A Millionaire; or, Countess Westerleigh.

CHAPTER I.

"Yes," said Tyers, softly, "and people will stare at me as if I were a kind of monstrosity, and they'll ask me to their houses and treat me as if I were a freak of nature and quite interesting—really quite interesting. Why, they do it now. But no one will make a friend of me; no one will give me his daughter in marriage, because no one will be able to answer the question: 'Who was he?'"

A faint, dusky red had crept up into his cheek, and a bar of yellow light crossed the pupils of his dark eyes, as he gazed at the gray, angry sea.

"What rot!" said Vane.
"No, you know it is true enough. Now, you"—he shrugged his shoulders—"you can neither paint nor carve; you can do nothing but ride and shoot, and wear your clothes as if they grew on you. But everybody receives you with open arms. You are Vane Tempest, the grandson of the Earl of Westerleigh—one of the elect—one of themselves; and if you only had a few thousand a year they would welcome you as a son-in-law. No woman eyes you askance and with covert insolence. You said just now that I was a woman-hater." He broke off.

Vane nodded, and pitched a stone at a sea-gull that skimmed close by them.

"I've reason for being one. Take an instance. The other day I was painting a lady's portrait. She is a very great lady—young, beautiful—so beautiful that I am driven half mad with despair as I paint her; and once or twice I have been on the point of dashing the sharp end of the brush through the canvas, and telling her that I can not and will not go on with the libel, which no doubt the mob of ignorant fools will call a good likeness. Well, the other day, while she was sitting to me, she dropped her handkerchief. I picked it up and offered it to her. She stretched out her hand absently to take it, then lifted her eyes, saw me—she had forgotten my existence—and murmured, with the courteous coldness of an iceberg: 'Thanks; please put it on the table.' She is as proud as she is beautiful—so proud that she could not take her handkerchief from my hand; my touch had polluted it!"

His face was pale, and his dark eyes gleamed under their half-lowered lids.

"Oh, nonsense!" exclaimed Vane, abruptly. "You were quite mistaken. She—well, I suppose she thought she might drop it again, and give you the trouble of picking it up a second time."

Tyers smiled incredulously.
"Thanks; but I am afraid I can't accept that consolation. You did not see the look that accompanied her words; I did. Besides, it wasn't the first time she had lashed me with her scorn. God! how I hate them all! What I would give to have lived over there in France in the Reign of Terror when the people arose against the aristocrats! I could have butchered with the rest; I could have danced round the guillotine; I could have seen their heads drop to the tune of 'Ca Ira,' and felt a keen thrill of joy at every head; I could have said to her: 'Florence Heathcote, my Lady Florence, you were too proud to stoop to take a handkerchief from my hand; you shall stoop that haughty head of yours to the block, while I look on—and laugh!"

His breath failed him, his low voice, which had grown lower, not higher, toward the finish, died away; his face was ashen white, his eyes gleaming with a vindictive fire.

Vane stared at him. He had never seen his friend in this humor before. "Halloo, Sen!" he said, at last; "what a red-hot Republican you must be! And so you'd stand by and see Lady Florence guillotined, eh?" and he laughed.

Senley Tyers started and looked round, as if he had suddenly realized that he had been talking aloud, and not to himself.

Instantly his face changed back to its usual listless cynicism. "Did I mention her name?" he said; "I didn't intend to do so. Perhaps—" He smiled, and his voice grew smoother and softer. "No doubt, indeed, your explanation of her little action is the correct one."

"Sure of it; all fancy on your part, my dear fellow!" said Vane, lightly. "Florence is rather proud, I'll confess. You see, the fellows, everybody, spoils her, she's so confoundedly good-looking; but she wouldn't treat a gentleman in the way you imagine."

"A gentleman—no," said Tyers. Then he checked himself. "Forget what I said, Vane," he said, biting his lip.

"Of course," assented Vane. "The fact is, my dear fellow, you have got a fit of the blues; and upon my soul, this place is quite enough to produce one. Never mind; you won't have it stay in it much longer. Here comes the landlord. I've no doubt he's got a horse for me and a trap for you. I'm deuced sorry you can't go on with me—but, by George, I wouldn't let you; it was too good of you to come thus far."

Senley Tyers shrugged his shoulders. "I'll go back to town and work," he said. "I shall await with some curiosity the result of your interview with the mysterious uncle. Look me up when you come back."

"Of course," said Vane.

Lost Carload of Silver Ore.

In June, 1908, there was shipped from the Cobalt district, Canada, a car containing 14 tons of ore worth about $2,000 a ton. The ore was consigned to a smelter at Perth Amboy, and John Black, one of the Cobalt pioneers and the shipper of the ore, just had to have money in a hurry to carry on his operations. It was the first lot of ore shipped from his mine, and was dispatched in such haste that Mr. Black forgot to take down the number of the car or to get a receipt for his ore. Just what happened to that car Mr. Black has been trying to find out ever since. The ore never reached its destination and search for nearly five years has failed to bring to light a single pound of the ore.

For egg-and-press sandwiches, rub several hard-boiled eggs through a sieve; season the mixture with salt, pepper and lemon juice. Mix it well with butter to a rich paste. Spread some white or brown bread, evenly buttered, rather generously with this; then sprinkle one half with plenty of finely chopped fresh cress and press them together.

One in a Thousand, BUT TRUE TO THE LAST

CHAPTER XXV.

Then I lean my head on my hands and think. I should like to write a line to my old "daddy." It is hard upon him, for he has never wronged me in any way. Yes, I will send him a line, and some day, if he will keep my secret, he may come here and see me. I carry out my resolve quickly, and write a long letter, telling him all about my trouble, and saying that, if he will promise not to betray me, I will send him my address. I ask him to send his reply to the "Times" office; and then I write a short note to Capt. Langholme, to tell him that I have taken his advice, and ask him to procure any answers which may come for me. And then I go for a drive with Mrs. de Vought and dine with her, meeting half a dozen of what she calls "nice people."

There is a baron, as a matter of course; but what is not at all a matter of course, he is young and attractive. He is particularly and especially proud of his English, and most anxious to show it off, and at the same time improve it, by devoting himself to me. I cannot but smile at the idea of receiving the marked attentions of a Dutch baron when all the while my heart is yearning and crying out wildly for Adrian. I hate all men now equally. What woman could for a moment endure one after Adrian, my fair Norwegian, my fire eater, my Berserker? Theo tried it and she could not. I am convinced without trying.

There is a very charming girl of about my own age, the daughter of a professor, who would not at all object to take my place; but the Baron Nagel seems to prefer my wash-out fairness to Margaretha von Rosenfeld's dark loveliness. I wonder at his taste, but then, the fancies of men are so very strange—almost past belief or astonishment.

A week later I receive a thick packet from Capt. Langholme. It contains a letter from my father and one from my husband. I look long and greedily at the large square envelope, just such another as that one which lies in the middle drawer of my dressing case, at the careless, yet firm, writing; but I do not open it. My love for him is still so intense that I cannot bear to read his excuses, which I cannot believe. Great cause as he has given me to despise him, I shrink from acknowledging, even to myself, that he is other than the noble man I believed him to be when I married him. I know so well what he will say—that he never intended to make any difference, that I fancied a great deal more passed between him and Theo than did so in reality. Ah, yes! Once I, too, thought it might be only fancy, and fought against it with the desperation of despair, never yielding until the truth was forced upon me with a certainty which nothing can ever explain away. No; I will not listen to explanations, which will only make me more unhappy, so I lay the letter down, and take up my father's.

