Waterdown Drug Store

Since the fire in our old stand last month we have been continuing business under considerable difficulties through lack of stock (which has been very hard to purchase promptly, owing to the unusual market conditions and general shortage of goods) and disability to locate goods promptly in store, all of which at times has made it difficult to supply our customers promptly. We are getting in

Letters from the Front Letters from Our Boys Who Are Fighting for Us

France, Oct. 12, 1918.
Dear Cousin,—
Just a line to say that I have been wounded, but it is only a slight one in the left wrist. I am now in a hospital in France. It is fine to get cleaned up and have a bed to sleep on. It is just like life over again after doing without so long.

I will soon be able to go out, but will go to the Con. Camp and then to the Base, so it will be a little while before I go up the line again.

Well, I have been lucky. It took 23 months before he got me, and I could do with this kind, I hope, twice a year just to get a good rest.

Will not know what my address will be, so just write to the same old address and I will get it some time. So good-bye for the present. Remember me to Dave and the kiddies.

From
G. W. SMITH.

July 9th, 1917.
Dear Friend,—

I received your letter yesterday and appreciate your kindness very much. We boys here in France are always pleased to hear from home and I hope you will continue to favor me with a letter occasionally. I haven't received the parcel yet, but hope to soon. When you write you can address me to the 7th Canadian Battalion, France, that will always get me eventually. I wrote a letter to mother a few days ago and when I get a chance will send some cards. I would like to tell you more about France, but you will understand that our mail is censored going from France to Canada. It's an army rule, but that does not hinder you from telling me all the news, so hoping to hear from you again and thanking you kindly for writing, am your affectionate friend,

PTE. W. J. BRECKON.

P.S.—It took just 38 days for your letter to reach me.

France, Oct. 13, 1918.
Dear Friend,—

I received your letter several weeks ago, but have been so busy following up Fritz that I had almost forgotten how to write.

You asked me what I thought about the war. Well, you people are about as well informed as we are. We can only judge from what we are able to see, and that is very limited. Nevertheless I have a feeling in my bones that a few more weeks at the most will see the end of this dirty work.

We are at present in a little French village, or at least what at one time had been a village, but now a heap of tumbledown stone and charred timbers. Fritz just departed about nine hours before our arrival. He is destroying everything he can. They are down and out and they know it. The prisoners we are taking now are a poor sample of manhood and nothing like the German soldier of two or three years ago.

Three days ago we cleaned out a machine gun nest which were more than half boys only in their teens. Hindy may be saving his best soldiers and using the inferior for rear-guard slaughter, and slaughter it is. I have seen more dead Boches in the last two months than I ever did before, and I have been here now a little over three years. Of course, we are not doing all this without any losses. Fritz is hitting back and naturally getting some of us, but it is a two to one game, that is, two Germans to one white man.

I have lost your letter and cannot recall all you wrote, but remember you saying something or other about the American soldiers. Well, I have met them and have seen a battalion, or as they call it, a regiment, go over the top. Just where, when and how I came to see would be best unsaid, as the censor might object. I was with them a short time before they were timed to go over and they were just a bit nervous and fussy, but when they got started I think that feeling must have left them, for they just yelled like a pack of Indians all the way. Sammie (and by the way he doesn't like to be called Sammie) thought this war was some joke until he got into it. I think he has a different view now. He's all right, excepting one or two faults, and more like the Canadians than any of the rest.

There is a great deal I could tell you that would be interesting if it would reach you, but you don't know old Mr. Censor like we do, and then there would be nothing to tell when I get back, which I believe is near at hand now. I think I see you smiling when you read this. Well, I am no prophet, but allow me to bet that before the snow flies we will be on German soil, and the moment we do, well, up goes Fritz's hands. He is afraid of his own beloved little land and women and children, and he remembers his own work of four years in France and Belgium. Therefore the fear. Well, we are civilized human beings and he a savage.

We expect to be on the move again in a few hours, so must bring this to a close. I hope you are all well, fat and happy and that I will hear from you again. Remember me to all the folks.

Your friend,

ARTHUR.

Somewhere in France,
4th August, 1918.

Dear Miss Reid,—

Thanks very much for the fine pair of socks. They were just the very thing I needed. It was at the end of a 30 kilometer march that the corporal came around with the socks, and I found your address in the pair I received.

Again thanking you for your kindness, I am, yours truly,

PTE. E. MacDAID,
D Co., 49th Batt., France.

CANADIANS

What American thinks of Canadians is best expressed in the following article taken from the Ladies' Home Journal:

HE KNEW THEM

A young British private was on night guard at a lonely outpost in France when suddenly he heard the tramp of an advancing regiment.

"Halt!" he called. "Who goes there?"

"Irish Fusiliers."

"Pass, Irish Fusiliers, all's well."

Silence reigned for some minutes and then he heard another regiment advancing. "Halt! Who goes there?"

"London Scottish."

"Pass, London Scottish, all's well."

For some time there was silence and then another regiment was heard.

"Halt! Who goes there?"

"None of your d— business!"

"Pass, Canadians, all's well."

Soldiers' Memorial

A meeting will be called in the near future to consider the erection of a soldiers' memorial. An organization will be formed and a fund started to be known as a Soldiers' Memorial Fund. It is the intention to place in Waterdown something which will be a lasting memory to the Waterdown boys who fought in the great war of liberty.

Short Courses at the O. A. C.

By Charles M. Flatt

The growing season of 1918 is finished and one of the best harvests in the history of Ontario has been garnered. But bountiful as it was, there are few farmers who do not feel that they can do better by adopting more advanced methods of farming their land, and of marketing their produce. Many desire to keep in touch with up-to-date methods but do not know the best way to do so.

To the practical agriculturist who is especially busy during the summer months, the winter short course offers the best opportunity for him to secure valuable information on his particular line of farming, at little expense, either in time or money. The short courses conducted by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, although of comparatively recent inception, have developed into a system of Agricultural Education of recognized value to all classes of practical farmers.

The main courses, after which all others have been modelled, are held at the Ontario Agricultural College, and comprise seven separate studies on the most important special lines in agriculture in Ontario.

The Stock and Seed Judging Course, commencing on January 14th, and lasting nearly two weeks, is of value to the stock breeder and general farmer particularly. The student is made familiar with the proper breed type of all the common breeds of farm stock, and by practical work in the judging ring is enabled to get a fairly comprehensive knowledge of the main points to be observed in judging classes of live stock, and consequently in the selection of breeding animals.

The seed judging is a profitable study in grain structure and the selection of samples and varieties of seed grain. This is supplemented by a study in the identification of weed seeds.

The course in Poultry Raising is largely practical and deals with every phase of the industry, from the selection of the flock to the final disposition of its products. Lectures on the principles of breeding, the origin and characteristics of the various breeds widen the knowledge of the poultry raiser and increase his interest in his speciality.

Under the head of Horticulture, three separate courses of two weeks' duration each cover all the subject. The first in Fruit Growing is a practical course dealing altogether with fruit-growing methods in Ontario. The financial opportunities afforded by the various lines of fruit production are discussed, so the course is of direct value to practical growers.

The course in Vegetable Growing is a comprehensive study of growing methods for amateur and professional gardeners. The Study in Landscape Gardening supplies information on a subject of interest to all who take pride in their home surroundings.

Three months of practical work in butter and cheese making turns out a class of men fitted for work in any up-to-date cheese factory or creamery.

The Farm Dairy Course is designed to cover the handling of dairy products on the average farm.

Courses in cow-testing, ice-cream making and the manufacture of soft cheese deal with three very important dairy questions.

The bee-keeping industry which is developing so rapidly in Ontario today is the subject of one of the most profitable short courses. Methods of Management, Bee Diseases and their control, and Queen Rearing are subjects dealt with in the lecture portion of the course. Preparing supplies for

RASSELAS AND RAIDS.

