The Romance OF A Marriage.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Paula wakes next morning with a start. What has happened to her? All night her sleep had been broken by dreams, dreams so sweet and strange that in the first moments of consciousness the blush still hovers on her cheek. What is it, this vague feeling of joy and happiness, such joy and happiness that never till now have visited her?

With heavy eyelids she stares at the morning sun, and wonders, until the remembrance of yesterday flashes upon her and turns the faint blush of sleep to crimson.

It is really true, or is it only a dream? Is she really loved? Loved! The very word almost frightens her. All night the vision of Sir Herrick's handsome face has mingled with her dreams, his deep, musical voice, whose every tone she knows and loves, has rung in her ears. "Is it really true?" she asks herself, "or has she only dreamed it? Ah, if it should only be a dream!"

But before long she realizes that it is more than a dream; she can feel his kisses on her lips, hear his love-voiced in her ears.

She is loved, and by the best, the noblest, the handsomest man in the world. A score of times she pauses in the course of her dressing to recall the passionate look, the tender tones of his voice.

She—the last girl on earth to be worthy of him—is beloved by Sir Herrick Powis, the handsomest, the best of men.

There is no song on her lips as she goes down, and the pigeons that flutter at her feet look up at her sideways in wonder. Even the dear old mastiff creeps up to her amazed at the rapt silence that holds her. A strange silence has fallen upon her, the whole world seems altered and to have taken upon it a new beauty; the trees look greener in their summer bravery, the sun shines more brightly, the soft breeze that fans her cheek is laden with a sweeter perfume, and bears upon its bosom the voice of her beloved. Ah, how hackneyed is that line: "There is nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream!"

And it is Paula's first love. No other has occurred to take off the keen edge of it. Never until now has love been other than a meaningless word. No other lips have touched her own red, ripe ones with love's magic kiss until Sir Herrick's; come what will, he is the first, the only one.

So rapt and enveloped, so hall-marked by this strange love does she seem, that she scarcely finds courage to enter the house and face Alice's steady smile and Bob's conscious glance; and begging a glass of milk from May, she wanders down to the valley to be alone—all alone with her new happiness. So with the old mastiff following at her heels, sorely puzzled by her silence and inattention, she makes her way to the stream, and, wandering by its babbling course, recalls every word her lover, her king, her god, uttered.

And here Sir Herrick finds her. For him, too, the day has broken with a new beauty. For him, too, the sun shines with a novel import. It is, let the past be what it may, his first real, genuine love. And as he comes upon her seated by the stump by which they ate the scanty luncheon only two days ago, he holds out his arms with an exclamation of wonder.

"Paula, you here?"

"Yes, I am here," she murmurs, rosy as sunbreak. "But—but are you not very early?"

"Early, my darling!" he says, enfolding her. "I have been awake for hours—hours! I could not sleep for thinking of you!" and he holds her sweet, young face in his hands, and he looks down at it with rapt joy.

"Could you not?" she says, gazing at the bright eyes, all aglow with love, and youth, and hope.

"No," he says, throwing himself down beside her. "All night you have haunted me, Wicked Paula, to rob a man of his rest! All night, darling! And I'll be bound you haven't given a thought to me! Confess!"

She hangs her head.

"I have thought of you!" She pants in his arms. "I have—dreamed of you—all night, Sir Herrick!"

A slight shade crosses his brow.

"Don't call me Sir Herrick!" he says, reproachfully. "Call me Herrick, or Rick, Yes, Rick; that is the name I am known by."

"Rick!" she murmurs, obediently.

"And you thought of me!" he says, gratefully. "And I—Heaven, how I love you! Paula, I don't think you know, understand how dearly I love you!"

She smiles up at him, content to lie in his arms, the sweet sun smiling down at them.

"I wonder," she murmurs, "whether you love me as I love you! I think not. You, who have seen so many beautiful women—so much better than I am—"

"Hush!" he says, chidingly. "There never was a woman more beautiful and better than you, my darling—never."

"Are you sure that you love me?" she whispers, "or is it only a mistake? If it is, tell me now—now, at once; I could not bear it later."

"My Paula!" he whispers. "I am quite sure. You are my queen, my pearl beyond price! See! Look at me! Do you doubt me?"

And she lifts her heavy eyes and looks at him.

"No, I do not doubt," she whispers. "But it is so wonderful—so wonderful!" and she smiles dreamily. "Only a few nights ago and we had never met—did not know each other. I wonder," slowly and softly, as if speaking to herself rather than to him—"I wonder if we had never met until we were old, quite old, whether we should have known that, had we met earlier, we should have loved!"—she breaks off, with a shy smile. "That is nonsense, isn't it? But," suddenly, "how dark the world was before that night we danced outside the Court, Rick!"

Aspirin is quick to understand even the most mystic of his mistress's words, and Sir Herrick understands her; it is the young, pure soul dazed and astounded at the overwhelming force of first love.

"Paula," he says, "I know you cannot know—your whose life has been so quiet and pure, and peaceful—how dark life can be without love."

Paula looks up at him questioning-ly, an eager light in her eyes.

"Rick," she murmurs, a faint flush on her cheeks, "do you mean that—that you have never loved until—now?"

It is an unwise question to ask, a question that a woman of the world would have carefully shunned; but Paula is not a woman of the world; only a little country lass, as ignorant of the world as a village maiden could well be, and she sees no danger in the question.

For a moment Sir Herrick's dark eyes fall before the eager light in hers, and his brow contracts. He is silent for a moment, and a faint shadow of disappointment gathers in Paula's eyes; but suddenly, though slowly, he looks up and smiles. He has been thinking. After all, why should he not give her the answer her heart longs for? The ignoble passions, the whims and follies of his past life cannot be dignified with the name of love. No, they were not love, only the clumsy counterfeit thereof. Of a surety he knew not love until he saw her in the moonlight three nights ago.

So he smiles, and leans his hand aside to the shell-like ear—as he answers:

"No, Paula, I have never loved until now. Never until I saw my little witch-maid, who stole my heart from me by wicked magic and black art; never until now."

Paula draws a long breath, and her face pales with excess of joy.

"It is possible!" she murmurs, gazing up at him. "Of all the beautiful women you must have known, of all the young girls, fair and dark—"

"Fat and forty," he murmurs, with a smile; but she is not to be moved from her subject by a light blow from the bladder of mirth.

"You must have walked, and driven, and danced with, was there not one you could love?"

"No," he says; and he does not mean to lie. He is thinking of pure, Heaven-sent love, such as burns in his heart, for the heart nestling against it; and from that view his reply is Gospel truth.

"No," she echoes. "It—it is almost too sweet to be true. Rick, it seems almost as if we had been waiting for each other, doesn't it?" solemnly.

"Yes," he says, touched by her simplicity and trust. "Matches, they say, are made in heaven, Paula; ours must have been," and his head droops until his lips touch the chestnut hair.

Suddenly she looks up.

"I wonder," she says, and the old, naive look comes into her eyes, the sudden flash of light which is like the sun on rippling water—"I wonder whether the major will think so?"

Sir Herrick doesn't start, and smiles on still; but it is rather the smile of a man prepared for the worst.

"I don't know," he says. "It doesn't matter."

"Does it not?" she asks, her brows coming together with a half-doubt, her eyes fixed on his face. "You are sure it doesn't matter, Rick?"

"Not a bit," he says, pushing his hat from his forehead with the peculiar trick of manner habitual with him. "Not a bit; we—or at least I am not a child. My uncle, the major, does not rule the universe."

"I—I thought," falters Paula, "that you said—I don't like to go on." And she looks prettily troubled.

"Go on," he says, laughing. "You mean that my uncle holds the purse-strings."

"I'm shocked, of course," he says. "You ought, to be anything like the young lady of the present day, to wish for a palace, or certainly a house in Park Lane, a set of Howell & James's diamonds, and a pair of ponies. But, by George, Paula! I'm glad you don't! I'm glad you like the other idea, because—with a little, grave smile—" "It's more likely to come to pass. But you'll be dull, my darling, woefully dull and bored alone with me—"

"Yes, I shall," she says, and her eyes brim over with the tears of a heart even too full of love.

Then he lifts her to her feet, and draws her arm through his.

"Now for duty," he says, with a smile.

"Duty?"

He nods.

"I am going to face brother Bob and sister Alice, and with hat in hand, or on bended knees, if necessary, beg them to bestow the pearl of their race upon their unworthy servant. I wonder what they'll say?"

A bright blush creeps over Paula's face.

"I've—I've told Bob already," she says.

"You did!" he says, with an air of relief. "What a dear, good girl it is! And sister Alice?"

Paula shakes her head.

"No, not Alice; but I think she will be very glad. She will be awfully surprised."

"Surprised?"

"Surprised that anyone should be so bereft of their senses as to wish to—as to want to—as to like such a miserable girl as myself."

