Selected Poetry.

THE RIVER TIME.

Of a wonderful stream is the River Time,
As it runs through a realm of seas,
With a faintless rhythm and musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep and surge sublime,
As it blends in the ocean of years.

How the winters are drifting like flakes of snow,
And the summers like birds between them,
And the years in the ebb and flow,
On the river's breast, with its ebb and its flow,
As it glides in the shadow and sheen!

There's a magical tale up the River Time,
Where the softest of airs are playing;
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical climate,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the fancies with the roses are playing.

And the name of the tale is the "Long Ago,"
And we bury our treasures there;
There are brows of beauty and bosoms of snow,
There are hearts of gold and love's love
There are trinkets and treasures of care.

There are fragments of songs that nobody sings,
There are parts of an infant's prayer,
There's a lute unswept and a harp, without strings,
There are broken vows and pieces of rings,
And the garments our loved ones used to wear;

There are hands that are waved when the Fairy shore
By the mirage is lifted in air,
And we sometimes hear through the Swag Yokes,
When the wind down the river was fair,
Of remembered for aye be that blessed tale.

All the day of our life until night;
And when evening glows with its beautiful smile,
And our eyes are closing in slumber awhile,
May the goodness of soul be in sight.

Interesting Story.
A Brave Working Girl.

"There, mother, there's something for you."

The girl, who was well nigh blooming into womanhood, threw into her mother's lap a half dozen oranges. Her mother looked up, a smile brightening her pale face, and drawing the child close to her side, kissed her most tenderly.

"I've got some good news for you, mother. Would you like to hear it?" said the girl, as she removed her bonnet and laid it on the mantelpiece.

The smile that grew brighter on the mother's face was the only answer made to the query, and the girl, standing by her mother's side and holding one of her thin hands in her own, during the long period of conversation which followed the breaking of the fever, Mrs. Wilson obtained money to meet her necessary expenses by selling some articles of furniture.

"I must have my rent of you must leave here," said the landlord one day. "You're owing me over two months rent now; so if you can't pay you must go out."

"I expect to be able to work again in a few days," answered the poor woman, who, though still very weak, was now able to be up and about, "and I will pay you just as soon as I get enough together to do so. I hope, sir?"

"No, no; I must either have my money or my room."

The words were cruel in themselves, but the tone in which they were uttered was still more cruel. The unhappy woman burst into tears, and Jennie thrust her head out of the window and looked out into the street, feeling as if her heart would break.

"Well, I'll give you till Saturday—it's now Tuesday," said the landlord. "If you don't pay up then you must leave."

Saturday came and he received his rent money. By selling some more furniture and pawning several small articles—among them being her wedding-ring—Mrs. Wilson had gathered a sufficient sum to meet the indebtedness. But when the next month came the landlord was prompt in his demand for the rent. The poor woman had not been able to resume her work and she had no money. The landlord was inexorable, and in a few days he served her with a legal notice to vacate the apartments. She secured two small rooms on the top floor of gentler sex which, through trial, sorrow and often privation, bravely fights the battle of life and is seldom deserted by fortitude, hopefulness, and self-respect.

Mrs. Wilson, her mother, was a woman who had seen better days. She had been a widow for nearly ten years. Her husband, who was a commercial traveller for a New York firm, had been killed in a railroad accident during one of his business trips. He had supported his wife and daughter very respectfully, and at the time of the disaster by which the wife was widowed and Jennie made fatherless occurred, his prospects were brightening, and he hoped ere long to be placed upon a business footing which would prove a sure step to fortune. But up to that time he had applied most of his earnings to the support of his family, and when the sudden ending of his life came the worldly possessions of the widow consisted of $200 worth of household goods and about $50 in ready money.

Although the widow was almost heartbroken by the calamity that had befallen her, after the grief had melted into a rational sorrow for the dead husband, she looked with eyes more loving than ever upon her little girl and resolved to bear her bereavement with as much fortitude as she could command and live and toil for Jennie's sake. "We shall never see papa again in this world, my darling," she said one day to Jennie, "but he will always be with us in memory, and in the remembrance of the love he bore me and you, I must make the best of our affliction. You are my only treasure now, and I shall do all I can to make your future life a happy one."

