jersey are actually making money.

Over-all the balance sheet of the New York Port Authority is very, very impressive. In 1976, for example, they had operating revenues of almost $500 million. On that amount their income from operations was $95 million. They made almost 20 per cent on their total operation in that year, and that is after $90 million was charged against depreciation. After paying various items, such as the interest on their bonds of $78 million and interest on bank loans of $9 million, the Port Authority ended up with a net income of $37 million.

There would be no need in Canada for the so-called user-pay concept if the government ran our airports efficiently, or returned those airports to local authorities where they could be integrated with the general commuter activities which are presently needed in areas such as Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and certain other large centres.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: At committee stage I hope the minister and his staff will be prepared to justify why they are losing the money to which I have referred. Before we bindly give him the power to charge higher fees on a user-pay concept, we must find out why they are running up the deficits to which I have referred.

I should like to touch on the second item in this bill which disturbs me greatly. I refer hon. members to page 5 which deals with this extension of federal power into the zoning of lands adjacent to or involved with airports in Canada. As the bill points out this is a new provision, and it is stated that this amendment would authorize regulations respecting federal land use control in relation to airports or airport sites. I should like to refer to the proposed two sections which concern me. The first is found at page 5, section 6(2), which reads as follows:

Subject to the approval of the governor in council, the minister may, by regulations, designate lands adjacent to or in the vicinity of an airport or airport site as a protection area to prevent the use or development of such lands or any part thereof in a manner that is, in the opinion of the minister, incompatible with the operation of an airport where . . .

And certain circumstances are then set out. I would also like to direct hon. members' attention to subsection (4) at page 6 which reads:

Any owner or lessee of lands forming all or part of lands designated as a protection area by a zoning regulation who was in occupation of those lands immediately before the zoning regulation became applicable thereto and who, at that time and in the course of such occupation, was making use of those lands or any buildings, structures or objects thereon in a manner that is incompatible with the uses prescribed therefor by the zoning regulation, and any successor or assignee of any such owner or lessee, may continue to do so unless such use by such owner or lessee is specifically restricted or prohibited by the zoning regulation.

I should like to summarize those two subsections, as I understand them. The minister, in effect, is requesting new-found powers to zone lands arbitrarily which are appurtenant or in the vicinity of an airport or an airport site. In subsection (4) he makes it clear that you can carry on your use, provided it is not prohibited under the new regulations which the minister is hoping to have the power to make.

When we look at page 8, subsection (10), we are told that the user of that land, if he has been prohibited under the minister's new regulations, is entitled to compensation in the amount by which his interest in those lands, buildings, structures or objects was decreased in value by the application of the regulation, minus an amount equal to any increase in the value of that interest that occurred after the claimant became the owner thereof and that is attributable to the airport or airport site. The minister is asking for new powers to affect the zoning and the land use appurtenant to airports or airport sites. He makes it clear you may not use your property in the future, if he designates a prohibition against it.

The compensation is a rather odd formula. First of all you have to show the extent to which you feel it has been depreciated, as a result of the government's move, but you must also add in any appreciation which may have followed from the airport being situated adjacent to you. Thus, it is a minus and a plus type of concept which the minister has proposed.

I should point out under subsection (11) that you must make your claim within two years. That is an arbitrarily short time because if they are going to put an airport in beside you, it takes time to build these airports and to see exactly what the traffic pattern will be after the airport becomes operational. That time should be longer than two years. A person will be in a position to lose his rights because the arbitrary time limit will have elapsed and he will not know, up to that time, the full impact of the airport activity which the government has placed in the area adjacent to him.

In subsection (12) the minister goes on to make it very clear that, except as set out in subsection (10) which is the compensation subsection, you are not entitled to any damages with respect to the airport development the minister has in mind.

The reason I want to dwell on these zoning provisions is that we have had a sad experience with this type of thing in my riding. Pickering is adjacent to the York-Simcoe riding, and in particular adjacent to towns such as Whitchurch-Stouffville, Markham, and other such towns. When the government wished to put Pickering into that area, it bought about 18,000 acres. That was very unfortunate. However, it also requested the provincial government to freeze about another 60,000 acres in the area on the ground that that could be a noise area. The government wished to have further development frozen.

The Ontario government went along with the request of the federal government at that time. Happily, most of that land has been released since the ultimatum was first given by the federal authorities. However, it was a very uncomfortable and unsatisfactory experience for all concerned. People who had farms were uncertain as to what extent they could continue to farm them. Businessmen and housewives were greatly upset with the arbitrary move made by the federal government with respect to that 80,000 acres which were to be included in Pickering and the surrounding area. Clearly the minister wants greater powers, presumably to mistreat local residents even more than they were mistreated in the Pickering area.

I feel that hon. members in this House have every right to demand from the minister before this bill is passed to know why he wants these unusual powers and rights. Surely people who live on property have the right to have the protection which has been guaranteed them by the British North America Act with respect to the use of their property? Up to the present time property and related rights have generally been considered purely provincial matters. Certainly town planning and zoning have been left to provincial jurisdiction. I think it is a very serious step backward when a federal government, especially the federal government through a department which is as irresponsible as the Department of Transport, now asks to be given the power to invade that property right which has been rarely invaded up until now.

The people in my area will be very concerned if this type of clause passes because unfortunately Pickering is not completely dead. We sense that the bureaucracy which burbles underneath this minister still wants to build one further white elephant in Canada. I do not know why. Perhaps white elephants come in twins. However, the fact is that Pickering is not necessarily dead. If the government, heaven forbid, were ever re-elected and it felt it could get away with it, it might try to build that Pickering monstrosity. If that is so, I think we in this House should be most reluctant to give any minister, particularly this minister, the power to mistreat property owners. That could happen if this provision to which I have referred is passed, namely, Clause 6 of Bill C-40.

I know others may want to speak further on this bill, if not in this House, certainly in the committee. However, I would like to make two points in summary concerning Bill C-40. The first is that we would not need a user pay concept if the government would simply run its airports more efficiently. Second, we do not need to give any minister, particularly this minister, the power to walk over local land owners with respect to airport activities or even worse airport site activities. It must be resisted and I hope hon. members both in committee and in this House will resist this extension of power for a minister who is as irresponsible as the minister who has brought in this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE LOANS TO $75,000 FOR IMPROVEMENT OF FARMS, BUSINESSES OR FISHERIES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-48, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, before we move to third reading of this bill, I would like to ask for unanimous consent to move an amendment. There were discussions regarding this bill at the committee stage just last Friday, and the principle of this amendment was agreed to by the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand). It was indicated that an amendment in this form could be brought forward at report stage. However, because this bill came to this House at such a fast pace, we did not have 24 hours to give notice of this amendment. I therefore ask hon. members for unanimous consent to move this amendment at this time.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we agree with this. We have had discussions, and in the spirit of co-operation we want to allow this amendment to be proposed so that the hon. member can be given some time to discuss it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to join in making it unanimous that the hon. member have the right to introduce his amendment at the report stage, even though he did not give notice on Friday.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, given the tactfulness with which the hon. member informed us of his problems, we thus agreed unanimously that he may move his amendment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Representatives from each party have indicated consent, but I should also ask the House generally if there is unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to present his motion without the normal notice of 24 hours.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley) moved:

That Bill C-48 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 23 to 33 inclusive at page 2 thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"small business enterprise" means a business enterprise

(a) the estimated gross revenue of which as stated in an application for a business improvement loan did not, for the fiscal period of the business enterprise in which the application was made, or, in the case of a business enterprise about to be carried on, will not for its first fiscal period that is of not less than fifty-two weeks' duration exceed $1,500,000; and

(b) the business is not part of an association comprised of itself and one or more other businesses in the said fiscal period in which the estimated gross revenue of the association of businesses exceeds $1,500,000."

and that Clause 4 be further amended by adding thereto:

"4.1 The said Act is amended in section 2 thereof, by adding thereto:

" "association" means an arrangement of businesses whereby the separate existence of those businesses is not solely for the purpose of carrying out the business of those businesses in the most effective manner and one of the main reasons for such separate existence is to reduce the estimated gross revenue, within the meaning of this Act." "

● (1710)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask if copies of this amendment are available and, if so, could they be distributed to those who are here?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will see how soon we can fulfil this request. That is why I read the full amendment. We have copies available to leaders of parties, or hon. members can ask for them. Perhaps hon. members will allow us an extra minute to make them available to all members.

Mr. Jelinek: First, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for giving unanimous consent to allow me to present the amendment at this time. Secondly, let me say that I have passed along copies of these amendments to the various House leaders and we are now in the process of distributing further copies to other hon. members who are interested.

The amendment may sound complicated but in fact it is very simple. The intent of Bill C-48 is to allow corporations with annual sales of less than $1.5 million to take advantage of the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Farm Improvements Act and the Fisheries Act. However, because of the lack of a general definition put forward by the government—something that we on this side of the House have been requesting for months if not years—confusion arises as to the definition of small business in this bill.

The definition of small business in this bill is one which has gross sales of $1.5 million a year or less. That definition was used in the act prior to this legislation. As a matter of fact, a major amendment in the bill before us is to increase that figure from $1 million to $1.5 million, something that we agree with because it spreads the eligibility to a greater number of small businesses. The problem is simply this, that there exists in Canada a number of corporations which may on their own have annual sales of less than $1.5 million, but which in fact are subsidiaries of large corporations, either Canadian or foreign owned, of multinational corporations more often than not, either in the United States, in Japan or elsewhere. I would like to give you a few examples.

There is a Canadian company in Toronto by the name of Toronto Iron Works whose gross sales in 1975 were $73,000. Therefore this made it eligible under this act. However, upon looking further into the matter one notes that Toronto Iron Works is in fact a subsidiary of Warnock-Hersey International which in that same year, 1975, had sales of $96 million. That is a Canadian owned company.

The second example is that of Nordex Explosives Ltd., of Montreal. In 1975 the gross sales of Nordex were $430,000. Once again, Nordex would be eligible under this act, and in fact under a majority of government programs which specifically define small business by its sales rather than giving a definition of small business. But Nordex Explosives Ltd. is a subsidiary of Dow Chemicals whose gross revenue exceeded $5.6 billion last year. This is certainly not a foreign owned company that should have the right to take advantage of Canadian government programs.

My amendment simply eliminates the right of subsidiary companies whose parent companies, whether they be Canadian or foreign owned, have sales of more than $1.5 million a year. It is a very simply amendment. The minister has indicated privately to me, as well as in committee, that he agrees with the spirit of such an amendment. In fact he said the following last Friday in committee:

I am happy to indicate to the hon. member that the Minister of Finance and I agree with the spirit of this recommendation and it would be our intention through the Department of Finance and the Department of Justice, and our own small business secretariat, to examine this question very carefully and see if an appropriate amendment could not be put at the report stage.

He went on to say:

We will make an undertaking that we will contact the hon. member also about the wording of possible amendments and keep him advised as we go along.

That was last Friday. Let me say, in fairness to the minister, that he did call me this morning. Neither he nor his officials had sufficient time to word their amendment. Therefore I sincerely hope that hon. members will take into serious consideration my proposed amendment to eliminate from this bill sudsidiary companies whose parent companies have sales of more than $1.5 million a year.

I see the minister is anxious to support this amendment, so let me just say briefly that this is another example of the lack of a definition of small business in Canada, especially when we can compare ourselves with other industrialized nations, whether it be the small business administration in the United States, the small enterprise agency in Japan, the small business sector in West Germany. All these industrialized nations, with a far healthier economy than ours, have a general definition of small business. The definition of a small business in the United States is as follows: "an owned or managed enterprise not dominant in its field".

Our recommendation from this side of the House—and certainly the recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business—is that the government adopt either a similar general definition of small business or the one that I put forward. The minister stated on a number of occasions that he listens very carefully if not to the opposition, to the federation. The federation has been making this recommendation, and I hope for the sake of clarifying problems like this and others related to small business that the minister would take the general definition into consideration. In the meantime I hope he will consider this amendment and include it in Bill C-48.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when we allowed unanimous consent for this amendment to be put, it was so that the hon. member would have an opportunity to get it on the record and have it discussed. At this time, however, I am not willing to accept the amendment in its present form but I want to reiterate the commitment I gave in committee that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and I agree with the spirit of the amendment. Regretfully we were not able to get an appropriate wording for the amendment over the weekend. Drafters in the Department of Finance and the Department of Justice had considerable difficulty with the spirit of the amendment.

In his amendment the hon. member referred to an association which he says means "an arrangement of businesses whereby the separate existence of those businesses is not solely for . . .". I made a commitment to the hon. member on the telephone this morning that we would like to see this bill go through all stages and bring back an appropriate amendment, probably this fall. I think the hon. member agreed to this. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the act expires at the end of June if this bill does not pass. I hope, with the co-operation and understanding of hon. members, we can give speedy passage to report stage and third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Jelinek: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps if the minister can assure us that he will bring the bill back in the fall with an amendment intended to do the same thing that I recommended before the end of the calendar year 1977, we would be willing to have the bill go ahead with a few words on third reading. Could the minister give his undertaking that the bill with an amendment will be brought before the House before the end of the calendar year?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I think the record will indicate my intention.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-48. I listened with interest to the amendment submitted by my colleague, the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), and was delighted to hear the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) say that the amendment will be brought in for consideration in the fall. I certainly think it merits the approval of this House because a small business loan is supposed to do just what it states—to help small business. The present legislation is supposed to help small corporations, but as I understand it, at present multinational corporations or even multi-Canadian corporations could qualify for the preferred business rates. Those particular companies would have no problem getting the necessary funds from their parent companies or banks, however.

There are certain clauses we approve of in the bill and others that we do not agree with entirely. The minister is to be commended for increasing the amount of the loan from $50,000 to $75,000 which, with inflation as it is, probably just means it is holding its own. The other increase is that a company can qualify if it has sales of up to $1.5 million. The total funds available are $600 million, which is an increase over the previous $300 million, but although it may sound like a lot of money, when it is spread over the many small businesses in the country it will be all taken up in a short period of time.

As we are all aware, over 50 per cent of the labour force in Canada is employed by small business, and 90 per cent of Canadian business enterprises employ 100 persons or less, so this certainly covers the great majority of business.

One thing that frustrates small businesses is the amount of government red tape they have to cope with, and it also costs them a lot of money. I hope the minister will allow a tax writeoff in certain cases so that they will not have so many problems. In the past the government granted substantial amounts of money to various departments to conduct research, but most of it has gone to big business and multinational corporations where sometimes grants of $300,000 have been made. If that were spread over small business establishments it would help a great many to improve their operating and production methods.

The Federal Business Development Bank provides large sums of money, and according to the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin), it has committed $1.5 billion at the present time. She also pointed out that the average loan had decreased to $46,000. This shows that small business finds the Federal Business Development Bank a great help.

When we talk about taxes, reliable figures show that Canadians pay 42 per cent of the gross national product in some form of taxes collected by the three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal. The future outlook is ominous. That 42 per cent figure will not remain stationary; it could climb to 45 per cent. Some pessimists think it could rise to 47 per cent. I hope not. I hope governments will restrain their spending.

Interests rates under Bill C-48 will generally be set by order in council. We hope they will be set at a reasonable level, a level acceptable to the many small businesses which will want to avail themselves of this provision. The Small Businesses Loans Act was first introduced, I believe, in 1960. It all sounded wonderful: businessmen were to get government guaranteed loans from chartered banks. Unfortunately, the chartered banks did not put up neon signs to advertise these loans; there were no newspaper headlines. Consequently, even now many small businesses do not know they are eligible for small business loans. The original intention was good; it just did not work out. Of course, with all due respect to the banks, the fixed interest rate sometimes was lower than the prime lending rate; so why should the banks lend money on that basis?

I had the privilege last Friday to question the minister in committee about these interest rates, and said in no uncertain terms that many small businesses in crying need of money have a difficult time getting money at any rate. They are turned down by the banks. I said the government should step in and make it easier for small business establishments to borrow money and speed up the process. I know of some tourist-oriented, seasonal businesses in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka which have a difficult time making ends meet between December and the beginning of the the tourist boom, usually in May or June, and they would willingly pay almost any rate for money. Some of them finally resort to finance companies, which charge much more interest than the banks do; but the banks will not lend these businesses money. If it were not for the finance companies some of these small businesses could be in dire financial trouble or even go bankrupt. Some people think of finance companies as gougers, as charging exorbitant rates, and so on, but forget the vital role they play in the life of small business. When speaking in committee on small business loans, I have spoken of small businessmen who want to borrow as little as $500, which the banks will not lend them. They borrow money from the finance company at 2 per cent per month, or 24 per cent per annum. It sounds as if the finance companies make a lot of money; actually on loans that small they lose money, and when I tell people this they just laugh.

Our forthcoming conversion to the metric system will also entail expenditures for many small businessmen. Judging from what colleagues on both sides of the House have said on metric conversion, the costs will be staggering, and small businesses will need to borrow under the Small Businesses Loans Act.

Small business depends to a great degree on the Post Office. I am sorry not to see the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) here; he was here earlier this afternoon. The Post Office is the lifeline of many small businesses, and if it is not working well, small business suffers. We have it on reasonably good authority that the Post Office is not working well, that it is not firing on all 16 cylinders, so to speak, perhaps only firing on two or three. One hears rumours of impending strikes. How will they affect small businesses? Many of them will seek additional funds.

I know small businesses must be viable and that the government cannot throw money down the drain. Earlier today I discussed with the minister the difficulties of a certain businessman about to go under. The minister agreed to look into the case. The man in the tourist business is carrying a huge mortgage at 14 per cent. Perhaps through the federal business development bank or some other agency some solution can be worked out to keep his business afloat.

Our small business establishments are the very lifeline and backbone of our communities. By their very nature they provide a high degree of diversity, which contributes greatly to the stability of our towns and villages, indeed of our country. Yet little by little they are being forced out of business. Many of these people established their businesses over the years without receiving billions of dollars of government assistance in various forms. They built their businesses with hard work over long hours, faith in their communities, faith in themselves and faith in Canada. But no segment of the economy is more vulnerable than small business to the red tape of bureaucracy. They are defenceless in the jungle of conflicting requirements unless they hire corporate lawyers, tax consultants and government relations men, and people of that calibre are usually in the pay of large companies. Many regulations can put even prosperous companies in financial trouble, even bankruptcy.

Mention was made of the importance our neighbour to the south placed on small business. A report concerning small business says this:

1. The existence of a large number of small, independent businesses helps to preserve competition, thus ensuring increased efficiency and high quality and reasonable prices for consumers.

2. A large number of small independent businesses decreases the likelihood of excessive economic and political control.

3. Small business offers an opportunity for the expression and growth of personal initiative and individual judgment.

4. Small business is frequently the source of new products and new methods.

5. Small business constitutes a large and diversified source of employment opportunities.

6. Certain services essential to the economy can be performed best by small business.

It goes on to say:

In the United States, a national small business program has existed for almost three decades. Because of the Small Business Act, one third of federal spending for goods and services goes to small business. Since the United States has a program to benefit small business, we can hardly object to a similar Canadian program. Imagine what a larger small business sector could mean to Canada: more jobs, less need to import, retention of profits in Canada, and accumulation of valuable technological know-how. There's really no question. Canada must pass legislation committing the federal government to building domestic enterprises using the same wording and definitions as the U.S. Small Business Act. It seems to us that it's time Canada adopted something from the U.S. that makes sense for a change.

● (1740)

I am aware that there has been some assistance for the small businessman.

An hon. Member: A mere pittance.

Mr. Darling: Yes, but we are going to press for more. I am aware that many members opposite think the same way. I quote:

In the United States, it's different. The U.S. Congress has passed laws requiring that, wherever possible, small businesses should be involved in public purchases, whether aerospace projects or office supplies. On very large, expensive projects, the main contractor is expected to sub-contract much of the work to small firms. Last year, this policy resulted in one-third of the federal government's total spending of $54 billion being directed to small business.

I hope this government will follow their example. We have often been told that big is wonderful. However, we should start to realize with regard to small business that small is beautiful and efficient and we should give the small businessman the opportunity to compete and become bigger.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion (Mr. Jelinek) negatived.

Hon. Len Marchand (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-48, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Len Marchand (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that finally even the government members are giving me recognition and applause. I will be very brief. I do not want to rehash what was said on second reading as well as the committee stage.

Bill C-48, as hon. members know, is before us only for the purpose of extending the act which would have expired at the end of this month. As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) stated, the eligibility level is being raised as well as the amount at which loans will be guaranteed which, by the way, merely keeps up with inflation. Therefore, there is no further assistance to the small community.

I have touched on the subject of definition which is a matter of great importance for the future. This was covered previously in my amendment. Interest rates is another matter which concerns me greatly. This was discussed at second reading and in the committee stage.

What concerns me most is that not only the minister responsible for small business but his officials and those involved in small business matters are not with it, if I can use that term. For example, they were asked in committee about the breakdown of the number of businesses between small business, farming and fishing as dealt with by this bill. They did not have the answer. They did not know who applied for the loans and was turned down. They did not know what the criteria was based on for raising the eligibility level to $1.5 million. They did not have reasons for the criteria raising the loans from $50,000 to $75,000. They did not have answers to anything pertinent to the small business community.

Not one of these officials dealing with this bill or other matters relating to small business was ever a small businessman himself. They had no knowledge of the small business community in their provinces or the potential solutions emanating from these debates or from interested groups in past months.

I said I would be brief and I will be. I only have one other matter that I ask for on behalf of the small businessman. It has been said in the past, I say it again and will continue to say it in the future. The government cannot deal with the problems of small business until it has an overall policy that deals with all problems relating to small business.

We know some of the problems, such as the excessive amount of paperwork, government intervention, regulation and control as well as restrictions placed on small businessmen. We know the small problems. We even have some potential solutions to those problems. What we do not have in this country and what other countries do have is a general overall policy, as we suggested in an opposition day debate a week or two ago, under a small business act. That is the only way we will catch up to other industrialized nations in dealing with the problems of small business.

The minister has been in this portfolio for nine months. A woman can have a child in that amount of time, but the government cannot have a policy. We have heard no suggestion of a policy. Bill C-48 is simply an extension of the act. Nothing has been done for the small business community of this country. That is one of the underlying reasons for the continuing problems in our economy, both in the case of secondary manufacturing and productivity as well as our current level of unemployment.

In closing, I cannot state often enough that it is of great importance for the minister and the government seriously to consider initiating at the earliest possible date a small business policy, possibly under a small business act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

• (1750)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since we seem to have moved along fairly well, and since it is a little late to start a new bill in the field of agriculture before six o'clock, I wonder whether we should not proceed to the adjournment debate. I see that the first two members on the program are here.

Mr. Goodale: That proposal makes sense, Mr. Speaker, but it might expedite our business at eight o'clock if we could have the motion formally on record; that is, item 34, which is the next order of business.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is a motion for second reading. You won't gain anything by doing that.

Mr. Goodale: It would simply save time at eight o'clock, if members were in agreement. I do not suggest we should begin the debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It doesn't save any time, and the minister is not here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would point out to the parliamentary secretary since the minister is not here that if the government wishes to introduce the motion another minister would need to move it on his behalf, and the floor would likely go immediately to the opposition because if I put the motion now an hon. member would take the floor and call it six o'clock, which would entitle him to the privilege of speaking at eight o'clock. So the hon. member's suggestion is not as satisfactory as perhaps he thought it was.

Is it agreed we should call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—DATE OF DECISION ON PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR URBAN TRANSIT PROJECT

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pursue a matter which has been of concern to me and to many of my colleagues for some time and which I raised again recently with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) during the question period.

On June 2 I asked the minister whether a decision had been reached concerning the provision of promised federal financial assistance to provincial and municipal authorities in improving commuter transit facilities in metropolitan areas. This decision, which relates to an announcement made in 1974 that the federal government intended to spend $290 million on transit aid, $100 million of this on commuter aid, has already been deferred on several occasions.

For example, the Ontario minister of transport, the Hon. James Snow, who lives in my own constituency, sent à telegram to the federal Minister of Transport on February 24, 1977. I should like to quote from his telegram:

> At our meeting of Nov. 30, 1976, wherein we discussed such matters as the Toronto transportation terminal redevelopment, federal participation in the acquisition of bi-level commuter rail equipment and the proposed federal urban transit assistance program, you agreed to respond to our queries and concerns by Dec. 1976. I confirmed the position of the province on these matters in my letter of Dec. 7, which to date has not been answered. Subsequently, through discussion at our executive level, we were advised that the federal position would be made known to us by late Jan., 1977.

The text of this telegram was published in the Oakville Journal-Record and elsewhere on March 7. The Ontario minister goes on to say:

> I would stress the urgent need for a clear statement of the federal government's intention so that we can proceed with or cancel planned projects on a rational basis.
> I would therefore request that you advise me at the earliest opportunity of the federal government's position on the Toronto transportation terminal, the acquisition of commuter rail equipment and finally the urban transit assistance program.

In his reply to me, the minister indicated that a decision still had not been reached on the matter. In addition, he stated that the province of Ontario had yet to avail itself of the substantial assistance provided through existing programs. Mr. Speaker, I must consider the hon. gentleman's reply as both ambiguous and inadequate. What assistance? What programs? Incidentally, we are not asking the government to spend more money but to rearrange its spending. I raise the matter again at this time because I believe it is imperative that a decision be made, and made soon.

It would, of course, be preferable, for reasons I have outlined on numerous occasions both in this chamber and elsewhere, if the final decision was rendered in favour of the proposed aid. At this stage of the game, however, I think it is most important that a decision be announced one way or the other so that those who must budget according to this decision can proceed apace with their efforts to upgrade public transit systems on a rational basis. With respect to the Toronto area in particular, projects such as the expansion of Union Station, the removal of the bottleneck at Bathurst and the extension of commuter service to Milton have been placed on a back burner by the Ontario government as they await a commitment from Ottawa to help out.

Meanwhile, funds which might be put to good use on smaller projects elsewhere are tied up until a decision is made. For the sake of clarity, I would point out that the existing programs to which the minister referred in his reply to me constitute only a partial fulfilment of the original announcement. The five-year $100 million capital assistance program to commuter services, which apparently came into effect on April 1, 1977, would be particularly welcome. However, in the absence of an announcement we have no idea where we stand with regard to this aid. Also, it represents only about one-third of the sum originally set down, and is woefully inadequate.

For example, the deficit of the Toronto Transit Commission alone amounted to about $50 million in 1976. Here in Ottawa, the transit deficit for 1976 was about $14.8 million and the projected deficit for this year is $15.4 million. Admittedly, the federal plan was not designed to cover operating costs, but these deficits indicate the gravity of the problem. The fact that no money has yet been requested by the Ontario government under this capital assistance program may indicate that it does not wish to tie itself into one program while the possibility remains that more money may be available later under a separate, more generous scheme. Separate programs involving grade separation and railway relocation represent separate promises and should not be confused with this issue.

For these reasons, I repeat my request that the Minister of Transport move expeditiously to reach a decision on this pressing matter with the aid of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), so that the business of providing efficient public transit may proceed smoothly. Again, I ask: When can we expect a decision to be announced on federal financial assistance to public transit?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for having brought up, once again, that important matter concerning urban transit systems. I am sure several hon. members—and I notice the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) is here this evening—would also like to hear a statement on the participation of the federal government in the financing of urban transit systems. For lack of time, it is impossible for me to outline all the steps which have been taken to help the provinces, and indirectly the municipalities through the provinces, with the urban transit program. I therefore refer the hon. member to the statement I made on March 8 last on the official policy of the Department of Transport on urban transit.

[English]

In response to a question raised on June 2, 1977, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) stated that no further decision had yet been reached on the question of federal government assistance for urban transit projects. The province of Ontario has taken the position that the project for the expansion and improvement of Union Station in Toronto, otherwise known as the Toronto transportation terminal project, should be funded in part by the federal government. Of the estimated $58 million cost of the project, the provincial government has determined to its satisfaction that it should contribute only $26 million while the federal government should provide the remainder.

● (1800)

Federal ministers have met with the premier of Ontario and appropriate provincial ministers to discuss the Toronto transportation terminal project and federal officials have participated in the work of a committee which has responsibility to examine, plan and ultimately implement a number of measures which would permit the capacity of Union Station to be increased in order to provide for the growth of commuter services—that is, GO transit—over the next few years. The position taken by the federal government to date has been that it agrees in principle with the need for some improvement to Union Station, the trackage in its vicinity, and that it is prepared to consider participation to the extent that existing federal government programs may be applicable. There has not been any agreement to a particular proportion of the costs nor to any particular figure.

The GO transit services in the Toronto area provide effective transportation to the residents of those communities which they serve. The province of Ontario has done and is doing good work in the development of these services, which have an excellent reputation throughout North America. I must stress, however, that expansion at Union Station is required because of the expansion of these commuter services, which are the responsibility of the provincial government. At this time the details of the commuter program implementation have not been finalized by the government, as it wishes to consider how this program should relate to its role in the general area of urban transportation assistance and to its priorities in the light of fiscal restraint.

The question raised by the hon. member also applies to Montreal, Vancouver and all across this nation, and I hope we will deal with this important matter in the future.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—INVOLVEMENT OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN PROGRAMS TO DEVELOP POLITICAL AWARENESS OF NATIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, April 28 of this year, at page 5062 of Hansard, I raised the very important issue of local government in the Northwest Territories. I have no intention of repeating the questions and responses on that particular date. However, it is quite obvious that the minister's response was self-explanatory and explained his lack of understanding regarding the issue of local government in the Northwest Territories.

Perhaps I could put the importance of that issue in its proper context by reading a Telex from the president of the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, Michel Amarook, which was sent on March 30, 1977 to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand). The Telex reads as follows:

> The cancellation of this week's local government training workshop in Baker Lake points up once again the colonial mentality that dominates the government of the Northwest Territories.
> It also reveals the territorial bureaucrats as the bumbling incompetents that they are.
>
> We demand that the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories make public the documents and background information concerning the mandate of the territorial government to help develop political awareness among native people.
>
> We would appreciate also a clear statement of policy from you on the rights of native people to self-determination. From the events over the weekend and during this week in Yellowknife, we can only conclude that the territorial executive is determined to hinder political development.
>
> A statement by the settlement council of Baker Lake suggests that future responsibility for political development and local government training in Nunavut territory should be assumed by Inuit Tapirisat of Canada. If the funds can be made available to us, we will be only too glad to take on this responsibility.
> We fully support the public statements that have been made by the settlement council of Baker Lake and by John Amagoalik, the director of land claims for Inuit Tapirisat.

This is just one simple, isolated incident of several with respect to the issue of local government in the Northwest Territories. I want to emphasize that there is a department of local government in the Northwest Territories. Let me quote from the employees' handbook some of the objectives of that department as follows:

> To develop political and social awareness and administrative capability at the community level.

Under the heading "Programs" the handbook says the following:

> The Department of Local Government is responsible for political development at the local level;—

Further on this manual, which is for the employees of the Northwest Territories, and related specifically to the issue of local government, states:

> Encourages the development of political and social awareness and administrative capability enabling the people of the N.W.T. to achieve local self-government.

I want to emphasize that that policy is in existence, and that was the issue I was raising in the House on that particular day when questioning the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand).

Following a recent visit to the north it is my impression that the department of local governmemt has not fulfilled its mandate and that there is a growing alienation and suspicion directed toward the central government regarding this issue. I readily admit that in theory the department of local government has developed a philosophy which should accelerate the development of local autonomy but for the most part it has been counterproductive where it has been implemented. In effect, the government pays lip service to local political development and in many ways works against it. I have considerable correspondence which would substantiate that observation. There is a general absence of local fiscal responsibility, which works against the development of local autonomy in the north. Surely it must be apparent that local government will evolve into a northern form of local government, but it must suit the needs of the people in those northern communities.

Finally, the evolution of local autonomy implies the development of a proper balance of decision making capability between all levels of government, and that balance does not exist in the north at the present time. If we are to see a positive impact on the life of the local population, local government is needed. It must be there to meet the needs of the people at the grassroots level, and it is absolutely essential in this context.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the development of local government in the Northwest Territories has long been recognized as a valuable objective within the general context of northern development.

In January, 1965, the commissioner issued a policy statement outlining the educational, political and administrative importance of local government. Essentially the policy called for the decentralization of government activity so that wherever possible local community services could be supplied by democratically elected community institutions. This was reinforced by the report of the Advisory Commission on the Development of Government in the Northwest Territories issued in 1966, which recommended a continuing and intensified program for the development of local government as crucial to the economic, social and political development of the north.

When the seat of government for the Northwest Territories was moved from Ottawa to Yellowknife in 1967, a department of local government was established and a new, simplified method of local incorporation was provided under the hamlet ordinance. In addition, settlement councils were formed in virtually all unincorporated NWT communities so that direct participation by residents in local matters became possible. It is encouraging to note that indigenous natives now constitute the overwhelming majority of local council membership. The approximate figure is 75 per cent over-all and 90 per cent if one eliminates several of the larger population centres.

In its initial phase the territorial government's development program concentrated on raising the level of political awareness at the community level. The rapid increase in the number of local councils, however, created an urgent need for programs to be developed which would better prepare local people for an effective role in their councils. This resulted in a change in emphasis in the development program from political awareness to legal and administrative functions and the practical mechanics of local government. This change in emphasis was not accepted by a group in the department of local government, who resigned their positions when the territorial government's policy was reaffirmed to them.

I would like to comment briefly on what I understand were the objectives and concerns of that group, since they are the key to the basic issue. The members felt they had a responsibility to work with communities to bring about self-determination in the form of new structures and mechanisms of government. This implied a rejection of the existing constitutional forms of government, both territorial and local.

Neither the government of the Northwest Territories nor the federal government would deny the rights of any segment of the population to work towards objectives which they believe desirable, and that would include those seeking basic constitutional development.

TRANSPORT—RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT RECOMMENDED BY HALL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO FORM OF APPEAL AVAILABLE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, as reported in Hansard of June 2, at page 6212, I asked the following question concerning the Hall Commission report:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since certain areas of western Canada will be severely affected by the Hall Commission's proposals for rail abandonment, particularly region 4 area of western Manitoba, and since it is proposed to close some of those lines as early as December 31, 1977, can the minister say what form of appeal is available to those communities which feel the report deals unfairly with their areas?

In his reply, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) stated that he was surprised that I would ask such a question. He said he understood from other members of his party that the Official Opposition gave practically unanimous support to the recommendations of the Hall Commission. He then went on to say that the usual channels of appeal were open to these communities through the Canadian Transport Commission.

First of all, I think we should set the record straight. All parties here in Ottawa agree in principle with the Hall Commission report. However, there are some areas of this report that we and many people question. The Hall Commission report, which was recently tabled in the House, is 555 pages long. With a report of this size, there will be areas of disagreement with some of the proposals, particularly those dealing with the closure of branch lines.

I am sure that members of the Hall Commission never felt that their report would be accepted word for word. That is why I ask what line of appeal or recourse there will be for those areas that feel they have been treated unfairly. This has certainly been the case in region 4 area where the large majority of the trackage involved is located in the federal constituency of Marquette. This area loses far more lines than most other regions in western Canada.

I might add that the people in this area of Manitoba are so concerned that they have written the Minister of Transport asking him to attend a public meeting there this month. The reason they invited the minister is not to abuse him but to find out from him at first hand what way they should turn. They hope the minister will attend. Many communities are affected, communities such as Rapid City, Oak River, Cardale, Isabella, and all communities on that line as well as many others too numerous to mention.

There are several proposals in region 4 area which I question and to which, I feel, there could be sensible alternatives. In the time allotted to me today it is impossible for me to mention all aspects of the report as it affects region 4. There are several points I want to make, though.

The fact that the commission has recommended the closure of all branch lines between the CN mainline and the CP Winnipeg-Edmonton line has come as a shock to residents of this area. Already the farmers of this area have held meetings and are preparing petitions as they feel they have a legitimate complaint. They feel that through the years the railways have deserted them as far as service is concerned and now they feel their elevator companies are letting them down.

They also feel, and I have been contacted in this regard by many farmers from the area affected, that the figures presented to the Hall Commission as to the potential movement of grain on some lines to be closed are not accurate figures. As some of these lines are recommended for closure by December 31 of this year, they naturally ask where they can appeal this decision.

Another part of the report for region 4 that concerns me is the recommendation that the CN line from Neepawa-Rossburn-Russell be transferred to the prairie rail authority. This suggestion gives me grave concern as I feel strongly that this line should be part of the basic network guaranteed to January 1 of the year 2000. By placing this line under the prairie rail authority the grain companies will then say that as there is no long-term guarantee on this line there is no need to give proper service or to upgrade elevators. Then several years down the road, when further reviews are made on this line, the grain companies will say that, because of the condition of the facilities, it is no longer a viable operation.

Much the same has been done on the Hallboro-Beulah line that is now recommended for closure this year. These are just a few reasons why I feel there should be appeals on some of the recommendations in the report.

I cannot accept the minister's answer, and neither will the farmers of western Manitoba, that they can appeal these closures through the Canadian Transport Commission. This line of appeal has always been available to farmers ever since the CTC was formed. Not only can this be very costly to the communities involved, but they have not much faith in the CTC. The majority know that the chairman of the CTC is the Hon. Edgar Benson, a former minister of finance. They still remember Mr. Benson's white paper on taxation and they are still feeling the effects of his implementation of the capital gains tax and also the tax on recaptured depreciation on farm machinery. Most producers feel that the suggestion that they go to Mr. Benson and the CTC with their appeals is like sending them to the devil.

I am sure that if the Minister of Transport looks again at the Hall Commission report, and particularly the map showing the closures of lines in region 4, he will agree they have been far too harsh in their proposals for that area. Again I ask the minister and the government to announce a proper line of appeal and recourse for areas that sincerely feel they have a legitimate complaint in this initial report. Because of the time element involved, I would hope the minister would do this at an early date.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I think I should stress three points about the Hall Commission report.

First, it is apparent that the Hall Commission has done a thorough, conscientious and widely respected job. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall and his co-commissioners have established for themselves a very broad and solid base of support across the prairies and credibility for their thorough work.

Second, I think it is important to note the almost unanimous chorus of support for the Hall Commission report from farmers, farm organizations, grain companies, co-operatives, municipalities, railways, provincial governments, editorial writers, western observers and commentators. In fact, I think you could look over the history of western Canada and not find a subject where there has been the degree of unanimity that there is about this report.

Third, it is important to remember the calls for swift and positive government action in response to the Hall Commission report coming from all the groups, organizations and individuals I have mentioned. The government of Canada has clearly demonstrated its intention to respond accordingly.

The hon. member makes reference to the Hall Commission recommendations for prairie rail line revitalization, and in particular to proposals which relate to region 4 of the Hall study. The Hall Commission indeed recognized the unique nature of region 4 and commented specifically in the report as follows:

There is no area in western Canada which is overbuilt with railways to as great an extent as the area to the north-west of Brandon bounded by the Carberry Canadian National Railways line to the north. In a space of 50 miles, the area is traversed in an east-west direction by eight railway subdivisions. There has been no rail abandonment in this area since construction. Although there has been some rationalization of the grain handling system, it has been relatively slow to occur. In the face of rapidly escalating costs of grain elevator operation, it is evident that many of the fully depreciated, physically sound facilities will be rendered uneconomical in the very near future.

● (1820)

Grain company managers informed the commission that in 1970 a fully depreciated elevator was economically viable if it had an annual handle of 150,000 bushels. By 1975 a handle of 250,000 bushels was required and it is estimated that by 1980, any older elevator handling less than 500,000 bushels, and any new elevator handling less than one million bushels, will be non-viable. Even drastic alterations to handling tariffs will not overcome the difficulties because larger scales and new driveways will be required for the older houses along with new longer car spots.

Just as elevators with low handlings will not be rendered viable even with altered tariffs, many rail lines with low density traffic will not be rendered compensatory even if new rates were established which would permit railways to receive higher revenues for grain haulage.

Under these circumstances, it is evident that a drastic reduction in the number of grain delivery points will occur over the next few years. This reduction in handling facilities is inevitable and in the interests of economy and improved service should be accompanied by a reduction in railway mileage.

The report went on to conclude:

In this area where alternate hauling distances are short to main and secondary main lines and where the majority of the elevators are either not viable or marginally viable, fairly drastic alterations are warranted.

With respect to the question of appeal, the point is covered by the Railway Act, sections 252 to 254. I shall be pleased to send the hon. member copies of those sections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.30 o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MARKETING PLANS

Hon. Otto. E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe it may be found on this occasion that when we come to the conclusion of second reading debate there may indeed be a disposition to proceed with this bill in the Committee of the Whole. However, that can be determined at that point in time.

Bill C-34 arises out of some issues relating to marketing of grains on the prairies, particularly out of questions surrounding the marketing of rapeseed. This has been the subject of a plebiscite in the prairies. It seems apparent that some of the producers who liked the opportunity of private marketing of rapeseed nonetheless would appreciate the opportunity to obtain an average price for their product by a pooling arrangement. In this way they would not have to attempt to play the market and determine for themselves when the time was right to market their grain, particularly their rapeseed.

For a larger producer wanting that particular arrangement, this was always possible by arranging his deliveries over a regular period of time, marketing his product at different points in time. For smaller producers, that was hardly possible. The difficulty for a producer or farmer, when he happened to sell at a low part of the market and his neighbour sold at a high part, was one of those obvious human considerations which concern many of us.

What this bill does is to make it possible for voluntary pooling arrangements to be created. It is essentially voluntary in two ways. The pooling arrangements will depend upon the willingness of participants in the rapeseed market to come forward and develop them and obtain the participation of farmers in them. This then depends upon the companies normally marketing grain—the pools, the other individual companies or groups of them—to put together a voluntary pooling arrangement.

It is then voluntary for the individual producer, who may choose to market on his own at his own time and at his own judgment of the market, to enter into a pooling arrangement so that when he has finished his year he will obtain the average which his particular pool market would have been able to obtain for the selling of rapeseed.

There is an interesting aspect here. It may be possible for several pooling arrangements to exist side by side. A bit of competitive spirit would certainly then exist. The result at the end of the year in terms of the total returns from one pool compared to others will no doubt have an impact on the willingness of farmers to deliver to a particular pool and, indeed, to enter into a pooling arrangement at all.

● (2010)

We are asking parliament to add a couple of features so that voluntary pools may be more effective than in the past. First, the bill permits the pooling arrangements to become part of the permit book procedure so that it is more certain that those who enter into a voluntary arrangement will remain in it. This is a contractual measure to which people ordinarily commit themselves in any case, but there are many pressures upon persons who join a pool, as hon. members know, especially if price changes make non-pool prices more attractive. By the use of the permit book, involving basic control over the delivery system which has, for good reason, been associated with the Wheat Board throughout its existence, we may be able to make the pooling arrangements more effective.

Second, in order to offer an advantage which is essential to both the pools and to any major holding operations we propose to allow for the setting of additional prices which will carry the same kind of guarantee from the treasury as exists in the case of the Wheat Board initial price today. This is an important provision, one which may at various times cost the treasury money, but it is designed to encourage producers who might be under pressure of some kind not to dispose of their grain outside the pool. It is another change which makes the voluntary pooling system more viable.

That is the nature of the law. It is a voluntary arrangement. No farmer is bound to enter into a pooling arrangement if he does not wish to. Many farmers who like pooling arrangements believe that the Wheat Board might well set up one in relation to rapeseed, too. Single selling is part of the Board's operation but it is not intended to create a monopoly, or monopoly selling.

The other thing to note is the reaction of the companies or others who may be interested in promoting pooling arrangements. The bill is an enabling vehicle which allows these pools to be created. It provides for an initial price and a permit book to assist in making the arrangement more effective, but the assistance of particular companies, and a good reaction from them, are necessary for its complete fulfilment. I very much hope that the wheat pools on the prairies and other companies, either together or singly, will take advantage of these provisions and move to set up pools for rapeseed so that farmers who want the average price and find it difficult to arrange their own selling without this assistance may have such opportunity.

I commend the bill to the House in the hope we may pass it here and send it to the other place for consideration so that the planning may begin and voluntary pools may be created at a relatively early date.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think I can put the mind of the minister at ease at the outset by saying there is absolutely no disagreement on the part of the Official Opposition as to the principles of this bill. I would commend the minister also on his manner of presentation. If he does not mind my saying this, sometimes he irritates us by the self-assurance with which he presents legislation. But tonight he was groping, as all honest men must grope when dealing with circumstances of this kind.

The history of these pools, either voluntary or compulsory, goes back 50 years in western Canadian history. I shall not bore the House tonight with all of that history but it is necessary to understand a little of it in order to fully comprehend what the minister is trying to do.

In the early stages of marketing in western Canada wheat prices would always be high as the crop was growing. As soon as the crop started coming off the price seemed to drop to the bottom, at the very time the farmer desperately needed money which to pay taxes, pay for the operation of his farm, set enough money aside to keep him and his family during the winter months and still leave some over to pay for seeding in the spring. When most of these farmers had sold their grain the price always seemed to rise. But then they had no more left to sell.

This desperate human problem encouraged the development of the pools in the early twenties. The pools fell into trouble in 1929, 1930 and 1931. As recently as six months ago a book was published in Winnipeg giving the history of this period more authentically than any book has done before or since. The author did not finish his book—it was completed by others after his decease—but throughout this whole period he was in a unique position to understand what was taking place both as an adviser to the grain business and as adviser to governments. His name was Clive Davidson. He worked under the governments of both Mackenzie King and R. B. Bennett. This man has been forgotten by many but he has shown the dimension of the human problem and what was done in response to it by the governments of that day. What the minister was talking about when he raised the question of the voluntary pools was this. In the thirties when the pools went broke and could not pay for the initial payment, they had to borrow money from the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. When those three provinces could no longer support the financial strain the federal government backed up the loans. As a result of this survival procedure, which was carried on from 1930 to 1932, there was general agreement to support the concept of what was eventually known as the Canadian Wheat Board. In the original bill of 1934 and again in the bill which went through the House partially in 1935, pooling was compulsory. This was fought vigorously, even viciously, if I may use that expression. This was taking away the freedom of the farmer to sell when he pleased. In spite of that, the bill got to the second reading stage, and under tremendous pressure from the opposition, the government amended the bill to make a choice. You could sell to the pool or on the market. That was the system that lasted from 1935 until 1939.

In 1939 part of the history of this parliament, which is forgotten, is that it passed four bills to get rid of the Wheat Board. Those four bills that were passed by this House to get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board were never proclaimed, because the war came along and the government of the day realized that the Canadian Wheat Board was perfect machinery to impose a system of price controls over the farmer. The Canadian Wheat Board was used as a device from 1939 and 1940 to well after the war as a system of controlling the farmers' income—the price of their grain.

Not many members of the House will remember the British wheat agreement of 1946 in which for four years we were locked into an established price based on the false assumption that there was too much grain in the world. The price was so poor that at the end of those four years parliament felt constrained to vote a sum of money in compensation to the farmers for part of the money they had lost.

This utilization of the Canadian Wheat Board as a restrictive weapon was not in the original philosophy of the Wheat Board at all. The original philosophy of the Wheat Board was simply that of a pooling device, primarily for a farmer to get an average price regardless of where he sold his grain and regardless of where he lived and the delivery took place. It was averaged out grade by grade.

Since 1949 we have had a constant debate in western Canada over the merits of the compulsory pool versus the voluntary pool. Generally speaking there will be no argument from any western member here when I say the great majority of farmers in western Canada still hold to the belief that wheat, their main crop, should remain under the 100 per cent compulsory pool. That does not mean they are 100 per cent happy with the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. It means, on their main product, they are content to take this discipline of the pool as being better than going back to the ups and downs of the market mechanisms around the world.

The price is supposed to be set, as far as Canadian wheat, Australian wheat and Argentinian wheat are concerned, by their respective wheat boards. They are supposed to calculate the amount of grain on supply around the world. They are supposed to calculate what the demand is going to be. They then try to set a price which they think will give the best price to the farmer over the whole crop year of selling. Occasionally they make mistakes, and I suspect they made a mistake last September. Only time will tell. That is how the Wheat Board operates. It does not actually sell wheat. It is simply a price setting mechanism to meet the farmers' main demand—that they get an average or pool price.

Turning to this question of voluntary pools, a good many farmers in western Canada maintain honestly and sincerely that all grains produced in western Canada should be under the compulsory pooling of the Canadian Wheat Board. Their arguments are well known. Since we have accepted this principle for wheat, likewise why not accept it for all grains to be absolutely fair to everyone? However, in view of the plebiscite, the minister knows that the great majority of farmers, even though they accept the compulsory pooling of the wheat, are reluctant to go into compulsory pooling of the other cash crops—oats, barley, feed wheat, rapeseed, flaxseed and so on.

An hon. Member: What do you mean by "oats" and "barley"?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Oats, barley, feed wheat and so on are their cash crops. The decision of the minister in this bill is not only sound politically but it has a rationale of economics behind it. The rationale of economics on rapeseed is that there is such a difference between the price you get in some years when you sell eastward and the price you get when you sell westward. I do not have a list of comparative figures for each year, but one year, for example, the difference was almost 90 cents, if you were in that part of the west where you could ship your grain westward as opposed to eastward. Each year the difference can vary a great deal. Some of the difference is caused by the freight rate structure, but mostly it is because of where the market is. Therefore, there is an economic argument that those producers who produce rapeseed feel that justice demands, if you are in Alberta or Manitoba, that you should get the same price for an equal product. That is a good argument for equity and fairness; there should be a pooling.

The other argument which the minister mentions is sound and fits in with those who want an average price over the year, as opposed to taking their chances on the day to day quotations on the value of that grain. Even though I have said the great majority of the farmers do no want all grains on a compulsory pooling, a good proportion will go for the voluntary pools, because they feel there is still going to be some competition in the voluntary pools under this bill.

We have several companies which sell rapeseed. Some are privately owned and deserve credit, because they are the ones which went out and developed the markets. Approximately 20 years ago rapeseed was a minor grain from western Canada. Due to the research done by the National Research Council here in Ottawa—the work was actually done in Saskatoon—the difficulties we had in selling our rapeseed have been overcome. It is now suitable to make margarine or a vegetable oil for which there is an insatiable and increasing demand around the world.

There are also private companies and co-operatives, and even if they got together, as the minister has suggested, there would be competition in selling. The price will still be set by supply and demand because the people who set supply and demand prices do so primarily on statistical evidence of past records, potential demands and supposed supply. But they have made serious blunders. The information is computerized and is disseminated worldwide. As I have pointed out many times across the country, the Chicago exchange, with all its boasting, can go so far wrong that it did not even know in 1971 and 1972 that the world was out of wheat. The wheat price sank to about $1.60 for our top grades. A year later Canada and the United States were out of wheat, and the price went up to $5 and more.

● (2030)

The point I am making is that the ordinary farmer, who has little or no time to worry about world supply and demand or to read all those sheets of information he gets, which half the time are wrong, would rather take an average price over a series of years so that he can concentrate his time and effort on farming and not on trying to market. On the other hand, there are other farmers who want all the cash they can get at the time they need it. Some seem to have a sixth sense when they sell. These people would probably want to take their chances on selling on the cash price basis. So this legislation meets the demand of those who believe that compulsory pooling is sound. It also meets the demand of the farmer who would like to have a little freedom to make his own decisions on when he buys and sells. This voluntary pooling allows for that.

I think the minister is quite right when he says that there has to be some discipline in the pool. In the first place the great danger with pooling is that you pay that initial price, and if the world price drops below that initial price for a good part of the crop marketing year, there could be tremendous losses. Therefore, there has to be some form of financial responsibility for that initial price, and this the government has assumed in this legislation, as I understand the minister.

That is why I said at the beginning that Her Majesty's Official Opposition approves of the principle. This plan would not work without that financial guarantee. Second, the permit book means that a contract is made and that the farmer knows that for that year he is in the pool. He cannot keep changing his mind every six weeks. That will cause a little bit of static because every so often the price is going to go soaring up. At that time he will want to be on the free market so that he can get the advantage of those soaring prices. However, once he signs with the pool and has his permit book, he is locked in for that year.

With those two points of discipline and the new features, as the minister calls them, I think these voluntary pools have a fairly good chance of working. I asked, because I did not know the answer, what about the financial responsibility beyond? As I read the legislation, the minister and the governor in council have to be assured that the plan proposed by the private company, the co-operative, by a group of them or by a new company, is soundly worked out so that they will be able to do the things that the pooling operation demands—pay their costs, pay the interest costs and all the rest of it—and then pay the amount which is left over on a fair basis to each of the members of that pool. Those who are not in the pool will take their chances. They will sell and take the price which is paid on the day they sell, so they will feel fairly satisfied.

There are a couple of other little points, but I think they are important. The development of rapeseed as a cash crop in western Canada has not only served the northern districts of our provinces well by providing them with a type of crop which does well in northern climates, where there is higher productivity but great risk because of the shortness of the season, but it has also met a great need all over the world. As I look over the various products which can be produced in the world, I do not find one of them which has a better future than oilseed crops, whether produced in Canada or any other place. As a matter of fact, I keep looking at the clay belt of northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario and wonder why all that good land lies idle when the world so desperately needs what that land can produce in the form of oilseeds. I look at other places in Canada and visualize the possibilities we have not only with rapeseed production but also with the other crops to produce the things Canada and the world need. This is not a time for a long series of remarks on that. These items may be small today, but they are going to be big in the future.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

I think I speak for my whole party when I say that the principles of this bill are good. We cannot say for sure that it will work perfectly because I can foresee the difficulties which are going to arise. I think the way the act is set up is sound. It meets the main difficulties. If we go into Committee of the Whole, I hope the minister will be able to respond to some of our doubts and questions about some of the clauses. All they can be at the present time are doubts and questions because we really do not know until the legislation has been tried.

I think this parliament would serve the country well by allowing this amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act to go forward, looking on it as a broadening of the activities of the Canadian Wheat Board, in keeping with a principle which I think is current with the majority of the farmers of western Canada. They want wheat kept as a compulsory pool, but on the other products they are of divided mind. I think this meets the demands of both sides of that argument. The argument is sincere and well discussed. It is not a question of something strange. Western producers know the arguments on both sides, and I think this is a pretty good effort to meet what the people want for this particular product, rapeseed.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today, Bill C-34, is one which urban members might think is rather boring, but I want to start off by saying to them that if it were not for the oilseed industry and the grain industry in Canada, this country would be a net importer of food. If we took away the proceeds from oilseeds and grain, last year we would have had a deficit of some $1.9 billion in food products, which is really quite startling for a country with the acreage and the small population we have. So one of the important industries we have is the oilseed and grain industry.