"It is surprising!" he says. "Her astonishment is natural." And he laughs. "Stay outside," he whispers, as they step on to the terrace. "Stay here"—and he seats her on the rustic bench—"while I go and know my fate. I'll come back and tell you the verdict," he adds, and he goes into the house with his light, self-possessed step.

Bob is seated at the table making up his accounts—a weekly trial which is the great curse of poor Bob's life. He looks up from the piles of bills and the open account-books—a smudge of ink across his nose, his eyes vacant with much confused calculation.

"Hallo!" he says, getting up and nearly upsetting the ink. "How do you do? Here!"—and he clears a chair by the simple process of tilting the books off it on to the floor—"sit down. Glad to see you."

"I'm disturbing you?" says Sir Herrick, glancing at the ledgers.

"Not a bit," says Bob, with suspicious alacrity. "I'm only too glad of an excuse. I'm delighted to see anybody. Are you good at accounts?"

strings. Well, so he does, but not altogether. I have a little purse of my own, as I told you, I think. You won't mind being poor, Paula?" And he smiles down at her.

She meets him with smile for smile.

"I like it," she says; "oh, I like it! Do you know what I should really choose if I had my way?"

"Tell me."

"I should like to live in that old inn with all the funny people—the barristers and the poor young man out-at-elbows—and enter into their life. There!"—breaking off suddenly—

"I've shocked you; I know I should."

He laughs.

Christmas in Jerusalem.

The following letter from a Canadian gives an interesting picture of Jerusalem as it strikes the soldier.

The Jaffa Gate, at which we began our tour is closed, as an entrance to the city was made for the Kaiser, his "gentleman" being too proud to pass through the old gate. When General Allenby entered the city he had the old gate opened, not desiring to enter the same way as the Hun. On the left of the gateway is a clock tower. The tower itself is built of stone brought from Solomon's temple.

David's Tower is a most interesting building, also known as the citadel of Herod. It was here (from an older tower on the same site) that David had watched and fell in love with Bathsheba. Thus the name David's tower. On the steps leading up to the tower General Allenby read the proclamation to the inhabitants.

We then passed down David's street, very narrow and dirty. Unlike most streets it is a series of road steps leading down the temple area. After walking for about five minutes we reached the Jews' Wall. This is the nearest approach the Jews have to the temple area. Many Jews were there praying, and our presence did not make any difference to their worship. Between the crevices in the wall are thousands of nails, forced in by the Jews, as an oath to God saying, "As the nails hold, so I hold to Thee, O God."

Leaving the Walling Wall we entered the temple area, a spot most sacred to the Moslems. Here we came to Mosque El-Aska, and before entering we had to remove our boots so as to avoid the beautiful carpet being soiled. The size and beauty of this place is beyond description. The domes of the roof were brought from Solomon's Temple, beautiful massive cedar wood. The dome is simply lovely. Just underneath and slightly to one side of the dome we were shown a niche in the wall where it is supposed to have stood and where the Virgin Mary was shown.

We now crossed over to the place where Abraham was going to offer up his son. This spot is marked by a rock called Abraham's Rock, and over it is a beautiful mosque. The dome called after Saladin, is supported by marble pillars, supposed to have been brought from Solomon's Temple (they are solid green marble.) Underneath this building is a small cave, the alleged praying-place of Abraham, Solomon and David. A few paces away from the large mosque is a very small one, and underneath the center of its dome is a black marble slab, supposed to be Solomon's Judgment Seat; and even to this day certain sects of people use this place to settle a big question.

There are also very large vaults hewn out of the rock under our feet used for the storage of water in Solomon's time, partly for washing away the blood after making sacrifices. On each side of this mount are very old churches, and the Mahomedans believe the scales of justice will be hung under these on the Judgment Day. Seeawaywellarchtown. st

On the Mount of Olives. The guide then pointed out the Garden of Gethsemane, also the place of the Betrayal, and higher up on the Mount of Olives the place where Christ wept over Jerusalem. Near here we were shown where the Golden Gates were bricked up; it was through these gates that Christ rode from the Mount of Olives to the temple, and there found the money-changers, etc. We then proceeded to Calvary, noticing the various Stations of the Cross, etc. The fifth stage shows a spot where Simon the Cyrenian took up the cross, the sixth stage of the house of the lady who wiped the sweat off the face of Jesus, the seventh stage where He fell for the second time. We saw the Crusaders' hospital, named after the Knight of St. John. It is from this hospital that the Red Cross Order of St. John started. It was in this hospital that the Kaiser preached to the people.

We now went to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, before entering we crossed over the tomb of Philip of Daubey (Philip d'Aubigny), one of the old Crusaders, said to have signed the Magna Charta. Next we came to the marble casket, the covering of the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. We then went on to Calvary and the tomb, which, of course, is the center of the world for Christians. We saw the chapel of Mary Magdalene, the pillar to which Christ was bound and the chapel of St. Serena, on the walls of which are thousands of crosses cut in by the Crusaders. We also saw the rent in the rock made at the time of the Crucifixion.

Here was the figure of Mary, covered with thousands of pounds' worth of jewels, given by pilgrims, etc., when visiting; also the stone of unction, and the sepulchre showing the stone rolled away.—Weekly Star.

Rich But Unhappy.

There is no disputing that the American people of every station have more of everything that is good, including money and excluding whiskey, than they have ever had before in their history—but they are intensely dissatisfied. If any lesson is to be had from the present condition of the public mind in this country, it is that a full dinner pail or even a full pocket-book is not enough.—Columbus (S.C.) State.

Although the neck of a man seems by nature to be constructed for wearing collars, none of the official pictures of Adam show that he wore one. In fact, it was not until some time after his decease that his descendants first thought of utilizing the connecting link between the body and the head for ornamental purposes, and then, all they could think of was a string of beads, or teeth, or claws, or some other such form of adornment. The mills of the evolutionary gods had to grind for quite a spell before mankind developed to a stage where the male of the species wore enough collars. As for that final triumph of haberdashery, the detachable collar of commerce to-day, A.D. 1919, marks exactly one century since it came into being. That fact, in view of Russell M. Crouse, calls for some form of observance appropriate to the occasion, wherefore he comes to bat with a few observations on the rise of the collar, from which we cull the following:

Jumping from the bead necklace age into a more decorative era, one can find pictorial proof of the fact that collars existed in the days when knights were bold and brazen. They were iron affairs that went right with every mail order suit of mail. Then the Elizabethan period has a more ruffly sort of neck circlet.

Getting closer home one can learn that in 1760 the New York haberdasheries were pushing a very fancy article of gold or silver vellum fringe which cost considerable and probably didn't have to be laundered.

Plowing along still further in the matter of neck encasement, we come to the year 1919, when men were wearing collars which were quite like those of to-day, but attached firmly to the shirt.

Those were the days when housewives looked with more fear and trembling on washday than on the afternoons the Indians rode in and staged "sings" in the public square, for to a fastidious man a shirt was good only for one day because of the fact that his collar became soiled in that length of time. Housewives had no laundresses, be it known, and seven shirts with collars attached meant considerable effort at the family tub.

It was a woman's problem, and it was a woman who solved it. Hannah Montague was the wife of a blacksmith. It is hard to imagine anyone who could get a collar more thoroughly soiled than a blacksmith. Mrs. Montague used to lie awake at nights trying to figure out a way to keep her husband's collar clean and her washing small.

Finally one night it came to her. She conceived the idea of having a collar separate from the shirt. She lost no time, and the next day made her blueprints and set to work. That night the blacksmith tried it on. When you learn that it was big and high and flaring at the top and that it tied on with strings you will realize the love for his wife Montague demonstrated when he wore it to work next morning. Mrs. Montague, accustomed to losing sleep, stayed up that night and made another. That week she had the lightest washing that had ever been known in Troy, up to that time—for it was in Troy, N.Y., that Montague lived and blacksmithed.

Montague was proud of the handiwork and lost considerable time at the anvil because he stopped to show it to every one that passed. Now and then a brave coward ordered one toward, because he probably was forewarned by his wife, but brave enough, nevertheless, because he had to wear it. But the business was hardly a lucrative one for Mrs. Montague. She could grind out only about one collar a day and what with all the labor it took, there wasn't much profit in the small amount she could charge for them. But it eased her washday weariness and she was able to fend off the gray-haired effect without resorting to some sort of bottled preparation.

It remained for an enterprising townsman, the Rev. Ebenezer Brown, to commercialize the affair. The Rev. Mr. Brown conducted a store in Troy "at the corner of River street and the shipyard," and it wasn't long until his window contained a display of the articles—that was 1819—one hundred years ago.

To-day in Troy there are seven square blocks of collar and shirt factories within a mile radius and capital to the sum of thirty-five million dollars has been invested in the proposition. Two hundred thousand yards of goods used in a day by one factory in the town where Hannah Montague used to toil away on considerably less than one yard in an entire working day! One ton of thread is used every week in the town now to make collars. One spool used to last Hannah two weeks.—Toronto World.

King of Prussia.