Dr. Johnson Proves Prophet of Man's Conquest of the Air.

A chapter in "Rasselas" shows that as early as 1758, the year the book was written by Dr. Samuel Johnson, the conquest of the air was agitating the minds of inventive human beings. Although living in the Happy Valley, Prince Rasselas was an unhappy man, for the king had forbidden him to leave the country, which was walled in by mountains, and had but one way of entrance and exit, and that was strictly guarded.

In casting about for a chance to escape the prince happened upon a man eminent for his knowledge of mechanics, who had contrived a wheel to supply the palace with water from a stream. Quizzing the genius, Rasselas learned that he had an idea in his head for a flying machine, and thought the apparatus might furnish the means of his getting over the mountains. To his objections, made for drawing the inventor on that the air was made for birds and not men, he received the reply:

"So fishes have the water in which they breathe can swim by nature and men by art. He that swims need not despair of flying. To swim is to fly in a grosser fluid, and to fly is to swim in a subtler. We are only to proportion our power of resistance to the different density of matter through which we are to pass. You will be necessarily upheld by the air if you can renew any impulse upon it faster than the air can recede from the pressure.

This is an actual description of the heavier-than-air machine that is now used, 160 years after that remarkable book was written. Rasselas was enthusiastic and urged the man to instruct the world how to fly. But—

"If men were all virtuous," returned the artist, "I should with great alacrity teach them to fly. But what would be the security of the good if he had could at pleasure invade them from the sky? Against an army sailing through the clouds neither walls, nor mountains, nor seas could afford any security. A flight of northern savages might hover in the wind and light at once with irresistible violence upon the capital of any fruitful region that was rolling under them."

This shows how accurately Dr. Johnson foresaw the present plight in England. But, as his story goes, the inventor built a machine for Prince Rasselas. It was not a success simply for the reason that a light motive power, like the explosive engine, was not created. When the artist tried it from a little premonitory, he waived his pinions a while to gather air, then leaped from his stand, and in an instant dropped into the lake.—Eastern Argus.

Can't Lose Glasses.

Military eyeglasses is the contribution to the field of war inventions by Dr. Robert J. James, well-known Seattle physician and surgeon.

The outstanding features of the new eyeglasses, according to the inventor, are: They cannot be jarred loose from their places even under the most severe treatment, the tightening hold on the nose, which is injurious to one's health and comfort, is eliminated and gives way to three natural points of suspension, and the glasses may be removed with one hand.

The glasses have two extensions at either side of the face slightly above the eye. The small plate at the end of the extensions holds the glasses firm and does not rest on any vital nerve or blood vessel, as is the case when the only point of suspension is at the nose.

A Prosperous Look.

Reference to a social session was made to the crispness of some brands of repartee, when Congressman Seward H. Williams, of Ohio, related an anecdote along that line.

When a young lawyer in a small Ohio town first opened business he took a room that had previously been occupied by a cobbler, and naturally he was more or less irritated over the fact that more people came to have their shoes half soled than for legal repairs.

"The cobbler's gone, O! see, remarked a son of the Emerald Isle, entering the place one afternoon with a dilapidated pair of shoes and glancing at the unfamiliar appearance of things. "That might you be seillin'?"

"I am selling blockheads," was the peevish response of the annoyed lawyer.

"Bogorra, an' ye must be doin' a mighty fine business," smilingly replied Mike. "O! noticed that ye have but wan left."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

A Birthday Ballade.

(To Charles)
By Alfred Gordon.

"I shall never, never grow old!"
"Have your way, my lad, have your way!"
"The only old folks that I find
We crumble to dust, and decay,
In vain I cry out to you, 'Stay! stay!'"

Remember the years and their part
The world was not made for mere play!"

For I once had the same visions too
"All I touch shall turn into gold!"
"Well, it may, my lad, well it may!
Tis a tale that's so often been told,
It surely must happen some day!"
And, indeed, if you think of it, pray,
Why shouldn't it happen to you?
To such logic 'tis hard to cry nay—
For I once had the same visions too!

"My fans round the world shall be rolled!"
"So you say, my lad, so you say!
"Though the sun and the stars shall grow cold,
I shall echo for ever and aye!"
Ah, yes, though perpetual gray
Has clouded me half my life through,
In vain on such dreams I inveigh—
For I once had the same visions too!

Health and wealth and fame, then, undated,
Be yours, lad, whatever you do!
Ah, what though I dream to myself—
For I once had the same visions too!

Waste of Energy.

An Irishman was coming down one of the bridges of the Liverpool landing stage on his way to the Strkenhead boat. Over his shoulders hung a bag containing about a bushel of potatoes and in his hand he carried a stout stick.

Being under full sail, the momentum acquired in coming down the steep slope carried him nearly across the landing stage, when, seeing a boat about 10 feet from him, he shook out another reef, made an astonishing spurt and jumped.

Just as he reached the deck the potato bag shifted heavily to port and laid out a clerk who was smoking a cigar through a meerschaum holder, while the stick hit a rotund merchant in the waistband, shutting him up like a knife, and Pat himself assumed an involuntary devotional attitude.

He was the first to recover his perpendicularity and, as he replaced the bag in its normal position, he complacently remarked:

"By my soul, that was a powerful jump, but I got the boat."
"Got the boat!" shrieked the clerk, spitting out pieces of amber. "Why, you confounded idiot, this boat is coming in."
And so she was.—Exchange.

Why Russia Has Persecuted the Jew.

The Russian has not persecuted the Jew because he was a Russian, or because the Jew was a Jew. The fundamental secret of Jewish oppression in Russia is the fact that the Jew has not fitted into the economic life of Russia. The Jew never has fitted into a feudal civilization. And it is not conceivable that he ever can be made to fit into a feudal civilization. Whatever the Jew has found himself in feudal society he has been grievously oppressed. Feudal England persecuted the Jew; and it was not until the passing of the rule of the feudal nobility that the measure of freedom which the Jew now enjoys in England came to him. Feudal Spain persecuted the Jew, and so did feudal France. Feudal Germany was brutal in its oppression of the Jew.

and only the development of German capitalism brought a measure of toleration. And it remains true that, because in Germany among the great capitalistic nations—the largest amount of feudal militarism remains, anti-Semitism is stronger and more pronounced in Germany than in any other of the capitalist countries.

It is quite easy to understand the unfriendliness of the Jew for a feudal civilization. Feudalism requires a degree of servility that is impossible to the Jewish mind; it requires illiteracy, superstition, patient submission to constituted authority and an acceptance of caste rule which has its roots in superstition. It requires, furthermore, a lack of imagination, of which the Jew is not capable.—Harper's Magazine.

True Womanly Instinct.

It was a happy and neighborly little party that was enjoying the cool evening breezes on the porch. Education was the theme of conversation, and the host was airing his views.

"Nobody can learn in a lifetime all that should be known," he said. "A man ought never to assume that his education is complete. I must and will keep abreast of the times, and I propose to begin the study of astronomy at once, and continue it through the winter."

"Jerome," said his wife calmly from the hammock in the corner, "you'll have to think of some better excuse than that for staying out until all hours of the night."—Exchange.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarrhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. ## Britain's Work at Outbreak of War. Revealed to World by Lord Haldane.

London, Cable — In a speech at Bedford College Saturday night Lord Haldane gave the history of the British and French convention in 1914, when there was fear of an attack on France by Germany. On that occasion the French said in effect, according to Lord Haldane: "If you feel it to be to your interest to come to our assistance in order to prevent the invasion of Northern France by Germany, is it not advisable that your military authorities and ours should have full conversations, without binding anyone, but with the view of determining the extent of the military assistance you can give?"

"In formal and unbinding conversations were initiated at once, and it was decided that the function of any British army might be to supplement the great French army with a force strong enough to hold the Germans should they try to break through some parts of Belgium."