Bill C-34 amends the Canadian Wheat Board Act provisions dealing with oilseeds, particularly rapeseed. How that commodity is marketed is important to rapeseed producers. There have been many discussions and arguments for many years about rapeseed and how we should be marketing it. Voluntary pooling, which has not played a significant part in the prairie farm marketing system since 1931, may take on a major role in rapeseed markets under the proposed legislation we are talking about today.

On January 28, 1977 the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board introduced Bill C-34 to provide for voluntary pooling of rapeseed and other non-board grains. The bill proposes changes to the Canadian Wheat Board Act to allow associations or firms of producers, processors or traders to set up voluntary pools approved by the minister and to receive federal government guarantees for 90 per cent of the initial payments against pool proceeds.

Other provisions in the bill amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act to bring commodities marketed through approved voluntary pools under that act. Although Bill C-34 allows for the implementation of voluntary pools for other non-board grains, government spokesmen have concentrated primarily on the question of rapeseed and their proposals for the rapeseed industry. Spokesmen for major grain traders and the government are agreed that it is extremely unlikely that pools will be set up for other non-board grains. Therefore, we should be directing most of our comments toward rapeseed itself.

Other grains such as rye, flaxseed and buckwheat are not produced in large enough quantities to make a pool practical. There are few major buyers. In the case of buckwheat, my understanding is that there about three major buyers in this country, and much of the crop is forward contracted. A voluntary pool is now operated for sunflower seeds by the CSP plant in Altona, Manitoba, which is the major buyer of this commodity. Other companies, notably the company the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) talks about a lot, Cargill Grain, make occasional purchases, usually at the top of the market.

This proposed legislation would enable the implementation of voluntary pools for domestic feed grains—feed wheat, oats and barley—which are now part of the Wheat Board's compulsory export pools.

● (2040)

Since Bill C-34 deals mainly with the question of rapeseed, I think I should turn to rapeseed for a few moments. The demand for compulsory pooling in rapeseed has grown up to a point where a vote was held some three or four years ago which showed that 46 per cent of rapeseed producers wanted rapeseed marketing through the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I suspect that in my constituency, which is a representative area of rapeseed growers, the percentage has increased since the vote was taken some time ago.

Rapeseed was first grown in Canada in 1943. It dies out after the war, but reappeared again in 1955. In 1971 the crop hit a record 95 million bushels in Canada—a spectacular rise. Rapeseed now accounts for 7 per cent to 10 per cent of the Canadian farm income from field crops. However, the production remains very volatile. Even now in the 1970s annual production figures have risen or fallen by 20 million bushels four times since 1970. The returns to the producers have also fluctuated with the rise and fall in the production of rapeseed in our country. For example, if you go back to 1971 you will find that the smallest production of rapeseed was in the crop year 1974-75 when some 41,217,000 bushels of rapeseed were produced. Meanwhile, in 1971-72, 69,838,000 bushels of rapeseed were produced in Canada.

The price of rapeseed to producers also fluctuated almost as widely as the production of rapeseed itself. In 1971-72 it was $2.16 a bushel to the farmer. Four years later it was $7.06 to the farmer. A year later, in 1975-76, it was $5.10 to the farmer—a great fluctuation in the price the farmer was receiving. In the August and November period, for example, preceding the rapeseed poll in December 1973 which I referred to where 46 per cent of producers wanted rapeseed marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board, Winnipeg prices showed a spread of $2.64 a bushel, ranging from a high of $6.80 on August 14 to $4.16 on October 2. So you can see that there is a great fluctuation in the price that rapeseed producers get for their commodity, making it difficult for many of them to plan their production, in terms of their incomes and their expenditures, for the operations they are trying to run.

Canada's export position in rapeseed is quite unlike that in wheat. This country controls between 17 per cent and 25 per cent of the world's wheat export crop. The only major competitor that wheat has in world food markets is rice, the annual production of which is usually about the same as wheat. This gives the Canadian Wheat Board appreciable leverage in world markets and makes it easier for them to compete in world markets and to plan ahead.

On the other hand, Canadian rapeseed faces stiff competition from soybeans, peanuts, cottonseed, sunflowers and palm oil in world markets and at home. Processors are relatively willing and able to switch from oilseed to another if price differentials arise, and they make that switch quickly.

Rapeseed accounts for only about 6 per cent of world oilseed production, which is a small percentage. The market is keyed to soybeans; soybeans make up half the world's oilseed supply and 80 per cent of international trade. The market for soybeans, to make things worse, is notoriously volatile.

Canada's position as the world's leading exporter of rapeseed—a 70 per cent share in four of the last five years—is neatly checked by Japan's position as the leading importer, and their share has grown to 70 per cent over the last five years. When the rapeseed debate was going on, both sides in that plebiscite, campaign or debate, cited Japanese opposition to compulsory pooling as an argument for their side. The Rapeseed Producers' Association of Canada argued that producers could not afford to alienate their best customers; the three pools argued that the Japanese position proved that pooling would increase producers' bargaining power.

The pools were outraged when the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) proposed the operation of a voluntary pool during the plebiscite campaign, when the people voting thought they had a clear choice as to what they wanted to do in terms of marketing their commodity. But part way through the campaign the minister changed the rules of the game. The co-ops felt that the promise convinced some of the wavering producers to stick with the open market in order to try to reap the benefits of both systems. It is like what my friend the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) would say, that they wanted to be half pregnant; they wanted to benefit from both the systems. That is one of the reasons why it was voted down.

Whether or not the minister's timely announcement affected the result of the voting is unsure, but it had an impact. Producers did reject compulsory pooling. Only 46 per cent of them voted to market their product through the Wheat Board. Now, more than three years later, the minister is finally making good on his promise to bring about voluntary pooling.

The bill itself allows for the implementation of two types of voluntary pools. In the case of street price averaging, producers could opt to have a portion of their street price retained by a pool and averaged for a final payment. There is some controversy over whether this is really a pooling proposal. Price averaging can now be done by timing deliveries through the crop year or to forward contracting. This proposal does not seem to add much to the marketing system or hold any benefits that producers cannot already realize in other ways. In the case of full pooling, which is the other type of pool, proceeds from contracted deliveries would be pooled and producers would receive initial and, theoretically, final payments.

The possible benefits of voluntary pooling for rapeseed should be examined when we are debating the bill before us today. Since pools would bear at least part of the marketing risks normally handled by the futures market, the amount of hedging on this underspeculated market would drop. This could improve the market's performance and end chronic inversions.

The formation of producer groups might bring pressure on the Wheat Board to give higher priority to rapeseed in the allocation of quota and grain cars and so improve the handling of rapeseed. However, the board now attempts to match deliveries to sales, and further concessions to rapeseed producers could lead to a backlash from other commodity groups. The formation of pools by associations of producers who are not currently marketing rapeseed could lead to a growth in the quantity and quality of marketing information and expertise in the trade.

The effect of voluntary pools on market development would depend on their size. Small pools would do little or nothing to develop new markets; the best development work could be done by a single large pool that could afford the associated costs. That is why I argue that we should have rapeseed marketing under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. The difficulty of predicting annual patronage would work against long term marketing plans of these small pools.

However, if pool periods are set at, for example, three to five years, the pools could engage in longer term forward contracting with major customers. But the past history of bootlegging—this was a real problem for many years in the prairies—and the likelihood of it reoccurring, make long term sales contracts a risky proposition. I am referring, of course, to the bootlegging of grain.

One of the main features of Bill C-34 is the imposition of stricter delivery enforcement measures. Bootleggers would face conviction under the Canadian Wheat Board Act rather than civil suits if they were caught, and inspectors would be designated to check that producers whose permit books were endorsed for a voluntary pool delivered to that pool.

This provision sounds more meaningful than it is, however. The government's intention now is to appoint a couple of inspectors, probably part time, for the whole prairie region. We all know how large the prairies are. It would be a difficult task for a small army of inspectors to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that bootleggers' yields had not indeed varied between pool and open market acreage. Even when producers are suspected, the establishment of their guilt in criminal court would be, if anything, more difficult than in a civil suit.

Voluntary pools would remove seasonal fluctuations from producer prices. They would be relatively unable to stabilize rapeseed markets unless a single pool or a few large pools were able to exert market pressure. Given the nature of the international oilseeds market, this effect would be marginal at best unless most or all of the Canadian crop was jointly marketed. However, additional expertise and effort in marketing would in theory have a positive effect on producer prices.

Producers would benefit if organizations competed to maximize returns to members; elevator companies might cross-subsidize voluntary pools to attract patrons, although that seems highly unlikely from their current attitude. However, these benefits would be temporary and would place pools without the resources of the elevator companies at a serious competitive disadvantage.

Pooling would definitely give producers increased bargaining power with domestic crushers and could raise returns from that sector. But this could force marginal processors—already facing substantial transportation disadvantages to compete even in eastern Canada—out of business.

On the other hand, Bill C-34 gives processors the right to create voluntary pools. Processors will probably be the first to set them up, either in self-defence or to gain a competitive edge over their rivals. The possibility of conflicts of interest if crushers operate pools and continue to buy on the open market is real. Some of the new crushing plants are in desperate financial straits and may try to use voluntary pools to lower their seed-buying costs.

Similarly, elevator companies would face conflicts in assigning sales to pools or their own stocks. The temptation would be to assign high-priced sales to company stocks and low-priced sales to the pool. This creates another problem for this House and members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture which should be looked at very seriously before legislation is passed to establish voluntary pools.

However, firms operating pools could require a producer board to make all marketing decisions or could pro-rate all sales between pool and open market stocks. These devices would reduce the possibility of conflicts. The costs of operating voluntary rapeseed pools are not yet known. I do not think the government or the minister could hazard a good guess as to what the costs will actually be. To my knowledge, government officials have not attempted to cost voluntary pool operation. It is clear, however, that the larger the pool the smaller the per-bushel operating costs will be. Logically, a single pool operated by the Wheat Board—that is the argument this party has made for many years—which already has the necessary accounting systems in place, would show the smallest operating charges and would make the most sense for the country and for the producers.

The most important aspect of the bill is the provision for federal government guarantees of 90 per cent of initial payments. This could bring stability to the rapeseed market and encourage production. However, if history repeats itself, the pools will be marketing residual deliveries and will stabilize prices at lower levels than they could theoretically realize.

Initial price setting in the complex oilseeds market will be a difficult task; it will be more difficult if pools do not have the market power—that is, size—to be able to withstand pressure to sell below initial prices. Large well-funded pools could wait out low prices; small ones would have to take their losses or face bankruptcy from mounting storage and carrying charges.

The complexity of the international and domestic market is a key consideration. The additional flexibility that voluntary pooling would add to the system is accompanied by a great deal of additional complexity. The benefits of voluntary pools must be more than theoretical to justify this added complexity.

Bill C-34 adds complexity not only to the rapeseed market but to the non-board grain markets as well. Although current conditions make the operation of voluntary pools in domestic feed grains unlikely, conditions will change and pools would be set up if opportunities for profit existed. If opportunities for profit are not there, I am sure the pools will not be set up by crushers or Cargill or anybody else who wants to make money from the hard labour of the farmers.

This raises the possibility of the federal government guaranteeing 90 per cent of the losses of a privately-operated pool competing with a government agency. Here we have a privately owned pool established by the government to compete with the agency of the government, the Canadian Wheat Board. That does not make sense. Again it is more unnecessary complexity at an unthought of benefit—or cost—to producers. We should be looking after the producers and not creating fatter bank accounts for the crushers or Cargill.

Voluntary pooling will introduce additional complexity and potential conflicts of interest into the prairie farm marketing system and return unproven but at best marginal benefits to producers. The greatest benefits may indeed go to producers who continue to use the futures market.

Perhaps this is one of the reasons behind the bill. Does the minister hope more and more producers will go to the futures market, weaken the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board, weaken orderly marketing and then one day we will all wake up and he will be able to say that very few people are interested in the Canadian Wheat Board and orderly marketing so perhaps the board should cease to exist? I am sure the minister or his advisers have that in mind as an objective when they introduce a bill such as this.

Returns for pool patrons would be maximized and most development benefits realized by a single pool marketing all or most of the crop and with the market power to overcome rapeseed's relative insignificance in the oilseeds trade. However, when producers voted against marketing their crop through the Canadian Wheat Board they essentially rejected the single-agency approach.

Bill C-34 attempts to solve the problems that have led to historical failures in voluntary pooling. However, while it changes the rules, it does not change the game; the basic causes of past failures remain. When the government introduced the bill I think they forgot some of the lessons of history I went over in my remarks this evening that made voluntary pooling a failure in the past. The attempt by government officials to reach a compromise is the creation of a beast, and I think is worse than either of the two options open to the farmers. Bootlegging could only be controlled by a compulsory board. The readiness of producers to deliver to outside pools to maximize returns will not magically evaporate.

Rapeseed producers had 40 years of Canadian Wheat Board experience to examine when they voted in the 1973 plebiscite. At least some of them wanted the best of both systems—I think that is what the minister is trying to provide tonight—and that is one of the leading causes of voluntary pooling failure. Voluntary pools, if they are implemented under Bill C-34, are likely to fail again as they have failed before.

For these reasons I oppose the bill, Mr. Speaker. I urge the minister to consider very seriously the changes we have argued for in this House in the past, namely that all prairie grains be marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board and all prairie farmers share the risks and share the profits from marketing their crops. A society develops through working together in this way. When we examine the record we find that voluntary pooling has been a failure in this country; it is not likely to succeed for rapeseed when it has failed in the past for other commodities. I therefore look forward to asking the minister questions in committee and, on behalf of this country's rapeseed growers, hearing him clarify some portions of the bill.

• (2100)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the beginning that I support the minister on this bill. Perhaps it is not the solution everybody wants, and it may please few, but at least it is an attempt to satisfy those who, in the rapeseed plebiscite, showed some interest in pooling rapeseed production. They want to set up some mechanism for pooling. Representatives of grain handling companies told me in private conversation they would be willing to look favourably on a pooling system and, if enough people are interested, it could succeed.

We have only four or five large grain handling companies in western Canada, the three pools, UGG, Cargills, a private company, Pattersons, and a couple more. Farmers through their organizations control between 75 per cent and 80 per cent of all grain handled in the west. Since farmers control so much of grain grown, I see no reason why they should not if they wish set up a voluntary pool system. I cannot say how effective it will be, since if the farmers were to use only one pooling system or the Wheat Board to sell their rapeseed, production would drop off, as would sales.

Rapeseed is fairly widely grown in the west and sold on the open market. Despite the disadvantages of the open market, some farmers prefer to sell on it, including those who have the Wheat Board market their wheat, barley and oats. They recognize, as the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said, that rapeseed forms only a small part of total world oilseed production. Most vegetable oil comes from soybeans, and the price of rapeseed oil bears some relation to the price of soybean oil. Both soybeans and rapeseed contain meal and oil. Sometimes oil prices are high; sometimes meal prices are high. Sometimes the prices of rapeseed and soybeans appear out of line; but this happens when the price of soybeans fluctuates for oil and meal, or vice versa. Some tropical countries, including Malaysia, produce coconut oil and palm oil. Perhaps these oils will be serious competitors for rapeseed and soybean oils. Most of these palm oil plantations have been financed with American money and American farmers are asking why their money is being used to produce a product which competes with soybean oil. Vast acreages in Brazil are being cultivated for soybean crops. Clearly, rapeseed by itself does not command a market. On the other hand, demand for our wheat is strong.

Hon. members have related what happens to wheat prices when wheat is in over-supply. The United States and Canada control about 70 per cent of total wheat exports; therefore on the face of it it should be easy to draw up some commodity agreement. But past experience shows that commodity agreements do not work. For instance, the last time the Wheat Board held an umbrella over our wheat market, in 1968 or 1969, I think, our competitors quoted two or three cents a bushell less and took all our orders.

No one mentioned, I think, how we establish market price, or how the price discovery mechanism works. At present prices are determined on the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange, but those prices bear a close relation to the soybean market in the United States. As I said, rapeseed and soybean prices are not interchangeable or necessarily comparable, because one may sell for its oil and the other for its meal. I understand that only on the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange is there a futures market for rapeseed. If trading in the commodity should end because not enough is traded, I suggest the market price of rapeseed could go down.

In addition, we should have no price discovery mechanism. The Canadian Wheat Board uses the Chicago grain futures and futures posted in Kansas City and Minneapolis for its price discovery mechanism. The board phones Chicago about every ten minutes to see if wheat has gone up or down, and posts its prices accordingly. Canada has an excellent reputation for selling wheat of high quality. Although world wheat marketing has changed, people prefer to buy some of our premium wheat over American redspring and Australian wheat. Our wheat is among the best in its class, and has high protein content.

What sort of people grow rapeseed? From my experience, the rapeseed grower is usually interested in trying a new crop and selling it himself. Many farmers are content to grow wheat, haul it to the elevator, let the Wheat Board sell it, and go back to the land to grow some more. Rapeseed growers seem more interested in raising a special crop, harvesting it and selling it themselves. Rapeseed needs more husbanding than the wheat or coarse grains we grow on the prairies. You must harvest it more carefully, be more careful when using herbicides, and careful when determining selling time. Many successful farmers of my area who grow rapeseed and flax feel they can do better with those crops than with wheat or coarse grains whose price the Wheat Board sets.

Since wheat tends to be grown on land used for summer fallow, it follows that wheat should give the farmer a higher return than oilseeds which tend to be grown as a second crop and not marketed through the Wheat Board. Theoretically, oilseeds should bring the farmer a smaller return. But those who follow these matters have discovered that, generally speaking, the oilseed grower realizes somewhat more than if he sold wheat, barley and oats. This is significant. It indicates that, as far as oilseeds are concerned, the open market provides returns in line with what the Wheat Board can do with wheat. The return is comparable to growing wheat, at least in the area that I represent.

Considerable difficulties will arise with the voluntary system. A grower who selects a pool may be quite happy at the beginning of the year when he receives his initial payment. What happens as the year goes on and the price goes higher than he expects to receive from pooling? It does not matter to him that he may have sold quickly and was guaranteed an initial price. It does not matter that he took advantage of that. When the price goes up, he will be unhappy that he did not hold off joining the voluntary pool and instead sell on the open market. Human nature being what it is, you always expect to get the highest return possible. Those who sold their grain or rapeseed early in the crop year may realize a reasonable price. It may have been low, but they have received their money for it. Those who hold their crop take a chance as to whether they are going to receive more later in the year.

The problems raised by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) with regard to bootlegging are quite real. They are also real in the Wheat Board's handling of wheat, oats and barley when there is an oversupply.

As for the previous situation with regard to barley, a parliamentary committee was set up to study whether barley was being bootlegged, being sold from farm to farm at lower than the elevator price. The answer was that there was an oversupply of barley. Farmers were glad to get rid of it at any price. There is no point having a high price for a particular grain unless you can sell it.

There will be this problem of so-called bootlegging. It may be that two farmers will set up a scheme whereby one will join the pool and the other will not. They can take advantage of the situation, selling whichever way is the most advantageous, either through the pool or selling non-pool.

There is also the question of advancement of initial payment. From reading the bill, I assume the government will be involved in some sort of underwriting of an initial payment. I do not see how the pool would be able to guarantee a high initial price without running some risk. In a highly volatile oilseed market, there could on occasion be disastrous results if the initial payment is set too high. On the other hand, if the payment is not set high enough, there will be no one interested in joining the voluntary pools.

I believe these problems could be worked out. There could be a modus vivendi whereby those who want to pool will have an opportunity to do so. Perhaps with time and experience the problems that arise could be worked out and the scheme made to work. I know that many oilseed and rapeseed producers prefer the open market. The plebiscite showed that. I am not averse to having this pooling.

This bill is not the perfect solution. It is experimental and possibly visionary. At least it is an attempt to come to grips with the problem of 200,000 or so permit holders with different ideas as to how their grain and oilseeds should be marketed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the minister and the two speakers from the official opposition, I have reluctantly to conclude that there are still people around who do not learn from history. They do not profit from experience whatsoever.

I listened to the spokesmen from the government and official opposition expound the beauty and advantages of the open market ad nauseam. When the majority of the grain producers vote for the open free market, who are the first ones to run into this House saying they want a 90 percent guarantee of the initial payments of the voluntary pools? My free and open market friends. Where is the free and open market they say is so good?

How come that great commodity exchange and the great free open market for rapeseed and flax and other grains is so beneficial to the farmer? Why is it necessary to have voluntary pools which will sell that rapeseed on the open free market which, according to the government and the official opposition, is so beautiful? Both of them feel it should have a 90 per cent guarantee of initial payments against pool proceeds.

I thought this free and open market that the majority of rapeseed producers fought for was the be all and end all. That is what I thought from listening to the Liberals and Conservatives. In this legislation we have nothing more than the government, supported by the official opposition, shoring up commodity exchanges and oilseed speculators. It has little or nothing to do with the protection of the incomes of grain producers. It cannot succeed in light of the history of voluntary pools.

If the government were genuinely sincere about their support for the Canadian Wheat Board and the free and orderly market, they would quit trying to have it both ways. The government and the official opposition like to run on both sides of the street at once. They talk out of both sides of their mouths at once. They want wheat, oats and barley under the Wheat Board, and flax, rye and rapeseed on the free market. They want to have it both ways. The government will put up a guarantee in order to shore up their friends on the commodity exchanges. I question their motive and sincerity. I certainly question their logic.

I am disappointed in the failure of the government to study the history of voluntary and contractual pools in western Canada since 1921. Voluntary pools are marketing pools in which membership is not compulsory as it is under the Canadian Wheat Board. They will be required to deliver all or part of their production by means of contracts. In this case I presume it will be signatures and permit books. I thought it was to be a voluntary pool. If it is a voluntary pool that the government and the official opposition want, why do they bring in that old bogeyman and make it compulsory? If you can volunteer in, why can't you volunteer out? Again they want to have it both ways. They want to talk out of both sides of their mouths. They are all for orderly marketing; rape boards are a great thing. They want voluntary pools with government guarantees to shore up the free and open market system.

Voluntary quotas assume the existence of some contractual delivery obligation on the patrons of that pool and Bill C-34 would oblige. Where is the "voluntary"? The bill obliges producers to deliver to their voluntary pool once they have joined. If you can volunteer in—I ask the question again—why can you not volunteer out?

Volunteer pools have risen and fallen before on the prairies. The most spectacular rise and fall was that of the wheat pool in 1923 to 1931. The voluntary pool was established then in the hope that it could recapture for the producers some of the benefits they had enjoyed under selling agencies during and right after the first world war. Then they had compulsory orderly marketing and it was felt that by having voluntary pools, starting in 1923, they could get the same benefits.

Well, what happened? The Canadian Wheat Board had removed seasonal fluctuations in prices to producers by pooling returns for the whole crop and making initial and final payments. Initial payments had also reduced the farmers' dependence on banks for operating capital. In 1921, a year after the Wheat Board was abolished and futures marketing had been reinstated, the average price to producers was down by 85 cents a bushel, a drop of 34 per cent from the previous year.

Producers in those days were more than even convinced that speculators were robbing them and the then premier of Saskatchewan, W. A. Martin, asked former Wheat Board chairmen James Stewart and F. W. Ridell to report on the prospects of voluntary or contract pooling. Their report cautioned that no voluntary or contract pooling would benefit producers as much as one compulsory pool such as they had experienced under the Canadian Wheat Board during the first world war. The report said voluntary pools could reduce seasonal fluctuations in producer prices and were worth a try. They pointed out that three-quarters of the prairie wheat corridor crop was marketed in one quarter of the year when prices were chronically depressed, and that more orderly marketing would increase the price to producers. Consumers would benefit as well, they said, because flour prices were tied to wheat prices. Consumers were buying flour made from low-priced wheat at high-priced wheat rates later in the year. I submit the same thing could and would occur with rapeseed products.

Both Stewart and Ridell proposed voluntary pools as opposed to contract pools operating alongside the open market. They said contract pools would be too difficult to implement because farmers would not want to sign up for an untried system. Well, they were wrong about that. Contract pools were implemented in 1923-24, when the price of wheat was down $1.43 from its Wheat Board high. The pools merged and eventually claimed 140,000 members selling half the western wheat crop to a central selling agency. Prices bounced up 65 cents a bushel in 1924-25 and remained 20 to 30 cents a bushel higher than the free pool open market prices until the record crop year of 1928 was marketed for just a little less than the 1922 crop. With the onset of the depression and falling grain prices, the pools ran into insurmountable difficulties. They were unable to realize sufficient returns to make initial payments without borrowing from the government. This saddled the three farmer-owned co-operatives with debts they were unable to pay off until 15 years after that voluntary pool system went broke.

Under this pressure the pool was forced to lower initial payments and it became clear that patronage for new pool periods was sure to decline. Producers reneged on delivery contracts in massive numbers. Bootlegging was not new, Mr. Speaker. In 1926 when Saskpool officials estimated they had 80 per cent of the province's wheat acreage under contract, they received 56 per cent of the deliveries. And that was a so-called voluntary pool, Mr. Speaker.

Some members delivered to the open market when they felt returns there were better. That reduced the pool's ability to maximize returns for all pool members. Although the pool did not survive, it did contribute to economic growth and development in those years, 1923-28. It certainly removed seasonal fluctuation from prices paid to patrons and it appears to have raised prices to producers substantially over what they might have expected from the open market during that five-year period. As a result of that experience, pressure from grain producers was certainly increased—politically, that is—for compulsory pooling and the return of the Wheat Board by educating farmers in the advantages of single desk selling and of collectively extending their risk-taking further into the marketing system to reduce those risks and maximize their return.

The pool of the 1920s, Mr. Speaker, pioneered in the field of market development as a central selling agency. It bypassed the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. It sent agents overseas to promote direct sales to major customers. It contributed to the development of co-operatively-owned storage systems to reduce handling margins paid by producers. The number of country elevators owned by the three provincial wheat pools increased from 119 in 1925 to 1,650 in 1931. That was when the co-operatives controlled one-third of the country's terminal capacity. Those figures represent a substantial part of the 1,667 country elevators added to the system during the life of that pool during the 1920s.

Let me turn now to a little more recent history. Those provincial pools tried again to return to voluntary pooling in 1959 when they were looking for a tool to encourage rapeseed production. The various voluntary pools achieved an initial 40 per cent sign-up, but four years later patronage had fallen to 18 per cent and the pools were dissolved when the Winnipeg Exchange opened trading on Vancouver rapeseed futures.

Again there were serious problems of bootlegging to the open market where prices were higher. Bootlegging was done through whom, Mr. Speaker? I wonder whether the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) or the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), were he the minister, would implement the provisions of this bill in the knowledge that bootlegging will again be done as it was in 1959. How? Well, through members of the same family; through neighbours; through friends. I can see the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board ordering his inspectors to press criminal charges against members of a rapeseed grower's family or his neighbour or friends. I wonder whether the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain will gallop around the prairies with him insisting that criminal charges be laid when these people want to volunteer out of a pool they volunteered into.

Some producers contracted only part of their crop to the pool and then claimed that yields had been higher in fields planted for the open market. Little has been written about rapeseed pools but spokesmen from the farmer co-ops say the pools were both unable and unwilling to force patrons to honour delivery contracts. Litigation would have been time-consuming and expensive. It would also have alienated producers who delivered other commodities to co-operative elevators. The pools have been regarded as a development tool. Whether or not they continued to increase production or not is, of course, questionable. In their first year of operation the value of rapeseed rose 60 per cent to just over $2 a bushel and in the following year production tripled. But prices had been higher in pre-pool days and production in the last two years of the pool operations dropped back to the same level they were in the 1956-57 crop years. That experience has soured the farmer-owned co-operatives against voluntary pools.

• (2130)

The Alberta Wheat Pool vice president, Mr. Alan MacPherson, has said that their co-operative has had other bad experiences with voluntary pooling for porridge seeds. In some years the co-operative offered only pool buying, and others operated a pool and bought outright as well. In either case the result was the same—the open market got high price seed and the pool got low price seed. These pools will not be offered again by the co-operative owned elevator companies.

Another example is the CSP voluntary pool for sunflower seeds, which continues to operate at the Altona crushing plant. I hope the minister does not try to hold it up as a great example. Mr. Sarsons said that this system is not really a pool. Since the Altona mill is the only crusher, the operation is really a forward contracting operation with price averaging.

The Altona operation does exhibit a common characteristic of voluntary pools. Outside buyers make one time buys at the top of the market, and that reverberates throughout the system and leaves the pool buying the residual. Mr. Sarsons states that the CSP pool "does not work very well" and would be a poor model for rapeseed marketing. The cost of operating the pool is not allocated or reported back to producers but is part of the overhead of that plant seed buying program.

Some 50 years later, after Mr. Stewart and Mr. Riddell reported, the rapeseed marketing commission remained convinced that voluntary pools could operate alongside the open market. The commission reported that despite the history of voluntary pools, voluntary pooling for rapeseed would benefit producers by reducing marketing risks and possibly raising prices by strengthening producers' bargaining powers with the domestic crushers and upgrading marketing skills. At the same time, the commission warned that the only practical possibility for large volume pooling is a prairiewide pool. They gave as reasons the difficulty in showing results comparable to the open market and the necessity to subsidize pools to meet competitive levels. The committee felt that elevator companies which could operate pools would not do so, because they feared getting into price wars with competing pools. That would force them to cross-subsidize and enforce delivery under contract.

Besides this single agency voluntary pool, the commission evaluated a compulsory pooling through the Wheat Board and found it would not suffer from the problems of enforcement. Mr. Speaker, two years later the pressure for such a compulsory pool resulted in the pool producer marketing referendum. As if the deck was not stacked well enough in the beginning of that referendum, and as the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said, at the height of that campaign on the referendum for rapeseed marketing the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board announced that, if producers would not vote for a compulsory pool, he would bring in enabling legislation for voluntary pools. If that is not influence peddling of the first order, I have never seen any. If that is not a direct intervention by a spokesman for the government, in what was supposed to be an open and democratic vote, I have never seen one. If that was not an attempt to influence the vote, I have never seen one.

The evidence and the history is irrefutable. The size of rapeseed production in Canada related to the total world production of oilseeds is so small that unless you have one single pooling you cannot amount to very much in the world market for oilseeds. It makes more sense to have rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board with a pooling arrangement being compulsory, the same as it is for wheat, oats and barley. In that kind of a situation it would make more sense, considering our position in competition with other oilseeds. It would make more sense to have rapeseed under a single pool under the Canadian Wheat Board than it would to have wheat, oats and barley.

The logic and the reasoning of the minister and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) escapes me completely. I can understand the whole philosophy behind this bill, but my philosophy is the opposite of theirs. The philosophy behind this bill is to do nothing more than shore up the so-called free enterprise open market system. If that free enterprise open market system is so good, I do not understand why the official opposition would even ask for a 90 per cent guarantee of initial payments against the pool-proceeds. They have been telling us for years that the open and free market system is the best and cannot be beaten. They have been telling us it will work best for the farmer and it will save him. Then they turn around with the other hand out, like a typical free enterpriser—the greatest welfare bums in the country—wanting a 90 per cent guarantee from the government on that free enterprise open market voluntary pool. If that is not trying to have it both ways, I have never seen it.

If the minister attempts to legislate compulsion into a voluntary pool, then he is in for a lot of trouble and so are his friends in the official opposition who support him in this legislation. If the minister thinks he can use the Canadian Wheat Board, which does not believe it can operate a voluntary rapeseed pool under this legislation, I will bet you a dollar to a hole in a doughnut that they will not operate a voluntary rapeseed pool unless the minister interferes with the operations of the board and makes them do it.

For the minister in this legislation to use the Canadian Wheat Board, its accounting and its permit books as a weapon over farmers who volunteer into the pool and as a method of making it compulsory for them to stay in the pool, surely smacks of some kind of hypocrisy, even from a free enterpriser. I do not believe a voluntary pool can work with the provisions in this bill. The history of voluntary pools has been so sad and so painful both to grain producers and to governments over the last 50 years that one would have thought the hon. minister and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain would have learned a lesson from history for a change. Yet they still blindly, insensitively and ignorantly try to continue down a path which has been proven to be bad and proven to be the wrong road to take. Surely the Official Opposition will join us in saying, "Look, leave our rapeseed producers alone in the free and open market, which the majority of them voted for, or put the whole thing under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and quit trying to horse around with half measures". They should quit trying to have it both ways. It will not work. It can only harm the whole principle of orderly marketing. This is nothing more than another attempt to bring orderly marketing into disrepute, to weaken the Canadian Wheat Board and to lessen its strength in the marketplace of the world on behalf of our Canadian grain producers.

● (2140)

I am appalled that hon. members in the Official Opposition can get to their feet and blithely and blandly agree to this legislation, saying they will support it and commending the minister for it. I did not think they would ever commend the minister for anything, but when it comes to something like so-called free enterprise and an open and free market, by golly, and those chickens of a feather flock together. They are holding hands with each other. I am sure the boys in the open market in Winnipeg are very pleased with them. No doubt the commodity fellows in Vancouver, Chicago and in a few other places will be very happy with them.

Mr. Nystrom: "Alvin and Otto".

Mr. Benjamin: They are the great twins in what I consider a betrayal of the whole principle of orderly marketing and the strengthening of Canadian grain producers in the face of the competition we get from the rest of the world. This is a sham. It will not work. The rapeseed growers' own elevator companies and their organizations say they are not interested in voluntary pools. They have been twice bitten and they are four times shy. I hope those farmer-owned grain companies will stick to their guns. I hope this legislation will prove be completely ineffectual. I hope it will be shown up for what it is—nothing more than window dressing in terms of what it will do for rapeseed producers.

This legislation is a shoring up or a strengthening of the so-called open and free market system. If the Progressive Conservative Party is sincere in its advocacy of private enterprise, it will denounce this interference with rapeseed producers who want to pool their grain voluntarily but who are compelled to stay in the pool. I would have thought that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain would have been thundering away like a 40-mile an hour chinook; but no, he was like soft winds over still waters, supinely and docilely agreeing with the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I never thought I would live to see the day. It was bad enough and sad enough when the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) did the same thing. He is quite a nice fellow. But I never thought I would live to see the day when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain would lie down so quietly and so obediently in the face of the history of both voluntary and contractual pools during the 1920's and again in 1959 and accept the minister's proposals. I always thought the Conservatives abhorred and hated the word "compulsory" or "compel".

However, the hon. member agrees that the minister should compel, through the use of an orderly marketing system and through the use of Canadian Wheat Board permit books, rapeseed producers to stay inside the pool even if the bottom drops out of the rapeseed market. They cannot volunteer out of something they volunteered into. That is inconsistent. They can volunteer in, but they cannot volunteer out. The free and open market is best, but there have to be 90 per cent government guarantees! That is inconsistent too. It does not surprise me, coming from the minister, but I would have thought that the official opposition would at least have made some passing attempt to be consistent with what is supposed to be its philosophy.

I have spoken to officials of the three wheat pools. I have spoken to rapeseed producers and grain producers generally over the past months. None of them voiced any confidence whatsoever in a volunteer pool. None of my mail has been in favour of volunteer pools. Farmers who have been in the grain growing business for decades have learned their lesson from history and profited from bitter experience. The prairie wheat pools profited from the bitter experience of 1959. Where is the Progressive Conservative Party, or the Liberal Party for that matter, when it comes to learning some lessons from history? It has to be one or the other; it is either the free and open market period, or it is orderly marketing under the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Nystrom: You can't be half pregnant.

Mr. Benjamin: To try to use the Canadian Wheat Board orderly marketing system and wheat board permit books to shore up the free enterprise system and to make the open market work better at the expense of grain producers is some kind of political and economic chicanery. These great believers in the free and open market do not have the courage to see if that free and open market will stand the test. They know that it has not stood the test since the late 1800's. Grain producers have lost out. Elevator companies owned by grain producers have lost out time after time, whether it was under volunteer pools, contractual pools or whatever. They know from bitter experience.

I hope the official opposition will re-think its position on this particular item. I hope for a change hon. members to my right will talk out of just one side of their mouths and say that since the majority of rapeseed producers do not want the free and open market for the marketing of rapeseed, the Conservative Party does not want it either. Since hon. members to my right are always complaining about people running around with their hands out trying to get government help, they should be the last ones to want to have a 90 per cent government guarantee of initial payments against pool proceeds which are operating on the free and open market.

It must be an insult to a genuine free and open marketer to have to ask the government to give a guarantee. If the free and open market is so good, it should be able to stand on its own feet. According to the free and open marketers, it will be of great benefit to the rapeseed producer. After all, when rapeseed prices can fluctuate from $1.50 to $2 in five or six weeks, all the rapeseed producer can say is that he has been fluctuated again.

It will be interesting to see how the minister continues to try to justify this legislation. There is not one bit of legitimate justification. Prior to voting on the rapeseed plebescite, the minister gave the commitment that, if the producers did not vote for a compulsory pool, he would bring in enabling legislation for a voluntary pool; so at least in that sense the man is being honest. However, I am surprised that the official opposition is supporting him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Unless he gets unanimous consent to continue, I will have to recognize another hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member requesting unanimous consent?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, since everybody is dying to hear more.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Since there has been an overwhelming request that I continue, I shall, and I thank my hon. colleagues for their kindness.

I want to discuss some information which has been provided to me. It is interesting to note that there is a fight brewing over the definitions in the bill. There is a debate as to whether the bill allows the Wheat Board to operate a voluntary rapeseed pool. I understand that the Wheat Board does not think voluntary pooling will work, and it says that this bill will not allow it to offer one anyway. The minister's advisers say they framed the bill specifically to allow the Wheat Board to form a voluntary pool. I am looking for an explanation from the minister.

I would also like to get an explanation with regard to the establishing of marketing plans. Clause 35.11(1) of the bill reads as follows:

> Any association representing a significant number of producers engaged in the production of grain or any association or firm engaged in the processing or marketing of grain in interprovincial or export trade may submit to the Minister for his review and recommendation to the Governor in Council a written proposal for the establishment of a marketing plan.

That will be the voluntary pool. I would like to know why there is nothing in the bill which defines an association. What is an association? What is "a significant number"? I do not see how, without any explanation from the minister, anybody can accept this bill. I do not see how it can work. It is just left purely and simply to the whims of the minister. He can pick and choose any association rapeseed producers want. He can say: "This one is significant, so therefore I will allow it; this one is not, therefore I will not allow it". I know that is something the official opposition wants to see. If that is the Wheat Board's unofficial and off-the-record reaction, it is typical of comments made by people in the grain trade on the whole matter of voluntary pools.

● (2150)

The line elevator companies were unanimous that they will heartily resist the setting up of voluntary pools and their hope is that everyone else will, too. That is not the Alberta, Manitoba or Saskatchewan wheat pools. It is M. M. Patterson and Sons, the Pioneer Grain Company, the Cargill Grain Company, and any other private elevator companies. They are resisting it heartily. Government officials took some delight in giving credit to Cargill Grain Company for encouraging the Minister of Transport to set up voluntary pools. That is not the way I heard it. The way I heard it, the company's executive vice president, Mr. Dick Dawson, said:

> I think we'd be the last to set one up. I frankly doubt we'll see them even in rapeseed.

The possible benefits for pooling rapeseed should be examined. Since the pools would bear at least part of the marketing risks normally handled by the futures market, the amount of hedging on this underspeculated market would drop. This could improve the market's performance and end chronic inversions. The formation of producer groups might bring pressure on the Wheat Board to give higher priority to rapeseed in the allocation of quota and grain cars and so improve the handling of rapeseed. However, the board now attempts to match deliveries to sales and further concessions to rapeseed producers could lead to a backlash from other community groups. You could have wheat growers, barley raisers and flax and rye producers on your neck really fast if you started giving preferential treatment to rapeseed producers for any period of time.

The formation of pools by associations of producers who are not currently marketing rapeseed could lead to a growth in the quantity and quality of marketing information and expertise in the trade. The effect of voluntary pools on market development would depend on their size. Small pools would do little or nothing to develop new markets; the best development work could be done by a single large pool which could afford the associated costs.

The difficulty of predicting annual patronage would work against long term marketing plans by one or more small voluntary pools. Surely it is obvious and patently plain that the only sensible policy which would bring maximum benefits to producers of rapeseed is to put that grain under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, which can operate pools for rapeseed just as it does for wheat, oats and barley. That is not socialist dogma; it is not ideology put out by the NDP. That is an idea that has been fought for by grain producers since the 1880s. It has been worked for, fought for and paid for by grain producers in the three prairie provinces ever since then.

The principle of orderly marketing has been supported by people of all political stripes. This legislation is nothing more than an attempt to leave loopholes so that the so-called free and open market can be strengthened. Any time this parliament or this government or any other government wants me to vote in favour of providing a 90 per cent guarantee for the so-called open and free market, I want nothing to do with it. I urge the House to defeat this legislation and to call on the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and on the government to bring rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, to provide a pooling system for rapeseed as they do for other grains so that grain producers in western Canada would be better off and would be forever grateful.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is consent in the House that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole instead of referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and that the motion be read accordingly.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I support that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have already given our agreement for the bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole. That does not mean we are for second reading of the bill; we are not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion be modified so that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole instead of the Standing Committee on Agriculture?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement to the motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the Chair.

On Clause 1.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, clause 1 could probably be dealt with in more detail, but to expedite matters, may I put a question to the minister. I am a little concerned about the precise details of the relationship between the Canadian Wheat Board and the various voluntary pools. Could the minister explain that hypothetical relationship so we could have a picture of what he envisages in setting up these pools?

Mr. Lang: The only relationship between a pool and the Wheat Board is the relationship between the pool and the Wheat Board Act. The permit book may be endorsed with the notation that the producer is a member of a pool and therefore may deliver his grain only to that pool That is because he will have contracted with the pool along those lines. There is no other necessary connection between the pool administrators as such and the Wheat Board. It would be the government that would have to take responsibility for approving the financial stability and the adequacy of the plan which the particular proponent of the pool is putting forward, and also to ensure and guarantee the initial price. The Wheat Board need have no connection with any of that proceeding.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That means that if, for instance, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool offers to its members a plan and gets approval from the minister, he will guarantee 90 per cent of the initial payment, and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is responsible for the selling of that grain on any market without any influence by the Wheat Board.

Mr. Lang: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

● (2200)

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): One final question, Mr. Chairman. Suppose five voluntary pools were set up in western Canada. Does the minister visualize that they would be competing for markets as opposed to a single pool with no compulsion to compete?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that would be very much the case. I think they would be competing very vigorously because the final payment at the end of the year would be quite a revelation in terms of their over-all performance during the year. Obviously the department would have to distinguish between good luck and good judgment in the selling process but there would be vigorous competition between the pools if there were several.

Mr. Nystrom: I understand there is a debate going on about whether the Wheat Board itself could participate in or establish a voluntary pool. If my information is correct, some advisers of the Wheat Board believe they cannot. I should like to know whether the minister thinks they can.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I believe the question whether they can would depend upon the interpretation of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I have not asked that question of my legal advisers because I had not thought it very likely that the Wheat Board would be apt to do so in any case. I see some difficulties in their doing so in terms of financial backing and the relationship between such a pool and their other operations. I do not know of any intention on their part to enter into such activity, so I have considered that question rather theoretically, as one not needing an answer. Therefore I have not asked for an answer.

Mr. Nystrom: I wonder if the minister would look into that, because things may change a few years ahead. Does the minister at this time envisage any other grain producers setting up voluntary pools? I understand the act allows for producers of oilseed commodities other than rapeseed to establish pools as well.

Mr. Lang: Not at this time, Mr. Chairman. I know of no significantly expressed interest at this point. I think if the pooling development worked well in relation to rapeseed demands, other grains could follow. Where there is a sufficient volume of grain I would see no difficulty responding to that demand.

Mr. Nystrom: Could the minister tell us at this time who he expects to participate in the pools? I think the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said the wheat pools at this stage are not interested in doing so, and I have heard some others say the same thing about the private companies as well. I wonder if the minister has received any indication in his office of what groups or associations might be considering pools.

Mr. Lang: I have had some conversations which lead me to believe there will be an interest in a pool. These were discussions of a preliminary nature so we will have to see how they are followed up once the legislation is in place. I hope the pools will look at the possibility themselves because a good number of pool members would appreciate the opportunity of pooling in relation to rapeseed and the pools might not want to lose those members to competitors if an alternative pool were set up.

Mr. Nystrom: I wonder if the minister could answer precisely, Mr. Chairman; that was only a guess. Has he done any serious thinking about the cost of operating the pools because of the government guarantee? I know the minister cannot answer precisely because we do not know how they will be operating at this stage, but is there any ball park figure?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Chairman, but the experience with the guarantee to the Canadian Wheat Board is an indication of the modest cost that is likely to be involved. Under the pattern of the act, initial prices are really meant to be set at a level which is likely to be safe in any case. The call upon the guarantee is only likely to occur in very drastically changing circumstances. In the case of wheat, barley and oats this has seldom occurred. One occasion when it did occur was when the government knew fairly well that it was inviting the risk of that occurring and therefore in a sense using the initial price slightly differently from its original intention. I would not see that happening very often in this case.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a final question, then cede the floor to other questioners. A number of rapeseed producers have told me about their concerns with regard to bootlegging. Is the legislation drafted so as to penalize bootleggers or to discourage bootlegging? How strictly will the regulations be enforced? Further, will the minister make sure that those regulations are enforced?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, we certainly want to see them enforced. The person participating in the pool would be under a contractual obligation, legally binding. We are adding a penal provision to strengthen that obligation. There will be law to enforce it, since if someone is under a contractual obligation to a pool and withdraws, it is most unfair to the others. In practical and moral terms it is like a theft. It is not exactly like a theft under the Criminal Code, but it deserves the added enforcement and penalty provisions in the bill.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister how the initial payment will be set? Will it be done after consultations, assuming there is more than one pool? What will be the minister's influence on the process? Will a formula be worked out? Further, will the initial price be the same for all pools?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I expect the pools will tend to adopt the highest available initial price, because they will want farmers to supply them with rapeseed. The initial price in the end will be determined by the federal government's guarantee. This process is followed in relation to the initial price paid by the Canadian Wheat Board as well. No doubt pool administrators will request or suggest an initial price. We, as the government responsible for the guarantee, will need to determine if that price is safe to pay, in accordance with traditional factors governing initial price.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the pools will be substantially different in their workings from the Canadian Wheat Board. I am thinking of the way the initial price will be set. Possibly different prices could be set for different pools. Would the government guarantee all of those initial prices? If one pool were asking a higher initial price than another, would the government guarantee that higher initial price?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Chairman. The government would be prepared to guarantee such initial price as is available for all other pools legitimately established. If the hon. member is asking, is it possible in theory for a pool to set a lower price than that which the government guarantees, the answer in theory is yes; but in practice I do not think it will arise.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, say the government sets a price of $5, but some pools feel they can charge an initial price of $5.50. Will they be on their own so far as the extra 50 cents is concerned? If the pool lost 50 cents, say, as a result of this, would that organization be responsible for the loss?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, yes, they would. They would be on their own for the extra amount.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one last question on the definition of "producer"? Will producers be those who traditionally hold Wheat Board permits? It is my impression that the definition of a producer in this bill is somewhat different from the definition of a producer who deals with the Wheat Board. Perhaps the minister could elaborate.

Mr. Lang: The definition is almost the same, Mr. Chairman. I forget exactly in which way the definitions differ. I will look through the relevant parts of the bill to see if I can discover the small technical difference which may exist; however, by and large, the definitions are similar.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, with regard to a producer who belongs to the pool, the bill provides that he can cease to participate in accordance with the plan. Does the minister visualize that each plan will have a different contract with the producers, or is it his intention that the provisions for opting out will be the same for all plans?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I see some scope for flexibility here. I would not want to project what may turn out to be an acceptable proposal. The various proponents of a plan may come up with a variety of differences. Looking at the definition of actual producers, the key difference is that provision has been made for participation in such a plan of the landlord or non-actual producer who may be the owner of the rapeseed. That is the main difference here.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the federal government's financial commitment to the kinds of schemes that may be authorized by the bill before us this evening. Can the minister say if the guarantee of a certain level of initial payment is in fact the only monetary or financial obligation which the federal treasury will be assuming through this legislation, or is there in the bill some broader obligation upon the government to compensate certain pools if they run into adverse conditions and suffer losses above and beyond the level of initial payment which may be guaranteed or beyond any obligation with respect to administration costs?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the guarantee of initial payment is the only federal obligation or cost contemplated, apart from the rather regular governmental-type costs which may be involved in the administration of inspection services and, therefore, administration of the law as such.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell the House what advantages could encourage the producers to participate or not participate in that type of marketing? Can he also tell us what the freedom of association, or not, rests on? And finally, can grain marketing entail certain advantages for those who are part of it, or those who are not?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, the price of rapeseed may go up or down rapidly or quite significantly over any period of time. There are many farmers who are producers of rapeseed who simply want to be in the farming business. They do not want to become experts in judging when the market is going to be good or when it is going to be bad. They would prefer to have the average price for the year for their product rather than risk taking a low price or gambling on a high one or hoping they will be getting a high one. It is meant to allow them to get an average price without their trying to guess the market during that particular year.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, will that way of doing things not be a source of difficulties for the new act, which could prevent it from being really efficient, and from giving really efficient marketing services to those who truly want a marketing organization, because in other fields, for instance, in the egg marketing business, which Parliament knows very well, the situation is not quite the same: everything must be marketed globally to get results. Are things different in the field of cereals, of rapeseed; and are the producers willing to see the bill passed as proposed, or is it being imposed upon them?

[English]

Mr. Lang: The key answer is that the creation of a pool simply gives the farmer an additional option. He may choose to market the way he now markets and decide his own time for selling and try to guess the best price or he may join the pool. But, of course, if he joins he brings in all his rapeseed to that pool. The choice is that of the farmer.

Mr. Benjamin: Suppose a farmer has 80 acres of rapeseed in one place and 80 acres a few miles away. I take it he cannot volunteer one lot of 80 acres to be delivered to the pool and the other to be kept for placing on the open market at his convenience. All of it has to be sent to the pool or nothing?

Mr. Lang: That is so.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Mr. Benjamin: Can the minister tell us who would do the enforcing in order to prevent bootlegging or attempts to evade a contract? Would it be the association with which the contract is made or the Wheat Board? Because the person concerned has put himself under an obligation according to his permit book. Or would it be done by the minister from his office?

Mr. Lang: The act merely provides for the designation of persons as inspectors. We would certainly not see this as meaning the participants or agents of the pool as such in an ordinary case. If the Wheat Board inspectors or the Grain Commission inspectors, or other inspectors who would be available in any case, could add this to their duties, that solution might be considered, or special inspectors would be designated. I would look forward to using inspectors who are presently engaged in grain-related duties in the region.

Mr. Benjamin: In other words, the inspectors would be the employees of an agency of the government and they would be carrying out inspections having to do with contractual arrangements with a voluntary pool which had nothing to do with the Wheat Board. That is, they would be federal employees carrying out duties on behalf of an association.

Mr. Lang: That is the way I would see it. I see it, really, as being a regular part of law enforcement.

Mr. Benjamin: If violations were discovered would the inspector from the Wheat Board or the Grain Commission lay criminal charges, or would that be up to the association?

Mr. Lang: The charge might not technically be a criminal charge but it would be laid with the advice of the attorney general, as are charges laid under various other statutes.

Mr. Benjamin: What does the minister envisage by "an association representing a significant number of producers engaged in the production of grain" and so forth—the words appearing on page three? Can he tell us what he would consider would constitute such a number? I presume this means rapeseed producers. What percentage of producers would need to be involved? Would they come from the whole province or from part of a province? It seems to me this is a clause which is far too vague.

● (2220)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, it suffers from some vagueness, without any doubt. It may be difficult to have a judgment in advance as to what would in the end be the answer to the hypothetical question whether a certain number of producers was sufficient. It is designed to give some flexibility to the clause, which would have otherwise restricted the move toward these pools to firms actually engaged in the marketing of grain. It seemed desirable to have an open door for some others. The financial security, the guarantee of the initial price and so on gives us the additional flexibility to make some judgment here. That clause can work notwithstanding, as the hon. member says, that it is vague in its technical sense.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I would take it from the minister's reply that he would envisage recognizing only bona fide grain companies or people who are in the grain handling business, whatever the nature of the company is, whether it is a private company, a wheat pool, an agency in the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange or a broker in Vancouver who can get contracts from 20,000 rapeseed producers. In the minister's view, it would be someone who is already in the grain business. I do not mean this in a derogatory sense, but suppose the Palliser wheat growers wanted to sign up 10,000 or 20,000 rapeseed producers, would that be considered an appropriate association? Would the minister prefer to stick to one that is already in the grain or rapeseed handling business?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I would see that association as eligible, as I would the Rapeseed Growers Association and the National Farmers' Union. Just as long as we do not try to press that analogy too far, I do not mind giving that offhand account.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2:

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, it is on this clause that I would like to ask the minister if he can explain to the committee how he envisages the financial responsibility of a marketing plan under the bill before he will accept it. He must have in his mind some criteria as to how these voluntary pools can satisfy the minister. They have the capacity to administer successfully up to a point. If there is inability to sell the grain they have contracted for, will they have the finances to meet storage costs and interest costs?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, under this clause the proposers of a plan will have to satisfy the governor in council of their financial ability to carry the plan forward with the necessary bonds, insurance or other security to cover their potential indebtedness within the plans they are establishing. I can see that meaning a certain assurance of viability would allow the undertaking of a certain number of contracts for a certain volume of rapeseed. If the proposers of a plan wanted to go beyond that, they would have to extend or add to their financial viability. We will want the assuredness that the financial viability is there, quite apart from the guarantee we may give at the initial price.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I realize the minister has great difficulty in saying that he is sure, because we do not know what will be the case. To follow that up, can the minister visualize a situation where one of these pools, fearful of the financial responsibilities above the initial payment, will restrict the number of contracts they are willing to accept?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, I can see that as being possible if the pool in question was a small organization. Some of the organizations we have contemplated, such as the large wheat pools on the prairies, would not likely have that problem. I could see eligible administrators having that difficulty.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I have just one short question. From reading the bill, I take it there is no definite time frame as to how long the pool should last, whether it is a year, two years or five years?

• (2230)

Mr. Lang: That is correct. There is flexibility there for the proposers. I think ordinarily we are thinking in terms of one year periods, and I doubt that anyone would propose a longer period; but there may be some advantage seen in shorter periods so that any rapid market fluctuations may be moved out of the pool.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the number of people participating in a pool is left wide open. Is there any minimum size or maximum size, or is it just a wide open affair?

Mr. Lang: That is not spelled out. In that sense it is wide open. A certain number would have to be sought for administrative viability, so the proposers no doubt will have that in mind. The maximum number would result from the financial security which has to be posted.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Chairman, page 3 of the bill deals with the establishment of marketing plans. Reference is made to an association representing a significant number of producers. Then later on it refers to making an order if there are a sufficient number of producers. I am wondering what is the difference between "a significant number" and "a sufficient number" and why the same words are not used. There must be some distinction.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member please draw my attention to the word "sufficient"?