BECAME EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

On Wednesday, January 18th, 1871 William the First, King of Prussia, was proclaimed Emperor of Germany in the palace of the French king at Versailles, near Paris. This followed from the success of the Germans against France, whose sovereign Napoleon Bonaparte, elected its emperor in 1852, had been jealous of the increasing power of Prussia but surrendered himself to its king as prisoner after the battle of Sedan on September 2, 1870. Paris, the French capital, surrendered to this German emperor on January 28, 1871, and a treaty of peace was signed next month. But already, about December 4, 1870, the Louis the Second, King of Bavaria, had in a letter to John, King of Saxony, proposed that the King of Prussia should be nominated Emperor of Germany, and the parliament of Prussia, by an almost unanimous vote, requested King William to accept this office. By such union Germany became qualified to defend itself against neighbouring countries, but the hope that preparation for this would promote international peace has been utterly disappointed since August 4, 1914, only the defeat of Germany by its allied neighbours and the fall from its throne of its third emperor putting an end to the world conflict. At the proclamation of this empire, after prayers, Mr. Rugger, a royal and military chaplain, preached on the text "Mene, mene, takel, upharain" (Dan. v. 2. 5.) meaning "Number, number, weigh, and Persians," and foretelling that these neighbours would usurp the position of the Assyrian rulers at Babylon. But the days of France were not numbered, though those of its kings and emperors were, and though its force had been for the time "outweighed" by the Prussians and their supporters. The title Emperor of Germany was thus revived, which sixty years previously had been abolished. A German sovereign, Frederick, grand duke of Baden advanced and exclaimed in a loud voice, "May life be to His Majesty the German Kaiser," or Caesar, that is "Emperor William," adding the German expression of exaltation, "Hoek," meaning "High." It was the apotheosis of the Bismarckian policy, and at the same time did more than any other event to encourage in the German race that spirit of arrogance and unbounded ambition of which this generation has reaped the harvest. However, it was greeted then by many of the "wise men" as the strongest possible guarantee of peace in Europe. Carlyle already had published a sanguine prediction to that effect in a memorable letter to the "Times," and the general idea seemed to be that, with Germany instead of France predominant on the Continent, the advent of the millennium was assured. Possibly, in this country, this was partly due to the friendly feeling entertained for the Crown Prince Frederick, who was married to our Princess Royal, and who was a conspicuous figure in the ceremony at Versailles. The heads of those minor reigning dynasties, to-day everywhere in flight, surrounded him, and Bismarck in his white Outrasser uniform, read the proclamation in a sonorous and triumphant voice. There, too, was Moltke, chief of the General Staff, supported by the heads of armies and leading officers. It was hidden from them that he was to have but two successors, of whom the first was to succeed when stricken with death and the second drunk with pride and power, was to wreck all, and more than all, that the Germans of the nineteenth century so industriously and so craftily had worked for—a fact of which, before his end came, Bismarck was to have grave premonitions.

A Slave Day's Incident.

The slave block, once the center of commerce in New Orleans, has rotted, and even its former site has been obliterated by the sand of progress. But memories of Christmas Eve 60 years ago were revived at Louisville Christmas Day by three aged negroes, brothers, who were separated by the slave block in 1859. They met for the first time in more than half a century, and after a day spent in Louisville, left recently to visit their mother in Leitchfield, whom they have not seen since they were sold in New Orleans. Their mother is more than 100 years old and is on the point of death. The three picanettes were put up for auction and each were sold to a different master, two to Louisianians and one to a Tennessee named Drake. After emancipation they remained with their former master, George Drake, crooned as his brothers Phil and Charley chorused, "De Great Day's done come."

On Guard, Electors!

St. John's West does not desire any recrudescence of Toryism. Enough of the pernicious effects of this revival has been shown since the Coaker-Squires Government was sworn in, and the electors into whose hands the future of the dominion now lies, are not wishful that there should be a return to the black days following the Bank Crash of 1894, when the men of this city were compelled to demonstrate against the Tory Government then in power and demand Bread or Work. But should there be any faltering, any holding back, any indifference on the part of the voters on the coming Thursday, so sure as night follows day, so sure will there be a return to the blighting conditions which prevailed in the winter of 1895, when Newfoundland was actually thrown on her beam ends because of the defalcations of men in high places, which brought about the financial catastrophe of the previous December.

It is but a quarter of a century ago since Black Monday broke on the city of St. John's, swiftly and unexpectedly like lightning out of a clear sky. The year of 1894 was one fraught with disaster and dread and its closing month witnessed such a crashing and tumbling of commercial fabrics, bringing more ruin in their fall, than did the great fire of eighteen hundred and ninety-two. Ninety-four will be ever memorable for the crop of election trials, resulting out of the ninety-three contest at the polls, no less than for the collapse of the Union and Commercial Banks. The result of these trials was that a majority of the elected members of the Whiteway Government were unseated by judgments of the Supreme Court, but it is notable that in every district, with but two or three exceptions, in which bye-elections were held, the candidates of the Liberal Party, under the leadership of the late Hon. D. J. Greene, were returned with overwhelming majorities. Before they took over the Government, however, the Bank Crash occurred. Tory times were hard times then, in earnest, and St. John's well experienced Tory vindictiveness. So much so that it does not wish for a recurrence of Tory domination.

Nevertheless, for the short period of two months, Tory times have returned, and there is not a jet or tittle of difference between those of ninety-five and those of nineteen-twenty. Labor suffered in the lean year subsequent to the commercial failure, consequent upon the undermining of the local Banks by fish speculators, and labor has suffered and is suffering since the assumption to power of the lineal successors of the Tories of the black years. But Labor has now its opportunity. It is ranking with one of the political parties of the dominion; has been vouched for and received into association with the men who believed in its right to representation in the People's House. The Government of Coaker and Squires, the heirs to the Tory heritage, refused to recognize Labor and declined to give it a chance to assert itself in political life. They solicited its votes, but that was all. Nothing was farther from the purpose of the men who, at the moment, control the administration, than to give to Labor its proper place in the Government. They did not care to be associated with Labor candidates, but they now are making specious promises to the wage earners and by every means in their power attempting their political seduction from the party which gave Labor its first lift toward winning for itself a place in the Legislature of Newfoundland. But Labor has seen through their transparent promises. The incontrovertible fact that there is a dearth of employment in the city, must be placed to the charge of the present Government, whose sole aim and object appears to be the utter destruction of all trades and labor prospects of work, and the turning of the city into a wilderness and a desert, from which men will flee in despair. That being the object, electors, be on your guard and do not permit, do not allow your god-given heritage, your inalienable right to be taken away by men who are merely the pawns of one who has threatened to make grazing ground of the streets of St. John's, and whose threat is now in a fair way of accomplishment. High prices and no work do not conduce to either prosperity or comfort. The Tory dead line has been drawn. Wipe it out with your ballots on Thursday by voting for MARTIN and LINEGAR, the accredited champions of your rights and privileges—your own men.

A Fateful Day For St John's West.

Thursday next will be a day of weal or woe for St. John's West, and the electors, according to the way they mark their ballots, will either bring stagnation and depression on their district or will raise the feeling of misery and despair that has been gradually sinking into the hearts of the people since Squires and Coaker secured control of the Government. We have had two months and a half of it, and goodness knows that is enough. Four years of this rule and Coakerism would indeed make the grass grow on the streets of St. John's.

Messrs. Squires and Brownrigg can see the tide of public indignation rising against them, and are making desperate attempts to stem it. They are holding out all kinds of inducements to the shop-keepers, and the fact that some of them were venal enough and weak enough in principle to go back on the Opposition, only serves to keep the old supporters remaining more steadfast, and to fill their minds with contempt for those few weak-principled money lovers, who could be so easily purchased. These will be sadder and wiser men before very long, and their chagrin will be increased when they find out after the election is over and their vote secured, that Squires and Brownrigg have no more use for them. To fulfill all the expectations of purchased tradesmen would require more money than the distributions of the Board of Works over all Newfoundland.

These are not the people who can elect candidates, though they pretend to have influence, but beyond their own vote we do not believe that they can control the votes of their own relatives. It is the Labor men of the West End who are going to decide this election. They have the chance of their lifetime, and are more determined than in the previous election to return their men, Messrs. MARTIN and LINEGAR. This will be the beginning of a new party—a Labor Party in the House, the representatives of which, knowing the requirements and the aspirations of their fellow laborers, will be in a position to get legislation enacted that will better their condition and give them a standing in the community.

Looking back over the past twenty-five years, it is pathetic to recall how the laborers of the city have been played upon, cajoled and fooled by selfish, designing politicians, and during all that time gained not a step of foothold in the political life of the country. They have been played upon by Messrs. Gibbs, Anderson and James McGrath, and they are trying to work the same old game to-day at the behest of Squires and Brownrigg, but the laborers have now their eyes wide open and are determined not to be fooled any longer. They are not interested now in securing Messrs. Squires and Brownrigg in their $5,000 and $3,000 jobs, and all the other emoluments and pickings that these two gentlemen are so well qualified by nature to look out for. The laborers are looking now to their own welfare and advancement, and goodness knows it is high time they did.

