Watches!

Our sales this year have been larger than last, although there has been more competition. A good many who have purchased trashy watches are waking up sorry, and the reaction will have the effect of creating a better demand for reliable goods.

We have no fault to find with honest competition so long as right goods are sold but do think the sale of dishonest goods ought to be prohibited.

Items of Interest to Catholic Readers in the Magazines.

Gladstone's Catholicism.

(From the Sacred Heart Review.)

To the Catholic reader the most interesting paper in the latest issue of the Nineteenth Century is the one which Mr. Wilfrid Meynell contributes to its pages on "Gladstone and Rome." This paper opens with a rather singular story regarding Cardinal Manning, the accuracy of which neither party to it subsequently said he could vouch for, though Mr. Gladstone, at a still later period, repeated the story in print. The story alluded to states that at the time of Newman's conversion, which Mr. Gladstone keenly felt, the latter individual went down to Lavington, where Manning was then an Anglican arch-deacon, and asked him if he could give any reason for the repeated secessions from the church of England then taking place. Manning is represented as saying that there was one in all the secessionists, to wit, want of truth. Mr. Meynell says that he subsequently asked Gladstone and Manning if they remembered such a conversation. The Cardinal could not recall it, but admitted the likelihood of its having occurred. Gladstone also failed to recall it, and he added that he considered it improbable that he had been in such a state of mind as the story would indicate him to have been. Yet eight years after Mr. Meynell questioned him on the matter and alluded to the above reply from him, Gladstone publicly repeated the charge which, according to the story, Archbishop Manning made against the early Oxford converts, and even went so far as to assert that he recollected with the utmost clearness the room in which the words were used. "I have often wondered," comments Mr. Meynell on this strange happening "whether that was a trick of the sequence of memory, or whether a once forgotten episode was capable of complete recall." Mr. Meynell pays the great Englishman whose death all Christendom mourned, the tribute of saying that however chameleon-like he was in his politics and in certain other things, he remained always constant in his religious views, so much so that "the aged statesman on his death-bed at Hawarden was still the Oxford undergraduate in his religious attitude." He tells us that while all the world knew Gladstone to be pious, few knew him to be a Puseyite. If he did not proclaim his exact theological opinions he never concealed them; and Mr. Meynell quotes a passage from a review of Lady Georgiana Fullerton's "Elen Middleton," which Gladstone wrote in 1845, and which Mr. Meynell republished in 1890, stating that Gladstone was its author—the review had originally been published anonymously—in which passage Gladstone unmistakably favors the use of the confessional. In fact, so favorable to the confessional was this passage, that when it became known that Gladstone was the author of it, one London paper warned the premier that "to the common intelligence the confessional and the Papacy are inseparable," and people began to ask if Gladstone had ever been a penitent himself.

The Vaticanism Pamphlets.

One of the most interesting portions of Mr. Meynell's paper is one wherein he considers the whether Gladstone ever withdrew the indictments which he embodies in his Vaticanism pamphlets. It seems that Newman wrote a letter to a friend on this subject, and contended in it that were Gladstone questioned on the matter, he would probably maintain that his pamphlets were misunderstood; that he had secured assurances of loyalty from Catholics, and that his charges held good against those persons at whom they were originally aimed. Mr. Meynell sent him a copy of this letter, and Gladstone answered it by saying: "Fully three-fourths of it I think are a true account. My opinion on the Vatican decrees was strong; and it had been declared before the pamphlets (though I was, I believe, prime-minister). A book on Doctor Dollinger by Doctor Michael (Jesuit) says that up to that time I was considered to be crypto-Catholic. Whatever I was then I am now. I may describe myself in few words: Strongly anti-Roman in certain respects, but profoundly reluctant to raise theological controversies in these perilous days, to the hazard of the common interests, which are far before the special. I was therefore most reluctant to write, and the motive was not theological, nor, I think, was the language." Mr. Meynell says this letter may be taken as a retraction, considering who wrote it; and it is very interesting, he adds, as containing perhaps the only attempt Gladstone ever made "to make the most difficult definitions—a 'high' Anglican's definition of his belief."