Mr. Neil: On page 3, clause 35.11(1) says: "Any association representing a significant number of producers engaged in the production of grain . . ." Clause 35.12 makes reference to a sufficient number. Then on page 4 the bill refers to a significant number again.

Mr. Lang: A significant number would be a judgment on the part of the association as to whether it has that kind of support, when it is an association and not a company which is proposing a plan. A sufficient number again would be a judgment. It may not be different from a significant number, but I think it would be many fewer. It may be those who are actually participating, willing to participate, and therefore sufficient to make a plan worthwhile. It is that non-minimum which is, however, meant to be judged by the governor in council as being enough.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, further to the minister's reply to the hon. member for Moose Jaw, I take it that in the first instance there must be what appears to be a significant number and an appropriate association, in the view of the minister, to go into a voluntary plan, on the one hand; and then in the course of a sign-up it would be a matter of judgment for the minister as to whether, even though the association represents a significant number, there is a sufficient number to make the plan work, and that this lies in the hands of the minister.

Mr. Lang: That is correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I am still referring to clause 35.12 and to the explanation just given by the minister concerning a sufficient number of producers. Will the regulations determine in greater detail the meaning of producers? What will influence the minister's decision: the volume of grain or the number of producers?

[English]

Mr. Lang: We are really looking here at the number of producers. I do not see a practical problem because the administrators of a plan would not want to go forward with it unless they had a fairly large volume of grain and producers. Therefore, we would not have much difficulty with making a judgment.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not give consent to giving the bill third reading now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is nothing in the order which says it cannot be given third reading now, except the time. The Chair cannot read the minds of hon. members; they must indicate whether or not they wish to carry on. The bill has been reported. Does the hon. member wish me to put the question and give him the floor for third reading?

Mr. Benjamin: I would like to call it 10.30 p.m., Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, what about Bill C-30?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF MARKETING PLANS

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-34, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act respecting the establishment of marketing plans and to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last evening during second reading I said the official opposition supports Bill C-34 on the grounds that it attempts to meet what the farmers of western Canada demand, and we want to give it a chance to work.

There has been a long debate in western Canada about the respective merits of compulsory and voluntary pooling. As I said last night, the great majority of the farmers, in my judgment, supported the concept of compulsory pooling for their main crop—wheat. But they had a great reluctance to go into compulsory pooling for all crops, both the export and the domestically consumed crops.

There is a growing fear in western Canada about the continual encroachment of the rights of individual farmers to control their own destinies. Even though they are promised higher returns and are given the freedom to make their own decisions, they know instinctively they are losing something which is even more valuable than money. Therefore in this particular bill in which the minister proposes to allow the commercial companies, some of which are owned privately and some of which are owned co-operatively, to set up voluntary pools to which they can invite their clients to join on a contractual basis, supported by the discipline of the permit book as far as the contract is concerned, there is also assistance by the government in supporting up to 90 per cent the financial risk of the initial payment.

As I mentioned last night there is still a gap, which is the financial risk that the private enterprise companies, which pioneered the development of the rapeseed market around the world, and the co-operative companies will have to face. This financial risk is during the selling period of the crop year. There could be a decline in prices that would cause serious financial jeopardy to the management or the company administering the pool. There could be a slowing down of markets, which would leave these companies with large amounts of rapeseed on contract for which they would have to pay storage charges and for which they would have to pay interest if money was borrowed for the holding of that grain.

These legitimate risks of private enterprise terrify many people. As I said last night, this terror goes back to the grim experience of 1929, 1930, and 1931 when the newly founded co-operatively owned pools went bankrupt because of the amount of the initial payment. The provincial governments of the prairies made loans to them, and eventually they went bankrupt. It was the federal government, under R. B. Bennett, which stepped in and backed up those loans which saved those pools.

The fear of having lost something for which they had fought so long brought such a deep fear into the hearts and minds of these people that never since that day have they done their primary duty, which is to sell western Canadian grain. They hold licences to sell grain on the Canadian Wheat Board but they never use them. Some of us have tried for years to get them to combine the four pools—the Alberta Pool, the Saskatchewan Pool, the Manitoba Pool, and the UGG which runs across the three provinces. We tried to get them to combine their economic strength and form one export company, which they did after a great deal of debate, called EXCAN. The essential fact which faces us is that, generally speaking, Canadian grain from western Canada saves the value of our dollar because of the tremendous export from western Canada into the hungry world, as the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) pointed out yesterday. This is something which affects the whole country. The grain business is now facing up to this great fear.

In the last 45 years nearly all the grain produced in western Canada has been sold by four big international companies. The names are well known—Dreyfus from France, Bunge from Argentina, Continental and Cargill from the United States. These giant international selling companies sell most of the grain in the world. Each of them has approximately 10,000 agents all over the world competing with each other for markets. On the basis of cost, they do a remarkable job for the western farmer.

Having said that, it is a matter of national chagrin and shame that we do not have Canadians out selling Canadian grain. There are exceptions, of course. One of them is Charlie Schwartz, who is worthy of mention. He has fought with all his heart to sell a few million bushels of Canadian grain. However, the facts are very simple. When you are selling grain, you are in a multi-billion dollar business. Even to get into the poker game, one has to buy ten million bushels, which is small, and it requires assets of at least $50 million to get into the game. When I was the minister, I recommended that these four giant pools should pool their resources and get into this poker game. If you are successful, the amount of money you get per bushel is minimal. The competition at the selling end is very intense.

The fact remains that we do not have any large, successful grain companies owned by Canadians and operated in the interests of Canadian farmers, selling our grain around the world. We have no Canadian company going out and pioneering new markets because of that awful fear of 47 years ago when they went bankrupt because of the selling business. Just like an old lady's fear, they never forget. As the younger people have come up through these farm organizations, they are taught from the minute they step into these pools the horrible lesson which was learned in 1929, 1930, and 1931, that if you get into this grain selling business you can lose everything in a matter of months. Therefore this bill we are talking about is an effort to encourage Canadian companies, whether they are privately owned or co-operatively owned, to get into this business of selling grain, even if it is just one product, rapeseed.

The rapeseed crop, using a round figure of 100 million bushels at a price of $5, is a $500 million product which has to be sold. You pay the farmer the initial payment, which has to be borrowed. If the initial payment is $2, that means $200 million has to be borrowed if all that grain is pooled. Until that grain is sold to get the $200 million back, you are in debt on the initial payment, plus the interest which has accumulated during the interim period. I mention all these things because they are common knowledge in western Canada, but they are not common knowledge here in the House.

In this bill the minister has put the Canadian government and the Canadian taxpayer behind these pooling operations to the extent of 90 per cent of the initial payment. That has to be a sound approach. Otherwise I cannot see these Canadian companies going into the selling business. At least now they are protected on initial payment guarantees. On the second stage the risk is still tremendous.

Last night the minister was asked if he thought a large number of people would go into the pooling. He very carefully gave the correct answer, that he thought a large number of people wanted to, but the people who are going to administer and run these companies were the ones who would be reluctant to move in on the basis of the great fear of what happened in the past. Therefore the story I put on record last night and again today should be considered as background against which the House would be well advised to support this legislation.

● (1120)

This legislation tries to meet the political feelings of Western Canada among those who want an average price. It tries to help out that group by putting government support behind the initial payment, by incorporating the discipline of the contract and the permit book as an encouragement to voluntary pools to get started and embark on the dangerous business of selling grain. I myself have a feeling that when they do get started they will make a success of it and wish to expand. I hope they will make a start upon the basis of this new incentive and go out selling Canadian wheat, barley, grain, and soybeans. If these companies pick up their courage and attack the market it may turn out to be a very successful operation.

I want to conclude by making a few comments on the speech of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Is it worth it?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I think it is. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre seemed to be speaking very hysterically, but really he was expressing, in his own way, the deep fear which clutches at the hearts of so many westerners, particularly in the City of Regina, who are frightened to go out and compete, who do not want any risks to be taken by these companies, and who want a single board by compulsion, with the taxpayers supporting all the risk. That, to my mind, was the essence of his remarks. Really, he was expressing a socialist background.

Basically, what was getting to him, what was making him so irrational last night, was that he knew his friends in high places in these grain companies are terrified to go out and compete with each other in world markets. I know he made personal references to me, the worst thing he could say about me in western Canada was that I was supporting the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. A terrible thing! He knows that the worst thing an hon. member can say about another hon. member in western Canada is that he is a friend of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The fact is that as an opposition we recognize good legislation, legislation which is necessary not only for the immediate satisfaction of the desires of both those who want pooling and those who want cash, and it gives us an opportunity to get a Canadian company selling. Hopefully this endeavour will benefit the handling of major products, including wheat and corn. In these circumstances I take the risk of associating myself with the minister, because this is good legislation and, dash it all, if I am afraid of taking a risk by supporting good legislation, I am not serving the people as I should.

I do not know whether the legislation will work, nor does the minister or anyone else. But I think the minister has given it a good college try and made the machinery available. The challenge is now before the companies which handle rapeseed, to go out and sell. This is the only way they can hold their customers. If they go out and sell, and do their duty under the private enterprise system, they may very well be rewarded by a good return for their efforts. Above all, they will be helping not only the people of Canada but a world which needs our products.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too want to say a few words on third reading of the bill before us today. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned the importance of grain and oil seeds throughout the world. I cannot help but underline that too, when contributing to a debate about grain or oil seeds of any sort.

I think I said last night that Canada's contribution accounts for up to 25 per cent of the world's wheat export market—we usually range between 17 and 25 per cent of it, depending upon production in this country as well as in other parts of the world, even though we only produce 11 or 12 per cent of the world's wheat, consuming only a small part here and exporting the major part. We are, therefore, a major exporter of grain as well as of oil seeds, making them a very important factor in our economy.

I also said in the House yesterday that if it were not for grain and oil seeds, this country would already be a net importer of food; we would not be self-sufficient in the production of food for our own use, despite the vast acreage we have in Canada.

I had a chance to go over some government figures for last year and they showed that if you take away grain and oil seeds we would have a net deficit of $1.5 billion for food. If you take the figures released by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) last Friday in the food strategy paper, we find that the deficit has increased over the last few months to about $1.9 billion. We would not be able to feed ourselves in this country were it nor for grain and oil seeds. That, Mr. Speaker, is why this debate is so important. It is important in terms of our balance of trade and in terms of supporting the Canadian dollar; it is important in terms of the type of food we produce and the manner in which we utilize the land acreage we have.

I want to remind the House, and particularly members from urban Canada, that this deficit is likely to grow. If we do nothing about reversing the trend in this country by setting aside land for the production of food, fostering our agricultural economy and becoming self-sufficient in more crops, then probably around the year 2,000, as the Science Council of Canada says, even with grain and with oil seeds we in Canada will not be able to feed ourselves. That is really a sad state of affairs.

We are already drifting in this country in the matter of food and agricultural policies. This is the point we must make as often as we can, from one part of the country to the other, until we can get the majority of the people, the government and the public service, to realize the situation, and draft a food policy which will plan the industry so that it will work for the benefit of all Canadians, including the farmers who produce the food.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain mentioned the big four in terms of the world grain trade—Bunge, Dreyfus, Cargill, and Continental. He also mentioned the fact that there isn't any great Canadian trader. He said something about the economics of international grain trade—I think these are things we should talk about in this debate. I know that my philosophy is different from his when it comes to how grain should be marketed and produced. He accused the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) of being a socialist. I personally hope that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is a socialist—if he is not then he belongs to the wrong party! I am a socialist myself and that is why I believe that individual producers have more freedom if they band together to market their grain through a grains board or through a wheat board.

What freedom is there for the little guy out there producing a crop if he has to depend on the futures market or on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange? I do not consider that to be freedom. It may be freedom for some of the big guys who can afford to gamble and take their losses, but it is certainly not freedom for the ordinary person in my constituency.

In my constituency we just came through a by-election last Wednesday. The Liberal campaign was based on freedom for people, freedom for farmers to make choices, the freedom of the individual. When the results came in, the NDP received almost 50 per cent of the votes; the Conservative party did not even get 30 per cent; and the Liberal party lost its deposit.

An hon. Member: That was because Otto was out there.

Mr. Nystrom: All the Conservative party got were Liberal votes—it was one free enterprise party voting for the other. It does not make much difference whether it is the Conservative party or the Liberal party that is in opposition. Maybe the only reason the Liberal party lost votes is that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) went out to campaign for them while the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) stayed home. That campaign, according to both the other parties, was based on individual freedom, and the farmers in my riding responded decisively with 48.4 per cent of the vote in the by-election, voting for the government party, the NDP. In a by-election voters usually take the opportunity to protest, so I am confident in a general election this party would do a lot better.

● (1130)

That is why I put forth the argument that all grains in this country should be marketed through the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board where all farmers participate, pooling their risks and profits, working and co-operating together. That is the way to help the ordinary farmer and keep him on the land.

If that is a good idea for wheat, why is it not a good idea for some of the other grains? I do not hear many Conservatives or Liberals talking about getting rid of the Wheat Board. Some start picking away at the edges of the Canadian Wheat Board. It was the Conservative party that set it up, but that was after a great deal of pressure from all kinds of groups across the prairies. At one time there was a wheat board, but it was abolished in 1922, and then a voluntary wheat pool was set up in the place of the Canadian Wheat Board. The wheat pool which was set up on a voluntary basis was established in 1923 and fell apart in 1931. I think that was good evidence that voluntary pools do not work. This country has a history of voluntary pools not working at all.

I should remind the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) that in 1921, the year after the wheat board was abolished in the first place and the futures market reinstated in this country, the average price of grain went down by some 85 cents per bushel, a drop of 34 per cent over the previous year. That is the history, and we should learn from it.

On the open market the farmer is subject to the ups and downs of things he cannot control. He cannot control the climate that affects the crops in his own country or around the world, but there is one thing he can protect himself against and that is the speculators and grain traders in his own country. He can protect himself against those who gamble with the rapeseed, the flax, the rye and the other things in the open market, like dice in a casino in Las Vegas.

Why do we not market all grains through the Canadian Wheat Board in a collective sense in this country so that all farmers could reap the benefits of any windfall gains there may be and share in any losses there may be, so that there is no middle man, no speculator or grain trader making a few million dollars from the sweat on the brow of the farmer? I think all the profit from grain in this country should go back to the farmer and back to the companies that he owns, such as the wheat pools, and not to the private grains exchange. That is not free entreprise, Mr. Speaker. I think if all grains were marketed through the Wheat Board that would be real freedom.

We have heard Conservatives in this debate say, "What the NDP is talking about is taking away your freedom. Here is a voluntary pool. That is real freedom for farmers." But there are parts of that pool that are not real freedom for the farmer—he can opt into the pool but he cannot opt out. If the Conservative party were really concerned about freedom they would want to amend this bill so that the farmer could opt in or could opt out. That would be consistent. As it is, once he opts in he cannot opt out—he is stuck there for better or worse. The history of pools in this country has shown it to be for worse.

Several little pools may be set up, none with real bargaining power, and many set up by private companies—maybe Cargill is one of them—that are not interested in returning the profits to the farmer but are interested in using the profits for their own ends. Many of them are set up with that objective. There may also be people who are bootlegging outside those pools, and that is a difficult thing to control when there are small pools with some people in and some people out and it is not known who is in and who is out. It is a very complicated system, Mr. Speaker.

As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre pointed out last night, we should stick with one side or the other. We should either be free enterprisers and do everything through the open market, or come to our senses and do everything through the grains board by expanding the Canadian Wheat Board. I am sure the majority of people in my riding would like to see it done that way. I know that a plebiscite was held four years ago and the result was a decision to market rapeseed through the Canadian Wheat Board. At that time 54 per cent of the people voted to do this and 46 per cent voted against it. I think attitudes have changed since that time, although I know even then the people in my constituency voted overwhelmingly to market their product through the Canadian Wheat Board. I am here to represent their interest and, in my opinion, that is the best way to market grain in this country so that the profits and risks are shared by all the people involved.

Yesterday I spoke about the rapid fluctuation in the price of rapeseed in Canada over the last few years. It has gone up and down by dozens of cents per bushel from one week to the other, or one month to the other. That is because of speculation on the futures market. If rapeseed came under a grains board as wheat does, there would not be that constant fluctuation in price; there would be stability. In March or February there would be stability in pricing. The farmer would not have to be concerned about when to sell his product because the price would be relatively the same throughout the year. On the open market, however, he may get a dollar per bushel more for rapeseed in March than in October.

That is the problem my grandfather used to speak about when he was producing wheat. Before the Wheat Board was established he would take his grain to the elevator in the fall and the speculators, the grain exchange and the Richardson security people in Winnipeg, all knew there would be a great influx of wheat. So in the old free enterprise economy when there was an over-supply the price would drop, and my grandfather and his friends would get just a few cents per bushel for the wheat they hauled to the elevator by horse and wagon in the fall.

The wagons were lined up to the country elevator, with one farmer competing against the other. That was rich competition; they got 20 or 30 cents per bushel—the free enterprise system at its so-called best. It was the speculator who made the killing in those days, buying grain at a low price and selling it high later in the year. After the small farmers like my grandfather had sold their grain in the fall in order to buy clothes for their children and pay taxes, they would not have any grain to sell in the wintertime or in the spring. But the large operator would have grain for sale at three or four times the price going in the fall. And the speculator would have grain to sell and make a windfall, but not the ordinary farmer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, thanks to sanity, we have the Canadian Wheat Board which has thrown that old so-called pure free enterprise idea out the window, thank goodness. In the fall when the small farmer takes his crop to the elevator he gets the same price as if he sold it in March. There are no speculators there, with dirty hands and sticky fingers, taking money from the farmers. The small farmer has been getting initial payments for his grain and then, at the end of the crop year, his final payment. That final payment is really the difference between what he got in the beginning and what it was sold for by the Canadian Wheat Board. It represents the profit or surplus which, but for the Canadian Wheat Board, would never be his.

I argue that we should market other grains as we market wheat. That would be better for the ordinary farmer and better for the country; let us plan our economy and plan our food production. We could produce more food and, with a planned economy, prosper more. Mr. Speaker, we do not believe in a few private enterprisers, a few of the big boys, skimming off the cream. I don't care if a few of the big guys on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange go broke. I do not represent them. I represent the ordinary grain producers of my riding, and overwhelmingly they want grain marketed in an orderly manner.

The farmer wants to market his grain through the Canadian Wheat Board, or collectively, and so reap the profits of his labour. Things are tough enough as it is for the farmer. He gambles on the weather, on international markets and international prices. Why he should need to gamble on the speculators I do not know. The farmer needs guarantees. If he is unemployed, he collects no unemployment insurance; if he hurts his foot in a grain machine, he collects no workmen's compensation. The farmer has no pension. His wife works on the farm. Apart from his farm income, usually he has no other income or salary. Many of the social benefits accruing to most Canadians do not accrue to farmers. Why should we make life more uncertain for the farmer by making him market his grain on the open market? It makes no sense for this country's farmers, or for the country itself.

I now come to my final point. Some say, "Let us market grain on the open market; let us have voluntary pools. That is a free enterprise idea which will allow the farmers to exercise all kinds of initiative and freedom." Mr. Speaker, our free enterprisers want guarantees as well as freedom. They want the government to guarantee 90 per cent of the initial price. They do not mind being free enterprisers and gamblers, if there is a guarantee; they do not mind being in the ball game, if they cannot lose. Surely they are dishonest and hypocritical. That is not old fashioned free enterprise.

This scheme would make old fashioned free enterprisers roll over in their graves. The scheme is nothing but socialized or subsidized free enterprise, state-free enterprise with guarantees. But that is the game the free enterprise boys like to play. For example, a few years ago our cattlemen and ranchers said, "We want no government interference, we are free enterprisers." Then, when the bottom fell out of the cattle market, the cattlemen came running to the government with their hands out saying, "Help us."

One year the cattlemen want no government interference; the next year the story is different. When the market turned down they ran to the government, asking for subsidies. Mr. Speaker, they cannot have their cake and eat it. For these reasons I am a socialist, in the NDP. I hear the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) chuckling. I know he is a socialist as well.

Mr. Mazankowski: What a joke!

Mr. Nystrom: I know he really is, because he did not shed tears when that biggest enterpriser, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), joined the Liberal party.

Mr. Mazankowski: I had better stop laughing. I am helping you with your speech.

Mr. Nystrom: I know this bill will pass, and we shall see voluntary pooling. Probably it will be no great disaster for the ordinary farmer, because he will not participate. I know the wheat pools will not get involved; not even Cargill need be involved. Perhaps these pools will work, but my guess is they will not. They have not worked in the past and it is unlikely they will work in future. Hopefully we will learn from this lesson and, when the next generation of parliamentarians finally comes to its senses, it will do the sensible thing, make sure grain is marketed in an orderly way under the auspices of a board like the Canadian Wheat Board, so that we can plan our economy properly and decently.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate. However, having heard the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) presenting his viewpoint on freedom of choice, the private enterprise system and socialism, I feel impelled to enter it. I cannot let his statements go unchallenged. You know, a bright young man who entered politics immediately after leaving university and who was never associated with farming should not hold himself out as an instant expert on agriculture. His speech was full of holes and wrong statements.

Mr. Mazankowski: It was fluff.

Mr. Murta: Many of his statements were totally wrong. Really, when we debate third reading of this bill we are debating, as that hon. member, and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) suggested, freedom of choice. We want to preserve it; obviously the NDP does not. It wants the farmers to have only one choice, the NDP's choice. The NDP presumably would make the rules for the system and farmers would be forced to obey. That is not freedom of choice.

Most farmers think the Canadian Wheat Board is doing a good job of selling. We agree. It has made some innovations since I first appeared on the political scene. In the early 1970's it encountered marketing problems. It overcame those and, under a series of innovated measures, sold to the private trade; in other words, sold wherever it could. It saw world prices were lower and stocks building up. Farmers in western Canada overwhelmingly support the Wheat Board. It serves us well at present, but may not be adequate in the 1980's. Of course, farmers are given the option of selling to the private trade for instant cash, if they want it. They have that advantage. Really, when you come down to it, that is the crux of the question: freedom of choice.

I have some concerns about Bill C-34 because of the fact that although the opting in provisions are there, the opting out provisions are not there. Of course a pooling system would not work if people were allowed to opt in or out on a yearly basis. I am a little concerned that we may see at some point in time, ten or 15 years from now, rapeseed totally under the authority of the pooling system or totally under the Canadian Wheat Board, and I do not think that would be the right direction to take.

The main concern I have about the bill is that it opens the door, however slightly, to a total marketing board concept. But be that as it may, at present what we have is, in my opinion, true freedom of choice. If I want to market my grain on the open market or through the Canadian Wheat Board, I can do that. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), if he were a farmer, could do that same thing. He could market through the Canadian Wheat Board if he so wanted. It is not going to hurt either one of us. That is the point that is missed so often by the socialists when they talk about free enterprise versus socialism, about freedom of choice being really one freedom, that is, the freedom of marketing in one particular way.

In my opinion we have the best of both worlds so far as the marketing system at present is concerned. In many respects it is better than the American marketing system. I do not think Canadians will ever get into the grains selling system that the Americans have with their three or four multinational corporations which sell grain on a world-wide basis because, frankly, we do not have the resources; it is too expensive a game for us to play. But I certainly feel that with the Wheat Board operating the way it is and having a parallel system which allows me personally, or anyone else, to sell in a different manner if we so wish, that is the kind of system that we in the House should strive to preserve with every piece of legislation we bring in because in my opinion—and I know this opinion is shared by a good many farmers across western Canada—that is the kind of system that will bring us the maximum benefit so far as grains and oil seeds which we sell in Canada are concerned.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Here is another CPR farmer. He farms on CPR right of ways.

Mr. Benjamin: —I want to say a few words on third reading of this bill and to tell my friend, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), that as a CPR man—my father was one as well—I was born, lived, and raised and saw at first hand how farmers were treated by his free enterprise system and by the CPR. I worked on a section for a few weeks one summer.

Mr. Paproski: Have you learned to speak Ukrainian?

Mr. Benjamin: I did not learn how to speak Ukrainian, and that was a mistake I made. The issue here is pretty clear, I think. My colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), and I have advocated that the best way for grain producers in Canada to compete on the world market is to co-operate and do it together; that a small percentage, or even a significant percentage of rapeseed producers in a voluntary pool would not count for very much faced with dealing with governments of other countries or in competition with the four or five big multinational grain trading corporations, because they would not have sufficient muscle. A voluntary pool, even operated by two or three grain companies, which took in even the majority of our rapeseed producers would still not be big enough to count.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) regretted that Canada does not have a large grain trader of the size of the big four. I want to dispute that; we do have a large grain-trader in the world markets that has some muscle. It is called the Canadian Wheat Board. It has the backing of the overwhelming majority of grain producers in western Canada and, more important than that, it has the backing of the people of Canada, of this parliament, and of the government. In other words, the resources of this nation are behind the Wheat Board if ever needed. This gives us a grain trader that has the size and the muscle to count in world markets.

This bill makes provision for rapeseed. Canada's share in the market, so far as oil seed production is concerned, is minuscule—it is somewhere around 7 per cent—because we must compete with other oil seeds such as soybeans, peanuts, sunflower and cocoanut oil, and whatever amount of rapeseed we are going to export, or any other oil seed, requires a large, competent organization that has trading and financial muscle to compete in world markets. To suggest that a small percentage, or even a large percentage, of rapeseed growers in a pool with one or more grain companies can do that, I submit, is just dreaming.

We already have a large grain trader. The best way in which grain producers in western Canada can get the maximum value from their production is in a co-operative system of orderly marketing through the Canadian Wheat Board. In fact it is the feeling, certainly in the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, in the National Farmers' Union and, I suspect, also in the Alberta and Manitoba pools, that since they already have an organization capable of doing that kind of marketing, we should not duplicate it by setting up additional pooling arrangements, voluntary or otherwise.

The Canadian Wheat Board has the expertise and the experience. It has offices all around the world. It is close to the farmers, it is accountable to the grain producers, to parliament, and to the government. The grain producers' interests are fully protected and guarded in many ways, and the grain producers in western Canada have said repeatedly for 40 or 50 years that they have exercised the freedom of choice that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) speaks about, which is orderly marketing through the Canadian Wheat Board. It is the logical, obvious, and proper vehicle through which to market all the grains produced in western Canada. I would even suggest that its name be changed to the Canadian grains board so that it would reflect more properly its duties and its terms of reference.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has illustrated our position on this matter extremely well. I want to remind the hon. member for Lisgar that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is a third generation farmer. He was born and raised on a farm. I do not want to hear any inferences or innuendoes that somehow or other he does not have a farming background or does not know anything about farming. He can speak with authority on the matter because he has that background on both sides of his family, and has had it for three generations. He has also been in sufficient touch with grain producers in his own riding—as I would like to think I have—to reflect the views of those people. As he said, the views we are reflecting are not those of 10, 20, or 30 section farmers. I am not particularly interested in them. As far as I am concerned they are just greedy. However, the fellow who farms a section or two sections—that is the size of farm that the majority of farmers in western Canada have—has to have the protection of the Canadian Wheat Board and orderly marketing.

● (1200)

To suggest that a farmer on his own as a so-called independent free enterpriser on the open free market can compete with multi-million dollar corporations is just sheer nonsense. Grain producers learned that bitter lesson repeatedly over a period of about 40 years, and they said "no more". I wish that the government and the official opposition would stop clinging to these 19th century mythologies about free enterprise and the free and open market in such an essential commodity as grain. It does not work for grain producers. It might work fine for Cargill, Bunge or Continental, but it does not work for grain producers. It never has. It is not there to work for grain producers. That system is there to make profits for others but not for farmers.

The Canadian Wheat Board is there to maximize returns for farmers, not for the Canadian Wheat Board or for the Canadian government.

That is the essential difference between the two systems, and I submit that orderly marketing is the only sane or sensible way in which to operate. It is not some kind of a socialist dogma. The majority of grain producers of all political beliefs fully support orderly marketing and the Canadian Wheat Board.

I think this kind of legislation keeps the door open for the so-called free marketers. It allows them to keep their foot in the door, to survive and to make a few dollars. On the world scene those few dollars will not matter very much, considering the amounts these companies make in other countries, particularly in the United States. Those multi-national grain corporations have not only made profits off the backs of grain producers; they have also victimized the consumer in many instances.

When one reads the court records and learns of the investigations which have been carried on with regard to these multi-national grain corporations over many decades, he finds that the consumer has been victimized. These companies were around in the 1880's and 1890's. Grain producers in western Canada got rid of most of them during the thirties, forties and fifties, but now they are sneaking in the back door, with the encouragement and support of the old-line parties which still think there is some validity to their 19th century beliefs about the free and open market.

I hope that there will be a relenting and a change of heart, at least on the part of the official opposition, but I am not optimistic. I am sure hon. members to my right will allow this bill to be read the third time, and in a way that is very sad.

I regret accusing the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain of supporting the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board because that is a terrible thing to say, and I did not really mean it. That is the worst thing anybody from anywhere between Thunder Bay and the Rocky Mountains could say, so I will take that back, but I feel very sad that the hon. member and his colleagues would be party to the strengthening of the so-called free open market system and to providing government guarantees for a system which is supposed to be free and open and operating without government intervention. I find that inconsistent and hypocritical. It is a sad thing that they would still cling to those ideas. Perhaps as the years go by they will gradually realize that there are some areas of human endeavour in which the so-called private free enterprise system has no place and does not work in the interest of the people. Surely this grain business is one in which the so-called free and open market system has no place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA LANDS SURVEYS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE ACT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-4 which I have the honour to introduce provides amendments to the Canada Lands Surveys Act which will make it possible to control and manage more effectively the survey of public lands in Canada. Those lands, according to the definition given in the Canada Lands Surveys Act, in its present form, mean "any lands, belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada or of which the government of Canada has power to dispose, that are situated in the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories or in National Parks of Canada and any lands that are surrendered lands or reserves as defined in the Indian Act".

The present legislation on the survey of Canadian land also provides for the appointment of a Board of Examiners which will look into all matters concerning the examination, admittance and qualifications of the candidates to a commission of Dominion land surveyor or to a certificate of Dominion topographical surveyors.

[English]

The Canada Lands Surveys Act, which came into effect in January, 1952, replaced the former Dominion Lands Surveys Act. It has been amended twice since then, once in 1956 and again in 1966. As a result of increasing exploration in Canada's offshore areas and rapid technological advances in surveying techniques, particularly in the last few years, it is felt that changes in the act are needed.

The application of the act should be extended in order to bring the legal surveys required for the management and control of offshore resources under legislative authority and to facilitate better the administration, direction and control of surveys of all Canada lands. Accordingly, the term "public lands" has been deleted from the act and has been replaced by the term "Canada lands", which is broader in scope and more appropriate with respect to the new legislation. In addition, there is a need to re-define the professional standards of Dominion land surveyors, appropriate to the new era that has been opened up by rapid technological advances.

The revised standards should be comprehensive enough to embrace all persons engaged in surveying, whether on land, over or under water—mainly the offshore environment—or from the air, including the use of satellites, as well as in the interpretation, processing and display of resulting data. There is also a need for revision of educational and apprenticeship requirements in relation to the methods of qualifying surveyors of Canada lands and for an expanded board of examiners, designed to administer effectively what is, in essence, a public trust.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one of the main objectives of these amendments is precisely to bring under the administration of this legislation the official surveys made in off-shore areas, as is the case for lands situated in the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories, Indian reserves, surrendered lands and national parks. Current regulations on oil and gas lands in Canada provide that only a federal surveyor may carry out an official survey of Canada lands in the sense intended by the regulation. The department intends to apply the provisions of the Canada Lands Surveys Act to all official off-shore surveys and to the specification of standards related to these surveys.

Another objective is to give to Yukon and Northwest Territories commissioners the power to undertake surveys of Canada lands they are administering in their respective territory. At the present time, the legislation empowers the ministers responsible for the administration of land in Canada to request the surveying of that land, but since the administration of the pieces of land that encompass territorial communities has been transferred to the commissioners in council, that power should also be extended to the commissioners.

A third objective is to repeal the sections requiring that Canada lands be laid out in quadrilateral townships, except where otherwise directed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That system, which was initially devised for the subdivision of lands in the Prairie provinces, is not applicable for it provides for the establishment of a rectangular system of reserves so that roads, whether they be north-south or east-west oriented, may be equidistant. It is obvious that such a system is not practical in mountainous or uneven regions, as exist in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and in practically all national parks and in several Indian reserves. Moreover, the repeal of those sections would make it unnecessary to amend the act following metric conversion.

As to the need to redefine the professional standards of federal lands surveyor, we could improve the quality of land surveys in Canada by making sure that surveyors are better qualified and fully conversant with the surveying methods which apply to off-shore areas. It would also be desirable to convey a new title to surveyors, that of Canada Lands Surveyor, to replace and supersede the previous title of federal surveyor or Federal topographer. It would also be desirable to gather under this designation all professionals who meet the requirements of land surveying in Canada, because in this era, conditions keep on changing, no matter whether these professionals operate on land, on sea, on the ocean floor or in the air. This new title stems from the new definition of "Canada Lands" which appears in the act.

The bill proposes to increase the number of members on the Board of Examiners from three to five, four of them being persons having training and practical experience in the major fields of surveying.

Mr. Speaker, we feel that the proposed amendments are likely to improve the quality of land surveying in Canada. Moreover, a number of very minor amendments which are desirable are included in this bill.

● (1210)

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on the surface this appears to be a housekeeping measure to set up machinery for a modern system of surveys suitable for our northern and offshore lands. However, on reading through the legislation it becomes obvious that this is more than a housekeeping bill. There is a political operation going on here reflecting the government's determination to do away with the nomenclature we traditionally use to describe our country.

This country is still, legally, the Dominion of Canada, and traditionally we call the survey the Dominion Land Survey. The main object of this bill, and everywhere where that phrase is used, is to get rid of the word Dominion and replace it by Canada. And the phrase "Dominion lands" is replaced by "Canada lands". Looking around this country today, we find alienation from the government, alienation between the regions, alienation between groups. Surely we are in enough trouble. But here we find just one more exacerbation of the alienation to which I have referred. I cannot understand what possible good the government is doing by yielding to a few extremists who want to get rid of the word "Dominion". The word "Dominion" was decided upon at the time of the formation of our nation by people of many ethnic origins. They were to have dominion over this land from sea to sea. Yet here we find this squirreling going on.

The proposal to set up a survey system suitable for the north will arouse no great excitement among our people. But carrying into a housekeeping act this additional needle, adding to the tension which already exists in the country, is not sound, especially at a time when we should be working toward national unity, not disunity. I have to point this out loud and clear—and if my right hon. friend from Prince Albert were here he would make the point more forcefully than that.

The next point I wish to make concerns the handling of affairs in the territorial areas. If we look at the legislation which gives statutory powers to the minister in charge of the north we find he has all the powers of a czar. Any conscientious minister aware of this great power in his hands must worry a great deal about its exercise. I had it for three years and I must say it worried me. Every week scores of forms passed across my desk for me to sign, affecting the livelihood and security of people in the north about whose affairs I had no knowledge. Nor was it possible to gain personal knowledge of what was involved, since no minister can regularly fly 4,000 miles here and 4,000 there. He has to accept the words of his officials.

In 1963, when the government changed, the late Arthur Laing became minister. He decided to delegate this part of the work load to a number of senior officials across the north—a huge region. Knowing his sincerity, I asked him in the House whether he would make certain that the officials to whom he had delegated this power understood the significance of this completely dictatorial authority. Let me give the House an example of what I have in mind.

When you look at a map of the Yukon it becomes apparent that there is a vast unsurveyed area. In accordance with our concept of law, no one owns it. When land was granted to people in that area, every single acre had to be approved by the minister. Under Mr. Laing, that authority was transferred to five or six senior officials. Let hon. members read the legislation before them. That power still resides with the minister here. Any Privy Councillor, not only the minister directly responsible, can order the officials to conduct a survey. In addition, the commissioner can so order.

To get back to what I was saying: you see this vast area which does not belong to anyone—it is public land—and you approve a survey and give ownership of title. But suppose that in this vast area there are groups of native people, Indians here and Eskimos there, who use this land as a place to settle down during the seasons of the year when they are not travelling. When you find out months or years later that you have allowed a document to go through your hands, and you have allowed surveyors to go in and survey a piece of land and give ownership to a person, and you did not even realize the ownership you were turning over on a blank sheet of paper happened to be the traditional wintering grounds of 200 or 300 families of loyal Canadian citizens, that is what I mean by the danger which is not mentioned in this legislation.

In this legislation we have applied all the dictatorial rules which we applied to the citizens of the south, that if the government has directed that a piece of land be surveyed, any person is punished if he stops that survey. You can cross a person's land in southern Canada, and if any effort is made to hinder the surveyor, that person is the one who is guilty. They have applied this type of southern culture to the north.

Officials think the north is such a huge place that rarely will there be cases of infringement on native habits and customs. The fact is that it has been happening for all the years I can remember. Under this legislation you give statutory power, as if these native people are the same as those of us who are domesticated down here in the southern part of the country where we are used to taking orders from governments. These people have no legal claim to the land, under our law. They have just a moral right to it. They keep moving around and are not happy with a fixed boundary. Therefore I should point out to the minister and to the government that this housekeeping legislation has inherent in it great power to harm innocent people and a great ability to break a moral custom or a moral right that these people have to access and use of this land. We are used to the fact that you put a wall or a fence around your property and say, "That is mine", but they are not.

I am aware of various groups which have been formed to put forward the rights of the native people. These rights have not been accepted under our law yet, although an agreement has been made. This problem of human relations between the mass of the Canadian people and these few thousand Indians up there is ignored in this legislation. This is looked on as purely a question of improving the survey system, and purely a question of getting the machinery to act efficiently.

We forget the lessons of our history when we move in and attack the culture of people. For example, when we moved in and attacked the culture of the Metis who lived along the Red River and the Assiniboine in Manitoba, the result was a rebellion in 1870. Every time you monkey around with a person's land or his culture, you get into trouble. I do not see any awareness in this legislation that there is any question of asking permission before you walk across a man's land to survey. It just provides that you have the right and the man will be punished if he interferes in any way. The only answer to this problem is for us in this parliament to trust the humanitarianism and the fair play of the minister and the commissioners of these various territories. That is all we have to protect us.

Under this legislation we are giving a tremendous dictatorial power, to public servants in most cases, but let us call them surveyors, and taking it away from the minister. It has to be done with some sort of a survey system. Referring to the question of commissioners, I would think that has to be supported. It has always struck me as very wrong that a minister in Ottawa has this power over 60 per cent of the land mass of this country. The power includes the bottom of the sea, the Arctic, the Pacific and the Atlantic half way across the ocean, which is probably three or four times more area than we have in the land mass. All this tremendous power under our legislation is now concentrated in the cabinet ministers here in Ottawa.

The phrase "and the commissioner" has been added over and over again in this legislation. The commissioner is the person who is responsible to Ottawa. He heads up the Yukon government and the commission which heads up the Northwest Territories. Some day I expect we will have two territories to make up the present Northwest Territories. At least we have turned over the power a little closer to the people, because the commissioners in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have to share some of their decision-making powers with the elected council. Sharing the power which is now held by the minister or other Privy Councillors over the north, and widening that out to include the commissioners of the two territories, is an improvement. That improvement has to be supported.

The final point I should like to make is on the survey. The parliamentary secretary is quite correct when he said you cannot use the American style survey that we used in opening up the Canadian west. Because our west is reasonably rolling and level, it was very easy for us to adopt the survey of Ohio or Pennsylvania and bring it into western Canada.

If you look at the history of surveys in western Canada, there were five different stages of surveys. Essentially they were very unique and useful to us because every mile north and south there is a road, and every two miles east and west there is a road.

As I have said in this House on many occasions, the province of Saskatchewan, where only 4 per cent of the people of Canada live, has 36 per cent to 40 per cent of the roads, and that is why we get so sensitive when somebody comes along and wants to apply a new survey system. We spent the last 100 years, or at least the last 70 years, paying for these roads on one system of survey, and then the government comes along, carrying out the orders of a few junior grade public servants, and applies a new system of survey measurements called the metric system, for no good reason. We are not selling land around the world, and yet we are asked under the laws of the province of Saskatchewan to survey in a foreign system, which means millions of dollars of cost to governments at the municipal and provincial levels. It also means hundreds of millions of dollars of cost to individuals living in towns, cities, as well as in the country. This is rammed through even on the docile, domesticated Canadians who live in the south, and they do not like it. We can take it because at least we can read and know we are being gored.

When we go into a survey system in the north, it is not just a question of adaptation to some other survey system from a country like the United States or what we have in Ontario, the maritimes or Quebec. This is a survey system which has to be developed. It is designed for the rivers of the north and is designed for the mountains of the north. Imagine how silly it would be putting in a square system where you have a valley with the tablelands on each side of that river running a few miles out, and then into mountains which go up 8,000, 10,000 or 12,000 feet. It the early days of the French colony everybody lived along the rivers and the long lines served them very well. This is not the system which will work in the north.

In the north it is essentially a question of getting a survey system that is simple to operate on a resource based economy. Whether we like it or not, with some of our current, temporary, non-growth philosophies, the north is a tremendous resource area. To picture it clearly, just think of the resources at the bottom of the sea. Fish and other things live down there. A survey system designed for a settled area, along a river or in a mountainous river area such as there is in the northwest or the tundra of the central Arctic, would not apply to the bottom of the sea. It should be done on a grid system based on the natural curvature of the earth, such as is already in place in the Territorial Lands Act. That is how oil and gas permits are assessed and granted.

The grid system would be easy to locate because it could be numbered in such a way that to get a certain map, by a simple formula of taking the first number and second number—I am not an expert in this—you could pull out that map. I know it is not necessary to put all the details of the type of survey in the legislation. The legislation before us simply gives the power to set up such a survey system as the minister directs and as is suitable for the north. The details come in the regulations, but sometimes when those regulations are being developed it helps to know that someone has some ideas about what makes a good survey system. If you think of a non-populated area, a terrain that is not smooth like the prairies, then it is really a question of getting a grid system which will make it easy to do the bookkeeping and indexing so that the people who work in the north know where the corners of those grids are and can measure from there.

We have made a good start in the oil lands but I know the base lines are not in place, and if there is any great quarrel over a few feet of land there could be a disaster up there. The fact remains, however, that we need a survey system based on big territory, and a simple grid system that can be easily indexed so that locations can easily be found.

I now come to the last point on this matter of the survey. I have mentioned the grid system as opposed to the linear type of measurement back from a river. We have talked about the square system that works fairly well in the prairies, except in the bush and the rolling country along the rivers in the northern prairies, but now we are moving into a new area of great immensity—I would say ten times larger than the land mass of Canada. We have to develop a system for this that is easy to locate. In the case of the underwater grid I think it will have to be done with references to base line points where, by triangulation and the use of modern radar equipment, location can be established by tuning into the signal given off by the beacon.

All this is known to the scientists who have developed this sytem in the years since World War II. We have a tremendous amount of knowledge about it which must be transmitted to the new class of surveyor who will be working in the north. That is why we have to approve this question of the schooling and discipline of those surveyors.

There is a purely political, common sense question that I should like to put to the government. Another bill is before the House on metric conversion which provides for the amendment of 90 different statutes before there can be complete conversion to the metric system at the federal level. Yet this bill before us does not seem to be aware that there is such a thing going on as metric conversion. Presumably we will have to bring this bill back in two years to be changed over to the metric system.

I simply suggest that if there is someone in the government who understands the difficulty of the government House leader in trying to get legislation through, he should tell these brilliant nitwits who draft the legislation to remember that there is another bill before us on metric conversion. In this area we are moving into the unknown—there are no cultures in the offshore areas being attacked; we are not stirring up the cultural traditions of a peasant people or anything like that, so why not agree to start out with the system that will eventually be imposed all across the country? I suppose this never crossed the minds of those who prepare legislation, but surely someone at the ministerial level on the legislative committee of cabinet should be able to see further than the political attractions of changing the name from "public lands" to "Canada lands" and from "Dominion land surveyor" to "Canada land surveyor," which will probably make him a better Canadian! It is stirring up disunity. Surely the legislative committee of cabinet should realize that another minister is trying to put through a metric conversion bill which only covers nine statutes and another bill will be required to cover the other 81 statutes.

Has the cabinet lost its capacity to think? Has the cabinet simply turned everything over to the genial, brilliant nitwits who came up with this? Where are the people in cabinet who think? Surely someone in cabinet must pay some attention to the ordinary, commonplace task of being a Privy Councillor?

There is nothing we can do about this situation today, but the bill will have to be amended before it is passed if the government seriously intends to bring in the metric system. I think it is time a giant firecracker was let off under the cabinet. When the government brought in a bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act yesterday the opposition demonstrated that it could support it because in the main it was good legislation. But it does irritate us to have to take time over a housekeeping bill when obviously the minister presenting it does not realize that another minister is trying to get the metric system accepted.

This bill discusses surveys and is a demonstration of the asinine type of thing that goes on in the government. As people say when a government is in office too long, it is time they had a rest. I think this certainly applies now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, to my mind, Bill C-4 is of very great importance. Indeed, it amends the existing act considerably. First, it proposes the repeal of the designation "Dominion" as applied to the lands of Canada in the act as it now stands. I feel that the substitution of the word "Canada" is quite normal in view of the evolution of our country.

If we go back to 1931, when the Statute of Westminster was passed we note that the word "Canada" is mentioned more often than the word "Dominion". Therefore, if we really want to assert ourselves as a people, who are proud of our country, we should everywhere, as much as possible, designate it under the name of Canada. For my part, I feel in no way offended by the proposed change. On the contrary: I am quite happy with it because in a few weeks we will be celebrating Canada Day. And so we evolve, we grow progressively. Our laws must absolutely be amended to reflect the change and use the word which should, more and more, find preference in the hearts of Canadians.

With regard to surveying, I must say that I had occasion, when I was a bit younger, to work with surveyors. I did love their work. I thought it was wonderful to accompany those men who knew the terrain quite well, who could draw up plans so that the owners who later would live on those sites would recognize their lands and situate them very specifically. I also has occasion to participate in some research work to locate some land which belonged to an estate but had not been surveyed, as a result of which, quarrels and a trial ensued. That cost a lot of money, precisely because the land had not been surveyed: it should have been before, but had never been. Unfortunately, the heirs to the land spent huge amounts of money trying to prove they really had title to the land.

I feel that for a Canadian who owns land it is very important that he should know where it is located and what its limits are. To my mind, it is so important that he should know it by memory. The small plot of land one lives on, one really owns, is the embryo of one's country. Bill C-4 provides more than that.

Such surveys apply to the lands under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and as the parliamentary secretary said earlier, that will add to the responsibilities of Canada lands surveyors who will be drawing boundary lines even under water; as an amendment in this regard was passed this year and as Canada has extended its territorial limit to 200 miles, it will be necessary to be clear on that point if we want to be significant. We will then be able to defend our privileges and our rights if foreign fishermen were to fish within our limit.

This legislation also amends the selection procedures of new candidates. In my opinion, this new method seems at first sight excellent, for it quite clearly determines the requirements. No one shall be disqualified, for a provision of the legislation provides that the surveyors who are presently performing their duties will not be disqualified. They will be allowed to perform their duties without being disturbed.

The main feature of this bill is that it gives a commissioner in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon the kind of authority Parliament wants to have. I think this is a provision in the bill we will have to consider more particularly in committee. To be convinced about this I shall certainly have to hear extremely valid reasons because I do not agree, at this time at least, with the idea that a commissioner should enjoy powers similar to those of a minister of the Parliament of Canada. Perhaps there are reasons of which I am not aware and when I know them I may change my mind but, in any event, right now I find it is not quite correct to give a commissioner this kind of responsibility. In brief, the bill concerns a very considerable expanse of land and the subsoil may contain unknown wealth. By giving the commissioner authority to have the land surveyed without any form of control on the part of the Parliament of Canada, we would be careless, I think.

Anyway, there is another clause in the bill which worries me a little, the one providing that the minister may appoint somebody from his office. That clause reads as follows:

"Surveyor General" means a person who is a Canada Lands Surveyor and is appointed as Surveyor General in the manner authorized by law or a person authorized by the minister to carry out the duties of the Surveyor General."

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

I am a little concerned by the fact that the minister is empowered to appoint somebody to carry out the role of the Surveyor General. That leaves the impression that it is not necessary for the appointee to be a surveyor. Here again, when we review the bill in committee I hope the parliamentary secretary or the minister will be able to give us explanations to justify that amendment to the act.

I would not like to go any further on this subject because as a whole this bill, save for the restrictions I mentioned, is a step forward. It had become necessary to bring in amendments to the legislation, to get it clearer, so that we may really identify the borders of Canada without encroaching upon the rights of the provinces. As a matter of fact, there are also surveyors who carry out their profession in areas of provincial jurisdiction. The legislation provides that those surveyors can occasionally do surveys and act as if they were surveyors under Canadian government jurisdiction. Therefore, I do not see why they might have to complain about those changes which do not alter their rights in any way but, on the contrary, add to them since they are provided with even more responsibilities and they are being recognized as a necessary occupation. I am happy for them. I am convinced that Bill C-4 will certainly pass once amended in the way I have indicated and I assume that these people will be glad to have a clear and precise piece of legislation. It will thus encourage them to do their duties and to carry out their occupation in the best interests of the public.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in two aspects of the bill, one of which has been mentioned by two of the previous speakers, namely, our relationship to the Dominion. It seems to me that we are being picayune in wanting to change the word "Dominion" to "Canada".

I have no objection to our country being called Canada. I have never really objected to the word "Dominion", but I think it is very picayune and it must take the kind of mentality I see in some quarters to think that it is going to be advantageous to bring forward every piece of legislation and change the word "Dominion" to "Canada". If the government really were sincere, it would bring forward enabling legislation to establish the basis for the definition of Canada. Then it would apply that substantive legislation to all the other pieces of legislation which are affected.

I can see us bringing a bill forward with regard to the Dominion Observatory to have it changed to the Canada Observatory. I can see us bringing forward all the other pieces of legislation which use the word "Dominion". It seems to me that we should first establish a definition for Canada. We should do that in a piece of legislation calling Canada "Canada". However, we should not be playing with it. How long do the Liberals think they can take advantage of using our establishment as a Dominion for 110 years, and use it for other purposes on a perpetual basis by changing the word "Dominion" wherever it occurs periodically to "Canada"? Surely we ought to have enough guts to decide what we want to do, to act in a strong and forceful way and to pass substantive legislation in one measure to change all the acts which are affected. We do this with other things; why should we not do it in this case?

In a similar vein I am concerned that we really have not done anything about the territories. We are passing this piece of legislation not only for the new territories we are obtaining in the 200-mile offshore zone, but we are also applying it to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. We are saying that the minister is no longer directly responsible for federal services in those areas in this regard, and certainly the operation of surveying is not small, although it affects a small number of surveyors. I presume they are in this category. We should really be looking at what we are going to do about some kind of self determination for the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and giving them the right to make decisions about surveyors.

Surveyors are very important. In my part of the country they have been immensely important. The parliamentary secretary said that surveying is a science. If it is a science, it is a very inexact one on many occasions. There have been multimillion dollar lawsuits over the opinion of one surveyor against the opinion of another. This has happened particularly with regard to mining claims. Fortunes have been made and lost depending on lines drawn by surveyors. We have been very fortunate to have had the surveyors we have had. Surveyors have been able to establish a very accurate accounting of the lands of this country, and I would not want to see that changed.

It may not be offensive to change the number of members of the board from three to five, but I think we should be very careful with the training which is required and about the assurance which is given at the bottom of a deed, whether it be in the Northwest Territories or anywhere else. When a surveyor signs a deed, he has a responsibility, and the designation he gives to a particular property is important. We have been very fortunate over the years that our training of surveyors has been sufficient to ensure that a deed is accurate. I do not particularly want to see us dilute that by allowing the commissioners to have the responsibility for surveying. I am quite happy to see that responsibility remain in the hands of provincial authorities, and I think in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon until we make the decision—and I hope it is very soon—that they will have the control of the surveyors and other government officials in their area, that control should remain the responsibility of the federal minister.

I do not want to prolong this. If the parliamentary secretary wants this bill passed before one o'clock, that is all right, but I want to point out that many people feel abused every time we go through this stupid argument about changing the word "Dominion" to the word "Canada".

If we really want to do that, let us pass legislation which will enable all other pieces of legislation to be changed by registering them under the enabling legislation. That will cause fewer hassles and will probably do more to promote unity than the kind of division which always comes about when we talk about changing the word "Dominion" to the word "Canada" or "Canadian".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that, if I recognize the parliamentary secretary at this time, he will close the debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I personally have no difficulty with the word "Dominion". I regret that in some parts of the country some people feel the way the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) described. It seems that it is still difficult for some Canadians to accept that things can be Canadian. I see no difficulty with this type of evolution whereby more and more we are trying to develop a Canadian nationalism and a Canadian identification. I feel that the word "Canada" should be used more and more.

The faculty for adaptation of some of us is better than that of others, but inevitably things will be more and more Canadian. This is our country. I am proud that our major airline is called Air Canada, and we also have a company called Canadian Pacific. After all, they are Canadian.

[Translation]

I have much hesitation, difficulty and impatience, Mr. Speaker, when I see that some of my fellow citizens are still reluctant to identify more and more as Canadians. Having visited all parts of my country in the last couple of years, I can see that it does not correspond so much to the feelings I have detected in Canadians of all parts of the country. In the east as in the west, Canadians tend more and more to identify as such and more and more express this feeling of nationalism which is taking so long to blossom out in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it being one o'clock, I would like to continue after lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY ORGANIZED CRIME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, before I move my motion, may I say that I am somewhat disappointed that both the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) are absent. I rise under the provisions of Standing Order No. 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Minister of Justice's indifference to the established facts of international gang-rule is absolutely astonishing, and his refusal to set up a royal commission on organized crime is undeniably mistaken. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House views with alarm the increase in international organized crime in Canada and directs the government to establish a royal commission on the matter with full powers to subpoena witnesses and documents to get the hard evidence to lead to charges and convictions to stamp out crime in this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: According to Standing Order 43, the presentation for debate of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The May labour force survey showed that unemployment in Atlantic Canada has reached the tragically unacceptable level of 12 per cent. Unemployment in Quebec is up two full percentage points from May, 1976, to 10 per cent in May, 1977. This government's policies have increased regional disparity and cost young Canadians dearly. There are 403,000 unemployed between the ages of 15 and 24. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House urge the government to immediately implement a policy of full employment.