An I expect, it is heartbroken in tone, and brings the hot tears welling to my eyes; it ends with a reproach that I can hesitate for an instant in trusting my old "daddy" with any secret. Well, it was unkind—I must tell him so; but, then, I was almost mad. I did not consider what was kind or cruel; my great desire was to get quite away. It will not matter much—my old "daddy" will forgive me. It is with a sigh that I take up Capt. Langholme's note.

"I have no doubt, from the heavy letter which I found addressed to you in Charteris' writing at the Times office, that he has pleaded his cause pretty well; but one thing I must tell you, which may be in his favor. This afternoon, when I went up to town to get the letters, I met him in St. James', and, without any exaggeration whatever, I never saw any man look so altered in all my life; he looked as if he had not slept for a week, and ten years older."

"Ten years older!" I repeat the words over and over again. Can it be possible that all along I have been mistaken? Is it true that he feels the loss of me—that he has sent in his papers and is leaving his regiment on my account? I lay my hand on his letter again, and am just about to open it, when my eyes fall upon Capt. Langholme's, and I catch sight of the one word, "Theo." It is a magical word with me, for it impels me to finish the letter.

"I don't know whether you see any English papers, but there is an announcement in this morning's Post, that Theo, Viscountess Lasselles, is engaged to Col. Cardyllon, of the Cuirassiers. Considering that Lasselles has been dead so short a time, I think it is not only premature, but absolutely indecent."

Theo, Viscountess Lasselles, engaged to Col. Cardyllon! Ah, that is the most cruel sting of all! It is on her account, not mine, that Adrian looks ten years older and as if he had not slept for a week. I know it could hardly be true, though my foolish heart hoped it was.

I answer my father, immediately giving him my address, and returning Adrian's letter unopened. "And tell him," I say, "that it is of no use his writing to me again; I will neither read his letters nor hold any communication with him whatever; and if he tries to seek me out, I shall have to disappear again."

In answer to this I receive a telegram to say that my father is coming to me at once; and a few hours later he arrives.

Light of the Night.

Interesting work to be done on the "Light of the Night." Well, it doesn't seem to be a very big thing, but it is interesting to call it exactly what it is, interesting to see a stationary vessel with miles of water all round, with the same day as at a time, the same half-dozen of duties, the same half-dozen of hours, and no letters or news whatever—there are times when the monotony and monotony are almost unbearable. Still, it is an interesting thing to outsiders.

As you probably know, a lightship is put to mark the position of a dangerous shoal where it is not possible to erect a lighthouse, and it carries a warning light, at the masthead. There are fifty-two such lightships in the world, all of which are entirely maintained by the Elder Brethren of the Trinity Corporation. They say the cost roundly may be about £70,000 a year.

As a Ball of Fire.
Rather a queer thing to look at, a lightship. In fact, it is little more than a hull with three bare masts. The mainmast is a good 100 feet tall, and the other two are the tallest of the great warning lightships. The lantern weighs less than half a ton, is octagonal in shape, and holds nine oil lamps, 12,000 candle power.

The lights are all white, and the lantern revolves round the mast in the night time. It is lit by a great ball of fire. On a clear day, it is reckoned that the lantern can be seen for ten or twelve miles. A lightship is always lit when the fog begins to set in.

A lightship is not very big, but it is about 120 feet long with a 24-foot beam. It does not cost as much as you might think, and it is a very good thing. It is not exactly a cheap thing, but its annual initial cost is £12,000. There are two sorts of lightships, "off-shore" and "on-shore" types. The "off-shore" type is the most common, and is used to mark dangerous shoals. The "on-shore" type is used to mark dangerous shoals near the coast. The only difference being in the number of lamps carried. The off-shore type has a full crew of eleven, while the on-shore type has a full crew of seven. The officers have a month ashore, then a month ashore; but the crew have two months ashore at a time, then a month ashore.

Off the Track.
Of course, all of us on board our regular duties to perform the lamp-man looks after the lamp, keeps it in tip-top order, the signalman makes signal driver keeps engines going, and another signalman looks after the moorings and like. If it was not for the fact that there would be no bearing with loneliness of the life.

It is the duty of the lightship crew to keep a sharp look out for any vessel approaches near a dangerous shoal. Directly on seeing a vessel, they hoist their signal flag—International, which mean "You are standing danger," and fire a gun, repeating the vessel gets into the track again.

When we see a vessel making a mistake, the lightship makes the aid of the coastguard. In the day this is done by hoisting the signal D and firing gun at certain intervals till we reply.

When we want to attract the attention in the night time, we fire the guns just the same as in the day.

Now each up with a rocket. Sometimes it happens that the lightship requires assistance—the three rockets together, quarter of an hour, sent.

As to the pay, seamen get 48 shillings and lamp-men from 18s. 6d. to 54s. a day, then we get our own food, of course, but we have to give our food so that brings the money. There is a pension of ten years' service, and a man has put up with the monotony and loneliness of life aboard a lightship for ten years, he deserves some. I can tell you! It is just the monotony that wears one.

Wonderful Feats of Navigation

A remarkable feat of navigation was accomplished by Captain G. Charlton, who sailed the Liverpool ship Harold, a vessel of 1,295 tons, laden with wheat, into Queen's Harbour a few days ago. Charlton had brought his ship from Australia, a distance of 15,000 miles, without the aid of a single officer to find officers at Adelaide,bourne, and Sydney all failed, a captain had no alternative but to get for England with a crew—two of whom are foreigners—of navigation. The voyage lasted 108 days, and did not remove his clothes, and most of the voyage he spent on a mat, snatches of sleep in a deck on the poop of the ship.

Light of the Night.

Interesting work to be done on a lightship. Well, it depends on how you look at things. Some folk might call it exactly interesting to be on a stationary vessel with miles of water all round, for two months on end at a time, with the same daily round of duties, the same half-dozen companions, and no letters or newspapers—there are times when the loneliness and monotony are just awful, and men on a lightship have been known to come almost to hate each other. Still, it is an interesting life to outsiders.

As you probably know, a lightship is sent to mark the position of a dangerous shoal, where it is not possible to erect a lighthouse, and it carries a warning light at the masthead. There are fifty-two such lightships floating at anchor round the British Isles, all of which are entirely maintained by the Elder Brethren of the Honourable Trinity Corporation. They say the crew roundly makes about £7,000 a year.

As a Ball of Fire. Rather a queer thing to look at is a lightship, in fact, it is little more than a hull with three bare movable masts. The mainmast is a good deal the tallest of the three, and it is on this that the great warning lantern is hoisted. The lantern weighs not less than half a ton, is octagonal in shape, and holds nine oil lamps of 1200 candle power. The lights are all white, and when the lantern revolves round the mast-head in the night time it is like a great ball of fire. On a clear night it is reckoned that the lantern can be seen for ten or twelve miles. The lantern is always lit when the sun begins to set.