At the time of her marriage, Mrs. Wilson was employed in a millinery shop in the Boreway, and now that she must again earn her bread by the toil of her own hands she became re-employed there. Jennie was a faithful attendant at one of the public schools, and for several years the mother and daughter lived very comfortably and contentedly in some neat apartments in one of the pleasant streets on the West side. But sickness came, the mother was taken ill with fever and for weeks she lay hovering between life and death.

It was a terrible blow to Jennie—who had not reached her 10th year—and, although some kind and sympathetic friends made frequent visits to the sick chamber, she alone acted as nurse and kept "the house" in order. Several pieces of jewelry had to be sold in order to procure money to pay the doctor and purchase medicine and the common necessities of life, and during the long period of convalescence which followed the breaking of the fever, Mrs. Wilson obtained money to meet her necessary expenses by selling some articles of furniture.

"I must have my rent of you must leave here," said the landlord one day. "You're owing me over two months rent now; so if you can't pay you must go out."

"I expect to be able to work again in a few days," answered the poor woman, who, though still very weak, was now able to be up and about, "and I will pay you just as soon as I get enough together to do so. I hope, sir?"

"No, no; I must either have my money or my room."

The words were cruel in themselves, but the tone in which they were uttered was still more cruel. The unhappy woman burst into tears, and Jennie thrust her head out of the window and looked out into the street, feeling as if her heart would break.

"Well, I'll give you till Saturday—it's now Tuesday," said the landlord. "If you don't pay up then you must leave."

Saturday came and he received his rent money. By selling some more furniture and pawning several small articles—among them being her wedding-ring—Mrs. Wilson had gathered a sufficient sum to meet the indebtedness. But when the next month came the landlord was prompt in his demand for the rent. The poor woman had not been able to resume her work and she had no money. The landlord was inexorable, and in a few days he served her with a legal notice to vacate the apartments. She secured two small rooms on the top floor of an east side tenement house, and although still weak from her long illness, she returned to her work in the millinery shop. But she was unable to accomplish much and her earnings were very scant indeed. Jennie found employment in an envelope factory down town, and with their meagre wages combined they continued their fight against starvation.

But there was still further misfortune in store for them. A year later the mother was again taken ill, and this illness left her a confirmed invalid. Jennie, however, was in the enjoyment of excellent health, and she had proved herself so faithful and efficient at her work that her wages had been raised, and with the small stipend that she received each week she supported her mother and herself. Again, and then again, her pay was increased, and at the time our story opened she had become so accustomed—young and inexperienced as she was in the ways of the world—to her life of labor, and had been so encouraged by even the small increase of wages she had received that the natural buoyancy of her nature had risen above the depression of spirits which at times had made her life seem almost hopeless, and she had resolved to make the best of fate, and cheerfully work on for her mother's sake, and to look forward to the future with the hope that some day she might discover a silver lining to the cloud which had so long darkened the sky of her young life.

"Good-bye, mother," she said, when Monday morning came and she was about to leave for her new scene of labor as saleswoman in a fancy store.

"God bless you, my child," said the invalid. "I shall pray for you all day and wait your return with much anxiety."

They kissed each other, and Jennie left her humble abiding-place with a lighter heart than she had known for years. She hummed an air as she tripped down the poorly-lighted stairway of the old tenement and hurried to the store with a feeling that was akin to joyousness. She found the situation a pleasant one, and as the days went by and the spring advanced she resolved to celebrate the advent of summer by removing to a more cheerful dwelling-place. Mrs. Wilson was still invalided, but by the faithful labor of Jennie she was made comfortable, and, poor as they were, both were quite happy under the improved conditions of their moderate means of subsistence.

It was now mid-Maytime. Birds were singing in the parks, leaves were whispering from the trees, and the air was redolent with the perfume of blossoms. Only a few weeks longer and the old quarters would be exchanged for other and pleasanter ones. And Jennie was so happy. Weary as she often was when she came home at night, cheerfulness was ever her companion. Fidelity to her mother was to her a religion, and she was thankful to Heaven for the continuance of her good health and the opportunity to earn sufficient money wherewith to purchase the simple comforts which made her life to a degree pleasurable, and by which she was enabled to keep her mother from becoming the inmate of some charitable institution. It was a hard struggle for the girl to keep the wolf from the door, but nature had cast her in an heroic mould, and she never for a moment lost heart.

One evening on returning home she found her mother very ill—so ill, indeed, that she became alarmed and sent a lad, who lived with his parents in some apartments adjoining, for a doctor.