Mr. Speaker: According to Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CREATE JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing concern. In light of the fact that economic stagnation, and the failure of governments to act to solve the problems of unemployment elsewhere in the world has led to internal dissension, in light of the fact that we in Canada are faced with the double-barrelled problems of high unemployment and a separatist government in Quebec, and recognizing the desire of the Canadian parliament to keep Canada together, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House urges the government to take new and immediate action to solve the unemployment crisis in Quebec and throughout this country before it is too late to save the country from the destruction which is inevitably bred by the continual failure of a national government to create a positive climate leading to more jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the tragic unemployment situation existing on Cape Breton Island. In light of the announcement that there is to be a shutdown of a five-week duration at the Sydney Steel Corporation, which will add hundreds of additional unemployed to the ranks of an unemployment rate that is already the highest in the nation, and as a result of a largely attended public meeting of unemployed and others held in Sydney last night, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates):

That a team of expediters from the Department of Manpower and Immigration and officials from the Unemployment Insurance Commission be immediately dispatched to Cape Breton Island to meet with the unemployed and municipal authorities to work out at least immediate short-term proposals to provide employment, particularly in view of the telegram that was sent to the Prime Minister and government ministers stating that if this was not done within 48 hours, further and more serious action would be taken.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

RECOMMENDED CONTROL OF CHICKEN IMPORTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an urgent and important matter.

Since massive imports of chicken from the United States endanger the Canadian agriculture industry and could cause the rate of unemployment to rise, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard):

That the House strongly recommend, on the one hand to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), that steps be taken without delay to control effectively the imports of live and eviscerated chicken and, on the other hand to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), to take appropriate means to accelerate the creation of a national chicken marketing board in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ORGANIZED CRIME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same Standing Order. In view of the information revealed in last night's excellent CBC special on organized crime concerning, particularly, the Hong Kong connection, and in view of the fact that ex-Hong Kong police officers Lui Luk, Choi Bing Lung, Chen Cheung You, Nam Cong and Hon Sum have—the Five Dragons—received landed immigrant status in Canada and that extradition proceedings have been sought against Nam Cong, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration conduct an immediate inquiry into the circumstances of their admission to Canada to determine whether each individual has properly complied with all immigration rules, regulations and standards and, secondly, that the minister inquire whether any charges have been laid or are pending against these individuals in Hong Kong or elsewhere, and that the minister report to the House within two weeks from this date by way of a statement on motions so that the Canadian public can be reassured that the immigration service is not being subverted.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration granted 21,000 ministerial orders in 1975, 18,800 in 1974 and 19,500 in 1973, cases which included persons who were prohibited from being landed under the provisions of section 5 of the Immigration Act, and in view of the fact that Canadians have always endorsed an immigration policy based on compassion and humanitarian considerations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration consider granting Ronald Tove and Jeannie Rae landed immigrant status on the basis of humanitarian grounds.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43 the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ADEQUACY OF RCMP RESOURCES TO COMBAT ORGANIZED CRIME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the increasing awareness of the pervasive influence of organized crime in our country and the necessity for a greater priority by governments to counteract this alarming state of affairs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice take steps to reassess the adequacy of resources available to the RCMP in terms of personnel and equipment, and examine the priorities whereby so many RCMP officers are engaged in the policing of municipal and provincial statutes rather than directing their expertise to a more pressing and urgent need, that is, the combatting of white collar and organized crime as well as intelligence activities.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires unanimous consent before it can be put. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ORGANIZED CRIME—REQUEST FOR NATIONAL INQUIRY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. Given the renewed evidence last night on the second part of the CBC television series on organized crime that a great deal of the problem which is related to organized crime relates to matters clearly within federal jurisdiction, such as loan sharking, narcotics and immigration irregularities, will the Minister of Justice act immediately to have a national inquiry, preferably in the form of a royal commission, look into the state of organized crime in Canada and to recommend means by which we may take action to protect Canadians against organized crime in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, essentially I would say what I said yesterday and what I said in committee this morning, that the most effective way of dealing with this problem is—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Here we go again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: —for this parliament to deal with legislation which is currently before it, one being the Immigration Act and the other being, more importantly, Bill C-51.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What about the Historic Sites and Monuments Act?

Mr. Basford: Hon. members opposite seem very sensitive after last night's show.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The whole country is sensitive.

An hon. Member: Where is their hero today?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I can only read and adopt the view of the Canadian chiefs of police who said on Friday, in reference to the passage of those wiretap amendments—

An hon. Member: They were in favour of capital punishment, as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Leader of the Opposition on a supplementary question.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The only group which is not showing sensitivity to this problem is the government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Clark: The government of Canada refuses to take the action that it should take and pretends that somehow or other wiretapping would have stopped the Five Dragons or any of the other indications of illegality which were made very clear on the program last night. What is clear to the House of Commons and to the country, if not to to the government, is that a mere improvement in police technology is not going to stop organized crime.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: You have got to be against it, not for it.

Mr. Clark: What is needed is a determination by this government to fight organized crime.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Right on.

Mr. Clark: I ask the Minister of Justice, now, why he will not call an inquiry into organized crime in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I had some difficulty hearing the question of the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I did hear him say, however, that what is needed is a clear determination by this parliament to pass some laws. I would agree with that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: This parliament has been warned since 1974, 1975, 1976 and 1977 by the police authorities of this country that by reason of the law of this land they are handicapped in dealing with the organizers of organized crime. If there is determination needed anywhere, it is determination by the gentlemen opposite—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What about capital punishment?

Mr. Basford: —to take their courage in their hands and pass some laws.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House will realize that the principal combatants here are engaged in what is essentially a debate on measures which are before the House. If there is to be a use of the question period, it is to seek information. If there is to be—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the House will understand—order, please—that in the exchange that has just taken place we have departed from the format of a question seeking information and an answer providing it. If there is to be a use of the question period, perhaps we can proceed; but if we are to continue with the debate, then the debate ought to take place on the legislation.

• (1420)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what we have departed from, and what we departed from long ago with this government, is the practice of giving information to the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What I want to know, and what the people of Canada want to know, is why this government refuses to get serious about fighting organized crime.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Why does it refuse to call an inquiry into organized crime in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, it was reported to this House in 1975 that the inability of the police to deal with organized crime was a clear and always present danger. I quote from a report tabled in this House to which the government responded by means of legislation—

An hon. Member: Like capital punishment.

Mr. Basford: —which needs to be passed, on the recommendation of every police force in this country. The Leader of the Opposition prefaced one of his questions with reference to the so-called Five Dragons. If he wishes to direct that question to the Solicitor General he will receive an answer about the Five Dragons.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice will obviously hide behind anything he can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: What we want to know—and it is a simple question—is why the Minister of Justice will not do his duty and call an inquiry into organized crime in this country, so that we might take all the action necessary to fight it.

ORGANIZED CRIME—WIRETAPPING LEGISLATION TO COMBAT—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION STUDY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the only answer given to the Leader of the Opposition by the Minister of Justice was that Bill C-51 should pass. Bill C-51 excludes 11 million long guns and it changes the law in reference to wiretapping slightly. I ask the minister this question: In light of the fact that in 1976 there were 1,062 people wiretapped and imprisoned, and in light of the fact that of those 1,062 persons there were only 13 convictions, is that the minister's serious answer to controlling crime?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and his colleagues remind me of the legal story: if you have a bad case, make lots of noise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You should know.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Hees: That is why you have been shouting.

Mr. Basford: The figures to which the hon. gentleman refers were explained in the second reading debate on that bill.

Mr. Woolliams: They certainly were not.

Mr. Basford: Obviously, authorizations obtained in one year do not lead to arrests or convictions in that year, but in subsequent years. Those figures were carefully documented by the Solicitor General in the second reading debate on the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: We have heard that answer before, and I notice the Solicitor General has changed that answer. This report is by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and it does not deal with that. I want to repeat, there were 1,062 phones wiretapped, and only 13 convictions. A royal commission would permit witnesses to be called and subpoenaed by the police.

In light of the fact that a royal commission inquiry into crime would permit documents to be subpoenaed, read and produced, which would lead to charges being laid and result in convictions, will the minister not reconsider his position, in view of the answer he gave me on September 17, 1975, when I pressed this matter forward in the House in reference to the crime commission inquiry going on in the province of Quebec, at which time he said that the provinces were handling it? Does he recommend ten royal commissions to be started in Canada, or will he take his responsibility under the BNA Act which calls for criminal law to fall under his jurisdiction?

Mr. Basford: I indicated yesterday that on these matters which involve the administration of justice I would, of course, consult the attorneys general. The Solicitor General and I have also consulted from time to time members of the RCMP, who feel that there are far more effective measures of getting investigations, charges, prosecutions and incarcerations carried out than by way of a royal commission. It is seldom that I agree with the Globe and Mail, but this morning it says, in an editorial referring to the Attorney General—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Next day it will be the Toronto Sun.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster.

ORGANIZED CRIME—HONG KONG POLICEMEN GRANTED LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It, too, is inspired by that most excellent program of the CBC which this House tends to kick around from time to time. Perhaps we should offer it our congratulations for a job well done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It does its job.

Mr. Leggatt: Would the minister advise the House whether the five Hong Kong policemen who attained landed immigrant status in Canada met all the standard criteria under the Immigration Act? Can he also advise us whether any of them are at present sought by the authorities in Hong Kong, and in particular can he advise us whether, with respect to one Nam Cong whom they have been trying to extradite back to Hong Kong, his department has co-operated in the extradition proceeding?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is wonderful that we have people from the British House of Commons learning how we conduct ourselves during the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: At least they get answers over there.

Mr. Cullen: I am afraid they will go back and say they had nothing to learn from the opposition parties, at any rate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Paproski: You bombed out twice. Now try a third time.

Mr. Cullen: It is hard to know which hon. member to reply to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question which was put by the hon. member for New Westminster was a very straightforward and direct question.

An hon. Member: Just answer the question.

An hon. Member: Clean up your act.

An hon. Member: Laughing on the outside, crying on the inside.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member did, in fact, have a serious question and I was getting around to it. But I thought it might be more appropriate if he could hear my answer, and I thought that by making that comment I would quieten down hon. members opposite. At the time of admission, none of the former Hong Kong policemen referred to had been convicted of any crime and they were, in fact, legally admitted to Canada. Some people suggest that they might have committed crimes in Canada and on that basis should not have been admitted. That is something we can debate later. The department, however, has been aware for some time of the allegations made against these persons, but so far investigations have not revealed any evidence that would permit action under the Immigration Act. In one particular case I understand that a request for action has been made by the Hong Kong authorities to have an individual returned, and a Federal Court judge dismissed that application and ordered the suspect freed and proceedings dropped. In so far as extradition proceedings are concerned, that would come under the aegis of my colleague, the Solicitor General.

[Mr. Basford.]

ORGANIZED CRIME—NUMBER OF RCMP OFFICERS ENGAGED IN INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Solicitor General whether he can advise about extradition proceedings against Nam Cong. In addition, would he advise the House why it is that the RCMP has assigned, according to my information, some 600 individuals to be actively engaged in looking into political subversion in Canada? The RCMP also has another 500 from the Department of National Defence to give them a hand in terms of political subversion in Canada. My information is that there are six full-time RCMP officers in Ottawa whose special responsibility is organized crime. Would the Solicitor General advise whether my information is accurate or otherwise, and would he also advise the House whether he believes this is a fair balance in view of the risk to the country brought about by either political subversion or organized crime?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as far as extradition proceedings are concerned, I have received no requests concerning this matter, which I presume in any event would be addressed first to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An hon. Member: There's another buck passed.

Mr. Clark: We will soon get around to Goyer.

Mr. Fox: The hon. member also asked a more general question in connection with organized crime. Listening to the opposition during the course of the question period this afternoon, one gets the impression that they discovered organized crime on Monday and Tuesday nights by watching television.

Mr. Fraser: Sunday and Monday night.

Mr. Clark: He's got the days wrong, too.

Mr. Fox: The RCMP has been very interested in the activities of organized crime in this country since the mid-1950s. I have consulted the RCMP on a number of occasions concerning the question of the crime inquiry which hon. members opposite have referred to. The very seriously considered advice I received from the RCMP is that in many instances, while a national crime inquiry night be dramatic and make good television, it is not the most productive way to deal with organized crime. I am advised it would be far better to proceed with joint force operations. I would like to give one example. As a result of joint force operations in the Toronto area there have been over 40 prosecutions in the last four months. The RCMP has also participated in setting up—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If he wants to make a statement, we will let him.

Mr. Hees: Turn the page, Francis.

Mr. Fox: —a criminal intelligence service, which was suggested by the then minister of justice in Quebec in 1966. Since that time there have been more than 48 police departments involved with this criminal intelligence service. This includes 22 RCMP crime intelligence units right across the country. This indicates that one of the top priorities of the RCMP has been, and will continue to be, the fight against organized crime in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORGANIZED CRIME—RESOURCES TO COMBAT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I know there is a lot of noise in the House, but the Solicitor General obviously did not hear my question. My question dealt with the allocation of resources in the fight against organized crime. The minister did not respond. However, in terms of the discovery of organized crime in Canada, I can assure the Solicitor General that we have known about it and that the RCMP has known about it. What we want to know is why nobody has been doing anything about it and why charges have not been laid.

My question goes back to the Minister of Justice. Under the existing wiretap law which we are seeking to amend there are almost no offences that we were shown on that television show which could not have been dealt with by wiretapping under the existing law. I want the minister to tell this House why we have not seen more charges against mafia leaders, the Five Dragons and other people when the wiretap law has been available to the RCMP all this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Solicitor General, will be happy to answer specific questions with regard to the Five Dragons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you try MacEachen. Allan knows everything about dragons.

Mr. Basford: As to the balance of the question, there is a long record—and I would be happy to answer by way of a written answer—of the charges laid and the convictions obtained by the RCMP over, for example, the last four years. They are very extensive. The hon. member for New Westminster knows very well that the activities of the co-ordinated law enforcement unit of British Columbia, of which the RCMP is a member and actively co-operates, have led over the last two years to a number of very serious drug conspiracy, heroin importation and other hard drug charges being laid. These criminal activities have been broken up and the people involved brought to court. That is as a result of effective police work. For the last three years reports from the RCMP and from others have been before this parliament, and the RCMP and others can be more effective against organized crime if some amendments to the law are passed.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO RESTRICT CHICKEN IMPORTS AND PROTECT PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, perhaps we could drop jailbirds and speak of poultry.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Quebec Federation of Poultry Producers complains bitterly that Canada imports a lot of poultry from the United States at the risk of jeopardizing our own poultry industry, can the minister tell the House whether he is acquainted with the telegram allegedly sent to him by the Quebec Federation of Poultry Producers requesting his intervention through the adoption of steps to protect the poultry producers and their industry, and if so, what reply was given to that telegram?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had talks with my colleague the Minister of Agriculture concerning poultry markets. I believe he will be in a position to make a statement on the matter within a few days.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer which the minister has just given and the anxiety felt by the producers, could he tell exactly to the House what was the reply to the telegram so that we may provide information to those who quite logically come to us as members and thus enlighten them and somewhat restore their confidence?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I take the question as notice for my colleague and I will ask him to answer the hon. member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ORGANIZED CRIME—REASON GOVERNMENT HAS NOT APPOINTED ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, and possibly also a question for the Solicitor General. I wonder why the government has decided not to have a royal commission on crime. Is it the fact that if such a commission were set up, some revelations about some well known and pampered pets of liberalism would be made? I refer to people such as John C. Doyle who, despite the fact that he had a criminal record and wanted to get out of the country, had his passport returned to him, thereby enabling him to be a fugitive from justice. Hal Banks was able to escape punishment by leaving Canada after being granted bail, with the government consenting thereto. I refer, also, to Lucien Rivard, of rink-icing fame. Is the government afraid that if a commission were set up, some revelations concerning these matters, which have been hidden for several years, would be made? Is that the truthful reason—not an evasive reason—for the failure of the government to set up this commission?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has played an outstanding role in the public life of this country, I find it very hard to believe that he would ask that question about a very serious problem with any other purpose than the purpose of mischief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1440)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: You are too precious, Ron.

Mr. Basford: —I only mention two points: first, that of Mr. Banks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Just listen to the corporal.

Mr. Clark: Are you going to phone a judge?

Mr. Basford: I think the record will show that the government of the right hon. gentleman did little about that situation. Second, with regard to Mr. Doyle I just indicate that, of course, the removal of the passport of someone on bail is a decision not of government but of a magistrate or judge.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, but with the consent of the government.

Mr. Basford: That was opposed by the attorney general of Newfoundland. Second, in connection with income tax matters, I made it clear in this House that the instructions to our counsel, from both myself and the Department of National Revenue, are to pursue those income tax matters as expeditiously as possible. Third, the right hon. gentleman will know that only a short time ago action was taken pursuant to the Canadian Corporations Act to seize and examine the records of Canadian Javelin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Alexander: Go get 'em, Chief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not get the contribution of the hon. gentleman opposite. What was it? He always runs for cover from a seated position with those interruptions of his. I ask the Minister of Justice, can he come clean? I am not suggesting in any way connivance on his part or deception. I never do that with regard to this government. It is stupidity. I ask this: Now that he believes he has an answer to the question I raised, will he reconsider the matter? Will he give the country the opportunity to find out the truth, to find out why those protected and pampered Grits received such good attention over the years?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, unlike the right hon. gentleman, I cannot become much cleaner.

Mr. Clark: Then have an inquiry and let's see.

Mr. Hees: You are splitting hairs. Stick to the straight line, Ron, and don't try to be funny. You are comic, anyway.

Mr. Basford: Where's George Hees?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Let's not split hairs.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that in none of the three cases raised by the right hon. gentleman is there evidence to support the proposition that there should be an inquiry. The only matter in which action is being currently taken is with regard to John C. Doyle, and I have already stated the government's position on that. Instructions have been issued to counsel that every possible step should be taken in court to prosecute with regard to outstanding income tax matters. Second, an investigation is being conducted into the corporate affairs of Canadian Javelin Limited. We are taking proper, investigative legal measures and there is no need to call or to have a royal commission on the matter.

Mr. Hees: What about your pal Hal?

ORGANIZED CRIME—HONG KONG POLICEMEN GRANTED LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration following the straightforward questions of the hon. member for New Westminster to which the minister replied in a jocular manner. The minister indicated that when the so-called Five Dragons were given landed immigration status there had been no investigations concerning criminal activity. I ask: When they were given landed immigration status, did they qualify under the points system, or were they given landed immigration status on the basis of their entrepreneurial skills?

An hon. Member: They were refugees.

Mr. Epp: Further, if no such information was available, did he meet with officials either today or last night after the new information became public? Did he instruct his officials to carry out a thorough investigation or inquiry of those five in order to determine if the immigration department was subverted by those persons who were given landed immigrant status under highly questionable circumstances?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, the hon. member misquoted me. I said they had not been convicted of any crime. That was my response to the question raised by the hon. member for New Westminster. Second, I said we had been made aware of allegations made against those persons. So far, investigations have not revealed evidence which would permit action under the Immigration Act. Our investigations are continuing.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious allegations made in the CBC documentary concerning certain immigration officials who apparently were helping to land known mobsters in Canada—apparently these criminals were entering and leaving Canada at will—would the minister consider establishing an independent inquiry into the operations of the Immigration department, for two reasons: one, to clear the names of the many immigration officials who do their jobs honestly and fairly; second, to bring to justice those who are in collusion with mobsters, assuming those facts can be borne out by an inquiry?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his comments about the vast majority of members of the department who do their jobs honestly, effectively and well. They are to be commended, especially given the situation they face every day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Since some 75 million people cross our borders every year, they do a fantastic job. We are always disturbed when we hear allegations of this nature. First we should check them out before we condemn anyone. Investigations are under way to see if new facts or evidence can be brought to light. That is being done, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fraser: Let's have a commission.

Oral Questions

ORGANIZED CRIME—ENTRY INTO CANADA OF HONG KONG POLICEMEN

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In his earlier reply he suggested that the official opposition had only discovered organized crime last night, courtesy of television. I point out to the minister that 16 months and one day ago, on February 13, 1976, I asked the then Solicitor General about the 12 former Hong Kong policemen who had fled from Hong Kong in the face of an investigation by the independent commission looking into corruption, and their entry to Canada, in order that a dangerous situation would not be allowed to develop. The matter was also brought to the attention of the present Minister of Justice, who acknowledged the existence of the letter of complaint in May, 1976.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A cover-up.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General at that time said that he had not heard of such a report, but would consult with the Minister of Justice and the RCMP about it. My question at this time is this: Did those consultations take place with the Department of the Solicitor General, and what were the results?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They never heard about it.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members who watched television last night know—

Mr. Clark: That is the first you knew of it.

Mr. Fox: —many allegations were made last night, and I would suppose that on the face of it some of them are far-fetched.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How do you know?

Mr. Fox: As far as the ex-Hong Kong policemen are concerned, there are ongoing consultations between the Department of Manpower and Immigration and my department.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, you are going to meet at five after three.

• (1450)

Mr. Fox: Of course, Mr. Speaker, the decision as to immigration to this country rests ultimately with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: There were many allegations made last night. Some referred to ex-Hong Kong policemen, some of whom would have been hired by the RCMP. There was a Mr. Ko who was a former member of the Hong Kong police force. He was hired by, and stayed with, the RCMP from 1969 until 1975, at which time he left.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: it is also important to let people have the right to defend themselves against some of the serious allegations that have been made. The hon. member raised the question about Hong Kong policemen. I am trying to give him an answer. There was also a question raised about Mr. Chan who was employed, and is still employed, by the RCMP. He has been the object of a number of allegations that originated particularly in the underworld in Vancouver over the past few years. This individual has been extremely helpful in solving a number of drug cases in the Vancouver area. We ought to set the record straight. Mr. Chan is still in the RCMP and is a valuable member of that force.

ORGANIZED CRIME—GOVERNMENT INFORMATION ON HONG KONG IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. The minister acknowledged in his letter that he had made inquiries into the matter raised by Mr. Parwani of the Hong Kong Star and had asked his officials to advise him if any additional information had come to light. That was in a letter written in May, 1976. I ask the Minister of Justice at this time what reports did come to him concerning this very serious matter which he has known about for over a year.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the report in front of me. However, as I recall it, those individuals that were mentioned were legally landed knowing that there were royal commissions under way in Hong Kong which might result in reports being made against some of them, and those reports might lead to requests for extradition. Subsequently, as a result of those royal commission inquiries in Hong Kong we were asked for our assistance in extradition, and assistance was given.

ORGANIZED CRIME—RCMP RESOURCES TO COMBAT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Is the Solicitor General satisfied that adequate resources, in terms of equipment and trained personnel, are presently available to the RCMP in order that they may turn increased attention to combatting organized crime and concentrating on security and intelligence matters; and will he, in order to expedite the priorities which I am sure he will agree ought to be given to the force in these respects, reassess the resources which are now being used by the force to police municipal and provincial statutes which could be done by other law enforcement agencies or even, in some cases, by para-police organizations and free the RCMP for more urgent and pressing duties?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the hon. member is speaking as official critic for Her Majesty's Official Opposition, and whether the opposition is taking the position that the RCMP ought to be pulled out of the provinces and cease fulfilling their obligations in that regard.

[Mr. Fox.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: That is certainly a very valid deduction from the hon. member's question. As far as the more direct part of the question is concerned, I indicated previously that the fight against organized crime is a priority issue within the RCMP. This is being done at the provincial level, where the RCMP are fulfilling their obligations under provincial contracts, and at the federal level. It is quite certain that any police force would like to have more men and more equipment. That is almost a certainty. I refer the hon. member to the exercise in restraint announced by the government two years ago. I point out that one of the few agencies not subject to that type of restraint in terms of men, money and equipment was the RCMP and other elements of the criminal justice system.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping the Solicitor General would agree that a more selective and intelligent use of the RCMP's capabilities was in order, but I see that he is too sensitive to concede it. Does he intend to press for more resources for the RCMP and to secure better treatment for the force by bringing in at least some of the recommendations of Judge Rene Marin, so that the morale of the force can be improved and they can get on with their very important duties and not start nit-picking about some of the unsatisfactory negotiations with respect to the provincial responsibility of the RCMP?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated in previous responses to the House and in response to questions brought to my attention during the course of the examination of the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General, a number of recommendations of the Marin commission have been implemented by the force. I look forward to introducing legislation at the next session of parliament, or in the fall, whichever comes first, implementing some of the main recommendations of the Marin report.

ORGANIZED CRIME—ROYAL COMMISSION STUDY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the minister's oft repeated argument that a royal commission on crime is best handled at the provincial level, will he advise whether he really believes a provincial attorney general would feel he has the proper jurisdiction to inquire into such matters as the very serious allegation last night that there were criminal influences at work within the RCMP, criminal influences at work within the immigration services, that there has been a laundering of foreign, criminal moneys through tax havens for investment, jurisdiction over narcotics, the interprovincial and international organization of crime and, something that has not yet been referred to in this House, the possible involvement of federal members of parliament in this matter? Does the Minister of Justice really believe that a provincial royal commission could properly investigate and report on these matters, when obviously this jurisdiction lies at his door and no one else's?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are obvious areas in the hon. member's list that would be difficult for provincial inquiries, such as wrongdoings by members of parliament, unless those members of parliament were committing a criminal offence within a province as it would then lend itself to a provincial inquiry. There is the matter of immigration which my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, indicated is the subject matter of an inquiry. On the subject of narcotics, the provincial attorney general of British Columbia, myself and our respective officials have been meeting over the past four months in order to devise the best possible way to deal with both the supply situation and the demand situation for narcotics, and how to most effectively deal with drug-related crime that evolves from the drug trade. I mention British Columbia because it has the highest percentage of drug use in Canada and the highest percentage of drug-related crime.

Throughout those discussions among both ministers, our officials and our respective police and law enforcement authorities, nowhere has it been suggested that the appropriate answer to dealing with those problems which are apparent to everyone would be by means of a public inquiry.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WAGNER—REMARKS MADE ON CBC TELEVISION PROGRAM

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following the deliberate, Machiavellic and savage smear attack launched last evening against my personal integrity by the CBC's hatchetmen, William MacAdam, Richard Nielsen, et al.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Throughout my public life, I have studiously refrained from suing the media, whose right to irresponsibility has now become, for too many of its representatives, a Canadian tradition. But last evening, treacherous innuendos, unwarranted and unfair, carried by the national network leave me with no alternative but to bring the matter to your attention, Mr. Speaker, prior to pursuing it further in the courts where justice will supersede amateurish sensationalism coupled with hooded anonymity.

I do not have to apologize for having been the most ardent foe and scourge of the mafia since I entered public life in 1960.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: I do not have to remind friends and enemies alike of my activities as a Crown attorney and as a judge to end the influence of the underworld in Quebec society. Nor do I have to recall those years of sincere dedication to law and order as solicitor general, attorney general and minister of justice, despite the ugly threats to my family and myself requiring 24-hour security to permit me to discharge my duties.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of my record as a crusader against organized crime throughout my judicial and political career. I will not accept lying down the defamation attempt of which I was the victim last evening by the CBC's hired hit men.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, no CBC reporter and no CBC producer will do to me and my family what the mafia was unable to do to us in my 17 years of public life. Therefore, on this question of privilege, and with the utmost respect, I rest my case in your hands, Mr. Speaker, hoping that you, and through you the Secretary of State in a statement on motions will secure from the CBC a public apology without delay, without conditions, in the hope that such an apology published by all media will, after the fact, lessen the pain and suffering my family and I have endured.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has returned to the question of privilege which has been raised in the past few days. The question began in a general form with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) about a week ago. It has been contributed to on several occasions in the intervening period and there have been some major contributions as a result of events that have taken place since that time. Nevertheless, all of the contributions, including those made yesterday, have a general bearing on the over-all question which I had intended to rule on today if at all possible.

In the light of the notice I received this morning from the hon. member who has just spoken, I thought it would be appropriate for me to hear him before attempting to make a general pronouncement on the questions of privilege, as they relate to the very important relationship between this House and the freedom of the press. I would, therefore, like to take these latest remarks into account and perhaps allow a few more days to pass before I attempt to comment definitively on the relationship between the freedom of the press and the House of Commons in the rather narrow context of privilege.

A point which has some bearing in a rather indirect way, but is nevertheless tied to the actions of the press, was the one raised some time ago by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I indicated earlier that that point remains outstanding as well, and I would like to try to resolve it at the same time. Last week I indicated that hon. members who felt there was something else to contribute to the point raised so ably and thoroughly by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway ought to be given an opportunity to do so. If there are any contributions which hon. members wish to make, I would certainly hear them now on the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, which concerns the British practice of holding as a breach of the privileges of the House the publication of a confidential committee report.

I see the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I will be quite brief. One of the things which prompted me to rise was your mention that it was the British practice that should be looked at most carefully. I should like Your Honour to take a further look at our own Standing Orders in relation to the publication of confidential documents. It would seem to me that the Canadian practice, not merely the British practice, needs to be followed.

I believe it is vital to the rights of members of parliament that confidential documents which are lying in this place or around this place should be treated by the press as matters of confidence, and if the press fails to do so it seems to me some action should be taken against them. When documents are marked "Confidential" they should be kept confidential, because the privilege of coming into this place is a special one which we grant as members of parliament. I am, therefore, asking Your Honour to accept the lucid and eloquent argument put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) that in the case of a prima facie breach of privilege only a standing committee of the House can determine the true cause and protect the confidentiality of documents which all of us have around this place.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on the point alluded to by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and following along with what Your Honour said in dealing with these matters, I hesitate to say there is a mixing of questions of privilege. Though they relate to the press in a very general way, they are quite different from the point of view of the judgment which must be made by you, sir.

The question of privilege which was originally raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) is a matter which stands on its own set of facts. It is not on all fours with the facts raised by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal). The cases are different. I suggest, with the greatest respect, that the jurisprudence of this House on those two points would not be as clear and as precise as this House would require and that the press would require, depending upon Your Honour's judgment, if you dealt with those two matters as if they were part and parcel of the same question. I hope Your Honour was not leading to dealing with the matter in that way.

Mr. Speaker: Let me assure the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and all hon. members, that I propose to deal with them at the same time, but as entirely separate items. The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell).

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very brief point. I recall having raised a question of privilege with respect to the publication by certain newspapers of the interim report of the special joint committee on immigration policy before it was presented to the House. In Your Honour's ruling there, if my memory is correct, and I have checked it very quickly, you referred to the difficulty in making that case in that my allegation was not specific and there was no specific allegation of misconduct affecting the privileges of the House. I should like to raise the possibility that in your ruling you give some guidance to us as members as to what constitutes specifics. Must the newspapers be named? Must persons be named? I had named newspapers, but I did not name persons. One of the reasons we seem to fail in these questions of privilege is that from a layman's point of view the very act of publication is a misconduct. That is a specific misconduct and should not need to be any more specific than that. That is why one seeks a reference to the committee to explore the facts. I would appreciate it very much, as would, possibly, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, if we had some clarification on what "specific" means in terms of our rules with respect to questions of privilege of this kind.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, apropos the question of privilege just articulated by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), I know in considering these matters that Your Honour must take into account traditional precedents and the traditions of this House. I would suggest and recommend most strongly to you, Mr. Speaker, as the chief protector of our rights, that there comes a time, in terms of our relationship with the fourth estate, while we pay attention to precedents and to traditions, that modern phenomena be given precise consideration by Your Honour in determining whether privilege exists.

I remember that my father appeared on behalf of Sir Arthur Currie, after the Second World War, on a libel cause. There was just a little column placed in a little daily newspaper. We are not discussing little articles in a weekly or a daily newspaper; we are talking about a modern phenomenon—television. Millions of people watch television during prime time. We are talking about a phenomenon called smear by innuendo.

In considering the valid privilege of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, I would hope this modern phenomenon—libel through the electric media—with millions of people watching at prime time on Sunday nights is not the same as a traditional insertion in a weekly or a daily newspaper. Whether we like it or not, we have got to come to terms with this modern phenomenon in the electric media, especially with regard to smear by innuendo. I appeal to you, sir, as the first commoner amongst us, to give consideration to the valid question of privilege stated by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated earlier this afternoon, I hope hon. members will bear with me as I take a few days to bring this matter together to deal with the various questions which have been raised: those relating to the recent television program in respect of organized crime, those of about a week ago in respect of the relationship between the government and the press of the country, and those raised earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) in respect of premature publication of what was allegedly a confidential document. I will attempt to do so and shall try to keep the House informed as to exactly when I will make that decision.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order arising out of yesterday's question period. It is important to us from the point of view of the operation of the question period. I am concerned with the first questions by the hon. Leader of the Opposition during the oral question period. He was followed by the hon. member for Lisgar dealing with the government's policy respecting appointments to the public service. The questions by the Leader of the Opposition dealt with appointments by orders in council. There was a series of five questions by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. They dealt with the appointment of ex-Liberal candidates, or their spouses, to a variety of positions within the Canadian judiciary, regulatory agencies and the Public Service of Canada. Those questions were allowed to proceed in the normal way. As reported at page 6577 of Hansard, the supplementary question by the hon. member for Lisgar was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Undoubtedly, this morning's newspaper report also missed the roles of Liberal campaign managers, begmen, PR men and party hacks of various descriptions. My question to the Acting Prime Minister is simply whether it is government policy to create a partisan public service. If not, will he at the earliest opportunity be bringing under the Public Service Commission the bulk of order in council appointments to prevent this from happening?

The minister did not answer the question; he sat down. The next remark in Hansard is by you, sir, which reads as follows:

> Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster.

Your Honour followed the customary practice. Hansard continues by showing the hon. member for Lisgar saying, "A supplementary, Mr. Speaker." Then Your Honour intervened by saying:

> By the most basic definition of supplementary questions, they must arise out of the response to the original question.

With respect, I say that if Your Honour reviews the words of the question put by the hon. member for Lisgar, you will see that two things occurred. The first was the hon. member saying, in the first place, "I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister," which indicates that that clearly followed as a question supplementary—at least, it could be so construed and in my respectful submission it ought to be so construed—to the question of the Leader of the Opposition. Then the hon. member said, "A supplementary". He was not allowed to stand, because the minister refused to answer. That is what happened on the floor of the House of Commons.

● (1520)

What concerns me is that if your ruling is allowed to stand generally as, "—they must arise out of the response to the original question", then it is open to ministers merely to sit and a line of supplementary questions leading from the main question of a member in the position of the hon. member for Lisgar is ended.

The alternative—and Your Honour obviously did not consider this, but I wish you would—is that it is open on the record to ask a supplementary not merely to the question raised by the hon. member for Lisgar but to the original series of questions. There is nothing to indicate otherwise; it simply reads, "A supplementary, Mr. Speaker", to the original series of questions put by the Leader of the Opposition. I know I cannot question the ruling of the Chair and the ruling has been made, but in the event the hon. member for Lisgar and, therefore, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and, therefore, this parliament, was stopped at that point from pursuing a line of questioning.

It is clear we must have some guidelines if we have arrived at the point—and I hope we have not arrived at it—where a minister, by sitting down and refusing to answer, can rule out any further supplementaries a member might have, especially when we are dealing with the broad subject matter of appointments to the public service, regulatory agencies and elsewhere, to which the line of questioning by the hon. member for Lisgar was clearly supplementary.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on the question raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, I merely want to say very briefly that it is a well understood practice that a minister of the Crown has the option of answering or declining to answer. Ministers usually reply, but sometimes they do not. In this case I deliberately chose not to reply because I thought the question was intemperate and argumentative. The hon. member has another point, namely, the action of the Chair. I am merely re-establishing the point that in certain circumstances ministers may decline to answer, within the practice of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I can probably reassure both hon. members. The judgment in a particular situation, of course, is always somewhat related to the circumstances. It has always been the practice of the House to permit to Her Majesty's Official Opposition the lead question in any question period, and to follow that with a supplementary questioner to the lead-off questioner for Her Majesty's Official Opposition. That combined questioning force usually lasts for five or six questions. Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition exercised his option, which is extended to him on a number of occasions, to use up almost all of those questions, by the Chair permitting him some five consecutive questions. I believe the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton counted five questions by the Leader of the Opposition.

In coming to the point where the hon. member for Lisgar followed, there is always some effect on my handling of the decision by the actual circumstances then present. The hon. member for Lisgar was asking the sixth consecutive question on that subject. He asked a question which in its initial stages might have meant there had been the intention to create a partisan public service. He might have been considered to be argumentative or frivolous in that respect. It seems to me, however, that he corrected that and ended with a serious question. In any case, the minister, as he said today, chose not to answer.

I hope I can reassure the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I said that when the hon. member for Lisgar sought a supplementary to a question which had not been answered—and I used the language of the original question—by the very basis of its definition, a supplementary question must be one which arises out of the response to the original question. I think the words that are causing the hon. member trouble are "original question". What "original" in that context was designed to convey was the question which the supplementary was following. In other words, if a supplementary question is to be permitted it must flow from the response to the question to which it is supplementary, not to the original question, as the case may be.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton seemed to be concerned that unless the question is supplementary to the first question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, it falls. That is not the case. The supplementary, if it is to stand, must flow from the response to the question which had previously been put by the same questioner or by another questioner. In the circumstances, if a minister exercises his legitimate option not to answer, I fail to see how the Chair can allow a supplementary question flowing from a response which does not exist. The response is not the response to the original question, but the response to the question in this context, to the original question put by the hon. member for Lisgar, not the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

It seems to me it does not follow that if a minister refuses to answer one question and thereby stops supplementary questions on that occasion, there is any prohibition against other members seeking the floor during the same question period and continuing to put related questions on the same subject to the same minister.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I realize the difficulty the Chair has, but this is a very confusing matter.

An hon. Member: Only you are confused.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is a confusing matter and it is very important to the operation of the question period, even if the hon. member opposite does not understand that. Mr. Speaker, I take it from your statement that if the hon. member had said, "A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the questions put by the Leader of the Opposition," Your Honour's judgment might have been different, given the fact that there was no partisans or some other reason to put it down.

In other words, I am asking if it is now to be the rule of this House that an hon. member who is second in a series of questions on a particular subject can only have a supplementary question relating to his own original question, or is it still within the ambit of supplementary questions that a member, second in a series on the same subject matter, can ask a question supplementary to a question asked by the first questioner in the series.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member seeks clarification. Surely the individual circumstances would govern. Perhaps if the hon. member for Lisgar had said yesterday, "I see the minister does not want to pursue that subject further. Therefore, I have a supplementary to another minister on the subject raised," that may have been permitted, in the circumstances. I do not think I can go any further than that.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE RIGHT OF APPEAL WHERE COMMISSION ERRS IN LAW

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-423, to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (appeals).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to correct an apparent anomaly in the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. My colleague, the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), discovered that through an oversight there is no appeal to the Federal Court or the Supreme Court on matters of fact or law of decisions or procedures of the various electoral boundaries commissions appointed under the act. This bill would provide an appeal to the Federal Court, thus bringing this regulatory agency under the same rules as other regulatory agencies.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

DESIGNATION OF ALLOTTED DAY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to designate tomorrow as an allotted day. My understanding is that following tomorrow we will be discussing the motion in the name of the financial critic of the official opposition on the anti-inflation program. If the assigned days under the law are used, we would have a division on that on Monday next.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was in fact rising to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) if he would designate tomorrow as an allotted day. Now that he has done so, I wonder if I may indicate to the House that the motion for tomorrow will be put down by the New Democratic Party. It will be in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) and it will read as follows:

That this House calls on the government to establish forthwith a royal commission on organized crime in Canada.

Question No. 1,779—Mr. Leggatt:

1. What is the status of the proposed new offshore oil and gas regulations published in May 1976?

2. Have the proposed regulations been referred to a standing committee of the House and, if not, is it the intention of the government to refer them?

3. Have the proposed regulations in any way been modified since they were announced in May 1976?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. On May 19, 1976, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development jointly announced that new legislation in the form of a Petroleum and Natural Gas Bill would be placed before Parliament and that new Canada Oil and Gas Land Regulations would be promulgated following passage of the new Bill. The new legislation and regulations are in the process of being drafted by officers of the Department of Justice, and it is anticipated that the legislation will be placed before Parliament during this Session.

2. The proposed regulations will not be promulgated until after passage of the proposed Petroleum and Natural Gas Bill and hence have not been referred to a standing committee of the House. It is anticipated that they will be referred to a standing committee of the House prior to promulgation.

3. Since the principal elements of the proposed new regulations were announced in May 1976 certain proposals for modifications have been made. Any changes will be announced when the proposed Petroleum and Natural Gas Bill is submitted to Parliament.

CANADA LANDS SURVEYS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang (for Mr. Gillespie) that Bill C-4, to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose for lunch at one o'clock today I was trying to indicate some of the feelings of my compatriots across the country with regard to the nomenclature of some of the Crown corporations and agencies, and I indicated that there was no sinister intention in calling the new bill the Canada Lands Surveys Act. In fact, this has been the name of the act since 1952, by amendment.

[Translation]

The title of this law is not new; since 1952, through an amendment, it has been changed to Canada Lands Surveys Act. My colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) recalled the valuable services rendered by land surveyors who obtained their certificate through a period of apprenticeship while on the job. The great contribution of these men has been to complete the documents on surveying in Canada. My colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was wondering if there had not been any violation of Indian territories by giving a favourable presumption to the Canada Lands Surveyor, that is, by allowing him, under the law, to pass through their territory to conduct his work. Indians have expressed very little resistance to this type of activity and I do not believe this new legislation will create any problems.

I would not want to extend the debate on this bill. Therefore, without minimizing its scope, I understand an agreement has been made among party leaders so that the three stages of the bill will take place in the House and consideration in committee could take place in committee of the whole. My colleagues might accept this arrangement and proceed to consideration of the bill in committee of the whole.

Mr. Paproski: It is so agreed, Mr. Speaker.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, it really was not my intention to debate this very important bill, but since the government has not very much more legislation to bring in this afternoon I thought I would read a few documents into the record. Last Thursday, the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand) said that we were not receiving any letters on metrication. However, we get quite a few letters from western Canada, as some hon. members opposite know. I have in my hand a letter addressed to the minister, which he has yet to answer. This letter is much the same as many other letters and it reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

Now that the metric conversion issue is once again in the forefront, and hopefully I will not be branded a "western redneck, or a crank", I would like to register my objections to the metric conversion in general, and as it affects western agriculture in particular.

I, as a lifetime farmer and rancher, find the conversion of acres to hectares, and miles to kilometers particularly objectionable. Anyone can readily see that it is absolutely impossible to rearrange and rebuild the surveyed road system which is tied directly to the "section of land" and vice versa. Even an "old farmer" like me could possibly accept, and in time understand a multiple of ten system in a very few areas, but to expect agriculture to pick up the tab, either directly or indirectly, for any of this conversion is just not right. Our input costs (due mainly to the manufactured products we need to run our farms as efficiently as possible) keep going up and up and we have no way to pass it on, but are controlled by world markets, unless these are manipulated via quotas, import or export restrictions and/or taxes, subsidies, etc. Over these we seem to have very little or no control. It is just not justice that we are expected (and quite often told) to get "more efficient", while the rest of the economy goes merrily along its way by simply adding any increased costs in input to the end product. However, I fail to see where "acres and miles" fit into this picture anywhere. There is not even any efficiency that can be involved here, but indeed the exact opposite.

From reading parts of Hansard on this matter I feel that most of the "feedback" the government side has obtained from western Canada has certainly been obtained from sources either non-agricultural or at least so far from the "grass roots" that the informants didn't know what grass is. We are sick and tired of just having things "crammed down our throats". In many, many cases it emerges in western Canada as sort of a "Big Daddy in Ottawa knows best" and that we are not capable to run our own affairs.

That was from Mr. William O. Bills, and it was addressed to the Minister of State for Small Business. It was written back on February 11, 1977, and as yet it has not been answered by the minister. I have in my hand a letter to an editor. This letter pretty well tells it all. It is unfortunate that the minister is not in the chamber. Perhaps the House leader did not tell him that the metrication bill was going to be discussed this afternoon. Perhaps he will come in a little later. The editor's note is as follows:

This letter, written by Bill Veitch, is in reply to an editorial which appeared in the Western Producer Feb. 3, 1977. He shares it with us.

The letter is from R.R. 1, Wainwright, Alberta, and it is dated February 16, 1977. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Editor:

Your editorial in Feb. 3rd issue in which you wholeheartedly endorse metric conversion of the grain industry you also state that most farmers in the west also support your view. Well, Mr. Editor, practically all the farmers I have talked to in the Wainwright Vermilion, Irma and Edgerton area, wholeheartedly disagree with you. Until now most of us felt metric conversion was already the law of the land, and only now, when we recently heard that metric Bill C-23 was before parliament for second reading and was meeting opposition from members of parliament Alvin Hamilton, Don Mazankowski and Cliff McIsaac, to name a few—

That hon. member is from the government side, but I can add the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith), the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) and many others who have spoken on this bill, including the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). The letter continues:

—did we realize there was still a chance to save us from this costly extravaganza.

Mr. Editor, I ask you, have you given any thought to the staggering sums of money metrification will cost the country, i.e., the retooling of factories, disruption to the building industry, and the obsolescence brought to the machine industry?

I would also point out to you that metrification will lend itself to many costly errors. You refer to $3.00 per bushel of wheat being equal to $77.81 per tonne, which I think should read $110.23 per tonne.

To make your editorial agree more with your line of thinking you also oversimplify metrification by stating the change will do away with inches, feet, yards, rods, furlongs, chains and miles, replacing them all with the metre.

As a former football player, I disagree with Jake Gaudaur, the commissioner of football. It is going to be difficult because instead of having yards on the football fields we will have so many metres. The field is going to be wider and longer and it is going to cause havoc with our great national sport, football.

Mrs. Campagnolo: In English rugby they managed to convert.

Mr. Paproski: The letter continues:

If you are going to refer to all the imperial measures why not include the milli, centi, deci, deca, hecto, and kilometres as well as metre? You also state cups, pints, quarts, gallons, pecks and bushels will all be replaced by the litre. Why did you not tell us how to judge good seed oats in metrics? We now know that good seed oats might weigh 36 to 42 lbs. per bushel—if less we might be reluctant to buy. Of course we may all carry around a new litre pail and new metric scale (no matter what the cost) in our new brief case full of government metric propaganda (which we have already paid for, except for the interest) showing us how many kg/ha we should seed in our old drill which we should discard because we can't get bolts and nuts, chains, V belts and gears to fix.

Or we might measure our seed wheat in hectolitres—one hectolitre being 2.838 bushels—

This is like a good study in calculus back at school.

Mr. Lang: You can do it. It just takes a hecto-day.

Mr. Paproski: I continue:

—so should weigh approximately 170.28 lbs.

That is just about my weight.

● (1550)

We might have to import an Olympic weight lifter to fill our drill though as at $77.81 per tonne for wheat we certainly can't afford to buy a new drill fill and our old one is waiting for a new hydraulic hose and fitting that won't fit anyway.

You didn't tell us how simple it will be, Mr. Editor, to spray our crops with so many litres, grams and milligrams per hectare with our old pails of 64 or 80 or 128 ounce acid equivalent per gallon in our old sprayer tank with our new sprayer pump (again no matter what the cost), that pumps so many litres per minute. Now if we figure the above without error, we can field test to be sure. We will travel to the old half-mile fence with our old 45-foot sprayer, get out our calculator and our brief case and find to our amazement that one foot equals 0.3048 metre times 45 equals 13.716 metres divided by 1,000 equals .013716 kilometres, and also one mile equals 1.609 kilometres times one half equals 0.8045 kilometres. We now bounce the decimal three places to the right (× 1,000) and end up with 804.5 metres. Now 804.5 × 13.716 equals 11034.522 square metres which could be so many hectares on which we should use so many litres of fluid containing so many kilograms of concentrate.

I am sure this is old hat to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. He has been educated in this program and knows what it is all about. I continue:

Please, Mr. Editor, would you help me out as I just lost my concentration? Oh! I forgot to tell you I still have my old pressure gauge on the sprayer—I was spraying at 45 pounds per square inch and travelling at 5 1/3 miles per hour with my old tractor. Anyway, I want to rush back and tell my wife, whose name I've changed to Zaza Zaza as she is now 91.44 × 66.04 × 96.52, to bring out dinner to the back 40—I mean 16.187778 ha's (40 plus 2.471).

Think, Mr. Editor, of the implications to the building industry. In a few years what will we replace 4-feet × 8-feet sheets of plywood, sheet metal for roofing on 2-feet centres and certain lengths of lumber to repair corrals or fences where we have installed pressure treated posts, maybe even in cement, that will last some 30 years.

A neighbour of mine recently made a trip to Denmark where they changed to metrics some 65 or so years ago. He says they have had and are still having many problems in the building industry.

I believe the government has done a great selling job on metrics, on down through the provincial governments, the grains industry and other organizations, with little or no input from the grass roots—the people who will pay the shot. The government tells us Canada will under metrification be more able to sell manufactured goods. I ask you, what will we export, shirts to Korea, or more reactors to Argentina? Like it or not, Canada does 60 per cent of our trade with the United States and until such time as they change—a change that is meeting ever increasing opposition from what I read and hear, I really can't see the staggering expense involved being justified. Is it so costly for our grains industry to continue converting large volumes of grain to metric tons at the terminals? I don't think so!

Is it, Mr. Editor, the right time to burden farmers with the added costs involved in the change—new scales, new tape measures, new tap and dye set, two separate supplies of bolts and nuts, hydraulic hose and fittings, fuel lines and brass fittings, V-belts, tool sets, drill sets, etc., etc? I really don't think so!

[Mr. Paproski.]

I would therefore like to advise all interested farmers to express their feelings on metrification now, by letter or phone, to their respective member of parliament.

Or the minister in charge of small business who is in charge of metric conversion. I continue:

I would also like at this time, Mr. Editor, to invite you to help me with my crop spraying this spring, as I must concede that I cannot learn the conversions in a few days, as you state in your editorial. The directions to my farm from Wainwright are 1.609 kilometres east, 12.872 north, 4.0225 east, 12.872 north, 4.0225 northwest, 2.4135 northeast, and 3.419125 kilometres north. Please disregard all the old crossroads but keep a close watch on your odometer in your new (no matter what the cost) 1977 car.

That letter says it all. For the benefit of the minister responsible for small business, I with to include in the record certain remarks. Speaking to the conference on the impact of metric conversion in North America, Mr. John Bulloch, president of the Canadian of Independent Business, said:

While the results of the metric conversion process may benefit Canada in the long-run, if we are not careful, the changeover process could do real harm to the small business community. The theme of my remarks is, "a milligram of prevention is worth a kilogram of cure."

It will be the responsibility of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business to maximize the benefits and minimize the harmful effects of the metric changeover on small business. Most small businessmen do not yet fully understand the implications of the problem involved in metrication.

It will be very difficult for the metric commission to fully involve the 650,000 members of the independent business community in the changeover process. It is true that many trade associations and other organizations are now, or will be, represented on the various metric sector committees and subcommittees. Unfortunately, these associations and organizations simply do not, and cannot, adequately represent small business. Larger firms can afford the time and money needed to be involved in trade associations or sector committee meetings. The small businessman, by definition, has to mind the store.

The federation is a non-partisan, political action organization of small and medium-size, Canadian-owned businesses from every corner of the country. Our membership has grown in only three and one-half years to over 21,000. We enjoy a growth rate of over 1,000 new members per month and are projecting a membership of 50,000 for early 1977. We now own our own head office building in Don Mills, Ontario, with facilities in Ottawa, Montreal and Vancouver. Our staff of over sixty operates in all ten provinces and in both languages. We consult privately and confront politically, if necessary, forces in government, business and labour in order to protect the interests of Canada's small business community.

We are naturally concerned that our approach to metric conversion is a responsible one in the interests of our constituency and the nation as a whole. We have been in touch with the American small business community and congressmen in connection with the reported opposition to the U.S. bill by labour and small business. As you know, the opposition was not against the bill as such, but against the fact that no amendments could be made to it. A new bill will be brought down to set up a metric commission to draft the conversion programme. It is now clear that large firms in the U.S. are going full speed ahead with metric conversion. There is no doubt that large firms, particularly multi-nationals who sell in world markets, will benefit from metrication Small firms rarely enjoy the benefits of international trade.

Our manufacturing complex is basically composed of branch plants. Domestic subsidiaries will, of necessity, convert to metric if the parent company converts. If metrication benefits foreing multi-nationals, Canadian branch plants will be in favour of it, regardless of the impact on Canadian-owned domestic businesses.

● (1600)

Because of the economic advantages enjoyed by large firms, metric conversion could hasten the current trend toward concentration of industry by a few large firms. It is difficult enough for Canadian-owned small business to avoid selling to foreign interests; we don't want to accelerate this process.

It could be that foreign firms which have had metric experience will have a head start on Canadian-owned small businesses which have not had metric experience. It follows that the foreing-owned sector could increase its market share at the expense of Canadian-owned small business as part of the metrication process. For example, Canada already imports more than one half of its machinery and equipment. We don't want metrication just to create a larger market for machinery imports from other parts of the world, such as from Sweden and the European Common Market. Conversion could increase the costs of production and supply in Canada, placing Canadian-produced products at even a greater disadvantage in the Canadian market. One objective of the Federation is to get Canadian-owned small business through the metrication process without financial hardship so that Canada will not only import less of its machinery and products, but will, in fact, be increasingly world competitive and export oriented.

Let me say at this point that we are all agreed on the advantages of the S.I. system. It is easier to learn; it makes calculations easier; it provides a truly universal measurement system, and simplifies world trade. If all countries go S.I., Canada must go S.I.

The number of production components should be standardized and be reduced and there should be a reduction in the number of product sizes. Lower production costs and reduced inventory investments are potential, long-term benefits. It has been said that the entire automobile industry in the U.S., for example, could save $500 million if all fasteners (nuts, bolts etc.) were standardized and the number of sizes limited. Sad to say, the automobile industry also provides a classic case of a botched changeover. Ford, in the United Kingdom, manufactured metric parts in both Germany and Great Britain. When it came time to put them together on the assembly line, they did not match. Ford could absorb the mistake because of its size and market position. A small business would not get a second chance, and a miscalculation of this magnitude could mean instant ruin.

Let's be blunt. We simply do not know the implications of metric change-over for Canada and we certainly do not know all the ramifications of the change-over for the small business community. The Metric Commission has said that a loss of trade will result if metrication is introduced in Canada. While this may well be true, let's get the facts. The world will still want our wheat and non-renewable resources. Where is the concrete evidence concerning the loss of exports that might develop because products are not designed or manufactured in Canada in metric units? What sections of our manufacturing industry will be affected? How many small manufacturers will be affected?