A lightship is not a very big affair—about 120 feet long with a 24 feet beam. It does not cost as much as a dreadnought to build, to be sure; still it is not exactly a cheap toy—the usual initial cost is £12,000. There are two sorts of lightships—"day-lights," those which are powered by a steam engine, and those "in the dark," which in some parts may be seen from the coast. The only real difference being in the number of men carried. The day-lights ships have a full crew of eleven. The in-the-dark ships have a full crew of eight. The officers have a month aboard and then a month ashore; but the rest of us have two months afloat at a time and then a month ashore.

On the Track. Of course, all of us on board have our regular duties to perform. The lamp-man looks after the lamp, and keeps it in tip-top order; the seaman who is made signal driver keeps the engines going, and another seaman looks after the moorings and such like. If it was not for the work, there would be no bearing with the loneliness of the life. It is the duty of the lightship's crew to keep a sharp look out to see if any vessel approaches near to the dangerous shoal. Directly one is seen getting too near, we hoist two signal flags—International Code—which mean "You are standing in danger" and fire a gun repeatedly until the vessel gets into the right track again.

When we see a vessel making signals of distress, the lightship summons the aid of the coastguards or the coastguard cutter. In the day this is done by hoisting the signal flag and firing a gun at certain intervals till we get a reply. When we want to attract immediate attention in the night time we fire the gun just as the day and follow each up with "rockets." Sometimes it happens that the lightship itself requires assistance—then we fire three rockets together every quarter of an hour.

As to the pay, seamen get 4s. 1d. a day, and lamp-men from 4s. 3d. to 4s. 6d. a day, then we get our uniforms free of course, but we have to provide our food so that brings down the money. There is a pension for men of ten years' service, and when a man has put up with the monotony and loneliness of life aboard a lightship for ten years, he deserves a pension. I can tell you! It's just the monotony that wears one. Wonderful Feats of Navigation. A remarkable feat of navigation has been accomplished by Captain Charles Charlton, who sailed the Liverpool ship Harold, a vessel of 1,200 tons, laden with wheat, into Queenstown Harbour a few days ago. Captain Charlton had brought his ship from Australia, a distance of 15,000 miles, without the aid of a single officer. Efforts to find officers at Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney all failed, and the captain had no alternative but to set out for England with a crew—all but two of whom are foreigners—ignorant of navigation. The voyage lasted 108 days. For one period of six weeks the captain did not remove his clothes, and during most of the voyage he could only obtain snatches of sleep in a deck-chair by the poop of the ship.

Fall Drives Hairpin Into Woman's Skull.

Calgary, Alta., August 7.—When the teeth of Barrett, the strong man, gave way in an aerial act at the Empire Theatre yesterday afternoon, a woman swinging from a strap held in the mouth of her fellow performer fell to the stage, and received injuries which rendered her unconscious for some time and which were at first thought to be of a very serious character. A hairpin driven into her skull, narrowly missed penetrating her brain.

Woman Usurer Got 2,000 per cent.

Edinburgh, Scotland, Aug. 9.—At Snethwick Police Court, Matilda Vale, of Snethwick, was charged with failing to register herself according to the provisions of the Moneylenders' Act.

Mr. Sharpe, for the prosecution, explained that the woman had for some time been acting as a moneylender, lending small sums to working people. She had been charging some two pence in the shilling a week for small sums, and in some cases two shillings for five shillings. The former rate of interest was 800 per cent per annum, and the latter 2,000 per cent per annum.

One woman in the witness box stated that she borrowed one pound, and paid six shillings a week interest. She did this for eight weeks, and still owed the one pound principal. Another witness who borrowed ten shillings, paid back two shillings a week. The magistrate's clerk said this was five pounds four shillings a year for five years.

The magistrate considered the case a serious one and imposed a fine of 25 pounds sterling and costs.

Begger Makes Many Thousands.

New York, August 8.—At Atlantic City, recently, E. L. Jones, a one-legged man, was arrested, and fined $10 for begging. He had been ordered away from the famous board-walk but had immediately taken station on Atlantic Avenue. He took his arrest nonchalantly, producing a roll of bills and a consigned mortgage for $10,000.

"I have made over a hundred dollar here in Atlantic City," said Jones. "Have a cigar; I cleared $10,000 on a trip through the West on a begging trip and paid off the balance on a $15,000 ranch I own in Yanktown. My trip this time is to get $10,000 to buy some new stock; I'll get it. He paid the fine and was helped to an out-bound train.

For five years a blind man sat on a corner of Madison Street in Chicago and begged. The police purpose overlooking him. A runaway horse one day ran up to the sidewalk and struck him. He was six weeks in hospital. When he was discharged he began suit for damages against the owner of the horse. He almost had it won when the opposing lawyer asked him what he was doing when he was struck. He said he was engaged in his usual occupation. Pressed for reply he owned up he was begging. The only defence the opposing lawyer had, had before was that the blind man had his right on the street without an attendant. He was not making much headway in this defence.

The blind man lost when it became known that he was soliciting alms. Going out of court he evinced a most unmovable temper. He spat in the direction of the opposing lawyer and in a loud voice declared he could buy and sell him out. He showed great rolls of bills and boasted that his own net assets were worth $50,000. The judge detached him and only refrained from punishing him for contempt of court by the greatest effort. It was afterwards learned that the man had paid for a life home in a blind institution when he should decide to quit begging.

There was a man in St. Louis who could count and tie himself up in such shapes that he had every appearance of a paralytic, barely able to shuffle around. He frequented the busier streets and begged most profitably. Several women answered an advertisement on Sunday which offered a place to a good housekeeper. It was the "paralytic" who inserted it. He offered good wages, but one of the conditions was that the housekeeper should bring him his lunch every day. Inquiries revealed to the startled applicants that they were expected to bring the food to a street corner where their employer would be found begging. He laughed at their indignation and boasted that he had made $65,000 at that corner and did not intend to abandon it.

Milkmen to the Metropolis.

How London Ensures its Daily Flood of Lactical Fluid. "So much milk is sent up to London, and the price is so high, that poor people in country districts have simply to go without it," was the startling statement made by Lady Meyer at the conference of the National Food Reform Association the other day. "But is it not surprising after all, when we remember what a mighty volume of milk the people of the Metropolis consume every year—about 112,000,000 gallons, for which they pay annually about five million pounds. There is no city of magnitude in the world that can compete against London with its milk supply."

To Fresh Fields. About fifty years ago the milk that was consumed in London mostly came from districts within the metropolitan area. But foot and mouth disease broke out among the cows, and it was then that London experienced a real milk famine. It was at this time that a far-seeing man—Sir George Barham—thought of getting milk from the healthy cows in Wilts and Hants.

London's greatest supply of milk comes from Wilts, but large quantities come also from Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Hampshire and Surrey. Milk has come to London even from Wales, Ireland, and Penance; and in a few rare instances, from Scotland. The following figures represent approximately the number of churns which are brought by different railways to London every year (each churn contains about fourteen gallons of milk):

Great Western Railway, 1,200,000 churns. Great Northern Railway, 400,000 churns. Midland Railway, 344,000 churns. London and Brighton Railway, 255,000 churns.

