

THE TORONTO WORLD. SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 22, 1884.

An Economic Science Association. The Peterboro Review in a well reasoned and well written article advocates the formation of an association "for the promotion of economic science."

Canada and the British Connection. In the December number of the Atlantic Monthly there appears a highly interesting paper on the above subject by Edward Stanwood.

Mr. Stanwood begins by asserting that "not one Canadian out of a hundred has ever brought himself to the belief that change in the relations between Great Britain and the Dominion would be desirable under any circumstances."

The purpose of the paper is to examine the effect upon our material interests, of the relation in which we stand to Great Britain, the limitations it imposes upon our freedom and progress, and the possibilities which a career as an independent country might open to us.

But, strange to say—and this brings up the other point in which economic science is singular—there is, in spite of its difficulty, no other science on which people generally feel so competent to express an opinion. The man who would never dream of giving his views as to the atomic theory of matter, or the age of a coal measure, or the part played by germs in syphilis disease, has no hesitation in giving an explanation of commercial depression and fluctuations, in preferring one kind of taxation to another, in assigning to various forms of industry their relative degrees of importance, and so on through the whole round of topics comprised within the economic circumference.

Now, partly because economic is so difficult a science, and partly because in spite of its difficulty every one feels at liberty to dogmatize about both its principles and their application, even if there were no other reason for it, such an association as the Review proposes would be a good institution. Especially would it be so in this country where the subject is almost ignored in our universities, and where, on account of the want of properly organized methods of collecting statistics there is great uncertainty as to the facts. Indeed, one of the most obvious and most useful results likely to flow from the work of an active society of the kind, would be a keener appreciation of the value of statistics, and greater perfection of the machinery for collecting facts.

We hope Mr. Carnegie will take the matter up and press it on the public. He will meet with a hearty response from many of our most intelligent thinkers and publicists, and we feel safe in promising them the hearty co-operation of earnest economic students and observers in this city. Let us have a convention called as soon as possible.

The Pay of Women. The return of Hugh McCulloch to the secretaryship of the treasury, at the invitation of President Arthur, recalls an incident worth remembering. When S. P. Chase held the same office under Lincoln he devised the present national bank system, and induced Mr. McCulloch, who was then president of the State bank of Indiana, to undertake the organization of the bureau of currency. In this work he was assisted by three colleagues, two of whom were women. One of these, Miss Minnie Wilson, some time afterward, married a Dr. McCormick, and when in the brief space of two years she became a widow, Mr. McCulloch, then secretary of the treasury, made her an offer of her old position. She gratefully accepted it, and has now been discharging its duties for fifteen years. During ten of them she received only $800 a year, and only since September last has she been receiving as much as $1400—a much smaller stipend than a man would receive in her place. If Mr. Cleveland will signalize his accession to office by a determined effort to secure for women the same remuneration as men when they do the same kind and amount of work, the women's suffrage association, which strenuously opposed him at this election, might aid in securing for him a second term.

A Kindly Thought. One of the most graceful of the many magnificent acts of the Astors on the occasion of the marriage of Miss Caroline Astor and Mr. Orme Wilson was a grand dinner given to all the patients of Bellevue hospital, some five hundred in number. The banquet seems from all accounts to have been of the choicest kind and dainties were in profusion. Hospitals are unfortunate in being to a great extent outside the circle of individual charity. Each person, i. e., amongst those who make a habit of visiting and supplying the wants of the ill and the indigent, each person has usually his or her small circle of sick and poor, but the hospital belongs to no one; it is supported by the taxes, and to none but those who are brought in actual contact with its officials or its patients is it brought prominently into notice. This is true of all hospitals generally. Toronto we may almost call an exception:

both its religious and temporal welfare received the consideration of a large class of benevolent people. Still too much can never be done, and a glimpse of the suffering within its walls will do more to open the benevolent heart than reams of print. We recommend our readers to try the experiment; perhaps then Mr. Astor's report might have a rival in Toronto.

