DECAYED MATTER MENACES FOWLS.

(H. Armstrong Roberts, in London Free Press).

In a preceding article it was shown that heavy losses among young flocks on free range are frequently due to the birds eating decayed animal matter...

Carcases of dead chickens and bad eggs which are often left carelessly about the premises, thrown on rubbish piles, in manure pits or in adjoining woods and fields, really constitute just so much poison as soon as they start to putrefy.

It is not a very pleasant idea to contemplate chickens as scavengers, but scavengers they are. Almost all fowls are scavengers to a certain degree.

sat in large quantities, which will bring about bowel troubles. But as soon as an advanced state of putrefaction sets in the carcass fairly swarms with bacteria—microbes of one kind or another not to mention worms and the eggs of flies, which are highly poisonous.

All the disinfectants in the world are useless and spraying, whitewashing and cleaning go for naught, if the carcasses of dead birds are left about the premises. We can treat disease until the end of time, but so long as a single infected specimen remains on the ground...

FLIES, GERM CARRIERS. We owe it to the community, as well as to our own security, to provide this safeguard. Flies thrive and breed upon carrion.

Dead bodies, especially those of little chicks, are usually disposed of improperly because it is deemed easier to get rid of them by some short route. In back-yard flocks the bodies of dead chicks are frequently thrown into garbage cans, many of which are without tops.

merely as a side line, bodies are apt to be tossed into the manure pit. Sometimes an effort is made to cover them with manure, but this does not remove the evil if the bodies were infected with disease.

LIVE FOR MONTHS. At some time or other this manure is going to be spread about as fertilizer, and with it will go the diseases remaining of the dead fowls.

Some poultry keepers throw their dead into a pit or abandoned well. It may be that the hole is covered over so that the other fowls cannot gain access to the carcasses; but the chances are that flies will have no trouble in finding them.

The most careens method is to throw dead bodies under buildings, into hedge rows, along fences, on rubbish piles or other seemingly out-of-the-way places.

In winter, when snow is on the ground, it is not uncommon to find carcasses thrown into the snow right outside of the henhouses, on the assumption, I presume, that the cold will prevent their decay.

TO SAVE YOUR ICE. Tips On Conservation in Hot Weather. Warm weather here again, and the question of ice looms large.

One way to lessen the ice bill is to buy perishable things, like milk and meat, in small quantities and to have a very small ice box to hold water, butter and other perishables that we must keep on hand.

It is quite possible to keep things cool without ice. One way to do this is to put them in running water—the principle used in some milk houses.

Another way to cool things is this: Put an unglazed clay jar in the coolest place in the house.

And another means of economizing is to open the refrigerator door as seldom as possible. Make a list of everything that is needed from the refrigerator before each meal and so refrigerate before each meal.

SUNDAY IN SCOTLAND

(W. Harold Thomson, in the London Daily Mail.)

After a long sojourn in the south I returned to Scotland some weeks ago and on my first Sunday morning met an old acquaintance who spends six days a week on the local golf course and one day—or at least a good portion of the day—in church.

"Them boys be for off ta Glen-eagles," my companion remarked lugubriously. A nice way that to spend the Sabbath.

"But surely, Douglas," I protested, "you're got used now-a-days to the idea of mild recreation on Sundays?" He nodded once or twice, regarding me darkly while.

"Ay, we're gettin' used ta it," he admitted. "It's you ones who come back frae yon godless place, London, wha're responsible for the thing. But praise be they've not started the Sunday golf cape here yet!"

"It will come," I assured him gently. "But I don't think that anyone will be the worse for it."

Sunday in Scotland, to-day is, so far as I can see, very much the same as it was when, as a boy, I lived in these parts. One is still jolted out of a comfortable sleep at 8 o'clock in the morning by the vigorous sound of the church bells, which ring—or toll—for some ten minutes for a purpose which I have never been able to discover.

In this part at least, there is still a fairly strict Sabbathian outlook, and the local residents don their "brays" and foot it gravely to one or other of the old grey churches; but golf or tennis or fishing is not permitted. One may walk; one may cycle; one may motor, without any adverse comment being made.

The roads are never meant for any traffic save pedestrian and horse—rarely a motor car, and with a continual procession of cars and motor-cycles. Scotland has got used to these and has accepted them philosophically, but in many parts of the Highlands the day is still one dedicated to rest or innocent recreation of study-happy work, but to a sort of stock to ride a push-bicycle or to read a newspaper was to place oneself among the masses of the lost.

Mutual Assistance in Entertaining. In efficient help made formal entertaining a nightmare of nervous strain and uncertain disaster, until a friend of mine and I hit upon a plan of mutual assistance, says a young matron.

RINGS AND REASONS

Of all the men, both young and old, who place engagement rings on the fingers of their bride-to-be, it is almost an absolute certainty that not one-tenth of them knows why he places the ring on the ring finger of the left hand.

In the reign of George I. of England fashion had something to do with the wedding ring. Large wedding rings being favored at that time, it was not unusual to see a woman wearing her wedding ring on her thumb, although it had been placed on the fourth finger during the ceremony.