"The French thought at that time that if we could contribute 100,000 men capable of concentrating on their left within 15 days of the outbreak of the war, that would be enough to enable the main body to hold their position."

"We found all we could concentrate would be 80,000 men, and it would take us at least two and one-half months to assemble that number. The French said to us: 'But we would be dead before you came, and they were right.'"

Passing to the British preparations for the war, more than four years ago, Lord Haldane said: "We had to make a revolution in our military arrangements, and it was made under the guidance of Sir Douglas Haig and a number of other officers."

"In the end 50 per cent. was added to the French estimate, and we put not 100,000, but 250,000, in the field, and not in 15 days, but in 12. We mobilized in August, 1914, 26 hours before we declared war. Within a few hours after the declaration of war our expeditionary force was across the Channel, before anybody knew it."

Lays Blame for War on Bethmann-Hollweg,

And Jagow, Former Foreign Minister.

Copenhagen, Cable—Further revelations showing that former Emperor William of Germany is seeking to escape responsibility for bringing on the war are contained in an article by Dr. George Wegener, appearing in the Lozanne Gazette, regarding a conversation which his writer had with the Emperor just before he fled. In this interview the Emperor attempted to shift the blame for the world conflict to the shoulders of Dr. Theobald von Bethmann-Hollweg, former Imperial Chancellor, and Guethel von Jagow, former Minister of Foreign Affairs, in a private conversation he had with Dr. George Wegener five days before he fled from Germany, according to a report of the interview written for the Lozanne Zeitung by Dr. Wegener.

The Emperor told Dr. Wegener that the Government's policy of the last weeks before the outbreak of the war had been carried on by Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg and Herr von Jagow alone.

"Against my will they sent me to Norway," William is quoted as having said. "I did not wish to undertake the voyage because the gravity of the situation after the murder Archduke Francis Ferdinand was clear at first sight. But the Chancellor said to me:

"Your Majesty must take this voyage in order to maintain peace. If your Majesty remains here, it undoubtedly means war, and the world will lay to your charge responsibility for this war."

"Well, I then undertook the voyage. During all this time I received no report from my Government concerning current events. Strictly speaking, I only learned from Norwegian newspapers of what was occurring in the world, and in this way I learned of the Russian mobilization measures. "But when I heard that the British fleet had put to sea, I fearfully caught me. On my orders, German ships returned at once to the security of Norwegian harbors. Later it would not have been possible for them to do so."

STILL HOARDING.

Germans Withdraw Huge Sums From Banks.

Berlin, Cable — Addressing the Central Board of the Imperial Bank of Germany, Rudolf Havenstein, president of the bank, urgently admonished the people not to hoard cash. He said that between Oct. 1 and Nov. 23 there had been withdrawn from the bank 3,855,000,000 marks, as against 2,000,000,000 marks last year, and that after 4,000,000,000 marks had already been drawn out in the third quarter. Moreover, President Havenstein declared, more than another billion marks of new currency had been circulated in the same period by means of coupons and the notes of private banks and communes, making the total emergency money five billion marks between the above dates.

Herr Havenstein announced the final total of the last war loan subscription as 10,432,959,700 marks, of which 93.14 per cent. had already been paid.

"RED FLAG" SUNG IN LONDON HALL

Strong Words at British Labor Party Meeting.

Still Democratic Resolutions Passed.

London, Cable — The British Labor party held a big meeting at Albert Hall Saturday night to discuss labor questions and the league of nations. The "red flag" was sung and revolutionary sentiments were expressed. A large proportion of the singers were Russians from the east end, and the meeting was the sequel of a quarrel between laborites and the managers of the hall at a similar meeting held during victory week. The management cancelled the contract for to-night's meeting, which had been arranged a week ago, whereupon the Electric Workers' Union threatened to cut off the lights from the hall during the great victory ball on Wednesday night. The underground railway workers and taxicab men threatened to go on strike the same night, so the management decided to allow the contract for to-night's meeting to stand. Resolutions were adopted at the meeting demanding the immediate release of all political prisoners and calling the attention of President Wilson to the "urgent need of justice" in the case of Thomas J. Mooney, the Labor leader, at San Francisco.

Another resolution adopted demanded the creation of a democratic league of peoples based on the abolition of conscription, disarmament, self-determination of all peoples, including Ireland, and other subject peoples in the British Empire; the withdrawal of the Allied armies from Russia; the immediate restoration of the workers' International; and the inclusion of international labor charter in the peace terms.

James Ramsay MacDonald, former chairman of the Labor party, and Mrs. Philip Snowden, a woman suffrage advocate, were the principal speakers.

It was announced at the meeting that £100,000 had been received for the establishment of a daily labor paper.

ASK NEUTRALS PLACE THE BLAME

Berlin, Cable — The German Government has proposed to the Entente nations that a neutral commission be established to examine the question as to who will be held responsible for the war. The proposal is contained in a note sent to Switzerland for transmission to France, Great Britain, Italy and the United States. It asks that all the belligerents place their secret documents at the disposal of the commission.

Poorish, pale, restless and sickly children owe their condition to worms. Mother Graves' Worm Expeller will relieve them and restore health.

BAVARIA HAS QUIT GERMANY

Will Negotiate for a Separate Peace.

Rapture is Complete, a Clash Possible.

London, Cable — Bavaria will open negotiations for a separate peace with the Entente allies, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Zurich, which says that the rupture between the governments of Berlin and Munich is now complete.

The government of Germany is supported by Paul Mangoldt von Hinzendorff, who placed the army at its disposal, and refused to resign or to discuss Dr. W. S. Solf, Foreign Secretary in the coalition Cabinet, or Dr. Solf's resignation.

Dr. Solf, the Bavarian Premier, has declared that he is ready to take all consequences of a conflict with Prussia, says the Berlin correspondent of the Copenhagen National Tidende. Herr Eisner is quoted as saying that Bavaria is forced to act independently the Rhine provinces and the whole south of Germany will support her.

The same correspondent quotes Herr Haas, Minister of the interior in Baden, as saying that the ideal of the empire should be maintained, but that no Berlin dictatorship will be tolerated.

Dr. Alfred Zimmermann, former Secretary of Foreign Affairs, replying to the charge of Kurt Eisner, the Bavarian Premier, that the government at Berlin was responsible for the war, declares in the Deutsche Zeitung: "We did not prompt Austria-Hungary to her action, but expressly advised her against it. The Vienna ultimatum, which we considered too severe, was communicated to us too late for an endeavor to mitigate it."

Its Virtue Cannot be Described.—No one can explain the subtle power that Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil possesses. The originator was himself surprised by the wonderful qualities that his compound possessed. That he was the benefactor of humanity is shown by the myriads that rise in praise of this wonderful Oil. So familiar is everyone with it that it is prized as a household medicine everywhere.

"BIG BERTHAS" HIDDEN.

With the American Army of Occupation, Cable — The inside facts regarding "Big Bertha" and the other monster German guns may be locked up with the numerous secrets of Germany. Information that reached the American army officials is to the effect that the German guns of heavy calibre at various points have been shipped to the interior on flat cars. Shipments of parts of big gun emplacements also are reported. Germans, interrogated as to the disposition of "Big Bertha" and other large calibered cannon, claim to be ignorant of their present whereabouts.

LONDON CHEERS ALLIED CHIEFS

Foch and Clemenceau Given an Ovation.

Cries of "Good Old Tiger!" for Latter.