Labor's first great day will dawn on Thursday, January 22, when they will strike the blow that will break the chain that Coakerism is fast forging on the necks of the people of St. John's West. Fine weather or foul, they are grimly determined to go to the polls. Others may stay away on account of a snow storm, but Labor will be there, as its whole future is at stake. The tide of victory is surging high to-day, and Squires, Brownrigg and their Tory profiteering friends are trembling in their shoes. The chance to skin the people on food prices and to make fortunes out of the new fish exporting plan at the expense of the people of Newfoundland, particularly of St. John's, is slipping away from their grasp. The Tory adherents who want to control everything in this country and grind dollars and dollars in extra profits out of the people, are beginning to realize now that to keep Coaker and Squires from staying the hand of food profiteers and breaking up their iniquitous fish exporting monopoly that is ruining the country. The Consorzio has already beaten them: now let St. John's West give them the knock-out blow, and it will be a fortunate day for Newfoundland. Voting for MARTIN and LINEGAR is the way to do it.

Along the Railway.

During yesterday the worst storm of the season was raging along the line, being at its height at Brigus, where considerable damage was done. West of Bishop's Falls the telegraph lines have been down since Saturday and for this reason nothing came through from Port aux Basques yesterday. All trains are held up and plows had to cease operations until the abatement of the storm. Between Clarenville and Gambo the rails are snow-covered to a depth of from four to twelve feet. The express which left Port aux Basques on last Wednesday is still hung up at the Gaff Topsails. As there is a big stock of coal on hand there the engine is kept going, heating the passenger cars. An extra-large supply of food, taken aboard at Port aux Basques to meet such a contingency, is sufficient for the passengers and beyond the delay their plight is not so bad, though all are anxious to get to the city in time to vote for MARTIN and LINEGAR on Thursday.

What Does Labor Think of This?

At the Majestic Theatre on Wednesday night last, Mr. Brownrigg, among other rash statements said: "Compare the four men at present in the field—Squires and Brownrigg against Martin and Linegar. Why! the comparison is odious." Presumably the comparison is odious because Labor's choice—Messrs. Martin and Linegar—do not enjoy the full share of this world's goods as do the two representatives of the Coaker clique. But Brownrigg and Squires will both remember, and remember well on the 22nd that Martin and Linegar enjoy the confidence of the electorate and of labor particularly. And when the votes are counted the comparison will certainly be odious to the Ring and its hesters.

Nothing Doing.

Henry J. Brownrigg, the Coaker candidate for St. John's West in the coming bye-election, is in the general provision business and deals extensively, we understand, in flour, and presumably like all others in the flour business, makes contracts ahead for future delivery. To date we have not seen any evidence, or even heard of any "philanthropic" effort on his part to supply flour to the people of the West End at the old price of $14, either out of the lot which he has at present in stock or ex his "to arrive" lots.

"The Bottlesher." How about that same "Bottlesher" now, brother?

The Brilliant "Star."

Last evening, with characteristic blurt and effrontery, the Star reprinted word for word the fable about the mails appearing in the morning issue of the Post, even to using the identical statement that "all foreign mail matter was dispatched by the 'Runa' sailing Saturday night." The genius who allowed this stuff to pass him, when a phone message to the office of Shea & Co. would have brought the information that the 'Runa' was still at the dock there, is incomparable as a modern truth to the mark journalist. The 'Runa' sailed at 7 o'clock this morning, and according to the Advocate, is not far behind the 'Kyle'. Only three days or thereabouts, and the Canadian mails which should have gone by the 'Kyle' on Saturday, will not be dispatched until the sailing of the Rosalind at midnight to-morrow. A week's delay or so does not matter much, does it 'Arris? And yet you think that you can 'ope to 'oodwink the electors of St. John's West.

The Wonderful Story of "Klim".

Milk is the one kind of food above all others upon which you are most dependent. Milk is both a food and a drink. It is used with every meal. Most recipes for cooked foods contain a certain amount of milk. It is a necessity in the diet. Yet it is a never ending problem to get an adequate supply of milk in pure form and at a reasonable price. The greatest development in the milk industry in the last ten years is the process of removing the water and fat from milk and drying into powder-form the solids which have the flavour, the colour, and the body-building food value of separated milk. The result of this process is "Klim"—pure pasteurized separated milk in powder form. You can get it at all up-to-date grocery stores at 55 cents per tin which makes a full gallon of pure delicious milk at a saving of 41 cents per gallon over the milk-man's price.

In Memoriam.

THOMAS F. DUNPHY.
Saturday the sad news reached the city of the sad drowning of a popular young West Ender in the person of Thomas F. Dunphy, son of Mr. Patrick Dunphy, master cooper at G. M. Barr's, and Mrs. Dunphy. The bearer of this doleful message to the grief-stricken parents was the Rev. Fr. Wilson, of St. Patrick's, whose task, I am sure, was anything but a pleasant one, considering their two sons Jack and Edmund made the supreme sacrifice, and are now buried side by side in far-off France. Tom, as he was well known and called, was well liked, having been employed with the Reid Nfd. Co. as engineer before leaving here, where he was a general favorite with his fellow-employees, his bright and genial disposition not only endearing him to his co-workers but meriting for him the confidence and respect of his employers. After leaving here four months ago, he proceeded to New York, there joining the s.s. Maxman as third engineer, bound to Greece, and as there are no particulars to hand it is presumed while on this voyage he met his fatal end. His remains lie in the depths of foreign waters far from those who are near and dear to him, but nevertheless his memory will be ever green in their hearts. Before sailing, he wrote a ray letter home to mother, asking her to remember him to all his friends and his comrades of the G.C.C. Corps, of which he was one of the oldest members, but sad to say it was his farewell message. To the grief-stricken parents, three brothers and two sisters, we can only offer the consolation of our sympathy, and that we are assured they have from the whole community. When time shall have worn off the keen edge of sorrow, they will be able to recall the fact that their dearly beloved son and brother died at the post of duty. Requiescat in Pace.

They Are Afraid!
Linegar Has Them Nervous and Restless.

The continuous newspaper attacks on William Linegar by the Star, Post and Advocate are indicative of one unmistakable fact: They are afraid of him. If they weren't they wouldn't be paying him so much attention. That is undeniable. If the Star really believed that Mr. Linegar was not going to receive the votes of the 1000 odd men who voted for him in November it certainly would not devote column after column of cold calumny, abuse and misrepresentation to him. It would leave him alone, content to know that he wasn't going to receive those 1000 votes. Is that so or not so? The truth of the matter is this: The Labor vote—meaning by that the 1000 votes which Linegar received last election—will be the deciding factor of the whole bye-election. Those who voted for the Cashin party last time will vote for the Cashin party to-day. Those who voted for the Squires party last time will vote for it this election. The Labor vote will decide. Recognizing this, the Star, which is the mouthpiece of Hon. R. A. Squires, has been trying hard for the past few weeks to turn the Labor vote from Linegar to the Squires party. What ever success it might have had—had the proper tactics been observed—cannot be known. It is known, however, that its cowardly tactics of abuse, calumny, misrepresentation and attack on Mr. Linegar have resulted in the cementing of the 1000 loyal, true-blue laborites who voted for Linegar. They are more determined now than ever to vote for him, and the more vile and the more cowardly the Star's attack the more determined those 1000 men will be to vote for their favorite. However indifferent and half-hearted they might be if the Star said nothing about Linegar, it is certain that the result of the three weeks' of studied misrepresentation has been to make those 1000 men as one man.

The Star's style of campaigning consists of the various editors, writers and hangers-on about the office to fill its columns daily with a seditious chorus—a sort of chant—"Squires Can't Lose" being the refrain. Between breaths they manage to work in an attack on somebody and so the game goes merrily on. The Star writers are entrenched in the bowels of the office where they meet the chronic hangers-on and cronies of the party, every one of whom is "certain" of victory. These writers, who keep up their monotonous chant of "Squires Can't Lose," never get out around the district nor among the workmen of the district. They do not meet the 1000 voters who voted for Linegar, and when they exclaim that the votes this time will not be polled by Linegar but for their party, it is a case of the wish being father to the thought. If their chant begins to wane the bosses order a new tune-up, and the writers put on a fresh spurt and more glaring type and eccentric article result. Undoubtedly these tactics will be some voters—principally the ignorant and unthinking. In the election the same tactics won them the victory. The voters of St. John's West see through it now, however, and despite anything the Government may do or anything the Star may say, those 1000 true-blue laborites will vote this time as they voted last—for LINEGAR, as well as for MARTIN and the Workingman's Men!

Liberal-Labor Candidates At Southside.

Enthusiastic Meeting --- Splendid Speeches --- Southside for Martin and Linegar.

Despite the stormy weather of last night a large number of Southside voters attended the Liberal-Labor meeting in the Bowring trying-store, Mr. Frank Horwood was in the chair and first introduced Mr. J. R. Bennett, the sitting member for St. John's West.