The British Museum has some betrothal rings in a collection which bear very interesting inscriptions. A gold ring of about the fourth century B. C. bears a Greek inscription which is translated as follows: "To her who excels not only in virtue and prudence, but also in wisdom."

The custom of bestowing a ring upon the betrothed bride has been traced back to Rome in the second century B. C.

In these days of old H. C. of L. it is well to note that in the early times plain iron rings were favored. And they were still popular even when the wearing of gold rings came into general use among certain classes of the Romans.

The original element which the Javan natives have brought, as remarked in the rope, this is made of a fibre taken from the native arec palm, which grows all over the island.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson VIII, Aug. 22, 1920.
A PRAYER FOR PARDON.
Psalm 51:1-17.

COMMENTARY—1. Penitence and confession (vs. 1-6). 1. I have mercy upon me—The psalmist acknowledges his need and makes a direct appeal for divine forbearance. His prayer is not for justice, but for mercy. He makes his plea strictly personal, according to thy loving kindness—As a basis for his petition he pleads God's intensity of love. Note the strength of the word loving kindness as indicated by its composition, multitude of thy tender mercies—David's heart swelled with emotion as he realized the greatness of God's mercy. He seemed unable to find language sufficiently strong to express his idea of the divine compassion, blot out—Remove utterly, my transgressions—The psalmist confesses his sins and makes no attempt to hide them. 2. Wash me—The psalmist in true penitence had asked that his transgressions might be blotted out. He now uses another form of expression in asking for freedom from his guilt. 3. I acknowledge—Literally, "I know." The pronoun is emphatic. His sins have all along been known to God. They are before his eyes. (Psa. 90:8); but now he has come to know them himself; they are unceasingly present to his conscience.—Kirkpatrick.

4. Against thee, thee only, have I sinned—David had sinned against himself, against Bathsheba, against Uriah and against his people. Yet his sin was most of all against God; for all sin is against him. The psalmist had an overwhelming sense of the enormity of his sin against God. that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest—This clause together with the one that follows expresses the thought that God was perfectly justified and clear, righteous and holy, in condemning David for his sins. 5. I was shapen in iniquity—Was born in sin. David would not offer the fact of his having been born sinful as an excuse for his grievous sins, but he rather acknowledges the sinfulness of his nature and bewails his deep fall. 6. Desires truth in the inward part—God looks on the outward conduct and also upon the inward state. He desires that the heart shall be right, for from it will flow right actions; therefore he is able and willing to make the springs of our actions right. 7. Shall make me to know wisdom—The soul that repents is receiving wisdom at the hand of God.

8. Prayer for cleansing (vs. 7-12). 7. Purge me with hyssop—The hyssop branch was used as a sprinkler for the cleansing of the leper or for the purifying of the unclean. The reference is to ceremonial purification, but David's prayer is for inward cleansing. I shall be clean—Divine power avails to cleanse the nature. Human effort alone can not accomplish it. I shall be whiter than snow—Snow is an emblem of whiteness, yet even in it there are impurities and it quickly gathers dust. Perfect purity results from the divine washing. 8. Make me to bear joy and gladness—Joy and gladness are far from the heart of him who is shamed down by sin and guilt. Pardon shall make me to know wisdom—The soul that repents is receiving wisdom at the hand of God.

9. Create in me a clean heart—He has asked for the blotting out of his iniquities, and now he prays for a clean heart. Renew a right spirit within me—Make the whole trend of my motives, words and actions right. Let my attitude toward thee and toward all my fellow men be pleasing to thee. 11. Cast me not away from thy presence—The Spirit of the Lord departs from Saul because of his sin, and David did not desire such a punishment to be visited upon himself. He longed for the assurance and strength that come from the presence of the Lord. Take not Thy holy spirit from me—The penitent longs for the coming of the Holy Spirit in saving power and the saved soul cherishes his presence, but the wicked fears his approach. 12. Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation—The sense of restoration to the divine favor was a gracious boon to the sin-harassed soul, yet the psalmist prays for the joy that he knew accompanied the salvation of the soul.

13. Vows to God (vs. 13-17). 13. Then wilt I teach transgressors thy ways—The penitent and saved soul at once makes vows to God. David saw his work before him and he vowed that he would declare the ways of the Lord to sinners. sinners shall be converted unto thee—The psalmist's confidence in God was unbounded. He believed that as a result of his faithful ministry sinners would be converted, not to himself, but to God. 14. Deliver me from bloodguiltiness—it would seem that David could not get through with his confessing his sin. There rises before him his sin in causing the death of Uriah, and he prays particularly about it. my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness—He would give thanks to God in his heart, but would not stop there. He would let others hear his songs of praise. 15. Open thou my lips—With David's full restoration to the divine favor there would come the opening of his lips in praise to God for his mercy and power. 16. thou desirest not sacrifice—A literal sacrifice could not meet the case in question, for a mere form was not sufficient. There must be hearty repentance, confession and faith. The penitent must come with all his heart to the Lord and implore his mercy. 17. sacrifices of God are a broken spirit—The sacrifice which God is pleased to have the offerer bring is a penitent, submissive, believing spirit. He delights in those who have broken and contrite hearts.