Parsnips, 60 to 75 per bag.

American young ladies who have been abroad assert that it is dreadfully hard to find a honest count.

—Jacob Lookman, Buffalo, N. Y., says he has been using Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil for rheumatism; he has such a lame back he can do anything, and he has a bottle here, to use his own expression, "I cured him up."

—Peter Kiefer, Buffalo, says: "I was badly bitten by a horse a few days ago, and was induced by a friend, who witnessed the occurrence, to try Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. It relieved the pain almost immediately, and in four days the wound was completely healed. Nothing can be better for fresh wounds than this oil."

—West Toronto Junction is within a few minutes of the Union station by the means of either the Erie or the Ontario and the Grand Trunk or the Northern. Real estate in the neighborhood has steadily risen in value and promises to advance rapidly. Some of the best lots in West Toronto are to be had from George Clarke, 290 Yonge street.

—Mr. H. McCaw, Custom House, Toronto, writes: "My wife, who is afflicted with dyspepsia and rheumatism for a long time; the trial many different medicines, did not get any relief until she used Dr. North's and Dr. Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure. She has taken two bottles of it, and now finds herself in better health than she has been for years."

"GEORGINA'S RE"

A NEW AND FASCINATING UNUSUAL STORY.

BY HENRY JAMES and when Georgina declared couldn't go home, that she with her and not with her mother could not expose herself—she—and that she must remain and her only till the day she, the poor lady was forced that day a reality. She was mastered, she was calmed, at a certain extent, fascinated, to accept Georgina's rigidity none of her own to oppose was only violent, she was not and once she did this, it was all, that to take her young Europe was to help her, and her alone was not to help her, she literally frightened Mrs. Portico into compliance. She was capable of strange things if the her own devices. So, from another Mrs. Portico influence was really at last about to foreign lands (her doctor had her that she didn't look out, got too old to enjoy them, and had invited that healthy Miss who could stand so long on her country life. There was a house of Gressie at the annual, though the danger was over a great general advantage to go, and the prospect of an elated at the prospect of an a. There was a danger that a meet Mr. Benyon on the other side of the world, Mrs. Portico would lend herself of that kind. If she had taken her head for favor their love a done, she would have been, there was, of course, to a con degree; but nothing more was should start nothing more was the motive of the journey. No said, that is, till the night be sailed; then a few words passed Georgina had already leave of her relatives in Toronto and was to sleep at Mrs. Portico to go down to the ship at the other side of the world. The two ladies were together in the streets, conscious of corded lung the elder one suddenly remarks companion that she seemed to a great deal upon herself in that Raymond Benyon would her hand. He might choose to lodge his child, if she did were promises and promises, a people would consider they let of when circumstances altered. She would have more thought.

"I know what I am about," answered. "There is only one for him, but that's because by circumstances being altered. "Everything seems to be altered," poor Mrs. Portico murmured. "Well, he isn't, and he never am sure of him—sure as I am here. Do you think I would at him if I hadn't known he was the best of his word?"

"You have chosen him well," said Mrs. Portico, who by this returned to a kind of bewildered quiescence. "Of course I have chosen him in such a matter as this he will be splendid!" Then suddenly Georgina said—"Why I him!" she repeated, with a fatigued passion.

This seemed to Mrs. Portico to the point of being sublime had given up trying to understand that the girl might say or understand less and less, after this time in a pretty bad way, time southward; and she was least of all when in the mid-winter, the event came off with imagination, she had tried to herself, but which, when it seemed to her beyond measure and dreadful. It took place at a country house, according to G report, in a picture gallery in Vandyke and Titian. Georgina letters omitted, it will be seen, that could give color to Mrs. long stay at Geneva. In such a where the travelers hired two rooms for the most insignificant remarkably fine boy came into it. Nothing could have been more Mrs. Portico was almost appalling facility and felicity of it. She this time in a pretty bad way, what had never happened to her in her life—she suffered from depression of spirits.