Mr. Bennett, for more than half an hour, dealt with the many serious problems confronting the country, such as the "fish strangulation" regulations, the increase in the cost of flour, sugar, butter and kerosene oil, the coal shortage, etc. He proved beyond contradiction that the Government was primarily responsible for all this, and if continued in power St. John's, and the Southside in particular, would suffer severely. Mr. Bennett was given a warm reception, and at the conclusion of his remarks was loudly cheered.

Mr. Linegar followed with a practical address on Labor matters. He explained to the satisfaction of all present that Labor was now given its first real opportunity to get representation on the floors of the Assembly, and that if he and his colleague were elected, he would have the full backing of the Opposition in any measure brought forward for the amelioration of the working classes. The enthusiastic manner in which Mr. Linegar was received, is a certain sign of his popularity on the Southside, and with Mr. Martin will poll a majority vote over the Coaker candidates.

Mr. J. T. Martin on being introduced by the chairman was given an ovation. After dealing with the various problems at issue, he scathingly referred to the abuse and vilification of his opponents and the Government press, since the campaign opened. Nothing had been too vile for them to say or circulate, but he was fully prepared to leave matters in the hands of the intelligent voters of St. John's West, and felt assured that on polling day he would be fully vindicated, and that Martin and Linegar would win with a sweeping majority.

Mr. J. R. MacDonnell, M.H.A., for St. George's, followed, and in a telling speech disposed of the vagaries, intrigues and false cries of the Government press and the Coaker candidates during the campaign. Every unjustifiable means was being resorted to in the hope of defeating Martin and Linegar. There was nothing open or clean about the fight being put up by their opponents, abuse, vilification and misrepresentation was their stock in trade, and by this they hoped to either intimidate or cajole the electors of St. John's West into voting for them. Mr. MacDonnell made a stirring appeal to the voters of the Southside to stand firmly with the voters of the Northside, and the Goulds and Petty Harbor and Broad Cove, Topsail Rd. and Kilbride, and on Thursday next make a final pronouncement against allowing the grass to grow on Water Street.

Sir Michael Cashin was the next speaker. He dealt at some length with the "fish strangulation" regulations, and the effect this insane policy promulgated by the Government was having on the foreign and local markets. He also called the attention of the audience to the fare-aps in the Government press over 200,000 qts. of fish being sold to Italy. There was not a word of truth in the story, which was being only used for the purpose of deceiving the electorate. He wished to tell the meeting that not more than 20,000 quintals had been sold to the Consorzio, and this had been disposed of on the terms of the Italians. Sir Michael briefly referred to Dr. Campbell who had been vilifying him of late, and why he dismissed him. Dr. Campbell made a good deal of his "visits" over the telephone, and he would like to have the doctor present in the audience so that he could tell those present a few little things the doctor would not like to listen to. He also touched upon the statement made by Mr. Coaker on the floors of the Assembly that Mr. Squires accepted $5,000.00 from the Reids while he was acting on an important inquiry in which the Reids and the Government were the principals. The charge of Mr. Coaker had never been refuted or denied, and it was for the people to draw their own conclusions. Mr. Brownrigg's financing was not forgotten either, and the people present were quite satisfied when Sir Michael finished that Mr. Brownrigg did not know what he was talking about when he spoke of floating loans. Sir Michael concluded a few minutes to eleven o'clock amidst hearty enthusiasm.

After a vote of thanks to Chairman Horwood the meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Engineer Injured.

Nathan Pushe Had Leg Broken and Was Badly Scalded in Train Accident.

Nathan Pushe, engineer with the Reid Nfld. Co., was severely injured on the Heart's Content branch last evening, when a snow plow and the engine to which it was attached, left the rails. Unable to escape quickly enough, Pushe got caught underneath the boiler, one of his legs being broken. At the same time steam and boiling water escaping from the engine scalded him in several places. He was extricated after some difficulty and taken to the nearest house. While Dr. Anderson was being summoned from Heart's Content, everything possible was done to alleviate his sufferings. The injuries received by Engineer Pushe, although serious, are not fatal, it is thought. He will be brought into town just as soon as the rails are clear.

First Hockey Game.

LIKELY TO-MORROW NIGHT.

The Terra Novas and St. Bon's will probably play the opening game in the local series to-morrow night. Last years champs will have a work-out to-night at 8.30 and the St. Bon's at 10.30. Judging from the practices the game promises to be a fast one. The St. Bon's will appear in new jerseys which have been made by the Nfld. Knitting Mills. The Terra Novas uniforms have not yet arrived but they will probably be here in time for that teams second game. There is a stick shortage in town, but the woods around Windsor Lake are being looked over with the help of a few sharp axes some "hurleys" may be obtained and the old days of the "slippery var" will again be in evidence.

To-Night's Concert.

By special request, the C.L.B. Band, under Lieut. Morris, will repeat to-night the concert given in the Methodist College Hall on New Year's Night. At that concert His Excellency the Governor personally congratulated the Band on its rendition of several pieces. No doubt to-night's concert will be well attended.

SCATHING INDICTMENT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.

The appointment of a sub-committee to determine the necessity of investigating the charges of the immoral condition in the Navy by John R. Rathem, editor of Providence (R.I.) Journal, was authorized to-day by the Senate Naval Committee. Rathem in a telegram to the members of the committee charged that the condition of affairs in the Navy Department is rotten beyond conception, "and that with the knowledge of Secretary Daniels," many seamen in the Navy have been used for the most vile and nameless practices in order to entrap innocent men.

VATICANAL APPROVAL.

ROME, Jan. 19.

The defeat of Premier Clemenceau in the Presidential nomination caucus in France, created much interest here, and in Vatican circles the belief was expressed that under the moderate policies of President-elect Deschanel, a re-establishment of relations between France and the Holy See would not be difficult of accomplishment.

WILD WEST METHODS.

CAIRO, Jan. 19.

A band of armed men on Saturday night, tore up the rails and derailed the Luxor-Cairo express, seventy miles south of Cairo. They attacked the postal car, seized about two thousand pounds in money and wounded a postal clerk. The escort of a band of prisoners on the train fired upon and dispersed the marauders, whose object is believed to have been solely to rob the train.

TREATING WITH SOVIETS.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 19.

Max Livinoff, Russian Bolshevik representative, conferring here with James O'Grady, the British delegate, regarding an exchange of prisoners and interned civilians, is much gratified by the announcement that the relations will be opened between the allies and the people of Soviet Russia. He considers the action of the Council tantamount to raising the blockade, and says it will have an enormous effect on the economic situation in Russia. It is expected by the British delegate that wounded British prisoners in the hands of the Bolsheviks will be all out of Russia next week, and that the remainder of the British prisoners will be at liberty in a fortnight.

TO STUDY CONDITIONS.

McMurdo's Store News.

TUESDAY, Jan. 20, '20.

Tastes differ on the question of tooth pastes as much as about other things, we suppose. Some people prefer a strongly flavored paste, with a decided antiseptic taste which remains in the mouth for some time after the tooth brush has been used; some favor a mild, smooth paste which, doing its work thoroughly enough, yet leaves very little evidence—so far as the after taste is concerned—of its recent use. To the latter class of persons, and among them are many ladies and some non-smokers, Ingram's Zedenta will make a strong appeal. Its flavor, while distinctive, is very mild and unobtrusive, and while it is a first rate cleanser, it leaves very little evidence of its use so far as taste is concerned in the mouth. Price 35c. a tube.

Dogs Supercede The Iron Horse!

Food Packed Over Frozen Snow to Millertown Junction by Dog-team!

The days of dog-team and long frozen trails are recalled by the story which comes from across country. It seems that the 15 or so families living at Millertown Junction ran short of food and that the rails being snow-covered and impossible to be passed by trains, food had to be sent by dog-team. As in the case of the horse so the dog will ever have his day for there will always be a use for him.

Surprise Visit of the Kaiser to a Ball.

On January 20, 1908, Prince Adalbert, third son of the Emperor of Germany, who was a naval officer stationed at Kiel, gave a masked fancy dress ball at his Kiel residence. A few minutes after it had begun, the Prince was hastily summoned from the ball-room by the news that the Kaiser had suddenly arrived, and had commanded not to inform his guests that he had arrived. The Kaiser donned the costume of his own famous ancestor, Frederick William—the Great Elector of Brandenburg—and then a black domino and mask. Thus disguised, the Emperor entered the ball-room, and mingling with the guests, enjoyed the fun heartily for a couple of hours without being recognised. Then he left the ball-room, doffed the mask and domino, and re-appeared among the astonished guests, where his sudden appearance in the gorgeous costume of the Great Elector may be well imagined. Soon after the Kaiser unmasked himself, all the ships of the German fleet lying in Kiel Bay, fired an Imperial salute. Towards midnight the telephone bell rang and Prince Adalbert, who wore the costume of a Dutch Admiral of the sixteenth century, was summoned to the apparatus, having been rung up by the Empress, who, sitting at her table in the Berlin Palace, thus displayed her interest in her son's success as a host. Eleven years later the German fleet is in the hands of the British, and the Kaiser a fugitive in Holland.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

IF HE HADN'T MARRIED THE RIGHT GIRL.