Because of the complexity of metric conversion, no country in the world, including Canada, undertook a detailed cost-benefit analysis of metric conversion. In the short-run, conversion will have to contribute to cost-push inflation. Higher prices will come about for two reasons: real cost increases and attempts by some businesses to exploit metrication in order to raise prices more than necessary. Adverse consumer reaction and resistance in England has forced a reassessment of the planning and scheduling of the conversion process. The same thing could happen in Canada.

We tend to favour a co-ordinated national program in which no one is left behind. Large companies have the technical, financial and managerial resources for planning their own metric change-over and dealing with it over the long haul. Small businesses do not possess these resources and it is the responsibility of government to ensure that small businessmen, including self-employed craftsmen, are properly informed and their interests adequately understood and represented. Service and retail firms will have retraining problems with employees, including mechanics, television repairmen and a host of others. To avoid burdening the small businessman with retraining costs, the metric system will have to be incorporated in all vocational and on-the-job training programs and special forms of technical assistance or government support provided.

During the changeover, many businesses will have to carry dual inventories, both metric and standard, until consumers have fully accepted the S.I. system. An increase in inventory does not necessarily mean an increase in sales. Unless higher prices can be passed on to consumers, small firms will face a profit and financing squeeze. Consider hardware or building supply stores, stationery stores and other types of retailers who carry products that obviously involve metric change-over problems. A normal inventory of $100,000 might have to be increased to $125,000. How will the higher inventories be financed? The banks are often unable to provide adequate financing as it is, with small business inventories swollen by inflation. Metric conversion would make things worse.

Large firms do not have the same borrowing problems as small firms. In fact, branch plants in Canada, under the umbrella of their large foreign parent, will be at a decided advantage over Canadian independents in financing their conversion to metric.

We recommend that the federal government establish a program of grants and low-interest loans to small and medium-size businesses to assist in the financing of metric conversion. Such a program would be established by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and would be administered by the new Federal Business Development Bank.

I do not suggest that it be established by the minister responsible for small business because I do not think he has enough money in his kitty.

In many cases, small firms have been dependent on the purchase of used machinery to minimize their capital investments. There will obviously not be as many S.I. used machines on the market, creating higher initial capital costs. Small firms must be warned against purchasing new or used equipment that will not be usable over the long-term. In the current business downturn, there may be opportunities to buy ends of lines or other equipment which would seem bargain-priced, although these could become useless under an S.I. change-over. Small businessmen must be warned of these dangers.

We are not yet certain which sectors of the business community will be most affected. Pharmaceutical and chemical industries are mostly metric. Makers and sellers of consumer oriented products such as packaged goods and clothing will be significantly affected. Those in manufacturing and electronics, as well as in engineering, architecture and building construction must be able to convert quickly and smoothly to avoid losing valuable sales and contracts. We do know that printers, photographers, book publishers and others in the graphics field will be concerned with machinery and paper-size problems which have not yet been fully resolved at the international level. Firms using lathes, punches, drills, presses, manufacturing equipment, tool and die equipment and scales will be particularly concerned in the change-over cost problem.

Small businessmen are extremely dependent on the ready availability of standard parts and supplies and could lose business if change-over is not orderly. Large firms can force dependent suppliers to convert to metric before they are ready to do so, and such problems must be avoided.

Legislation at the federal and provincial levels will require amendments to accommodate the new system of measurement. This process of amendment could result in a reduction of overlapping legislation at the federal and provincial levels. However, small business will have to be vigilant to ensure that the civil servants do not use metrication as an excuse to bring in omnibus bills with fundamental changes in legislation.

● (1610)

Many small retailers such as grocers and butchers use scales. Presumably, some method of changing existing scales will be created to avoid the cost of purchasing new scales. If this is not done precisely, an accidental shortchanging or miscalculation in weight could invoke government law. As you know, you can be convicted even if you didn't intend to break the law concerning food and drugs or certain other legislation governing retailing. The government must ensure that a violation of the law is not triggered by an accidental shortweighting or other errors resulting from metric conversion.

Metrication can also provide opportunities for the entrepreneur. The challenge of change will be met by enterprising Canadian businessmen who move quickly to take advantage of the need for new products created by metrication.

Once the change-over begins, the government will undoubtedly institute a "buy-metric" policy. If so, the government will have to ensure that small firms do not lose out where high change-over costs are involved. The purchasing power of the federal and provincial governments is potentially one of the major weapons available to assist the development of Canadian-owned companies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only have another page and a half here to put on record. I am sorry the minister was not here earlier. He was the one who said we had not received letters from western Canada. One of the letters to which I referred was addressed to the minister, dated February 7, 1977, and apparently he has not yet received it. Maybe that is the fault of the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais).

Since the metric change-over is a federal policy initiative, we would think that the federal government would be responsible for the resulting problems and costs. However, the provinces may wish to be involved in assisting in the change-over process and the division of responsibility must be made clear. Small business must know where to go for information and financial assistance.

Governments and the business community are waiting for the federal government to establish and announce their metric conversion policies and programs. It is difficult to expect provincial governments and business to begin metric change-over planning so long as there has been no bill or joint resolution before parliament. We are concerned that parliament has never passed metrication-enabling legislation. This means that the Metric Commission, which is essentially an advisory body for one government department, is now in practice implementing a program for the entire nation before the policy decisions have been fully approved at the parliamentary level. While we commend the initiative of those who recognize that metrication requires a great deal of lead time and effort, we are concerned that decisions are being made by administrators before the legislators have done their homework. The work of the Commission should receive parliamentary examination and sanction or approval, immediately.

At the moment, metric conversion will take place on a "costs will lie where they fall" basis. Many small businessmen will find that the costs are prohibitive and will be unable to accept this approach. A mood of co-operation could turn to one of political confrontation if there is not a strong leadership initiative shown by those concerned in planning, scheduling and implementing the metric conversion program for Canada.

The joint resolution or bill which is to be introduced in parliament must contain a statement to the effect that appropriate means, financial and otherwise, will be found to help small business absorb the impact of metric change-over. Change-over dates are now being set. Committees are springing up all over the country. The metrication train has left the station. We must ensure that small business is on the train and that the cost of its ticket is not prohibitive.

Our members have approved the change-over to metrication, in principle. The Federation will attempt to be flexible in its approach. We will study metrication on a continuing basis to reflect the reaction of the small business community as the problems and costs become clarified. Pre-planning and involvement are necessary. A well defined, co-ordinated conversion program is essential. Financial and technical assistance must be provided to the small firms that will need it.

That is my contribution to this debate, Mr. Speaker. I should just like to add that the reaction we are getting to the government's "hard sell" approach in connection with metrication reminds me of what happened back in 1968 when bilingualism was such a beautiful thing in western Canada. They sent out a former minister by the name of Mr. Pelletier, I think it was, to sell the program to our people, instead of sending out someone like Jean-Luc Pépin, a man with some knowledge of selling. He would not have attempted such a "hard-sell" of a beautiful language like French. It was not needed. Similarly, the government is trying to shove this down our throats and, one day, it will regret what it is doing.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have not taken part in the debate up to this point—directly, that is—but I can assure Your Honour that, like other members of parliament, I have been deeply involved in seeking to interpret what the government is trying to do in its posthaste flight to metrication. It is an approach which has raised a great deal of controversy because the government has failed to consult with the people and give the grass roots farmer a chance to be heard on the subject.

At the outset, therefore, I want to say that I support the amendment which is before the House at this third reading stage to refer the bill back to committee. I do not think there is any better way of getting the purport of legislation across to the people when controversy has arisen. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), who preceded me in the debate, read a series of letters showing that substantial and thoughtful controversy has arisen because of the government's failure to relate to the people. Referring this bill back to committee would provide an opportunity to convey necessary information and allay the fears which are in the minds of the farming community. It would allow time for the completion of the educational process which was neglected in the initial stages of the debate.

I am sure members will agree with me that this is not the only controversial measure which has been brought forward by the government. There has been more controversy in the past ten years than in all the previous 16 years during which I have been a member of the House of Commons. I am just completing 26 years here and I think I have had to deal with more letters of complaint, more protests expressing the unhappiness of the Canadian people, particularly in western Canada, of course, because that covers the area I represent, in the past five years than in all my previous time as a member of the House. This is because the government is bureaucratic, even authoritarian in so many of its activities.

As a matter of fact, this tendency was well described in a book which was published some years ago under the title "Trudeaucracy". What this implies is initiative in government action, legislative or otherwise, which has no consideration for the impact of changes on people or institutions, of increased costs to the small business community and so on. It is significant that the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) should be in charge of the legislation. He is aware there is great protest with regard to it in the small business community.

● (1620)

As desirable as the process of metrication may be in the long run, it is not going to be achieved overnight. The agricultural industry, which is of basic importance to the well-being of the western community, is based on the Torrens system of land survey and farmers will not allow this to pass without considerable protest. The government and the minister are looking for an opportunity to save face. The Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand), stood up in this House and said that they were going to delay the proclamation of this legislation even though it is going to be passed. That was a belated attempt to save face on the part of the government, arising from the strong waves of protest. Even so insensitive a group as the present government has begun to appreciate it.

While I have not taken part in the debate hitherto, I have heard excellent speeches which have brought the points home on all the previous stages of the discussion. However, I have been involved in the debate at the local community level. Delegations of concerned farmers have come to me and expressed their concerns. I travelled with the official opposition agricultural committee when we interviewed the grain industry some weeks ago. I was amazed at the intensity of the feeling of disillusionment of the Canadian Grain Metric Conversion Commission. They felt they had been led down the garden path by the government as well. They lashed out at the opposition as being responsible for the delay. In the course of the discussions we had that particular afternoon, it was revealed that they were not even aware that legislation was necessary, and the government had delayed action on it until it was impossible to get it through by the effective target date which was originally put before the people of Canada, and particularly the farmers.

When we had our meetings with the western representatives of the farmers in the grain industry, it was evident that they also felt they had been led down the garden path too. They said that they had already expended some $300,000. I am referring to the Manitoba Pool in this instance, and the United Grain Growers. They have already expended some $300,000 in preparing for metrication of the agricultural industry. This was just a drop in the bucket compared to the costs they anticipated spending.

There are various hidden costs which have given rise to the concerns and protests as the people who will be affected by this program become aware of the difficulties arising from the lack of consultation, the lack of planning, and the lack of suitable preparation by the Liberal government. They were not even aware that there was a legislative requirement necessary. It seems the government was not aware that it would have to go through the legislative gambit before this part of the metrication program could be approved. It came up at the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and precipitated such acrimonious debate that the whole matter was unresolved and was left in abeyance until further information was made available.

The most violent and strongest reaction has come from the farmers themselves. They feel this is change for the sake of change. They are not convinced it will do anything to improve the efficiency of the grain industry or expand the market. As a matter of fact the grain industry in western Canada is one of the most productive and efficient operations in the country today. If they had not been able to increase productivity by initiative and innovation, they would not have been able to survive in the cost-price squeeze market which has been generated by the half-baked disastrous economic policies of the government.

It is said that the farming community is against change. This can be easily refuted by the progressive action with respect to mechanization, innovation and new ideas in the whole agricultural industry, which has made it possible for farmers to survive, even though their costs have increased astronomically and the prices they receive for their products have been increasing at a much slower rate.

I will not read the many letters of protest I have received from farmers. This has been done by several spokesmen in this debate. The Minister of State for Small Business suggested there were no letters coming in. That has been well refuted by the previous speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski).

Mr. Marchand: We have received 50 or 60 letters in total.

Mr. Dinsdale: I hear the hon. minister admitting that he has received 50 or 60 letters in total.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: From Kamloops.

Mr. Dinsdale: Considering the problems of the Post Office, that is quite an interesting number of letters.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How many have got lost in the mail?

Mr. Dinsdale: As we have been demonstrating from time to time in the House by specific experiments which have been conducted by various groups, including the members of the press gallery and the members of the city council of Toronto, not all the mail gets through which is placed in the trust of the Post Office.

With respect to the government's unseemly haste in implementing this legislation, I was amazed by the differences of opinion which arose between experts in the government of Manitoba and experts on the Wheat Board. The disagreement as to the terminology has been placed on the record by hon. members. It was a disagreement with the terminology which would be applied to the agricultural industry, if metrication were mutually acceptable.

The Manitoba government from the outset co-operated with the federal government in trying to meet the original deadline for implementing metrication. It was amazed to find that the Wheat Board, and particularly the commission under the Wheat Board with respect to metric conversion, had not decided specifically on the terminology that would be used in its application to the grain industry and in the lands survey system. The government finally made a belated response, and it was interesting that the information was conveyed by the Minister of State (Small Business) shortly after the transfer of allegiance of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner). It is obvious that at long last someone from western Canada managed to get the message through to the upper echelons of power in the Liberal cabinet.

If the government really wants to indicate that it has had a change of heart and recognizes what its new recruit has been saying, to the effect that this is violently opposed by western Canada, then it must go further than merely offering to delay implementation of the legislation. The legislation must go back to the drawing board. Farmers have to be given a chance to be heard if metrication is to be introduced smoothly, as it could have been had the government not run roughshod over the farming and small business community.

I have a final word of advice for the government, Mr. Speaker. If it had followed the policy adopted by the United States government with respect to metrication, it would have found it effective. There is an old saying, "It is not what you do, it is the way you do it." In a democracy you cannot proceed by coercion, authoritarianism, or the techniques all too frequently used in this Trudeaucracy. You must move by persuasion, by education, and without compulsion if you are to carry public opinion. The government must recognize this. It realizes now that it is in trouble and is trying to get out of the difficulty.

The approach of the government is almost like the sort of thing you find in what has been described as benign despotism or a benevolent dictatorship where the government knows better what is good for the people than do the people themselves. This has got it into difficulty in such matters as metrication. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself says that the system of government he feels most comfortable with is a benign despotism.

I urge the government to accept the amendment and return the legislation to the committee. The farmer realizes he has been misled, so does the grain industry, and the Metric commission. Even the Manitoba government feels it has been led down the garden path. We tried to give the government a way out, a face-saving device, by introducing an amendment which would provide a dual system for the phasing in period, but it was voted down. Again we tried in a positive, constructive way, to make it feasible for this legislation to proceed and to remove the growing protest in the farming community by introducing a three year transition period amendment which was proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). That was also turned down, and so the government has missed the opportunity to provide ample time for an information and education program.

The government claims that it is going to delay implementation of the legislation. This is like an incubus hanging over the heads of farmers. Why does the government not start as it should have, by letting the farmers be heard and taking the bill back to committee? This is the democratic way to proceed. We must get away from this order in council, authoritarian, Trudeaucratic approach practised by the government.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the amendment which would refer Bill C-23 back to committee and thus give members and farmers an opportunity to express their views. I believe the answers given to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) on May 3 as reported at pages 5226-5227 of Hansard are the most incredible statements that have been made in this House for some time.

What particularly bothers me is that when this bill was before the committee, representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture appeared before it and, at the same time down the street, at the Chateau Laurier, a farm group was meeting. When this matter was brought up on the floor at that meeting it was such a hot issue that the chairman tabled it so that there would be no further discussion and they could get on with other business. In other words, a tremendous amount of resentment was shown by the farmers who said they did not agree in particular with the land measure. Representatives of the Metric Commission and the CFA were telling a committee of this House at that very moment that the vast majority of farmers agreed totally with metric conversion and asked us to get on with it.

The matter of land measure is the crux of the whole problem. I do not know why the minister and his advisers have not decided to allow it to go back to committee, or why they have not accepted the numerous suggestions put forward on this side of the House.

Replying to the hon. member for Vegreville on May 3 as reported at page 5227 of Hansard, the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) said:

> Mr. Speaker, the exact mechanism has not yet been decided. I assure the hon. member opposite that I will be happy to receive suggestions from him on how he feels this matter ought to be dealt with.

We offered the suggestion that the matter be referred back to committee for further consideration of grains and land measure in particular. From the lack of response, obviously nothing is going to be done.

There are several variations of metric measure used in other countries. There is the French metric, the Japanese metric, the Australian metric, and the British metric. In Great Britain, after consultation with the European Economic Community, they have decided to retain miles, acres, pints, and also miles-per-hour on the roads.

● (1640)

The commission is telling members of parliament that everybody is in agreement with this, but yet we find that the metro Toronto transportation committee has turned back a budget item of $80,000 intended to convert municipal speed and bridge clearance signs to metric. When you go across the country and talk to people in any municipal area, you find that they are at a loss as to when the change will be made and who will pay for it.

Many countries have retained measurement terms that, if changed, would cause some confusion, but in Canada we have this pious, uninformed group of people in the Metric Commission, who are basically idea peddlers, who think they know best what is best for Canadians and who, by their actions, have misled parliament. That is a matter that clearly upsets me.

As a member of the committee dealing with metric conversion I have received numerous telephone calls from people in the Metric Commission. At one time a member of the commission berated me for daring to criticize some action of the commission. I have had at least 15 phone calls from people on the Canada Grains Council telling me that we were the ones who were holding up the legislation. They told me that we were going to cause the economic collapse of the grain industry in western Canada, that we were misinformed, that all the farmers in western Canada were wholeheartedly in support of this. Then we learned that, quite to the contrary, they were not. So the matter has not been thoroughly dealt with, and it could have been thoroughly dealt with because in the months preceding the month of June we had ample time to study the whole matter. The government has in its hands the power to introduce legislation, and this matter was pulled in and out several times but was never dealt with in a straightforward fashion.

The Metric Commission is one of the many disaster areas in this government. They have a massive turnover of staff. The sector chairmen change rapidly. When you go out and talk to some of the people in industry who have been sector chairmen, you find that some of them have been in that position for one meeting only, that they got nowhere or could not stand the proceedings, and resigned, that then another sector chairman was appointed, and another one following him. There is little direction or co-ordination on the Metric Commission. The small business sector is not represented on the commission. The people who are heading the sector commissions are from big business, not from the medium size or small business sectors. The reason is that people in that area cannot afford in may cases to take time to become involved in the metric debate.

What we seem to have in the Metric Commission is a gang of innovative bureaucrats and idea peddlers who feel they are entitled to inflict on the people of this country their ideas which they believe are in our best interests, and for some reason this in Canada is known as democracy.

Take the example of how decisions are taken. There is, for example, an association called the North American Fastener Association. These people have got together and have decided, in their consideration of metric conversion, to use a 12 star bolt head as a standard. Now a 12 sided bolt head may be a great idea for the production line with special power tools, but in effect it means that those in the repair field, or the farmer, will have great difficulty salvaging a bolt and nut for use again. This is the sort of thing that is taking place. That matter has never been brought up before parliament or a committee of the House, and it is not mentioned in any of the metric reports. It is something that is being done by a small group of manufacturers which will have a dramatic effect on the conduct of the machinery business in north America.

We, as members of parliament, have no input into the Metric Commission. We can, along with the examination of the spending estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, see them on an annual basis, but that means a member of parliament would have to disregard all other items in the department's spending estimates and spend his ten, 15 or 20 minutes of questioning strictly on the matter of metric conversion. Given the structure of the committee system in parliament, it is a totally inadequate way to deal with this matter.

The arrogance of the Metric Commission is legendary. They have only produced three annual reports, and the last one was ten months late. We had Metric Commission officials before our caucus finance committee in 1974. Their representation to us was to put on the screen a map of Canada. They had the capital of Manitoba listed as Edmonton and the capital of Alberta listed as Winnipeg.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Kempling: Surely that illustrates the stupidity of the people who put that presentation together. When we pointed it out to them, they laughed; they thought it was a great joke. That shows the insensitivity of these people.

What the Metric Commission is doing, with the full agreement of the government, is to proceed with an incomplete program that is costing millions of dollars. The cost to date amounts to $19,823,477 which will be spent on the Metric Commission's activities from its inception to the end of 1978. I think the people of this country have a right to ask what they are getting for this money.

The members of the Metric Commission continue to display their arrogance by showing lack of information and by not meeting with the parliamentary committee. I have said many times in committee that there is no reason in the world why we cannot have an annual meeting with the Metric Commission, spread over two or three days if necessary, to review their progress. But they like to hide behind the estimates, and they have few people there to answer questions. They do not submit their reports to parliament on time, and they have done very little to co-ordinate the whole metric program.

We have asked time and time again that a bill be brought in to deal with the metric program in its entirety. As a matter of fact at one stage the minister of industry, trade and commerce of the day said that he did not know what to put in the bill if a bill were brought forward. He said he would be glad to receive suggestions from us. We sent him a letter giving him a whole list of suggestions on how to draft a bill dealing with metric conversion, but of course they were not accepted. The whole approach to this is wrong.

There is no doubt that metric conversion in time will be brought about, but there are different ways of handling it. In the United States, for instance, they are handling land measurements quite differently from us. In a letter which we have from their committee on science and technology this is what they say:

The matter of land measurements was specifically discussed in our committee hearings. Land measurement was frequently given as an example where there would be very little advantage to be gained from making the change-over and where the costs of doing so would be entirely out of proportion to any possible gains. It was also noted that in the State of Louisiana land measurements continue to be made in the old French measurements, a leftover from the days when France colonized that part of the continent. The same applies to Spanish land measurements in California. In neither of these cases has it been found advantageous to switch to the English system in the past, and there are not now any plans to switch those measurements or any land measurements elsewhere in the United States to metric measurements.

● (1650)

In regard to possible change-over to the Metric System by the Board of Trade in Chicago, and the possible effect on grain and other commodity trades, there are, to the best of my knowledge, no plans in existence at this time for a change-over. I have made inquiries with officers of the Board of Trade, and their position is that if any of the commodity trading organizations individually decide on their own to change to the Metric System, the Board would accept such a change for that industry. However, the Board itself would not impose such a change on their members.

That is how the Americans are handling it. I have said that there are several variations to the metric measure in various countries in the world. Many countries have retained the terms of measure which would, if changed, cause confusion among the public. However, in Canada we seem to be pressing this matter with no apparent direction.

To my mind the Metric Commission has not fulfilled its mandate under the order in council dealing with powers and purposes. Specifically, the order in council instructs the Commission to initiate, co-ordinate and undertake investigations, surveys and studies relating to the metric system in different sectors of the Canadian economy. I charge that the Metric Commission, as established under Order in Council P.C. 1971-1146 dated June 10, 1971, has failed to carry out clause (A) of the section on powers and purposes. The evidence is before this House in the reply of the Minister of State (Small Business) as set out on pages 5226 and 5227 of Hansard for April 3 of this year. My charge is proved as well by the process of this bill. In spite of the strong suggestions from hon. members on this side of the House, the Metric Commission has misled the minister, the committee and this House. It has swept aside the arguments put forward in the committee and in this House regarding land measure, and swept aside the argument put forward by the Consumers Association of Canada regarding packaging and the listing of dual weights or measures on packages.

On the advice of the Commission the government voted down amendments which would have put some sense into Bill C-23. One of the very real dangers this country is facing is that we are being ruled more and more by regulation, boards, and commissions. By their very structure they are subverting the rule of parliament. The actions of the government in this bill are a true example of that subversion. There are nameless, faceless people who put in place regulations which have the force of statute. They have never been placed before the Parliament of Canada for debate. This country is really being run by a small group of people, in relation to the total population, who are not elected by the people. They have powers which are far beyond those of parliament. They have the power to change the market system, the economy of Canada and social life in Canada, and they interfere in the private lives of Canadians. They have the power to make regulations which have the force of statute, and they do not answer to the people of Canada through parliament. I think that is a terrible way to run a commission or this parliament.

I have talked to Canadians in the electrical industry and to some of their American counterparts. I asked the Americans how they were proceeding with their metric conversion and why they were taking the route they were taking. They told me that the only reason they are converting to metric is because we are doing so in Canada. The members of the Metric Commission travel across the country periodically speaking with industrial groups, and there are panels. The Commission loves to say that the cost of metric conversion will not be high. The commission implies that industry is going to absorb the cost because it is going to get great benefits from conversion. People in industry tell us that they are not going to absorb the cost and that the cost will be passed on to the consumer. The consumer is going to pay for metric conversion, and let there be no doubt about that.

I have talked to the small business community, and I know the minister has as well. He has not seen fit, however, to do very much in this bill for that community. It remains to be seen whether the Metric Commission is going to do anything for that community. However, small business is not included in the process of metric conversion at all.

I do not know how many ministers have dealt with this matter. Perhaps there have been three, four or five, but at various meetings the Commission has been told to get the small business community involved in this because some of the claims small business is making are not true. It is just that some small businessmen are misinformed. They should be involved in this process. All this is done on a "you pay your own expense" basis, and we think that some of these sector heads and chairmen should be drawn from the small business community, brought into the process, and asked to get involved in metric conversion.

In closing, I urge the minister to support this amendment. I think this matter should go back to the committee and be discussed thoroughly. We should have an opportunity, if necessary, to travel and to meet some farm groups because we are being told by the Canadian Grains Council and by a few other high-powered groups—and we learned from the Globe and Mail the other morning that many from these groups are government appointees—that they are going to toe the line wherever required. They are not necessarily going to convey the true thoughts of the people who are going to bear the costs of this and who are going to have to work with it. I think the committee should have the opportunity to hear witnesses again and to satisfy itself and the people involved about the difficulty which will be faced. Having done that, I think we could proceed with the bill in an orderly way. I support the amendment to refer this bill back to the committee for further consideration of the matters outlined in the amendment.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, just before the debate on this matter closes I want to join with the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) in urging that the government see the propriety of this amendment. This amendment is not meant to hold up the bill in any way; it would simply refer clauses 2, 6, 8 and 10 of Bill C-23 back to the committee. It would put some substance into the words of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand), and there would in fact be some real consultation with the producers of the country.

● (1700)

Consultation is most important. In several instances in the last six months—I will not go into detail although I can be specific, if the hon. member opposite wishes—the government promised various organizations, groups and people interested in legislation this House passes, to engage in consultation. That consultation has not taken place. That is too bad, and is a style of politics I call un-Canadian.

I said, when raising a point of order in the course of this debate, that it is questionable parliamentary practice for the government to ask the House to pass a bill which it will not implement or use until such time as there has been "consultation"—I put that word in quotation marks. If the government wants to engage in meaningful consultation, let it change its approach. Let it allow such consultation to take place. Therefore I say, why not send this bill back to the appropriate committee, where these clauses can be studied? Such committee, predominantly but not exclusively made up of parliamentarians from western Canada, could go out in this country and listen to men and women who may feel this bill will affect them adversely. Really, that is the intent of the amendment, and it is not unreasonable to ask members on the government side to support it.

After that process of consultation has taken place and any changes proposed have been made to the bill, it should be brought back to this House, here to be dealt with. Surely that is not unreasonable. Knowing the attitude of westerners and how they view the actions of the government, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), proposed an amendment. In so doing they highlighted a matter of great concern to the producers of western Canada.

Is it too much to ask, in the last days of this parliament, that the standing committee of the House, the appropriate committee mentioned, should have a reference from the House for the purpose of undertaking the kind of consultation I mentioned? Is asking for such consultation asking too much? I do not think so. All of us, westerners included, can judge for ourselves to what extent consultation has taken place. On the one hand we hear much talk of consultation; on the other hand we see little evidence of it.

This bill will hang like the sword of Damocles over those who will be affected by it. Unless the bill is amended, producers could be adversely affected. People will say of the government, "No matter what you say, we know what you intend to do". And they will say it, mark my words.

This parliament stands for something, Mr. Speaker. It is a representative body. Though there is much good in the bureaucracy of the country, no body of people in this country is as representative of all our people, and as sensitive to their wishes, as the Parliament of Canada. And no committee of this House perhaps is as sensitive to the needs of western agriculture, and as aware of the justified and unjustified fears and apprehensions of those involved in agriculture, as the Standing Committee on Agriculture of this House. I therefore ask all members of the House to support the amendment, the purpose of which is to allow a standing committee of this House to engage in consultations which are so necessary. We must engage in those consultations if we are to reach some semblance of understanding between the various regions and areas of the country.

For the last ten years the confrontationist style of the government has plagued the country. Sometimes such a style is justified; more often it is not. Surely it is not justified in legislation of this kind. Surely we should not pass such legislation immediately, or should not pass it until people understand it. I hope the government will not proceed in this manner with regard to this serious bill, although past precedent might lead one to think that it will. If so, it shows that the government's attitude to this country is most unhealthy.

Mr. Paproski: They like to divide and conquer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If the government were to adopt our suggestion and accept the amendment, it could reverse the growing trend of opinion in the country regarding the actions of the government. It can do this simply by agreeing to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment? All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain)) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the amendment lost.

The question therefore is on the motion of Mr. Marchand for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be now read the third time and do pass.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of matters that I would like to raise. Six o'clock is approaching, and I am now prepared to begin the debate, if necessary, but I wonder if the government House leader could indicate to us what business he plans for this evening and anything else he would like to say.

Mr. MacEachen: I intend to continue with third reading of the bill for the rest of the day, if necessary. If third reading is disposed of, then I will consult with my colleagues as to which of the bills we would take at eight o'clock.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the sense of the House is to debate the bill on third reading. Perhaps we should call it six o'clock. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, there is no point in calling it six o'clock because I have a lot to say on this bill. It is two minutes to six.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Government members are all going out to join the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Some hon. Members: Where is Horner?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this occasion with a great deal of disappointment because we thought we were dealing with the minister in good faith. He undertook in the House to consult the producers of this country about the application of this measure. He also indicated he would be prepared to consult the opposition parties and all members of the House to determine what might be the best mechanism for engaging in that consultative process. In the amendment on which we have just voted the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) put forth a logical and well reasoned suggestion which he thought the minister would be eager to accept, namely, to refer the bill back to committee for the purpose of allowing the formal consultative process to take place. We feel very strongly about the fact that if there is to be a thorough consultative process, it should take place with the producers who are most seriously affected by this legislation.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member who, I know, will continue with vigour at eight o'clock this evening but, for the moment, in accordance with Standing Order 40 and with our revised procedures for this month on additional hours of sitting, we will proceed to the adjournment debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 is deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DEER LODGE HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH MANITOBA FOR TRANSFER

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, recently there have been confusing reports appearing in the Winnipeg press in regard to the Deer Lodge Veterans Hospital. These news stories concerning the possible transfer of Deer Lodge Hospital from the federal government to the province of Manitoba have only served further to confuse and worry the veterans and employees of that hospital. The confusing reports on Deer Lodge Hospital do not do anything to answer the serious concerns of the veterans, veterans organizations and the employees of Deer Lodge Hospital. I contend there are far too many serious concerns that have not been answered by the government in regard to the future of Deer Lodge Hospital while they have dragged on the negotiations.

● (1800)

From the veterans' point of view there are such serious matters as the quality of health care for veterans should the hospital be taken over by the province of Manitoba, whether veterans will receive priority at the hospital, and indeed, whether the same special care for veterans will remain. From the employees' point of view, there are such things as staff pensions, job security, wages and staff size.

I am speaking about Deer Lodge Hospital today to request that if the federal government and the province of Manitoba do reach an agreement on the Deer Lodge Hospital, under no circumstances should the agreement be signed right away. The agreement should be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs so that all the concerns of the veterans and employees might be thoroughly looked into. I am sure that veterans' organizations such as the Royal Canadian Legion, the Army, Navy and Air Force veterans and others have concerns and suggestions to offer on the future of Deer Lodge. I am also sure that the employees' union at Deer Lodge have representations to make on behalf of the employees. The agreement should not be signed until a satisfactory arrangement has been worked out in the best interests of the veterans and employees of Deer Lodge Hospital.

I feel that referring the matter to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs would give veterans the opportunity to express their ideas and concerns on such matters as the quality of care after provincial governments have assumed control of veterans' hospitals.

On February 28 of this year the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) said in this House in reference to the transfer of veterans' hospitals to the provinces:

> The ones we have transferred so far have been quite successful and we are reasonably pleased with the treatment the veterans are receiving. We get this reaction from the veterans' organizations and we also get it from the veterans themselves.

If that is the case, I wonder why, then, did every member of parliament receive a letter from the Veterans' Rights Association of British Columbia expressing serious concern over the former veterans' hospital in Victoria? For the record I should like to quote that letter. The letter, addressed to all members of parliament, reads:

> On behalf of our membership we would like to make you aware of the problems created for veterans on Vancouver Island through the operation and administration of the former veterans hospital in Victoria.
> We can assure you that, should the DVA facility in or near your region be transferred to a provincial or community authority, your veteran constituents will receive a lesser standard of care and a derogation of their rights under the veterans charter.
>
> Believe us when we say that assurances of and from the federal government are not worth a farthing.
>
> The takeover here has been handled by deceit and a complete lack of concern and comprehension, especially by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his deputy minister.
>
> May we remind you that the sense of comradeship and duty, hardened in the furnace of war, has not left the veterans, even though they are thought to be a tiny minority and have lived on into an age when numbers and votes, pressure groups and self seekers, sensation and scandal drowns the small voice of those who served selflessly and faithfully.
>
> Accordingly, at a general meeting, this association passed the following resolutions which we would ask that you support:
>
> A. That the Government of Canada guarantee that the veterans treatment regulations be applied equally across Canada.
> B. That the Government of Canada reaffirm the veterans charter.
>
> C. That the province of British Columbia will administer treatment regulations as if they were so obliged by law.
>
> D. That Canada and British Columbia re-negotiate the transfer agreement entered into to give effect to the intent of the agreement, and
> E. That, inter alia, veterans have a greater, and not nominal, representation on DVA hospitals' boards of directors.

This letter was signed by F. C. P. Foy, Executive Director of the Veterans' Rights Association of B.C. That letter covers the types of things the veterans in the area served by Deer Lodge Hospital are worried about. These problems can be avoided by referring the whole matter to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs after an agreement has been negotiated. I believe the Royal Canadian Legion's Manitoba and northwestern Ontario command had the same concerns when it passed a resolution in June of 1975 opposing the transfer of Deer Lodge Hospital to Manitoba.

In the same vein, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs should look into the problems the employees will face if such a transfer takes place.

If, on the other hand, it is not possible for the federal government and Manitoba to reach an agreement through negotiation on the Deer Lodge Hospital, then I would urge the federal government to drop the matter and continue operating the Deer Lodge Hospital. As the Minister of Veterans Affairs said on May 27, 1976:

If it becomes evident, however, that it is not possible to negotiate the transfer of these hospitals on satisfactory terms, we will proceed with our plans for modernization.

I hope the minister and the government will respect the needs of the veterans and employees at Deer Lodge Hospital.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would be better to say nothing in reply to the letter the hon. member read, since I think it cannot be taken as correct.

With regard to the question concerning discussions between my department and the province of Manitoba pertaining to the transfer of Deer Lodge Hospital in Winnipeg, I must reiterate that there are no negotiations, as such, regarding the transfer. There have been some discussions and the purpose of this dialogue is more or less to determine if the province is interested and if things can be worked out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

The policy of transferring veterans' hospitals to local authorities is, as you know, based on the determination that veterans should receive the best possible hospital care. I would not attempt to go into the programs of hospital modernization, research, geriatric programs and a variety of others that come under the authority of this critical branch of veterans affairs. But I can say that the treatment services branch of my department devotes the most scrupulous attention to the changing needs of our veteran population.

It is my own belief—and I am speaking for the minister, Mr. Speaker—that the biggest benefit for the entitlement of veterans with service incurred disabilities has been the transfer of these hospitals and their continuing association with universities across Canada. This availability of health services could not be assured to entitled veterans under our own limited institutional operations. Our hospitals are slowly becoming nursing homes.

In addition to the guaranteed priority access beds for the care of disability pensioners there is in every transfer provision for priority access, after transfer, to all chronic and domiciliary beds. Transfer arrangements also, however, provide for the integration of our services with those of the community. Because of that, the particular arrangements that we negotiate on transfer may vary from province to province, depending on the level and availability of services in each province.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but must inform him that his allotted time has expired.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF DISMISSAL OF JIRVAN SHAH

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on May 25, 1977, I raised in this House the case of Mr. Jirvan B. Shah, a public servant employed by the public service of Canada until he was dismissed. I asked the government to investigate his dismissal, with a view to having him reinstated. A number of public servants have brought their cases to me, sir, but not one of them has affected me as much as Mr. Shah's.

I want the House to understand that he is a professional engineer, trained at Queen's University, Canada and he joined the public service in October, 1965, as a metallurgical engineer. He has been employed in that same position, doing that same work, for 11 years. Finally he was declared incompetent. For the first seven years of his employment his performance was rated as average. In March, 1973, his supervisor, Mr. T. W. Heaslip, rated his performance as unsatisfactory. As a result of this evaluation he requested a review committee to investigate his case. That review committee was comprised of Mr. H. A. Fawcett, chief accident investigations division, MOT, Mr. S. Grossmith, a test pilot and engineer at MOT, S. McCormach, a staffing officer with MOT, and N. Bura, a staffing officer of the Public Service Commission.

This review committee made a thorough investigation and heard evidence given by Mr. Shah and Mr. Heaslip. It concluded that he was competent, recommended that he be provided with alternate employment and that his performance be reassessed in six months. Part of that recommendation was implemented. Mr. Shah was employed in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, under the supervision of Dr. Eric Smith who, after a six month period, said Mr. Shah did his work adequately. It is important to remember that between 1965 and 1972 his position carried the title of metallurgical engineer.

From 1973 on, as a consequence of reorganization in the division, the title of the position was changed to material failure analyst without any change in the duties and responsibilities of the position. The job description has remained the same since 1965.

After that ten-month period in 1974, he returned to the Ministry of Transport and the same position. He received a very unsatisfactory appraisal for a four-month period by a new supervisor, Mr. McLeod, who only supervised him from April to July, 1973. In 1975 he received his last appraisal, which was unsatisfactory, by Mr. Logan who is classified as a technical inspector in aircraft mechanics/maintenance. This appraisal covered a nine-month period.

On May 27, 1976, the Ministry of Transport wrote to the Public Service Commission recommending his release on the grounds of incompetence, pursuant to section 31 of the Public Service Employment Act. After 11 years on the same job he was labelled incompetent. That smacks of something wrong.

There was an appeal to the Public Service Commission appeal board. The appeal board chairman, Ms. Brazier, stated that the recommendation should be upheld. At the hearing, the Ministry of Transport relied on the three unsatisfactory appraisals and three lab reports written by Mr. Shah. His legal representative called five witnesses who all declared that he was competent. They were professional witnesses. However, the appeal board did not give much weight to that evidence.

He appealed ultimately to the Federal Court of Canada. However, he found he could not deal with that court because the Federal Court of Canada had no jurisdiction.

After 11 years service in the public service of Canada, he finds himself living on unemployment insurance. What does he ask of this House and this ministry? He asks for his immediate reinstatement. Failing that, he asks that he be placed in some other employment.

Very few people in the public service are dealt with in the way this man was dealt with. Most of all, he asks on behalf of public servants everywhere that there be some access for the public service for redress in another forum so that a man in that position can at least have redress through the courts. We do not have that now in the public service of Canada.

Mr. Shah told me that he has been discriminated against. His nameplate was removed from his office door and affixed to the washroom door. A poster was made of his likeness with the words "Wanted—dead or alive, preferably dead" and displayed on the bulletin board. He was forbidden to use the telephone. He could not make or receive calls.

Mr. Shah was required to submit to a psychiatric examination. They found no problem. He was cursed and sworn at by his superiors. He was denied the same training opportunities as others. He was not allowed to attend a Christmas party. I do not know whether that had anything to do with the fact that Mr. Shah is not white, but Mr. Shah could be forgiven if he was led to believe that some of the things he told me occurred to him happened for that reason. Mr. Shah went to the anti-discrimination appeal board. They held that, although he was harassed, he was not discriminated against. You tell me the difference, Mr. Speaker.

That is why I raised this question in the House of Commons. I raise it again today so that this man who gave 11 years of faithful service to the public service in this country, trained in a Canadian university, can have himself reinstated somewhere in the public service rather than be forced to go out and do menial work, which is the future that faces him if there is no redress from this House and this government.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, here is the information that we have gathered for the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Shah, a failures analyst in the air administration of the Department of Transport, had a long history of unacceptable performance, notably in the planning, organizing and analyzing aspects of his job. Because they formed such an important part of the job of failures analyst and since training and counselling had failed to bring about any improvement, it was decided to recommend his release for incompetence.

Mr. Shah's case was examined by a departmental review committee. The decision to terminate his employment was not disputed. The review committee, composed of public servants of considerable ability, recommended that alternate acceptable employment be sought.

Next, Mr. Shah appealed the decision. Following a two-day, 13-hour hearing, the appeal was dismissed. The case was then referred to the Federal Court of Appeal which ruled that the decision of the appeal board was valid.

Mr. Shah then complained to the anti-discrimination branch of the Public Service Commission and an investigation was conducted. It was concluded that discrimination was not a factor in his release.

Sincere efforts have been made both by the Department of Transport and the Public Service Commission to find alternative employment for Mr. Shah but without success.

Mr. Shah did not receive any severance pay upon his release as his collective agreement gives the employer no discretion in this regard. His superannuation contributions are "locked in" until age 65 under the provisions of the superannuation act. It would require an amendment to the act to release these funds.

While we can understand the difficult circumstances in which Mr. Shah finds himself, the Department of Transport and the Public Service Commission are satisfied that he was treated fairly and that he was given ample opportunity to have all the facts of his case reviewed.

TRANSPORT—RAIL SERVICE IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my intervention this evening arises from questions which I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) at the end of May after he had released a study paper backing up the transportation agreement entered into between the premiers of the Atlantic region and himself on February 8.

First, I want to point out that the minister's answer to my first question completely ignored the fact that under this proposal, agreed to by the maritime premiers, the whole of Cape Breton Island, including the heavily populated industrial area of Sydney as well as the rest of eastern Nova Scotia, would, if he and the premiers who signed the agreement, including the Premier of Nova Scotia, had their way, be denied direct access to his one proposed transcontinental train which would go from Montreal to Halifax. The minister's proposal would mean the loss of nine railway services over five different routes in exchange for $125 million to the Atlantic provinces over a three-year period, $100 million of which would be put into highways.

I can understand the ignorance of the Minister of Transport concerning the geographic and population characteristics of the area, but that the Premier of Nova Scotia should agree, in exchange for what amounts to a mess of potage, that the Cape Breton area should be directly cut off from the one proposed transcontinental route agreed on is, to my mind, incredible. Indeed, it is preposterous.

My question implied that the minister in releasing the documents, principally the study paper which had been prepared by the governments jointly under the auspices of the joint transportation committee, was prejudging the hearings of the transport committee on passenger transportation then taking place in various maritime locations.

It was the timing of this release which led me and many others to the conclusion that the minister was either prejudging the issue or was holding a gun to the heads of the commissioners who were conducting the hearings. Intentionally or otherwise, the minister cast grave doubts on the legitimacy of those hearings and accused the whole commission process of being mere window dressing for a government policy which had already been decided upon.

By emphasizing in the study paper that the federal government was prepared to contribute a subsidy amounting to 100 per cent if there was only one transcontinental train running from Halifax to the Montreal area rather than contribute the 80 per cent it does now, the minister appeared to me and to many others to be imposing his wishes on the commissioners' conclusions. To say the least, it appeared to be an unwarranted intervention at a crucial time in the hearings and in the regulatory process which was going on in the maritimes to determine the future of passenger rail service.

In answering my question, the minister referred to the very extensive $125 million transportation package for the Atlantic provinces "as evidence of our intention to use money more effectively for the Atlantic provinces". Well, there are a lot of people in the Atlantic provinces who do not agree that a $125 million transportation package over three years for the whole of the maritime provinces is a very extensive one. In fact, the Nova Scotia highways minister was quoted in the Chronicle-Herald for Thursday, June 2 as saying that the proposal which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) put before the Canadian Transport Commissioners does not resemble the plan put before the minister by the provinces at meetings earlier this year.

The Minister of Transport, of course, is concerned with defraying rail passenger expenses across the nation by $112 million and sees the solution as cutting out rail passenger transportation. Since we are in an energy-intensive era, it strikes one as being ironic that the minister is not more concerned at having to pay the $250 million annual deficits on the operation of airports such as Mirabel. I would think that due consideration to the type of energy crunch facing this nation in the next decade should make us emphasize energy resource conservation, particularly in transportation facilities, both public and private. Given the dependence of Nova Scotia on imported oil, this is more true for it than all of the rest of the provinces except Prince Edward Island.

As regards my supplementary question in which I noted that, in the quid pro quo of $125 million over a three-year period for less railway passenger transportation in the Atlantic region, there is no mention made of improving equipment and facilities such as passenger trains, locomotives, railbeds and so on, I suggested, under my understanding of the agreement, that the Atlantic provinces, especially the two which depend upon railroads—Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—would be retaining in the railroad passenger industry the technology of the 1940s and 1950s, while other provinces across the country are opting for increased, more efficient rail passenger transit systems.

In answering me, the minister seemed to agree with this assessment, although he made the general statement "We believe that the upgrading of passenger services is essential", and related it to the change in the subsidy under his proposal. But this does not constitute any commitment to the modernization of equipment, railbeds, trackage, etc. that is needed.

It is obvious that the minister is determined to cut back on railway passenger transportation in the maritime provinces. I say "maritimes" because Newfoundland no longer has a railway system and Prince Edward Island does not have one either. I read the Canadian National submission to the Canadian Transport Commission at a hearing in Halifax on May 17, 1977. Mr. Garth Campbell, the Canadian National vice-president of passenger marketing, said in that submission, and I quote:

It would be a mistake to expect rail services to continue simply by halving or quartering what is offered.

Mr. Campbell seems to agree with my contention as against the minister's, because in the Canadian National brief he emphasizes that if governments decide to emphasize highway and air services, railway systems will receive limited capital or none at all. He noted that the existing passenger cars in the maritime regions are 25 years old and one car used at Halifax is 40 years old.

In his memorandum of May 25, the Minister of Transport has a table on page 3 showing annual passengers by volume and percentage, using the four modes of transportation—rail, bus, air and auto. In incorporating this table to make his case look stronger, the Minister of Transport failed to use statistics that would show, as Mr. Campbell noted in the CNR brief, that traffic has begun to pick up again, as far as passenger trains are concerned, in the last two years after a period of steady decline since 1971.

In a brief to the Canadian Transport Commission in Sydney on May 27, I made some suggestions on how improvements in railroad transportation in the long run could indeed help the Sydney steel plant, the Pictou county Trenton Car Works and, indirectly, the port of Halifax; but I do not have the time here to repeat my arguments.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to set down on the record of the House events leading up to the release of the Atlantic region intermodal passenger study and details of the relationship of this particular study to the hearings just completed in the maritimes by the railway transport committee of the CTC. At the outset, let me emphasize that the study was not an attempt to carry out those review functions which are properly delegated to the CTC, but rather the objective was to do a study encompassing all public modes of passenger transportation.

The focus of the work was on public modes of interurban passenger transportation—for example, the rail, air and bus modes—and had the following objectives: to consolidate the existing information on interurban passenger transportation in the Atlantic region to provide a data base; and to examine a range of broad approaches for improving the level of service of interurban passenger transport in order to identify the relative financial and energy implications associated with these approaches.

In summary, the Atlantic region intermodal passenger study is a consultant's report which provides a framework for considering alternate concepts for transportation services and facilities. It does not address all the options across the spectrum in any one mode and represents, therefore, just one set of alternatives for the upgrading of passenger transportation in the region.

In conclusion, let me assure the hon. member that the federal government is awaiting the outcome of the CTC's route and service hearings in the Atlantic provinces. Following their recommendation then and only then will the government be able to make a complete and informed decision on the best rail passenger service for eastern Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marchand (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. At six o'clock the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) had the floor.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, prior to the dinner hour I said that I wished to speak again on this bill. I commenced my remarks by saying that I was extremely disappointed by the fact that the minister and his colleagues failed to respond to the proposal we had advanced in the form of an amendment. I felt that the minister's statement in the House on May 3, as recorded at pages 5226 and 5227 of Hansard, was sincere and genuine. He indicated that there would be further consultations with the grain industry and especially with the farmers. He said that the exact mechanism had not yet been decided upon but that he would be happy to hear and indeed would welcome suggestions from me or from any other member on this side of the House with regard to the most effective mechanism. I think that we on this side responded in a responsible, sensible and honourable fashion by making a very practical proposal. Unfortunately, it was rejected.

Neither the minister nor his colleagues have spoken on the amendment either directly of indirectly. There have not even been informal conversations or consultations. There has not been one speech from the government side of the House to indicate whether there was any glimmer of support for what we were attempting to achieve. The government has been both coy and contemptuous on this issue. They sat there and intimidated us by suggesting that we bring on the vote. I am indeed saddened by the fact that we can only conclude, judging from this scenario, that the minister was not sincere when he replied to me in the House on May 3. It is a sad day in the House when the words of a minister spoken in the House either during the question period or in a speech cannot be taken seriously by other members of the House or indeed by the public of Canada. What is more, we have not been given the slightest hint as to what kind of consultative process the government is considering. I do not know whether in fact some sort of mechanism has been formalized. I am not sure whether there will be any consultation, hence we feel that the minister has betrayed us and has not lived up to his promise. I suppose he may organize officials of the Metric Commission to meet with groups of farmers, but that will not be consultation. That will be nothing more than bureaucratic coercion. The experts will attempt to browbeat farmers into believing that the metric system as it would apply to the grain trade is the best thing since sliced bread.

● (2010)

What is more revealing about this whole debate is the behaviour of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) from Crowfoot. Where does he stand in this whole scenario? Hon. members may recall that he was supposed to take the metric system from the backs of the farmers when he joined the Liberal ranks. I think it is fair to point out that he has not made a speech in the House of Commons on this bill. He made a little noise in the committee—

Mr. McKinley: He is muzzled now.

Mr. Mazankowski: —but as my hon. colleague suggests, he is muzzled now. Where is he today? What is he doing about the progress which this government wants to make with this particular bill, without making any commitments or any changes? The Minister without Portfolio chooses to remain silent. We can only conclude that he does not have enough influence on the government to convince it to withdraw the bill, or to accept our amendment, or to let the bill die. Now that the government has the minister under control, it seems to take great satisfaction in the fact that the bill has been introduced and reintroduced. The government seems to be playing with the minister like a yo-yo. Last Thursday he was in the chamber. He listened, but he dared not participate in the debate. One can only wonder why he is so silent now and why he does not have the influence which we heard so much about when he crossed the floor to join the Liberal ranks. One has to wonder why he does not speak now; as we all know, it is not usual for the Minister without Portfolio to remain silent on an issue which affects western Canadians.

Mr. Andre: On any issue.

Mr. Mazankowski: Or any issue, for that matter. I am disappointed in the minister from Crowfoot because he has failed to deliver a promise to western Canadian producers. He has let western Canada down, and I am disappointed on his behalf that the government has pulled the rug from under him. I am sure this must cause him considerable embarrassment.

The government has run out of legislative items on the order paper, and so it has been trying to deal with the bits and pieces of legislation which remain. However, it is quite obvious now that the government is hell-bent on proceeding with this bill in spite of the widespread protest and the growing opposition across the country. I said in an earlier speech that this legislation is more like metric coercion than metric conversion, and as it passes and becomes effective in the grain industry and in other industries farmers will probably refer to it as "metric confusion". The fact of the matter is that conversion in the grain trade is totally unnecessary. It is expensive, and it is going to cause a great deal of inconvenience to the producers of western Canada.

What is very troublesome and what bothers me very deeply is the fact that we have here another example of the wishes of the majority being ignored. Quite frankly, I am disappointed and saddened by that fact. I believe this measure is contrary to the best interests of our parliamentary democracy. I believe it is contrary to preserving and building a trust and a confidence in our system of parliamentary democracy. There can be absolutely no question that conversion in the grain trade as it would affect producers is clearly vigorously opposed.

I say this in spite of what farm organizations have said in the committee and publicly. I pointed out in my speech last week that one farm organization decided to canvass its membership some time in March 1977. The bill was to become law on February 1, 1977, and I think that simply illustrates the fact that farm organizations did not consult the producers they represent. They took it for granted.

It is no wonder, when we have an issue as important and as vital as this, that interest would be generated. Many comparisons and many observations have been made about the impact of metric conversion as it would apply to western Canada. Many have said that the system we now have is an inherent part of our western culture and that this change will be very disruptive to the land measurement system and to our way of life. It is no wonder, when a piece of legislation is thrust upon a very large segment of the population of Canada, that our parliamentary institutions come under attack. Many people say, "Well, so what; those guys sitting in Ottawa simply do what they want to do; they will not listen to anybody". That is what has happened with regard to metric conversion. Many producers across this country have resigned themselves to the fact that metric is coming, that it is a fait accompli, that there is nothing they can do about it and that they will have to grin and bear it.

At the very outset we on this side of the House took the position that the conversion process should be undertaken through legislation. I remind hon. members that this is one of the first pieces of legislation which has ever been proposed in the House to effect metric conversion, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) stated. Our position was clearly a responsible one, and if we are going to have a very major change thrust upon us, it should be in the form of legislation and not done by order in council.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is no wonder that there is widespread cynicism about parliament, about members of parliament and about our institutions.

Mr. Paproski: Particularly about this government.

Mr. Mazankowski: Much of this cynicism flows from the attitude of this government, from the way it carries on in its arrogant fashion and from the way it conducts the business of this nation. No wonder there is mistrust about how we do things here and about what we do here. It is no wonder that there is suspicion. We can ill afford that at this time. Parliamentary freedom is something we should treasure, preserve and fight for with all our might.

There is no question that there is a growing lack of confidence in this institution. There was a billboard sign in the recent Ontario election which used the expression "Don't vote, you might encourage them". I think that demonstrates the mood of many Canadians about our parliamentary institution. There is growing dissatisfaction with the manner in which we handle our legislative process and with the way this institution conducts its business.

In that connection I would like to quote from a letter to one of our farm newspapers. The letter comments on the manner in which the metric system is being proceeded with. It is entitled "Who are we to have a say?"

● (2020)

Sir:

It is most difficult to understand the logic of individuals such as some of this paper's recent correspondents. I am referring to those who are encouraging their fellow Canadians to take issue with the "imposition without our consent, of the metric system." I find it most shocking to observe the great number who take this stand.

I say, who are we to actually dare to raise our uneducated and ungrateful voices and blatantly dispute the decisions of our Ottawa bureaucrats?

So what if we as citizens and taxpayers didn't get asked if we wanted our present system of weights and measures tossed in the garbage? Who are we, to have a say?

So what if the changeover will cost us millions of dollars and plenty of confusion? Just because we cannot fathom the undoubtedly sound reasoning of scrapping the imperial system, which has served us so well; does that mean it is not being done in our best interests?