"GEORGINA'S REASONS."

A NEW AND FASCINATING CONTINUATION OF THE STORY.

BY HENRY JAMES.

and when Georgina declared that she could not go home, that she wished to be with her mother, that she could not expose herself—she could not—and that she must remain with her mother and her only till the day they should sail, the poor lady was forced to make that day a reality. She was overmastered, she was cajoled, she was, to a certain extent, fascinated. She had to accept Georgina's rigidity (she had none of her own to oppose to it; she was only violent, she was not contentious); and once she did this, it was plain, after all, that to take her young friend to Europe was to help her, and to leave her alone was not to help her. Georgina literally had taken her into her confidence. She was evidently capable of strange things if thrown upon her own devices. So, from one day to another Mrs. Portico announced that she was really at last about to sail for foreign lands (her doctor having told her that if she didn't look out she would get too old to enjoy them), and that she had invited that healthy Miss Gressie, who could stand so long on her feet, to accompany her. There was joy in the house of Gressie at the announcement; for, though the danger was over, it was a great general advantage to Georgina to go, and the Gressies were always elated at the prospect of an advantage. There was a danger that she might meet Mr. Benvon on the other side of the world; but it didn't seem likely that Mrs. Portico would lend herself to a plot of that kind. If she had taken it into her head to favor their love affair, she would have done it frankly, and Georgina would have been married by this time. Her arrangements were made as quickly as her decision had been—rather than had appeared—slow; for this comely young man, who had been in the house, Georgina was perpetually at her elbow; it was understood in Twelfth street that she was talking over her future travels with her kind friend. Talk there was, of course, to a considerable degree; but after it was settled they should start nothing more was said about the motive of the journey. Nothing was said, that is, till the night before they sailed; then a few words passed between them. Georgina had already taken leave of her relations in Twelfth street, and was to sleep in Mrs. Portico's in order to go down to the ship at an early hour. The two ladies were sitting together in the freight, silent with the consciousness of crowded luggage, when the elder one suddenly remarked to her companion that she seemed to be taking a great deal upon herself in assuming that Raymond Benvon would follow her. He might choose to acknowledge his child, if she didn't; there were promises and promises, and many people would consider they had been let of when circumstances were so altered. She would have to reckon with Mr. Benvon more than she thought.

"I know what I am about," Georgina answered. "There is only one promise for him. I don't know what you mean by circumstances being altered."

"Everything seems to me to be altered," poor Mrs. Portico murmured, rather tragically.

"Well, he isn't, and he never will! I am sure of him—as sure as that I sit here. Do you think I would have looked at him if I hadn't known he was a man of his word?"

"You have chosen him well, my dear," said Mrs. Portico, who by this time was reduced to a kind of bewildered acquiescence.

"Of course I have chosen him well! In such a matter as this he will be perfectly splendid." Then suddenly—"Perfectly splendid—that's why I cared for him!" she repeated, with a flash of incongruous passion.