RUTH CAMERON

We were talking the other day about a man who married a girl whose father had money, and was at once taken into the father's business and showed ahead. To-day he enjoys a large income.

"What do you suppose Roger would be making," some one asked.

"If he hadn't married the right girl."

"Three or four thousand a year," answered some one.

"With his habit of putting off anything he doesn't like to do?" protested someone else. "Not on your tippy-toes, even $2000 or $4000 a year means not only brains, but good concentration. He's got the brains, but can you imagine him concentrating?"

He would have had to be different. "You forget," said the author.

"That if he hadn't married the right girl and gone to work for her father, he wouldn't have acquired that habit of putting off everything he doesn't like to do. He would have been a different man. He would have had to be."

An interesting thought, that, isn't it?

Not just in relation to that one man, but to all of us.

For instance, I heard someone saying of a woman who dominates her peace-loving husband:

"Wasn't D— (an old sweetheart) lucky to get turned town? He certainly would have been blessed like that!"

Her husband's love for peace has made her so.

As a matter of fact, D— never would have been blessed like that, she would have tried it at first, but it never would have worked. Consequently, she would not be the dominating woman she is to-day, because it is the circumstance of her marrying a man who loves peace above everything, quite as much as her natural tendency, which has made her dominating.

In an Inn where I lived some years ago, there was an old lady who dominated the place of force of having much more money than anyone in it. This old lady had a fine Roman nose with a most aristocratic and dominant tilt to it. Her humble circle of admirers often said that her face was such a strong face—had so much character in it.

I couldn't help wondering how much the mere fact of her having had a comfortable income left her, and chosen a place to live where she was a large toad in small puddle had had to do with that strength and character. If she had been a little old lady with just enough to live on, would her face have set in those lines? I rather doubt it.

Of course we help make circumstances. Of course, before circumstances make us, we usually have a hand in making circumstances. There must have been something in the man who married the right girl that made him willing to accept an easy job from her father; something in the woman who married the peace-loving man that made her select a man she could dominate. But it is always a fascinating speculation as to what people would be, had their choices or the chances of fate tipped the balance the other way.

Silo juice, with a dash of red pepper, is raising havoc in country districts hereabouts, according to reports made to the Pittsburg courts by the constables of nearby townships. The evidence that led to the discovery of the drink was found on the farm of ex-Senator Finn in O'Hara township. Several plugged holes in the big Flinn farm silos told the tale. A small spigot found in one of the holes and a clear, fermented liquor flowed forth. One of the farm hands gave up the formula, which was silo juice, red pepper and burnt rye, the latter for coloring. The kick is said to be worse than that of an ostrich, and, according to the legal sharps, "the drink is within the law."

A Gold Fish Story.

Mrs. Harry Parker, of San Rafael, California, left her gold fish bowl on the porch over night and in the morning found the two gold fish and four minnows encased in a solid cake of ice. She placed the bowl near the range, and in 15 minutes the six fish were leaping to the surface of the water for their morning meal.

THRIFTLESS.

MUTT MASON

There's an ancient weary fellow working for me doing chores; and his life is sad and yellow, and his days and nights are bodes. He is crippled and rheumatic, and he piles a feeble hoof, and his home is in an attic where the rain falls through the roof. I could weep when I behold him; he'll be hopeless in his woes, till the bone-yard sods enfold him, and he has his long repose. And his youth was gay and gilded, and he wildly spent his wage, while the wise youth wrought and builded for the years of wintry age. Once this old man was a master in the trade that he had learned, but he blew his money faster than the ding-donged stuff was earned; and he made no wise provision for the days of want and dread; life was sunny and elysian—why should people look ahead? Why put down the shining shilling in a quantity of brine, when a sport could make a killing in the haunts of cards and wine? Why consider a to-morrow when to-day is good enough? Going broke, a sport could borrow on his watch and kindred stuff. Now around my house he tinkers, and no hope is in his soul, and he carries out the clinkers, and he carries in the coal. Nothing human can enchant him, he is dead to every thrill; and some day the town will plant him in the boneyard on the hill.

French Parliament Abolished.

Among the causes of Choleseul's fall in 1771, was the part he had taken against the Duke d'Argvillon, who had been accused of maladministration in the office of Governor of Brittany, and a process had been instituted against him in the Parliament of Rennes. Louis XV. evoked the suit before the Parliament of Paris and finding that body hostile to his favourite, he annulled their proceedings in a Lit de Justice, and published an edict infringing the privileges of the Parliament. That body tendered their resignation and refused to resume their judicial functions, though commanded to do so by the King, until the obnoxious edict should be withdrawn. The Court solved the question by a coup d'etat. On the night of January 19, 1771, the members of Parliament were awakened in their beds by the Royal Musketeers, with a summons from the king to declare "yes" or "no" whether they would resume their functions. All but thirty or forty refused. Even these, having speedily retracted, were sent into exile, as their refractory comrades had already been, and the Council of State was charged with the provisional administration of justice. These proceedings were followed by others still more arbitrary and illegal. The Parliaments throughout the kingdom were entirely suppressed, and in their place six Superior Councils, with power to pronounce judgment without appeal, except in a few cases, both in civil and criminal causes, were erected in the towns of Arras, Blois, Chalons, Clermont-Ferrand, Lyons and Poitiers. For the Parliament of Paris was substituted a body of sixty-five persons nominated by the king, whose places, therefore, were neither purchased nor hereditary, as formerly, and who were forbidden to take presents from suitors. All this was done under the colour of reform and intellectual progress, affected in those days by the most arbitrary sovereigns. This body was named the Parlement Maupeou.

HUGE BOND.

A bond of $12,000,000 was required of the exporters of 30,000 barrels of whisky, bound to Philadelphia from Louisville, Ky., before their cargoes could be shipped. The bond was demanded to prevent the return of the liquor to the United States in any form. The cargo was shipped to France on the steamship Western Comet.

MEXICO TO GET WORLD FIGHT.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan.—Tlajana, Mexico, will get the Dempsey-Carpenter fight, said Jack Kearns, manager of the world's champion when advised by the Associated Press of George Carpentier's conditional acceptance of promoter Coffroth's offer. Kearns said he would prepare a further statement for publication.

100,000 FOR CARPENTIER-O'DOWD BOUT.

New York, Jan.—In a conference at the Hotel Biltmore, Paddy Mullins, manager of middleweight champion, O'Dowd, signed an agreement with the Turner-Harris syndicate, imposed of eminent theatrical folk, to let O'Dowd meet Georges Carpentier, the European heavyweight champion, within the next three months. A purse of $200,000 is hung up for the match by this syndicate, to be divided on the basis of 60 per cent to the victor and the remaining share to the loser. This offer has been called the Frenchman, with the hope that an answer will be received from him shortly.

Speaking of O'Dowd's experience in London a few months ago, while the latter was serving for Uncle Sam, Mullins said Carpentier refused to fight the middleweight king at a benefit show one night. The Frenchman, according to Mullins, gave his reasons for declining as being out of condition and in no mood for action.

JIMMY WILDE SCORES.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 8.—Jimmy Wilde, English flyweight champion, defeated Johnny "Babe" Asher, stamweight champion of the U. S. Expeditionary Forces, in an eight round no decision bout here to-night, according to newspapermen. Apparently, without extending himself, Wilde carried off the honors in every round. In the 4th, 5th and 6th, Britisher scored knock-downs. Wilde fought coolly and deliberately, allowing Asher (the American banweight champion) around the ring, however, occasionally speedily stepped in and out, scoring points, but his blows had no evident effect on Wilde.

A few seconds after the first gong sounded, Wilde had Asher's nose bleeding, and in the second round a few lefts brought blood from the American boy's mouth. Both boys fought cleanly and there was no inching or holding.

Asher started out strong and leaped at Wilde. He appeared to lose heart, though, when the blood began flowing from his nostrils. In the second and third rounds Wilde rained lefts and rights on Asher's head and body. In the latter round the boys fought toe-to-toe for a few seconds, during which Asher scored a clean upper-cut with his right. Wilde scored Asher with several lightning blows to the face, and easily in the fourth for the count of eight.

In the seventh and eighth rounds Wilde had Asher against the ropes the majority of the time. Wilde stopped the fight in the sixth round and requested that Asher's chest be dried. His request was complied with and the contest continued.

It was announced that Wilde, clad in a sweater, fasted to move the beam placed at 105 pounds. Asher's weight was announced at 113 1/4 pounds.

GUNBOAT SMITH'S OPINION.

Gunboat Smith, who has fought both Jack Dempsey and Georges Carpentier in his time, made the following statement concerning his ideas of the outcome of a fight between the two rival heavyweights:

"I hope Jack Dempsey, in agreeing to the match with Georges Carpentier, doesn't run away with the idea that he is an easy mark. He isn't. I have fought both men and let me say that Carpentier hit me harder with his right than I have ever been hit by any other fighter in the world. That goes for Dempsey, whom I have boxed twice.