(By James M. Tuohy)

London, Cable — In my long experience I never remember seeing London crowds so unrestrainedly enthusiastic as they were in their ovation given to Marshal Foch and Premier Clemenceau today. They were thickly massed along the whole route, and rising superior to the depressing influence of the dismal, gray, damp weather, really cheered themselves hoarse, and there was the true ring of boundless admiration and gratitude to Foch, the organizer of victory. Foch, standing beside the Duke of Connaught in the first carriage, saluted now and then with military dignity. Immovable and unsmiling, evidently the man, outwardly at least, was unresponsive to the popular plaudits. Clemenceau, cast in the real Gallic mould, waved his hat at all times, and with obvious emotion in response to such a greeting as it took a man of steel to withstand with calm. Clemenceau's vigor and vitality are amazing. He looked hardly older than his companion, Lloyd George, his eyes sparkling with delight, his massive, pug-nosed head perilously bared to the chilly damp as their carriage passed the equestrian statue of George the Third. Lloyd George nudged him, and, jerking his thumb in the direction of the statue, said something that made Clemenceau smile and shake his head, evidently a gibe about the King who lost America for Britain. Premier Orlando, of Italy, and Foreign Minister Sonnino in the third carriage also was most warmly received. Orlando, a hand# some, white-haired Italian, responded with true southern fervor, while Sonnino the silent passed with bared head and an occasional bow. The procession was short, but it roused the emotions of the vast throngs from their sincerest depths.

The cheering was punctuated frequently with the cry of "Good old Tiger!" for Clemenceau. Trafalgar Square and other vantage points were black with people.

TRIED TO KILL ALL WITNESSES

Proofs Submitted On Work of U-Boats

In Sinking of Hospital Ships.

London, Cable — The British Foreign Office has published a paper giving the details of the sinking of the British hospital ships Rewa, Glenart Castle, Guilford Castle and Llandover Castle by German submarines in January, February, March and June of this year. A copy of the statement has been sent to British diplomatic representatives in allied and neutral countries.

Mr. Balfour, the Foreign Secretary, who drafted the statement, says: "There can be little doubt that the German commander attempted to slaughter all the witnesses of his crime and to sink the ship without leaving any trace, according to Count Luxburg's notorious phrase."

The statement says in part: "The German Government, in reply to the protest addressed to them by the British Government through the Spanish Ambassador, denied that a German submarine attacked the Rewa, and, in the absence of proof, refused to discuss the protest made by the British Government against the attacks made on the Glenart Castle and Guilford Castle. The Foreign Secretary thereupon transmitted statements, supported by a sworn declaration of the facts in regard to the attacks on these vessels, and pointed out that there could be no doubt that the submarine belonged to the German forces. This action, as had already been stated, was contrary not only to international law and the law of humanity, but also to a definite pledge given by the German Government to the Spanish Government that the German naval forces would not attack hospital ships except in certain waters which did not include those in which the vessels were assailed."

The facts, which have already been published, concerning the sinking of these three hospital ships, as well as the Llandover Castle, are set forth in the statement.

New Traveling Regulations

Persons Embarking at U. S. Seaports Must Procure Permission Before Leaving Canada.

UNDER an order issued by the Secretary of State, Washington, Dec. 1, 1918, all persons going from Canada to foreign destinations by way of United States seaports must procure permission for embarkation before leaving Canada.

Such permission must be arranged for either by executing declaration and procuring visa on passport before one of the American Consuls in Canada, or by making formal application before any of the United States immigration officers located in Canada upon forms furnished by the said officers.

In order to allow sufficient time for investigation, the submission of papers to Washington, etc., applications should be filed either with the Consul or the Immigration Officer at least 17 days prior to the date of proposed departure.

The State Department invites special attention of prospective travelers to the fact that unless they have obtained visa by an American Consul, the said Department must decide whether or not departure from an American port will be allowed, such decision being based upon the application submitted through the immigration officers. Passengers are accordingly warned not to proceed to the port of embarkation until they are in possession of either the Consular visa, or proper certificate from the U. S. Immigration authorities showing that permit for departure has been granted.

The foregoing applies to all persons not citizens of the United States, and it is effective regarding all destinations, including Mexico, U. S. Insular possessions, etc., but not including Bermuda.

United States citizens seeking to proceed to foreign points are required to have passports issued by the State Department, applications for same being obtainable from the various American Consuls.

CROWN PRINCE MUST QUIT TOO

Has Not Renounced Claim to Throne, Though His Father, Ex-Kaiser, Has.

London, Cable — The formal abdication of the German Emperor caused surprise in England. It had been supposed on the strength of the announcement made by Prince Maximilian of Baden, while Chamberlain, and reports of the Berlin Council of "Councils" and Workmen's Delegates that William Hohenzollern had renounced before he left Germany for his exile. The abdication of the former German Crown Prince was accepted here as a fact on the same basis, but it is now believed that Frederick William has not relinquished his claims to the throne. An ex-Emperor's pronouncement speaks for himself only.

The Paris Petit Journal says it is convinced that the associated powers will now demand the formal abdication of Frederick William, the former German Crown Prince.

The text of the former German Emperor's act of renunciation, which was issued by the new German Government "in order to reply to certain misunderstandings which have arisen with regard to the abdication," follows:

"By the present document I renounce forever my rights to the crown of Prussia and rights to the German imperial crown.

"I release at the same time all officials of the German Empire and Prussia, and also all officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Prussian navy and army and of contingents from confederate states from the oath of fidelity they have taken to me as their emperor, king and supreme chief. I expect from them until a new organization of the German Empire exists, they will aid those who effectively hold the power in Germany to protect the German people against menacing dangers of anarchy, famine and foreign domination.

"Made and executed and signed by my own hand with the imperial seal at Amerongen, Nov. 28.

(Signed) "WILLIAM."

HUN ELECTIONS FEB. 16 NEXT

Soldiers' and Workmen's Councils Will Agree.

Demand for Retirement of Dr. Solf.

Berlin, Cable — The Council of the People's Commissioners has fixed February 16 for elections to the Constituent Assembly, conditional on the approval of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Congress which meets December 16.

The Empire will be divided into 25 electoral districts, to which from six to 16 seats each will be allotted, according to the population. The Empire's territory as it existed before the war will be taken as the basis of division.

In the opinion of the Majority Socialists and the bourgeois, according to Die Freiheit, the date, Feb. 16, fixed by the Council of People's Commissioners is too early. It is maintained that more time is needed to put into effect a pure Socialistic policy.

The Independent Socialists have stated that the threatened separation of the Rhine province and Bavaria, makes it imperative that an early election be held.

The bourgeois and Socialistic press agree that the Soldiers' and Workmen's Congress which meets December 16, will accept the election date.

Anybody at any pace entering itself a soldiers' and Workmen's Council will be able to send delegates. The control of credentials will be difficult, and this has led to fears in certain sections that the congress will be packed.

Even optimists are discouraged by the apathetic attitude of the bourgeois and the untiring activity of the Spartacus group, or Radicals.

The Tagblatt says it has been officially informed the Soldiers' and Workmen's Council has demanded the most speedy retirement of Dr. W. S. Solf, German Foreign Secretary. The council also has ordered seizure of all documents relating to foreign affairs and the old Government system.

ALLIES TAKE RUSS SHIPS

Paris, Cable — The Allied naval squadrons which arrived off Sebastopol a few days ago took possession of the Russian battleship Volga, one destroyer and five German submarines. Fourteen German merchantmen were found in Black Sea ports, and will be used by the allies as transports.

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY

In speaking of another's faults
Pray don't forget your own;
Remember, those with homes of glass
Should never throw a stone.
If we have nothing else to do
But talk of those who sin,
'Tis better we commence at home,
And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried;
Should we not like his company,
We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults—and who has not—

The old as well as young,
Perhaps we may for aught we know,
Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works quite well;
To try my own defects to cure
Before of others tell;
And though I sometimes hope to be
No worse than some I know
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Then let us all when we commence
To slander friend or foe
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know.
Remember, curses, sometimes like
Our chickens, "roost at home," Don't speak of others' faults until we have none of our own.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Joseph Made Ruler of Egypt.—Genesis 41:33-44.