Gladstone and the Non-Conformists.

The relations that existed during his political lifetime between Mr. Gladstone and the English Non-conformists may be gleaned from a perusal of the paper which Rev. Doctor Guinness Rogers contributes to this same magazine on that subject. Doctor Rogers asserts that the alliance which caused the Non-conformists to support Gladstone in his political undertakings and movements dated from the time when, through his efforts, the measure for the disestablishment of the Irish church was enacted. There were no formal pledges of support given by Gladstone by the Non-conformists, the Doctor says; but the dissenters looked upon the disestablishment of the Irish church as a decided triumph for the principles whereof they contended. The Non-conformists, however, so Doctor Rogers declares, never deluded themselves into the belief that the disestablishment of the Irish church was in any sense a concession on Gladstone's part to them. They understood that the motives which brought about the enactment of that measure were foreign to them and their cause. Nor did they consider that the Irish disestablishment committed either Mr. Gladstone or his party to their principles. Still, for the reason that that disestablishment was a triumph for Non-conformist principles, they were grateful to the man through whose agency it was mainly brought about, and their gratitude prompted them, without any formal compact being entered into, to give him their political support, which they accordingly did. Doctor Rogers' own opinion of Mr. Gladstone is clearly indicated by his declaration that the lamented Liberal leader "put before me a higher conception of humanity, a broader view of religion, a loftier ideal of duty."

As Smalley Sees It.

The most amusing and preposterous view of Mr. Gladstone that has yet found its way into print is that which Mr. G. W. Smalley set before the readers of Harper's Magazine in the August number of that monthly. Taking the statement which was often made of Gladstone during his lifetime, that he would rather be the Archbishop of Canterbury than occupy any other office, Mr. Smalley makes exception thereto, and says that Gladstone would probably have preferred being Pope to anything else. Then he goes on to give reasons why, in his opinion, "the great old man" would have made an ideal Pope! It is true, Mr. Smalley admits that in his Vaticanism pamphlets Gladstone gave great offence to Catholics, but that offence, he contends, was not vital. Gladstone, he continues, valued almost as much as he prized anything else, the historic side of Christianity and of the Christian church, and he must, therefore, have held in the highest esteem the Catholic Church, for, remarks Mr. Smalley, "on the historic side Rome is stronger than any other church." The great commoner of England valued his faith very highly, so highly that, omnivorous reader though he was, he studiously refrained from mastering the peculiar features of modern Biblical criticism, lest his belief should suffer from the use of the confessional. In fact, so favorable to the confessional was this passage, that when it became known that Gladstone was the author of it, one London paper warned the premier that "to the common intelligence the confessional and the Papacy are inseparable," and people began to ask if Gladstone had ever been a penitent himself.

paper, however must a man have who sees in such qualities peculiar fitness on the part of their possessor to be Pope! There used to be a story—at which even his non-Catholic neighbors roared with laughter—told of a Protestant millionaire of Providence, that he offered Pius IX. a big sum of money if he would make him a cardinal, the sight of such dignitaries in Rome having given him the idea that it would be a grand thing to be one of them. Ludicrous as that idea was, Squire Smalley equals, if he does not surpass it, when he gravely submits that the author of the Vaticanism pamphlets would have made an ideal Pope.

A Learned Woman.