"Carpentier is a young fellow. He can't be more than 25 or 26. Dempsey has never met a real young fellow. You can't take it away from him that he has done the best he could with a lot of poor material. But going right down the line, who of any importance has Dempsey ever beaten? Jess Willard! Why, they needed a derick to get him in the ring at Toledo. And even at his best he was no fighter. I know, I fought him. Those other fellows Dempsey beat, who are they? Why, I could check my crutches at the box office and beat most of them myself. There wasn't a single, rugged, healthy fighting youngster in the lot.

"Dempsey will likely have plenty of confidence. I hope he does not underrate his opponent, for I want the title to remain in our country."

hit at him and I was ruled off for foul.

"Billy Mike, the St. Paul, heavy-weight, always keeps about even with Dempsey when they box. Carpenter would knock Mike out. I tell you that right hand of his is deadly a punch as the Frenchman.

"And do not imagine that right hand is all this great Frenchman has, either. He uses his left to jolt and jab. It is a wicked jab, too, one of those that raise little and bumps on your face when they land. And fast? He is in and about all the time.

Would Go 20 Rounds.

"Understand, I am a great admirer of Jack Dempsey. He is the most wonderful fighter developed in my time and my first opinion is that he can beat Carpentier. I am a great stickler for first 'hunches.' But for all that, the bout would be a wonderful one. I suppose the fight will be for twenty rounds. Dempsey has never gone half that far. Carpentier has never fought anything else but twenty round bouts. Of course, it is not Dempsey's fault that his fights have not gone any distance. You have to hand it to him for ending every one of them in rapid order.

"But Dempsey is not going to stop Carpentier with the same speed he flattened everyone else from Al Norton to Jess Willard. That Frenchman is game. He took the count from Bombardier Wells and came back and knocked the Englishman dead. They thought it was a fake victory so they re-matched them. Wells got his again and faster than the first time.

Dempsey in Luck.

"Dempsey in a way was lucky. He came along at a time when the fight game had a mighty punk assortment of heavyweights. Even Fred Fulton is a champ, I think. No punch from Fulton would knock me off my feet. Dempsey I know can take a punch. In my fight with him in San Francisco I hit him as hard on the chin as I ever hit any man, but I couldn't put him away. He said afterward he was dazed for several minutes but he certainly did not fight like it.

"Summing up, I will say Dempsey ought to win. I will not be surprised if the Frenchman does, and I am inclined to think the fight will go the limit. I will not say that Carpentier will hit Dempsey any harder than I did in my first meeting with him. And the Dempsey that Carpentier will meet is a world champion who has met, a sorry lot to be true, and none the equal of the Frenchman.

"Dempsey will likely have plenty of confidence. I hope he does not underrate his opponent, for I want the title to remain in our country."

Where "Woody" Fails.

As soon as the president's health improves Secretary Franklin K. Lane, of the Department of the Interior, will resign. It is a temperamental fault of President Wilson that he cannot bring his mind into co-operation with other minds. He is mentally so constituted that he cannot accept the view of others whose capacity for reasoning is equal to his own. His fixed habit is to examine his own mind and heart, and what he finds there is the only guide for him. He rejects the conclusions of other men when these conclusions run counter to his.—Portland (Oregon) Telegram.

Mrs. Cameron Now Well and Happy Woman

Tells Experience and Expresses Gratitude to Tanlac for Splendid Health.

"I believe everything good I hear about Tanlac since it has overcome my troubles and made me a well and happy woman," was the statement made a few days ago by Mrs. A. F. Cameron, of Dominion, Cape Breton, Canada.

"I have been in bad health for over two years suffering with indigestion, constipation, headaches and a general run-down condition," she continued. "My appetite was so poor that I never cared whether I ate anything or not; in fact, I seldom took anything for breakfast except a cup of tea. The very lightest kind of food soured on my stomach and caused so much gas to form that it pressed up into my throat until I could scarcely breathe. I was always taking laxatives of some kind for constipation and I was often bothered with severe headaches. I did not know what it meant to get a good night's sleep as I would roll and toss for hours after I went to bed every night. I got up of mornings with a heavy, tired feeling and it lasted all day long.

"I am certainly grateful to Tanlac because if it had not been for it I might still have been in this condition. But right after I began taking it I started improving and I continued to get better until now I am in perfect health. I can eat just anything I please and digest it without the least bit of trouble. Gas does not bother me any more and my breathing is free and normal. I never have a headache now and my constipated condition has been entirely relieved. I sleep sound all night long and get up of mornings feeling just fine. I never have that heavy, tired feeling any more as all my strength has come back to me. Tanlac is certainly the greatest medicine I have ever seen and I can recommend it with the greatest pleasure."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative, in Harbor Street, by Thomas Wakely & Sons; in Placentia, by James Murphy & Son, and in Topsall by J. K. Bursell.—adv.

Origin of the Cheque.

The word "Cheque" came into its present use from an ancient and foreign source, and a remote significance. Its original is a Persian word, pronounced something like "shak" a term in chess—which game was invented by the Persians to designate a movement of chess men in an attack upon the king-piece. In the later Latin the word "scacorum" meant a chess board, and "scacorum" the checkmating movement in the game. Passing into the French this later word became "eschec," and through the Norman into old English in a form from which the word "cheque" or "check" developed. From its usage in chess it was extended to designate an action stopping a movement or progress in any affair. The noun developed in applying the idea of checking to a thing that would accomplish this purpose, as with a ticket or token. In banking the original "cheque" was a stub or counterfoil to prevent forgery. With the development of transactions in banking, drawn notes, drafts and cheques were synonymous terms. It is maintained that it has been only within the last forty years that a cheque has become established in its statutory definition as "a written order to a banker to pay a named sum on a drawer's account to bearer or named person.—Home Bank Monthly.

BROKEN PROMISES.

I promised her roses to wear in her hair. And satins and silks for her gown; I promised her freedom from troublesome care. With never a reason to frown; But, oh, I was young in the glad days of old. And little I knew what the years would unfold. I promised a carriage in which she should ride. And servants to come at her call; I promised that never her heart should be tried. And never a tear drop should fall; But little I know in the glad days back then. The hardships that lie in the pathway of men. I promised her jewels to wear at her breast. I promised her silver and gold; She should know life at its fairest and best. With never a bleak day and cold. But, oh, I was young in that glad long ago. And thought I could win all those gifts to bestow. Now I've learned that at times men and women must weep. And hearts must grow heavy with care. Though my vows I am earnestly trying to keep. There are burdens that still she must share. But she smiles through it all, and she says that she knew I was promising more than I ever could do.

The Master Spy.

Remarkable disclosures of the Secret Service for the Allies performed by a Jesuit, Pere Meeus, a distinguished social worker, who went to England from Louvain recently, were published a few days ago.

Pere Meeus served his country from the beginning of the war, working at continual risk of his life as a director of the organization for maintaining the morale of the Belgians under the German yoke, and he also was a collaborator of the clandestine Press, La Libre Belgique, the source of which the Germans could never trace.

He organized a daring scheme by which he was able to forward

1,200,000 letters from Belgian soldiers to their wives in invaded districts, and also worked with Nurse Cavell and others in passing soldiers over the frontier. Four hundred British soldiers, in addition to his own compatriots, benefitted from his services. He became so famous for his work that he was ordered by his superiors in 1916 to escape, and, proceeding to London, he found work awaiting him at Earl's Court. Returning to Belgium this year he was decorated by King Albert.

Describing his work with Nurse Cavell, Pere Meeus says, prisoners were taken into Brussels in disguise, and were then met by the "grande espionne," a little girl who carried a big doll, ran about and played and looked into shop windows. The soldiers would follow her without any sign of recognition on her part, and then she would stop outside the house in which Nurse Cavell met them. The soldiers were then bandaged up and transferred into "hospital" patients, and were introduced to Pere Meeus as "M. Janssen" or "Baron Jensen," who would get the men across the frontier.

Once as a cattle driver he got to Ostend and found the real lurking place of the German submarines. At another time, hearing that prior to air raids on England it was the custom of Zeppelin and Gotha officers to meet at dinner, he set himself up as a pastry cook, and was thus able to find out where the dinners were to be held. Then, by means of carrier pigeons to Holland, he informed the Admiralty of impending raids.

It was only by chance that he was not taken with Nurse Cavell. The three chief conspirators had arranged to meet in conference. Cardinal Mercier had sent for Pere Meeus to get an important message into Holland. Meeus' fellow-conspirator chiefs were arrested and shot.