This seemed to Mrs. Portico audacious to the point of being insolent; but she had given up trying to understand anything that the girl might say or do. She understood less and less, as if they had been in a village in England and begun to travel southward; and she understood least of all when in the middle of the winter, the event came off with which, in imagination, she had tried to familiarize herself, but which, when it occurred, seemed to her beyond measure strange and dreadful. It took place at Genoa, for Georgina had made up her mind that there would be more privacy in a big town than in a little; and she wrote to America that both Mrs. Portico and she had fallen in love with the place, and would spend two or three months there. At that time people in the United States knew much less than to-day about the comparative attractions of foreign cities, and it was not thought surprising that about New-Yorkers should wish to linger in a seaport where they might find apartments, according to Georgina's report, in a palace painted in fresco by Vanlyke and Tritan. Georgina in her vanity omitted, it will be seen, no detail that could give color to Mrs. Portico's long stay at Genoa. In such a palace—where the travelers hired twenty gilded rooms for the most insignificant sum—a remarkably fine boy came into the world. Nothing could have been more successful or comfortable than this transaction. Mrs. Portico was almost appalled at the facility and felicity of it. She was by this time in a pretty bad way, and—what had never happened to her before in her life—she suffered from chronic depression of spirits. She hated to have to lie, and now she was lying all the time. Everything she wrote home, everything that had been said or done in connection with their stay at Genoa, was a lie. Comparisons at Genoa, at that period, were very rare; but nothing could exceed the business-like completeness of Georgina's precautions. Her nerves, her self-possession, her apparent want of feeling, excited on Mrs. Portico's part a kind of gloomy suspense; a morbid anxiety to see how far her companion would go to possess of the excellent woman, who, a few months before, had told to her mind on disagreeable things. Georgina went very far indeed; she did everything in her power to dissimulate the origin of her child. The record of its birth was made under a false name, and he was baptized at the nearest church by a Catholic priest. A magnificent coat of arms was brought to light by the doctor in a village in the hills, and the child, a brown, barbarous creature, who, to do her justice, was full of banalities, familiar smiles and coarse banter, was constituted nurse to Raymond Benyon's son. She nursed him for a fortnight under the mother's eye, and she was then sent back to her village with the baby in her arms and sunny gold coin knotted into a corner of her pocket-handkerchief. Mr. Gressie had given his daughter a liberal letter of credit on a London banker, and she was able, for the present, to make abundant provision for the little one. She called Mrs. Portico's attention to the fact that she spent none of her money on facilities; she kept it all for her small pensioner in the Genoa hills. Mrs. Portico held these strange doings with a stoical patience that occasionally broke into passionate protest; then she relaxed into a brooding sense of having now been an accomplice so far that she must be an accomplice to the end. The two ladies went down to Rome—Georgina was in wonderful trim—to finish the season, and here Mrs. Portico became convinced that she intended to abandon her offspring. She had not driven into the country to see the nursing before leaving Genoa—she had said that she couldn't bear to see it in such a place and among such people. Mrs. Portico, it must be added, had felt the force of this plea—felt it as regards a plan of her own, given up after being holy entertained for a few hours, of devoting a day, by herself, to a visit to the big Contarina. It seemed to her that if she should see the child in the scorching lands to which Georgina had consigned it she would become still more of a participant than she was already. This young woman's blooming freshness, after they got to Rome, acted upon her like a kind of Madona music. She had seen a horrible thing, she had been mixed up with it, and her motherly heart had received a mortal chill. It became more clear to her every day that, though Georgina would continue to send the infant money in considerable quantities, she had disposed of herself forever. Together with this indignation a fixed idea settled in her mind—the project of taking the baby herself, of making him her own, of arranging that matter with the father. The countenance she had given Georgina up to this point was an effective pledge that she would not expose her; but she could not do without exposing her; she could say that he was a lovely baby—he was lovely, fortunately—who had picked up in a poor village in Italy—a village that had been devastated by brigands. She would pretend—she could pretend! Everything was impossible now, and she could go on to lie as she had begun. The falsity of the whole business sickened her; it made her so yellow that she scarcely knew herself in her glass. None the less, to rescue the child, even if she had to be some measure an atonement for the treachery to which she had already lent her hand. She began to hate Georgina, who had drawn her into such a criminal way of life, and if it had not been for two considerations she would have insisted on their separating. One was the deference she owed to Mr. and Mrs. Gressie, who had repudiated such a trust in her; the other was that she must keep hold of the mother till she had got possession of the infant. Meanwhile, in this forced communion, her aversion to her companion increased; Georgina came to appear to her a creature of iron; she was exceedingly afraid of her, and it seemed to her now a wonder of wonders that she should ever have trusted her, especially to come so far. Georgina showed no consciousness of the change in Mrs. Portico, though there was, indeed, at present, not even a pretense of confidence between the two. Miss Gressie—that was another lie, to which Mrs. Portico had to lend herself—was sent on enjoying Europe, and was especially delighted with Rome. She certainly had the courage of her undertaking, and she confessed to Mrs. Portico that she had left Raymond Benvon, and meant to continue to leave him, in ignorance of what had taken place at Genoa. There was a certain confidence, it must be said, in that. He was now in China, there was a certain confidence in that. He was now in China, there was a certain confidence in that. He was now in China, there was a certain confidence in that.