Commentary. — I. Joseph's wise counsel (vs. 33-36). 33. now therefore—The "therefore" of this verse points us back to the events recorded in the opening of this chapter. Two years from the time that Joseph interpreted the dreams for the butler and the baker, his fellow prisoners, he was called upon to interpret the dreams for the king of Egypt. This made the third set of dreams with which he was intimately concerned, the first being his own two dreams. The dreams of Pharaoh were strikingly in accord with the land of the Pharaohs. The fruitfulness of Egypt was dependent upon the overflow of the Nile. The cow was sacred and highly prized animal of Egypt and the wheat was, and still is, the great crop of that country. Travelers have observed cattle going into and emerging from the waters of the Nile and grazing in the meadows bordering on the river. The butler a thast was aroused from his inexcusable neglect in disregarding Joseph's request to be remembered before the king, and reported the fact of Joseph's ability to interpret dreams. He did this when the magicians (v. 8), who were supposed to be conversant with mystic rites, and the wise men, or the philosophers, were unable to interpret Pharaoh's dreams. Joseph was hastily summoned to appear before the king. He quickly made the needed preparation, which consisted in shaving, to conform to Egyptian custom, and in changing his raiment. Joseph declared that the two dreams were intended to convey the same meaning. The Lord has graciously made known to him the interpretation of the dreams and was revealing to Pharaoh what was about to take place in the land of Egypt. A knowledge of the fact that seven years of famine were to follow seven years of great abundance would give opportunity to make provision for the years of famine. These years of famine would result from the failure of the usual overflow of the Nile River for seven successive years. The lack of the ordinary rainfall in the Abyssinian mountains would cause the failure of the Nile overflow. The conditions producing lack of rain in Northern Africa would contribute to a scarcity of rain in adjacent regions, hence the famine would reach into Canaan. Through the dreams of Pharaoh and their interpretation by Joseph, with God's assistance, the years of plenty and the years of famine were clearly foretold. Let Pharaoh look out a man discreet and wise—It was far from Joseph's thought to try to put himself forward, but he saw so clearly the conditions, as God revealed them to him, that he knew that prompt and effective measures should be taken to meet the exigencies of the case. It would seem as if the Lord put this suggestion into Joseph's mind. It was in keeping with the highest wisdom that a man of integrity and large administrative ability should be placed in charge of the food situation, with full power to conserve the large supply of the fruitful years in such a way that there would be no waste, and that there would be a sufficient surplus to prevent starvation when the famine should prevail over the lands. The ordinary officers of Egypt would have too much to do to attend to this work, and a special official with ample subordinates should be placed in charge of this important work. 24. the fifth part—It is supposed that at this time a tenth of the products of the soil was given over to Pharaoh, and Joseph recommended that in the years of great plenty that tax should be doubled. 35. let them gather all the food—Rigid economy was to be practiced and special care taken to gather and guard this fifth part of the grain, and it is unreasonable to suppose that all that was not needed for present needs was bought for future use. 36.—Grain. 36. that she land perish not—The purpose was to preserve the lives of the inhabitants. Egypt was then a powerful kingdom. Its civilization was superior to most, if not all, of the other nations of the earth. The advice Joseph gave to the king met a hearty response for it was an appeal to his personal interests and to his love of his realm. It would be a great calamity for a condition to come to exist in which the most of his people should perish and his kingdom should fall.

II. Joseph's exaltation (vs. 37-44). 37. The thing was good—Joseph's interpretation of the dreams was accepted without question, and his suggestions met with the approval of Pharaoh and his officers. 38. Can we find such a one as this—The question that at once occurred to the king was:

Montreal Daily Star

WHAT SOLDIERS WANT.

A suggestion to those who are sending gifts to soldiers overseas comes from Lt.-Col. (Canon) Frederick George Scott, Senior Chaplain of the First Division, in a cable received by friends in Montreal. He says "The men want playing cards and chewing tobacco."

"Is there a man equal to this emergency?" In whom the Spirit of God is—The very question that Pharaoh asked implied that it would be answered in the choice of Joseph for the important position. Pharaoh and his court, recognizing the interpretation of dreams as a divine gift, and tracing all insight into the future as sent from above, could have no one so fit to put in the highest authority as a man thus inspired.—Geikie. The fact that Joseph belonged to a different race or that he had been a slave did not count against him in the crisis that was coming to the country. Pharaoh was wise in securing the services of such a man as Joseph for the important work to be performed of his kingdom was to continue to flourish. 39. Forasmuch as God hath shewed thee all this—The king recognized the fact that God had revealed to Joseph the future. Joseph's fidelity to Jehovah had convinced Pharaoh that the man he needed was before him, and that God would guide him in the great work to be done. 40. Over my house—It was a long step from a prison to the highest office in the gift of the king, yet God made it possible and Joseph was kept steady while he took it and afterward. Only in the throne will be greater than thou—Pharaoh in no sense gave up his royal prerogatives, but he made Joseph his grand vizier, or chief officer. 41. I have set thee over all the land of Egypt—Joseph's authority was not confined to any district or districts of the realm, but he had full authority, so far as food supplies were concerned, throughout Egypt. 42. Arrayed him—Pharaoh gave him the insignia of office and authority, his signet, royal linen and a gold chain, and he proclaimed him ruler of the realm, subordinate only to himself. 43. Second chariot—The second chariot in point of honor and value, the king occupying the first, in royal processions the chariot in which Joseph rode would follow that of Pharaoh. 44. Give him—Public proclamation was made of Joseph's appointment to his high office and of his authority. 45. Without thee shall no man, etc.—In addressing Joseph in these words Pharaoh wished to assure him of his confidence in him and to declare with emphasis the fact of the high authority which had just been bestowed upon him. To Joseph would be referred all matters pertaining to food supplies, and no one would be permitted to act without his approval.

Questions.—How long did Joseph remain in prison? What event caused him to be set at liberty? Relate the dreams of Pharaoh. Who was called upon to interpret them? Give the interpretation of the dreams. Why were there two dreams? What advice did Joseph give to Pharaoh? How did Pharaoh receive it? In what position was Joseph placed? What honors were conferred upon him?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—The fruits of faithfulness.

I. Joseph's fidelity.

II. Joseph's reward.

1. Joseph's fidelity. Tragedy and romance are strangely blended in the history we are studying. The scriptural declaration, "He that walketh uprightly walketh surely," finds in Joseph's life a striking illustration. From slavery to sovereignty is a long step, but eminently befitting the royal character before us. The virtues of his character were both disciplined and displayed by the adversities through which he passed. Unswerving integrity in all the changing circumstances of his experience is the prominent and permanent characteristic. Twice sold as a slave, he closed his eventful life as the wise administrator of a great empire. Trustworthy as a servant, he was equally faithful to the exalted responsibilities of statesmanship. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." There is no nobler example on record than Joseph's staid life in the house of his Egyptian master. With unlimited opportunity and repeated solicitation he kept himself unspotted, avoiding every occasion of temptation to himself or opportunity for others. His noble defense and appeal in the hour of test can be excused. "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?"