All these railways took to the enterprise from the beginning, and what then proved an ill-paying item is now one of the most flourishing; and keen competition exists in counties which are traversed by more than one railway company. Special trains led to the building of special milk vans and the movement towards sanitary insulation led to improvements, which were not dreamt of at an earlier day.

Every line has its refrigerating vans with special accessories for excluding dust and all kinds of germs. The latest pattern of milk van belongs to the London and South-Western Railway. They are fitted like modern Pullmans with Westinghouse and vacuum brakes, oil-gas lamps, and the finer ventilation is even better than that of the best passenger coach.

Up With the Lark. The farmer, or his assistant, rises early in the morning, not solely out of consideration for the crowing of the cock or rising sun; it is the exigency of railway traffic which sets the alarm. The patient kips await in the sleds the milkmaid, or man, or boy, or automatic milking machine.

Patent strainers and coolers prepare the milk for transport. The cooler has taken the place of an old practice of surreptitiously dusting boracic acid into the churns.

In the summer, for an imperial gallon, the farmer receives 7d. and 8d., and in winter, 9d. or 10d., delivered at the London termini, and the transportation costs him one penny per gallon.

Why There Were No Interruptions. Mr. Roosevelt, in his autobiography, relates that when he was nominated for vice-president he addressed a meeting in one of the States of the high plains in the Rocky Mountains. Bryan was the favorite there. The audiences were rough and troublesome. At the end Mr. Roosevelt remarked with pride to the chairman: "I held that audience well. There wasn't an interruption."

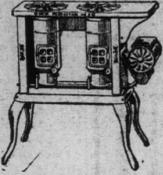

To which the chairman replied: "Interruption? Well, I guess not! Seth had sent round word that if any son of a gun peeped he'd kill him."

Seth had been sitting behind Mr. Roosevelt with a gun on each hip, his arms folded, looking at the audience, fixing his gaze with marvellous intensity on any section of the house from which there came so much as a whisper.

We do not expect the Daily News to agree with us as to the best way to insure the enforcement of the Bait Act. Our suggestion was that the best way was to turn out the Morris Government and put in a Government which would enforce the Bait Act. The Daily News of course is satisfied that the Bait Act has been satisfactorily enforced. We think our contemporary will have some difficulty in converting the Council of the Board of Trade to this view. Any way, it is clear that that body of mercantile men are not satisfied with the way the Morris Government has carried it out, and we are not surprised after the action of the Government in taking the Fiona off the work to give Governor Williams a picnic.

Last week we pointed out the irregularities practised by the Government since the House of Assembly closed of pensioning a number of Civil servants

Before leaving for Philadelphia last evening, Mr. E. Perks was presented with a gold watch and chain and the accompanying address by the Tailors' Union.

Dear Mr. Perks.—We, your fellow members of Local No. 410 Journeyman Tailors' Union of America, being aware of your departure from amongst us, to take a position at our trade in Philadelphia, U.S.A., take this opportunity to mark our appreciation of your loyalty to our Union, and to wish you every success in your adopted land. And we ask your acceptance of this small souvenir of our regard and esteem, and trust in the days to come it will be a pleasant reminder of Local No. 410 and its members.

Yours faithfully,
MAURICE COLBERT, Pres.
M. J. DOYLE, Fin. Secretary,
P. CONSTANTINE, Rec. Sec.

Last night at the Mechanics' Hall Mr. W. J. Gosse, Treasurer of the Union, was presented with a magnificent suit case and this address:—

Dear Mr. Gosse.—We, your fellow members of Local No. 410 Journeyman Tailors' Union of America, beg to tender you our heartfelt congratulations on your appointment as Cutter to E. M. Jackman Co., Ltd. We feel sure that the taste and thoroughness displayed by you in your work, whilst a journeyman, will be brought to the Cutting Table, and that you will achieve that success we all so earnestly wish you.

We also avail of this opportunity to mark our appreciation of the services you have so ably rendered our Union as its Treasurer the past seven years, and as a more tangible expression of our regard, and a slight recognition of your valuable services, request your acceptance of the accompanying present.

With renewed expression of our goodwill and wishing you abundant success in your new sphere of labor, we beg to subscribe ourselves,

Yours faithfully,
M. COLBERT, President,
M. J. DOYLE, Fin. Secretary,
P. CONSTANTINE, Rec. Sec.

During the evening, interesting speeches were made by Messrs. J. Leahy, M. Colbert and P. Hickey, whilst enjoyable songs were sung by Messrs. P. Hickey, M. Walsh, J. Snow, J. Kennedy, R. Colbert and Ed. Connelly.

Pleasing Presentation.

Mr. E. Perks, a Cadet boy, and who was a prominent representative of the C. C. C. at the Toronto Exhibition, took passage on the Allan Liner Carthaginian last evening for Philadelphia, where he will seek his fortune, but before his departure was presented with a handsome suit case by the non-commissioned officers of the Cadets. The presentation was made by Mr. J. Pagan, Battalion Sergt-Major, and elicited a brief but suitable response from the recipient.

The Asses' Tomb. Social Life in Mena's Day.

(E. G. Harmer, in the 'Christian World,' London.)

A twelve month ago, in some notes entitled "Bedsteads before History," reference was made to some remarkable finds of Professor Petrie in a sand-strewn valley about forty miles south of Cairo. They dated for the most part from a time that preceded the beginning of written history, 6,500 years ago. A second season has been spent by the trained staff of the British School in Egypt upon the same site, and the results may now be studied at University College, in Gower Street. A cemetery was unearthed of the days of Mena himself, a thousand graves were examined, and measurements were made of the bones of more than six hundred skeletons. These were all interred within the same century, and out of this piece of systematic work there emerge some interesting conclusions. The native population was dominated by a victorious race of men who came from afar, bringing no wives with them, and forming one in ten of the whole community. These men settled down to the task of government in an alien land, as your Anglo-Indian civilian does to-day, and, like him, they sought domestic happiness by wedding rustic maids, whom they wooed in the suburbs of an ancient capital of civilization which preceded the foundation of Memphis itself.

If you turn over the debris of an abandoned bungalow, in an Indian hill station, you will find fragments of native pottery and metal ware, intermingled with stray relics of things brought out from home, a cracked dinner plate from Hanley, a fractured Doulton vase. It was just the same in this old outpost of empire two thousand years and more before Abraham; here and there were found choice wares of fine finish, that seem to have been brought up the Nile from the Mediterranean trading marts of the day. But for the most part the style and workmanship of these objects attest the excellence of the native art, and as the greater number of the graves were those of the middle classes, the exhibition serves to prove the high standard of comfort attained in that age by the people at large.

That the social rank of the deceased was as varied then as now is shown by the presence of certain graves whose occupants were obviously in high repute at Court. These four-post bedsteads, carefully slotted for the linen webbing, these walking sticks, these tiny mascots of precious stone, sard and amethyst, these carved ivory spoons, these alabaster jars that were found in a heap of linen cloth, these toy falcons and scorpions, mark the luxury of the upper classes. Now and then a courtier took with him to the tomb the great alabaster jar, bearing the name of Mena himself, which was produced in the royal pottery, a sort of prehistoric Sevres. Here is a sleeping mat formed of papyrus stems, the end being coiled up to make a pillow, as comfortable as the bedding of a modern Italian. And close by there was found a triple grave, each section of it fashioned for the interment of a favorite ass, ridden in life by a prince of high degree. Until to-day, amid all the myriad relics of the ancient world that have been laid bare by the patience of explorers, the bones of this lordly beast of burden have never been revealed to the modern eye. Linger, therefore, before these bones, and remember that, 2,500 years afterwards, it fell one day that another prince, whose name was Abraham, "rose early in the morning, and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him, and Isaac his son."