Later a reunion of conspirators was decided upon. Pere Meeus arrived dressed as a mason, and bluffed the German police officer. A fellow-conspirator arrived having in his stockings plans of the Ostend fortifications and the Year, and the third arrived disguised as a servant. The latter was recognized, but feigning illness he was taken to hospital, from which, however, he managed to escape. This spy is described by Pere Meeus as the "priestlike Charlie Chaplin." The sixty Secret Agents in Brussels soon learned of the police vigilance, and all got away. Pere Meeus swam the canal into Holland, and helped a colleague across who could not swim.

Why is Gold Called Precious?

Gold is called one of the precious metals because of its beautiful color, its luster, and the fact that it does not rust or tarnish when exposed to the air. It is the most ductile (can be stretched out into the thinnest wire), and is also the most malleable (can be hammered out into the thinnest sheet.) It can be hammered out into leaves so thin that light will pass through them. Pure gold is so soft that it cannot be used in that form: in making gold coins or in making jewelry. Other substances, generally copper, are added to it to make the gold coins and jewelry hard. Sometimes silver is also added to the gold with copper. The gold coins of the United States are made of nine parts of gold to one of copper. The coins of France are the same, while the coins of England are made of eleven parts of gold to one of copper. The gold used for jewels and watch cases varies from eight or nine to eighteen carats fine.

Another reason why gold is called a precious metal is that it is very difficult to dissolve it. None of the acids alone will dissolve gold, and only two of them when mixed together will do so. These are nitric acid and hydro-chloric acid. When these two acids are mixed and gold put into the mixture the gold will disappear. From the Book of Wonders.

Successful Organ Recital

Attended by many citizens of prominence, the Governor being one, a very enjoyable organ recital was held in the auditorium of George Street Methodist Church last evening. A splendid programme of delightful music having been prepared. The handsomely artistic decorations put up for Xmas were still in evidence and the interior of the church presented a pretty scene.

As the Governor and Lady Harris entered the church the National Anthem was played by the organist, and then the programme was begun with an organ solo, "Suite Gothique." This consisted of four movements, which enabled the organist to demonstrate the range and power of the splendid instrument. Following this the anthems "Break Forth Into Joy" and "Christians Awake! Salute the Happy Morn" were beautifully rendered by the choir, the solos being taken by Miss G. Christian Mrs. Christian and Mr. C. Trappnell.

Two solos, "The Lord is My Shepherd," by Miss Marjorie Jolliffe; and "Father in Heaven," by Mrs. Gordon Christian concluded the first part of the programme. The second part of the programme included organ solos, "Overture Miniature," Tschalkowsky; "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor," Bach; and "Woodland Rest," Goss Custard, all of which were rendered perfectly, and in a manner which showed Mr. Christian's thorough mastery of the instrument. Several anthems by the choir and the "Hallelujah Chorus" completed the program, which was one of the musical treats that are all too rare and which reflected great credit on organist and choir, and they are to be congratulated on the unqualified success of the recital.

N. B. S. Elect Officers.

The Nfld. British Society held its 33rd annual meeting last night, and despite the inclement weather a large attendance resulted. The usual reports showed the Society to be in a flourishing condition. Past President J. Lawrence conducted the election of officers for the ensuing year. The result of the election is as follows: President—Reg. Dowden, re-elected. Vice-Pres.—Henry Cowan, re-elected.

Secretary—M. Downton, elected. Treas.—G. H. Cook, re-elected. Marshal—Ron. Noseworthy, re-elected. Committee elected—Jas. Rendall, Chas. Bowden, K. Ruby, H. Bishop, H. Ford, H. Butler, Jas. Auchincloch, Wm. Boone, W. Benson.

After a discussion of some business matters the meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Boy Scouts.

A movement is on foot to give the Boy Scouts organization in Newfoundland more strength and impetus, and yesterday a deputation waited upon His Excellency the Governor for the purpose of securing his sympathy and profiting by his advice. The deputation was to have consisted of Rev. Mr. Forbes, Gower Street Troop; Rev. Mr. Bugden, Wesley Troop; Capt. J. J. O'Grady, St. Bon's Troop, and Mr. Jas. Murdoch, the Organizing Secretary, but owing to other engagements the former three could not attend, consequently Mr. Murdoch, who was accompanied by an assistant Scout Master, deputized by Capt. O'Grady, waited upon the Governor. The result of the interview has not yet been made public, but there is no doubt every encouragement was given by His Excellency, who is keenly interested in everything pertaining to the health and welfare of the boys of Newfoundland.

Bricklayers' Annual Meeting.

Mainly About People.

Lady Astor owns a famous diamond. It was given to her by her father-in-law. A magnificent flat-top, pear-shaped triollette, rather off color, and with a white feather flaw, said to weigh 53 1/2 karats and valued at $75,000. It was first owned by Charles the Bold, then by Nicholas de Bally, Baron de Nancy, and is known as the Nancy diamond. The story of the diamond is questioned, but not with Nancy present.

Mrs. "Snowy" Baker, wife of the Australian sporting promoter, knows as much about the business of athletics as her husband. Mrs. Baker is the promoter's chief assistant in his business affairs. She has arranged and put over important prize fights without his help and has made contracts under which American boxers invaded Australia for a series of bouts. Recently she took a hand in the theatrical game, arranging for the filming of a thriller in which her husband is to be starred.

H. G. Wells, the famous novelist, started out in active life as a drafter's assistant. He tired of the job and ran away to become a writer. To-day he is one of the most popular and best paid novelists before the public eye. It was before the days of his present fame that he compared the writers of old with new men in the following manner. He was being tackled by a friend who argued that modern authors had too easy a time. "You modern writers do not work so hard as the old ones," said his friend, "and you are paid twenty times as much as you ought to be." "You labor under a misapprehension," retorted Wells. "The chief difference between the old authors, and those of to-day is simply this: The old die, and their works live; our works die, and we live—as best we can."

Llewellyn Bible Conference.

An unusually large number of members of Llewellyn Bible Conference attended last night's meeting in Canon Wood Hall, when the question of an inter-denominational college was debated. Messrs. H. N. Burt, H. Y. Mott and J. J. McKay, taking the affirmative side, and Messrs. R. R. Wood, Dr. Blackall, and C. E. Hunt, the negative. The discussion was a most instructive and interesting one, the subject of inter-denominational education in general being dealt with. The affirmative side favored the inter-denominational system largely as a change in keeping with the times, on the grounds that one college could be run cheaper than three, and as a means of giving pupils advanced training, which now has to be sought abroad. The negative side favored the existing denominational system, as there is nothing to show a change is needed, and it has not proven a failure, though improvements or advances may be possible. The other had been used before, but did not work. The present plan also assures that religious training on which character building depends and the spirit of brotherliness in which our lads fought in the war without thought of creed or class, had been largely inculcated by the healthy competition between the schools and was a point in favor of the denominational system. More religious training, it was pointed out, is necessary to eradicate bigots and sectarian firebugs, and would prevent the important question of the day being decided through appeals to sectarianism and catch cries. The thought was also expressed that if the funds now largely given by private supporters of schools were placed in the hands of an inter-denominational or public body, the stimulus to give would be withdrawn and the control would gradually pass into a Government board with possibly an illiterate at the head placed there for party expediency. It was further held that the new plan might be started in some of the smaller places where it may be feasible, but not in the capital, as it might tend to create a feeling that all would regret, between different denominations. Rev. Dr. Jones, who presided, pointed out that some misunderstanding seemed general on the question, his idea being not Godless schools, but institutions with more advanced courses than at present and training in the ethics of religion. Following the debate, refreshments were served by a number of ladies, after which many present inspected the new club rooms in the basement.

Might Be Followed Here.

The Halifax Automobile Association recently sent out a bulletin that contains some very good advice, under the caption, "Safety First and Always." It follows: "Drive as if the other driver was a born idiot. "Drive as if all children and most pedestrians were bent on suicide beneath your wheels. "Drive as if every hill had a chasm at the bottom. "Drive as if every curve was a highwayman, a Bengal tiger and a stone wall. "Examine your car before you start, not after you stop, and you won't have accidents."

Motor Car and Motor Truck Owners.

I have a splendid equipment for general automobile work and can guarantee first class overhauling. Every engine tested under its own power before being put back in the car, thereby getting over the greatest enemy an engine can have, that is oil leaks. All oil leaks are detected and made right, consequently you can be sure of a good and lasting job. I also have a Hempy Cooper rehabilitating and reboring machine for crank shaft and connecting rods, which insures quiet running, as all bearings are in perfect line. With this equipment we can do work quickly and much more practical than heretofore.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

My Garage will be closed from March 10th until April 15th, as I am taking my entire Mechanical Staff on a visit to the Motor Factories with a view to giving first class service. Parties wishing to have their cars overhauled for the coming season would be wise to have them done immediately. For instance, parts may be found broken or worn and it may not be possible to replace them here, in which case I can get them while away, thereby saving a lot of inconvenience and disappointment when the car is wanted. One thing is sure, cars that are overhauled in the winter months are given better inspection than those done in the rush season; so just call us up and we will get your car in and have it done right away. I have a supply of repair parts in stock. Room for about 50 more cars. Ford Trucks taken care of with despatch.