II. Joseph's reward. Great occasions find men; they do not make them. The crisis of history have brought into prominence the instruments prepared in obscurity and adversity. The process is often prolonged and difficult. In the experience of Joseph, as of others, the obscure and adverse years constituted the time of fitting the instrument for a national emergency and preparing himself for his exalted position and opportunities. That which is the narrowed vision of the present appears only a mysterious or unfortunate combination of circumstances may in perspective be seen as an essential part of a design as great as it is gracious. "Verily there is a reward for the righteous," is the approved declaration of the word of God. Of all the recorded victories of faith, to have "wrought righteousness" in the supreme triumph. Joseph's first reward was in himself. Conscious integrity is a greater reward than any possible ease or attainment secured by its sacrifice. To have maintained his manhood unscathed through all the vicissitudes of his life, his great triumph, and paves the way for his later elevation. "The Lord was with Joseph," and whether in the house of Potiphar, in prison or on a throne, "that which he did, the Lord made it to prosper." The walls of a dungeon could not hide his exalted virtues, or his extraordinary abilities. His unassuming patience and calmness of spirit in the midst of adversities disclose his own innocence and his dependence upon God. God's purpose and providence coincide. He works at both ends of his great plans. Joseph was learning God's great lessons. The delays of his providence are a part of our spiritual education. The imprisoned officers, the interpretation of their dreams and later the visions of Pharaoh are the movement of designs which assure and accomplish the open reward of faithfulness. Joseph's humility and piety shine as conspicuously in court as in prison. "It is not in me; God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace."—W. H. C.

SCOTLAND FOREVER!

Great Reputation of the Scottish Units.

"An American officer told me that he had never dreamt of troops facing such fire and such obstacles together. Not once or twice in this war I have heard officers say, 'Thank goodness, the 51st are next to us!'"—Mr. Beach Thomas in British Exchange.

Long ago the German High Command found it necessary to establish "storming battalions," otherwise known as storm struppen. It was a sure sign of decadence, which is now becoming painfully manifest.

There are no storm truppen in the British Army yet, although the Boche is pleased to regard almost the entire Army in that way. Throughout the length and breadth of the Continent our "Scotties" are regarded as the corps d'élite of the British Army. And rightly so. The laurels of Malpaquet, Oudenarde, Fontenoy, and Waterloo rest but lightly on the brows of our present Scottish battalions, and when this great war has been fought and won there will be no more famous body of men than the immortal 51st Division, a Highland Territorial division, who, as Mr. Beach Thomas truly says, are placed first in the order of "terribleness" by the Huns.

Britain has much to be thankful for in the "Jocks," as everyone knows them. The dauntless spirit of their fighting ancestors has lost nothing in the passage down the ages; the spirit of Bannockburn lives in this 51st Division of boys who before the war were earning their living as ordinary civilians, and to-day are regarded by our formidable enemy as the greatest fighting force in the world.

"Scotland for ever!" the greatest battle-cry history has known, is still

Cause of Early Old Age

The celebrated Dr. Michonoff, an authority on early old age, says that it is "caused by poisons generated in the intestines." When your stomach digests food properly it is absorbed without forming poisonous matter. Poisons bring on early old age and premature death. 15 to 30 drops of "Lager's Bile" after meals makes your digestion sound.

DEMOCRACY.

Great mother of a new-born race,
All earth shall be thy dwelling place;
Democracy, thy holy name
Shall set the continents aflame,
Shall thrill the islands of the sea,
And keep thy children ever free.

From God's eternal universe
Shall thou remove the primal curse
Which man upon his fellow-man
Imposed since the first world began;
Away with slaves, deprived of rights,
And thy-fingered parasites.

For this the new-world purpose we
Can, step by step, unfold and see;
Columbus sailed, at God's behest,
From lands by wicked kings oppressed—
His messenger, to search the earth
And find the place for Freedom's birth.

Then up rose peerless Washington
With many another nameless son,
Whose spirit cannot be outbid,
Encompassed France, and Europe, too,
Until the purpose of the Lord
Was plainly written with the sword.

Out of it all—Democracy!
The final word of God's decree,
To carry out His cherished plan
Of peace on earth, good will to man.
Therefore, arise, ye people, sing
This heaven-born and glorious thing!
—WILLIAM MILL BUTLER.

Removing a Broken Caster.

A broken caster may be withdrawn from the leg of a piece of furniture by tapping a hole in the centre of the caster stem, and threading in a machine screw, thus securing a suitable hold. A heavy metal washer is placed under the head of the screw. One side of the washer is supported by a block of wood, or leather, while a claw hammer, or "jimmy," is used to pry out the broken part.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

The epicure was protesting against his wartime diet. "Remember Elijah," said the good deacon. "He was fed by the ravens." "Yes, I've been pretty well fed up on that kind of talk myself," replied the epicure.

INFLUENZA HAS LATER DANGERS

PARTICULAR CARE IS NEEDED WHEN PATIENT IS CONValesCENT, SAYS EXPERT.

The influenza convalescent who has apparently recovered from the disease and is yet in a strangely weak and depressed condition should be the object of particular care, according to Dr. Louis I. Harris, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the New York Health Department. In the opinion of Dr. Harris the after care of the influenza patient is most important. The co-operation of the patient, coupled with the willingness to see that the weakness and depression are a part of the illness, though coming after the disease itself has spent its force, is a big factor in effecting a complete return to full health. On the other hand, the determination to ignore this debilitated condition and to fight against it, will, Dr. Harris says, frequently bring serious consequences upon the patient.

AFTER EFFECTS BAD.

"The subject of the after effects of influenza," said Dr. Harris, "is one of particular interest to the scientist at the present time.

"First, and perhaps the most momentous condition to be considered is the striking depression, mental, nervous, and physical, complained of by most patients. Those attacked by the disease with moderate severity are almost always afflicted with this depression, which should be recognized and dealt with. Those who have had mild cases of the epidemic are little affected by depression, and their quick return to health and strength gives rise to the belief that influenza is trivial. On the contrary, influenza in its after effects is anything but trivial, and calls for the application of rules of common sense and sanitation which are the fruit of years of experience.

"Tonic treatment, well chosen diet, and great care in not becoming overtired or allowing the body to be chilled are necessary. Eggs may be eaten, but not more than two a day, for the average adult. Of course, it must be remembered that in many cases this disease tends to direct its force against the kidneys, and therefore we instruct patients to avoid eating a great amount of meat, eggs, or beef extracts. Eggs, soft boiled, poached, or beaten, raw, are advisable in limited number. The raw eggs should always be well agitated before taking.

WHEN GOOD FOOD IS BAD.

"With milk and eggs as a foundation the patient should eat good nourishing food, including meat, fish, and vegetables, simply prepared. Frying, for instance, is out of the question. Good food prepared in an unassimilable manner becomes bad food; especially is this to be noted in cases of convalescence from influenza, for the disease often manifests itself in vomiting, and in intestinal and gastric disturbances, and it is important not to weaken the digestive function by the eating of poorly prepared food, or even the best of food in ill-advised quantities. The quantitative distribution of foodstuffs should be so adjusted as not to overtax the stomach, but the patient should eat generously and frequently.

"As a tonic to build up the blood and stimulate the shattered nerves, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are unsurpassed. These pills actually make new, rich, red blood, which reaches every organ and every nerve in the body; improves the appetite, strengthens digestion and drives away the feeling of weariness and depression always following an attack of influenza. Those who give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial will be amply repaid by the new health and strength this tonic medicine always gives.

Not yet had he done murder. With her to uplift and strengthen him he could not do it now. So long as his blessed memory should abide with him, hunted though he was and hounded through the rat-pits and sewers of the underworld, he could not kill.

His heart rose surging up to her in love and gratitude supreme.

"De profundis!" he murmured fervently, and again in long weeks of anguish he felt the burning solace of teardrops starting in his eyes.

CHAPTER XXXII.

"Till the rope, there, Bill!"

Bill, clerk of the doss-house, upstairs over the prison, being thus addressed by a human wretch slouched far down in a broken-seated chair beside the pot-bellied stove, tightened the cord that drew back the lock of the wire-grated door. Doss-house doors must always be kept locked from the outside. Otherwise the fifteen-centers would inevitably prattle in and sleep gratis.

Bill surveyed Arthur, who returned the observation. The clerk seemed constitutionally in need of a shave and congenitally hard of heart. No appeals unbacked by cash could conceivably procure free sleep from him. He moved a shirt-sleeved, notably unclean, and jerked his thumb toward the inner regions.