The standard of material comfort attained at the dawn of written history affords matter for serious thought. Here are models in clay of the granaries of that age, fashioned in the form of towers, with apertures high in the wall to permit of the grain being loaded readily into the vessels placed beneath them. This other model must be a watering tank for the king of Egypt's earliest Pharaoh. These glazed and carnelian beads were placed about the throat of every woman when she died. These copper armlets are worn by Sudanese maidens at this very hour. For the first time it is revealed that not only the Court, but even the common people, could afford to buy vases covered with green

Dog Days.

Oh, six o'clock sun, till you get done with frying human critters, the poet's job is one long sob, and wearily he twitters! It is no trick to write a rick of pomes in Spring or Winter, to grind big loads of bughouse odes, and ship them to the printer; but when the days are all ablaze, it's rough on cross roads, the solar fires melt up their tyres and get their divers go-ats. It's hard to rhyme in summertime, in wild and woggy weather; one cannot bring the proper swing, the words won't fit together. Its hard to raise the helpful lays and keep the harp going, it's hard by heck, when down your neck four kinds of sweat are flowing. One must be strong to plan a song, to plan a song and harp it, when down his nose the wet sweat flows and drips upon the carpet. It's hard to sing a song, O jing, som enote of comfort bearing, some helpful thought to pilgrims hot, when one would fain be swearing. It's hard to rise to song when his around one's head are buzzin', which still remain when one has slain about a million dozen. It's beastly hard upon the bard to grind his August jingles, so don't abuse the pote whose muse has prickly heat and shingles.

Airship Beats Express Train.

Washington, Aug. 8.—Murray Wood, the American aviator, who to-day attempted a non-stop race in his monoplane with a train from New York to Washington and thence to Fort Myer, Va., for exhibition flights, reached his destination late this afternoon after he had been compelled to interrupt his flight on a farm near Gathersburg, Md., 16 miles from Washington. Wood won his race with the train, making the landing at Gathersburg at one minute after nine o'clock, forty minutes before the train rolled into the Union Station. He failed to break all the American records, however, he had hoped to smash, but claimed to have established new marks for non-stop flying between two points, and duration.

Killed by Pitched Ball.

Hit Over Heart; Drops Dead After Reaching First Base.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 3.—Charles Deets, twenty-two years old, of Kingston, is dead after being hit over the heart by a baseball pitched by Harry Allen, star twirler of the Anderson Club. Deets was playing with the Meeker nine and went to bat in the ninth inning. Allen wound up and about a ball with all his speed in the direction of the plate. Deets tried to get out of the way, but the ball struck him squarely over the heart. He showed no ill effects of the blow and started towards first base. When he reached the bag he fell, and when players of the opposing team reached him he was dead.

The Way to Peace.

Never a sigh through the live-long day,
Never a sigh,
But a laughing face, and a cup of joy,
As the hours flew by—
But where were the peace that follows grief
When the morrow's light has brought relief,
If never a sigh?

Never a task through the live-long day,
Never a task;
And for kindly rest by labor won,
No need to ask,
But where were the peace, when work all done,
We sit and rest at set of sun,
If never a task?

Never to part through the live long day,
Never to part;
But to walk together in weal and woe
With gladsome heart,
But where were the peace that follows pain
When several souls have met again,
If never to part?

Never a prayer through the live-long day,
Never a prayer;
But all things granted and all things won
And a truce to care,
But where were the peace that comes from heaven
With blessings sought and daily given
If never a prayer?

Never a cross through the live-long day,
Never a cross;
But all things right that are now most wrong;
All gain, no loss,
But where were the peace our days might hold
With Heaven's love ours, when earth-love grows cold,
If never a cross?

A Government expert estimates the wheat crop for the Province of Manitoba this year at 65,003,212 bushels. The acreage last year under wheat was 2,823,362 and the yield 58,433,379 bushels. The acreage this year is 2,141,218, the increase from last year being 317,856 acres.

The Empire's Resources.

Only hard figures can adequately tell the story of the resources of the British Empire. In the production of staple articles, that part of the world under our flag has some amazing facts to unfold. Take the year 1911, for example. During that year staple products to the following values were produced within the British Empire: Coal, £125,800,000; diamonds, £8,899,000; gold, £55,900,000; silver, £4,368,000.

Turning to quantities from mere cash values, the British Empire produces of wheat, 988,700,000 bushels; of wine, 6,500,000 gallons; of tea, 455,600,000 lb.; and of cotton, 1,278,616,000 lb. All our Overseas Dominions contribute their quota to the above amazing totals, and the figures of our smaller Colonies, such as Newfoundland, give one the idea that such Dominions are, after all, not quite so small as one would imagine.

Rord Rosebery on Englishmen's Manners.

The Social and Commercial Value of Manners in Public Life

"Lord Rosebery never speaks in public without saying something that is worth hearing, and his speech to the boys of Guildford Grammar School deserves to be pondered by an audience far larger than that which was immediately addressed," says the Morning Post.

"Lord Rosebery was concerned to impress on his youthful hearers the extreme importance in life of good manners. And it is difficult to dispute Lord Rosebery's conclusion that in the present age manners are deteriorating," adds the Morning Post.

"There was a politeness, not merely in the modish Eighteenth Century, but even in the material mid-Victorian age, which we are losing in an obedience to a devotion to what is supposed to be freedom and sincerity, but what is really lack of self-respect. It is not thought worth while to pay those little ceremonious observances by which consideration for others is shown, because it never occurs to us that we ought to receive them.

Fine Courtliness in Letters.

"No one can read the letters of George Meredith without being impressed by the fine courtliness in which even the most casual or the most troublesome correspondent was addressed; and without feeling that the habit of mind which inspired that style is sadly lacking to-day. In particular, the manners of men to women in the present day show a regrettable deterioration. The instinctive deference to women which used to be the mark of the well-bred is no longer so evident. There is a tendency to take women as a matter of course, and to withhold what may be called the small-change of courtesy.

"Manners are the lubricant that enables the wheels of our complex relationships to revolve without intolerable friction—that make social contact pleasurable, or, at least, endurable.

Manners a Social Obligation.

"Good manners are not a convention, but a social obligation—a something that everyone should be bound to contribute for the common weal, an acknowledgment of the claims of others to consideration. Yet we have become so self-conscious in this generation that we are afraid to be polite for fear of appearing affected or absurd, and where we would seem natural we are simply off-hand or almost rude. Perhaps Lord Rosebery's exhortation will fall on good ground and bear fruit, and for reformation we must look to the next generation. The present one is too old to change its ways, even when it most frankly confesses its faults," adds the Post.

Boys and Parents.

"I wish to make it clear at the very beginning of what I have to say," said Lord Rosebery, "that I am addressing, as I was told to address, the boys, and not the parents. I will not say that boys' and parents' are permanently hostile bodies—I am a parent myself—but there is certainly a great difference of view on many questions to which I need not further allude, such as pocket-money, the amount of work that an able-bodied boy can do, and so forth.