Oh we of little faith. Let not our questioning minds consider rebellion, but rather let us take comfort in the knowledge that our loyal representatives in Ottawa would never dream of ramming anything down our throats that wasn't just what we really needed all the time. Well, would they?

It is signed Dan Riley, of Strathclair, Manitoba. That letter sums up the feelings of western Canadians on this legislation and how it has been introduced and proceeded with. But we must be concerned about other areas of jurisdiction affecting this institution. Not long ago the Auditor General warned us that the government, indeed parliament, has lost control of the public purse, that spending is out of control, that financial management and control systems are below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness and that our Crown corporations are not being run in a businesslike way. There is evidence to show that financial control mechanisms are weak, ineffective and even inadequate. I ask, when did all this happen? It happened under successive Liberal regimes, under Liberal governments which rule with arrogance rather than with concern, which rule with disregard for our people rather than with consideration. Most of the time the government simply wants to grind out legislation as if it were sausage produced in a sausage factory. It heaps on us reams and reams of unnecessary legislation.

Mr. McKenzie: It's rotten sausage.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is rotten sausage. It is unnecessary legislation and unnecessary regulations heaped on the backs of Canadians. This bill is another example. Is it not time to restore sanity and commonsense to this institution, and to restore confidence in it as well? We have a great deal of legislation on this country's statute books.

Mr. McKenzie: Pardon me. I should have said it is baloney, not sausage.

Mr. Mazankowski: We bring in ever more legislation every day. I am told the competition bill will conflict with almost all legislation on our statute books. We need some sort of clearing agency which will vet legislation before this House considers it, so that no bill the government introduces will interfere or conflict with or contradict existing legislation. I talked with a representative of one of the major oil companies who appeared the other day before one of our standing committees. He reminded me that there are some 375 pieces of legislation affecting the oil industry of this country directly or indirectly. And that does not include all the regulations and orders in council various levels of government impose on the industry. Most of them are passed in the middle of the night, so to speak, and we never hear about them.

Is it any wonder that we have an energy crisis in this country, considering that those engaged in energy production are frustrated on every hand by the proliferation of legislation and regulations passed by all levels of government in all parts of the country? Our energy producers are frustrated especially by the inconsistencies of various pieces of legislation which work at cross purposes to one another. Mr. Speaker, the farmers do not want this legislation, because they do not need it. This should be clear to any western member of parliament who has the guts to send out a questionnaire or survey on this bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Including Jack Horner.

Mr. Mazankowski: Western members should do this if they are concerned about the feelings of their constituents—farmers as well as city dwellers, doctors, lawyers, professors and so on. I sent out a questionnaire couched in simple language. My first question was this: Are you in favour of conversion to the metric system? Of those who replied, 29.1 per cent said yes, 65.5 per cent no, and 5.4 per cent had no opinion.

Question No. 2 asked: Are you in favour of converting (a) acres to hectares? Seventeen per cent said yes, 74.3 per cent said no, and 8.7 per cent had no opinion. The second part, (b), had to do with conversion of bushels to tonnes. Here are the replies: Yes, 21.7 per cent; no, 69.2 per cent; no opinion, 9.1 per cent. I point out that not only farmers responded to the questionnaire; answers were provided by a cross section of people in the constituency. Surely, if we are worth our salt, it is our duty, our obligation, to place the views of our constituents on the record of this House.

In this connection I wish to quote a letter printed in Farm Trends of April, 1977, on page 10, entitled "Metric Confusion". It says:

For over two years now, I have tried to create a public awareness of the implications of metric conversion, especially as it applies to agriculture. Farmers will be affected by the change more than any other group, so I feel I must still speak out.

Metric System

I would have no argument with conversion, if, as we have been told, the rest of the world is going that route—but that isn't necessarily so.

For example, we find that Sweden, Denmark, Germany and Great Britain still use the foot and inch in construction because those measurements apparently are more suitable for use in that industry. Lumber in most European countries is sold in board feet as in Canada and the U.S. and even nails are measured in inches not metric.

A change to metric in the lumber industry means smaller sheets of plywood, hardboard and panelling. Four by eight sheets will be about ¾" narrow and 1 ½" short. Just try to repair, renovate or add to existing buildings. Are we going to change all new houses and buildings to suit the size of lumber or buy lumber to suit our method of building?

A neighbour just bought a new tractor made by John Deere in its factory in Germany. The tractor was made in Germany, and the motor made in France but it is all S.A.E. (not metrically) equipped. Given the tremendous economic power of the U.S., which system is going to predominate? I contend that it may take quite a few years before we know.

● (2030)

For all Western Canada particularly—change from the mile and acre just isn't practical. Both come under provincial jurisdiction. The mile, because the province sets the speed limits and erects the road signs. The acre because land titles are registered by the province.

The bushel will continue to be used because of custom and because of practicality. The metric Kg is too small and the tonne is too large for every day use by farmers. Is 60 bu./acre not easier than 1.63 tonnes/acre or 50 bu./acre than 1.36 tonnes/acres?

Try spraying crops by the metric method when our sprayer tanks are measured in gallons. Which is easier to figure; a 200 gallon tank or a 919.2 litre tank? A 10 gallon/acre spray tip or a 45.46 litre/acre spray tip? Or are we to all buy new tanks and sprayer tips?

Metric conversion in the U.S. is to be on a voluntary basis; and for Canada to rush headlong into the change without even assessing the pros and cons and the costs of each change is hard for me to understand.

The farmers of Region 10 of Unifarm, have asked me to express these concerns publicly and to the government departments involved.

Personal letters to Premier Lougheed, Dr. Horner and Mr. M. Moore are the most effective method of influencing the government in this matter.

Stan Bell,
Unifarm Director
Region 10

There are many other similar letters and representations that I could place on the record. What we in this House are asking the government to do is simply this. We are asking for some flexibility and accommodation on behalf of the farmers of Canada. We have asked specifically that the acre and the bushel be preserved. The government responded by saying that if we are going to convert, we must convert to a pure system. As the article pointed out, there are not too many pure metric systems in the world.

As I said earlier, the United States is proceeding on a voluntary basis; persuasion but not coercion. We know they are going to retain the acre and the bushel. The United Kingdom has made exceptions. Sweden and South America, which are on the metric system, have made exceptions. I repeat, there is hardly a so-called pure metric system in the world.

Furthermore, I am not sure whether the metric system is as simple and convenient as we have been led to believe. I discussed the metric system with a surveyor who works for the Canadian forces. He reminded me that there are four different sizes of metres used throughout the world. I will place them on record so that those who follow this debate will know we have looked at the issue very thoroughly.

There are two sizes of metres used in the United States, 3.2808399 feet and 3.280833 feet. I am told that Canada is going to use another size, 3.28083980. The British use another size, 3.280843. That is hardly simplistic and hardly uniform.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for giving me the opportunity to conclude my remarks. I reiterate, it hardly augurs well for simplicity, convenience and uniformity. It is more like confusion and inconvenience. I know that the application of the metric system, particularly to agriculture in Canada, will cause undue hardship, inconvenience and confusion. It will create additional costs. I plead with the minister seriously to reconsider this measure. I ask him seriously to consider some of the pleas we have been making on behalf of the producers of western Canada. I implore him to give the farmers of western Canada an opportunity to express their views directly. Give the farmers an opportunity to participate in the democratic process. Let them be heard. Let them participate directly with the elected representatives of the parliament of Canada.

The minister rejected our proposal. I invite him to come forth with his proposal. What is his government going to do in terms of setting up this consultative mechanism? Whatever it may be, I hope he will give the western farmers the opportunity to present their views and place them clearly on the record. Then and only then will the best interests of the producer be served. Then and only then will democracy and our parliamentary institutions be best served. With that in mind, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That Bill C-23 be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time six months from now.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I speak in support of the amendment put forward by my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). This is the third opportunity I have had to participate in this debate. It is obvious that the majority of the constructive proposals that this party has put forward are falling on deaf ears.

The hon. member for Vegreville asked the minister responsible for small business whether he would accept some of our suggestions. The minister assured the House at that time that he was interested in our proposals. During the course of this debate we have found out just how interested the minister is in our proposals. We suggested that the clauses dealing with the farming industry be referred back to the committee. Today in the House that was voted down.

The farmers had high expectations of an amendment to this bill when the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) crossed the floor. However, as was noted in the House today by the hon. member for Vegreville, the hon. member for Crowfoot was not in the House to vote for this legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: It was a sad day that Jack Horner turned against us in reference to the metric system. We oppose the bill.

• (2040)

Mr. Elzinga: Not one member opposite took part in the debate on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). We have tried to put forward constructive proposals. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) suggested many ways in which improvements could be made.

We are all aware that the farm population in this country constitutes only 5 per cent of the total population. Perhaps this is one of the reasons the government was so intent on persisting with this legislation; it has no concern for those who are engaged in the farm sector. To anyone who has followed this debate it is obvious there is no one on the other side who speaks for the western farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: The minister for small business has sat mum in his seat signing his letters. I just wish he had seen fit to answer the letter the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) read into the record today complaining about the metric system. But he did not choose to answer a letter which was contrary to his own view. The minister has told us he would not implement certain sections of the act, should this bill be passed, until he has consulted with the various farm groups.

Mr. Alexander: I would not trust him.

Mr. Elzinga: We cannot, after previous performances. I cannot understand why we should be debating legislation which is not going to be enacted. What is the purpose? It is just a waste of parliamentary time. If we can find nothing better to do than debate legislation which the government tells us it has no intention of enacting, it is time we recessed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Good point!

Mr. Elzinga: Another important consideration is the probable cost of these proposals. The United States estimates that metrication will cost them anything from $40 billion to $100 billion. Using the traditional factor of 10 per cent, we can expect that metrication will cost Canadians between $4 billion and $10 billion. However, to judge by its past performance, cost is an element least likely to be taken into account by the government. After all, in the past nine years or so we have seen record government spending. Of the nine budgets brought forward, eight have been deficit budgets. Today we are witnessing record inflation because of Liberal administration, record unemployment because of Liberal administration, and record government spending—spending out of all proportion.

We are imperilling the welfare of future generations to suit the whims of this administration. The economy is plagued by record high interest rates and record mortgage interest rates. Our current level of foreign borrowing is the highest of any industrialized nation. Is all this a record of which hon. members opposite can be proud? The national unity issue is probably the only issue which can save this government, and that is so sad. Because if one looks at the record of this administration, it becomes apparent we shall not have a country worth saving if the affairs of the nation are carried on in the future as they have been in the last ten years.

Again, I ask: Is there anyone over there to speak for the farm population? Is there anyone to speak for the housewife? My hon. friend from St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has very ably set out the difficulties which the Canadian housewife will encounter under the metric system. Instead of using teaspoons and cups to measure she will have to deal with kilograms and millilitres. But the government is not concerned with the difficulties of individuals who so often have no one to represent their interests.

The minister has assured us on several occasions that all the local farm organizations support this legislation. Had we accepted the minister's claim and allowed him to have his way, this measure would have been law before Christmas. But we hesitated to accept his statement at that time and we have discovered since that the heads of the local farm organizations were not speaking for their membership.

I have received briefs from several locals of Unifarm in my constituency supporting the position taken by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and suggesting that the clauses of the bill referred to in the hon. member's motion be deleted. These representations are a clear indication to me of the manner in which the government attempts to mislead the opposition and the Canadian public. We have evidence of this time and time again. We saw it in 1974. We are all aware of what happened then—of the government's sudden change of heart after its return to power. We remember the campaign of 1972 when we spoke out in favour of a modest increase for pensioners and the indexing of personal income tax. At that time, we were severely criticized by the party opposite, but immediately after they had been elected to form a minority government they saw fit to implement the policies they had criticized so severely.

I am saddened when I find legislation of this kind being pushed down our throats. I believe members on this side are to be congratulated on the contributions they have made to the debate and for making sure that participatory democracy is still alive in this country. They have made their views known forcibly in a number of speeches which I have heard or had the opportunity of reading in Hansard—speeches such as that made by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who has done a superb job of representing the needs and wishes of those he was elected to serve. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) spoke today on behalf of constituents whom he has not yet been elected to serve when he put on record a letter from a rural resident in his prospective constituency of Edmonton North.

Mr. Paproski: And the minister still has not answered that letter.

● (2050)

Mr. Elzinga: This says something for participatory democracy. I am pleased to see there are many members on this side of the House who wish to continue with this debate.

Let me close by stating my disappointment at the manner in which so many members opposite withhold their true feelings. I am not only referring to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) when he crossed the floor and stated that he would hope to see changes to this legislation. I have had the opportunity to talk to various other individuals on that side who have stated that they are in disagreement with this legislation. They are muzzled by their own people, much the same way as they were muzzled in the capital punishment debate. This is the third time I have had an opportunity to participate in this debate.

Even though I realize it is somewhat futile, I hope the minister will reconsider some of the positions he has taken and will see fit to give in to some of the positive suggestions made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski).

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, since we have discussed the metric conversion bill from approximately December 23 until the present time, this House has witnessed more a devastating attack on the fundamental principles of this institution of parliament and the democracy of our country than on this bill. It was a simple matter which all parties had agreed to—how would Canada move into metric conversion? This government bungled it on the basis that they did not understand parliament or this country. It was their party which went up and down this country in that great, bare, red-assed demonstration of a baboon in heat. Participatory democracy was a great thing. Everyone was going to participate in decision-making. Where are these bare, red-assed baboons today? They are sitting there as docile as alley cats. They will not face up to the fact that they do not run the government. It is run by a series of people who are described as second class mandarins.

The Official Opposition, through the leadership of the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling), supported metric conversion in principle. On behalf of the party, he asked the government to bring forward legislation which would show the responsibility each would have in the conversion.

Mr. Marchand: You should read his speech, Alvin, it was good. It supported metric conversion.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am glad to see the minister has awakened. The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth asked the government to show where the responsibilities lay and if there was any great harm economically to any group or individual, what was the compensation parliament was willing to provide? That was the stand on behalf of the party. This member is a manufacturer by trade and is knowledgeable of the advantages and the disadvantages of the metric system. The hon. member put his entire belief behind this conversion to the metric system. What turned him off? The fact is that as a businessman he saw second class public servants not knowing whether they were punched, countersunk or out by a steam shovel. He also saw that some of the ministers were weak and could not stand up for themselves. I remember that day in committee when he said, "If I were the boss and you were my employees, I would fire the whole bunch of you". That is exactly how the people of Canada feel.

On January 26, when this matter came up, on behalf of the Official Opposition I said that this bill was supposed to be law five days later on February 1. On behalf of my party, I offered to pass this bill that afternoon and legitimize what these grain companies had done and what other companies had done. They had been told by government officials that this was going to be law on February 1. That compromise was a simple one, namely, that we get rid of the word "hectares". We do not need hectares because we are not selling land on the world market. I thought the minister had accepted that compromise. I was prepared to go across the country helping to explain to farmers, businessmen, consumers and housewives the advantages of the metric system. When I thought the minister had agreed, we stopped talking in the House, went into committee, and the first thing that happened to us in committee was that the minister got up and repudiated what he had indicated he was willing to do. He read out a statement which was prepared by public servants, which can be described by the elegant word "crap", and that is all it was. No person could write a statement like that for the minister and be anything above the level of a moron to make the arguments put forward in that statement.

We made a compromise offer to the government on second reading that we would support the thing even though it was going to be tough. We knew people would be opposed to the bill even if they took out that word "hectare". When we heard the evidence of the representatives of the so-called farm organizations, we knew they had not consulted with their farmers. We knew some hon. members on the government side were just as depressed about the metric conversion bill as we were. Yet we presented our second compromise in committee, namely that we should not ask consumers to have available only the metric system under the law, that we should give them three more years to change over. This is what the consumers association asked for, and this is what we moved. They wanted these people to have three more years of seeing both the imperial measurement and the metric measurement on the same carton. It would give them three years to adjust in order to have time to persuade and educate them that the metric system was not bad.

That proposal was turned down by the votes of every Liberal member in that committee. Through the amendments by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), we proposed that in the case of grain farmers we make it permissive. The Wheat Board made it permissive because they had to deal with farmers and they could not get along with them by trying to enforce the metric system on them without their permission. That was not the case with this government. They forced those poor Liberal members on the committee to vote against our second compromise one after the other—a permissive system for a number of years.

● (2100)

That was the second compromise, Mr. Speaker. On third reading we tried once again. Taking advantage of the minister's statement that he would not proclaim the legislation but wanted to consult with the grain industry and the farmers, I moved an amendment using his words. After the amendment was accepted—with the deletion of the last two or three phrases—we offered a compromise and said that if they took this bill back to committee to deal with Clauses 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10, and if the farmers were consulted, the Official Opposition would be co-operative in getting the bill through.

What happened, Mr. Speaker? Not one member on the government side responded to that compromise. This is the only way parliament can work yet they turned it down. They now sit silent, docile, a bunch of beaten-down hacks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): They are so frightened of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that they dare not voice their own opinions and they do not care any more about what their constituents think. As long as the Prime Minister is in charge, they say, he will get some great issue going, such as abortion, divorce, homosexuality or a crisis that is not a crisis. He will even drag in homosexuality to get the people's interest away from the main issue. He will do anything at all to get off the main issue. That is why I say participatory democracy is dead as far as this government is concerned.

Last night a minister I have had many a battle with over the years, particularly on his farm legislation, brought in a bill that affects western farmers. I looked at the legislation, this party examined it and we decided it was good legislation. We knew it would be opposed by the New Democratic Party.

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Woolliams: Stanley is always alone.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): This party voted with the government and I think this demonstrates that Her Majesty's Official Opposition will co-operate on good legislation. When we do support the government on bills that we think are good, however, then I think the government has an equal responsibility to listen when we oppose something they do.

All the evidence that can be brought forward, all the tests that can be made of public opinion on the prairies, show that a huge majority of people are opposed on this dictatorial conversion to a metric system that they do not understand and which they know is going to cost hundreds of millions of dollars. They also know they have no chance to express an opinion.

This alienation that exists all across the country against the governments of the provinces and the federal government has surfaced because we are not listening to our people and they feel there is no way for them to make their voices heard. As members of parliament all we can do is express the views of our constituents and our part of the country on behalf of equity and justice in the hope that the government will listen. When has this government ever bent its knees a fraction and yielded to the advice that might come from this side of the House?

An hon. Member: Never.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The government seems to be unable to follow the democratic traditions of this place which depend upon a certain amount of give and take if there is to be harmony in reaching decisions which are best for the country.

To claim that what civil servants put forward as legislation is God's word and cannot be challenged is to go too far. I would say that democracy has suffered, with this fairly elementary principle of metric conversion, a deadly blow. Farmers from all parts of Saskatchewan and all across the prairies are writing to me about it but I have not bothered to read any letters into the record. Of 700 letters that came in, only three supported the metric system, and they were all from delegates of the Wheat Pool. We have always sold wheat by the metric system so why do we have to force metrication at the farm level when it is not necessary? If farmers can be shown there is some advantage in it they will adopt it.

In all the years I have been around here I have never seen such a complete failure of human beings to bend a little on such an elementary issue and make a compromise. All we asked the government to do was to consult face to face with the farmers; meet them in small groups where they can say what is on their minds. This issue of metric conversion, which I thought would have the harmonious co-operation of all parties, has turned out to be a complete farce in terms of democracy.

On the subject of humanity toward your fellow man, we know that the Liberals worked hard for two or three months seducing a simple country boy to join their Cabinet.

Mr. Woolliams: Where is he tonight?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Apparently he believed that if he crossed the floor they would listen to him. He promised the people of western Canada that if he got in there he would put the view of western Canada to the government and would protect them against this evil thing, the metric system. Just the other night I warned the government that if they rammed this metric conversion legislation through they would destroy the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe that is the reason.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That is possible. The hon. member, who has been here many years, says that may be the reason. Perhaps it is a question of having the Prime Minister do to the new minister what he has done to so many ministers in the last three years. What other Prime Minister in the history of Canada has got rid of 14 cabinet ministers in four years?

An hon. Member: Not even Idi Amin can do that.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Idi Amin is an amateur compared to the cynicism of the Prime Minister if he destroys the new minister so quickly. The Minister without Portfolio is in the west now. He spoke in my constituency for an hour and told the people why he had made the great conversion from a person who had always—

Mr. Woolliams: Little Jack Horner sits in his corner playing with his metric system.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): —been opposed to this government. He told the people in my constituency why he joined the cabinet. They naturally believe he is going to be able to persuade the government and the Prime Minister that the ways he is so strongly opposed to should be changed.

Why does the government bring this legislation forward in his absence, Mr. Speaker? Why are they pushing it through? Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) right when he suggests it is a deliberate plan to destroy the minister? What a cynical thing to do. No matter how simple a country boy he might have been, he is a human being.

Mr. Woolliams: I would question that.

Mr. Kempling: You can take the boy out of the country but you can't take the country out of the boy.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Canada is supposed to be a democratic country. Let us assume for a moment that the metric system is a good system and that once you have learned all the terms and you think in decimals, it is possible to calculate things fairly quickly and accurately. But decimals are dangerous.

This is the story that Quebec farmers are telling me. Two or three years ago they punched a lot of information into a computer to find out how much milk was needed in Quebec. The computer went clickety-clack and clunkety-clunk and out came the print-out. It was meant to read that 50 million pounds of milk was needed from producers in Quebec, but what did the fellow who read the print-out see? The decimal was shifted over and the figure that came out was 500 million pounds. The fellow at the end of the computer is not the guy who fed the computer at the beginning. Since the computer came out with a figure, he thought that is the truth. So our Canadian Dairy Commission told all the Quebec farmers to boost their production, to borrow money, to get cows that produce 20,000 pounds of milk a year instead of 10,000. The Quebec farmers did that. They had visions of an increase of 15 per cent in their quota.

You know what happened in the year 1976, Mr. Speaker. The cows were bred, they had calves, they were fresh, the milk was pouring out, the rains came, the grass grew, the cows ate it, the milk came out faster. The milk was pouring all over the place. Then the minister had to stand up and say that somebody made a mistake, the Quebec farmers were producing too much milk, their quota would have to be cut down by 15 per cent and if they did not start reducing that milk, the government would fine them $8 for every 100 pounds they delivered over the quota. So the poor little farmer says to me, "Look, in one three months period I get $12,000 worth of milk produced, but the fines are $9,000. I am broke".

Last June the Quebec farmers had a meeting in front of the parliament buildings. The poor minister had not been told by the civil servant that somebody had goofed with the decimal point. He went out to say "Mes amis, I am your Minister of Agriculture". You know what happened. He thought the world war had broken out, with all that milk and butter. Why should a minister have to endure that because somebody made a mistake with a decimal point? I am simply saying that in Canada, even though the metric system is a good system, it is dangerous if you have to move decimal points around.

My remarks can be summed up in this way, Mr. Speaker. Canada, like the United States, the United Kingdom, Sweden and other countries, has a democratic tradition. You cannot force a Canadian to do anything; you can only lead him. We have demonstrated that in the war and we have shown it in peacetime. You do not force Canadians. Of course, occasionally you can scare them and they do irrational things, but generally speaking you do not fool Canadians for too long. I am simply saying that the government is not using democratic procedures in this matter. What is wrong with asking farmers face to face what they have against the metric system and whether they would accept it and give a little here and take a little there? The farmer would back you up if he saw that it was in his interest and that of his country to do so. But we are not giving him this opportunity. The government is attacking our democratic ways. Participatory democracy is gone.

I just came from a reception tonight which was in honour of a delegation from the People's Republic of China. The first thing I did when I arrived was to ask them whether they are still using their land measurements. They said, "Oh yes, we still use the mu". I asked them whether they are still using their weight measurements, and they said, "Oh yes, we still use the catty". "But," I said, "your officials always use hectares and tonnes". They said, "Yes, but in the people's culture it is the mu, a sixth of an acre, and the weight measurement is a catty that the farmer can handle and lift". The Chinese farmer understands the mu—it has been used in China for 6,000 years. So even in a revolutionary society such as the People's Republic of China they would not consider changing the land measurement; they simply make the official do the conversion into the so-called metric system, the way we have always done it in Canada. But in Canada we do not have respect for people any more. We do not let them keep their culture, we do not let them change gradually. We force the change through because the experts say that is the quickest way—you kill or you cure. I think that somebody's hide is going to be cured this time.

I think that under this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) we have lost the ability to be flexible. We have lost the ability to be democratic, and we are simply taking the word from up high. Infallibility has long since passed from the scene in the modern world. It is not the Pope's infallibility we are talking about; we are talking about the infallibility of the Prime Minister, and there are several other ministers who hope they have the characteristic of infallibility too. You cannot run Canada on the principle of infallibility. All you can do is to move forward a little bit at a time; that is the way you make progress.

I want to conclude with a statement made with respect to the history of our country written by Donald Creighton. I mentioned this before and I mention it again. His volume 18 on the history of Canada from 1939 to 1957 is entitled "The Forked Road". In that volume he pointed out that Canada, during those years of war and the 12 years afterwards, took the wrong fork in the road. Then he said that we surrendered as a nation to Keynes, Beveridge and Burnham; Keynes with his monetary theory that would solve all our problems; Beveridge with his cradle to the grave doctrine which would keep everybody supplied with social welfare; and Burnham with his doctrine of the managerial elite. Who won the war? The managerial elite run this country. They are the ones who guide the ministries. They are the ones who terrify the backbenchers.

So long as you depend on the special breed of people who come up through these pyramids in the civil service and a dozen people tell you what to do, this is the state in which we will find ourselves. We have lost our respect for the common people. We have alienated ourselves from them as an institution, and we have gone a long way in attacking the foundations of democracy to send this country down the wrong fork in the road.

You have seen and heard members of this party do their level best to try to put the facts before the government. We pointed out that the hectare will cause a whole lot of trouble in Quebec, Ontario and the Maritimes, as well as in the west. It is not a permanent part of the metric system; it is only in there temporarily. Yet we are being forced to accept a temporary term that will upset us, all in the name of keeping everything neat and tidy and efficient according to Burnham's theory of the managerial elite.

Canada as a nation took the wrong road when fighting the war in 1939 and the years afterwards, the road of controls, the road of loss of freedom. What is necessary now is to get back to basic truths; you do not force Canadians to bow to the wisdom of a managerial elite which learns nothing and forgets nothing. I call them nitwits, and everybody can understand.

That is the perspective in which this issue must be seen. We have sold our souls to experts who are exacting a terrible price from us in the loss of our democratic traditions. It is a sorry day when I have to stand in the House and make the charges I am making tonight, but I make them in honesty and sincerity. I say that even on a simple matter such as the metric system the government will not use the ordinary democratic procedures that would make this system work. That is why we have no choice but to tell the people of the country that the only party in the House which has stood up and fought on this issue was Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2120)

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): We want this country to tackle the monetary and economic issues which are before us and not be distracted by issues which are purely emotional and which have nothing to do with the problems ahead of us. I hope this metric debate has served one useful function; I hope it has convinced many people that their voices are not going to get heard by this government as long as this government lasts and as long as the government stays under the heels of this so-called managerial elite.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to participate in this debate and particularly to follow the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), who always gets to the heart of the matter under discussion. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain indicated, at the outset of the debates we have had on metric conversion I also was one of its great supporters, and I believe I still am today. I believe eventually we will go to the metric system. I think eventually we will convert, but I became very turned off in discussions I had in meetings with the Metric Commission.

When we look at these matters, it might be a good idea to go back and read part of the order in council which set up the Metric Commission. The order in council is dated June 10, 1971 and it is order in council No. PC 1971-1146. The order in council accepted a recommendation of the then minister of industry, trade and commerce, pursuant to section 18 of the Government Organization Act, 1969, to establish a preparatory commission for the conversion to the metric system. At that time all parties in the House accepted metric conversion. I believe they accepted it on the basis that in due course we would have a metric bill before the House which would lay down the complete program of metric conversion to cover a ten-year period. However, we have not seen that.

The order in council to which I referred instructed the commission in item 7 as follows:

> The Commission shall advise the Minister on the need for legislation or any other action that may be required to facilitate conversion to the metric system.

We talked to the commission about this when we had some of its members before our committee, but they were just blank on the question of legislation. As closely as I can calculate, there are at the present time about 92 statutes which will have to be amended to accommodate the metric system. I can only say to the minister responsible for this measure that he has had an indication in this debate of the difficulties with just a few of the items which are being dealt with in Bill C-23. There are 92 or so more statutes to be amended. If the minister wants to make some progress, I urge him to bring in a metric bill and lay the balance of the program out. Surely that is not too much to ask.

We have spent something in the order of $20 million on metric conversion so far, and what have we got for it? We have a very confused picture. We have 1,500 people on the sectoral committees of the Metric Commission. These are mostly technical people. They are not market-oriented at all. There is no representation from small and medium sized businesses to speak of.

In other words, the corporate elite is engineering metric conversion. Those are the people who have financial base which enables them to send their people to Ottawa to sit on those sectoral committees and to help the government engineer this conversion. We have a bunch of technocrats who are using a critical path method, but they are adhering very rigidly to the dates set down by the commission.

The biggest problem I have discovered as a result of talking to people in industry who are working with the Metric Commission is that there is a tremendous lack of communication. What they are saying is that we should inform the informers, because there is only a handful of organizations which have the means to communicate with their various members. People in industry get together and form little industrial associations so that they can talk over their mutual problems; but let us remember that it takes money to run those organizations and to disseminate information, and there is only a handful of large organizations which have the means to communicate with all their members. Let us remember also that not everyone in industry belongs to one of those groups. The biggest problem is lack of communication, and the fact is that there is no representation from small and medium sized businesses to speak of. I know from talking with the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen that their constant complaint is that they have no representation or no input with regard to metric conversion.

Then there are mechanics and people who are concerned about buying tools. They wonder whether they are going to get some allowance for the special tools they have to buy. I have to concede that, after looking into the matter on my own and after talking with various tool manufacturers, I have found that the cost is not as great as some would have us believe. We have heard figures of $3,000 and $1,500 as the cost of a mechanic's tools and so forth, but the cost is not that high. The tool manufacturers tell us that the cost is quite a bit less than that; $150 or $200 in many cases was all that was needed to convert. However, these people are looking for an allowance. After all, if you are running a business and buy tools, you can deduct the cost of those tools as an expense. However, the man who has to supply his own tools cannot do that. He does get an income tax allowance of so many dollars a year, but that is just for the replacement of existing tools which are broken. He is looking for something beyond that.

It is my understanding that the Metric Commission recommended a tax allowance and the income tax form, but that was rejected by the Department of Finance on the ground that it might set a precedent. That is a pretty flimsy way to look at it.

However, the Metric Commission went back in its bureaucratic way and came up with an alternative method. Hon. members will not believe this. The metric mafia says the alternative method of giving an allowance for tools would be this: first, the mechanic purchases a tool; he receives a sales slip describing the tool and designating it as a metric tool; he mails the sales slip to the Metric Commission, after completing, of course, the appropriate form in true government style; the Metric Commission investigates the claim and, if it approves it, it passes it along to the Department of Supply and Services. In due course the Department of Supply and Services issues a cheque to the mechanic and mails it out to Manpower, which distributes the cheque to the mechanic. Can hon. members imagine a more complicated way of reimbursing someone who buys a metric tool? Is it not incredible that all those steps should have to be taken?

One would think the government would make some accommodation for this matter on personal income tax forms, but no, it has not done this. There will be a proliferation of hundreds of thousands of pieces of paper. People will be running around checking catalogues and advertisements to see it it is being done according to the government's standard. The federal government has not even consulted all its departments to determine how they will be affected by the metric system. That does not show a strong commitment on the government's part. That is partly why we say this present legislation is inadequate.

What is the Metric Commission? Basically it is a bunch of misfits, and I say that with all due respect. It is my impression that if a department wants to get rid of someone, it sends him to the Metric Commission. That is why I said the commission is nothing but a bunch of misfits. It has not thought this question through. Some time ago I talked to people in the Canadian lumber industry from the west coast, one of whom had been on a sectoral committee. He said that the lumber industry could convert, but that cost was the important factor.

We are told that conversion to the metric system is to be complete by 1980, and I wondered if the lumber industry could meet that 1980 target date. This man told me that possibly they could be ready by 1985 but it depends on what happens south of the border, for much of our lumber goes there. They buy it. If they are ready to accept metric measure by 1985, we will convert then. If they are not ready until 1990, we will wait until then. Therefore, not every industry of this country will convert readily to metric measurement, and for good reason. And we are annoyed that the federal government has not considered this.

That our changeover is confused is illustrated best by what happened in the changeover from Fahrenheit to Celsius. Before the changeover, the commission was in a panic. It held various meetings and decided, in the summer to publish a book for distribution to school-children in the fall. They would return to school in September, read the pamphlet on temperature conversion, and tell their parents about it. In the process it was hoped everyone would become familiar with the new temperature scale. There were numerous delays, and although the booklet was eventually finished, it was not ready for September distribution. The following January it was still sitting on the desk of the Metric Commission director.

Then someone looked at the calendar and said, "My God, we are supposed to be converted to Celsius by March and we have not distributed the booklet in January." There was great panic. There was an attempt to move the conversion date forward, but the government refused. Consequently great confusion reigned in the conversion from Fahrenheit to Celsius. Some still cannot use the new scale. Some radio stations report in Fahrenheit; others in Fahrenheit and Celsius. Although I have no trouble myself, I have met people who tell me they cannot relate to the new temperature scale, and are glad to have an old thermometer; otherwise they would not know the temperature.

The program of the Metric Commission has run into difficulty. It has spent almost $20 million, and the result has been a great deal of confusion in the country. The government's position on the changeover from acres to hectares shows great rigidity on its part. It makes no economic sense. The changeover from acres to hectares will not produce one more bushel, or tonne, I should say, of wheat. It will bring no economic gain. That is not only our view; it is also the view of the American scientific committee. The letter the American scientific Committee sent us told us that people in Louisiana still use the old French land measuring system, and in California they still use the old Spanish measure. They do not think there is any economic advantage in converting to the English system of acres. The committee says it sees no economic advantage in the conversion from hectares to acres. I say it will bring only confusion.

The government and the Metric Commission are trying to tell us that the provinces will be responsible for the conversion; I suppose theoretically the provinces will convert, and people supporting metric conversion say everything will be rosy. Well, they are not right. Many municipalities have said they do not intend to change their street signs from miles an hour to kilometres an hour. The authorities in one of our large cities say this could be dangerous, because if people see that the speed limit is 50 kilometres they may think it is 50 miles an hour. I point out that 35 kilometres an hour or even 30 kilometres an hour is not the same as 30 miles an hour. Think also of the confusion in our border towns, where tourists enter from the United States. There could be serious difficulties, and people not used to metric speed signs could easily become confused.

In addition, consider the cost of changing our signs. Municipalities will approach the provinces for the money and the provinces will say, "We have no money for this, it is the federal government's responsibility. We will take it up with the federal government." The provinces will find they cannot get anything out of the federal government for metric conversion. Therefore it will be the taxpayers of our towns and cities who will pay the costs of conversion. But many of our small communities will say, "We do not have the $100,000 or the $200,000 needed to change our signs, and we are not going to do it." The result will be nothing but confusion in the matter of metric conversion.

Hon. members have talked of the change metric conversion will impose on our culture. I suppose people will say that Peter Piper picked 8.87 grams of pickled peppers, but it does not sound the same, and it disturbs me.

Mr. Paproski: Say it really quickly.

Mr. Kempling: I can hardly say it as it is without faltering. We used to say, when quoting the "Charge of the Light Brigade", "Half a league, half a league, half a league onward, into the valley of death rode the 600". I suppose now we shall say, "1.5 kilometres, 1.5 kilometres, 1.5 kilometres onward, into the valley of death rode the 600."

Mr. Paproski: What do you think will happen to football fields?

Mr. Kempling: Incidentally, Mr. Jake Gaudaur, commissioner of the Canadian Football League, participated in our little luncheon group not long ago and assured us there will be great difficulty converting football fields. He said that despite anything the government says, it is intended to retain the present field size and markings.

• (2140)

I have been rather harsh with the Metric Commission. In my view, they have not done the job they were given. The order in council is very precise as to what they are to do. Nearly $20 million has been spent on metric conversion. However, when I talk to people in industry they say they do not hear anything about it. They are not getting the information. They say they will not absorb the cost of metric conversion, they will pass it on to the consumer. Eventually, the taxpayer has to pay for this. The taxpayer has already absorbed the $20 million spent by the Metric Commission.

The Metric Commission periodically travels around the country holding meetings. They have said to those attending the meetings that industry will pay the cost because of the great benefits that will accrue to them down the road. That is one thing you do not do in business, accrue benefits over a long period of time. There is no place on the ledger sheet headed "benefits that will accrue" so that you can write off the cost over a period of time. They go from year to year because that is the basis on which they pay taxes.

The Metric Commissioners say at those meetings that industry will absorb the cost and it will not be passed on to the consumer. At the same time the industry people are saying they will not absorb the cost, that it will be passed on to the consumer.

I would like to see this matter brought forward in a bill. The best thing that could happen to metric conversion would be to bring a bill into this House and have it debated. Let us get it out in the open and do something about it. Get it into committee. Put the amendment through.

If the people on the Metric Commission do not know how to write a bill, we will help them. If the Department of Finance does not know how to compensate small people for the cost that will accrue to them as a result of metric conversion, we will tell them how to do it. We have studied this for a long while. I think we have a good handle on it.

Like my colleagues, I become discouraged when I see the government become rigid. They will not move. They say this is the way it is going to be and you will like it or lump it. When I see that happen, I become very obstinate. I can no longer be a person very much in support of metric conversion.

I went into our caucus and pleaded with our members to support metric conversion. Many now ask me what has happened. They remember when I went to caucus and made a long, passionate speech about metric conversion, how we should support it and how great it would be for Canada. I took a lot of abuse for it. I received letters. I will not read them into the record because some are not very nice. However, I did that because I believed in metric conversion. When I saw what the various ministries had done or had not done with regard to metric conversion, I changed my view. I support the principle of metric conversion completely, but I do not support the way the government is trying to implement it. The way they are going about it is regressive.

With regard to the one matter of acres and hectares, we had before our committee representatives from the farming community. They told us that the farmers were all for metric conversion. At the same time, the farmers went to a meeting at the Chateau Laurier. Metric conversion was raised. There was such a violent argument that the chairman of the meeting tabled the matter so that they could get on with other business. In other words, in no way is metrication unanimous.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and others who have spoken in this debate have quite rightly said that this bill should be sent back to the committee.

Bring in a bill. Let us get it out in the open. Let us debate it. Let us get together with the farm groups to see what we can do to make metric conversion work. Until the government does that, I can assure them that they will have just as tough a time with the other 92 bills as they are having with Bill C-23.

[Mr. Kempling.]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would not have again risen to speak about this matter if I did not feel so deeply about it. During the last debate, I spoke about the history of the west. I spoke about the Torrens system which we inherited from New Zealand and described in some detail what it meant to the history of the west. During that speech, the minister responsible for small business poohpoohed and heckled me. I read that speech tonight for the first time since I delivered it.

There is one tool that parliament has, namely the right to debate. I may be accused with my friends of filibustering the bill, but I will tell them this. If I have to filibuster this bill as long as I am in the House because of what it is doing to the history and tradition of western Canada, I will take the punishment the media pour out for filibustering. I will use every tool of parliament to make sure that parliament works rather than have something rammed down the throats of western Canadians.

This bill is nothing less than parliamentary insemination. They are going to give it to you through a syringe whether you will like it or not. You will have a calf whether you will like it or not. It is the rape of the west.

The opposition has a function. I have read articles, not in the farm papers but in other papers, suggesting that we are debating this bill and holding it up. Let me tell you the truth. We are debating it. We are holding it up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: And we shall win.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I hear the interventions. I appreciate that members opposite are worried about the same thing. I am sure in their caucus the little man from the corner, little Jack Horner, is playing with his metric system. He must have told the government members what this means to the farmers and to the city people and about the millions and millions of dollars it will cost the Canadian taxpayer to change over.

I want to talk about the function of the opposition. You first have to look at the term Leader of the Official Opposition, Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

An hon. Member: Who is that?

Mr. Woolliams: Do not worry about him, he will come through. It was only a short time ago that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was away down low in the polls. Polls work like a yo-yo. I agree with the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)—"poles" are made for dogs.

● (2150)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: But even the law statutes refer to the Prime Minister as "Her Majesty's first minister of the Crown" and to the Leader of the Opposition as "The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition". What are our functions? We have been criticized for taking the position we have. I am pleased that I can stand here tonight and take the attack. But what are our functions?

Mr. Harquail: What functions?

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member asks "What functions?" How would he know a function? Being a sheep with the Liberals it is very easy to follow, especially coming from the riding he does. I know it. There are safe Tory ridings and there are safe Liberal ridings. It is very easy. I can understand his frustrations. If I sat where he did I would be frustrated too. He must be silent. He doesn't speak. He is not even allowed to think. He just follows like a sheep.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: In dealing with this bill, the functions of the Official Opposition are comprehensive and important.

Mr. Harquail: When are you going to start functioning as an opposition?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, any time you want to come over. We have lost some members to your side but I am sure we are going to gain some from yours. It may be a realigning of party policy. But I will put one question to you: Have you stood in your place? Have you made a speech on this bill tonight?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am tempted to break the rules. But one has to break rules when dealing with men who speak through the bottoms of their pants.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Harquail: When are you going to deal with the bill?

Mr. Woolliams: I am dealing with the criticism levelled at the opposition.

An hon. Member: You can do that.

Mr. Woolliams: I thank the hon. member for that compliment. I cannot return the compliment because I don't think he is a good backbencher. He is too silent.

The functions of the Official Opposition are comprehensive and important and cannot and must not be limited to the definition given 120 years ago—

An hon. Member: What's that?

Mr. Woolliams: And, by the way, Paul Martin who is now the High Commissioner in London—

An hon. Member: Tell us about the bill!

Mr. Woolliams: Do members over there intend to holler and shout all through my speech? I will tell the hon. member what I will do.

Metric System

Mr. Harquail: I have watched you do that for years. I have been listening to you do that ever since I arrived here.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I have watched you. You don't have to sit here, go back to your office, you idiot!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Go back to your seat, at least.

Mr. Harquail: You are not running this House yet.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not running it yet but—

Mr. Harquail: And you never will be.

Mr. Woolliams: I put this question to the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad he has gone back to his seat. He is starting to learn the rules. What contribution has he ever made to this parliament since he came here?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Harquail: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour may have observed the unparliamentary remarks made in the course of the hon. member's contribution tonight. Since he did direct a question to me, I am very pleased to refer him to Hansard where he will find I have attempted to put on record the negative position adopted on most issues by the hon. member's party, which is purported to be the Loyal Official Opposition. That party has, apparently, no positive view on any of the issues before us. I may say I have spoken positively about transport problems, about maritime concerns—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I might bring it to the attention of the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) that under the relevant standing order a question can be addressed to a member who has the floor, but an hon. member cannot rise to answer a question directed to him by an hon. member who has the floor. So I am afraid the hon. member is not permitted to give an answer to the question directed to him except by seeking the floor himself in due time, and answering the question then if he wishes to do so. I do not think the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) should be interrupted by an answer to a question he has asked in the course of his speech.

Mr. Woolliams: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for putting things in a proper perspective. The hon. member who interrupted me suggested I had not put forward anything positive. Let me respond to that suggestion in the light of what I was saying about the functions of the opposition. I rose two weeks ago in the private members' hour in an effort to change a 150-year-old rule whereby a child of only seven years could be convicted of an offence. I asked for an amendment to be made to the law. And I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member and his friends did because they have no heart, no feeling for what happens to the kids in training schools and penitentiaries. They talked that bill out! That is the hon. member's contribution to parliament.

Metric System

I come back to what I was saying with reference to the functions of an opposition in the face of a bill such as this dealing with the metric system.

An hon. Member: You are mad now!

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I am mad and I am glad somebody has said I am mad. I am going to be mad when it is proposed to change our history and traditions at a cost of millions of dollars for no good reason at all.

As I said, under the Torrens land system land was divided into acres, not hectares. It was divided into quarter-sections—

Mr. Marchand: Where did the acre start?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I would say to the little minister of small business, who is as small as the business he is talking about and is small because he is not supporting our arguments, that in Kamloops they have lots and blocks. When they find out that they have a block for a minister they will know they are in a lot of trouble.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Unworthy of you!

Mr. Woolliams: It may be unworthy, but facts must come out tonight because we are fighting for our traditions.

Mr. Marchand: You are talking about this bill. Tell me how large an acre is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is 1/640th of a section.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, and 160 rods.

Mr. Marchand: What is an acre and where did it start?

Mr. Woolliams: I will say this. "Acre" is from a Latin word, but acres, sections, townships, municipalities and counties come from the Torrens land system which developed the West. Mr. Speaker, I have never been interrupted so often in a speech by so many members.

Mr. Kaplan: We want the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: He wants the bill! They are like a girl who wants the pill. They always want something.

An hon. Member: Oh! Where is Horner?

Mr. Woolliams: You have got Horner. He was going to change all these things. Where was he today when the vote was being taken? He was absent. That worries me because I did believe he was conscientious in thinking that he could do more within the cabinet than outside it. Now he is not only outside the cabinet but he is outside parliament.

Let me come back to the point I was making. I want to refer to something which Mr. Paul Martin said, the present High Commissioner in England. He said that the duty of the opposition is to oppose everything and to turn out the government. That is what he said when he was in the opposition. I felt that was hard lines. I opposed the Hon. Paul Martin, who was quite a gentleman, when he said that. Realizing now what kind of government we have and what they have done to parliament, they should be criticized by the opposition. Perhaps we have not carried out our role. We have always taken the affirmative and we have been criticized for that. During the last election we were criticized about wage and price controls, which was the big issue. That was a positive approach. The Liberals took a negative approach. The election was over, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) returned to Sussex Drive and he brought in wage and price controls.

• (2200)

Mr. Paproski: He deceived the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: You have lost a year.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe the hon. member is correct and I have lost a year, but Canada has lost ten years under the Trudeau government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Now we are being criticized because we are opposing this bill.

An hon. Member: What have we lost because of the Conservative government?

Mr. Woolliams: I read the speech of a gentleman whom I have always admired. I have not always agreed with him, but I certainly asked him many questions.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: You can mutter, you can sputter, but I am talking about Lester B. Pearson. He made a speech at a Canadian Club luncheon and quoted with affection a former prime minister who was a Conservative. He said:

> It holds its opposition partly because of its great traditions. It has fought kings and dismissed them. It has raised up an army to destroy a king and was itself destroyed by its army; only to recall another king and to rise up again on the site of its own destruction. It has been modified and reformed to meet the changes of centuries. It has been led by the greatest men that the country has produced . . .

He was talking about the British—Pitt the Elder and Pitt the Younger, Sir Robert Peel, Disraeli, Gladstone and Lloyd George. This country has had great prime ministers. We have had Macdonald, Laurier, Meighen, Mackenzie King—

An hon. Member: And R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, we have had R. B. Bennett. I will stop at this point and digress for a few moments. History has not been very fair to R. B. Bennett. The depression was on in 1930 when Mr. Bennett, who was from my city, took office. The late Mackenzie King said that there would be one five cent piece for the unemployed in any province in which the premier is a Conservative, and that destroyed the Liberal Party. It may have been said deliberately. At the time Mr. Bennett was in office there were ten million people in Canada, and he came from a little cow town of 15,000. Mr. Bennett is now being played up as quite a man: he defeated Ramsay MacDonald, a Labour leader in England where there were six million unemployed; he defeated Hoover in the United States; he created Mussolini and Hitler; and he created a world depression. What Mr. Bennett really created was the Bank of Canada to control our currency. He brought in prairie farm rehabilitation—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He brought in public broadcasting as well.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I will deal with that. Actually, he brought in the Canadian Wheat Board; he brought in prairie farm assistance; and he brought in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. He did a lot for Canada, but because there was unemployment and he inherited a depression in Canada, he was played down like all the leaders of his time and was defeated. I am glad to put it on the record that a man from my town did all that. When I see these Liberals speak with great affection for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, and the Bank of Canada, and they put their hands over their hearts with the great feeling that only Liberals can express, then I know that they have never understood history and cannot live with it. I am glad to stand here tonight, a member from the city of Calgary, and defend the man who inherited the depression from the Liberals. That is the truth, Mr. Speaker.

I have said we have had great Prime Ministers and I have explained the function of the opposition. We have had John A. Macdonald, William Lyon Mackenzie, Wilfrid Laurier, Mackenzie King, Arthur Meighen, R. B. Bennett, St. Laurent, Diefenbaker, Pearson. All those men made a contribution to this country and with one exception had to play the role of the opposition. That is what I am playing tonight. They were browbeaten, yelled at, heckled and belittled as I am because I dare stand on what I believe in for western Canada—our traditions and our history.

I was belittled the last time I made a speech particularly by the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) who is from a very small town. He seems to believe there is nothing in the metric system that offends our history. Surveyors went out and created quarter sections, sections, townships, municipalities. They created roads and made their surveys over hill, valley, river and mountain. That was all done by people who believed that we could develop a great country and that great country is now the breadbasket of the world.

As a native son of Saskatchewan, a province of which I am so proud, I never thought the day would come that my adopted province of Alberta, because of the incentives given to those who wanted to explore and develop gas and oil, would establish us as one of the few nations in western world self-sufficient in oil and gas. I never thought I would see the day in Alberta in 1930 when, under an unusual government, they could not pay the interest on their bonds.

Mr. Kaplan: You are afraid to talk about metric.

Metric System

Mr. Woolliams: I am not afraid. I have made a speech on metric and now I want to give you a little of the history and tradition of the west and why we feel so deeply.

The day came when not only did we pay the interest on our bonds but we blew in Leduc No. 1 which was to make Canada self-sufficient in oil and gas. Today we have a surplus of natural gas. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) stood proudly in his place recently and said we could export natural gas to the United States because we had a surplus. That is the climate we have created in western Canada.

When it comes to hectares, as I said in my first speech on the subject, I only knew one "Hector" and that was a horse my grandfather had. I will not go into the details of what he did but that was the only Hector that was worthwhile.

In the land titles offices every person who owns an interest in oil and gas and every farmer who has land registered in his name without an encumbrance can transfer the title quite cheaply. That is the history and tradition that built the breadbasket of the world and built the area which supplies Canada with oil and energy to keep us self-sufficient. That is what this argument is about; that is what this debate is about.

• (2210)

Now I want to come back to the criticisms that have been levelled against us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate that. I appreciate my friends; they are good friends of mine. They mean well, they are good people. Let me tell them what Mike Pearson said—I am sure hon. members opposite would not turn against him—when he dealt with the opposition.

An hon. Member: You don't have a leader now.

Mr. Woolliams: Is that not a strange thing? The Mafia is not my leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: He wrote:

> If parliament is to be preserved as a living institution, His Majesty's Loyal Opposition must fearlessly perform its functions. When it properly discharges them the preservation of our freedom is assured. The reading of history proves that freedom always dies when criticism ends. It upholds and maintains the rights of minorities against majorities.

We have a majority government now. There is one thing about Alberta. They used to have no Liberals; now their Liberal caucus consists of one member. But remember, we are the minority. I understand my position.

An hon. Member: Oh, this really hurts!

Mr. Woolliams: It does not hurt me.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Then why have you been talking about it all day?

Mr. Woolliams: I have not been talking about it all day. You must have had a night dream.

An hon. Member: A nightmare.

Mr. Woolliams: There are nightmares and nightmares. But I do not intend to get off the track. Over the years when I have spoken, I have not digressed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Anyone who levels that charge knows he is most insincere.

I will go back to what I was saying. What did Mr. Pearson say in that great speech about the opposition? He went on to say:

It should supervise all expenditures and prevent overexpenditure by exposing to the light of public opinion wasteful expenditures or worse.

Let me pause there. Can hon. members believe that in days when growth is just about zero, when we have almost one million unemployed, when we pour out money like the Social Crediters who are not in the House tonight, when we have the highest rate of inflation, the highest interest rates, the highest housing costs, the highest cost of living, the government brings out a bill on metric conversion! This great government!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: This conversion will cost us another $500 million.

Mr. Paproski: That is only for starters.

Mr. Woolliams: The little businessman, the little business minister, or the minister with little business—whatever you want to call him—screws up his face, he is upset. Of course he is upset. He has to go back and talk to the people about the metric system. He has never sat in the opposition. He does not understand what we are up against with that great, powerful majority who stand together through thick and thin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I would rather have a few members. I would rather have a few members of the Tory party who might walk across the floor, who might differ, because if I thought that I belonged to a party where everybody had to think alike, I would know there was no thinking at all.

An hon. Member: You could not do that anyway.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the function of the opposition? Why am I speaking tonight?

An hon. Member: Yes, why?

Mr. Woolliams: The opposition is to arouse, educate and mould public opinion by voice and by vote. The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) said to us in his private chambers and in his open way that he would fight this bill to death, but he was not here for the vote.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Woolliams: The opposition must scrutinize every action of the government and in doing so prevent the shortcuts through democratic procedure which governments like to make.

Let me pause there for a few moments. Do hon. members know what 90 per cent of the law is about, whether it has to do with metric conversion or any other matter? Ninety per cent of our law is manufactured by order in council, by some unknown body. That is what this government is going to do to the farmers and the city people of western Canada and to the gas and oil industry. It is going to thrust and ram conversion through.

I call this parliamentary insemination. An hon. minister opposite shakes his head. He is the one who destroyed Time and Reader's Digest.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I feel sorry for him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired, and there does not seem to be unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I thought for a moment that my restraint and the restraint of my colleagues would permit this bill to progress any more rapidly, I would not have stood up, but we can see from the way the debate has deteriorated this will not happen. In the speech the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) just completed he spent perhaps two minutes on metric conversion, and the rest of his time was spent on the rationalization of the joys of being in the opposition. I hope that is a joy the opposition will have for many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: There is also a burning regret that hon. members opposite have lost a very good member, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner), to our side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would answer a question.

Mr. Kaplan: I will answer the hon. member's question at the end of my remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope the hon. member will answer before 10.30.

Mr. Kaplan: After the demonstration of how clever the hon. member opposite is, I am not certain whether I can answer his question, but I will certainly try.

What I want to do is put an historical perspective on metric conversion. This is not the first metric conversion Conservatives in this country have opposed. As the hon. member began to mention, 120 years ago this country abandoned farthings, shillings, pence, crowns, pounds and guineas. That was done in the face of a tremendous amount of opposition by Conservatives in this country. Many arguments were made. It was argued that if we were to go to metric money, that would be the end of this country; there would never be an adjustment to it, it would be a festering sore and it would adversely affect commerce. Let us not have the argument of the Conservatives of those days. They said we should not have decimal currency. That was the hue and cry of Conservatives of those days.