"Your mother is very sick, miss," said the doctor as he was leaving the place, after prescribing for the patient, "but I will do all I can for her."

"Oh, doctor," said Jennie, "save her for me. Do not let her die and leave me alone in the world. Doctor, doctor!"

She could say no more. Her poor heart was almost breaking, and leaning against the rickety banisters in the hallway she buried her face in her hands and wept bitterly. The doctor, who was a man of sympathetic nature, spoke to her encouragingly and tried to console her.

"I will call again in the morning," he said. "Are you all alone? Is there no one with you and your mother?"

"We are alone, doctor," she said between her sobs, "but there is a kind old lady who lives in an apartment next to ours, and she will come and stay with us to-night. Please don't fail to call in the morning, doctor."

She was now quite calm, and bidding the doctor good-evening, returned to her mother's bedside.

Oh, the weary watching by day and by night! Oh, the heart-ache! Oh, the wretchedness of that poor young heart! Oh, the loneliness! Oh, the cross that she must bear!

But the end came soon, and within a fortnight's time she sat by a coffin in which lay the body of her dead mother. The weary and overburdened spirit had taken its flight, and this faithful, resolute girl, surrounded by a number of her shopmates and a small group of sympathizing neighbors, awaited the coming of the morrow when the remains were to be borne to Greenwood and there laid at rest.

It was the first day of June when the burial took place. Nature was arrayed in her loveliest robes, the sky was cloudless, and the birds were cheerily singing in bush and tree, as the grief-stricken and now orphaned girl stood by that grave, and as she turned away and was driven back to the city, she seemed to be dazed. The ordeal of affliction through which she was passing was indeed terrible for one so young to face.

There had been a removal from the old quarters at the summer's dawn, but how different from the removal that Jennie had planned! Her mother had found a new apartment in a tenement of clay and the poor fatherless and motherless girl was now alone in the world.

Missie Haywood, one of her shopmates, invited her to her own little room in a boarding-house, and for several days Jennie was unable to leave her bed, she was so prostrated by the blow dealt her by the hand of fate. She was very weak, and many days went by before she felt strong enough to resume work. Her place in the store had been given to another, and she was obliged to get employment elsewhere. The few articles of furniture in the apartments where her mother died, she gave to the kind neighbor who had assisted her in attending to the wants of her mother, and she accepted Missie's invitation to remain with her until she had found something to do.

All the money which she had saved since the holidays, and with which she intended to secure more comfortable apartments for her mother, had been exhausted by the cost of medicine, by the doctor's fees, by the purchase of a burial-place in the cemetery, and in defraying the funeral expenses; and she was now penniless.

Many a one among her elders would have completely broken down under such a heavy load of affliction, but the steadfast resoluteness of her nature abided with her still. Her spirit, although debilitated by bitter experience, was still unbroken, and despite the anxiety, the temptations, the dangers, the possible injustice and perhaps cruelty which she might still be doomed to encounter, she, with true womanly perseverance, resolved to toil and trust to the future for some bright day when the clouds would break and the sunshine of happiness flood her pathway with its glorious light.

Day after day she answered advertisements and made personal applications for situations in stores and factories, but was unable to secure a piece; and if it had not been for the kindness of the hospitable friend whose room and bed she shared, God alone knows to what an extremity she might have been driven. She knew of no living relative in the world except an uncle who before her father's death, was living somewhere in Maine; but whether he was now living and exactly where his residence was, she knew not. She was really alone in the world.

"Oh, Jennie! I'm going to tell you something that maybe you'll like to hear," said her kind-hearted friend one evening as she returned from work. "I've got something for you to do."

In the full gratitude of her heart the poor girl burst into tears.

Minnie, "but you can manage to get along on that for the present. You can remain here with me, for I know what trouble is myself, Jennie, and it is as much as I should do to get along myself. So you just come down to the store with me, Jennie, and go to work. Heaven only knows what your friendless girls would do in this great city, so full of temptations and wickedness designed to entrap us, if we didn't sometimes stand by each other. Jennie, I am your friend, and when I heard to-day that there was a small situation vacant in the store, I at once went to the forewoman and asked her to give it to you. She thought you were too proud to take such a place, but I took the liberty of saying that you would take it. Now will you, Jennie?"

The child of affliction threw her arms around her benefactor's neck and kissed her.