QUESTIONS.—Who is the author of this psalm? What name is given to it? Under what circumstances was it written? For what was it composed? For what does the psalmist pray? What confessions does he make? What does he promise to do? What is a broken and a contrite heart?

PRACTICAL SURVEY

Topic.—Penitential prayer in personal experience.

I. David's awakening.
1. David's awakening. The initial step in David's restoration is taken by God Himself. "The Lord sent Nathan." So it is always. God commences the work of salvation. The moral impotence of unregenerate nature is complete. There can be no moral return except as inspired and assisted by the Holy Spirit. "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him." The man who has fallen into the "horrible pit," needs help from without. Into this pit David, by his watch of vigilance had fallen, from a great height; and the greater the elevation, the deeper the descent. None can fall so far as an angel of God. "His moral backbone was broken." He could no longer stand upright before God or his conscience. As in every other case, the first necessity was a soul awakening. Moral sensibility, dulled by indulgence, must be quickened. An overwhelming sense of guilt must be forced upon the guilty king. It was tempered with a hope of pardon, to avert a self-hardening despair of deliverance from the penalty and power of sin. Grace provides for both. God hath sent a greater than the prophet; and in Christ has reconciled himself and made possible the world's reconciliation. He convinces of sin that he may show himself ready to forgive. There is no Old Testament parable to be compared in simplicity, beauty and force to that of the ewe lamb. Skillfully concealing its real purpose, it was intended to rouse the king's slumbering sense of justice, and awaken his indignation against the oppressor. The innocent artifice was successful. Little suspecting the application, and moved with the deepest indignation, he instantly pronounced the severest punishment upon the oppressor, and a four-fold restitution for the oppressed. "Be sure your sin will find you out," is the universal law. "Thou art the man," is the personal application. If the parable was tender, the application was terrific. David for the first time looked his transgressor in the face, and quailed before the terrible accusation.

II. Penitence and pardon. The lesson stands first among what are called the penitential psalms, and is sometimes called the singer's guide. The authorship is unquestionable, and the occasion eminently appropriate. It is directed to the chief musician, and therefore was not written for a private meditation merely, but for a public confession. There is no hint of excuse or extenuation. "I have sinned against the Lord," exclaimed the smitten king, aghast at his own iniquity. The appeal is to the mercy of God as the only ground of hope. "The confession is broad and deep. The transgression is against God, and forgiveness is implored. He is thunder-struck at the discovery of his inward depravity, and completes the confession by its acknowledgment. The very fountain of the life is polluted. Men are constitutionally depraved, and the sap-roots of sin reach back to the earliest moment of being. God's law demands not only outward virtue but inward purity. Ceremonial sacrifices are ineffectual. A broken spirit and a contrite heart only are acceptable."

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the house where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will relieve the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUNDAY AT HOME

A MAN'S IDEAL
To live as gently as I can;
To be, no matter where a man;
To take what comes of food or ill
And cling to faith and honor still;
To do my best and let that stand,
The record of my brain and hand;
And then should failure come to me,
Still work and hope for victory.
To have no secret place wherein
I stoop unseemly to shame and sin;
To be the same when I'm alone;
And when my every deed is known;
To live undaunted, unafraid
Of any step that I have made;
To be without pretense or sham;
Exactly what men think I am.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION

Jesus continually laid the emphasis on actually doing the will of God. It was a glorification of the tasks of everyday life; it was an uncompromising attitude toward evil; it was open-mindedness, repentance, self-control, self-forgetfulness, mercy, purity, the use of one's talents, social democracy, righteousness, equity, faith in the ultimate triumph of right, self-sacrifice, love, that Jesus continually taught.
In the account of Jesus of the last judgment, men are judged by their lives. It is the fruit by which the tree is judged. It is not the labels but the contents that are to be examined. Who then, can enter the Kingdom of Heaven—the churchman, the evangelist, the orthodox, the philanthropist? Perhaps, but not unless they have done the will of the Father who is in Heaven.
Who is the foolish man? The man who hears and believes, but does not live according to his beliefs. Who is the wise man? The man who hears, believes and lives according to his beliefs.

FRIENDSHIP

Friendship is an elastic word, rather. It may be stretched to almost any length, and it can be contracted until it is unbelievably short and small. Like any rubber band, friendship can, of course, be stretched too far—stretched to the breaking-point. But it's very hard to stretch the best sort of friendship so far.
I once knew of two boys who treasured between them the unbreakable sort of friendship. It began when they were little tots, just out of kindergarten, and went on through the years—through grammar school and high school and college. They had differences of opinion, very often; they had more than one squabble, more than one lapse of intimacy. But even during those squabbles and lapses they were always ready to champion each other against the whole of the outside world; always ready to fight for each other and to face punishment for each other.
The war came when they had been out of college for two years. It was quite as a matter of course that they both enlisted in the same regiment and went to France upon the same transport. The war was an adventure to them—a quest, almost—and it was natural that they should seek the adventure, go upon the quest, together.
They came out of the strife quite miraculously unscathed. They had fought through the blood and powder mist of the Vase; they had known the horror of the Argonne. They came back stronger comrades than ever—buds.