"Now, the point I wish to labor for the moment is that of courtesy and good manners," added Lord Rosebery. "The necessity of them had been seen by one of the great sages of the 'educational' calendar, William of Wykeham, who is honored as the founder of Winchester College and New College, Oxford. It is well for us in this century to know the emphasis which was laid by your founders on courtesy and good manners. Why did these men of the early seventeenth century emphasize the importance of courtesy and good manners? I take it that it was for two reasons: first, that they were models of courtesy and good manners themselves—for the Englishmen of the seventeenth century were the greatest breed of Englishmen that England has ever possessed—and also because they realized the enormous importance of courtesy and good manners in the common transactions of life.

English and Scotch Manners.

"Now, we English people, and I am afraid we Scotch people—to mention the people of the country with which I am more immediately connected—have never been conspicuous for good manners. John Bull has been too apt to think that good manners were a device of the dancing, frog-eating Frenchmen, whom it was our duty to despise and defeat. But that was a false issue. Good manners are a sign of charity towards your fellow-men, of duty towards your neighbors, and also a sign of self-respect. A man who respects himself is always well-mannered to others. Now, I am going to say something which, if I knew this school familiarly, I should not say, because I might be thought to be speaking at you instead of speaking to you.

Significance of Hat Teaching.

"It is that, I think, one may judge of the character of a school by the respect the boys show to the masters. If we go to a school and notice that the boys do not touch their hats to their masters, we form, perhaps erroneously, a poorer opinion of that school. What is it that we mean when we touch our hats to our master? Do we not mean that he is the head of our community, and that as the head of our community we pay ourselves a tribute by exalting him? Take the case of the King. When the King goes through the streets, if we are fortunate enough to see him, we take off our hats to him. That is, of course, a mark of respect in the first place to the King, but it is also a mark of respect to ourselves, a mark of veneration for the community to which we belong, and, in that way, to ourselves.

Manners in Public Life.

"I am sorry to say I think there has been in modern times a decay of manners in England, and not only in England but all over the world. You see it even on the Continent. It is a bad sign. I should like to appeal to the elders for a moment, and ask them whether they do not agree with what I am going to say. Manners have an enormous commercial value in life. I sometimes wonder why they are not harped on more on these occasions, because no one can have lived as long as I have without noticing the weight and value of manners in life. In public life I have seen men by appearance and manners get such a start of their much abler fellows that they have been able to occupy places much higher than their abilities or services entitled them to.

"Of course, we are not all going into public life, but we are all going into some business. I am quite sure there is not a man or a lady over thirty years old in this hall who has any practical knowledge of the affairs of life, who will not tell the boys of the enormous advantage of a good appearance and good manners. A good appearance, you may say, is not at our command; they are the gift of God, and are bestowed only on a small percentage of mankind. But a good appearance, a manly appearance, an appearance without self-consciousness, which is the most agreeable feature, perhaps, of appearance, is within the command of any boy.

Commercial Value of Manners.

"But let us take manners, which are, I think, more important. Three boys, let us suppose, are applying for the same situation. One may be a monster of learning, with a Shakespearean forehead, and all the rest of it; the second boy may not be half so good a boy, but still an able boy; the third may not have the abilities of either but if he has good manners and the others have not it is ten to one on him against the other two. I will not put my appeal for manners, which are not easily taught except by example, on higher considerations, such as that they are signs of a noble nature, expressing itself in outward form, although that is true enough; I will only put it to-day on the question of the commercial value of manners, and I ask every boy who hears me to-day, even if he forgets everything else I have had to say, to bear in mind the enormous value of manners all through his life. They will give him a value which he will never possess without them and will give him a start over those other boys who neither try to be, nor are, well-mannered."

The Ballot.

The ballot is a concealed vessel on which the free-born American citizen frustrates the enemies of reform whenever he can get a body to take him to the polls in an automobile. If the automobile is not forthcoming he leaves the job of frustrating to someone else.

The ballot is made secret purposely, so that the voter can go into the booth and slink some neighbour who has kept his family in bedding and Early Rose potatoes for fifteen years. The secret ballot has made it possible for many a man to bite the hand that showered him with free garden seeds and franked documents on the crime against beet sugar. Of all the forms of revenge invented since Catherine de Medici mixed Paris green in the coffee, the split ticket is the most deadly and soul-satisfying.

The ballot is the only thing on earth that the candidate is afraid of. The brand of outraged public sentiment which stays in the corn field on election day has no terrors for him. He has no fear for the ballot in the hands of the man who is too exhausted to walk three blocks to the polling place, but who can leg it across a billiard table with springing step for four hours at a stretch. When the candidate makes up his mind that an honest and incorruptible electorate is about to take down the ballot from the clock shelf and use it where it will do the most good, he will cast his vote so that when it hits the Congressional Record it will sound something like his speech at the Old Soldiers' reunion.

The free and unrestricted use of the ballot has hitherto been predicated upon gender rather than intellect, but a large number of women who appear to be in vigorous and pugnacious health now propose to supply the intellect. Men who have a large family which does not like the baker's bread and canned soup insist that woman's place is acting as chambermaid to a kitchen cabinet, but the indications are that before long two votes will grow around every hearthstone where only one grew before.

A Royal Lady and Publicity.

The doings of Royal personages who visit this country are usually chronicled with patient perseverance. One Royal lady, however, who is at present in England, has managed with almost complete success to elude even the publicity of the Court Circular. She is the Grand Duchess Elizabeth of Russia, who is staying with her sister, Princess Louise of Battenburg, and doubtless the lack of information about her movements is due to the fact that she is a nun, and abstains from the usual social round. She is certainly one of the most remarkable Princesses in Europe. Her husband, the Grand Duke Serge, it will be remembered, was killed by a bomb while driving to the Kremlin at Moscow. The Grand Duchess Elizabeth was very deeply attached to him, and since his death she has lived in retirement. She did not finally leave her palace in the Kremlin until her motherless niece the Grand Duchess Marie Pavlovna, to whom she was a second mother, married; then she retired to a house in a quiet street of Moscow, and in company with several ladies began to live the life of a Sister of Charity.

The Grand Duchess is one of the most beautiful women in Europe, but her face betrays none of the signs of the hectic life she leads. She has introduced a new form of convent life into Russia, modelled on that of the various orders of Sisters of Mercy working in this country. The Russian nun is supposed to devote herself entirely to prayer; she does not, as a rule, undertake charitable work. The Sisters of the new Order founded by the Grand Duchess have under their care a number of "feebled" soldiers, a home for consumptives, an orphanage, a dispensary, and a free library. The Sisters, who nearly all belong to great Russian families, do most of their own housework, and Moscow was astonished to hear that Princess Obolensky had to scrub the convent floors. The Grand Duchess, of course, keeps the severe rule of the Order as scrupulously as the other Sisters.

Buckingham Palace Improvements.