Pride! It was no time for pride. The living that would come from that small stipend might be poor, but it would be better than a dependence on the generosity of her companion who had been so kind to her, and whose own life was a struggle for existence. So she accompanied Minnie to the store the next day, and went to work with all the cheerfulness she could command. She had grown quite thin, and her cheeks had lost much of their natural color, but when she found herself once more at work, earning wages for her own support, she felt the old buoyancy of spirit return; and in a few weeks she once more looked like the Jennie Wilson as she appeared when she told her mother of her intention of removing into more comfortable quarters than that June day—alas! that June day when, instead of taking up her abode in a pleasanter place, she sat in the old tenement in the presence of death.

Several years have passed since then, and her name is not Wilson now. Love came to her one day and led her to an altar where a ring was placed on her finger, and for the first time she was made happy by a husband's kiss.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was unable to do any kind of work. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me a variety of remedies, but all afforded more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and in a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored.—C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING
three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time disusing myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from indigestion and headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

The First Baromet.

In appreciation of valuable service the British Government has seen fit to confer upon Sir Charles Tupper a distinction which has never heretofore been conferred upon a native-born Canadian—that of Baronet of the Realm.

Beautiful Wolfville.

The many noted visitors who attended the Jubilee of Acadia College expressed themselves as greatly pleased with our town and surroundings.

Manitoba's Wheat.

Europe will require from 70,000,000 to 80,000,000 bushels of wheat to make up the deficiency in its own production.

Enterprise.

Messrs Clark & Dadd are removing their plant and business from Brunswick to Wolfville and the manufacture of the Ideal Washer will be carried on here.

The Fisheries Overseers have resolved instruction to notify all mill-owners and tenants that the regulation prohibiting the throwing of sawdust of mill rubbish into the various rivers will be strictly enforced on and after the first day of October next.

The members of the Executive Committee of the Associated Alumni of Acadia College desire to express their very hearty thanks to those ladies and gentlemen of Wolfville and the vicinity who rendered such indispensable services in procuring materials for tea and in the decoration of the interior of the College for the Alumni Reception.

The committee realizes that had it not been for the cheerful and self-sacrificing co-operation of the friends in Wolfville the Reception would have failed in many of its most pleasing features.

Acadia's Jubilee.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

At 10 o'clock a large number assembled for memorial service. On the platform in addition to a male choir and Miss Beattie, who presided at the piano, were Pres. Sawyer, Rev. D. A. Steele, G. O. Gates, E. M. Saunders, S. T. Rand, D. W. C. Dimock, and B. F. Simpson, Principal of St. Martin's Seminary.

The exercises were opened by prayer by Rev. D. W. C. Dimock. After which Rev. B. F. Simpson read the Jubilee hymn composed by Rev. S. T. Rand, which was handsomely rendered by choir and audience.

Dr. Saunders then announced that he had selected two texts for the occasion, found in I. Corinthians, 1, 9 and John 17, 23—"For we are laborers together with God." The address, which partook largely of the nature of an historical sketch of Acadia College, was a masterly effort.

After another hymn had been sung, Mr. H. H. Eaton presented his Memorials of the Founders of the College and of Deceased Alumni. A detailed account was given of departed alumni, which was of great interest to friends of the college. From this account we learned that of the 281 who have been here graduated 38 have passed to their reward.

AFTERNOON.

At about 3 p. m. the Governors, Senate, Faculty and Alumni formed in procession and marched, as is their custom at universities, from a position in the rear of the college around and entered from the front. The afternoon's exercises were opened by music from the choir, which rendered such efficient services in the morning.

A review was made by the president of the various subjects studied at Acadia at different periods in her history. Comparisons were made between the curriculum of the early days and that of to-day and differences noted. It was shown that the course of study had always been adapted to the requirements of the time.

After the president had finished his very able address, Dr. F. Higgins announced, on behalf of the senate, that it had been decided to confer the degree of LL. D. upon President Sawyer. This announcement was received with much enthusiasm.

President Sawyer announced that three of the original board of governors were still living, viz., Messrs E. A. Crawley, D. D., John Pryor and I. E. Bill, the first of whom occupied a prominent position on the platform. As the venerable Dr. Crawley arose the audience arose and gave three cheers. The Dr. was greatly affected by this spontaneous outburst of esteem and in a few well-chosen remarks returned his sincere thanks for it.

college, and who was called upon for a few words. It was of one who had resided for a long time in Wolfville and who has had ample opportunity to watch every movement of the institution and to become intimately acquainted with its history.