Together, with their discharge chevrons red upon their sleeves, they sought work. And they found it, strangely, in the same office—a branch of a great business. And they worked quite happily under the same chief—just as they had worked in the army under the same captain.
Everything would have gone quite smoothly, as it had always gone, if their chief had not fallen ill a year after their return. Everything would have adjusted itself if their chief had recovered from his illness. But he didn't.
His death left the two friends in charge of their branch of the great business—each a logical successor to a bigger job. Neither one was better qualified to hold it than the other one. And both of them wanted it desperately—they wanted it because every real man with a man's pride wants to make good in his work.
For the first time a feeling of distrust began to grow between the two friends. For the first time they began to work furiously, each at his own task—to avoid confidences. For the first time their eyes failed to meet when they glanced at each other.

And then the president of the great business sent for them one morning. He did not send for them at the same time. He called one into his private office, and then, as that one left, he called in the other one.
When the second man came out of the private office he found the first man waiting for him. As he closed the door behind him, gently their eyes met and the friendship that they had known, the memory of danger places that they had fought through together, was in the look that passed between them. And then the first one spoke:
"Old Chap," he said, and his tone was a shade husky, for he had really wanted the job, "congratulations! You got the place, didn't you?"
The second man shook his head.
"No," he said, simply, "I didn't."
The first man was startled out of his self-possession. He spoke before he thought.
"Eg," he stammered, "I recommended you for the place!"
The second man smiled, and one, seeing his smile, could not help feeling that friendship might, after all, be the most beautiful thing in the world.

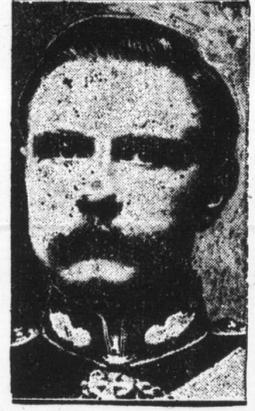

"I know that you did," he said gently. "That's one of the reasons why I just handed in my resignation. The place belongs to you!"
Friendship may be the most elastic thing in the world. Some people do not realize the fact, but it can. It can be made to stretch past ambition, and around pride, and over personal vanities. It can be made to lighten the darkest pathway to smooth out the roughest road. It can change almost unchangeable circumstances—it can break almost unbreakable troubles. It can be, after all, one of the most beautiful things in the world.

GROWING PAINS.
They're Misnamed, and a Danger Signal.

The term growing pains formerly means—and still means to many people—a vague aching or pain in the muscles or joints of children, especially those who are growing rapidly, which comes on without apparent cause and continues for an indefinite period. The fact that normal growth is never accompanied by pain, and that pain of any sort in any part of a child's body indicates that something is wrong, often fails to shake the popular belief in this fallacy; nor are people much to blame for it. Not long ago physicians held the same belief.
In a medical treatise that was an authority, and deservedly so, a quarter of a century since, a chapter is devoted to the description of growing pains; and although at that time certain medical men were becoming skeptical of this affection, they were the more advanced of their profession. Many a lame person to-day is a living witness to the prevalence of this belief among the doctors in his childhood, for in the great majority of cases growing pains are an expression of rheumatism, of neuralgia, or of tuberculous disease of the spine or joints.
Rheumatism in childhood is a very serious disease, not so much because of its severity as because of the mildness of its symptoms. The pain is often very slight, and not infrequently it is confined to the muscles of one or more of the extremities and spares the joints entirely. The attack may be of short duration; and when, after a few days of limping or complaint of pains in the arms, the trouble goes away, the mother may congratulate herself that it was nothing but growing pains. But meanwhile the rheumatic poison has been at work internally, and the victim is handicapped for the rest of his life by a crippled heart that was injured at the time the pains were felt.
Sometimes a slight pain is felt in the knee, and the child limps for a day or two. By and by he complains of another brief attack in the knee. After several such attacks, each a little longer and more serious than the preceding, a doctor is called and diagnoses hip disease, of which pain in the knee is one of the most constant symptoms.
Of course, every child has little aches and pains caused by bumps or by overusing his muscles in rough play, from which he soon recovers. But those are not growing pains, for they have a definite cause, entirely apart from the absolutely normal and therefore painless process of growth.

YOUR LONG LIFE.
Scientific Facts That Few People Consider.

How long have you lived? Certainly for untold millions of years. True, the individual that you recognize as yourself came into the world only a short time ago. But the "germ-plasm" which is the essential element of your being, is of a derivation inconceivably ancient.

You began your present career very humbly, as a single cell about 1-125 of an inch in diameter. That cell split into two, the two into four, the four into eight, and so on, this sort of progressive multiplication accomplishing the building, or growth, of your body.
The tiny original cell had a nucleus, the function of which was reproductive—in other words, to multiply. Surrounding the nucleus was the "cell-plasm," which had to do with nutrition.

What could be more simple? And yet such a cell is the most mysterious thing in the world. It holds a secret the revelation of which would solve a puzzle that has up to now defied scientific inquiry—the secret of the principle of life.
Your body is a congeries of cells, the progeny and descendants of the first tiny one, and each one of them contains the same sort of cell-plasm. But the latter did not originate with yourself; it has been handed down to you through innumerable generations, and in turn you pass it along to your children.