The expenditure upon the Buckingham Palace frontage to be allocated to the Victoria National Memorial Fund, will be limited to that arising directly out of the exterior reconstruction. The opportunity offered by the absence of the Court is being used to carry out various improvements, mostly in interior arrangements, and the cost of this work will be borne by the Civil List charge of £27,000. Among the alterations thus in contemplation is the provision of a series of self-contained suites of apartments to be appropriated for the residence of the permanent establishment. The application of the "flat" system to the Royal Palace is one further indication of the profound influence exerted upon the residential customs of the time by the development of the modern hotel. The family life which the late Queen Victoria sought to maintain in the Royal establishment has had to yield to the drift of the age, and the service of the Royal Household is becoming more and more a matter of defined hours and duties, with strictly prescribed periods of personal freedom.

Prince Arthur and Canada.

I am told that it is probable that after his marriage, Prince Arthur of Connaught will succeed his father as Governor-General of Canada, and that he will go out there towards the end of next year. At all events there is no doubt that such is the desire and that the King is anxious to gratify it.

The Naval Manoeuvres.

The sudden ending of the naval manoeuvres after a campaign of only three days, has puzzled a good many people, but I believe the explanation of it is simple enough. The object of the exercises was to find out how much damage a small and mobile raiding force could do to coast towns and defences before it and its escort was brought to action and destroyed by the superior defending force. When the umpires reported that the raiding force was so destroyed they did after the action of Byfleet on July 26th the manoeuvres automatically ceased. The umpires' reports have not all been received yet by the Admiralty, but even when they are all collected it is exceedingly doubtful whether anything will be made known of their contents. The most frequently expressed opinions of naval officers on the ships themselves is, I am told, one of astonishment that the public has not shown itself more perturbed by what has happened. Certainly the initial successes of Admiral Jellicoe have surprised the navy itself, and it is pointed out that in actual war a very great deal of damage would have been done. The manoeuvres really have proved the impossibility of invasion on a large scale unless the command of the sea is irretrievably lost, and at the same time, the apparent impossibility of entirely preventing raids on communications and strategic points on the coast. The work of the hydro-planes will be very favorably reported on, and they are considered already to have proved themselves a vital part of our defences.

The Doctors' Congress.

Everything is now ready for the great international Congress of Medicine, which meets here during the first week in August. The arrangements have taken three years to complete. There will be 5,000 doctors meeting in twenty-three sections in various scientific institutions, with the Albert Hall, London, as the chief centre. No such important gathering of medical scientists has been seen here since the last meeting of the International Congress in London in 1881, when Sir James Esq. presided, and the visitors included such men as Pasteur, Virchow, Koch, and Volkmann, with Lister and Huxley among the Englishmen. The programme is extremely varied. There is a new section on the history of medicine. Many of the subjects are highly technical, but there will be some interesting discussions on public questions in the sections of forensic and of preventive medicine. Infant mortality is prominent in the lists of papers, and much interest will be shown in the discussion on it, just now much to the fore—namely, syphilis and the desirability of State action in forwarding research into this gigantic social evil.

"Fragile" Stamp.

In future mark "Private" in bottom left-hand corner. The Post Office automatic cancellation stamp obliterated word "Private" on your last letter, and it was opened by my secretary. This warning appears in the "ragony" column of a London daily newspaper. It should be taken into account by the general public. The automatic stamp cancelling device consists of a circular rotating disc which leaves its mark in the form of several parallel bars across the entire top of the letter from one side to the other. Any special notification such as "Private," "Urgent," "Copy," or "Account" stands in a very good chance of being made indistinguishable. It is written at the top left-hand corner of the letter. Many business men frequently use the bottom left-hand corner for the purpose. But there are other drawbacks to the stamp cancelling machine. Many complaints have been made to the authorities of damage to letters in the stamping machines. As a rule these damaged letters contain hard objects which "foul" the machine, such as small keys, samples of minerals, etc. The envelopes are torn, the article inside being usually lost. Hundreds of such letters are sent through the post, but the officials do not always find it a very easy task to detect the nature of the contents. A suggestion has just been made for the adoption of a small "fragile" stamp to be affixed to the top left-hand corner of the envelope, and signifying that the letter is liable to be damaged, if put through an automatic machine. The stamp edging now left white round a sheet of postage stamps might easily be suitably perforated and given a brilliant red color to be used for this purpose.

Your Duty.

Nothing to do with the Custom House, good friend. Its only reference just now is to yourself. Let us suppose that you are a man of family with sufficient of the world's goods to keep them in comfort. Very well, you did not reach this satisfactory state of affairs without care and labour—few men do. Suppose you are awakened some night with shouts of alarm ringing in your ears. "Too late then to talk of prudence! too late then to say: 'If I had only, etc., etc.' that 'if' means too much to many forgetful people. It is not always the duty of a self-respecting citizen to protect his home and thus provide for those within it. Is it any more than his duty to those depending on him to protect them as far as possible. Can you call your property your own when it is not insured? The answer to this argument is to carry insurance with Percie Johnson's agency, the most popular office in Newfoundland and the least expensive.—aug. 11

$600,000 Worth of Foxes.

Edmonton, Aug. 9.—Seven hundred and fifty-one live foxes, valued at more than $600,000, have been trapped or dug out of their nests in the fur districts north of Edmonton since the beginning of the season. The highest price paid for a pair of black foxes was $20,000. The animals were bought by C. J. Fleming, of St. John, N. B., from a half-breed Indian trapper at Lac de Bic. T. J. McMann of Edmonton, recently sold 51 fox whelps, all colors, for $25,000 to James A. Kane of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has fox farms in New York and Pennsylvania. The exportation of live foxes has become so active in northern Alberta that Benjamin Lawson, chief game guardian, has been requested by provincial government to recommend a closed season, the same as there is for other fur-bearing animals. This new law would prohibit the capture of foxes and whelps during the breeding season.

This is the most valuable evidence obtainable, and we believe that all who know Mrs. Durry will appreciate it to the full, knowing that she would not recommend anything in which she had not the fullest confidence.

Mrs. Durry, nurse, 35 Lewis street, Toronto, writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for years, and recommend them to my patients for all disorders of the kidneys, liver and stomach. ## Getting Started.

By RUTH CAMERON.

"We've had such a good time this evening," said a neighbor of mine the other night, as she and her husband were leaving after a call that we, at least, had found most enjoyable. "I've done me lots of good to get out. We should have come long ago; we've spoken of it again and again, but you know it's so hard getting started. We won't let it be so long again."

"I'm sure my neighbor meant that last with all her heart when she said it, and yet I'm just as sure that it will be quite as long again. You see, I don't doubt that she'll want to come just as cordially as we want to have her, but I feel pretty sure that she'll run up against that same old snag—the difficulty of getting started."

"And what a snag that is, to be sure, for the whole human race."

"I meant to do a lot of good reading this winter," says Molly the Little Stenographer Lady, "but somehow I couldn't seem to get started."

"I don't know when I've enjoyed a course of lectures so much," says the author-Mrs., "and to think I missed the first three just because I didn't get started."

"I don't mind doing the dishes,"

Household Notes

An easy way of making water ices is with jam. Mix 4 heaping teaspoonfuls of jam with ½ pint of cold water; add the juice of a small lemon; strain and freeze. Or fruit syrups may be used instead of jam.