In the evening a public meeting was held under the auspices of the governors of the college. It had been arranged that Hon. D. McN. Parker, M. D., should preside at this meeting, but as he was unable to be present, B. H. Eaton occupied the position of chairman.

Hon. G. E. Foster, Minister of Finance, was the next speaker. "The Relation of the College to the General Prosperity of the Country," was the subject assigned him. He also regretted that he had been bound down to speak on a set subject as he would rather speak on something else more in line with the feelings that had been awakened since his arrival in Wolfville.

The only true test of a country's prosperity is the measure of its products and the amount of its productive power, including the mental and the spiritual. To base one's calculation on the material alone would not do. The church, the schoolhouse, the college, must be taken into account.

Waste is the greatest foe of prosperity. In this respect waste may be divided into three classes, viz.—the waste of ignorance, of idleness, and of dissipation. The college is the best corrective of waste. It is a centre of mental development and of mental training.

Another influence was the association of students among themselves. He fully agreed with one speaker, who had preceded him during the Jubilee exercises when he said that next to a mother's love, nothing is so sweet and soothing as the attachments formed at college.

The college has a conservative influence. It is a centre of patriotism and loyalty. Students come to college from different parts and thus become acquainted with each other and thus become interested in the various places these students represent. The college thus affects the general prosperity of the country, because it has produced an influence of the unit of prosperity—the individual—and that influence is magnified a thousandfold.

morality and mental culture. Let us stand by our schools and colleges and the Christian education of our boys and girls who are to become units in the development of the life of the future and our efforts shall meet a sure reward.

Dr. Foster was followed by Prof. Wm. Elder, of Colby University, on "The Demands of the Public on the College." As Prof. Elder arose he was greeted with more than ordinary applause, which showed that he still occupies a very warm place in the affections of Acadia's friends.

Having proved the claim of the law, what rights has he to demand of the college? 1. He demands that the advantages the college offers must be accessible. This involves that the college be equipped and that the cost be within his reach. 2. Good physical training is a necessary part of a college. For the want of which many students have found early graves.

Those whose duty it is to teach should not heed the clamor men may raise about dogma and creed, but treat it as the noisy babble of the word peddler. Prof. Elder's address was a most complete and concise plea for his client and was well received by the audience.

Rev. C. Goodspeed's address on "The Claims of the College on its Constituency," formed the closing part of the exercises. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, the large majority of the audience remained to hear this very able exposition of the subject.

These Jubilee exercises mark an important event in the history of the institutions located at Wolfville. They have been attended by the greatest number of people that ever came together at any public gathering here. Their result must be good. This Acadia's Jubilee was a brilliant success, no one will doubt. We think all who were present went away well satisfied and will long remember the feast of good things enjoyed at the semi-centennial gathering.

We regret that our space forbids a fuller report of the general proceedings and addresses, but nothing short of a complete copy of the latter would do them justice.

Address to Dr Sawyer.

To Rev. A. W. Sawyer, D. D., President of Acadia College:

HONORED AND DEAR SIR,—We, the undersigned, members of the alumni of Acadia College, desiring to express in some practical manner the feelings which we entertain for yourself personally, as well as our continued loyalty and attachment to Acadia College, of which you are the honored president, take this opportunity to present you with this token of our esteem and affection.

Although we have gone out from Acadia, and have mingled for a time in the busy whirl of life we have not forgotten the lessons we learned, the associations we formed, or the healthful influence thrown around us during our student days; and we recall with special gratitude the advantage we received in mind and character by personal contact with yourself. As the obligations of life press upon us and the duties of each hour make demands upon health and brain calling for the truest and best within us to meet and satisfy them, we revert with deep thankfulness to the fact that in all your relations to us, you aimed at giving us not only intellectual culture, but that higher equipment which elevates the motives, develops the character and exalts the man.

Permit us to state further, that while you have so materially aided in training the minds and moulding the characters of the students under your charge, you have not failed to reach their hearts, and you have been all the more successful in the former because you have succeeded in the latter; so that to-day, whenever one of your former pupils is to be found, who is a true son of Acadia, there you have a warm and devoted friend.