Thus, in a very literal sense, we go on living after we are dead. We survive in our descendants, their lives being an extension of our own lives. The cell-plasm itself is a substance indistinguishable from ordinary protoplasm, but it contains the "chromosomes," which are of all things in this world the most wonderful. For they are the carriers of inheritance traits.
You received from your parents twenty of these inheritance bundles, ten from your mother and ten from your father. To-day every cell of your body contains the same twenty characteristic chromosomes—the same bundles.
They represent the traits of innumerable ancestors, and may be said to stand for your individuality, being accountable for everything that you are, from the shape of your nose and the color of your eyes to the peculiarities of your temperament, disposition and mental equipment.
In a young cell, viewed beneath a high-power microscope, there is seen something that looks like a tangled thread. Later, this thickens and shortens, taking the form of a rod. The rod finally breaks into twenty pieces, which are the inheritance bundles.
Your mother, out of her twenty bundles, could give you only ten; your father likewise. Thus it was purely a matter of chance which ones you got.

BUILD UP THE SMALL TOWN

It is high time that all of us paid more attention to the building up of the little town and less to making the overgrown city larger. The little town is home—or should be. It needs our support, and we are the people who must give it life and big cities care nothing for us. It will if it can pull our dollars away and lure our boys and girls into its whirlpool, but that is the only use it has for us. The little town needs us and we need it. Athens may not make as large a dent as New York, but it really means more to us, and we ought to help make it something to be proud of. Why not get over the idea that the bright future of America lies in the great cities? It does not. The future which lies in the cities is shopworn, smoked, dirty and unclean. The true future lies in the country and in the little towns. Back them up and make them grow.

IT'S SO EASY IT'S FUN!

It's the simplest sort of a job to take an old, time-worn chair, a small can of Glidden Jap-a-lac and a brush and in a few minutes' time bring out the beauty of that chair you've hidden for years.

And it's fun to see it's youthfulness return under the magic of the brush; to see again—through this clear, easy flowing and double-durable varnish stain—the beautiful grain of the natural wood.

You can find an old piece of furniture in your attic and any size can of Jap-a-Lac at our store. Bring them together. It won't cost you much, and you'll have a lot of fun getting some "brand new" furniture through the magic of Jap-a-Lac.

A JEWEL IN THE ROUGH

"Well, here's enough to keep you in oil for the next three months," said Katrine, taking a little object from her belt which looked like a well-filled tobacco-pouch and putting it on the shelf above her head.

"What's that—dust?" said Annie.

"Wherever do you get so much money?" she asked, staring at her.

"I won't that last night," returned Katrine lightly. "I do have such luck, I wish you could come, Annie, and see the fun we have down-town of a night, instead of moping up here; and I do have such luck," she repeated again, with a half sigh. "I don't know what I'd do if it should change. I'd have to be bar-keeper for a living, I suppose. Think I'd make a good bar-keeper," she said, getting up and stretching her arms above her head. All her full, lithe figure was revealed to advantage by the attitude, and the fire-light fell softly on the gay, bewitching face, slanted over to one shoulder as she put the question.

"I do that," replied Annie, with emphasis. "Your bar would always be crammed by all the chaps in the place, my dear."

Katrine laughed.

"I'm glad you think so. I'll bring you some of my oil to burn for tonight, and then I must be off earning my living."

She went into her own cabin and brought back a can of oil with her, trimmed and cleaned and lighted Annie's lamp and then with a kiss bid her good-bye till the next day and took her way down to the main street. She had only a little dust in her belt—just enough to start playing with—and if luck should go against her she would have to return empty-handed; but then she always trusted to luck, and it had never forsaken her. Her mode of life, precarious and uncertain, dangerous and unsteady, as it might seem to an on-looker, never troubled her. She was in that state of glorious physical health and strength which lends an unlimited confidence to the mind, a sense of being able to cope with any difficulty which might suddenly present itself. When every small or possible trouble looks small, and when mere life itself, the mere sensation of the blood being warm in one's veins, is a joy. She loved the excitement, even the uncertainty of her life, and she had more friends in the town than she could count, who would be glad to lend her all she needed if her luck failed.

That night, when Katrine lay fast asleep in her small inner room, her curly head tucked down comfortably under the rugs, she dreamed she heard a knocking on her door. The sound seemed faint at first, but grew louder, and after a minute she woke up, lifted her head, and listened. Yes, there was tapping on her door, she heard it quite distinctly. She got up immediately, slipped into her fur coat and boots, and, taking one of her pistols in her hand went to the door. That there was danger in answering such a summons at such an hour she knew quite well; but she did not hinder her. She was accustomed to live with her life in her hand, and she felt instinctively confident of being able to hold it, and meant to keep a tight grip on it. When she opened the door it was to a vivid moonlight, clear and brighter than day; the whole white world was shining under it.

"Annie!" she exclaimed, as her eyes fell on the slight, feeble figure muffled in a blanket that stood on her steps. "What is the matter? Come in!" and she put the door wide open and stood back for her to pass.