Arthur was free to enter the pearly parts of slumber. The ticket in his hand—the ticket that the wretch in the chair had noted, even as he had observed Arthur's obvious lack of familiarity with the customs of doss-houses—entitled him to go through. He accordingly passed from the outer region of bare benches and tables with ragged old newspapers on them, the region adorned with recruiting posters and many indubitable proofs of tiered-up rows of cots, whitewashed walls, and numerous signs prohibiting everything in general.

Appallingly foul the air was. The filthy banks in superimposed tiers repelled the newcomer. Four or five down-and-outers had already crawled into their bunks. These were probably men who the night before had "carried the banner" and who now by look or croak, having got hold of the coveted "pad-money"—more precious far than coin for cots—had with the drawing on of night gone to their slumbers at the first possible moment after the opening of the doss. Heaven knew—perhaps—when some of them might sleep under a roof again!

Only with the greatest repugnance could Arthur force himself to choose a bunk in this iniquitous den; but his throbbing head and swollen arm, joined to a vast weariness of flesh and spirit, forced him to lie down among these outcasts. He chose a flop in the very farthest corner where the light was dim. Shucking only his boots and outer clothing, which he warily rolled all up together and used as a pillow, thus safeguarding himself against disadvantageous exchanges of apparel, he sought repose. Over his clipped head the sou'-wester still extended its protection.

For a few minutes physical pain and mental anguish kept the fugitive awake, but gradually exhaustion claimed its due; his ideas and sensations grew vague and uncertain, and he slept.

He awoke suddenly, not understanding where he was, sat up on the bunk, and blinked around him. The place was full of unfortunates, most of them scolding and grumbling dolefully. So thick and heavy had the air become in that tight-closed pit of social misery that the one or two incandescents burning there seemed dimmed thereby. The clock on the farther wall marked nine-twelve. Arthur had slept four hours like one dead.

With returning plenitude of consciousness he found that an intense pain in his arm had wakened him, despite the splints and wrappings, it had continued to swell. The bone had been broken some twenty hours before. Exposure, hardship, rain, lack of proper care had all wrought havoc with it. Arthur realized as he sat there on the edge of the bunk, feeling of the arm and peering at it by the vague light, that serious developments were forward.

"I'm liable to lose this," he muttered, "if I don't do something for it, and do it quick!"

Inwardly he cursed the luck which, playing him as a cat plays a mouse, had let him escape only with this injury, which might yet drag him down to capture and to death. Were any investigation of his hurt made, it must inevitably lead to exposure. He dared not ask for help, yet help he must have. The impasse loomed up appallingly before him.

All at once out from the back of his subconsciousness the image of Dr. Harland Nelson rose and stood before him—Nelson, the cold, calm, scientific man whose testimony had finally convicted him; Nelson, the impersonal Nelson, who had admitted on plantation of those half dozen gray hairs found in the clutching dead fingers of old man Mackenzie.

Nelson!

The idea of Nelson possessed him suddenly and with strange power. Once more he weighed the half-formulated plan he had already entertained—the plan of taking the gray wig to the doctor, of telling his story, of driving home its truth upon that chill and calculating brain, of enlisting the scientist in his cause.

A forlorn hope? Maybe. Nelson, largely responsible for having sent Arthur away for life—would he, could he now afford to reverse his opinions and champion a man he had helped damn? Could scientific honesty and ethical uprightness so far overbalance the natural human pride of opinion?

Arthur's mind and body were in no condition for analysis. All that he recalled as he sat there, suffering torment on that dirty cot in the doss-house, was that the idea of Nelson, of the wig, of justification, had suddenly obsessed him once more; and that moreover, he stood in direst need of medical attention.

Enough!

Arthur's decision, swiftly made, settled into firm mold with equal swiftness. Standing up, he drew his clothing on again and fixed the sou'-wester down close over his telltale stubble of prison-cut hair.

Nobody noticed him in that sad place; none questioned and none cared. He sat down again, hauled on the beach-comber's huge sea-boots and clumped to the door. At the right Bill sat yawning over a pink sporting paper and inhaling a cigarette. A little row of butts stood on his greasy desk, upright like tent-pins. He gazed at Arthur with a watery eye, scratched his bristling chin, and then resumed his study of the shapeliness and valor abundantly portrayed in the pink pages.

"Give us a slant at your telephone-book there, Jack!" demanded Arthur, simulating the speech of the gutter.

The clerk in silence shoved it over to him. He turned the pages eagerly, emotions at his heart as strange as if the gems of a new opal were as if the wastes of despair had been a ray that dazzled him.

Nell—Nell—Nelson—Nelson. Albert E. Edward F. Nelson, Harland, physician, 121A Madison avenue.

Arthur stared at the address, burning it into his memory.

"Thanks!" And he shoved the book back again. The bristly clerk merely yawned.

"I'm going out a while. Got a return-check there?" asked the fugitive, keen on maintaining an illusion of belonging to the underworld.

"Nothing doing," answered he of the watery eye, sticking another butt at the end of the row. "No checks, if we had 'em maybe three or four boxes would raim sweeps in one night. You either stay in or stay out—see?"

Arthur raised a point, but to no avail. He finally had to leave without the desired check. Two minutes later, with the beach-comber's clothes upon him and Slayton's one hundred and eighty-six dollars in his pocket, he was on the street.

The storm had cleared off cold and freezing, with a promise of moonlight again through the scudding clouds. Ice coated the sidewalks and skinned the little pools between paving-stones or in gutters. Pedestrians hurried past, their breath blowing in vapor swirls.

Arthur, not yet wholly dry and suffering acute pain, shivered as the nipping air searched through the dilapidated garments of the beach-comber. He turned into Christopher street and walked rapidly toward the Sixth avenue "L," keeping a sharp eye posted for trouble.

Uncollected he reached the "L," got off at Twenty-Eighth street, and caught a cross-town car to Madison avenue. Some few persons regarded him with curiosity, for the figure of a waterman in oilskins and with a broken arm hanging in a sling of sail-cloth was no every-day sight. Yet nobody spoke to him, nor was he disturbed in any way.

He passed near two policemen, but neither one stopped him. Two detectives would have been able to "make" him in that outfit. Police, plain-clothes men, and detectives all alike were on the lookout for Arthur dressed in Slayton's clothes, the loss of which had been noted. That suit now was lying safely at the bottom of the Bay. The oilskins, sou'-wester, and huge sea-boots were life-savers for the fugitive. Some few minutes later Arthur approached the physician's door. In front of it a magnificent limousine was standing with a blue chauffeur yawning on the seat. Arthur mounted the marble steps and rang the electric bell of a door which bore a shining plate of brass, engraved with the name:

HARLAND NELSON, M. D.
Physician and Surgeon.

A maid in cap and apron presently opened the door, surveyed this rough-and-ready figure with disapproval, and shook her head. Her voice was colder than the night wind, which was chattering Arthur's teeth, as she announced:

"The doctor's hours are from seven to nine. You can't see him to-night."

"A doctor's hours are whenever he's needed," retorted the fugitive. "I must see him!"

The maid stared at the sound of this kind of voice and expression in the mouth of a longshoreman, but stood firm.

"You can't!"

"I can, and will!"

He pushed past her into the hall.

"Go and tell him it's urgent!"

"He's got company to-night, and—"

"He'd leave anything if he knew who was here. Go get him!"

Fairly outplayed and dominated, the maid shut the outer door, peered a moment with indecision at this extraordinary visitor, then waved a hand at the curtained doorway on her right.

"Step into the office, please," bade she.

Arthur nodded in silence and clumped in over the polished hardwood floor, his big sea-boots making a formidable clatter of hobnails that argued no good for the parquetry. The maid stared at him in indignation, then turned and flounced upstairs.