We congratulate you on the prosperity of the college during your administration, and we feel fully assured that success is owing in a large measure to the wise and efficient manner in which you have managed her interests. We congratulate you also on this joyous jubilee season, and we encourage the hope that this is but the beginning of brighter days for Acadia College, and that the plans, matured by yourself and your coadjutors for her future prosperity, may receive such hearty and sympathetic co-operation from all her friends, that in the years to come she may even more worthily represent the truest ideal of culture and attract to her halls, in greater numbers the thoughtful, aspiring youth of our land.

BERWICK TIMES.

NEWS, NOTES, JOTTINGS, ETC.

Rev. D. O. Parker is our representative in Berwick, and is prepared to take orders for job printing and advertising. We are constantly adding to our plant, and will give prompt attention to all work. Get our prices.

We learned incidentally that a W. C. T. U. was organized in Berwick last Friday, but have not been furnished with any particulars.

Mr Beeler contemplates leaving Berwick next week to take charge of an organ factory in Huntington, Quebec. His family, however, will remain here till spring.

Mr Parker has a fine show of furniture in his new warehouses. He represents this paper in Berwick and takes subscriptions for it and orders for advertisements and job printing.

The Baptist Sabbath school will go on a picnic excursion to-morrow, Saturday, to Harborville, and the Methodists will have a tea meeting at the same place on the 13th inst.

Last Sabbath the Rev. Mr Goodspeed editor of the Messenger and Visitor, St John, preached in Aylesford in the morning and in Berwick in the evening. His discourse here was a masterly elucidation of the terms life and death as used in the sacred scriptures.

The King's Co. Sunday School Convention held its third annual session in Berwick on Tuesday. All the meetings were large, enthusiastic and interesting. It was pleasing to notice that many of the delegates were the sound representative business men of the county. This augurs well both for the continued usefulness and prosperity of the Convention and the increased interest and usefulness of the S. S. of our county. F. W. Chipman, Esq., superintendent of the Presbyterian S. S., Kentville, was unanimously elected president for the ensuing year and Rev. W. Dawson of Canard was re-elected secretary. In the evening the large audience room of the Baptist church was crowded. One of the most noticeable features of the meeting was a paper by Miss Fitch of Wolfville on Individuality in Sabbath-School work. The essay was admirable in conception and most chaste, concise and finished in expression and listened to with wrap interest and attention. The next annual session will be held in Canaan. In due time the secretary will furnish our readers with a full and official report of the meeting.

Cucumbers and Pickles.

To the Editor of the ACADIAN:

DEAR SIR,—Last spring certain persons going into the pickling business offered us 50c. per bushel for cucumbers. That was less than one cent per lb. Then we were offered one cent per lb. Now I understand that one cent and a half is offered. For the producer this is little better than working for nothing and finding yourself; for the manufacturer this is giving him all the profit. Let us see. Passing by the unknown quantity that an acre of land will, or it is said to produce under certain circumstances, we know that cucumber pickles can be manufactured for about 2 1/2 cents per lb. The selling price to the trade, with the protective tariff on it is 8c. per lb. They retail for 10c. and 12c. making an enormous profit. This gives the manufacturer 4 cents per lb.—a little too much! Now, as there is a "combine" in pickles, as well as in almost everything else we buy, I suggest that we, the producers, make a combine and charge at least 3c. per lb. for cucumbers. This will give the manufacturer a profit of 3c. per lb., quite enough, and we cannot profitably raise them for less. PRODUCE.

DOCK BLOOD PURIFIER.

I have been sick with Liver and Kidney Complaint and night sweat, for over two years, most of the time confined to my bed. A doctor attended me who failed to cure me; and after trying many patent medicines that were recommended for the above complaints, which failed also, I was advised to try Dozer Norton's Dock Blood Purifier; three bottles has entirely cured me, and I now enjoy the best health I have for twenty years.

Dandruff, Baldness, Thin or Crev Hair.

Everyone knows how disagreeable it looks to see Dandruff falling from the head to the shoulders of either lady or gentleman. The head may be washed ever so often but it will not clean out this evil. The best way to get rid of the affliction is by the application of Simson's Liniment, say three times a week, just before retiring at night, first washing the head thoroughly with warm water and castile soap. It will cost you but 25 cents to give it a trial, and who but could take pride in a fine glossy head of hair without any appearance of Dandruff. Mr E. Renault, agent of Crown Lands, St Thomas, Quebec, writes: "I have used Simson's Liniment as a hair invigorator and can certify to its wonderful effect for the growth of hair and cleaning of the scalp. I feel assured it will in nearly every case prevent the hair from coming out."