"Oh, Katrine," she said, seizing the other's hands when they stood inside the room, "forgive me for waking you; but I want Will. I feel I'm going to die to-night, and I can't without him—I can't!" and she burst into a flood of tears broken by short sobbing coughs.

She had slipped to her knees, and was holding Katrine's hands in her feverish clutch. The blanket had fallen from her head and shoulders, and showed to Katrine that she was still in the day dress; it did not seem as if she had been to bed at all. There was a dark, half-dried stain upon the front of her bodice.

"I'm dying! Oh, Katrine, it's so dreadful all alone here! Will you go and bring Will to me? Oh, do!"

Katrine looked down upon her as she tried to raise her to her feet. The fire was still burning brightly and filled the room with light. Many people older than Katrine would have laughed at the woman's statement in face of her ability to come to them and make it, but Katrine's keen perceptions read much, too much, in the bright glazed eyes that looked up at her, in the hoarse, grating tones that came from the sunken chest, and the feverish grasp of those burning fingers. She stooped down and put her arms round the kneeling figure and drew her up.

"Why, of course I will. I will bring him to you. But you are only ill, dear; you're not dying."

of the night. Three o'clock in the morning had come, and the two men were still sitting talking on each side of the stove, with an opened whiskey bottle on the table between them, in Stephen's cabin, when the dull sound of a horse's footfall broke the blank silence of the gulch. Both sprang to their feet on the instant, and Talbot drew his pistol from his belt and stood listening with it in his hand.

"I always said we oughtn't to keep our gold up here," said Stephen, and his face whitened.

Talbot held up his hand to enjoin silence, and they waited while the sound of the hoofs moving slowly over the treacherous and uneven soil came nearer. Then there was a pause, which seemed to the men inside endless. Then two distinct taps on the door. Talbot, who was nearer it, made a forward movement; but Stephen caught his arm.

"What are you going to do?" he whispered.

"Open it and fire," returned Talbot. "I shall be up there and I will down here before you know where you are. Now you've just got to drink this brandy while I go and get some things on. You're just fretting for Will; that's what is the matter with you. I believe you will feel all right when you see him again."

She put the trembling woman into a chair, and went back to her room to put her clothes on. She noticed that her boots, which had been damp the night before, had frozen to the ground, and she had to break them from it by force.

"I shall be lucky if I get back with my feet unfrozen," she thought to herself, looking regretfully at the warm boots she had left; but it never occurred to her to refuse the unwelcome mission. She put on all her thickest garments, buckled her pistols on her hip, and went back to Annie, who was crouching over the fire in the next room.

"I had better take the pony," she said. "He'll get me there and back quicker than I can walk, if you think the little animal is up to it."

Annie nodded.

"He's well fed," she said, "and has had nothing to do since Will's been gone."

Katrine shut the stove up, and the two women went out together.

It was a still dead cold without—the sort of night on which your limbs freeze beyond recovery, and without your knowing it, so insidious and so little aggressive was the cold.

"You go in and keep warm," said Katrine. "I'll find the pony and manage him;" and she pushed Annie gently within her own door, and went round to the shed at the back of the cabin where the pony was.

Her hands in that short time had grown so stiff with cold she could hardly put the saddle on and fasten the girth and straps. The pony knew her, and pricked his ears and snorted while she was getting him ready. He had been idle in his stable two days, and by this time was willing to welcome any change in the monotony of life. When she had adjusted everything carefully by the light of the strong moon falling through the little window, she threw herself cross-legged upon his back and rode him out of the shed. Annie had her face pressed eagerly against the back window of her cabin, watching for her to appear. Katrine smiled at her, lifted her cap above her head for an instant, as a man would do, and then the next moment was cantering away over the snowy waste that stretched behind Good Luck Row. She went at a good pace, urged on by that last glimpse of the pale face, with the terrible look of haunted fear on it, pressed to the window.

The temperature was very low, but the absence of wind and dampness in the air made the cold bearable. Katrine, haunted by the fear of frost-bite, kept pinching her nose and pulling her ears and banging her feet against the pony's side to keep the blood stirring in them. Inside the first half hour she was away some distance from the lights of Dawson, and nothing but great snowy stretches lay around her.

That night up at the west gulch it happened that neither Stephen nor Talbot had gone to bed. There was little to choose between night and day there, since half of the day hours are dark as the blackest night, and a man can sleep in them as profitably, or more so, than in the moonlight hours

A PLUCKY HEN.

Fought, and Defeated, a Pair of Hawks.

We usually think of roosters as proverbial fighters and of hens as decidedly lacking in spirit. On occasion, however, the hens can be as brave as the bravest. I once witnessed, writes a subscriber, an exhibition of courage on the part of a hen that deserves to be recorded.

She was a white topknot of eccentric disposition—which is one way of saying that she preferred to select her own nests. She chose the spare-root bed for that purpose, and had accumulated some eggs before she was discovered and indignantly shooed out of the window. Highly indignant, she disappeared under the barn, whence she emerged several weeks later with eleven chicks.