This peculiar, tall, big-shouldered waterman, who kept his sou'-wester on in the house, whose wildness showed many a rip, and whose rough boots scarred the waxed floor, yet whose broad brows commanded and whose blue eyes and low-pitched voice somehow stirred her heart, surely was the most disconcerting patient ever she had ushered into that office in all the three years of her service.

Thus, piqued, angered, yet unrepentant all well pleased to serve him, she ran lightly up the broad stairway. The door had told her positively he would see no more patients that night, and had settled down to a game of chess with his friend, while his wife and the visitor's daughter had a bit of Brahms and Dyak in the music-room. Yet the longshoreman had commanded, and she had performed obeyed. Biting her lip, she did his bidding.

Arthur, listening at the office-door with contracted brow and a poignant nervousness gaining on him moment by moment, heard the murmur of voices upstairs. He caught the tones of Nelson's dry, cold speech, well-remembered from the trial when the doctor had so dispassionately, so impersonally blighted his prospects and sealed his fate. And at that sound again his unjured hand clenched hard, his face grew harsh, and into his blue eyes a glint of steel seemed to flash and quiver.

The maid's pitty-pat of footsteps, descending, made him draw back into the clear-lit, immaculate, and splendidly equipped office—the office of one of New York's most eminent and successful practitioners. A bit embarrassed, the girl announced:

"He'll see you in a few minutes," and—having cast an appraising glance at the patient—disappeared.

Left to his own devices, Arthur took stock of the place, listened to some vagrant chords of music that floated down from the upper regions, picked up a copy of the Lancet and tried to read, but by ill-luck opened at an article on "The Role of the Specialist in Criminal Jurisprudence" and hastily felt in his pocket for the hundredth time to assure himself he still had that all-precious wig; then stood up and paced the floor, trying to keep a grip on badly frayed nerves that now were struggling to get away from him.

He no longer seemed to feel much pain in his scalp-wound or in his broken arm. The intensity of his emotions, now that he stood at last on the very threshold of defeat or victory, obliterated physical anguish.

This thing he was about to do was freighted with most tremendous consequences. It meant life or death to him—no less. He an escaped convict now accused of still another murder, was about to present himself to a medical assistant closely connected with all the powers of the law—the very man who had been instrumental in convicting him.

Just on the story he was to tell now hung everything. If that story failed to carry, death stared him in the face. Could he, backed by nothing save that wig as corroborative evidence—a wig that might have been bought in any one of a hundred shops—batter down the mountains of proof against him? Could it clear his name and restore to him, so far as ever now could be restored, his good name and his chance to live?

Impossible, it seemed. Something whispered to the fugitive:

"Away, away, before it is too late!"

Out of this house, and save yourself! You may yet escape by flight. Remaining, you are lost!"

Arthur stopped in his pacing, faced the door and took one step toward it. His face had gone paler than ever. As if a chill he shivered. Life or death—which was it to be? On this cast of the coin of Fate he might win all or lose all.

Flight meant that he never could be justified. It meant an admission of blood-guiltiness. Remaining, telling his story and trusting to the facts pre-supposed their truth. It might win for him. Yet the chance was desperate. Racked by terrible emotions, Arthur stood undecided, with a heart that beat so thick and fast its drumming choked the breath in his throat.

Then suddenly he decided:

Flight!

He could not face the issue. His story was too frail, the only bit of evidence in his favor too tenuous to warrant gambling his life upon it. In a court-room again any tenth-rate attorney could riddle it and fling it to derision. And on this had he pinned his faith?

A sudden revulsion of feeling swept over him. A branded fugitive he had been, was and still must be. Safety for him could mean nothing; but the safety of the hidden and the fleeing. To stand, to turn, to fight meant annihilation.

Fully decided now, he tiptoed toward the office-door as quietly as his big boots would let him. Now he was almost there. A moment more and he would be in the hall, through it, out of the door and away.

But he did not enter the hall.

Instead, with a look of wonder, astonishment, and incredulity on his wan face, he grasped the jamb of the door with his left hand and stood there listening at the crack in the portiere.

People were coming down the stairs. He heard them distinctly. Their footfalls sounded plainly on the hardwood steps. And their voices, too, were clearly audible.

One voice in particular it was that had thus transfixed him; that had paralyzed his muscles and inhibited his flight. A voice he would have known anywhere in this world, at any time, in any anguish.

It was the voice of a woman.

It was the voice of Enid Chamberlain.

Didn't Like It.

"Miss Jones," said the hostess, "permit me to introduce Mr. Hogg, author of those delightfully clever poems you must have read."

"I am glad to meet Mr. Hogg," said the young woman. "Pardon the question, but is that your real name?"

"Certainly," said Hogg, bristling up. "Did you think it was my pen name?" — Boston Transcript.

Solutions and Aid.

Many of the solutions used by photographers are affected by the air, and so have to be kept in well-closed bottles. Every time a bottle is opened, fresh air gets into it, and the change in its contents is facilitated. To guard against this it is usual to recommend photographers to keep each solution in several small bottles rather than in one big one, so that when once a bottle has been opened its contents are soon used up.

CATARRHOZONE

CURES WITHOUT DRUGS

One of the finest discoveries in medicine was given to the public when Catarrhozone was placed on the market about fifteen years ago. Since then thousands have been cured of asthma and catarrh. An interesting case is reported from Calgary in a letter from Creighton E. Thompson, who says:

"Nothing too strong can be said for Catarrhozone. I suffered four years from asthma in a way that would beggar description. I went through everything that man could suffer. I was told of Catarrhozone by a clerk in Findlay's drug store, and purchased a dollar package. It was worth hundreds to me in a week, and I place a priceless value on the benefit I have since derived. I strongly urge every sufferer to use Catarrhozone for Asthma, Bronchitis and Catarrh."

The one-dollar package lasts two months; small size, 50c.; sample size, 25c.; all druggists and grocers, or the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

summer, Rendering Wax from Comb and the Handling of an Apiary are the practical lines of study.

The course in Drainage and Drainage Surveying is a new one and is designed to turn out men qualified to meet the increasing demand for experts on the subject. The care, construction and use of surveying instruments are taken up in detail and a lecture course in the underlying principles of drainage and how to apply them under varying conditions, supplies valuable information in a form that can be directly utilized.

A course in Farm Power has been initiated to keep up with the increased use of machinery in agricultural operations. The mechanism and operation of gasoline and kerosene engines is dealt with in detail. Water power, electric motors and dynamos, tractors and automobiles are among the other main sources of farm power discussed. Their direct use and application to farming methods is demonstrated and instruction is given in their operation.

The increased necessity for the introduction of business methods into farming has been provided for by a course of evening lectures taking up "The Business End of Farming."

Besides this main series of short courses, the District Representatives of Agriculture hold short courses in their counties, lasting about six weeks every winter. These are similar to those held at the College. The course is divided into sections, but these are more or less co-related, so that the average farmer derives benefit from taking the whole course. An added feature is that of public speaking, a branch of education that is only now securing its proper place in our educational curriculum.

Short courses in Farm Power are being started in several counties during the coming winter season. Instructions will be given by experts in the operation of farm tractors, and demonstrations held of other forms of power.

While short courses are not intended to cover all the obtainable information on any subject, they are made comprehensive enough to supply valuable knowledge which can be directly applied. Their chief value, however, lies in the fact that they open up before the men who take them possibilities of further knowledge, and the best methods of obtaining it. So we find a large percentage of the regular students of the Ontario Agricultural College have taken a short course in some subject previous to enrolling in the longer course.

So of all the forms of extension work in agricultural education, the short course system has proven the most successful, because of its direct, practical value to large numbers of farmers over the whole province of Ontario.

It is possible in an article such as this to outline only the main parts of this system of education. Full information can be secured by sending to the Ontario Agricultural College for a Calendar of Short Courses.