I tried to find in the library this evening some of the fabulous arguments which were made in those days about Canada's metric conversion of 1858 because I know 100 years from now, when students of the subject look back at this debate, and particularly at the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North, they will put his argument in the same box with the arguments which were made about Canada's conversion to metric money 120 years ago. I cannot document facts because the archives part of the library is locked up, but there were three main arguments. Only one of them had any merit. The first argument was that if we convert to decimal currency we will be eaten up by the United States because they have decimal money.

• (2220)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well?

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member says, well? I say, 120 proud years of independence since that critically monumental decision speak for themselves. We were not eaten up by the United States. Argument number one was baloney.

Argument number two was this: If we convert to decimal money, we will alienate the United Kingdom and our relations with the United Kingdom will be disturbed. Actually, the legislation we sent to Britain was overruled. The British lords of the treasury would not accept Canadian decimal currency conversion. They wanted us to preserve the glorious British tradition of money, ranging from pence to guineas. Mr. Speaker, we have maintained warm relations with the United Kingdom. We belong to the great Commonwealth of Nations. Therefore, argument number two also turned out to be baloney.

Argument number three, which was repeated in editorials from one end of the country to the other, letters to the editor, and speeches in this country's legislatures, was this: We cannot adopt the decimal currency, because you cannot divide the dollar evenly by seven. That is true, you cannot. You can divide the guinea evenly by seven. There was tremendous hue and cry about the damage we could cause this country's commerce if we were to adopt a decimal currency which you could not divide evenly by seven. After all, the week has seven days. It was inferred from that fact that if our unit of currency could not be readily divisible by seven, the commerce of this country would end. The arithmetic is right, but history has again proved the tremendous advantage of adopting a simple, universal, decimal currency.

Without doubt, events will soon prove, as we adopt the metric system and so integrate our measuring system with that of many other countries of the world, that this government's approach was correct. Its approach has taken a great deal of courage. Actually, I am surprised to note that in some parts of the country courage is necessary in order to bring about conversion. I suggest that in a few years all the arguments which have been made by the opposition will end up on the same shelf of comic history to which has been relegated all the arguments against the adoption of a decimal currency.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who apparently went to the library to do some research.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It was closed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): So is his mind.

Mr. Neil: Apparently he was able to gather some information although, obviously, he does not understand what we are debating this evening. I do not think he has been in the House listening to the debate. He suggests the Official Opposition opposes the metric system, and has gone back some 100 years to support his argument. He will see if he reads Hansard that we, on my side of the House, do not oppose metric conversion, per se, but we do oppose metric conversion as it affects the farmer of western Canada.

An hon. Member: We oppose conversion without consultation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is why I say the hon. member's speech was all distortion.

Mr. Neil: Obviously, he has not been to western Canada and neither he nor other members on his side have talked to farmers; otherwise, he would have heard what the farmers had to say and we would not be here tonight debating this bill. Because I suggest the government would have withdrawn the offending clauses of the bill.

I have lost count of how many times I have spoken in this House on the metric system and on this metric bill, but it is important to each and every individual residing on the prairies. They are concerned about acres, quarter sections, half sections and sections. When the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was speaking, the minister responsible for piloting this bill through the House asked "What's an acre?". I could not understand what he meant when he said that.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) a very open kind of question. If you read Webster's dictionary and look at the definition of an acre, you will see that an acre is really 43,560 feet. It started out as the amount of land a person could plough in a day with a team of oxen.

Mr. Neil: That is very interesting.

Metric System

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. The minister is talking about the amount of land a person can plough. If he reads the book on western Canada written by Mr. Toms, Q.C. in 1912, he will find out how an acre, quarter section, section, township and county were devised. If he wants to be illiterate, that is his privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It seems that the point of order was more a point of clarification and is now becoming a point of disagreement. We will come back to the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the clarification given by the minister as to what is an acre, the amount of land that a man can plough in one day with two oxen. However, I would point out that oxen have not been used in the west for many years. We have tractors now. May I call it 10.30, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 10.30, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF ALLEGED OVERSTATEMENT OF REVENUES ON PROFIT POSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: The latest convert is taking his seat!

Mr. Mazankowski: We can only hope that the hon. member will find similar support from the Liberal Association of Hochelaga.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Some of that applause came from your leader.

Mr. Mazankowski: I guess that's right and it did come from my leader. And I am very proud of him, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A rat going to a sinking ship.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the latest annual report of the CNR which states that Canadian National earned its first overall profit in 20 years in 1976, and in view of the allegation that CNR has made a miscalculation of more than $20 million in the determination of its subsidies to be received from the Canadian Transport Commission under the provisions of the Railway Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Transport make a statement on motions to confirm and explain this discrepancy and, furthermore, to state what impact, if any, the over-calculation of revenues will have on the CNR's 1976 and 1977 revenue and profit status.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be presented. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO IMPROVE SITUATION OF WORKING POOR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of urgency I ask consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House, noting the findings of the National Council of Welfare in two reports issued this month that over half a million Canadian families, including more than one and a half million persons, are trying to live on incomes from employment that are hundreds or thousands of dollars below the poverty line, and noting the Council's declaration that "the working poor have been ignored too long", calls on the government to introduce without further delay (a) a guaranteed annual income program, (b) other measures to meet the needs of the working poor, and (c) a substantial improvement in the Canada Pension Plan to guarantee to every worker a secure retirement, as urgently recommended by the National Council of Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the presentation for debate of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

COMMUNICATIONS

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT OF ONTARIO COMMISSION ON VIOLENCE IN COMMUNICATIONS INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Today the Ontario royal commission on violence in the communications industry released its findings, the principal one being that there was, according to the commissioner, a direct link between the increase in violent crime on the streets and violence on television. In view of the fact that most of the recommendations of the commissioner are addressed to the government of Canada and are in fact within federal jurisdiction, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

Garrison Diversion

That the report of the Ontario royal commission on violence in the communications industry be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate under Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOMMENDED OBSERVANCE OF PROVISIONS OF HELSINKI AGREEMENT AND OTHER COVENANTS ON HUMAN RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 seeking unanimous consent on an urgent and pressing matter. In view of the opening today of the Belgrade conference on the Helsinki Final Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis):

That this House urges the signatory countries to faithfully observe human rights and related international covenants and expresses the concern of Canadians at repression and persecution of peoples seeking to enjoy fundamental freedoms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: According to Standing Order 43 presentation for debate of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REQUEST THAT UNITED STATES IMPOSE MORATORIUM ON GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the fact that yesterday the United States house of representatives ignored the first report of the International Joint Commission on the Garrison diversion project when they gave approval to an appropriations bill which included $18.6 million for the Garrison diversion project, including money for the Lonetree reservoir whose waters will have a serious effect on Manitoba: that this bill was approved even though the report of the International Joint Commission has not been completed; and in light of the fact that President Carter supports the Canadian position. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

[Mr. McGrath.]

That this House instruct the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make strong representations to the government of the United States to put an immediate moratorium on the Garrison diversion project until the International Joint Commission report is complete, and that he respectfully request President Carter to veto funds for the project.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO WHEREABOUTS OF FIVE DRAGONS—POSSIBLE RETENTION OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS UPON RETURN TO CANADA

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my questions are again on the subject on which the government refuses to have an inquiry and relate to the means for meeting the threat posed by organized crime in Canada. My first question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since the individuals referred to as the Five Dragons enjoy status as landed immigrants in Canada, can the Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell the House whether the minister or the department knows the present exact whereabouts of the Five Dragons; and can he confirm that one or more of them have left the country?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, adopting the nomenclature of the Leader of the Opposition, our information on the Five Dragons is that four of them are not in the country and are believed to be probably in Taiwan. I might say that with regard to the allegations of corruption in Hong Kong a commission was in fact set up in 1974. Two of these five individuals came to Canada in 1967, two in 1968 and one in 1973, prior to the allegations of corruption in the police force.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the minister has confirmed that at least four of these individuals are now out of the country. Is it the intention of the government, if they return to this country, that they will retain their landed immigrant status?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, under the law of the land, as it presently exists, an individual establishes a domicile or a landed immigrant status. One of the "Perqs" that goes with this is that he has the right to move inside and outside the country. This is a matter we expect to be looking at on an individual basis. We have set up the immigration lookout system, and we will have to predetermine what action, if any, we can take against these individuals.

I see the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is laughing. We have the laws of the land and we say to people—

Miss MacDonald: We are laughing at you.

Mr. Cullen: —if you take out landed immigrant status and establish a domicile in Canada, you have certain "Perqs" rights, and privileges which the laws of the land allow.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just answer the question.

Mr. Cullen: If you do not want to follow those laws but be selective, well and good.

Mr. Clark: Will the minister now tell us whether that privilege of landed immigrant status will be maintained for these individuals who are now out of the country, if they come back to this country? Yes or no?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Will it or will it not be?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, we wonder if the hon. Leader of the Opposition wants one set of laws for one group of individuals—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just answer the question.

Mr. Cullen: We tell individuals, when they come to this country and make application for a landed immigrant status and get it, that there are certain protections which are afforded them. Those are universally applied across the board. I have said to the hon. member that we will look at the situation if they try to get back as to what action, if any, can be taken against them. It should be pointed out for the benefit of hundreds of thousands of landed immigrants that once they get that status in Canada they receive the protection of the laws of this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is precisely to ensure some security and peace of mind among the thousands of Canadians with that status and the thousands of Canadians of the Chinese and Italian communities in Canada that we want to have a public inquiry which will identify and prosecute those individuals who are guilty of wrongdoing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSSIBILITY OF CRIMINAL CHARGES AGAINST FIVE DRAGONS PRIOR TO GRANTING OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The minister has been very careful in his answers relative to the status of the members of the group known as Five Dragons when they came to Canada. Yesterday he said that they had not been convicted of any crime when they were admitted to Canada. Today he said that one commission was not put into place until after the admission into this country of the Five Dragons. I would like to know from the minister whether there was any charge from any commission in Hong Kong or any public suspicion of illegal activity against any of these individuals, at the time they were granted admission to this country, and if so, why were they granted that admission under those circumstances?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, four of the five individuals came into this country in 1967-68 long before any allegations of illegality and corruption were made. The usual checks were made. The usual questions were asked as to criminal activity and the usual background information was secured. They had not been charged with any offence, nor were any charges pending, and they qualified under the landed immigrant point system which was in place at that time. It is great for the hon. member to have the value of hindsight, but I would ask him how he would have dealt with the situation seven or eight years ago.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, is the minister telling us that there were no charges or no allegations of any kind against any of these individuals, at the time they were admitted into Canada? Is that what he is telling us?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member is talking about charges, charges pending or innuendo.

Mr. Hees: Charges.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just like in law school.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. Leader of the Opposition supposedly asked a serious question. I do not know why his members will not wait for the answer instead of all the cat-calls. I have indicated to the hon. member that there were no charges pending and that these individuals had not committed any offence. If he is referring to allegations or innuendos which might have arisen, those would have been checked out. The information we have is that they applied in 1967-68—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Were there any charges?

Mr. Cullen: —and these individuals got landed immigrant status under the point system quite legitimately.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POLICEMEN WHO FLED HONG KONG

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I remind the House that the matter I originally raised in February, 1976 concerned 12 policemen who fled from Hong Kong, not only the Five Dragons. Since the Solicitor General was unable to answer my question yesterday—in all fairness he was not Solicitor General in 1976—I ask the Minister of Justice who, in his response yesterday, acknowledged the existence of a report from his department which he did not have in front of him, if he has now a chance to review that report, and has he a report to make to the House?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, not further to what I said yesterday—

Mr. Hees: What have you been doing in the last 24 hours?

Mr. Basford: —which was a paraphrase of the report I had at that time, saying there were in Canada a number of ex-Hong Kong policemen who apparently had received in the normal way landed immigrant status—

Mr. Epp: What do you mean by "normal way"?

Mr. Basford: —that some were subsequently named in a royal commission in Hong Kong relating to corruption in the police force; that we at that time had not received but expected to receive applications for extradition, one of which has been received. We fully co-operated in the process of that extradition.

ORGANIZED CRIME—REASON FOR DESIRING NEW WIRETAPPING PROVISIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished that the minister, considering the seriousness of the subject before the House, would not have wanted to refer to his report instead of relying on his recollection as he did yesterday. Yesterday he talked of the necessity of having the new provisions of Bill C-51 passed. Why does the Minister of Justice feel the new provisions of Bill C-51 are so necessary, when it is obvious the police were able to obtain all the information aired on the CBC program under existing legislation, thus showing that we do not need wider powers for wiretapping but better enforcement of existing laws?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member obviously and genuinely misunderstood my reply. Yesterday I did not have the report to which he referred. I have since read the report to which I referred; my recollection of that report was correct and therefore I really have nothing to add today. With regard to his question, it has been made clear that most of the evidence the CBC used in its program was obtained from testimony and evidence put before the Quebec crime inquiry. Most of it was electronic evidence, wiretap evidence, and most of it was obtained before we had laws in this country prohibiting wiretapping. That is why the CBC was able to have that public information, most of which was obtained by wiretap and much of which would not be authorized today.

[Mr. Clarke.]

KNOWLEDGE OF RCMP LIAISON OFFICER IN HONG KONG OF ALLEGATIONS AGAINST FIVE DRAGONS PRIOR TO ENTRY INTO CANADA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration? I remind him we are not asking if the laws of the land have been broken; we are asking if our laws or officials were subverted by people coming into this country. The minister said yesterday and today that allegations against the Five Dragons, and possibly others, had been made and officials were aware of those allegations. My question specifically concerns the RCMP liaison officer posted in Hong Kong. Is the minister saying today that the RCMP liaison officer in Hong Kong was not aware of allegations against the Five Dragons before any of them came to Canada?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can hardly expect me to comment on what may or may not have been in the mind of the RCMP's liaison officer in Hong Kong, but I would say this: Those individuals were admitted under our standard procedures for admitting individuals to Canada. They had gone through the points system; they had in fact been successful, and they were landed immigrants. If there was anything of that nature in the knowledge of the RCMP officer, I would assume that the RCMP officer would have brought that to the attention of our immigration officer.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO ACT AGAINST ONE OF FIVE DRAGONS UNDER SECTION 18(5)(K) OF ACT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): In view of the minister's answer, I trust he will now check with regard to the information that any RCMP liaison officer in Hong Kong may have had and also check whether that information was passed on to any member of our Canadian immigration service and will provide us with an answer at a later date.

The minister, in answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, indicated that the last person came in in 1973. That is within a period of five years, and under section 18(5)(k), five years is the period set forth which should not have elapsed in terms of the disallowance of persons coming into this country who are likely to have committed some offence, particularly under the Narcotics Control Act. I will not quote the whole section, but I would like the minister to say why no action was taken under that section of the Immigration Act since the minister has clearly admitted in the House today that at least one of the Five Dragons came in within the last five years.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have to check the specific reference. My information is that the individual Hon Kwing Shum is the one currently residing in Canada. He was the one who landed in 1973. I will check out his particular status—I do not have it in the report, or at least I cannot find it in the report—but I will check it out in keeping with the hon. member's question.

POSSIBILITY OF INTERCESSION BY BANKS ON BEHALF OF FIVE DRAGONS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): The China Post of Hong Kong has indicated that the net worth of Lui Luk, one of the Five Dragons, is some $500 million. I wonder if the minister could advise us, in view of the fact that he has now had an opportunity to examine the record, to examine the circumstances, whether any banking official in Canada or any other place interceded on behalf of any of the Five Dragons to encourage their immigration to this country?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): If they were bringing in that kind of money, one has to be a little wary about allegations made in the press. The information I have is that the Five Dragons—to use the phraseology we are using here—who were admitted as immigrants revealed that their declared assets ranged from $53,000 to $341,000, hardly the millions referred to by the CBC or in the newspaper article.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO PROTECT CHICKEN PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, during the question period, I advised the Minister of Finance of the serious concern of the Canadian poultry producers about the massive poultry imports into Canada from the United States. In his reply, the minister said this, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, I take the question as notice for my colleague and I will ask him to answer the hon. member.

In view of the seriousness of the matter, although only 24 hours have elapsed since then, as transportation is very swift and trucks are coming in fully loaded causing the producers even greater alarm today, can the minister tell the House whether in fact he has advised his colleague of the situation, and can he tell the House today what steps will be taken to improve the lot of poultry producers and also to protect their industry?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the Minister of Agriculture is aware of the situation and I believe he will be in a position to make a statement on the matter within a few days.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture who was in the House just a few moments ago. Since he is absent from the House now, with your permission, may I be given the floor before the end of the question period, in order to put to him that most important question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by my colleagues that the Minister of Agriculture made his statement last night.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED MONITORING OF FUNDS TRANSFERRED TO OR FROM CANADA TO IDENTIFY MONEY FROM ORGANIZED CRIMINALS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance with reference to some of the increasing activities of organized crime. Without getting into currency control in the usually accepted definition, has the minister considered exploring the feasability of some sort of monitoring of funds which may be transferred to or from our country with the object of attempting to identify underworld or mob money which may be transferred for the purposes of laundering or investment in illicit enterprises? I think the minister would agree that even with our deficit position we do not want that kind of foreign investment, even if Lui Luk does have $500 million.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say to the hon. gentleman that I appreciate his bringing to my attention his intention to ask this question. I agree with the final statement the hon. gentleman has made. Without having had an opportunity to consider this very much further I think the real risk would be that we would have to monitor all private transactions and all private transfers of capital between Canada and other countries for the purpose of securing this information. As the hon. member knows, the government has not involved itself in investigating the capital transactions of all Canadians or of all persons bringing money into this country. I think that the impact on the private sector of attempting to do this would require some very careful consideration, even though the purpose the hon. gentleman suggests is a laudible one.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, and I am wondering if he would consider the feasability of consulting some financial institutions to seek their co-operation, on a voluntary basis, in attempting to be extremely vigilant, and perhaps in reporting any attempts that they could discern in order to frustrate or to foil transfers of underworld funds which it might be considered are coming in for this purpose. Could the minister give us that undertaking?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would be prepared to consider that.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER ASKED TO CHECK BACKGROUND OF FIVE DRAGONS AFTER MAY 7, 1976

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and refer to a letter from the Minister of Justice to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra dated May 7, 1976 in which the minister indicates that "There is not any evidence of criminal offences committed in Canada" by the so-called Five Dragons. After the minister wrote that letter was the Minister of Manpower and Immigration asked to check further into the background of the Five Dragons, especially in view of the fact that they had been given landed immigrant status and under the terms of the Immigration Act landed immigrant status can be withdrawn if persons are engaged in criminal activity or might be engaged in criminal activity?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not quite follow the hon. member's question. Did he indicate that a letter was sent by the former minister of justice to the former minister of manpower and immigration?

Mr. Epp: The present Minister of Justice.

Mr. Cullen: Perhaps the hon. member can repeat his question so that I can get it straight.

Mr. Epp: In a letter dated May 7, 1976 the present Minister of Justice indicated to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra that, and I quote: "There is not any evidence of criminal offences committed in Canada." He was referring to the Five Dragons. After the Minister of Justice wrote to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was the Minister of Manpower and Immigration asked to do a further check on the background of the Five Dragons, especially in view of the fact that they had landed immigrant status and under the terms of the Immigration Act the minister has the power to withdraw that status if persons are known to engage in criminal activity?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I would want to check on the details of that, but I believe that the information given at that time by the Minister of Justice was probably furnished by the minister of manpower and immigration of the day, in other words, prior to the information being given to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. However, I would have to check that out. I do not have information on that today.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST DEPARTMENTAL PERSONNEL— REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, that is astounding because this matter was raised yesterday. The minister has had another 24 hours, and he again says he will check. In view of the allegations which have been made, namely, that individual members of the Department of Manpower and Immigration had been subverted by persons who wanted to get other persons into Canada, and in view of the minister's undertaking yesterday, has he carried out an investigation in his department, has he questioned persons whose names were mentioned as having involvement with criminals, and what is the evidence he can now give to this House?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is playing pretty freely with the word "allegation" when referring to individuals in the department being subverted. One person I remember being mentioned was an officer of the PM-2 category. In any event, the way these individuals came, as I understand it, that person would have had nothing to do with their applications for landed immigrant status because all that would have been handled abroad. That officer would not have been in a position to do anything in so far as applications were concerned. However, needless to say when allegations of this nature are made, we conduct investigations, but we could not in the first instance determine that the individual named had done anything or had been in a position to do anything to aid those five individuals.

ALLEGATIONS OF INFILTRATION BY ORGANIZED CRIMINALS— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the very serious allegations raised in the CBC documentary on Monday night regarding the infiltration of the RCMP by organized criminal elements and allegations of potential collusion in the drug trafficking trade on the west coast, and in view of the responsibility of the Solicitor General to protect the integrity and the good name of the RCMP, of which all Canadians are justly proud, will the Solicitor General take advantage of the question period today to state precisely what he intends to do about this? Has he ordered an investigation? Has he ordered a transcript of the program and had consultations with the producers?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether the hon. member was in the House yesterday, but I tried to deal with the matter he is raising, which I think is a very important matter. As a matter of fact, while I tried to explain the allegations against members of the RCMP, some of the hon. member's colleagues tried to drown me out to prevent me from trying to address the allegations that had been made. If the hon. member would care to read the answer I gave to the questions yesterday, he would see that one of the RCMP members against whom allegations were made is still a very valued member of the RCMP drug squad in Vancouver. However, apparently the CBC decided to believe the innuendoes and accusations brought against this member by members of the underworld in Vancouver rather than the version the officers of the force gave.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the minister yesterday, and he did not deal with this question. In view of these serious allegations regarding possible collusion with criminal elements in drug trafficking on the west coast and possible infiltration of the RCMP, does the minister intend as Solicitor General to conduct an investigation into these very serious charges to clear the good name of the RCMP?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House feel that there is no need to clear the good name of the RCMP because the RCMP has a good name.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fox: The RCMP is extremely concerned—as any other police force would be—about the possibility of infiltration, and any allegations to that effect are indeed investigated very seriously by the force. However, up to now the RCMP has been unable to substantiate, following its own internal investigations, any allegations made against members of the force.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General, on his own initiative, prepared to contact the producers of that CBC program to ask them to produce any evidence they may have to substantiate these allegations?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the RCMP that the producers of the program were indeed interviewed by some members of the RCMP. They were asked to indicate the sources of these allegations. It turned out that the sources they had were apparently the same sources that the RCMP had investigated following allegations which had been made, once again by underworld elements in the Vancouver city area, in an obvious effort to discredit the force. After the explanation that the RCMP gave to the producers of the CBC, my information is that the CBC decided to produce the show notwithstanding.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

ALLEGEDLY EXCESSIVE SALARY INCREASES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CURTAIL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns rough justice. Is the minister aware that in 1976, according to the American Securities and Exchange Commission, 51 Canadian executives representing more than 25 companies received salary increases of up to $60,000 and as high as 70 per cent over the previous year in the controls program? If he is aware of these totally unfair increases for the rich at a time when the more than 1½ million Canadians living at the poverty level are restricted to the $2,400 increase, can he tell the House if he has ordered immediate rollbacks?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has not realized this was the subject matter of discussion in the House some weeks ago at which time I indicated I had contacted the Anti-Inflation Board and the board had indicated in a number of cases the increases were related to averaging in the executive group and in other cases to contracts which had been entered into prior to the imposition of the anti-inflation program. As the hon. member knows, contracts which preceded the program are not covered by the regulations. I have, however, indicated—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Apparently the hon. member's colleagues are reluctant to hear a response. I have indicated to the board that given the amount of the increases it would be desirable for the board to re-examine the rules upon which it considered these particular increases in the light of the restraints imposed upon others in the community.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. I was listening to the response and indeed wished I had not heard what I did. The cases I have just referred to the minister are not the ones that were raised in the House some weeks ago. This is a new set of executives who are getting salary increases in the neighbourhood of $60,000. It is not the same case list. I should like to ask the minister if the government, in its profound concern with rough justice, discovers that Canadians can get $60,000 increases while those at the poverty level get much less under the controls program, will it take immediate action to change the regulations so that the rich can operate with the same set of rules as the poor?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I really have responded to the question already. I point out to the hon. gentleman that we have asked the board to re-examine these particular increases. I must say I find it a little surprising to hear this coming from the hon. gentleman who has advocated the total removal of controls.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows very well that we would like to get rid of the controls program precisely because of these inequities in salary arrangements that give one set of increases to the rich and another to the poor. Short of total removal of this program, which we would like to see, would the minister at least correct this obvious and glaring injustice so that everyone in Canada will be held down to the $2,400 per year increase as long as one Canadian is held down to that level?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have already said twice to the hon. gentleman that that is exactly what we have asked the board to consider.

COMMUNICATIONS

METHODS TO BE ADOPTED TO PROTECT FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications.

If need be, what specific means does the minister intend to use to reaffirm and prove clearly the intention of her department to comply with the legislation and the determination of this government to encourage the freedom of speech in Canada?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member refers to the discussions that were held last weekend concerning Bill C-43. I must say that anybody reading carefully Bill C-43 can in no way construe it as a threat to the freedom of speech. As a matter of fact, this is the conclusion expressed by one of the experts invited to attend the Vigilance Day who is the vice-dean of the law faculty at the University of Montreal.

The parts of the bill which are questioned here are clauses 4(2) and 5(2): These clauses are intended to provide that the law does apply to the authority of the federal Parliament, and that the practice of exempting federal departments and provinces from paying for the costs involved in the operation of the microwave system is indeed maintained. That is the reason for these two clauses. Clauses 4(2) and 5(2) cannot be read without taking into consideration clause 9(2) which says very precisely and clearly that no provision in this legislation—none is none—can encroach upon the freedom of speech, among other things.

IMMIGRATION

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS REGARDING POSSIBILITY OF CRIMINAL CHARGES AGAINST FIVE DRAGONS PRIOR TO GRANTING LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I should like to refer to a reply he gave to an earlier question in which he stated that to his knowledge there were no charges pending against certain individuals from Hong Kong who were earlier granted landed immigrant status. I refer as well to a response given by the Minister of Justice yesterday reported at page 6646 of Hansard in which he said:

However, as I recall it, those individuals that were mentioned were legally landed knowing that there were royal commissions under way in Hong Kong which might result in reports being made against some of them—

I should like to ask the minister how he reconciles his statement today with what the Minister of Justice said yesterday. Is he or his department in the habit of granting landed immigrant status to individuals who were under investigation by a royal commission in another country?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I gave the House the dates involved. Two of the four individuals entered in 1967 and another two in 1968 with the fifth arriving in 1973. That is a matter of record, and the particular commission was set up to look into corruption in 1974.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister consulted with his colleague the Minister of Justice to find out which individuals that minister referred to when he said that certain individuals were admitted knowing a royal commission was underway which might result in their being named? Has he consulted with the Minister of Justice as to whom he was referring?

Mr. Cullen: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGATION PREMATURE DISCLOSURE OF FACTS ABOUT ORGANIZED CRIME DESTROYED CASE AGAINST INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It relates to the allegation he made outside the House yesterday that the premature disclosure of certain allegations or perhaps even certain evidence regarding some individuals allegedly involved in organized crime in this country and the buildup of the police case against these individuals, was absolutely destroyed because of that premature disclosure. So that we can properly evaluate the minister's charge and because it is all hanging out anyway, would he be good enough to detail for us what that evidence was, who the individuals were and what the charges were about?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member cares to remain for the rest of the afternoon, I understand there is a motion to be put forward by the opposition concerning the establishment of a royal coommission inquiry into crime in Canada. I will be speaking during the course of that debate when I will make my views known to the House in complete detail, far more completely than I could at this moment.

ALLEGATION TORONTO WORLD CENTRE FOR PRODUCTION OF ILLICIT NARCOTICS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Can the minister provide any information to the House about the allegation made by the CBC of illegal production of narcotics in Toronto or indeed any other Canadian cities? In particular can he confirm that Toronto is a world centre for production of illicit drugs?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that much of the CBC documentary was based on successful police investigations. Of course, if I look at what the RCMP has been doing either independently or in joint force operations over the past three years, I find there have been more than 22 illicit laboratories closed in that period by the RCMP, some of which were in the Toronto area.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question. In view of the allegation made by the CBC documentary that Toronto is a world centre for production of illicit drugs, is the minister satisfied with the current controls over drug production for this country and if not, what legislative or administrative changes is he proposing, if any, to counteract the alleged illicit drug production activity?

● (1450)

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice dealt with this question at length in the past few days as to what the government's response has been to that problem. Bill C-51 is presently before the House. We hope that all hon. members will want to take their responsibility of helping the police gain additional methods, tools and techniques to combat organized crime and other facts of criminal activity in this country.

PERCENTAGE OF ILLICIT DRUG LABORATORIES CLOSED AS RESULT OF WIRETAPPING

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): In view of the minister's claim that the wiretapping bill is necessary, will he indicate what percentage of the 21 laboratories which were closed down were convicted because of wiretapping activities by the RCMP?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter I will be dealing with during the course of my statement. The hon. member for Calgary North has a number of times indicated there were only 13 convictions which resulted out of wiretappings in this country in 1976. That, as I pointed out in my speech on second reading of Bill C-51, is inaccurate and incomplete information. I hope to have the opportunity to set the record straight once again this afternoon. I hope the hon. member for Calgary North will pay some attention to the real statistics this time.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTANCE TO FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS IN QUEBEC—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

On June 7 last, the minister told me that he was willing to appoint one of his officials to deal especially with the furniture problem in the Bois-Franc area. Since then, the plants of Victoriaville Specialities Co. Limited, Victoriaville Upholstering Limited, Poly Design, Dubo meubles and Victoriaville Furniture Limited have systematically announced that their business would be closing before July 1. The minister having stated also that he was waiting for a report from the Quebec Furniture Manufacturers' Association, is he in a position to tell us now whether he has received that report and if he has some proposals to make to assist more particularly the furniture industry in Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that I would receive within ten days the report prepared by the officials of my department in co-operation with the Quebec Furniture Manufacturers' Association. As for the official to whom I referred, I am told that a departmental official is constantly in communication with the manufacturers' association and takes note of all demands.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Given the more than tragic situation faced by workers in those plants, could the minister ask his official to contact officials of the Bank Canadian National who are very concerned at the prospect of that plant and other related plants closing down, to review the situation of those plants?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I shall pass the hon. member's suggestion on to my officials.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT UNITED STATES IMPOSE MORATORIUM ON GARRISON DIVERSION PROJECT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact that the United States House of Representatives yesterday gave approval to an appropriations bill which included $18.6 million for the Garrison diversion project, including money for the Lonetree reservoir whose waters will have a serious effect on Manitoba, will the government urge the U.S. government to put an immediate moratorium on the Garrison diversion project until the report of the IJC is complete, and will the government respectfully request President Carter to veto funds for the Garrison project in light of his support for the Canadian position?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have already made the kind of representations the hon. member is now requesting. This has been done on several occasions. Our embassy in Washington is in constant touch with this and related questions. I am not sure that any new instruction is needed for them to state the Canadian position, which is quite unequivocal. In so far as a request to the President with regard to veto, I do not feel in the circumstances that it would be appropriate for us to advise the head of another government in that connection. However, I can report to the House that the information we have is that it is President Carter's intention to impose such a veto, but that is on the basis of his own judgment rather than any recent representations from us.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, the United States is ignoring our requests as well as the first report of the IJC, proceeding with more funds for the project which will affect Manitoba waters. Can the minister not make some kind of representation which will show that they are acting in very bad faith by alloting more funds at this time? They know this project will affect Manitoba waters.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to agree with the hon. member that our representations are being ignored. The House will recall that President Carter unequivocally withdrew the administration's support. As is often the case in the United States, Congress has moved to restore certain of those expenditures, not all of them. I repeat that the President's position remains what it was when he gave the information to our Prime Minister in February. While I would be very pleased to reiterate and call to the attention of the United States administration the position of the government of Canada, just as we in this House might very well be offended, I do not think it is appropriate for us to make representations to the United States Congress.

HELSINKI REVIEW CONFERENCE IN BELGRADE—SUGGESTION HUMAN RIGHTS BE ON AGENDA

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think all members will welcome the decision by the Commonwealth Prime Ministers to issue a denunciation of the breaches of human rights in Uganda.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanbury: On this first day of the Helsinki review conference in Belgrade, is it the intention of the government to insist that the agenda of this conference not be emasculated by any attempt to remove the discussion of progress or lack thereof in the field of human rights? In particular, will the government put before this conference the experience of Canada in the field of family reunification and family visits with special reference to the fact that some 2,000 Soviet citizens are still awaiting permission to leave that country simply to visit relatives in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and the House that our position will be, as I stated previously and reiterate now, to make the strongest possible representations at the Belgrade conference with regard to the issue of human rights as he has outlined them. I should recall for the House that the meeting beginning today is designed for agenda drafting. The substantive talks, of course, will not take place until September. In terms of the agenda, it is the instruction to the Canadian delegation now in Belgrade that ample room and time be afforded to the question of human rights.

QUALIFICATION ON LOAN TO PHILIPPINES THAT BREACH OF HUMAN RIGHTS EXISTED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On the basis of innovation with human rights, will the minister extend the congratulations of this House to the Canadian representative on the World Bank to put a qualification on a loan of money to the Philippines on the basis that a serious infraction of human rights existed in that country? Will Canada pursue this forthright policy in the future, equating human rights and whether we lend money and so on to various countries which are in breach of human rights?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of principle, I agree with the hon. member in terms of the repugnance we feel toward certain administrations. However, I wish to leave ourselves some manœuvrability when assistance of a financial nature is designed for the very poor people of a country as opposed to supporting the administration. In principle, I have no quarrel with that view.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a correction to yesterday's Hansard. It was brought to light by the question of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). It relates to my answer to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). I am recorded as saying:

● (1500)

I do not have the report in front of me. However, as I recall it, those individuals that were mentioned were legally landed knowing that there were royal commissions under way in Hong Kong which might result—

I do not recall my words in the House yesterday, but that clearly is wrong. Since the questions yesterday, as I have indicated to the member for Vancouver Quadra, I read the report I had at the time, and it is clear in my report and, I am sure, was clear yesterday in my answer that I said I do not have the report in front of me, but as I recall it, those individuals who were mentioned were legally landed. That is the report I had.

Later, however, in February, 1976—at the time the report was given to me and when I subsequently wrote to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra—it was known that there were royal commissions and inquiries going on in Hong Kong which could result in reports being made against some of them, and that those reports might lead to requests for extradition. This knowledge was in a report to me in February of 1976. As the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, (Mr. Cullen) has made clear, and as the report of 1976 made clear, they were legally landed.

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we simply cannot accept in this House a situation where on one day a minister of the Crown gives information or impressions which the next day he withdraws after questioning reveals that, whether advertently or not, the information given the first day under questioning was not correct. At the very least, this government, which changes its story on this matter from day to day, intends to continue to block an inquiry or royal commission. All the facts relating to the entry into Canada of the people known as the Five Dragons and others associated with them should be made available to the House both by tabling and through an opportunity for a special or standing committee to examine the officers and the ministers who were involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) sought, and was given, the floor on the basis of a notice sent to me in relation to a question of privilege. It turned out at the beginning to be a point of order relating to a correction to be made to yesterday's declaration, whether in fact it was a correction to Hansard or not. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has contributed to that point, and there is really no procedure by which I can hear the Minister of Justice on the same point without again allowing the Leader of the Opposition to speak, and going on indefinitely.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen).

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, may I answer the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) who asked about the status of an individual, Mr. Hon Shum. He was a landed immigrant in 1973—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Are we carrying on with the question period, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Cullen: Do you want clarification, or not?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Make a statement on motions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Without the consent of the House there is no opportunity for a minister to expand on an answer he gave in the question period. If the minister desires to do so now, he will require unanimous consent. Is the House prepared to give its consent to hear an expanded answer from the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cullen: I was not seeking to expand on my answer, Mr. Speaker. However, I had indicated to the hon. member that I did not have the information to hand, whereas as a matter of fact I have. The individual in question, Mr. Shum, was landed in 1973 and an attempt to extradite him failed on a legal technicality. I understand an appeal is pending at the present time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. REYNOLDS—REMARKS ON CBC TELEVISION PROGRAM

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege involving my reputation as a member of this House.

Members will have seen or heard about the program on CBC television on Sunday and Monday nights which accused me of consorting with and acting on behalf of underworld figures in Vancouver. This accusation is totally false and I join with other members on both sides of the House who were grossly slandered, or whose words were twisted and edited beyond recognition, in expressing revulsion that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should feel it part of its mandate to deliberately lie to its viewers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: The CBC insinuated that I was a close acquaintance of people that I knew to be underworld figures. This is completely untrue. My dealings with these men were limited to the response a member of parliament normally makes to people who seek his help. Like all members, I reply daily to dozens of phone messages and letters. I do not have the resources to investigate all the people I talk to on the phone, or write to, or meet. Nor have I any way of knowing the background of everyone who owns a restaurant in which I sometimes eat, or a business I would visit. How many members of parliament can say they do, Mr. Speaker? It is unreasonable to think that an MP can have complete information on the connections of casual acquaintances.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a full-time member of parliament for five years. I have worked extremely hard and have always had an open-door policy for anyone who wanted to see me. I am proud of that record.

The CBC accused me of either corruption or naivety. I must remind the House that I could hardly have been stronger in my requests for action to combat the criminal elements in Canadian society. I am not about to totally reverse the main purpose of my political career and start acting on their half. The CBC has advanced nothing more than a sly, cut-up version of film clips to suggest otherwise. The help sought by Mr. Cala is the same as that sought daily by hundreds of constituents of all members, and my response was even less helpful than most would give. I told him I had no idea where the Mackenzie Valley pipeline would be built and advised him to call another MP and an oil lobbying person. I could not even give him an educated guess.

I would like to point out in passing that the House dealt with this problem once before, when the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) was accused of having violated budget secrecy with respect to motor boat taxes. I ask hon. members to recall that the Montreal Gazette was criticized by a committee of this House for totally misrepresenting the hon. member's actions.

As to the suggestion that I am naive, I feel that if there is naivety anywhere, it was on the part of the gentlemen who contacted me and who seemed to believe that an opposition MP would have full and useful knowledge of a pipeline route 20 months before a decision was due to be made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I think the House should know how this libellous concoction was put together. First, I was approached for an interview about the subcommittee on penitentiaries by Dubro and MacAdam. If I looked surprised when asked about Joe Gentile, it was because the interviewer suddenly started asking about a topic that did not arise out of anything previously discussed. In the program my answers were rearranged to convey as damaging an impression as possible.

On realizing, after the interview—which took place at my home—the nature of the hatchet job which was being prepared, I went to my next meeting with Mr. Jim Dubro and Mr. Bill MacAdam, the producer, at a Toronto hotel with my lawyer in attendance. This meeting was held on June 9 at the Chelsea Inn and had been agreed to at the time of our first interview. We discussed a number of points which I felt showed a lot of the CBC information to be erroneous and slanted for the benefit of some of those who would like to see my career and reputation ruined.

It was quite obvious to the CBC people that the reason my lawyer was there was to ensure I had every opportunity to make sure my point of view was heard, and also that if the program on the weekend was to include this erroneous information, we would seek an injunction in a court of law, as would have been my legal right. We were assured, Mr. Speaker, by these two gentlemen that the weekend program had nothing to do with me and in fact they had arranged a meeting tentatively for today so that we could follow up this story even further.

● (1510)

By lying to me in such a facile manner, the CBC deprived me of my legal right to challenge their intention to air the segments slandering me. I believe this was a despicable and dishonourable way for the CBC to act—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reynolds: —and I intend to take legal action. My lawyer in Vancouver, Mr. Allan McEachern—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reynolds: —has already served a writ today. To clarify matters, Mr. Speaker, he is no relation of my hon. friend on the other side. To any who may wonder why no legal action was taken until today, I would draw their attention to the British Columbia libel and slander act which suggests that one clear day after the offence should lapse before commencement of any action.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this program impugns my integrity as a member of parliament and is entirely within the ambit of privilege as defined by Beauchesne, particularly citations 110 and 111(h). However, I also know that British practice tends to hold that a remedy through the courts should be sought if one is available, and I believe that is the most appropriate course of action in this case. Therefore, I will not move a motion but I will see the gentlemen from the CBC in court.

Everyone here believes in freedom of the press, Mr. Speaker, but surely that is defined as the right to publicize or broadcast the truth. By that definition, the CBC's presentation was a hypocritical and untruthful exercise in character assassination. I will not stand for it, and neither would any other member of this House. I hope the CBC pays as much attention to the proceedings in court and to this statement as it has to its own libellous fabrications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That being what I presume, from my own rough count, is the last contribution to this fascinating subject, I would now propose to carry this matter under study for a few days, probably until Monday or Tuesday, before attempting to make a final pronouncement on it.

[Mr. Reynolds.]

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1977

MEASURE RESPECTING REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-424, respecting representation in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to maintain membership in the House of Commons at approximately its present level until the population of Canada exceeds 50 million. At present, the base figure for Quebec of 75 increases by four members with each successive readjustment, at roughly ten-year intervals, and the total number of members for all provinces increases correspondingly without regard to the actual increase in population. The proposed amendment would freeze the base figure at its present 75, and the total representation at approximately 282.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PERIOD OF ASSESSMENT AND REFUND UNDER EXCISE TAX ACT

Question No. 1,006—Mr. Howie:

What is the period of (a) assessment (b) refund under the Excise Tax Act and is consideration being given to a uniform three year limit in each case?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned: (a) The Excise Tax Act places no limitation on the time period of the taxpayer's operation which may be subject to assessment. (b) Prior to the Budget of March 31, 1977, the general refund provisions required an applicant to file his written application for tax refund within two years from the time the refund first became payable. It was proposed in the Budget that the period within which a person may apply to recover tax by way of refund, deduction or other payment be extended from two years to four years in the general refund provisions of the Excise Tax Act. This extension will apply to all applications, other than those which have expired on or before March 31, 1977.

In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned: Amendments to the Excise Tax Act will be considered during the continuing review of matters related to the federal sales tax. If a decision is taken to impose time limits in the case of assessments, or to further adjust the time limits applicable to refunds, the government will announce its intentions in the usual budgetary context.

GOVERNMENT REVENUE—PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,481—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How much did the government obtain from the petroleum industry through all revenue sources including corporation taxes, sales tax, excise taxes, etc. in 1975 and what has been anticipated for 1976?

2. How much of the revenue was paid out in compensation to eastern refiners?

3. For each of the same years, what amounts were invested by the government in (a) conventional exploration (b) synthetic investments (c) other energy?

4. How much of the total revenue for 1975 and 1976 went toward general revenue?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In so far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: 1. Export charge collections for 1975 were $1,166 million, and estimates for 1976 are $716 million. Gasoline excise tax revenues were $233.3 million in 1975 and an estimated $550 million for 1976. No accurate figures for income tax collections are available for this industry alone, but the mineral fuels industry, which includes coal, as well as oil and gas, provided for $634 million in 1975 and $490 million for the first three quarters of 1976. These figures include provincial income taxes amounting to perhaps one quarter of the total.

2. Compensation payments were $1,450 million in 1975 and $967 million in 1976.

3. (a) Conventional exploration expenditures by the government through Panarctic and Petro-Canada, were $18 million in 1975 and $41 million in 1976. (b) Synthetic investments were $58 million in 1975 and $87 million in 1976. (c) As for investments in other energy, many of the research expenditures of the department and other agencies could be so classified. Perhaps the largest item is Atomic Energy of Canada's Nuclear Research and Utilization program, which was voted $86 million in fiscal 1975-76 and $102 million in fiscal 1976-77.

4. All revenue, as is the case of taxes collected from any industry, are of course, treated as general revenue, and as such are available for other programs such as equalization. Federal equalization payments attributable to provincial oil and gas revenues amounted to $448 million in fiscal 1975-76 and $484 million in fiscal 1976-77.

COMMEMORATIONS OF TREATIES 6 AND 7 (ALBERTA)

Question No. 1,506—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How much money did the government provide in the form of grants to assist the Commemorations of Treaties 6 and 7 in Alberta from July, 1976?

2. How many (a) government employees (b) other persons attended the Commemorations at the expense of the government and, in each case, what was the cost?

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development provided a total of $120,000 in the form of contributions for these commemorations.

2. (a) Eight officials attended the commemoration of the signing of Treaty 6 in Saddle Lake, Alberta last summer at a total cost of $5,922.77. Of this amount, $4,747.24 was incurred by the officer responsible for co-ordinating the Treaty centennial celebration and includes all travel pertaining to centennial events. Several of the other officers who attended were in the Saddle Lake area for other business and the cost of their attendance at the commemoration was minimal. (b) The Department has no knowledge of any other persons who attended the Commemorations at the expense of the government.

PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES—DIAND

Question No. 1,539—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the Department in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1.

COST OF ENERGY

Question No. 1,555—Mr. Marshall:

Has the government received a request from the Province of Newfoundland for assistance to reduce the cost of energy and, if so, what are the details?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: A request for assistance has been received based on the Province of Newfoundland's assessment of its need for a support programme directed towards reducing the cost of energy in that province. Since the request is still being assessed, details cannot be made available.

SHORT TERM PROGRAMME TO MAKE PUBLIC AWARE OF NEED FOR ENERGY CONSERVATION

Question No. 2,310—Mr. Fortin:

Does the government have a short term programme to make the public aware of the need for energy conservation and (a) if so, what is it (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: Since its inception, the Office of Energy Conservation has had, and still has, a comprehensive information programme with annual budgets of $760,000, $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 for the fiscal years 1974-75, 1975-76, 1976-77 respectively, to make the public aware of the need to conserve Canada's non-renewable resources. The awareness programme has been heightened by publications (eg. 100 Ways to Save Energy and Money in the Home, the Billpayers Guide to Furnace Servicing, Keeping the Heat In, etc . . .) selective radio, television and newspaper advertisements and educational aids for teachers and public meetings. One of the most visible parts of the programme has been the mobile information project which has run in parts of Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and presently in New Brunswick. Under this arrangement, two qualified representatives from E. M. & R. meet with citizens groups, associations, elementary and secondary schools to discuss the issues of the energy situation in Canada and how all Canadians can and must conserve our precious resources. Films, slide shows and publications are the media utilized in presentations.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved:

That this House calls on the government to establish forthwith a royal commission on organized crime in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the last time this House had the opportunity to debate this matter in this kind of detail was November 12, 1974. The motion at that time was put down by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who made a very eloquent plea for some changes in our law in terms of this insidious and growing force in Canadian society—organized crime. We have indicated before, and I want to indicate now, that this party congratulates the CBC on a hard-hitting and tough journalistic exercise. In my view, if we had more programs like this presentation of the CBC, we would not only have a higher listening audience but we would have better co-operation from ordinary members of the public in getting at the problem of organized crime, which starts at the street level.

● (1520)

This House should issue very high congratulations to the CBC. I have a caveat to say about those congratulations. As I indicated, the last time the House debated this motion the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe was the person who put it on the order paper. As a viewer, it did seem to me unfair that the insinuation and the innuendo implicated three members of parliament. Those members of parliament will have an opportunity to answer in the courts, but I hope they will answer in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, right here in the House, so that there will be a full and open inquiry into these matters. There was certainly an insinuation in the program concerning those members and I hope they welcome a full and open inquiry into the political area.

Surely we have missed the main point, and that is the reason a royal commission is so necessary. The royal commission should not be limited to the rules of this House, but should go into the question of organized crime and how far it has insinuated its tentacles into the political, business and union life of Canada. That is what we need to find out.

An hon. Member: And the police force.

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, and the police force, if it is there. I see the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) is shrugging his shoulders and indicating that it is not there. I am sure he will stand up and say that it is not there.

Mr. Fox: I cannot believe it.

Mr. Leggatt: I am sure he will get up and apologize for the RCMP, as he has done since the time he attained his portfolio. His job is not to apologize for the RCMP. His job is not to defend the RCMP, and it is not to defend bureaucracy. His job is to provide leadership in crime enforcement in Canada. In terms of the RCMP, he is the law enforcement officer. He is the person who should exercise his political clout over that force. He should move that force forward in terms of organized crime. During the course of this debate I will talk about the way we can go about doing that.

We have two ministers in this House, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General, who have said they oppose this motion for a royal commission. They have two grounds on which they oppose it. They are important men, and I take it they are very serious about those grounds. They say the provinces have the authority to set up their own commissions, and the provinces can deal with this matter. I should like to indicate that organized crime is transprovincial, transnational and international. As they discovered in the United States, if you are going to fight organized crime you cannot do it with little, local commissions which work at cross-purposes and do not relate their information in terms of the attack.

Mr. Fox: That is not the case in Canada.

Mr. Leggatt: The Solicitor General says that is not the case in Canada.

An hon. Member: We have never caught anyone yet.

Mr. Leggatt: We have never caught anyone involved in organized crime in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fox: That is not the situation in Canada.

An hon. Member: Let the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) talk. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) has had his say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) has the floor. We will be here until six o'clock. We will all have our day in court.

Mr. Woolliams: Good idea.

Mr. Leggatt: The one thing organized crime is delighted with is this government's position of not going for a national royal commission. They are delighted with the fact that this government would rather see those commissions fractured and hived off into little distributions. They are pleased with the fact that each little commission will be chopping away at one little tentacle of the octopus, while the head stays intact, merrily doing its dirty work in Canada. That is the position of this government on a national royal commission: We will let the provinces do it and will abandon more jurisdiction to the provinces. They have been doing this since 1972. Our party is one party which is not going to abandon jurisdiction over law enforcement at the federal level, as this government is going to do.

Mr. Woolliams: Right on.

Mr. Leggatt: Their second argument seems to boggle the mind. They indicate that they will get these criminals and have the Five Dragons in jail in no time: The only thing which needs to be done is to pass the amendments to the wiretap act; they are keeping these people on the streets by being in opposition to our wiretap act amendments.

When that bill comes out of committee and the Liberal majority gets its way, as it usually does, and the bill is passed, we can expect to see all kinds of arrests by the fall. The Five Dragons will be behind bars, our friends in Montreal will be picked up off the streets, and there will be no problem at all. That is the argument which has been presented to this House, and it is the most specious, silly argument I have ever heard. It is a silly argument to say, because some minor amendments to the wiretap act have not been passed, that this government has been inhibited in regard to organized crime.

I should like to refer to the broad powers which the government says they do not have in order to deal with organized crime under the wiretap act. One of them deals with the question of the introduction of evidence. It can be argued and debated by lawyers as to whether it complicates the courts system and expands the time that is necessary. For a minister of the Crown to stand and seriously tell us that because he does not have that little amendment in terms of the evidentiary rule in court, he has not been able to successfully attack organized crime, is so specious as not to be worthy of serious attention.

An hon. Member: He should resign.

Mr. Leggatt: The second question the minister must deal with is the law which is in existence. I am sure the minister has looked at it, but I want to remind him of the existing wiretap law. Parliament gave this government the power to go out and tap what organized crime says. I am referring to section 178(1) of the existing law which refers to any other indictable offence in respect of which there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that it forms a pattern of similar or related offences by two or more persons acting in concert and that such pattern is part of the activities of organized crime.

This parliament gave the minister full power against organized crime when it passed the previous legislation. The minister continues to raise the red herring that if these other offences are not included in the section, he will be terribly handicapped or inhibited. The law has always been there. The minister has to direct himself to the real questions: Have the law enforcement people been properly directed? Has the balance of the forces been correct? Have we had too many RCMP officers chasing around the campuses of Canada trying to track down some left-wing radicals, when they should have been out on the streets of Montreal and Vancouver working under cover to put some of these rotters in jail where they belong? Those are questions for which the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General have no real answers.

An hon. Member: That goes back to Goyer.

Mr. Leggatt: I am aware of that. I am waiting with an open mind to hear the minister's defence of the attack which he and his predecessors have made in the area of organized crime. I would be interested in hearing what his staff allocations are. I would be happy if he told us how many in the Ottawa detachment have as their sole responsibility an attack on organized crime, versus the number who have responsibility in terms of subversive activity in Canada. The minister might be persuaded to change the balance of his forces in terms of attacking organized crime.

Those are the two reasons which have been given in opposition to the call for a royal commission. The validity is not there. I should like to indicate some of the reasons it is useful to have a royal commission. First of all, Al Capone was not put in jail because he killed anybody; he was put in jail because the United States enforcement authorities decided that he was a kingpin in organized crime and they determined that he was no longer going to carry on those activities in the United States. They convicted him of evading income tax. That is how they imprisoned Al Capone.

What is the use of talking about provincial and federal jurisdictions? Why say, "Let British Columbia have its own royal commission and let Quebec have its own royal commission?" Has the federal government no say when there are violations of our immigration laws or income tax laws? I say this because organized crime likes to evade income tax. We should not insist on splitting responsibility, as it were. We may not be able to catch some of the kingpins of organized crime unless the federal authority enforces offences against the Income Tax Act, for instance.

Anyone with experience in the field will concede the extreme difficulty of nailing the kingpins of organized crime. Most of these people do not bother using the telephone. Someone ought to tell the minister: I think the force knows it. I suggest the wiretap law on which the government seems to rely so heavily is not the most effective instrument for combatting organized crime. If you took the earphones off some of our policemen, and put them on the streets to do undercover and investigate work of the sort our CBC reporters have done, for example, you would get convictions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Ramsay Clark, when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in 1973, pointed out the difficulties of the wiretap law. He said the police would use it as a crutch and lean on it so heavily that they would neglect the undercover, dangerous work which must be done, the work which we give the police tremendous credit for doing. The government is responsible for allocating resources to the police properly and appropriately. No one in this House says we should not have a wiretap law but, we say it should be a balanced wiretap law.

If the minister's response to organized crime is, "Give us more evidentiary rules, expand two sections in the offences section of the code and we will clean up organized crime," one can only say his response is inadequate. We want the government to adopt a co-ordinated approach. We want to see the Minister of Justice involved in prosecutions, and the Solicitor General in law enforcement. As well, we want to see some indication of an increase in the allocation to the force. Perhaps the minister will announce today his intention to increase the allocation. The opposition knows this is an expensive business. I know of one investigation, concerning one figure, which is costing $1.5 million per year. The Canadian people will back any minister who says, "I am not going to apologize for this spending. I am looking ahead in our fight against organized crime."

We do not want the minister to defend the bureaucracy and the force. We all love the force. That's a motherhood question in Canada. Everyone wants to see the RCMP working effectively and well. It is the minister's responsibility to give direction which will protect the force's reputation as one of the best police forces in the world. And, I say it is one of the best in the world. But unless the minister changes his attitude, it will be in trouble.