Beyond introducing the eleven into the kitchen one day when the door had inadvertently been left open, Madam White displayed no more eccentricity than any other hen. But one day there arose a mighty uproar in the yard. Such a cackling, squawking and peeping surely portended dire calamity. We rushed to the door just in time to see a hawk getting the surprise of his life. He had evidently swooped down for one of the chickens, and Madam White, with her beak and claws and wings, was giving him a drubbing that threatened permanently to disable him.

Suddenly a dark shape swept down to the ground, there was a piercing peep, and Madam White turned to see the hawk's mate in the act of seizing one of her brood. Quick as thought she flew to the rescue. Up into the air went the hawk and with it went Madam White. The hawk tried its best to shake her off, but the hen hung on, fighting desperately, until the hawk was forced to drop the chicken and beat a retreat.

Madam White came to earth with a thud and a flop, gathered her flock about her, and retired to the shelter of the currant bushes, where she talked about the occurrence in gutturals for some time. Neither of the captured chickens sustained any serious injury, and the old grenadier brought the entire brood to maturity.

A TONIC FOR THE NERVES

The Only Real Nerve Tonic is a Good Supply of Rich, Red Blood.

"If people would only attend to their blood, instead of worrying themselves ill," said an eminent nerve specialist, "we doctors would not see our consulting rooms crowded with nervous wrecks. More people suffer from worry than anything else."

The sort of thing which the specialist spoke of is the nervous run-down condition caused by overwork and the many anxieties of to-day. Sufferers find themselves tired, low-spirited and unable to keep their minds on anything. Any sudden noise hurts like a blow. They are full of groundless fears, and do not sleep well at night. Headaches and other nerve pains are part of the misery, and it all comes from starved nerves.

Doctors treat the nerves with poisonous sedatives is a terrible mistake. The only real nerve tonic is a good supply of rich, red blood. Therefore to relieve nervousness and run-down health Dr. Williams' Pink Pills should be taken. These pills make new, rich blood, which strengthens the nerves, improves the appetite, gives new strength and spirits, and makes hitherto despondent people bright and cheerful. If you are at all "out of sorts" you should begin taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Persian Cookery.

Cookery among the well-to-do classes in Persia is extravagant—partly because they are lavishly hospitable, partly because all house servants are fed from the leanings of the master's table. Tiny chickens, quails, pigeons, doves and young partridges are handed hot, on the spit, to each guest.

Clean Stomach, Clear Mind.—The stomach is the workshop of the vital functions and when it gets out of order the whole system clogs in sympathy. The spirits flag, the mind droops and work becomes impossible. The first care should be to restore the healthful action of the stomach and the best preparation for that purpose is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. General use for years has won them a leading place in medicine. A trial will attest their value.

A human being is not, in any greater sense, a human being till he is educated.—H. Mann.

Poland's Resources

Of the new states that emerged to independence as a result of the world war, Poland will probably play one of the most important roles in the political and economic life of Eastern Europe. Situated as it is on the cross-roads of trade connecting Central and Eastern Europe, at the very gateway of Russia, as well as of the Baltic states and the Black Sea, it offers a tremendous field for American creative genius and co-operative effort in the formation and development of industries which would not only find a ready market for their output in Poland, but would create an advantageous position for profitable business in a vast and unexploited territory to the east and in the adjacent countries. Not only may it become an important market for American goods, but it may soon be in a position to export large quantities of raw products needed by the United States. It has been conservatively estimated that by 1921 the country will be in a position to export about 800,000 tons of grain. Through the port of Danzig it can enter the market for foreign trade, being connected by shipping lines with all important markets.

The territorial limits of Poland embrace the provinces formerly belonging to Russia, Austria-Hungary and Germany. Its final boundaries, as far as they were not determined by the German and Austrian peace treaties, are to be subsequently determined by the principal Allied and Associated Powers or by vote to be taken in each commune. The proposed boundaries will give the republic an area greater than that of Italy and a population of about 35,000,000. Warsaw, the capital, has a population of about 1,000,000, and has rightly been termed the "Hub of Central Europe." Before the first division of territory between Russia, Prussia and Austria took place in 1772, the country occupied an area of about 300,000 square miles. The second division of territory took place in 1793, and the last one in 1795. In these days three divisions Russia annexed about 220,500 square miles, Austria-Hungary 35,500, and Prussia about 25,000 square miles. At that time the population was about 12,000,000, while, according to the statistics of Jan. 1, 1915, the latest available, the number of Poles in the world was:

Poles in Europe	22,669,000
Poles in the United States	3,000,000
Poles in other countries	423,000
Total	26,092,000

It has been estimated that 65 per cent of the population of Poland is engaged in agriculture, 14 per cent in industry and mining, 8 per cent in commerce and trade, and the remaining 13 per cent identified with other occupations.