Frozen fruits are good for summer desserts instead of ice creams. Mash 6 bananas with ½ pint of cream, 2 ounces of sugar and the juice of a lemon. Freeze slightly and serve in a rocky heap on a glass dish.

Mint sauce for lamb is made by chopping the washed leaves very fine and pouring over them ¼ cup of boiling water and 2 tablespoonfuls of sugar. Let stand half an hour, then add the juice of a lemon and salt and pepper.

To freshen velvet, set a hot iron up on the end on an iron holder, cover the triangular surface with a wet cloth and hold the velvet firmly over this cloth, passing it backward and forward. The steam will cause the nap to rise.

An easy way of preparing spinach is to put it (thoroughly washed) into a saucepan, with no more water than clings to the leaves. Cook through, drain in a sieve, return to the saucepan and season with salt, pepper and butter and cream.

To clean suede shoes, rub the suede tops lightly with a soft white rag dipped in ordinary turpentine, turning the rag frequently as it becomes soiled. To remove small, let the shoes

EXPERIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD

Advice to Expectant Mothers

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

says my neighbour as she lingers at the supper table, "but it's awfully hard to make the start."

How much pleasure, how many kind deeds, what brilliant enterprises are lost to the world just because that particular cog in the human make-up that gets things started works with such difficulty!

Most of human beings seem to be like automobiles which have been stalled. Once the start has been made we glide along as easily as can be, but someone has got to work over us just so long before we can be started.

There are always ten people who will go ahead with energy on any enterprise to one who will start it.

There are always ninety-nine people who will sign a subscription list on a protest or anything of that sort, provided the one-hundredth man can be found to start it.

Is there anything rarer than a caller who finishes her call and then starts to go, and actually goes without any repeats, any rumbling and creaking of her starting machinery? Unless it be the business man or woman who can sit down to his or her desk in the morning and start at once to work without any preliminaries.

Practice starting quickly and without fuss and you will be learning to eliminate one of the big wastes of the average human machine.

Ruth Cameron

Figures to Set You Thinking

Some of the Daily Happenings in the World's Greatest City.

Statistics of London life are generally speaking, dry, dull and uninteresting. They fall more often than not, to appeal to the imagination, and we simply regard them in a casual manner as so many units, tens, hundreds and thousands. There is, however, one subject at least which figures help us to understand better than pages of descriptive matter, and that is the immensity of London. As one writer observes:

"One lives only in the London one sees, and knows nothing and cares nothing for what is happening round the corner. One lives in a small and superficial London, not in the London in which 190 people die every day."

And while 190 people die every day, 325 households are invaded by 325 babies, and in the same time 105 marriages take place. A more sinister sidelight on the life of the metropolis is afforded by the fact that every day 120 men and women are sent to prison, and no day passes without someone being killed by the traffic in the streets. When it is mentioned, however, that no fewer than 4,000,000 people are carried every day on the trams, buses, tubes and local railways, it is not the number of accidents which is surprising, but the fact that they are so few, when one considers the immensity of London's traffic.

On an average there are 10 fires in London every day, 610 people go to the hospital, while 10 people become insane. And it is amazing that in this the richest city in the world there are 24,000 men and women in the work-houses, 500 being admitted to the casual wards every night.

This works out at a cost to London of $20,000 a day. It is, however, but a fraction of the sum spent on amusements, for every day Londoners expend no less than $150,000 in going to theatres, music halls, picture palaces and concert halls.

About "Paddy" Nolan.

The Magistrate Had Reasons of His Own for Feeling Nervous.

The late P. J. Nolan, of Calgary, whose resemblance to Hon. T. Mayne Daly was frequently remarked, was an Irishman with a spontaneous and irresistible wit, an excellent storyteller and an original and daring practical joker. His fund of anecdotes was inexhaustible, and the number of stories told about himself was legion. Here is one of them:

Like most Irishmen, "Paddy" Nolan had a big heart. He was easily touched by a tale of distress and generous to a fault. About the beginning of the century, when Calgary was a good deal smaller than it is now, a highwayman who lived in the town was killed in a wreck and left his

Travelling Man Recommends Duffy's

MR. CHAS. W. GITTLEMAN

"I have used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as a medicinal tonic since 1906. I had pneumonia and was directed by my family physician to use Duffy's. It did me a great deal of good and ever since it has been used by my family. I am 38 years of age and a commercial traveler. An outdoor a great deal, and find this medicine a worthy stimulant and a good preventive of colds, etc., for which I cheerfully recommend it."—Charles W. Gittleman, 1684 Gates Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

The merit and honesty of a product that has been before the public for more than half a century cannot be questioned. Its fame has spread the world over; it stands to-day a most celebrated and successful medicine. It is a great remedial agent in the treatment of pneumonia, grip, coughs, colds, other throat and lung troubles, and in all stomach troubles.

Sold by most druggists, dealers and hotels in sealed bottles only, price $1.25. If you can't procure it let us know and we will tell you how to obtain it. Write for free doctor's advice and book of recipes for table and sick room.

widow penniless. His estate consisted of nothing but a gold watch. It was little it would bring, but some friends of the widow, among whom was "Paddy," sought to increase this pittance by disposing of the watch through a raffle. "Paddy" and some others undertook to sell the tickets. The affair had not gone very far, however, when an officious policeman swooped down and arrested the widow on a charge of conducting a lottery. She was haled off to court, but "Paddy" was beforehand. Approaching the magistrate who, he knew, was to try the case and who had, at this time, heard nothing of it, he told a touching story of the woman's poverty and departed after having exchanged two of the tickets to the raffle for a crisp five-dollar note.

The case came into court, and "Paddy" who was acting for the defence, had the woman make a clean breast of everything. Then he proceeded to lecture the bench. He told again the story of the woman's loss and the straits to which she had been reduced. He pleaded her ignorance of the law, and when reminded that that was no excuse, he proceeded to dilate on the danger of lotteries and raffles to a community. He painted a vivid picture of evils they might bring, and described at great length the punishments he deemed meet for anyone who, knowing the law, should dare to conduct a lottery or raffle or act as agent for it, or buy tickets in it, or have anything to do with so damnable an enterprise.

The magistrate had seen, quite early in "Paddy's" speech, how things were trending and had been squirming on his bench. Here, however, he cut the advocate short, and giving the woman a very mild reprimand, let her go on suspended sentence. Then he waited for "Paddy."

"D— you!" he exclaimed, shaking his fist in the face of the laughing Irishman. "I expected every minute to hear you say, 'And your Honor has two of these same tickets in your waistcoat pocket.'"

The Surplus Earned.

In 1912 the Canadian Life earned surplus of $1,530,667, exceeding by over $237,000 the earnings of 1911, and by a much larger amount the earnings of any previous year. This is of importance to policyholders, for their Dividends must come from this account.

The following letter is an indication of this Company's promptitude and liberality in settling claims:—

To MESSRS. C. F. BENNETT & CO.,
Agents Phoenix Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.
Gentlemen,—I beg to tender you my most sincere thanks for your liberality and promptitude in settling my claim for loss sustained by the recent fire which occurred at New Gower Street on Thursday morning, the 29th inst.

Your readiness to meet my claim and the liberal manner in which your representative acted have greatly relieved me and have tended to lighten the burden which would otherwise have been heavy.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) FRED ROSE.
