The Beautiful.

BY REV. C. MIARTLEY. God formed the earth for beauty; it reflects His goodness and his glory! How beautiful is spring, with all her glancing streams, Freed from the bands of winter's stern control Her opening buds and freshened air; The music of her "earliest birds," Waking the silence of the budding grove With the gushing fullness of their hearts of song.

How beautiful Is early morn! The earth all bathed In dewy freshness, while the rays of light Daguerreotypes the glorious orb of day! The heavens meanwhile Are kindled with a rosy mass of tinted clouds, Like wings of cherubim presiding o'er The opening splendours of the new born day!

The rainbow. Spanning the battling chariots of the storm Is beautiful! 'Tis God's great signet ring! His glorious promise to the fair wide earth, That day and night, and fruitful years. Shall bless the world till time shall be no m How bright its tints, how rich its hues Such as may gleam from outspread wing Of soaring cherubim, or radiate from The flashing jewels in the Christian's crown.

The flowers are beautiful Whene'er they ope their starry eyes to gaze In God's free sunlight o'er a lovely world. Thank Heaven for flowers ! They have a voice that moves my heart As if an an angel's finger touched its depths. God might have made the world without a flower To shed its fragrance on the evening air; But in very goodness hath he decked the earth In flowery robes, that man might look and love The Being who hath poured so free Along the thorny path of life The gentle ministry of flowers.

The gorgeous splendour of departing day! What a world of pomp the heavens put on, As though the clouds held festival to hail The god of glory to his Western home Twould seem as if a delegation bright Of heaven-plumed angels stood around, While from his boundless urn the sun Poured forth upon the canvas of the heavens His gracious benediction, to increase The cheering glories of his rapturous farewell!

And woman, Thou art beautiful! What beauty gleams Are shining in its rays, her throne Is on thy brow, her scepter in thy hand Her language on thy lip, her light within thine

And in thy soul the harp and song That moves the world to music or to tears.

Since the first blush in Paradise Beauty hath charmed the world with harmonies. The forms, the hues, the sounds of this sweet

Abound in nature : round us they are seen In swelling blooms, the chime of waves. In bending boughs and starry eyes. In charming childhood, and the gentle kiss Of passing zephyrs, whispering as they fly,

With all its sin and woe, doth yet abound With loveliness and beauty, O what must be The beauty of that world, unmarred by sin, M hose sun doth ever shine, whose rivers roll In all the beauty of their endless flow ! The verdure of whose fields is ever green : Whose flowers are fadeless, and whose harps Are ever thrilling with the noblest songs! It doth not yet appear what we shall be," But still the heart will long to hail In that pure world the spirits of the blest; And with them seated in the bowers of bliss Look forth forever on that lovelier world! While from a harp of purer mould Shall gush the melodies of heaven!

Where beauteous fields and flowers abound
And singing birds my ears regale,
And peace wafts smiles on all around;

Here o'er a peaceful grave I stand, The grave of one whose noble sons, hough dead, shall speak to many a land Long as old Time his circles run.

Hail! noble sons of sire revered, Whose dust lies resting neath this stone And what your mission? Twas to raise,

In every place where man hath trod,
A people showing forth God's praise,
A people fearless for their God: A holy people, valiant, true;
A people filled with heavenly might;