If there be any persons laboring under the idea that there were no highly educated women before Vassar, Wellesley or Smith College, or similar institutions of learning of the present day came into being, they would do well to read the article on Maria Agnesi which appears in the July issue of the Popular Science Monthly. From that they will learn that this Milanese woman, who was born May 16, 1718, showed a remarkable aptitude for mathematics at a very early age. At the age of five years she spoke French fluently and followed her brother's Latin studies. At eleven she knew Greek enough to be able to read in that tongue the office of the Blessed Virgin, which pious practice she kept up to the time of her death. Long before she attained her twentieth year, besides speaking Greek, Latin, French and Italian, she was tolerably well acquainted with German and Spanish, and had a number of translations of works written in those languages. Recovering from a severe illness about her twentieth year, she applied herself to the study of philosophy and mathematics, under the direction of Father Manera of Cremona and Father Casati of the Royal Milan University, who subsequently became bishop of Mondovì. It is told of her that she publicly defended one hundred and ninety-one philosophical theses, though this statement is qualified by the assertion that her defence of them was to a certain extent superficial in its character. About the time of her twentieth year Maria contemplated retiring from the world and joining some religious society, but for some reason she altered her plans. She was a member of the Institute of Bologna, published a treatise on mathematical analysis, and Benedict XIV., in recognition of her abilities and learning, sent her a crown and a gold medal, and nominated her to be professor of mathematics in the Bologna University. She never filled that chair, though, for soon after her appointment she took charge of a number of orphaned children, saying that her studies were undertaken for the glory of God, but she had found better means of serving Him. She lived until Jan. 9, 1799, and her remains were buried in St. Stephen's Church, Milan, where an epitaph describes her learning and piety.

The Teaching Church.

In our days the great wheel of time has completed its revolution and the Church is now where she was in the Roman Empire. She is face to face with a great world-civilization which is independent of her and which is as confident as the civilization of Rome that it can exist without her. Just as the sages of Greece laughed at the foolishness of the Gospel, so the wise men of our day are laughing at the foolishness of the Church. "Ignorant Catholics" is their war cry in press, in pulpit, on platform. Their reproach against us is the very boast of St. Paul, "not many wise according to the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble." Yet as in those days the weak things of the world prevailed against the strong and the foolish things confounded the wise, so shall it be now. Men are the same. God is unchangeable. The mighty works He did unto our father He can do for us. But the means which were employed then must be employed now. Then the disciples carried out the Master's command and taught. Let us not, however, be considered as attributing to a barren intellectualism the progress of the Church. Sanguis martyrum semen ecclesie. The devotion shown by the thousands of the martyrs won men to Christ even beneath the tyrant's eye. The devotion shown by the thousands of men and women leading lives of self-sacrifice today for God and God's poor is one of the most efficacious means of opening the eyes of the multitudes outside to the beauty of the Church. Just as religion appeals to all the faculties, so every faculty brings its tribute to her.

All men do not come into the Church by the intellectual road. The spirit breatheth where it listeth. Some see Christ at the Pool of Bethesda, some on the Road to Damascus, some in the breaking of bread. The characteristic of the Holy Ghost is that he sweetly disposes all things for good. Yet, while we admit all this, we must still insist on the necessity of teaching for our day and generation. There is some need for controversy, because controversy, if it does not clear the ground, at least secures a hearing. But the great, the pressing need is instruction. Teaching plain, simple, interesting and with authority will always touch the hearts of the people. This is especially true of America. No one can realize the awful ignorance that exists about religion. Talk about the illiteracy and ignorance of Spain, but in Spain, at least, they know how many gods there are. America is filling up with a multitude of people who do not know whether there is one God or twenty. The country districts, especially, are slipping down into Paganism. A few generations more, and the missions to the heathen may be preached in our own suburbs. Everyone who has had any occasion to go over the ground, admits this fact. Catholic and Protestant, Orthodox and Unitarian, have lifted up their voices in warning. It is true the papers of the San Joaquin Valley, in our own State, indignantly polled the charge when it was made by a Boston paper. It is true that a certain class of Catholic journals deny the extent of our own loss when another class of Catholic journals refer to it for party purposes. What is the use of kicking against the goad? Facts are facts, and denials won't change them. The decay of dogmatic Protestantism is not due to the natural evolution of unfaith in the Protestant churches; it is due to the fact that the multitude does not bear any Protestantism dogmatic or undogmatic. Neither there are no churches or the churches are small and contain no social life within whose portals the ungodly never enter, except to sample the ecclesiastical strawberry shortcake or to participate in an evangelistic kissing bee for raising the pastor's salary or for other such purpose. The tradition of religion has died out in the families, and therefore the young people grow up knowing as much about Protestantism as the serfs of Egypt know about the scientific doctrines concerning Osiris. The same misfortune has come upon Catholics in the great western country. The family settled in places remote from priest or church. The parents were ignorant or negligent and the children grew up knowing nothing. They knew they were Catholics, but Catholicism was something in which they were born, like original sin. They were Irish, or German, or French and in the same way they were Catholics. From these classes rapidly growing our country population is recruited. Paganism is increasing faster than religion is growing in the towns. The only way to meet it is the ancient way—Go forth and teach. The teaching must be not in the persuasive words of human wisdom but in the manifestation of the spirit and in power. By whom it must be done is another question. The diocesan system has in this regard broken down. It was never intended for such a state of affairs and therefore is powerless before the needs of the times. Yet let us not say powerless. God guides the Church, and what may appear impossible to man is yet possible to God.—San Francisco Monitor.