Roughly speaking, 45 per cent of the country's entire territory is under cultivation, more or less intensive, while 25 per cent is valuable forest land. The most intensive cultivation is in the western part of the country and in the middle valley of the Vistula, where farming lands attain, without pasture, 58 per cent of the territory. Two types of farm properties predominate in Poland—large estates of above 100 acres and small properties from 5 to 100 acres. The number of large estates is diminishing steadily as large tracts are being yearly purchased by small holders, thus increasing unerringly the part occupied by small properties. The most important agricultural crops are wheat, rye, barley, oats, corn, buckwheat, millet, peas, potatoes, sugar beets and flax. The cereals and potatoes occupy the bulk of the acreage, the staple food of the greater portion of the country being rye bread and potatoes. In 1912 there were about 4 million horses, 9 million cattle, 5 million goats and sheep and about 6 million pigs. During the war at least 70 per cent of the Polish live stock was destroyed, requisitioned or simply stolen by the armies of occupation.

Not many countries in Europe can boast of such rich mineral resources as Poland. To the majority of persons this wealth was formerly known only as being on German, Austrian or Russian territory. Chief among the products of mining are: coal, iron, zinc and lead ores, potash and table salts, phosphorites, copper, sulphur, ozokerite (mineral wax) and oil and its by-products. The coal fields occupy an area of over 2,000 square miles, and are situated in Dombrowa-Cracow-Silesian basin. It is a matter of common knowledge that Galician oil wells played a vital part in the progress of the war. The Galician oil fields are well able to supply all the needs of a population numbering in excess of 100,000,000. Poland has another great source of wealth in its rock salt. The mines are situated on the northern slopes of the Carpathian mountains and in the northern basin of what was formerly known as Austrian Poland, Wieliczka, near Cracow, is said to have the greatest rock salt mine in the world, containing approximately 21,000,000 tons of salt. The country's water courses furnish cheap sources of energy, especially in Galicia, where a permanent force of 500,000 horse-power could easily be obtained by utilizing the tributaries of the Vistula, Dniester and Prut—Joachim Fajans, in The World's Markets, published by R. G. Dun & Co.

FOR SUMMER BAKING.

So often when you tell a housewife to simplify her summer cooking to bake simple cakes and puddings for dessert she will tell you that her family get so tired of these things. If she would take a dollar bill and make a trip to one of the housefurnishing departments and buy two or three fancy moulds, two or three different shaped cookie cutters and some muffin pans that are different it would be well worth the time and money spent.

Plain sugar and molasses cookies taste so much better when cut with the leaf cutter for a change or with the little sunbonnet girl cutter. They assume quite a "parifid" air. So do the simplest of puddings in the fancy moulds. One very versatile mother makes a plain cornstarch blanc mange with no eggs, seem like the most gaudy dish by adding fruit juice to color it pink and moulding it in the angel cake pan. She had a little glass bottle which just fits into the mould and this is filled with sweet peas and the pudding is turned out onto a pink plate and served into the best sherbet cups. The ready-made gelatine desserts in fancy moulds with fruits moulded in them are delicious and one never tires of them on hot days.

Plain gingerbread baked in little scalloped tins while mother is clearing up after breakfast before it gets too hot, is every bit as good as the richest cake. Sometimes it can be baked in layer pans and put together with an uncooked chocolate icing, sometimes it can be baked in a big pan with white icing and four peanuts on each square.

Try varying the dishes served as to shape and size instead of ingredients and you will find that it answers the purpose every bit as well with much less work for the housewife.

Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis

If there is an ailment in the throat or chest, it is surely essential that the remedy be conveyed direct to the affected part. It's because the healing vapor of Catarrhazone is breathed into the sore, irritated throat and bronchial tubes that its balsamic fumes kill the germs and destroy the cause of the trouble. These are the reasons why Catarrhazone never yet failed to cure a genuine case of Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis or Throat Trouble.

The wonderfully-soothing vapor of Catarrhazone instantly reaches the furthest recesses of the lungs, produces a healing curative effect that is impossible with a tablet or liquid, which goes merely to the stomach, and fails entirely to help the throat or lungs.

Catarrhazone Just Breathe It

To permanently cure your winter ills, your coughs, sneezing and Catarrh, by all means use a tried and proven remedy like Catarrhazone. But beware of the substitute. Large outfit lasts two months, costs $1.00, small size 50c, trial size 35c, at leaders everywhere.

Increase of English.

In the year 1600 there were about six million persons who spoke English—a much smaller number than spoke French, German, Italian or Spanish. To-day English-speaking people number about one hundred and twenty millions, or about double the aggregate of those who speak French, Italian or Spanish and half as many again as speak German or Russian.

Relief from Asthma. Who can describe the complete relief from suffering which follows the use of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy? Who can express the feeling of joy that comes when its soft and gentle influence relieves the tightened, choking air tubes? It has made asthmatic affliction a thing of the past for thousands. It never fails. Good druggists everywhere have sold it for years.

Daily Thought.

A man's own observation, what he finds good of, and what he finds hurt of, is the best physic to preserve health.—Bacon.

Miller's Worm Powders were devised to promptly relieve children who suffer from the ravages of worms. It is a simple preparation warranted to destroy stomachic and intestinal worms without shock or injury to the most sensitive system. They act thoroughly and painlessly, and though in some cases they may cause vomiting, that is an indication of their powerful action and not of any nauseating property.

Catarhal Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarhal deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is a result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarh Medicine acts thru the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of Catarhal Deafness that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarh Medicine. Circulars free. All Druggists, 75c.

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep.