What are the other arguments in favour of a royal commission? There is reluctance on the part of politicians at any time to look at themselves in relation to organized crime.

Mr. Woolliams: Why?

Mr. Leggatt: The examples in the United States on this subject are legion. Justice must not only be done; it must appear to be done. That is an old legal cliché. The House of Commons is the wrong place to examine organized crime in detail. It must be done by a royal commission. We have undertaken inquiries into various matters. Of necessity to itself, organized crime tries to infiltrate the political arena. As someone said today, I think, you never know who has made a contribution to your campaign. You have to be very careful about where the money comes from.

A royal commission does not have its hands tied politically. It can act on the question of organized crime. The request for a royal commission is not new. Government members have suggested in this House that the opposition just discovered organized crime after watching a couple of hours of television. There have been calls for a royal commission going back to 1973. Various members of this House have made the request. Therefore, this is not a new idea of the opposition's; it is not something we have just discovered. We want the government to respond to a problem the Canadian people have faced for five or six years, and it is getting worse every year.

What has been the United States experience? As I said, many of their kingpins were caught because they violated U.S. income tax law. During the 1950s and the 1960s, U.S. authorities found that their attack on organized crime was ineffective for exactly the reasons we have put forward today. They found that you must deal with organized crime on a national basis, because these criminals can move from one community to another so quickly and act so ruthlessly that you cannot hamper them with regional commissions. Our government will not look this obvious fact in the face. It is resisting the call for a royal commission because it comes from the opposition. I am sure if the backbenchers of the Liberal party had asked for it, the government would have jumped on the bandwagon right away.

I plead with the government not to make this a political issue. If you want to give Jacques Lavoie the credit for it, go ahead. It will not bother us so long as we establish the commission. Or give Jack Horner the credit. I am sure Jack would support a royal commission into almost anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Would the hon. member please refer to members of this House by their ridings, and not by their names?

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie) will forgive me. I want the minister to consider the precedents established in the United States where organized crime has been a serious problem for a long time. In 1950, the United States attorney general convened a national conference on organized crime. In that year, as well, there were held well publicized hearings of Senator Kefauver's Senate special committee into organized crime. In 1957, Senator McClellan's select Senate committee looked into organized crime's infiltration of business and labour. In 1958, the attorney general's special group on organized crime was formed within the department of justice of the United States. In 1961, OCR was vastly expanded in order to get regular reports on organized crime from 26 federal government agencies. As well, the number of OCR attorneys was quadrupled.

In 1966, President Johnson restated his determination to accelerate the war on organized crime and launched the president's commission on law enforcement and administration of justice, which included a task force on organized crime. Incidentally, that 1966 report, if I may summarize it, called for limited wiretap provisions, with severe restrictions to project the civil liberties and privacy of individuals. That was a government that was tough on crime; it was attacking crime. But even then they wanted very clear and severe restrictions on the privacy law. I would ask the minister again to look at that report.

In 1967, the recommendations of this commission were presented. In 1970, arising from the 1967 report, all organized crime efforts in the federal government were co-ordinated by the newly created national council on organized crime, and I emphasize that it was the national council on organized crime. In 1970, the U.S. organized crime control act became law. In 1977, the federal organized crime task force acted as an ongoing co-ordination and action agency against the activities of organized crime, and in 1977 at least one U.S. university had an institute of organized crime. That is a pretty interesting record to which this government has had access and for which it has had a precedent, because surely it was aware that organized crime, which knows no boundaries or borders, was infiltrating major urban centres in Canada. Compare the record in the United States with the record of the government in this country against organized crime and you will find it is a do-nothing record.

What can we see as the accomplishments of a royal commission? In British Columbia—I might say, under the NDP government at that time—a co-ordinated law enforcement unit was formed. I am sure even my good friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), would agree with the establishment of the law enforcement unit because it has since been carried on by the present government in a very effective way. The principles behind a co-ordinated law enforcement unit are exactly the kind of principles we should apply at the national level.

Mr. Fox: Right on.

Mr. Leggatt: One reason it is necessary to have a royal commission is that royal commissioners can examine the question and be given a mandate to recommend that the co-ordination of law enforcement should take place at the national level, and so they can examine the reports of the British Columbia commission. I want to read the reason the co-ordinated law enforcement unit was formed. If you can apply that logic, I am sure the Solicitor General will agree that a royal commission should be given a mandate to inquire into this matter. This is from the introduction of the CLEU report. It reads:

> The tactic of forming a massive joint forces operation to combat organized crime was advocated by the police themselves, who had had considerable success with combined-force efforts in the past. At the same time, a manpower utilization study found that police expended too much of their time on activities such as escorting and guarding prisoners, or in handling court officer duty. An expansion of the sheriff's office was conceived, and training provided so that sheriff's officers could assume these non-police functions. As the sheriffs took up their new tasks, police officers were released to undertake operational activities.
> The co-ordinated law enforcement unit was established:
>
> (a) To provide long term study into the activities of an individual, or group, believe to be involved in organized crime, where, because of limitations of jurisdiction, manpower, budget, or diversity of criminal activity, no single agency could be expected to devote its total resources.
> (b) To stimulate and co-ordinate interdepartmental and intragovernmental co-operation between the various federal, provincial and municipal agencies and the British Columbia Department of the Attorney General.
>
> (c) To provide the proper atmosphere under which the various agencies could develop the intelligence gathering process and expedite information exchange.
> (d) To develop investigation to the point where it established that a criminal offence had been, was being, or might be committed—

It goes on in terms of the justification of the first report of CLEU in British Columbia. Each and every reason for the existence of the co-ordinated law enforcement unit applies on the national scene. It is too bad that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General did not move in terms of the national level so that we would have a formal body formed, because the problems they are seeking to solve in British Columbia are the same problems they are trying to solve in Toronto, Quebec and the outlying areas. As well, we have the problem of organized crime moving into places such as taverns and entertainment areas.

A royal commission can make those kinds of recommendations in terms of changing the way we go about investigating crime. I have spoken of investigation at the political level. A royal commission can do something else. It can inquire into some of the specific allegations that have been made in the CBC documentary. As people in the House have said, a lot of it seems to be innuendo, and I have used that word myself regarding some of the individuals. There is enough smoke in that program, however, for someone to check to see how hard the fire is burning.

Let us go back for a minute to the question of the Five Dragons. An in-house inquiry into the immigration service, I submit, would not satisfy very strongly and firmly held public suspicion in the Five Dragons' case. I want to review briefly some of the bald facts in that case, and I ask the ministers seriously to consider their position that this and the other questions that were raised in the program—concerning, in particular, Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal—do not merit a judicial inquiry. Let us deal with one individual, Mr. Lui Luk. The South China Morning Post reports that his financial worth is $500 million. I will have to check whether that is Hong Kong or Canadian money.

Mr. Woolliams: It is a lot of money, anyhow.

Mr. Leggatt: If it is $500 million in Hong Kong money, it is $125 million in Canadian money at today's exchange rate. Poor old Lui Luk is a wonderful candidate to come to this country if you take him under the entrepreneurial section and give him 25 points.

Mr. Woolliams: Quite some savings.

Mr. Leggatt: He must be a terrific saver. He can teach us all a lesson about building up a bank account. This man was a sergeant in the Hong Kong police force. By the way, we have taken about 30 of his friends into Canada from the Hong Kong police force. This man, being such a tremendous saver, decided that his police life was over and that he wanted to come to Canada. What did he do? He made an application, I presume under the normal procedure.

No minister of the House can stand up and say that corruption in the Hong Kong police force was not well known for a very long time. There have been stories printed in the world press about it. I say to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) that an official—I will provide the name to the minister—advised the RCMP liaisons officer in Hong Kong about the background of the Five Dragons. I would have expected that in the course of time that information would have been passed on to the immigration service. If it was not, we should find out why. If it was passed on, we should find out why the section of the Immigration Act was not applied against these individuals before they came to Canada.

We should also find out who interceded on behalf of these immigrants. Was anyone in the banking world seeking to increase the banks' deposits? That is an interesting question which certainly should be answered. There is enough information just in the one case to take a serious look at how these individuals came to Canada. I remember a fellow called Dr. Gunter Frank who was considered a dangerous fellow. He wanted to come and teach a course for a couple of months in Toronto, but they said he was a dangerous radical, some kind of Marxist. In fact, he just wanted to come to Canada to give a speech.

Mr. Hogan: Queen's University invited him.

Mr. Leggatt: I do not know how much he had in the bank, but apparently he was such a danger to Canada that we could not expose our youth to the revolutionary ideas of Dr. Frank. However, Lui Luk, with his $500 million, is all right. We can bring him in. We need all that type of person we can get, because they bring capital into Canada.

• (1550)

Mr. Gilbert: And corruption.

Mr. Leggatt: That is why we say there has not been leadership. That is why we say this government brushes the problem under the carpet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Leggatt: I thank the House for allowing me to continue. I shall be very brief in winding up. Allegations have been made concerning the Vancouver drug squad, and I want to say that all the information I have is that Inspector Dickins and his squad are doing a first-rate job in Vancouver.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: We should not simply throw charges about the force around, but we do need to have the public satisfied and with these kinds of allegations only a royal commission can do it. A royal commission could bring about a national council on organized crime. It could be called a co-ordinated law enforcement unit, but we have to bring together society's tools to strike out at this insidious force, because the people who are hurt are not members of parliament or people with big bank accounts. People on the street, prostitutes and people subjected to loansharking activities are the ones who are hurt. Those are the people who need help and protection.

This party has a reputation, in terms of civil liberties, which is second to none and it has agonized over the question of a royal commission because we believe that is a very serious decision to make. We must protect the liberties of those who would have to come before the cameras and before such an inquiry. After weighing, as we must, what has to be done for the benefit of the whole of society, and particularly for the benefit of hundreds of thousands of poor victims out there, we have come down in favour of a royal commission. A royal commission could take the public into its confidence. It could make the ordinary person on the street understand that the policeman is his friend, that law enforcement agencies are his friends, that he does not need to be pushed around by organized crime and the mafia, and that he can use the forces of law and order for protection.

We need a royal commission to bring about a change in public attitude. That is why I plead with the Solicitor General not to reject this proposal. He should not reject it just because it is an opposition proposal or because it may look as though he caved in to the opposition. I do not think there is anyone on this side of the House who would not congratulate the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice for adopting this proposal and making it their own.

Mr. MacKay: We would applaud them.

Mr. Leggatt: The House has been indulgent. I have taken a fair amount of time. I could go into much more detail, and perhaps I will at another time. However, I want to tell the Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that any information I have, they can have. We are certainly willing to co-operate in any way we can to see that vice is stamped out.

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make a few comments on organized crime in Canada, and particularly on certain initiatives taken by the federal government to control and fight this problem. It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that if this were only a political matter, I would be the first to comply with the request of the hon. member opposite for because even if, politically speaking, it is not the most efficient way to control organized crime, it would be in my own interest to support his proposition. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if I do not support the proposition of the hon. member, it is because we have extremely serious reasons not to do so.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, much has been said and written about organized crime, and while it has been romanticized by some and deplored by commentators in the media and others, it is indeed a complex problem which requires a sophisticated response. There are, of course, different suggestions about the approach which should be adopted to deal with the problem of organized crime. The suggestion is made today that a royal commission of inquiry or some other type of public inquiry would expose organized crime, but at the same time it would also expose everything the police know about organized crime and thereby hamper police investigations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Mr. Peters: Be reasonable.

Mr. Fox: An alternative approach would be to try to assist the police in their efforts to organize and equip themselves to deal with this cancer which strikes at the very heart of our society. The question of a crime probe is one I have examined very closely and discussed in detail with the RCMP. I am sure hon. members opposite will agree that the RCMP has a great deal of experience in combatting organized crime.

Mr. Hogan: They tried it in the United States and it was successful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) has the floor, and I suggest that hon. members listen.

Mr. Fox: The very considered advice of the RCMP is that it would not be a good way of combatting organized crime. I am always impressed by the great depth of knowledge hon. members opposite have about the practices and procedures in other countries. I must say that they do not seem to be aware of the type of response that has been going on in this country since the mid-fifties. In the course of my remarks this afternoon I will try to bring them up to date.

However, first I would like to take this opportunity to make a few comments on the recent CBC television program on organized crime. While the efforts of the producers have, of course, heightened the awareness of many Canadians and served to inform many others, their methods, including serious insinuations and innuendoes, have left much to be desired. It has been acknowledged that it took 2½ years to produce three hours of television air time. It took 2½ years to put together film footage on cases which are already well documented. The so-called "French connection", for instance, has already been the subject of a book and two movies. That connection was undone as a result of international police co-operation.

Mr. Peters: Not one of them is in jail.

Mr. Fox: The hon. member's facts are wrong. Most of the people involved in Montreal are, or have been, in jail.

Mr. Peters: They are walking the streets.

Mr. Fox: The case of the Dubois brothers was well publicized as a result of the work of the Quebec commission into organized crime, and the work of the anti-corruption squad of the Hong Kong police has been covered by the media. The cases of Vic Cotroni and Paolo Violi are matters of public record and have received considerable media coverage in the past.

I do not make these remarks in a critical sense. I use them only by way of illustration. It took 2½ years to prepare a three-hour television program based in large part on material which is in the public forum. It is well documented and need not withstand cross-examination or scrutiny by the courts. On the other hand, police investigators must develop information, collect evidence and locate witnesses who will prove guilt beyond doubt. The police cannot rely on hearsay, inference or innuendo. They must have evidence which is subjected to rigid scrutiny and cross-examination. The CBC seems to be able to use hidden cameras and hidden microphones without any criticism whatsoever from hon. members opposite, but that is the kind of thing they want to deny the police in their fight against organized crime, a fight which they are directly mandated to undertake.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fox: If I may, I would like briefly to review some of the initiatives which have been taken with regard to combatting organized crime in Canada. These initiatives were taken by responsible law enforcement authorities, without fanfare. Attorneys general and police departments across the country are co-operating in a number of areas. For many years the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other major police forces in Canada have been keenly aware of, and very concerned about, the influence of organized crime in this country. This concern was expressed during the 1950s when efforts were made to investigate the activities of residents in Canada who were in contact with or associated with individuals from other countries, particularly the U.S.A., who were involved with organized crime.

● (1600)

By the early 1960s the Canadian police community started to form, within various police forces, intelligence units to gather information and data on suspected or known persons controlling criminal activities. The RCMP, because of its national responsibility for law enforcement, began to play a liaison role to promote the formation of such units and the exchange of intelligence among major police forces in Canada. Attorneys general were briefed on the phenomena of organized crime and met to discuss the problem and possible solutions.

This brings me to January, 1966, when a federal-provincial conference of attorneys general was held in Ottawa. At that conference the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), who was at the time minister of justice for the province of Quebec, proposed the creation of a central intelligence bureau for the use of all police forces in Canada "to provide for the collection, analysis and dissemination of criminal intelligence to effectively combat organized crime". A resolution of the conference created a committee on criminal intelligence to explore the nature, scope and workability of a new central intelligence mechanism.

By August, 1967, the report of the committee on criminal intelligence recommended the formation of a Canadian criminal intelligence system with a central repository at RCMP headquarters, Ottawa; the establishment of provincial criminal intelligence centres in each province; that provincial criminal intelligence centres in the provinces policed by the RCMP be formed from RCMP criminal intelligence units already in existence; that the provincial criminal intelligence centres in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec be otherwise designated. They subsequently became the criminal intelligence service of Ontario and the Quebec research bureau on organized crime. In October, 1969, the name Criminal Intelligence Service of Canada was created.

In March, 1970, the Criminal Intelligence Service of Canada constitution and manual of procedure was formally adopted. The adoption of this constitution was truly a milestone. For the first time, Canadian law enforcement agencies had a formal base on which to develop a national system to fight organized crime. In this regard we are envied by the United States government because it has not been possible to do the same thing there. In 1970, there were five provincial bureaux in operation, namely the Quebec Research Bureau on organized crime, one in Manitoba, one in Saskatchewan, one in Ontario and one in Alberta. In 1971, three other provincial bureaux became operative in British Columbia, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

The Criminal Intelligence Service of Canada, central repository of criminal intelligence, is located at the RCMP headquarters in Ottawa within the national criminal intelligence branch, and the provincial bureaux are regional repositories. All repositories are designed to provide facilities for the collection, analysis and dissemination of criminal intelligence with the view effectively to combat organized crime in Canada. The CISC executive committee is comprised of 17 members representing major police forces in Canada. The idea is co-operation in the fight against organized crime. As of December 31, 1976, CISC regular membership consisted of 48 police agencies.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to outline some examples of the type of co-operation which exists as a result of the approach to organized crime which has been adopted, an approach which I fully endorse. Eight RCMP members assisted the Quebec commission of inquiry into organized crime. The RCMP in Vancouver has joined the Vancouver city police intelligence unit in developing profiles on major criminals and criminal groups to assist joint forces' operations. This is commonly known as the Vancouver integrated intelligence unit. An investigation in Toronto into an international bank inspector fraud in 1976 resulted in the arrest of a major organized crime figure and 18 associates. In Montreal, an operation involving the RCMP and police forces in Quebec exposed the well-publicized "tainted meat operation". The Criminal Intelligence Service bureau, via the American authorities, have established a gun tracing program on behalf of all police departments in Canada to stem the flow of illegal firearms into this country.

Mr. Speaker, the concept of co-operation has produced effective results. A recent joint force operation in 1977 in Toronto which involved the RCMP, the Ontario provincial police and the metropolitan Toronto police resulted in more than 60 charges being laid against 48 persons. These persons are suspected of being crime figures and their associates. The charges included fraud, extortion, assault, counterfeiting and drugs. There are a number of examples of joint force operations in Montreal, some of which are still before the courts. As a result of one such operation, nine charges of fraud and conspiracy were laid against three persons. In another case, six charges of fraud were laid against four persons. In Halifax a very successful joint force operation resulted in 87 charges being laid against ten persons—fraud, extortion, arson, break and entry and drugs.

A joint force operation into a prostitution organization which operated in Alberta and British Columbia resulted in charges being laid against three major organized crime figures and five of their associates, as well as the prostitutes involved. I would like to emphasize that in this case three major organized crime figures were brought before the courts.

There are other examples of successful joint force operations in Winnipeg, Saskatoon and southern Ontario, but I do not wish to go into the details completely. I would, however, like to use one more case to illustrate just how well the joint force operation concept can work. In Vancouver there was a case where more than $3 million in cash, jewellery and precious metals were stolen. Criminal intelligence investigators were aware of the theft and were actively investigating it before it was reported to the police. Five persons were arrested in Vancouver and Winnipeg, and the case is still before the courts.

I fully acknowledge that organized crime constitutes a serious problem in Canada and that it extends to every field of criminal activity and is not confined by geography. Organized criminals are actively engaged in the drug trade, gambling, counterfeiting and commercial frauds on a local, national and international scale. In recognition of this, the RCMP has allocated the following resources to activities related to organized crime: The national criminal intelligence branch, 208 men; support services, 504—and this includes surveillance; commercial crime, 426; drugs, 709; customs and excise, 239; immigration and passport, 80; for a total of 2,166.

Yesterday, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) commented that there were only six members of the RCMP assigned to organized crime responsibilities in Ottawa. I suppose there are problems of definition, but A Division, RCMP, in Ottawa has 143 officers deployed on duties related to organized crime. I would be pleased to support this information with figures.

Mr. Peters: That is the traffic division.

Mr. Fox: As far as other major cities are concerned, the figures are as follows: criminal intelligence services in Toronto have 32 personnel; support services, 56; commercial crime squad, 66; drug squad, 77; customs and excise, 28; immigration and passports, 20. In Montreal, criminal intelligence services have 29 personnel; support services, 130; commercial crime squad, 100; drug squad, 88; customs and excise, 41; immigration and passports, 19. In Vancouver, criminal intelligence services, 29 personnel; support services, 128; commercial crime, 50; drugs, 102; customs and excise, 29; immigration and passports, 10. This is without counting the ramifications of the specialized people in police agencies at provincial or municipal levels across the country. Information coming from them is passed on to the other police agencies and constitutes a wide network of people highly involved in the fight against organized crime in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I, for one, have confidence in the police and in the approach adopted to the problem of organized criminals and organized crime. I would like to support their efforts by supplementing the investigative tools available to them. We must remember that wiretapping during the course of a criminal investigation is controlled by the courts and that there are severe penalties for illegal wiretaps.

Mr. Woolliams: How many have ever been charged?

Mr. Fox: The point that must be made in response to the question raised by the hon. member is that in the case where any illegal act of wiretapping was brought to the attention of this government, immediate criminal charges would follow. What the hon. member is unwilling to recognize is the very serious manner in which authorization procedures for wiretaps are conducted in this country.

Mr. Woolliams: Have you read the cases?

Mr. Fox: The only thing I can deduct from the hon. member's course of questions is that he has lost complete confidence, not only in the police forces of this country and the senior officers who authorize wiretaps but also in the crown attorneys who must bring wiretap applications to the judges who have to authorize them, and he has completely lost confidence in the judiciary of this country who authorize wiretaps. The hon. member is intimating that the judiciary ought not to be authorizing those wiretaps. I am sure the hon. member will want to make those points himself.

We have seen examples of police co-operation in joint force operations in bringing organized criminals before the courts. This seems to me to be a responsible approach and one which will serve the needs of Canada and criminal justice. Since we are on wiretaps, I would like to reiterate some of the comments I made during the course of the debate on second reading of Bill C-51. I brought out certain statistics concerning the use of wiretaps and their successful use in completing investigations by the police into a number of areas, including organized crime.

● (1610)

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) repeated certain allegations to the effect that in 1975 or 1976 there were 1,062 persons arrested as a result of wiretaps, but only 13 resulted in convictions. I think it is worth while to point out that in the same annual report from which he was quoting there is an updated section for the year 1975. This updated section shows different statistics indeed. If the hon. member cares to read that part of the report, he will see that criminal proceedings in which private communication obtained under authorization were introduced into evidence led to successful prosecutions numbering 18 in 1975. The hon. member may also wish to look at the same report which indicates that the updated figure for 1976 under this section rose from 18 to 70. Similarly, under the same section of the 1975 report it showed resulting convictions of 18. When the updated figures for 1975 were published in the 1976 report which the hon. member is so prone to quote, this number had risen to 69.

These figures reflect only those prosecutions and convictions made with the use of wiretap evidence produced in court. I underline the words "produced in court". It is, of course, important to realize that a lot of people who have been arrested as a result of wiretap information decided to plead guilty when confronted with the wiretap evidence. That is something that was not brought out clearly by the hon. member. In such cases, the actual wiretap evidence is not produced in court. The updated figures for 1976 show, under the relevant sections, which are (1) and (m), that 514 convictions out of 1,492 arrests resulted directly or indirectly from evidence obtained through wiretaps. Of course, the prosecution of many of those who were arrested and charged in 1975 is still before the courts. The end result should be a very high ratio of convictions to arrests on the basis of evidence collected under the provisions of this law.

The statistics indicate several points. First, where wiretap evidence is produced in court the resulting conviction rate is almost 100 per cent. Second, the annual reports required by parliament—and perhaps we should change it—do not at the moment reflect actions before the courts which at the time of compilation were still incomplete. Accordingly, it is necessary to analyse not just one year's report but successive years' reports in order to fully appreciate the success achieved under this law.

To get back to the main subject of discussion, I am sure that all provincial attorneys general are concerned about organized crime. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and I will be meeting with the provincial attorneys general later this month. There will, of course, be an opportunity for an exchange of views on methods of dealing with the problems. Unless there has been a very recent change of approach, I understand that all attorneys general support the concept of co-operation and joint force operation and do not support the idea of the institution of a national inquiry into organized crime.

There are many who advocate a royal commission or similar type of public inquiry into organized crime. I admit that there are some advantages to this approach. It does create an awareness among citizens of the nature and extent of organized criminal activities. It may expose the techniques employed by organized criminals to exploit an unsuspecting and unaware public. It would also expose key figures of the organized criminal community, their connections and the extent of their influence in legitimate activities. It would probably also expose organized criminals without having to gather the evidence necessary to produce in court.

There are definitely drawbacks, as well. The question surely arises as to whether it would be a satisfactory approach to a problem as complex as organized crime. A public inquiry would, of course, require a large staff of investigators and support personnel. Many of these people would have to be diverted from their current police responsibilities: that is undeniable. The diversion of police resources, and the publicity generated by a public inquiry, would without any doubt whatsoever—and I am clearly advised in that regard by the RCMP who have a great deal of expertise in this area—hamper ongoing, current investigations.

There may be a time when the drama of a public inquiry would be helpful, but at the moment one must remember some of the main disadvantages of a public inquiry. It would expose evidence and information in the hands of police as well as investigative techniques, without bringing criminals before the courts where they could be dealt with according to law.

I have given examples of joint police force operation right across the country, the type of network the federal government set up along with provincial attorneys general to establish a national system of intelligence of criminal activities in Canada, with the resultant prosecution. We just have to look at what has happened in Halifax, Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver over the past few months. It indicates quite clearly we are on the right track in combatting organized crime in this country.

Mr. Gilbert: Tell that to the public; they do not believe it.

Mr. Fox: The hon. member says the public do not believe that. My responsibility as a minister of the Crown is to ensure that the most productive way of fighting organized crime is the one that is used in this country, not to try to come up with the most popular way of fighting organized crime which is not at the same time the most productive way. I am willing to stand here and say that at this stage I have not been convinced that it would be productive for the police to fight organized crime through a royal commission of inquiry which would be held in the full light of day. I am willing to accept the fact that what I am saying today is not politically popular in the country. However, I am willing to take my responsibility as a minister of the Crown and my responsibility to the people of this country to see to it that the productive way of fighting organized crime is indeed undertaken by the police forces of this country.

An hon. Member: You are being the spokesman for the police.

Mr. Fox: The hon. member says I am being the spokesman for the police. I have spoken to people in the police who are extremely knowledgeable in these matters, a lot more knowledgeable than members opposite who are not interested in the fight against organized crime but in scoring political points in this country because they think an election is coming up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: If hon. members will give me the opportunity, I will conclude and have the great pleasure of listening to their words of wisdom in this debate. Organized crime should be dealt with by the criminal justice system, the police, the prosecutors and the courts. Hon. members can assist this process by responsible support of legislation designed to combat organized crime and protect our society.

Organized Crime

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether, with the consent of the House, I might be permitted to put a question to the minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The minister's time has not yet expired. Will he accept a question from the hon. member?

Mr. Fox: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I will preface my question by saying that I am in favour of a federal royal commission to investigate crime. In his presentation the minister left the impression that a royal commission would be harmful because it would upset investigations by various police forces across the country. I ask him this question and I hope he is as honest as he is pious. Does he think what came out of the royal commission in the province of Quebec was positive, or negative?

● (1620)

Mr. Fox: Perhaps I could answer the hon. member's question by putting another question. Would he like to tell me how many new prosecutions arose out of the inquiry into organized crime in Montreal? That was, of course, a decision taken by the attorney general of Quebec, as was his right. He came to the conclusion that in the circumstances an inquiry in that province would be useful. Undoubtedly it had some value, but perhaps the hon. member would like to tell me how many new prosecutions were entered upon as a result of it.

Mr. Stanfield: There's a brave Solicitor General.

Mr. Fox: The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) appears to have some comments to make. There was only one case that I can think of. It was the one into the tainted meat business in that province. The material had already been developed by the police, and the hon. member cannot assure me that prosecutions would not have gone forward in any event. I have not examined the situation which the attorney general of Quebec had to deal with when he decided to come up with that case, but I am saying that very few prosecutions resulted from the inquiry, leaving aside penalties imposed for contempt. If the hon. member can point to additional evidence which came out at that time, evidence which was not available to the police earlier, I would be very pleased to hear from him.

Mr. Stanfield: That is the longest evasion I ever heard.

An hon. Member: A good answer.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): An hon. member across the way said it was a good answer. It was no answer. If you talk to the police chief in Montreal, as I have done, the information one gets is that the inquiry is assisting the police in their work. The Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) talks about one case, the one he mentioned which involved dead meat carcasses being ground into hamburger, and so on. I would think that this, in itself, was enough to justify the inquiry even if nothing else came out of it; and, in fact, a great deal came out of it.

I want to tell hon. members opposite where we stand as a party. We support this motion wholeheartedly. We have always believed there should be such an inquiry. I intend to put on record the number of times we have asked for an inquiry by the federal government, particularly in light of the answer of the Solicitor General yesterday. First, by what authority has the government the right to set up a royal commission into organized crime? Let us turn to section 91(21) of the British North America Act, which provides that the criminal law, except the constitution of the courts of criminal jurisdiction but including criminal matters, falls directly within the power of parliament. It is true that according to section 92, the administration of justice in the provinces, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both civil and criminal, falls under provincial jurisdiction. But basically, legislation within the criminal law falls under the jurisdiction of the federal government. This is particularly the case, as the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) pointed out yesterday, when questions of immigration, narcotics and other subjects dealt with by federal statute are concerned.

The necessary authority is already in the hands of the government, and I submit the time has come to set up a royal commission to deal with organized crime. The only excuse the government gives for not doing so is that Bill C-51 would solve the whole problem. Let us deal with the question of wiretapping. I proposed to quote from the annual report of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada presented as required by the Criminal Code, section 178(22). Ministers are always trying to deny these figures, but this is what it says on page 6:

> The number of persons arrested whose identity became known to a peace officer as a result of an interception under an authorization was 1,062.

In the following paragraph we read:

> The number of criminal proceedings commenced at the instance of the Attorney General of Canada in which private communications were obtained by interception under an authorization were adduced in evidence, and the number of such proceedings that resulted in a conviction was 13.

That is, the number of authorizations used amounted to 1,062, and the number of convictions totalled 13. Those are the facts. The government cannot deny them, no matter how they try. That is from a report of the Governor General. Yesterday, as reported at page 6642 of Hansard, the Solicitor General had this to say in answer to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark):

> The hon. member also asked a more general question in connection with organized crime. Listening to the opposition during the course of the question period this afternoon, one gets the impression they discovered organized crime on Monday and Tuesday nights by watching television.

What is the real situation in that regard? I want to put on record the number of times members of this party, including the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), myself and others, have asked for a royal commission to look into organized crime.

An hon. Member: What have they got to hide?

Mr. Woolliams: As reported at page 8343 of Hansard of September 23, 1964, I put a question to the then prime minister concerning allegations that there might have been corrupt practices in reference to the administration of the law in the Banks' case. This was the subject of an inquiry by the Norris commission, after several men had been murdered by turning on steam in a furnace. Judge Norris recommended at that time the setting up of a royal commission to investigate syndicated crime. My own plea that a royal commission be set up was refused by the prime minister of the day, the late L. B. Pearson.

On October 13, 1967, as reported at page 3062, of Hansard, I again asked for the setting up of a royal commission because of certain facts which had come to light and because ex-commissioner Harvison of the RCMP, contrary to the view taken by the solicitor general, had stated that organized crime was coming into Canada from the United States. The prime minister, Mr. Pearson, said no. He did not think the establishment of a royal commission would solve anything.

Now we come to February 24, 1969. Our party whip from Edmonton Centre asked that a royal commission be set up. In reply, Senator McIlraith, as he is now, said:

> I do not believe, and I cannot believe, the premise on which the question is based.

He refused the suggestion that a royal commission be established. When the Solicitor General suggests we only found out about organized crime by watching television, I would draw his attention to these representations on behalf of our party. On January 27, 1969, the right hon. member for Prince Albert dealt with the subject of organized crime and, as reported at page 4837, of Hansard, said he would like to see a little action taken. He recommended that a royal commission be set up to look into the question of organized and international crime in co-operation with the provinces. So I do not think we discovered this type of crime by viewing CBC programs. Again, on February 5, 1971, as reported at page 3124 of Hansard, my right hon. friend from Prince Albert stated:

> In the spirit of reform which has always been a reason for action on his part, I should like the minister to consider the setting up of a royal commission to look fully into the question of the infiltration into Canada of international wrongdoers—

● (1630)

He was referring, of course to Hong Kong. Then, again, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, on November 28, 1973, at page 8247 of Hansard, after setting out certain facts and referring to 95 cases involving international crime, immigration and other matters which had come to his attention, asked for a royal commission. Again it was refused. Then on March 7, 1974, the right hon. member for Prince Albert repeated his plea, and again it was refused by the government on flimsy arguments.

When the Solicitor General says that we have only just found out about crime, I would remind him, as did the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) moved a motion similar to the motion today on November 12, 1974. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe talked about his career yesterday. He mentioned that he was the solicitor general of Quebec, minister of justice of Quebec and was a judge who had to have his home guarded because he stood up against the mafia. So we did not find out about crime from the CBC for the very first time. Our position has been a positive one; we have continued to ask for a royal commission.

Again, on October 20, 1975, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) asked for a royal commission. His request was refused. On January 27, 1976, as reported at page 10357 of Hansard, I asked for a royal commission. In light of the program shown on the CBC, the knowledge we have had since 1964, the pressure that has been brought by this side of the House on the government, and the recommendations of Mr. Justice Norris flowing from his inquiry into the SIU which revealed the tremendous depth of organized crime across this nation, I say now is the time to set up that royal commission.

Why do we believe we should have a royal commission? Apart from the facts I have related, let me examine what a royal commission can do which a court cannot do. If you set up a judicial inquiry or a royal commission into organized crime, in the terms of reference provision is made for the subpoenaeing of witnesses and documents and the right to cross-examine those who are involved in organized crime.

I am sure that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General will agree with me that one of the most difficult charges to prove under the Criminal Code is the charge of conspiracy. It is always difficult to link facts together so as to secure a conviction either by a judge or a jury. The reason for this is the good principle that an accused never need say anything in his defence; the Crown must always prove their case beyond a reasonable doubt. But with a judicial inquiry there is a different set of rules. Hardened, syndicated criminals who pay to murder, to rob and to corrupt, or their agents, can be brought before a royal commission and interrogated under oath by lawyers for the commission and people from various parts of society who are interested. Their answers are given under oath. You can also document your case and in this regard ask for police assistance in getting the material required. In that way you can find out who is who.

For example, we would never have known that at the recent Montreal world fair the carcasses of six diseased cattle were ground up into hamburger, chewed up with onions and sold at inflated prices, were it not for a judicial inquiry. We can also discover what kind of corruption is taking place under the Immigration Act and what corruption may be going on in the field of drugs.

I am not being political now when I say that I am always amazed when governments in this country take great credit for the number of convictions they obtain. The government is ready to bust a little kid at university for smoking marijuana, but it fails to get the hardened criminals involved in the trafficking of drugs. This is why we need a judicial inquiry, so we can find out who these people are, how they get into this country, how much infiltration there is from the United States, Europe, Asia, Hong Kong or any other place. I agree with the hon. member for New Westminster; it is beyond my comprehension how the government can continue to say no to a judicial inquiry.

Therefore, I can only ask the government this: Do they fear an inquiry? Have they got something to hide which they know about, such as Hal Banks or Doyle?

Mr. Basford: Oh, come on.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know whether they have, so let us have an inquiry.

Mr. Basford: This is a serious subject.

Mr. Woolliams: It is a very serious subject and I wish the minister would treat it seriously instead of brushing it off or hiding behind a smokescreen. The only thing the government has done to control crime was in connection with capital punishment. Although we on this side had a free vote on that issue, the vote was not free for cabinet members. The increase in the crime of murder went up by 115 per cent in one year in Canada, and much of that is committed by organized criminals. I say that the time has come for a royal commission to investigate organized and syndicated crime.

Ten years ago the press were saying that racketeers and organized criminals were better co-ordinated than Canadian lawmen. RCMP officials at that time gave us the dire warning that United States crime bosses were taking over this country. Jet age crime, as one columnist called it, was challenging on a big scale, exploiting the weaknesses of divided authority and loose liaison. The right hon. member for Prince Albert, in commenting on the Speech from the Throne in 1967, has this to say:

> There is not a word in the speech about crime. I do not intend to fill the record with statements of recent days about the mafia, but there is no doubt that there has been and is today a continuing disregard of the law by persons responsible for this situation . . . the time has come to do something in connection with the crime explosion. I suggest a royal commission to look into the whole picture of crime and its expansion.

On September 23, 1964, in relation to the Banks affair—I know my hon. friend does not like that—I asked the then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, for a royal commission which would, among other things, determine how Banks was able to ignore and avoid the law. Banks was convicted, let out on bail and he left the country. The then secretary of state for the United States admitted that the Democrat party had received $100,000 from the SIU, from the man who Canada allowed to escape, the man who many in the press claim, not by innuendo but on police information, had political connections in this House. The right hon. member for Prince Albert went on to say:

> I should like to see a little action with regard to international crime.

But we have had nothing but words. As I have said, on October 13 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) perpetuated the policy of his predecessor and said that the government would not yield to the request of the opposition for an investigation into syndicated crime in our urban cities. As I say, all words and no action. Then on February 5, 1971, the former prime minister said, as reported at page 3125 of Hansard:

> —I should like the minister to consider the setting up of a royal commission to look fully into the question of infiltration into Canada of international wrongdoers—

We have lots of evidence in this regard, so again I ask in all seriousness, why is the government saying no? The Solicitor General says that this might interfere with the police. The facts are that the province of Quebec found syndicated crime existing in Montreal, and by setting up an investigation they were able to help the police through the evidence which flowed therefrom. We cannot tell how many cases where charges were laid and convictions obtained resulted from that investigation. During that time many of these people left Montreal and went to other cities.

Another matter I cannot understand is this. In Bill C-83 the Minister of Justice included a section which was in the bill last session, a criminal amendment, giving authority to the provinces to hold an inquiry. We said then that they did not need that law. The Supreme Court of Canada says that under the British North America Act, Canada has the authority, in reference to the administration of justice under section 91, to hold that royal commission. The government has advocated leaving this up to the provinces. Are we going to have, apart from Quebec, nine royal commissions looking into the problems across the nation? It is time this government, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General measured up to their responsibilities.

● (1640)

Good, hard police work, without wiretapping, found out that Eaton's in Calgary, on a big sale day, would be blown up in order to get money out of their vault. How many people would have been murdered? The ring which was going to blow up Eaton's in Calgary came from Vancouver, Montreal and Calgary. Across this land there are syndicated people receiving money for murder, fraud and all types of crime as described under our code. That degrades the whole social structure of this country and erodes our youth and the people across this land.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are about to rise. This is an important subject and I will not take longer than my 20 minutes. I should like to end with these words. For ten long years this party has stood positively for a royal commission set up by the federal government to investigate crime. That is our policy, and that is what we will do when we are elected to the government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes allotted to me I would like to make a few comments on the motion moved today by my colleagues of the New Democratic Party on the relevance of a royal commission on organized crime in Canada. It is not a matter which can be easily solved. I heard the speech made by the mover (Mr.

Leggatt) as well as that of the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) and I was surprised to note that with sometimes plausible arguments the proposition has been lightly dismissed.

Mr. Speaker, due to the complexity and the importance of the matter, I do not believe that we should merely dismiss a proposal for the establishment of a royal commission on organized crime. Besides, the minister recalled that government action can be summed up in about 27 years of history, more precisely, it goes back to 1968, when various police forces started a cooperative movement to try and stamp out organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, our country is still young, but we must admit that crime is not marginal, it is organized. It is made up of men, women and young people, it is everywhere in Canada, not only in Quebec or Ontario, it is found in all provinces and in all major cities. It has its own financial means, and they are tremendous, its own leaders; in short, it is organized. Mr. Speaker, I would even say it is a parallel organization which works within the state and had tentacles gradually reaching some officials and certain departments. Of course, they have their inside quarrels. Sometimes it gives the impression of so-called political scandals, but we know it exists.

Mr. Speaker, I ask myself this question briefly but seriously to answer the motion of the New Democratic Party. We know, on the one hand, that organized crime exists in Canada, that it has its tentacles, that it is well organized and that more often than not it thwarts the police forces of the country. On the other hand, we in Quebec, particularly in Montreal, have had the experience of the Commission of Inquiry into Organized Crime, and I am tempted to say like the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) that that commission only succeeded, in the end, in damaging the reputation of a number of simple people whose picture we saw on television. It provided money and paid judges and lawyers. It was, all in all, a source of amusement for a great many people. But if we consider the number of proceedings which were instituted as a result of this inquiry into organized crime, we can wonder to what extent such a commission can effectively fight against organized crime.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the point of the mover was that a royal commission would cause every Canadian, every Quebecer, every Ontarian to wonder seriously about this, to increase his awareness of organized crime and to change his attitude as to the co-operation he should offer our police forces, something we are all seeking. Then, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General argued that a royal commission would not be effective against crime, whereas the mover emphasized that it would increase the awareness of the Canadian public, open to the public a number of files, force various police corps to come clean, in a positive sense, and review their methods. Mr. Speaker, then, I think that that argument nullifies the Solicitor General's argument, and is valid as far as we are concerned.

We have heard in the House, at least since I first came here in 1968, great speeches occasionally from solicitors general—and we have had many of them since 1968—or indeed from ministers of justice about how serious the government was in its fight against crime. I might recall for example the famous omnibus bill, and the government proposals regarding the use of wiretapping in this country; I might also recall several questions raised in this House, and positions stated by various ministers on the role of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I might also recall a government proposal for gun control in this country.

All that is part of the means of action this government has to fight against organized crime of all kinds.

● (1650)

Just as you did, Mr. Speaker, I heard that controlling firearms in Canada, controlling their circulation, sale, distribution and use would have the direct effect of controlling organized crime or facing up to it. However, it is becoming ever more obvious that we control the firearms of law-abiding citizens. The firearms of the so-called criminals or bandits are not better controlled. As if a gangster will have his weapon registered. We would be very naive to believe this. I can hardly understand why the minister and his predecessors put forward this kind of arguments to say that the government is serious about this control.

I believe the minister said earlier that over 2,168 people are employed in the fight against organized crime. So there should be some action, some fight. What has the government to conceal about their methods? On the one hand the government is serious about controlling organized crime, they have the means, the methods, the men and, on the other hand, there is more and more uncertainty, fear, dissatisfaction among the public in Canada as far as the administration of justice in general is concerned. Therefore why not reconcile those two common and converging goals and set up a public inquiry on organized crime so as to stir up public opinion and reconsider methods used by the RCMP and other police forces.

Mr. Speaker, when I happen to think about it I wonder sometime if society itself is really committed to fighting crime. Not long ago—and I am sure that members from Quebec will remember that event—important demonstrations were being held in Quebec, not by anybody but by our law enforcement agents, our policemen, who merely wanted to pair up in police cruisers. They stated in a very clear, efficient and strong manner the reasons for this request. Of course, this does not come under federal government jurisdiction but it is part of the same society, the same approach. This request allowed for a remarkable debate. Public opinion supported our policemen's request. I did too because I thought it was normal that our policemen be not only well organized and equipped but that they could work in a way not to serve as targets for criminals and be in a position to defend themselves. How often have I intervened in the House, since 1968, asking the government to invest more money in crime prevention and juvenile delinquency! When I was a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, we looked into the matter. It is absolutely unbelievable that it should take so long to act on it. One need but consult the figures published by Statistics Canada, and repeated by the Solicitor General and again by many other hon. members, to realize that with regard to crime in this country we are somewhat like fire brigades: quite content to put out fires whenever they occur. We do not prevent crime. In any event, the methods the government claims to apply have clearly proved to be inefficient to fight against crime at its source.

Our judicial system is weak in many regards. When one knows how judges are appointed, one wonders about the quality of their decisions, since appointments to the bench are political in nature. Is it any wonder then that at times people lose faith in the administration of justice? I say that is serious, because when the day comes when citizens lose confidence in the administration of justice, one of the three fundamental powers in our country, the executive, the legislative and the judiciary, we reach the point where concern about the future becomes acute. The mechanism for the appointment of judges should also be revised.

Our crime prevention methods will have to be re-assessed. It is not enough to say that a royal inquiry will be carried out: most of all, we will have to know exactly what will be investigated, what powers the commission will have. I think we have to know. For the experience to be valuable, to be more than the mere public display of ruffians connected with organized crime, we will have, Mr. Speaker, to take that opportunity to re-assess our methods for preventing crime, juvenile delinquency, to know how delinquents are dealt with, how much money is invested.

Mr. Speaker, we will have to ask ourselves what crime is, and here I thank the mover of the New Democratic Party for making the House aware of that issue and giving us the opportunity to speak. They say they will fight organized crime. Some call for the establishment of a public inquiry. So, what is a crime? Is it, Mr. Speaker, when somebody is deprived of certain rights? Is it somebody's action which deprives ofthers and society of their rights? Just what is a crime? Is it strictly a question of murder? In that case, we will have to speak particularly of crime, of its commercial aspect and this is a point which I find highly interesting.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Crediters have spoken about it long ago and I am sure that the minister is going to find it amusing and is going to say that Social Credit members always manage to talk about the Bank Act, even when debating a motion on organized crime. But from our point of view, Mr. Speaker, the bank system is very close to organized crime. I see that the minister finds it amusing. If he wants to find it amusing, there will be two of us to be amused. Here is a list of about 700 to 800 workers from my riding who are threatened with the loss of their holiday pay because plants will be closing and because the creditors will act under section 88 of the Bank Act.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a direct theft which will be made on the workers' back. The closing of those plants will take place on July 1 if nothing is done to stop it in the meantime and if the government does not intervene. These plants, Mr. Speaker, are not typical of our area, as one finds them throughout Quebec. They make furniture. It is not a final decision, but according to our information, and we have every reason to believe it is accurate, the holiday pay will not be paid to these employees because the creditors are hiding behind the famous section 88 of the Bank Act. Who pays for these holidays? It is a deduction from the worker's pay to pay him holidays when the time comes. He earns this money by the sweat of his brow, by the long working hours which he has worked. It is not a theft, it is a right. This holiday pay belongs to him. On top of losing his job, Mr. Speaker, when he has been working in a factory for 10, 15 or 20 years, he is about to lose his holiday pay, currently known as the 4 per cent. This is commercial fraud. This is not part of organized crime for the government. Banks can act and behave just as they want, there is no problem—

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): It is a legal theft!

Mr. Fortin: As my colleague, the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) suggests, it is a legal theft. Mr. Speaker, the worst bandits are not necessarily people who got locked up by the police. There are a good number of them who are still at large and who, under the cover of law, as civil servants or as presidents of banks, think nothing of exploiting others. Regarding loansharking, for example, the government says that it is going to introduce a bill against loansharking—

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): They are the ones who allowed this.

Mr. Fortin: What a joke! If we had loansharking, it was precisely because this government allowed it. The government says it is going to control loansharking, but at the same time it is lending money to the government of Quebec to build low-cost housing for old people, at an interest rate of 10 per cent, with compound interest calculated every three months.

That is another type of legal robbery, but that is not considered as organized crime: it is legalized, it is part of the rules of the game. Mr. Speaker, after hearing what the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) had to say, a man whom I hold in deep respect, I suggest that he has handled this matter quite superficially. When it comes to setting up a royal inquiry commission on organized crime, I agree for the basic reason that this will help us create some awareness among the Canadian people. On the other hand, I would agree with it provided the mandate of this royal inquiry commission is enlarged to include a study on the effects of the implementation of the bank system in Canada. What is happening in the bank system is quite important, but he seems to find it funny. As if it were a joke! But it is far from being funny when one considers that our fellow citizens are left out to struggle with certain sections of the Bank Act.

I suggest this is legalized robbery and that the government has no right to close its eyes on such practices. A while ago, I was listening to the Solicitor General. I would like this to be my last remark, he sounded very serious, very committed in the fight against organized crime, yet, at the same time, he is the man who abolishes capital punishment. Isn't that a feat of logic! The abolishment of capital punishment simply shows today that killing is not a serious matter: any man can do what he wants. Oh, sure, he is going to be penalized, all he has to do is post bail and he simply gets out, right in the street. What about the National Parole Board? It is the same thing with them, everything is fine; it is almost a vacation board for some prisoners, this one comes back, the other gets out and that other one is travelling.

We are about to see on the roads a new type of signs: Warning—Prisoners crossing. Yes, they are about to do it. When I was a little boy, I could see warning signs that read! Caution—Animals crossing. But now what we will see is this: Caution—Prisoners crossing. Yes, they get in, they get out and they move around. No wonder Canadians are generally preoccupied with this matter. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) sat on the committee that reivewed penitentiaries and he visited some. Take a look at the recommendations of that committee. They were unanimous and quite positive. Mark my words: Within three or five years from now, this very subject will again be debated in the House. We will only find out that the results will have been almost zilch just as what came out of all previous royal inquiry commission. This is why I say that in principle I cannot disagree with the proposition of the New Democratic Party concerning the establishment of a royal commission. But this proposition is not enough to show that we really want to fight organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, we have an alternative: If we want law and order, we will adopt mechanisms and legislation proving that we are serious and consequently we will punish those who violate the law and encourage those who abide the law. I think that is essential. The government must think twice before off handedly dismissing this proposition. On the other hand, I invite my colleagues of the NDP to specify what will be the extended terms of reference they wish to give this commission.

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox), as the minister to whom the RCMP reports, has given a full and comprehensive statement on behalf of the government on the motion before the House. However, I want to cover very briefly a few points that result from the statement of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

First, I want to say to him that he asked us to be non-political and then he proceeded himself to be immensely political, as did the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Surely there is no disagreement in the House, on either side, that we must search continuously to find in this country the most effective means of combatting organized crime. Little is achieved in the search for the most effective method by trying to turn this into a political argument or trying to attack the motives of this or that party. I am saddened by the political approach that the hon. member for New Westminster took to this whole issue. Our objectives in the House have been, and continue to be, to find the most effective way to deal with organized crime. Its influence in Canada is pervasive, it is vicious, and it is costing our economy millions of dollars and countless lives. Its addition to the crime picture in Canada is frightening to all of us involved.

The CBC, in its program, has brought to a wider public some knowledge and recognition of the problems in this country relating to organized crime. But I want to make it clear, as did the Solicitor General, that that program brought forward nothing that was new—most of it was already public knowledge—and certainly nothing that was not already known to law enforcement officers across the country. The hon. member for New Westminster seemed to think that that program has suddenly put a new light on organized crime in law enforcement circles. That is without foundation.

It would seem to me that the most important thing in debating this motion is that we want, and it seems to me that the people of Canada want, not inquiries but action. They want to see people investigated, charged, prosecuted effectively, and incarcerated in our penitentiaries. As the Globe and Mail, with which I often disagree, said the other day in an editorial on this issue—they were referring to an attorney general—"He talks of an inquiry. We have had inquiries. What we need is prosecutions". I totally agree with that.

The Solicitor General has pointed out in his statement the methods that Canadian police forces are using by joint force operations to get prosecutions. To bring an air of reality to this debate I would like to read into the record a statement that was issued a few moments ago in Toronto by three of this country's major police forces, the metropolitan police force, the Ontario provincial police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It reads:

> The metropolitan police force, the Ontario provincial police and the RCMP have been aware from the beginning that the CBC was involved in a research program in order to produce a documentary exposing some aspects of organized crime in Canada. We have all viewed the program and we will comment on it as it pertains to Ontario. We make no comment on the factual accuracy of what was shown on this program. However, as far as we are concerned there were no new facts of any investigative evidentiary value that were disclosed.
> We recognized for some time that organized crime is active in Ontario. The three forces represented have been continually working to prosecute those persons involved in such criminal activities. These investigations have been carried out independently as well as in combined force operations. In respect of a number of people mentioned in the documentary, in so far as Ontario is concerned, there have been prosecutions and convictions and charges are pending against others.
>
> For example, Papalia along with Sheldon Swartz was recently convicted of extortion and sentenced to six years in prison. Cotroni and Violi were also convicted of extortion and while the convictions have been quashed by the Ontario Court of Appeal, leave to appeal that decision to the Supreme Court of Canada is currently being sought by the attorney general's department. Paul Volpe has been charged with conspiracy to defraud. This case is currently before the courts.
> In the past five months, combined force operations have charged in excess of 60 people whom we have identified as being involved in organized crime in Ontario. Charges have been laid ranging from extortion in connection with loansharking, counterfeiting, fraud, gambling, offensive weapons and drugs. The three forces are also continuing to enhance their efforts towards prosecuting persons involved in organized crime. This approach is in accordance with the public statement made by the solicitor general of Ontario, the hon. Mr. MacBeth, on April 19, 1977. The province of Ontario has provided the OPP with additional resources and the attorney general, the hon. Mr. McMurtry, has assigned prosecutorial staff from his ministry to handle the prosecution and to provide legal advice to the police during the investigation.

I would say, parenthetically, that the Solicitor General indicated in the House the other day that the same situation prevails in this government. When the government announced the restraint program on government expenditures, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) explicitly exempted from those restraints law enforcement officers and the RCMP. I continue to read the statement issued, as follows:

Organized crime can, of course, not be combatted by the police alone, we require the support of the public, the other components of the criminal justice system and our legislators. For example, speedy passage is required of amendments to the wiretap legislation which will permit us to more effectively investigate organized crime. Many of the amendments proposed in Bill C-51 are good ones but in our view they do not go far enough because they do not provide any effective expanded authority to wiretap in relation to organized crime. We understand that the CACP has recommended that the definition section of the legislation be changed to make this possible.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that?

Mr. Basford: If the question implies that I did, let me say that obviously I have no authority or control over the Ontario provincial police. I continue to read as follows:

● (1710)

We are unanimous in the position that a public inquiry in Ontario is not necessary at this time. With improved legislation and the support of the public and other components of the criminal justice system we are confident that with our policy of combined force operations which assist in providing effective detection and prosecution we can deal with the organized crime problem in Ontario.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Justice would permit a brief question on that interesting document.

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Leggatt: The minister has very significant experience in terms of the operations of police forces. In his experience, has he had a request from a police force that he conduct a public inquiry into itself? In his experience as Minister of Justice or as a member of parliament, has this happened?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I really do not know what relevance that question has to this debate. The motion we are debating deals with appointing a commission to inquire into organized crime, and the question relates to some investigation into police operations, so I must admit that I have no idea what connection this has with the debate.

I have consistently said in this House over the last few days when this issue has come before us that since 1975 reports tabled in this House by solicitors general, made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, by provincial attorneys general and by their police advisers, have shown that the present wiretap provisions are not effective in dealing with organized crime. When the legislation was first passed, Mr. Paul Atkey, who was a Conservative member from Toronto, worked very hard on that legislation. The scheme was that authorization to wiretap for a group of named offences could be obtained. Then there was concern that there should be some general section which would allow police authorities to use electronic surveillance against the organizers of organized crime. Wording was put into the second part of that section to deal with organized crime. We are advised by police authorities from one end of Canada to the other that that second part with that definition of organized crime is not working and that the purpose of parliament in 1974 is being defeated.