FACTS ABOUT HEALTH

It is Easy to Keep Well if We Know How—Some of the Conditions Necessary to Perfect Health.
The importance of maintaining good health is easily understood, and it is really a simple matter if we take a correct view of the conditions required. In perfect health the stomach promptly digests food, and thus prepares nourishment. The blood is employed to carry this nourishment to the organs, nerves, muscles and tissues which need it. The first great essential for good health, therefore, is pure, rich blood. Now it is certainly a fact that no medicine has such a record of cure as Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is literally true that there are hundreds of people alive and well today who would have been in their graves had they not taken Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is depended upon as a family medicine and general regulator of the system by tens of thousands of people. This is because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure. This is the secret of its great success. Keep your system in good health by keeping your blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which absolutely cures when other medicines fail to do any good whatever.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A Manitoba Lady Tells About Her Case.

There is no need whatever for so many women to be the subject of faint spells, or any of those health destroying ailments, as the following account of her case will show. Before I started using Mrs. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills I was troubled with throbbing and fluttering of the heart. I tried five doctors and several remedies but none of them did me much good. Lately I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and bought a box. Now I feel really splendid. I could not do my house work and gave myself up to die, as I thought I would never be cured. Now I feel really splendid since taking the pills, do my work, enjoy my meals and feel as if I had some thing in life worth living for.

Our Friends, the Enemy. In the August number of the Pall Mall Magazine Mr. David Hanray throws a great deal of interesting light on Spanish character.

Mr. Hanray writes not only as one having authority from an intimate knowledge of his theme, but with the conservatism and impartiality of a student and observer who has sought only to get at the facts. What he says, therefore, is worth noting.

As to orality, Mr. Hanray adds that the same indolence might be brought against other nations. "Nothing would be easier than to make a list of abominable massacres running all through French history down to the commune of our own time."

is the most unbusiness-like of mankind." In spite of the general impression to the contrary, Mr. Hanray insists that the Spanish nation is in a way "the most truly democratic in the world, for it has but one standard of manners."

The Spanish people are, moreover, "essentially good natured. They are singularly kind to children, and their family relations are among the best and the most wholesome in the world."

This study of Spain and the Spaniards is not only interesting, but important just now, in view of the responsibilities which have come upon us in connection with the government of the province of Santiago and the similar responsibilities which we must meet in other quarters in the prosecution of the war.

In connection with this topic the subject of Cuban character as revealed in the conduct and attitude of the insurgents at Santiago may well attract attention. During the entire campaign for the capture of that city their conduct has exhibited few if any admirable qualities.

The death rate during the average thunderstorm is less than one in every million beings in the affected area. The larger the city the mortality is generally less, while in the country it is frequently greater.

Will we bombard Havana? Will we bombard Santiago? Will we bombard the homes of innocent and peaceful people to gratify our barbarous desire for power? These people have done us no wrong.