THE COMBAULT'S CAUSTIC BALSAM!

It is undoubtedly the most valuable and reliable Veterinary Remedy ever discovered. It has superseded the Actual Caustery or hot iron; produces more than four times the effect of a blister; takes the place of all liniments, and is the safest application ever used, as it is impossible to produce a scar or bluish with it. It is a powerful, active, reliable and safe remedy that can be manipulated at will for severe or mild effect. Thousands of the best Veterinarians and Horsemen of this country testify to its many wonderful cures and its great practical value. It is also the most economical remedy in use, as one tablespoonful of Combault's Balsam will produce more actual results than a whole bottle of any liniment or spavin cure mixture ever made. Price $1.50. Sold by druggists, or sent charges paid by LA WRENCE, WILLIAMS & CO., Sole Importers and Proprietors, 21 Front Street, West Toronto, Ont. None genuine without the name on the label.

SPORTING NOTES.

Jim Fell was knocked out in three rounds by Gus Lambert at Montreal Thursday night. The rounds will meet this afternoon at the Dutch Barn, Don and Danforth road, at 8:30 sharp.

There will be a sparring exhibition at George Fullerton's academy, 1110 Alton street, to-night. Go and see some lively bouts.

A Strathroy team beat a team from the Dutch Barn, Don and Danforth road, at 8:30 sharp. The winners were: Canada one and Strathroy two.

Arrangements were made yesterday for playing a match between two junior clubs to be held on the Jarvis street grounds this afternoon before the match with the senior clubs.

Interpreting a judgment. Editor World: Would you kindly assist me in determining the meaning of the following passage from a late judgment of one of our learned judges at Osgoode Hall:

Compare this with Mark Twain's letter to Messrs. Perkins, Wagner, et al., written during his senatorial secretaryship and beginning, "It is a delicate question."

It seems to me the question in both cases is dealt with somewhat peculiarly. In the above case the question must feel particularly lonesome, looking in vain for its logical predicate! JOHN QUILLÉ.

Public Ventilation of Domestic Trouble. Editor World: What a deplorable condition society must be in when husbands and wives must ventilate their grievances through the public press. It is because they suppose everybody is so especially interested that they desire revenge!

Now that Sir John Macdonald has had the grand cross of the order of the bath conferred upon him by her majesty the queen, all good loyal Canadian subjects should throw up their hats and shout. If you are not too shabby to toss into the air to Dineen—the hatter—corner of King and Yonge streets, and get a new one, a Dineen has just displayed a corner of reasonable hats and caps, latest styles.—Adv.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh of the bladder. This is a new method, fully ninety per cent, have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is the least startling when it is remembered that not five per cent of the patients who are benefited, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never cure a case. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men, that disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, the application of the Dixon's cure to their extermination, this accomplished catarrh is practically cured and the permanency is unquestioned, as a cure effected by him four years ago are cured in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure. The majority of cases are cured in one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & CO., 200 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star, 25

Correct Type.—How is your printing done? Are your watches and clocks repaired by H. Given Do. 30 Queen street west, who will do your work quickly, cheaply and punctually. No "stop work" taken in no "fancy prices" charged.

Economy.—The secret of economy lies in the buying of upholstery, such as a parlor or drawing room suit, in the purchase going to an establishment where they make it a specialty of manufacturing first-class goods. T. Z. Cunningham, 369 Yonge street, has the reputation of being an experienced workman, who thoroughly understands his business.
